31. The plaintiff is therefore entitled to the refund of the deposit paid under the deed. In August 2009 the defendant paid the sum of $272,725 into court in this proceeding which I infer comprised the deposit and interest accrued until that time. Those moneys will have accrued further interest. The parties indicated that if the plaintiff were successful, she was entitled to the return of the deposit together with interest pursuant to s 47 of the Supreme Court Act 1995 from 20 November 2008 to the date of judgment, but taking into account the accretions added to the original deposit sum. The parties were agreed that 10 per cent per annum was the appropriate interest rate to apply under s 47 of the Supreme Court Act 1995 which I accept is an appropriate rate to use for this purpose. I calculate the total interest on the deposit of $250,000 to be $60,890.41.

32. The draft order that was provided on behalf of the plaintiff at the conclusion of the plaintiff's submissions sought an order for costs on the standard basis. As the plaintiff has been successful, but subject to giving the defendant an opportunity to make submissions on costs, that is the order for costs that I am inclined to make.

33. In the meantime the orders that I make are:

1. Judgment for the plaintiff against the defendant for the sum of $250,000 and interest pursuant to s 47 of the Supreme Court Act 1995 of $60,890.41.
2. The sum of $272,725 plus any accrued interest being the moneys held in court on account of this proceeding be paid out to the plaintiff on account of the judgment sum.

Decision delivered on 23 May 2011

Community schemes — Dispute between the body corporate for a residential scheme and caretaker and letting agent — Original management rights were assigned twice — Current caretaker and letting agent wished to review remuneration and obligations under the assigned agreement — Body corporate asserted there was no right of review of remuneration as the "original owner control period" has expired — The assignment were akin to a novation meaning that there was a new agreement between the body corporate and current caretaker and letting agent — This essential new agreement was outside the "original owner control period" and not applicable for review under the Act — The current caretaker and letting agent disagreed and asserted that Emvalle (current caretaker) stood in the same position as the entity to which the management rights were originally granted as per the successive deeds of assignment — Tribunal decided Emvalle assignment agreement effected a novation of the original caretaking and letting agreement — It constituted a new contract on the terms of the original caretaking and letting agreement — Application for review of the remuneration under the Emvalle agreement dismissed — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, s 130; 134.

The Body Corporate for Aqua Vista Apartments CTS 37051 (Aqua Vista) entered into a caretaking and letting agreement with Qld Rights Operations Pty Ltd appointing the company as caretaker of the common property and letting agent for the residential scheme for a period of 10 years commencing from 19 July 2007 and ending 18 July 2017. The caretaker's duties and remuneration was set out in a schedule to the agreement. There was an assignment of those management rights from Qld Rights Operations Pty Ltd as original caretaker and letting agent to Blue Chip Holiday Accommodation Pty Ltd (Blue Chip). Blue Chip then assigned those management rights to the current caretakers and applicant Emvalle Pty Ltd (Emvalle).

The assignments were all consented to by Aqua Vista. The terms of the assignment deed are set out at [12] and [13], which essentially stated that Blue Chip agreed to assign all its interest in the caretaking and letting agreement for the unexpired term to Emvalle. Emvalle accepted the assignment of the interest of Blue Chip and all the rights, benefits and obligations of the Manager in the caretaking and letting agreement. Aqua Vista agreed to be bound by the agreement as if Emvalle was the manager originally named in it from the assignment date.

On 19 April 2010, the solicitors for Emvalle wrote to the secretary for Aqua Vista and said that Emvalle sought a review of the agreement in order to decide whether the functions of the caretaker and the remuneration paid to the caretaker were fair and reasonable under s 130 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act. Emvalle proposed the review be conducted by an independent person to provide a report based on the criteria under s 134 of the Act.

On 29 April 2010, Aqua Vista responded that in accordance with s 130 of the Act, the original owner control period had ended (on 20 September 2007) before the Emvalle assignment agreement was made and therefore Emvalle had no legal right of review. Emvalle was invited to participate in a review of the scope of works under the agreement but without any remuneration review.

On 5 May 2010, solicitors for Emvalle responded to Aqua Vista disagreeing with the construction of s 130 of the Act and asserted that Emvalle stood in the same position as the entity to which the management rights were originally granted as per the successive deeds of assignment. By letter of 13 May 2010 Emvalle confirmed that it intended to proceed with the process of review of remuneration. A report was prepared by an independent firm who conducted the review and the report recommended that the remuneration under the agreement be increased to $11,511.67 per annum. Emvalle delivered a copy of the report to Aqua Vista on 15 July 2010 and commenced proceedings for the matter to be heard by the tribunal on 19 July 2010.

Aqua Vista argued in the proceedings that although there were deeds of assignment between the original caretaker Qld Rights Operations Pty Ltd to Blue Chip, and from Blue Chip to Emvalle, the agreements did not operate as assignments of the original caretaking and letting agreement but rather as a new agreement between Emvalle and Aqua Vista. It was a novation of the caretaking and letting agreement. Aqua Vista relied on the principle of law [at 24] that the only manner in which the entirety of the original caretaker and letting agent's interest in the agreement can be passed to Emvalle is by a tripartite contract in which Aqua Vista released the original caretaker and letting agent from its obligations and Aqua Vista and Emvalle agreed that Emvalle will effectively take over the original caretaker and letting agent's obligations and rights. The effect of such a contract is to create a new contract between Aqua Vista and Emvalle.

Aqua Vista also argued that the tribunal had no jurisdiction to hear the application because Emvalle did not comply with s 132(1) as it did not obtain a review advice and give a copy of the advice to Aqua Vista within two months after requesting the review. Accordingly there was no review in respect of which a dispute may arise.

The solicitors for Emvalle submitted that the Act created a new statutory type of contract called a "transfer" [at 29] which may be combination of a deed of assignment and a contract for novation which allows benefits and burdens under a caretaking and letting agreement to be transferred intact to another contractor, therefore keeping the original contract alive. The solicitors referred to s 120 of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 2008 which provides for a "transfer" of service contracts as a separate form of dealing with service contracts to Pt 2 and 3 of the Regulation, which dealt with the making of service contracts. Further s 112 provides that the engagement of a service contractor under a new agreement must be approved by the body corporate in general meeting whereas the Emvalle assignment was approved by the committee of the body corporate for Aqua Vista.

Emvalle also contended that the request for review was only made in its letter of 13 May 2010 and therefore within the time limit under s 132(1) of the Act.

Held: Application dismissed.

1. The Accommodation Module did not give rise to a new statutory creature known as a "transfer" which is different from a novation of a service contract. Section 120 refers to a "transfer" of service contracts that is not inconsistent with a "transfer" taking effect as a novation or an assignment of rights. Nothing in the Act alters the common law as to assignment and novation of contractual rights and obligations [at 33–34]. The Emvalle assignment agreement effected a novation of the original caretaking and letting agreement. It constituted a new contract on the terms of the original caretaking and letting agreement. For the purposes of s 130 of the Act, Aqua Vista entered into a service contract with Emvalle after the end of the original owner control period. The proceeding brought under s 133(2)(b) by the applicant should be dismissed.

2. The letter of 19 April 2010 sent by Emvalle to Aqua Vista constituted a request for a review. The review advice was not obtained and provided to Aqua Vista within two months after Emvalle requested the review, it has not complied with s 132. The requirement under s 132(1) to obtain a review advice and provide it to the other party was obligatory. If it was not complied with then no review has been undertaken and no dispute may arise. As a consequence the tribunal has no jurisdiction under s 133.

Introduction

1. Emvalle Pty Ltd is the current caretaking and letting service contractor for the respondent body corporate (Aqua Vista). On 19 July 2010, Emvalle filed an application to resolve a complex dispute pursuant to the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997. The application states that it relates to a dispute arising out of a review of the terms of the service contract, pursuant to s 133 of the Act. Emvalle seeks, among other things, an order that its remuneration under the caretaking and letting agreement which it has with Aqua Vista be increased to $111,511.67 (plus GST) per annum as and from 19 July 2010.

2. On 27 August 2010, Aqua Vista filed an application within the proceeding seeking to dismiss Emvalle's application, on the ground that the tribunal has no jurisdiction to hear the application because there has not been a review carried out and therefore there is no dispute arising out of a review carried out in accordance with s 133.

3. In response to Aqua Vista's application, on 16 September 2010 Emvalle filed an application for leave to amend its principal application. By the proposed amended application, it added what it stated to be a dispute about a claimed or anticipated contractual matter, pursuant to s 149B of the Act. Emvalle proposes to allege, in its amended application, that there is a dispute concerning the services required to be performed by it under the caretaking and letting agreement, the services actually necessary for the discharge of Aqua Vista's obligations as body corporate, and the amount of reasonable remuneration payable for the necessary services where they exceed the agreed scope of services.

4. These reasons concern the application by Aqua Vista to dismiss Emvalle's principal application and Emvalle's application for leave to amend its principal application.

Background facts

5. On 23 July 2007, Aqua Vista and Qld Rights Operations Pty Ltd made a caretaking and letting agreement in respect of the scheme (which I shall refer to as the "original agreement"). Aqua Vista engaged the caretaker as caretaker of the common property for a period of 10 years commencing on 19 July 2007 and expiring on 18 July 2017. The remuneration of the caretaker was set out in a schedule to the agreement and the caretaker's duties were described in clause 5 and schedule B. The caretaker was also authorised by that agreement to conduct a letting business for unit owners.

6. Clause 13 of the agreement relevantly provided that the caretaker was entitled to assign its interest in the agreement with the consent of the committee of Aqua Vista. The committee could not withhold its consent arbitrarily or capriciously but, among other things, it was entitled to require, before giving its consent, "satisfactory evidence that the proposed assignee is a reputable responsible respectable person capable of satisfactorily performing the duties of the Caretaker pursuant to this agreement".

7. Emvalle and Aqua Vista agree that the "original owner control period" for this scheme[1] ended no later than 20 September 2007. The importance of this date is that, under s 130 of the Act, the body corporate or a service contractor under a service contract (such as the original agreement in this case) may request a review of the functions and powers of the service contractor or the remuneration payable to the service contractor only if the service contract was made within the original owner control period and the contractor's term of engagement has not ended.

8. On 23 April 2008, Aqua Vista, Qld Rights Operations, Blue Chip Holiday

Accommodation Pty Ltd and two individuals (as guarantors) made an agreement under which Qld Rights Operations assigned to Blue Chip its interest in the original agreement and Aqua Vista consented to that assignment. That agreement relevantly provided:

> "3.1 The Previous Manager transfers and assigns to the New Manager from the Assignment Date the Previous Manager's right title estate and interest as Caretaker and Letting Agent in, to and under the Agreement."

9. The Blue Chip assignment agreement (described as a deed of assignment) went on to provide that the new manager (Blue Chip) agreed to perform all of the obligations in the original agreement from the assignment date as if it had originally been named as caretaker and letting agent in that agreement.

10. The Blue Chip assignment agreement also provided that Aqua Vista released the previous manager, in essence, from the performance of its obligations in respect of anything that occurred after the assignment date. Aqua Vista also agreed to be bound by the provisions of the agreement as if the new manager were the caretaker and letting agent originally named in it. The assignment agreement provided that Aqua Vista and Blue Chip ratified and confirmed all of the terms and conditions of the original agreement and agreed to be bound by those terms and conditions.

11. On 31 August 2009, Blue Chip, Emvalle and Aqua Vista, as well as Emvalle's director, Allan Vale, entered into a deed of assignment of the caretaking and letting agreement (the "Emvalle assignment agreement").

12. The Emvalle assignment agreement recited (incorrectly) that Aqua Vista had entered into a caretaking and letting agreement with Blue Chip dated 23 July 2007 for a term of 10 years commencing on 19 July 2007, and Blue Chip had agreed to sell and Emvalle had agreed to purchase the interest of Blue Chip in the caretaking and letting agreement.

13. The Emvalle assignment agreement went on to provide that Blue Chip "hereby assigns to [Emvalle] all its interest in the caretaking and letting agreement from 1 September 2009 … for the residue then unexpired of the term of the caretaking and letting agreement on and from the assignment date", Emvalle accepted the assignment to it of the interest of Blue Chip and "all the rights, benefits and obligations of the Manager named in" the caretaking and letting agreement, agreed to be bound by its terms, and undertook to observe and perform the covenants and conditions contained in the agreement on the part of the manager. The agreement also provided that Aqua Vista consented to the assignment of the caretaking and letting agreement from Blue Chip to Emvalle and covenanted with Emvalle that Aqua Vista agreed to be bound by the provisions of the caretaking and letting agreement as if Emvalle was the manager originally named in it, and in every respect Aqua Vista confirmed the provisions of the caretaking and letting agreement. Finally, the agreement provided that Aqua Vista released Blue Chip from any liability in respect of the performance of Emvalle under the caretaking and letting agreement, from the assignment date.

14. The phrase "caretaking and letting agreement" was defined in the Emvalle assignment agreement as meaning the caretaking and letting agreement dated 23 July 2007 between Aqua Vista and Qld Rights Operations and the deed of assignment dated 23 April 2008 between Aqua Vista, Qld Rights Operations and Blue Chip.

15. On 19 April 2010, Watson & Quinn, solicitors for Emvalle, wrote to the secretary of Aqua Vista. Relevantly, they said that Emvalle was a party to the caretaking and letting agreement dated 23 July 2007 following its acquisition of its management rights under the Emvalle assignment agreement; that Emvalle sought a review of the terms of the agreement in order to decide whether the functions of the caretaker and the remuneration paid to the caretaker were fair and reasonable; and that Emvalle proposed to appoint an independent person to provide advice concerning those two matters, based on the review criteria described in s 134 of the Act.

16. By a letter dated 29 April 2010, the secretary of Aqua Vista responded to Watson & Quinn's letter of 19 April. He asserted that, in accordance with s 130 of the Act, the original owner control period had ended before the Emvalle assignment agreement was made and therefore Emvalle had no legal entitlement to a review. He invited Emvalle to participate in a review of the scope of works under the agreement, but without any remuneration review.

17. By a letter dated 5 May 2010, Watson & Quinn responded to the letter from the secretary of Aqua Vista, disagreeing with his construction of s 130 of the Act. They asserted that Emvalle stood in the same position as the entity to which the management rights were originally granted, as recorded in the successive deeds of assignment. They said that Emvalle remained open to a review of its duties and remuneration as outlined in their earlier correspondence. Emvalle reserved its rights to proceed with the procedure outlined in ss 130 and 131 of the Act.

18. By a letter dated 11 May 2010, the secretary of Aqua Vista responded to Watson & Quinn, reiterating that s 130 did not apply as the original owner control period had ended at a time when the service contractor was not Emvalle.

19. By a letter dated 13 May 2010, Watson & Quinn said that Emvalle intended to proceed with the process for review of remuneration.

20. Emvalle then engaged a building management consultancy and services firm to review the duties and remuneration of the caretaker, having regard to Aqua Vista's obligations as body corporate of the scheme. That firm produced a report in which it recommended that a more specific schedule of the caretaker's duties and responsibilities be included in the agreement to better reflect the requirements of the complex, and that the annual remuneration of the caretaker be increased to $111,511.67 (excluding GST).

21. Emvalle delivered a copy of that report to Aqua Vista on 15 July 2010 and, as I have said, commenced this proceeding on 19 July 2010.

Application to dismiss proceeding

Agreement outside original owner control period

22. The principal basis upon which Aqua Vista seeks an order to dismiss the proceeding is that the agreement between Aqua Vista and Emvalle, which governs their relationship, is the Emvalle assignment agreement. As that agreement was made outside the original owner control period, s 130 of the Act does not apply.

23. Aqua Vista contends that, although called a "deed of assignment", the Emvalle assignment agreement did not operate as an assignment of the original caretaking and letting agreement but as a new agreement (a novation of the caretaking and letting agreement) between Emvalle and Aqua Vista.

24. In this respect, Aqua Vista relies on the principle of law that, while a party to a contract (A) can assign to another person (C) the benefits of the contract, the burdens of the contract (that is, the obligations that A has under it to the other party — B) cannot be assigned. The only manner in which the entirety of A's interest in the contract (the benefits and burdens) can be passed on to C is by a tripartite contract between A, B and C, in which B releases A from its obligations and B and C agree that C will effectively take over A's obligations and rights. The effect of such a contract is to create a new contract between B and C. This process is, in law, known as "novation".

25. The differences between assignment and novation were usefully discussed by Mr Dorney QC (as his Honour then was) in Silva Care Australia Pty Ltd v Body Corporate for Indigo Blue Beachside Residences [2009] CCT KC003-07, at [34]–[36]. As Mr Dorney said, there is no principle that a total assignment of both benefits and burdens can occur in a continuing agreement without the contract being novated.

26. Mr Dorney referred in particular to three important passages from the reasons for judgment of Finn and Sundberg JJ in Pacific Brand Sport & Leisure Pty Ltd v Underworks Pty Ltd (2006) 149 FCR 395. Mr Dorney said:

> "First, it is stated that while it is ' not legally possible to assign the burden of the contract (ie the obligation to render performance)', it may be possible to assign the 'entire benefit' of a contract or, if a right under a contract is separate and severable, such a separate and severable right or, if some only of the rights under a contract are assignable, those rights: at 404 [32]. Secondly, a third party may become a 'substituted contracting > party' by 'novation of the original contract' but novation will, ordinarily, require the agreement of the original and the substituted party … But, on novation, there is 'no assignment of rights and obligations', but rather the creation of new rights and obligations in a new contract: at 405 [32]. Thirdly, 'a contractual obligation cannot be assigned without the consent of the other contracting party' …, although ' for practical purposes ' this ' requires novation of the original contract' (emphasis added) … : at 405 [32].
>
> What is abundantly clear from these considerations is that, where continuing contractual obligations are to be undertaken by a new party, the legal analysis must give rise to the consequence of novation: particularly should the original obligor be no longer required to undertake the performance of those contractual obligations."

27. Mr Dorney went on to analyse the deed of assignment before him. That document appears to have contained very similar provisions to some of those in the Emvalle assignment agreement. In particular, looking at the Emvalle assignment agreement, Emvalle accepted the assignment to it of all the rights, benefits and obligations of the manager named in the "caretaking and letting agreement" (as defined) and undertook to observe and perform all the covenants and conditions of the manager that were in that agreement; Aqua Vista consented to the agreement between Blue Chip and Emvalle and agreed with Emvalle that Aqua Vista would be bound by the provisions of the caretaking and letting agreement as if Emvalle was the manager originally named in it; and Aqua Vista released Blue Chip and its guarantors from any liability in respect of the performance of Emvalle under the agreement from the assignment date.

28. Mr Dorney said, of the agreement before him, "it is difficult to escape the conclusion from the Deed of Assignment that there has been a novation of the Caretaking Agreement, in particular because there was a 'new' set of obligations cast upon the applicants, and the Body Corporate agreed that the applicants were to perform those obligations in place of the previous manager" — at [38]. Those comments are entirely apposite to the Emvalle assignment agreement. The latter agreement does not appear to be relevantly distinguishable from the agreement before Mr Dorney.

29. Mr Simpson, who appeared for Emvalle, submitted that the Act creates a new statutory type of contract, called a "transfer", which may be a type of amalgam of a deed of assignment and a contract for novation, and which allows both the benefits and the burdens of a service contract to be "transferred", intact, to another contractor, while keeping alive the original contract and simply substituting a party to it. He supported this submission by referring to the fact that part 4 (s 120ff) of the Accommodation Module provides for the "transfer" of service contracts, as contrasted with parts 2 and 3, which deal with the making of service contracts, and s 112 provides that the engagement of a service contractor under a new agreement must be approved by the body corporate in general meeting using a secret ballot, whereas the Emvalle assignment agreement was only approved by Aqua Vista's committee.

30. The Accommodation Module is, of course, a regulation under the Act. There is some doubt whether the meaning of terms in an Act can be construed by reference to the terms of a regulation made under that Act, but even if it can the provisions to which Mr Simpson referred do not assist him. Section 120 expressly declares that approval of a "transfer" may be by the committee, so that overcomes the point arising from s 112. And part 4, in referring to the "transfer" of service contracts, is not inconsistent with a "transfer" taking effect as a novation, or simply being an assignment of rights. Indeed, s 120(1) refers to a transfer as being a transfer of a person's "rights" under a service contract, and s 120(5) specifically provides that the approval by a body corporate of a transfer may be given on condition that the transferee enter into a deed of covenant to comply with the terms of the service contract. That provision itself appears to allow for what would, in law, be a novation.

Thus, the Accommodation Module does not, in my view, give rise to a new statutory creature known as a "transfer", which is somehow different from a novation of a service contract.

32. I have also considered Mr Simpson's submission having regard to the terms of the Act that deal with the transfer of service contracts. Section 122(3) permits a regulation module to include provisions for payment of a transfer fee if any "rights" under a service contract are "transferred to another entity". And chapter 3, part 2, division 8 of the Act, which is immediately after the division concerning review of the terms of service contracts, provides for the required transfer of a letting agent's management rights. The division sets out circumstances in which a letting agent must "transfer" the letting agent's management rights for a scheme. Perhaps most relevantly, s 144 says, of a contract that has been transferred under ss 141 or 143, that the terms of the transferred service contract are the terms applying to the service contract immediately before the transfer. Do those provisions affect the ordinary law as to assignment and novation?

33. In my view, they do not. First, s 122(3) is simply an empowering provision allowing the making of regulations. Secondly, division 8 deals only with the compulsory transfer of a letting agent's management rights under ss 141 and 143. It does not deal with transfer by consent of the terms of a letting agent's contract. Thirdly, although the sections only talk about transfer of the letting agent's "rights", clearly they are intended also to require the letting agent's obligations under its contract to be transferred. There is a way, under the existing law, to transfer both rights and obligations, namely by novation. There is no apparent need for a new statutory concept. It would have been easy for Parliament to make it clear if that had been its intention.

34. Therefore, there is nothing in the Act that appears to alter the common law as to assignment and novation of contractual rights and obligations.

35. Consequently, in my opinion the Emvalle assignment agreement effected a novation of the original caretaking and letting agreement. In other words, it constituted a new contract on the terms of the original caretaking and letting agreement.

36. In fact, the original caretaking and letting agreement, between Aqua Vista and Qld Rights Operations, came to an end when the Blue Chip assignment agreement came into effect in April 2008, as that agreement also appears to have constituted a novation of the original caretaking and letting agreement.

37. The consequence of this conclusion, for the purposes of s 130 of the Act, is that Aqua Vista entered into a service contract with Emvalle after the end of the original owner control period. Therefore, s 130 and the rest of division 7 do not apply to this contract and, insofar as this proceeding was brought under s 133(2)(b), it is misconceived and lacking in substance. It therefore ought be dismissed or struck out under s 47 of the Queensland Civil and Administrative Tribunal Act 2009.

No review advice within 2 months of request

38. In case this matter proceeds further and I am held to be wrong in my conclusion above, I shall proceed to consider the other bases on which Aqua Vista seeks to have the application dismissed or struck out.

39. The first is that the tribunal has no jurisdiction to hear the application because Emvalle did not comply with s 132(1) in that it did not, within 2 months after requesting the review, obtain a review advice and give a copy of the advice to Aqua Vista.

40. In this respect, Aqua Vista contends that Emvalle requested Aqua Vista to review the terms of the contract, pursuant to s 130(2), by Watson & Quinn's letter dated 19 April 2010. Emvalle, on the other hand, contends that the request was made by Watson & Quinn's letter dated 13 May 2010. Clearly, if Aqua Vista is right, then the review advice was not obtained and given to Aqua Vista within 2 months of the request, as the report obtained by Emvalle was (it is agreed) dated 2 July 2010 and given to Aqua Vista on 15 July 2010.

41. To my mind, there is no doubt that the letter of 19 April 2010 constituted a request for a review. It says so in so many words, namely "our client seeks a review of the terms of the agreement". The letter of 13 May 2010, which says, "we are instructed our client intends to proceed with the process for review of remuneration" does not, in my view, constitute a request, but is rather a confirmation that, having requested a review, Emvalle proposed to proceed to undertake a review in accordance with the process set out in the Act. Indeed, s 132 sets out the "procedure for review" and Emvalle purported to take steps in accordance with that procedure by seeking a review advice.

42. Therefore, as the review advice was not obtained and provided to Aqua Vista within 2 months after Emvalle requested the review, it has not complied with s 132.

43. However, does that mean that Emvalle is not entitled to apply to the tribunal under s 133?

44. In Silva Care, Mr Dorney formed the conclusion that, where no step had been taken toward a review after the request for a review had been made, the failure to carry out a review "does deprive this tribunal of the jurisdiction to seek to resolve a dispute that, in reality, has not arisen." But this case is distinguishable from Silva Care because Emvalle has taken further steps, namely by obtaining a review advice and providing it to Aqua Vista, although outside the period of 2 months after requesting the review.

45. In Clarke v The Body Corporate for Linear Kings Beach [2009] CCT KC 011-09, Mr Thomas AM QC said, at [13]:

> "No 'review advice' was obtained by the trust within 2 months of making that request [for review]. Accordingly so far as that request is concerned, the Trust failed to comply with a mandatory requirement of section 132. It would seem to follow that the applicant cannot succeed if he were to base his case upon that particular request."

46. Mr Alexander, who appeared for Aqua Vista, contended that the effect of s 132(1) is similar to that of s 459G(2) of the Corporations Law. The latter subsection provides that an application to set aside a statutory demand served on a company may only be made within 21 days after the demand is served. If an application to set aside a statutory demand is not filed within 21 days after service of the demand, then the court has no jurisdiction to hear the application: David Grant & Co Pty Ltd v Westpac Banking Corp (1995) 184 CLR 265. Similarly, Mr Alexander contended, because s 132(1) provides that the reviewing party must obtain a review advice and give a copy of it to the other party "within 2 months after requesting the review", if it does not do so no review was required to be carried out under that division and therefore no dispute may arise under s 133 in respect of which this tribunal has jurisdiction.

47. Although not without some hesitation, I agree with Mr Alexander's contention. A review must be carried out (that is, it is required to be carried out) once a request is made under s 130(2): that subsection provides that if requested the reviewing parties must review the terms of the contract. I agree, with respect, with Mr Dorney insofar as he says that, if no further step is taken after a request, then there is no review in respect of which a dispute may arise. Similarly, the requirement under s 132(1) to obtain a review advice and provide it to the other party is obligatory. If it is not complied with, then no review has been undertaken and no dispute may arise. As a consequence, the tribunal has no jurisdiction.

48. Notwithstanding the word "must" in subsection 130(2), it is arguable that the provision is, to use some old terms, directory only and not mandatory: it is procedural and the act does not indicate that a failure to comply with the procedure set out results in there being no jurisdiction in the tribunal to hear a dispute. But in my view the purpose of the division is to enable a review to take place promptly and within a certain period. Indeed, the period for a review is limited not only by the period of 2 months from the date of a request, but also by the fact that a review must be completed within the "review period". (In this case, the parties agree that the review period ended on 26 July 2010.) The strict time limits indicate, to my mind, an intention by Parliament that the right of review only persists if the time limits are complied with. To paraphrase the words of Gummow J in David Grant & Co Pty Ltd (at 270), the division of the Act providing for the review of service contracts constitutes a legislative scheme for a limited right to an early and quick resolution of the extent of duties and remuneration under service contracts. And (at 277) the effect of the requirement that a review advice "must" be obtained and given within 2 months and that a review "must" be finished within the review period, is to define the limited circumstances in which the right of review arises. Once that right of review is lost, there can be no review out of which a dispute may arise for this tribunal to determine.

49. Mr Simpson relied on s 61 of the QCAT Act to seek an order extending the time limit provided by s 130(2). However, s 61 only allows for an extension of procedural time limits. As I have found that s 130(2) is not merely procedural, but sets out a substantive requirement, s 61 provides no power to extend the time limit. The relationship between the two sections is similar to that between s 459G(2) and s 1322(4)(d) of the Corporations Law which were considered by the High Court in Dabid Grant & Co Pty Ltd.

50. Therefore, on this ground as well I consider that the application is misconceived, because there is no dispute in respect of which the tribunal has jurisdiction under s 133.

Inadequate time for review

51. Another submission made on behalf of Aqua Vista was that, even if a request had been made and the review advice was given to it within 2 months of the request, or a period of 2 months was not mandatory, subsection 132(4) provides that a review must be finished as soon as reasonably practicable after a copy of the review advice is given to a reviewing party and within the review period. The review advice was given to Aqua Vista on 15 July 2010, only 8 days before the end of the review period. Aqua Vista could not possibly undertake its review and make a decision about the outcome of the review before the end of that period, because subsection 132(3) provides that a body corporate's final decision about the outcome of the review must be made by ordinary resolution. That would require a general meeting of the body corporate to be called, which could not be done within 8 days. Mr Alexander relied in this respect upon the decision of this tribunal in Mynex Pty Ltd v Body Corporate for Captain's Corner [2010] QCAT 157. In that case, Ms Reid said that, as the body corporate had not been afforded sufficient time to consider the review document in a reasonably practical timeframe, or one that would permit it to respond to the applicant's request to consider the review advice, the tribunal could not exercise its jurisdiction under s 133.

52. That case involved a similar circumstance to this, as the review advice was provided 10 days before the end of the review period.

53. With all due respect to Ms Reid, I disagree with the proposition that, because a review advice is delivered very shortly before the end of the review period, thus disabling the other party to the review from undertaking its own review, there is then no dispute arising out of a review. Subsection 133(4) says that subsection (5) applies if only one of the reviewing parties has carried out the review. Subsection (5) provides that a dispute is taken to exist between the reviewing parties if the reviewing party who carried out the review considers the reviewable terms are not currently fair and reasonable.

54. Where a party obtains a review advice and, having reviewed that advice, considers that the reviewable terms are not currently fair and reasonable, then a review has been carried out, although not by both parties who are required to carry it out. If that review is carried out too late for the other party to carry out a review within the review period, in my opinion that does not prevent subsections 133(4) and (5) from applying. Subsection (5) appears to me to apply whenever one party has not completed a review, for whatever reason, provided that the other party has completed a review and formed the necessary opinion.

55. Therefore, if this were the only ground upon which Aqua Vista had contended that there was no dispute giving rise to this tribunal's jurisdiction, it would not succeed.

Amendment

56. In the face of the application to dismiss or strike out the principal application, Emvalle seeks leave to amend its application. It wishes to contend that there is a dispute between it and Aqua Vista about a claimed or anticipated contractual matter about its engagement as a caretaking service contractor and its authorisation as a letting agent, and therefore it may apply to this tribunal under s 149B of the Act.

The dispute which Emvalle wishes to raise by its proposed amendment is said to arise from the following circumstances:

> a) the report comprising the review advice stated that, for the body corporate effectively to carry out its obligations, the caretaking and letting agreement ought to provide for a considerably greater number of services to be carried out by the caretaker than it does;
> b) Aqua Vista has asked Emvalle to review the services required to be provided under the agreements and Emvalle has agreed to review those services provided that Aqua Vista also agrees to review its remuneration;
> c) because Aqua Vista has sought to increase the duties provided by Emvalle but has refused to consider a review of remuneration, there is a dispute concerning the services contract.

58. Mr Alexander, for Aqua Vista, submitted that there is no dispute identified in the proposed amended application because, although Aqua Vista asked Emvalle to review the services which it provided under the contract, it has not insisted that Emvalle carry out any services additional to those which it is required to carry out under that contract.

59. In my view, that is correct. No real dispute has been identified by Emvalle as to the extent of services which it is obliged to provide, or the remuneration to which it is entitled, under the existing service contract. It is irrelevant whether the services which it is obliged to provide under the contract are sufficient to enable the Body Corporate to carry out its obligations to maintain the common property. If they are insufficient, then it would be to Aqua Vista's benefit to seek to reach agreement that Emvalle provide additional services, for which it might expect to have to pay additional fees. But at present there is no current dispute that I can see arising from the matters set out in the proposed amendment. It simply alleges that Aqua Vista "seeks to increase the duties provided by" Emvalle and has "refused to consider a review of remuneration payable" under the contract. In other words, Emvalle and Aqua Vista have been unable to agree on a different contract to the existing one. But neither has insisted that the existing contract imposes obligations which the other party disputes. The proposed amendment does not demonstrate any arguable dispute about the existing contract.

60. Therefore, I do not consider it appropriate to give Emvalle leave to amend its application.

61. Having reached this conclusion, I do not need to consider Aqua Vista's submission that, if the proceeding as currently constituted does not raise an issue for the tribunal, there is no proper proceeding on foot in which an amendment may be allowed.

Consequence

62. The consequence of my conclusions above is that the proceeding ought be dismissed or struck out. The QCAT Act does not make clear what the difference is between dismissal and striking out. Having regard to the practice in courts in Queensland, which was well known when this Act was passed, I consider that to strike out an application would be akin to striking out a pleading — that is, the proceeding remains on foot, but the pleading is treated as if it does not exist. The party concerned may be able to obtain leave, either at the time of the order or later, to file an amended pleading (or, in this tribunal, an amended application). On the other hand, an order dismissing the proceeding brings it to a complete end (subject, of course, to any rights of appeal).

63. Emvalle has not demonstrated any basis on which it may be able to make a valid application in this proceeding. In that circumstance, I consider that it is not appropriate simply to strike out the application. It ought be dismissed.

BATWING RESORTS PTY LTD v BODY CORPORATE FOR LIBERTY ON TEDDER CTS 27241

(2011) LQCS ¶90-172; Court citation: [2011] QCAT 277

Decision delivered on 24 June 2011

Community schemes — Dispute between caretaker and body corporate — Caretaker refused to maintain gardens outside of title line to scheme — Caretaker said it was not in the caretaker agreement — Body Corporate disagreed and deducted remuneration — Caretaker made application to QCAT as complex dispute — Body Corporate made cross claim against caretaker arguing caretaker had agreed to maintain gardens outside of contract therefore caretaker estopped from refusing to maintain those gardens — Caretaker applied to have dispute transferred to higher court as it argued that QCAT has no jurisdiction to hear equitable matters — Body Corporate disagreed — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, s 149B — Queensland Civil and Administrative Tribunal Act 2009, s 9.

Batwing Resorts Pty Ltd (Batwing) was the on-site caretaking manager for the body corporate scheme, Body Corporate for Liberty on Tedder CTS 27241 (Body Corporate). The dispute arose when Batwing notified the Body Corporate and all unit owners in the scheme that it would no longer be attending to the care and maintenance of gardens and lawns beyond the "title line". The Body Corporate disagreed that Batwing could lawfully do that and deducted amounts from the monthly remuneration it paid to Batwing under the caretaking agreement.

Batwing applied to the QCAT for a mandatory injunction that the Body Corporate pay what had already been deducted and refrain from making further deductions or withholding remuneration until the dispute about the meaning and effect of the agreement and the manager's obligations had been resolved.

In the course of the litigation, the Body Corporate alleged that Batwing was prevented on equitable grounds from denying an obligation to maintain areas outside the title line and it cross claimed against Batwing for equitable damages. The Body Corporate claimed that there was an agreement between the parties and a promise from Batwing to maintain the gardens and lawns outside the common property and as a consequence Batwing was estopped from denying that obligation.

Batwing and the Body Corporate at first instance sought an application that the claims be transferred to the District Court on the grounds that QCAT did not have the power to grant the equitable relief it sought in its cross claim. However, at the hearing the Body Corporate took a different position and argued that the QCAT did have jurisdiction to hear the matter. Batwing disagreed and submitted that the Body Corporate's cross claim for equitable relief should be transferred to the Supreme Court.

QCAT has power under s 149B of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 to decide on "contractual matters" concerning the engagement of a service contractor. Under the definitions of Sch 6 of the Act, a "contractual matter" includes the exercise of rights or powers and the performance of duties under it. The parties agreed that their original dispute about Batwing's obligations to maintain gardens outside the title line of the premises was of that kind and the QCAT had jurisdiction to deal with that specific matter. However, the question was whether the QCAT had equitable jurisdiction to deal with the Body Corporate's cross claim? It was noted that s 9(4) of the Queensland Civil and Administrative Tribunal Act 2009 provided the tribunal with jurisdiction to "… do all things necessary or convenient for exercising its jurisdiction".

The following points were made by the Body Corporate in support of its assertion that the tribunal had jurisdiction to grant equitable relief in this matter:

- In Prasad v Fairfield City Council [2000] NSWADT 164, the Judicial Member in the NSW Administrative Decisions Tribunal held that the ADT had jurisdiction to hear the matter concerning the applicant's right to conduct its business without competition based on principles of promissory estoppel. The Judicial Member held that the ADT's equitable powers should not be cut down.
- The High Court in R v Ross Jones: ex parte Green (1984) 156 CLR 185 held that if the equitable order sought is consequential on or incidental to an order being made in the other proceedings then it will have the appropriate relationship to link it as part of the tribunal's original jurisdiction.
- The degree of connection between the contractual dispute and the equitable relief sought was also considered by Cavanough J in the VACT decision of Tucci v Victorian Civil and Administrative Tribunal & Anor [2010] VSC 425. Cavanough J noted that the Victorian Tribunal had power to hear a consumer and trader dispute, and even though it was not a court, it was obviously intended to have power to recognise and give affect to equitable defences in cases of that kind.
- In Emanuele v Australian Securities Commission (1996) 188 CLR 114, Kirby J observed at 147:

  > "A feature of the administration of justice in more recent times has been a general disfavour towards procedural rigidities and a preference for a somewhat more flexible approach to statutory preconditions where these are of a procedural character."

- The QCAT is said to be a "court of record" under s 164 of the QCAT Act.

The following points were advanced in support of Batwing's application that the matter of equitable relief be transferred to a superior court:

> • A subordinate court or tribunal must find its powers in the express language of the statute which gives it existence and in the implications which derive from that language (Walton v McBride [1995] 36 NSWLR 440 per Kirby J at 447). The QCAT Act does not expressly bestow equitable jurisdiction upon the tribunal.
> • In The Herald & Weekly Times v Victoria [2006] VSCA 146, the President of VCAT, Morris J issued an injunction against the publication of the contents of a settlement agreement between parties who had been involved in proceedings and Morris J also ordered that a newspaper be restrained from publishing the contents of the terms of settlement and it was that order that came before the Court of Appeal. The Court of Appeal had to decide whether the suppression order could be said to be so related to the original proceeding that it formed part of it which the tribunal had original jurisdiction to determine. The Court of Appeal decided that the tribunal had not had jurisdiction because the different proceedings lacked the necessary inter-relationship.
> • The fact that QCAT is designated as a "court of record" does not automatically infer that the legislature intended to invest it with the power or right to draw upon the broad powers of a superior court. This was expressed in the High Court decision DJL v Central Authority (2000) 201 CLR 226, where the governing legislation of that court provides no express conferral of particular powers.

Held: Application dismissed.

1. It was clear that QCAT was not intended by the legislature to have all the same broad equitable powers as a superior court. It was improbable that the legislature intended that the tribunal would immediately cede jurisdiction when instances like the present arise. It was, as a matter of logic, equally improbable that there was legislative intent that inter-linked disputes like those arising here could or should be adjudicated separately.

In this case, the agreement between the parties which underpinned the tribunal's jurisdiction was affected by events and circumstances associated with it which gave rise to equitable defences or reliefs. Once that was appreciated, it was compelling that the different elements of the dispute formed part of the same proceeding. The test applied by the Victorian Court of Appeal in The Herald & Weekly Times, and suggested by the High Court in R v Ross Jones, and as observed in Tucci, expressed that it was readily foreseeable that, in the jurisdiction invested in QCAT by the Body Corporate and Community Management Act, equitable defences or matters involving equitable issues might from time to time arise. The grant of powers to the tribunal under the Queensland Civil and Administrative Tribunal Act pointed to sufficient clarity to a construction of the legislation which would empower the tribunal to address the equitable cross claims raised by the respondent here in a matter where the applicant has brought a claim which plainly, otherwise fell within the tribunal's statutory jurisdiction.

3. The proceedings should remain in the tribunal and Batwing's applications should be dismissed as should the Body Corporate's original application for a transfer of the proceedings.

D Keane (instructed by Ledger & Co Lawyers) for the respondent Body Corporate for Liberty on Tedder CTS 27241.

Before: Justice Alan Wilson (President).

Editorial comment: Justice Alan Wilson referred to Dawson J's observation in Grassby v R (1989) 168 CLR 1 at 16–17, that while inferior courts are unable to draw upon the unrestrained and undivided powers of superior courts, they may possess jurisdiction arising by implication on principle that a grant of power carries with it everything necessary for its exercise. The word "necessary" defined in s 9(4) of the Queensland Civil and Administrative Tribunal Act 2009 as identifying a power to make orders which reasonably requires or are legally ancillary to the accomplishment to specific remedies (Pelechowski v Registrar (1999) 162 ALR 336 at 348). It was observed that for an inferior tribunal to exercise an implied or "necessary" power, that power must be clearly evident in the statute said to confer it. For example, under s 69(1) of the District Court of Queensland Act 1967 a court may exercise all the powers and authorities of the Supreme Court including giving effect to every ground of defence, whether equitable or legal. However, the Body Corporate and Community Management Act does not provide clear expression of conferral powers relating to the QCAT. The Body Corporate and Community Management Act, however, does provide that Adjudicators appointed under Ch 6 have power to make orders that are "just and equitable in the circumstances (including a declaratory order) to resolve a dispute" about contractual matters.

Justice Alan Wilson, President: The parties to this proceeding are the managers of a unit development on the Gold Coast, and its Body Corporate. Contractual arrangements between them are affected by the provisions of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (BCCMA). This Tribunal is invested with jurisdiction in some disputes arising under that legislation, but the question that has arisen now is whether or not QCAT also has jurisdiction concerning disputes referrable to the legislation but not, themselves, directly governed by it. In short, the question is whether or not QCAT has an equitable jurisdiction which complements what it can do under the BCCMA and the Queensland Civil and Administrative Act 2009 (QCAT Act).

2. The dispute goes back to 2009 when Batwing, as the on-site manager, notified the Body Corporate and all unit owners that it would not henceforth be attending to the care and maintenance of gardens and lawns beyond the "title line". The Body Corporate disagreed that Batwing could lawfully do that, and began to deduct amounts from the monthly remuneration it paid Batwing under the On-Site Management Agreement.

3. Batwing then applied to QCAT for a mandatory injunction that the Body Corporate pay what had already been deducted ($26,837) and refrain from making any further deductions or withholding remuneration until the dispute about the meaning and effect of the agreement and the manager's obligations, if any, for maintenance of gardens outside the property itself was resolved.

4. On 7 June 2010 interim orders on those lines were made after Batwing provided the usual undertaking as to damages. The parties were then directed to exchange submissions and attend a compulsory conference.

5. In the course of these steps the Body Corporate alleged in tribunal documents that Batwing was prevented, on equitable grounds, from denying an obligation to maintain areas outside the title line, and it cross applied for equitable damages from Batwing.

6. In that cross-application the Body Corporate claimed that there was an agreement between the parties, and a promise from Batwing, to maintain gardens and lawns outside the common property and that, as a consequence, Batwing is legally prevented ("equitably estopped") from denying an obligation to maintain those lawns and gardens; or, that it should pay damages for its failure to fulfil its obligation under those promises.

7. Batwing says these claims are outside QCAT's jurisdiction and those parts of the Body Corporate's documents which raise them should be struck out; or, that those claims should be transferred to the District (or Supreme) Court, which has jurisdiction, under s 52 of the QCAT Act.[1]

8. The Body Corporate then filed a further application seeking an order that the entire proceeding be transferred to the District Court (or to a Commissioner appointed under the BCCMA, for specialist adjudication) on the grounds that QCAT does not have power to grant the equitable relief it seeks in its response and its cross application.

9. What came on for hearing before the Tribunal were:

a) Batwing's application to strike out parts of the Body Corporate's response and cross claim; or, for an order transferring those parts of the cross-claim to the District, or Supreme Court; and
b) The Body Corporate's application to transfer the entire proceedings to the District Court.

10. At the hearing however the Body Corporate, through its counsel, took a different position from what might have been expected, in light of its application: Mr Keane argued that QCAT does have jurisdiction to deal with the equitable relief the Body Corporate sought, and should do so. Batwing's representatives were (unsurprisingly) rather taken by surprise, they having attended the hearing in the belief that the Body Corporate not only did not oppose, but actively sought, a transfer of the proceedings to another court. Because of that surprise, counsel for Batwing was given leave to deliver supplementary written submissions after the hearing, as she did. In those submissions it is now said that the Body Corporate's claims for equitable relief should be transferred to the Supreme Court.

11. Under ss 6 and 9 of the QCAT Act this Tribunal has jurisdiction to deal with matters invested in it under that Act, or an enabling Act. Here, the enabling Act is the BCCMA and the substantive dispute concerns contractual relations between a body corporate, and its caretaker. QCAT's power to determine that dispute arises under s 149B of the BCCMA, which gives the Tribunal jurisdiction in a dispute about a contractual matter concerning the engagement of a service contractor.

12. Under the definitions in Schedule 6 of the BCCMA a contractual matter concerns, among other things, alleged contraventions of the terms of the contract of engagement, and the exercise of rights or powers and the performance of duties under it.

13. The parties agree that their original dispute about Batwing's obligations to maintain gardens outside the title line of the premises was of that kind, and QCAT has jurisdiction.

14. The QCAT Act does not expressly bestow equitable jurisdiction upon the Tribunal but it is invested, under s 9, with jurisdiction to deal with matters under the QCAT Act or enabling Acts in original, review or appeal jurisdictions — and, under s 9(4) it is given jurisdiction to "… do all things necessary or convenient for exercising its jurisdiction".

15. The QCAT Act is to be interpreted in a way which will best achieve its purposes.[2] Here, provisions concerning QCAT's jurisdiction appear in a number of different places in the legislation. Section 3 sets out its objects which include, in s 3(b), the purpose of having a tribunal deal with matters in a way that is accessible, fair, just, economical, informal and quick. The Tribunal's functions relating to these objects include, in s 4, encouraging the early and economical resolution of disputes before the Tribunal; ensuring proceedings are conducted in an informal way that minimises costs to parties, and is as quick as is consistent with achieving justice; and, ensuring the Tribunal is accessible and responsive to the diverse needs to the persons who use it.

16. In conducting its proceedings the Tribunal must act fairly and according to the substantial merits of the case, and with as little formality and technicality and as much speed as the requirements of the QCAT Act (or an enabling Act) and a proper consideration of the matters before the Tribunal permit: s 28.

17. The Tribunal also has particular powers which have historical foundations in the equitable jurisdiction of the courts: the power to grant injunctions, and to make declarations (ss 59 and 60).

18. A subordinate court or tribunal must find its powers in the express language of the statute which gives it existence and in the implications which derive from that language.[3] Even in the absence of an express power, however, an inferior court may have an implied power to grant certain kinds of relief. As Dawson J observed in Grassby v R (1989) 168 CLR 1 at 16–17 while inferior courts are unable to draw upon the unrestrained and undivided powers of superior courts, they may possess jurisdiction arising by implication, on the principle that a grant of power carries with it everything necessary for its exercise.

19. The word "necessary" has been defined, in a context similar to that appearing in s 9(4) of the QCAT Act, as identifying a power to make orders which are reasonably required or legally ancillary to the accomplishment to specific remedies.[4]

20. It has also been observed that, for an inferior tribunal to exercise an implied or "necessary" power, that power must be clearly evident in the statute said to confer it.[5]

21. In Queensland, inferior courts have been expressly given some equitable jurisdiction: for example, under s 69(1) of the District Court of Queensland Act 1967 that court may exercise all the powers and authorities of the Supreme Court including giving effect to every ground of defence, whether equitable or legal. The Magistrates' Court is given a limited, equitable jurisdiction under s 4 of the Magistrates Court Act 1921.

22. No similar, clear expression of conferral of these powers appears in the QCAT Act (or, relevantly here, in the BCCMA).

23. Some reliance was placed, by the Body Corporate, upon a decision of the Administrative Decisions Tribunal of New South Wales in Prasad v Fairfield City Council [2000] NSWADT 164, which involved a dispute about retail shop leases under the Retail Leases Act 1994 (NSW). The applicant there sought, in effect, a declaration that the respondent was estopped from denying the applicant's right to conduct its business without competition, relying upon principles of promissory estoppel. Under s 72 of the NSW legislation the Tribunal had power to determine matters concerning retail tenancy disputes which included remedies such as relief from forfeiture, injunctions, declarations and ancillary orders necessary to give full effect to the provision. The judicial Member of the ADT held that these equitable powers should not be cut down, and rejected the respondent's contentions that the Tribunal lacked jurisdiction.

24. In Victoria, the Court of Appeal looked to the degree of connection between the matter in which the Victorian Civil and Administrative Tribunal did have jurisdiction, and its power in equity to grant an injunction, in The Herald & Weekly Times v Victoria [2006] VSCA 146.

25. In that case the President of VCAT, Morris J, had issued an injunction against the publication of the contents of a settlement agreement between parties who had been involved in proceedings before the Tribunal. The Tribunal's legislation gave it power to grant an injunction, but Morris J had also ordered that a newspaper be restrained from publishing the contents of the terms of settlement, and it was that order which came before the Court of Appeal.

26. The Victorian Court of Appeal[6] held that the critical question was whether or not VCAT had jurisdiction to entertain the application and said that the answer depended on whether the claim for a suppression order could be said to be so related to the original proceeding that it formed part of it or whether it was, in truth, a separate proceeding in respect of which the Tribunal's original jurisdiction had not been invoked. The Court ultimately found that the Tribunal had not had jurisdiction because the different proceedings lacked the necessary inter-relationship.

27. That question of relationship was addressed by the High Court in R v Ross Jones: ex parte Green (1984) 156 CLR 185 in which Gibbs CJ (with whom Mason J agreed) said[7] that proceedings will have the appropriate relationship if the order sought is consequential on or incidental to an order being made in the other proceedings.

28. The degree of connection was also considered by Cavanough J in a matter involving judicial review of another VCAT decision, Tucci v Victorian Civil and Administrative Tribunal & Anor [2010] VSC 425. The question was whether VCAT had jurisdiction to hear a claim by a landlord against a guarantor of the tenant's obligations under a lease. At [46]–[47] Cavanough J noted that, because the Victorian Tribunal had power to entertain a consumer and trader dispute, and even though it was not a court, it was obviously intended to have power to recognise and give affect to equitable defences in cases of that kind:

> Equitable principles and defences would potentially be relevant in many kinds (perhaps all kinds) of consumer and trader disputes, not only in disputes relating to guarantees. The posited inability of VCAT to have regard to equitable principles or defences surely could not have the effect that contracts of guarantee, alone amongst all contracts, are taken outside the notion of "services" and outside the definition of "consumer and trader dispute.

29. The Body Corporate also relied, in its submissions here, upon the fact that QCAT is said in s 164 of its Act to be a "court of record". The fact that QCAT is so designated does not, however, appear to carry any strong or automatic inference that the legislature intended to invest it with the power or right, either inherent or implied, to draw upon the broad powers of a superior court. As the High Court said of the Family Court in DJL v Central Authority (2000) 201 CLR 226, the governing legislation of that court provides no express conferral of particular powers.[8]

30. It is also to be observed that, despite the fact that the District Court of Queensland is categorised as a "Court of Record" in s 8 of its governing legislation, the legislature also apparently deemed it necessary to include an express provision granting it general powers to exercise wide equitable jurisdiction.

31. The Body Corporate also sought to rely upon the decision of the High Court in Emanuele v Australian Securities Commission (1996) 188 CLR 114 and, in particular, an observation of Kirby J at 147:

> A feature of the administration of justice in more recent times has been a general disfavour towards procedural rigidities and a preference for a somewhat more flexible approach to statutory preconditions where these are of a procedural character.

32. Gaudron J also observed in Emanuele that the powers of courts must be exercised in the interests of justice, which are not well served if the exercise is undertaken inflexibly and without regard to the "…

convenience of the situation".[9] Her Honour's judgment was a dissenting one, but it is not unfair to observe that a similar philosophy springs from the judgments in the subsequent decision of the High Court in Aon Risk Services Australia Limited v Australian National University (2009) 239 CLR 175.

33. Prior to 1 December 2009 disputes of the present kind were within the jurisdiction of the former Commercial and Consumer Tribunal (CCT). In Sandmoon Pty Ltd v Body Corporate for South Pacific Noosa Apartments CTS 26117 [2008] QCCTBCCM 27 the presiding CCT member, Mr James Thomas AM QC was concerned with a dispute between a managing agent and a Body Corporate over whether the latter was entitled to terminate the managing agent's rights under the applicable agreements. The managing agent had sought a variety of forms of relief from the CCT, including alternative claims for relief against forfeiture of its interest in the agreements.

34. As the learned and very experienced Member observed, under the CCT's governing legislation[10] the Tribunal was given jurisdiction to deal with particular matters and, under s 9 given the power to "… do all things necessary or convenient to be done for exercising its jurisdiction" — that is, the legislation was in almost identical terms to s 9(4) of the QCAT Act. The CCT Act also required, in s 4, that the CCT act in ways that were "… just, fair, informal, cost efficient and speedy".

35. Although Mr Thomas ultimately concluded that the legislation did not invest that Tribunal with powers to grant equitable remedies like relief against forfeiture or penalty he observed, in passing, that the BCCMA gives Adjudicators, appointed under Chapter 6, power to make orders that are "just and equitable in the circumstances (including a declaratory order) to resolve a dispute" about contractual matters: s 276; and, that it was odd that no similar provision appeared to have been included in the legislation for the CCT. He went on to observe that the failure appeared to be the product of an oversight, requiring serious reconsideration by the legislature.

36. Elsewhere, the provisions of the BCCMA make it clear that the legislature intended, in the Act, to confine and simplify dispute resolution processes: in s 228(1)(d) it is said that Chapter 6, relating to dispute resolution, is intended to establish arrangements for resolving disputes about matters arising under the engagements of persons as Body Corporate managers — that is, the provision is couched in broad terms, which might be said to include the disputes anticipated by the Act itself.

37. There are other indications that the legislature considered that QCAT would be a Tribunal undertaking important legal work, and that its jurisdiction ought not be unduly constrained: for example, persons can only be appointed Senior Members of QCAT if they are Australian lawyers of at least 8 years standing, and ordinary Members must have been Australian lawyers for 6 years.

38. While it is clear that QCAT was not intended, by the legislature, to have all of the same broad equitable powers as a superior court it is improbable that the legislature intended that the Tribunal would immediately cede jurisdiction when instances like the present arise. It is, as a matter of logic, equally improbable that there was legislative intent that inter-linked disputes like those arising here could, or should, be adjudicated separately.

39. In this case the Body Corporate is arguing, in effect, that the agreement between the parties which underpins this Tribunal's jurisdiction has been affected by events and circumstances associated with it which give rise to equitable defences, or relief. Once that is appreciated, it is compelling that the different elements of the dispute form part of the same proceeding — the test applied by the Victorian Court of Appeal in Herald & Weekly Times, and suggested by the High Court in R v Ross-Jones; and, as observed in Tucci, it is readily foreseeable that, in the jurisdiction invested in QCAT by the BCCMA, equitable defences or matters involving equitable issues might from time to time arise.

40. The grant, to this Tribunal in the QCAT Act, of specific powers to provide traditional equitable remedies under its legislation, read in combination with the clauses discussed earlier, points with sufficient clarity to a construction of the legislation which would empower this Tribunal to address the equitable cross claims raised by the respondent here in a matter where the applicant has brought a claim which plainly, otherwise, falls within the Tribunal's statutory jurisdiction.

41. For these reasons, I have concluded that the proceedings should remain here and Batwing's applications should be dismissed — as should the Body Corporate's application for a transfer of the proceedings.

Decision delivered on 19 August 2011

Conveyancing — Contract for sale — Where appellant agreed to purchase an apartment from the respondent — Where the appellant had contended she was induced to enter the contract by false, misleading and deceptive representations and had previously obtained an injunction restraining the respondent from terminating and the respondent had counter-claimed for specific performance — Where the appellant's claim was dismissed and an order for specific performance was made with a new completion date set — Where apartment was subsequently flooded so as to be unfit for occupation as a dwelling — Where appellant purported to rescind the contract pursuant to s 64 of the Property Law Act 1974 due to flood damage — Where the appellant applied for a declaration that the contract had been validly rescinded and for dissolution of the order for specific performance — Where the trial judge extended the time for completion and made orders to facilitate trial of the issues raised — Whether purchaser's right of rescission under s 64 exists until the actual date of completion or only until the date of completion specified in the contract — Property Law Act 1974, s 64.

The appellant purchaser agreed to buy a residential apartment from the respondent vendor for $2.155 million. After the community titles scheme was established, the vendor called for completion by 12 May 2009. The purchaser unsuccessfully sought an order declaring the contract void, alleging misleading and deceptive conduct in breach of the then Trade Practices Act 1974 (Cth). The purchaser's claim was dismissed and an order for specific performance was made, with the new completion date being fixed as 8 February 2011.

Before the new settlement date arrived, the building was inundated by flood water. The vendor made an open offer to the purchaser to clean up and restore the apartment to its original condition at the vendor's cost. The vendor said it required four months in which to complete that work and proposed a new settlement date of 4 June 2011.

The purchaser rejected the vendor's offer to restore the apartment and purported to rescind the contract on the ground that the apartment had been rendered "unfit for occupation as a dwelling unit". The purchaser thereby exercised a statutory right of rescission said to arise from s 64 of the Property Law Act 1974. Section 64(1) provides that:

> "In any contract for the sale of a dwelling house where, before the date of completion or possession whichever earlier occurs, the dwelling house is so destroyed or damaged as to be unfit for occupation as a dwelling house, the purchaser may, at the purchaser's option, rescind the contract by notice in writing given to the vendor or the vendor's
> [140370]
> solicitor not later than the date of completion or possession whichever the earlier occurs." (emphasis added)

Because the contract was subject to the earlier court order for specific performance, the purchaser needed the court's leave to enforce her right to rescind. She therefore applied for a declaration that the contract had been rescinded and the dissolution of the order for specific performance. Instead the trial judge extended the completion date by four months and made procedural orders to facilitate a trial of "the issues raised in the application". The extension of time for completion was expressed to be made without prejudice to the purchaser's right to maintain that the contract had been validly terminated pursuant to s 64 of the Property Law Act.

The trial judge did not think it necessary to determine whether the "date of completion" in s 64 refers to the date set for completion by the contract or the date of actual completion. If the "date of completion" refers to the date stipulated in the contract, the vendor contended that the purchaser's rescission was too late.

On appeal, the purchaser noted that as a consequence of the order made by the trial judge, the purchaser would have had to perform the contract by order of the court before the court had even determined whether she was ever obliged to do so. The purchaser submitted that the trial judge's order should be set aside and an order be made that the order for specific performance be vacated, with a declaration made that the contract was rescinded.

The vendor countered that the s 64 right of rescission could only have been exercised prior to the contractually appointed date for completion and that the purchaser's case was based on "an attempt to take advantage of her own wrong".

Held: for the appellant — appeal allowed (see para 46 of the judgment for the specific orders made).

1. Section 64 of the Property Law Act accords a right of rescission where premises are rendered uninhabitable "before the date of completion or possession". The apparent objective of the provision is to accord relief to a purchaser where, without fault on his or her part, the subject matter of an uncompleted contract is rendered unfit for the purpose. The interpretation of the meaning of the phrase "date of completion" that best fits with the objective of the provision, is that put forward by the purchaser: that is, if prior to actual completion or possession the premises are rendered unfit, the purchaser gains a right of rescission. This interpretation is supported by the fact that s 64 does not refer to the date of completion "appointed under the contract".

2. The vendor's submission that this construction of s 64 rewards a wrong-doing purchaser, was unfounded. The purchaser had at an anterior stage suffered the consequence of her breach of contract: she was subjected to court orders adverse to her, including an order for specific performance of the contract. The subsequent damaging of the property was obviously entirely without fault on her part.

3. It followed that because, as conceded by the vendor, the unit was rendered uninhabitable by the date of the purported rescission, the purchaser gained a right to rescind at any time up to the date of actual completion or possession.

Chief Justice:

Preliminary

1. By a contract dated 25 July 2007, the appellant agreed to purchase from the respondent a residential apartment in a proposed building at Tennyson, Brisbane. The purchase price was $2.155 million. Before any completion of the contract, the by-then completed building was, on or about 13 January 2011, inundated by flood water.

2. The ground floor unit which is the subject of the contract was flooded. It was necessary to remove the lower level of gyprock sheeting of the walls and to disconnect the electrical wiring and appliances. A measure of the devastation of the flood was that the respondent required four months to complete the necessary restoration work, which it offered to carry out. The respondent made that offer on 24 January 2011.

3. The appellant rejected the respondent's offer to restore the unit, and on 28 January purported to rescind the contract on the ground that the unit had been rendered "unfit for occupation as a dwelling unit". The appellant thereby exercised a statutory right of rescission said to arise from s 64 of the Property Law Act 1974 (Qld).

4. That section provides:

> "64 Right to rescind on destruction of or damage to dwelling house
> (1) In any contract for the sale of a dwelling house where, before the date of completion or possession whichever earlier occurs, the dwelling house is so destroyed or damaged as to be unfit for occupation as a dwelling house, the purchaser may, at the purchaser's option, rescind the contract by notice in writing given to the vendor or the vendor's solicitor not later than the date of completion or possession whichever the earlier occurs.
> (2) Upon rescission of a contract under this section, any money paid by the purchaser shall be refunded to the purchaser and any documents of title or transfer returned to the vendor who alone shall be entitled to the benefit of any insurance policy relating to such destruction or damage subject to the rights of any person entitled to the insurance policy because of an encumbrance over or in respect of the land.
> sale of a dwelling house means the sale of improved land the improvements on which consist wholly or substantially of a dwelling house or the sale of a lot on a building units plan within the meaning of the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 or the sale of a lot included in a community titles scheme under the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 if the lot—
> (a) wholly or substantially, consists of a dwelling; and > (b) is, under the Land Title Act 1994—
> (i) a lot on a building format plan of subdivision; or > (ii) a lot on a volumetric format plan of subdivision, and wholly contained within a building.

(4) This section applies only to contracts made after the commencement of this Act and shall have effect despite any stipulation to the contrary."

5. The originally appointed completion date, following the establishment of the applicable community title scheme, was 12 May 2009. The appellant contended she had been induced to enter into the contract by false, misleading and deceptive representations. On 11 May 2009, the day before the originally appointed date for completion, the appellant obtained an injunction restraining the respondent from terminating for default, in order to preserve her opportunity to have the court declare the contract void under the Trade Practices Act 1974 should her contentions be vindicated. In the resultant proceeding, the respondent counterclaimed for specific performance.

6. On 10 December 2010 the appellant's claim was however dismissed, and an order made for specific performance, with a completion date fixed for 8 February 2011. It was on or about 13 January 2011 that the building was flooded and damaged, and the appellant purported to exercise her statutory right to rescind on 28 January 2011.

7. Because the sale contract was subject to the court order for specific performance, the appellant needed the court's leave to enforce her right. She therefore applied for a declaration that the contract had been rescinded and the dissolution of the order for specific performance. The learned primary Judge heard that application on 3 February 2011 and gave judgment on 7 February 2011 (completion was due under the specific performance order on 8 February 2011). The instant appeal is brought against that judgment.

The primary judgment

8. The learned Judge extended the completion date to 8 June 2011, that is, by four months, and made procedural orders to facilitate a trial of "the issues raised in the application", and entered the proceeding on the Commercial List. The extension of time for completion was expressed to be made "without prejudice to the [appellant's] right to maintain that the contract has been validly terminated pursuant to section 64 of the Property Law Act 1974 (Qld)". Her Honour said there were "questions of fact and law which cannot be determined in a summary fashion".

9. The question of fact the Judge identified was whether the premises had been damaged so as to be unfit for occupation as a dwelling, and as to the ambit of rectification. Counsel for the respondent had sought time to adduce evidence on those aspects (a position no longer maintained on appeal).

10. As to questions of law, Her Honour considered "moot" whether in referring to the date of completion, section 64 is referring to "the date set for completion [that is, by the contract] or the date of actual completion". If the former, then Counsel for the respondent now contend that no such rescission could have been effected after 12 May 2009. Her Honour also left open whether the exercise of a statutory right of rescission after a specific performance order has been made entitles the party exercising that right to the dissolution of the specific performance order.

11. The extended completion date of 8 June 2011 has now passed. The parties have however agreed to stay the operation of the orders made on 7 February 2011 until the determination of the instant appeal.

The parties' contentions

12. Mr Sofronoff QC, who appeared for the appellant, submitted that the learned Judge erred in failing to determine the following issues:

1. the effect of the subsistence of the specific performance order on the exercise of the statutory right to rescind;
2. the date at which the premises must have been unfit for habitation for the right under section 64 to have been available;
3. the date of completion contemplated by section 64, in circumstances where a specific performance order was subsisting; and
4. any relevance in the respondent's capacity to restore the damage.

He submitted that until those matters of law were resolved, Her Honour had no basis upon which to determine "whether to decide the issue or issues of fact herself or send the matter for trial".

13. Mr Sofronoff pointed to an unusual aspect of the order made by the Judge, in that "the appellant will have to perform the contract by order of the court before the court has even determined whether she was ever obliged to do so". He submitted that Her Honour's order should be set aside, and in lieu thereof, an order be made that the order for specific performance be vacated, with a declaration made that the contract was rescinded on 28 January 2011; or alternatively, in the event the respondent may wish to pursue a factual issue about habitability of the premises on 28 January 2011, that a short adjournment be granted for that purpose so that the respondent might gather and present material going to that issue. (The respondent now concedes the premises were relevantly uninhabitable.)

14. Mr Myers QC, who appeared for the respondent, submitted that the section 64 right of rescission could only have been exercised prior to the contractually appointed date for completion, and that the appellant's case is based on "an attempt to take advantage of her own wrong" — being her failure to complete in accordance with the contract. He submitted that while Her Honour erred in making orders numbers two to four (the procedural orders facilitating a trial) and five (in relation to costs), she correctly continued the operation of the specific performance order, and he sought a further extension of the time for completion under that order. (The respondent has filed a cross appeal.)

15. As mentioned already, Mr Myers conceded that as at 28 January 2011 the premises had been damaged so as to be unfit for occupation as a dwelling house, and that that remained the position as of 8 February 2011.

Discussion

The appropriateness of the approach taken at first instance

16. If the questions of law should be determined favourably for the appellant, then there would be no occasion for a trial.

17. The position now taken for the respondent invites attention to a limited question of construction, namely, whether a right of rescission under section 64 could subsist beyond the contractually appointed completion date, in circumstances where, as here, a specific performance order in effect took over. Had that issue been determined favourably to the respondent, there likewise would have been no need for a trial.

18. It would therefore have been preferable had the Judge addressed those questions definitively, because of the consequences if determined in a particular way.

19. The orders in fact made amounted to a deferring of the determination of issues of both law and fact, but with the unusual consequence, to which reference has already been made, of obliging the appellant to complete the contract in circumstances where a court may subsequently find that she was not in reality obliged to do so.

20. In making the orders she made, the learned Judge was exercising a discretion. While judges may in some circumstances decline to determine questions of law summarily because of their complexity, as upon applications for summary judgment, this was a situation where determinations should have been made so that the scope of the parties' respective obligations was clarified. In my respectful view, the learned Judge erred in not determining those questions of law, and this court should now do so. I therefore turn to those questions.

The question of construction

21. The effect of the specific performance order was to subject the future exercise of the parties' contractual rights and obligations to court control (Singh (Sugadar) v Nazeer [1979] Ch 474, 480-2). The contract remained in force and did not merge in the judgment for specific performance (Johnson v Agnew [1980] AC 367, 393, Ogle v Comboyuro Investments Pty Ltd (1976) 136 CLR 444, 460).

22. Mr Myers submitted that "[t]he only agreed date of completion was that for which the contract provided and which, in accordance with its terms, was 12 May 2009", and that that is the date relevant for the purposes of section 64, rather than "a date fixed of necessity by a court because one party breached the contract".

23. On the other hand, Mr Sofronoff primarily submitted that section 64 refers to the "actual date for completion which is current at the date of termination", including a date set by the court, although he advanced a less restrictive construction in his reply, to which I will come.

24. Mr Myers responded that the appellant thereby asked the court to interpret section 64 to "enable her to take advantage of her own wrong", and referred to well-established authority that "a statute should not be interpreted to enable a person to gain an advantage or profit from his or her own wrong" (for example, Bennion on Statutory Interpretation, 5th ed, p 1141).

25. The statutory provision accords a right of rescission where premises are rendered uninhabitable "before the date of completion or possession".

26. Subject to the terms of the particular contract (compare cl 15.2 of this contract), a purchaser would at common law have to suffer the consequence of that loss (Fletcher v Manton (1940) 64 CLR 37, 45, 49; Lysaght v Edwards (1876) 2 Ch D 499, 507). This statutory provision ameliorates that position. (Victoria has a broadly comparable provision: s 34 Sale of Land Act 1962 (Vic).)

Naturally read, those words in section 64 could refer to one or other of the following.

28. First, they could refer to the currently applicable date for completion or possession as at the time the premises suffered the requisite damage. If the damage occurs prior to that date, the right of rescission arises. In that regard, it may be noted the provision does not refer to the date of completion "appointed under the contract", suggesting a date ordered by the court could fall within the ambit of the provision.

29. Second, the words could refer to the earlier of the date of actual completion or possession, a possibility which engaged Counsel towards the end of their oral argument. Supporting that construction is the reference in section 64 to a date "of", rather than "for", completion or possession, as if referring to a date of actual completion, or the actual taking of possession.

30. The apparent objective of this beneficial provision is to accord relief to a purchaser where, without fault on his or her own part, the subject matter of an uncompleted contract is rendered unfit for the purpose. Consistently, the second of those constructions is textually preferable: if prior to actual completion or possession the premises are rendered unfit in that way, the purchaser gains a right of rescission.

31. As has been seen, the written submissions focused on the significance of the court's imposition of the date for completion by means of the order for specific performance, in the context of the contractually agreed date for completion. It is not necessary to analyse those competing contentions in detail because of what I consider to be the natural construction of the provision. But in deference to the arguments of Counsel, the following points may briefly be made, and they support the view that if the actual date "of" completion should yield to the current date "for" completion, the latter concept nevertheless embraces a date set by the court under an order for specific performance and is not limited to the contractual prescription.

32. First, Mr Myers submitted that the decree for specific performance need not have specified a date for completion, reinforcing his contention as to the irrelevance of the date in fact appointed here by the court. The submission would be sufficiently answered by the fact that the court did appoint the date which thereby became the currently applicable date for the purpose of section 64. Had no date been set by the court, one party could have given notice to complete, or the parties may have agreed on a date, or the court could itself subsequently have set a date. Had no date been nominated, agreed or set in that way prior to 28 January 2011, the section would nevertheless have been engaged, because "the date of completion or possession" would, although not yet prescribed, have remained in the future.

33. Second, the opening words of section 64(1), "[i]n any contract for the sale …", upon which Counsel for the respondent relied, would not require or suggest that the subsequent reference to "the date of completion or possession" be limited to that contractually agreed. The opening reference to "the contract" is intended simply to signal that the availability of this right of rescission is limited to agreements for the purchase of dwellings.

34. Third, Counsel for the appellant pointed out that the respondent could have avoided the risk of this situation arising by terminating the contract for the appellant's failure to complete, rather than enforcing the contract following the dismissal of the appellant's claim on 10 December 2010. While the respondent would thereby have avoided this risk, with the inundation occurring later, I do not consider it necessary or especially helpful to have regard to that sort of consideration in determining the natural construction of section 64: the words are clear and speak for themselves.

35. Fourth, Counsel for the respondent provided an example of what was said to be the "capricious" operation of section 64 if the construction primarily urged by the appellant were adopted. Counsel submitted that "a purchaser who had no grounds for rescinding a contract and who was due to complete it under the contract, and who had an expectation from weather predictions that a severe flood could occur in the foreseeable future (or a damaging storm), could deliberately and wilfully breach the contract, fail to complete, and act on the chance that a court-ordered date for specific performance would post-date a flood or damaging weather event that might occur", and under that scenario derive a right of rescission. What I believe is the natural construction of section 64 should not yield to such an extreme possibility.

36. Fifth, I would in any case accept the responding submission for the appellant, that when the court specified a new date for completion, that became in all respects the applicable date under the contract which subsisted subject to court control.

37. But as I have said, it is compelling to conclude, and I do, that the provision should naturally be read as contemplating the actual date "of" completion or possession: if that has not arrived, in that neither completion has occurred nor possession been taken, and the requirement of the provision is satisfied (destruction or damage leading to unfitness for occupation), a right of rescission is available to the purchaser.

Conclusion

38. It follows that because, as conceded, the unit was rendered uninhabitable by the date of the purported rescission, the appellant gained a right to rescind at any time up to the date of actual completion or possession (whichever be the earlier date).

39. Addressing the other points left open by Her Honour, I would accept the submission that the unit must have been uninhabitable as at the date of the rescission which was effected. Also, noting that the provision gives no right to a vendor to maintain the contract in order to attempt to repair the damage, the possibility of restoration does not preclude rescission where the premise of the provision has been met, that is, the dwelling has been destroyed or damaged so as to be unfit for occupation as a dwelling.

40. The submission that this construction rewards a wrong-doing purchaser is unfounded. The appellant had at an anterior stage suffered the consequence of her breach of contract: she was subjected to court orders adverse to her, including an order for specific performance, the respondent having decided to enforce rather than terminate the contract. The subsequent damaging of the property was obviously entirely without fault on her part. Any benefit she gained from the exercise of her right of rescission was not consequent upon any "wrong-doing" on her part, the consequences of which had earlier been spent; it was the consequence of the operation of remedial legislation.

Appropriate relief

41. The orders made by the learned Judge should be set aside, and the order for specific performance originally made on 10 December 2010 and varied by Her Honour on 7 February 2011 set aside.

42. In Sunbird Plaza Pty Ltd v Maloney (1988) 166 CLR 245, 260 Mason CJ observed that "rescission after an order for specific performance requires the leave of the court or, more appropriately, the vacation of the order". Neither was sought in this case in advance of the purported rescission. In Stevter Holdings Ltd v Katra Constructions Pty Ltd [1975] 1 NSWLR 459, 469–470, Helsham J dealt with such a situation by discharging the contract. See also the approach of the New South Wales Court of Appeal in JAG Investment Pty Ltd v Strati [1981] 2 NSWLR 600, 603. In Stevter, Helsham J observed that where a rescission had otherwise been duly effected, there would ordinarily be an entitlement to the discharge of the contract.

43. We were informed that whether the contract is discharged now, or the rescission on 28 January 2011 retrospectively authorized, has no commercial consequence. Which course is now followed is a formality.

44. However, following the approach suggested by Mason CJ in Sunbird Plaza, the preferable approach in this case is probably simply to order that the order for specific performance made on 10 December 2010 and varied on 7 February 2011 be vacated. That would fall within the court's power in regulating performance by the parties under the contract, and would operate to remove, retrospectively, the fetter upon the appellant's power to exercise her statutory right of rescission when she did.

45. There should also however be a declaration that the appellant validly rescinded the contract on 28 January 2011. With the vacating of the order for specific performance, such a declaration is strictly not necessary, but should be made lest there be any residual doubt as to the validity of the rescission. So far as necessary, the court would thereby be seen to be lending its authority to that course retrospectively.

Orders

46. The following orders should be made:

1. that the appeal be allowed, the orders and directions made on 7 February 2011 be set aside, and the order for specific performance made on 10 December 2010 also be set aside;
2. that there be a declaration that on or about 28 January 2011 the appellant validly rescinded her contract with the respondent dated 25 June 2007;
3. that the respondent's cross appeal be dismissed; and
4. that the respondent pay the appellant's costs of the appeal and cross-appeal, and the hearing in the Trial Division, to be assessed on the standard basis.

McMurdo J: I agree with the orders proposed by the Chief Justice and I substantially agree with his reasons.

48. The application to the primary judge involved no factual issue of any consequence. Clearly the property was unfit for occupation when the appellant purported to terminate the contract and was to remain so for some months. But the respondent suggested to the primary judge that there was a factual question, which was whether the unfitness for occupation came from the flooding itself as distinct from what the respondent had done afterwards, such as removing all sheeting and disconnecting electrical wiring. As I read the transcript of that argument, this was the factual issue which the respondent suggested required a trial. Not surprisingly, that was not a submission repeated in this appeal. The respondent could hardly have avoided the operation of s 64 by proving that the critical damage was that which it had inflicted.

49. The real question raised by the application concerned the proper interpretation of s 64 and, in particular, the meaning of the expression "date of completion". The appellant's principal argument is that this was the date fixed by the Court in ordering specific performance of the contract. The respondent's case is that it was the agreed date for completion, which had long passed. And ultimately the appellant further argued that it means the date of actual completion. In my view, it is that third argument which should be accepted.

50. A difficulty in this interpretation is that s 64 does not simply refer to completion, but to the date of completion. Against that, the term is date of completion rather than date for completion. And the respondent conceded that the alternative of "possession" means actual possession, rather than an agreed date on which the purchaser would take possession, which provides some support for the interpretation which I accept.

51. The evident policy underlying this provision is the protection of purchasers of dwelling houses from the burden of having to complete a contract where the house becomes uninhabitable by destruction or damage after the contract is made. Absent a term to the contrary, the common law position would be that the property would be at the purchaser's risk pending completion.[1] The apparent purpose of this provision is to shift that risk to vendors.

52. The respondent argues that the legislative purpose could not have been to assist a purchaser who had failed to complete as agreed, which was the position here. However, the respondent's argument, if accepted, would also affect the position of an innocent purchaser. Upon its argument, if the agreed date for completion passed because of the default of the vendor, after which the house was destroyed but before completion, nevertheless the purchaser would be without the protection of s 64(1). That unattractive result, it is argued, would be the consequence of the purchaser's election to affirm the contract. This is difficult to reconcile with the apparent purpose of the provision. Moreover, an innocent purchaser would not be obliged to elect immediately upon the vendor's failure to complete on the agreed date,[2] so that upon the respondent's argument, a purchaser could lose the benefit of s 64 where the house is destroyed prior to an election to affirm.

53. The most likely intention, which is consistent with the words used, is that this alteration of the risk in favour of purchasers should remain in place notwithstanding the passage of the agreed date for completion. The burden of this risk upon the vendor is made an element of the contractual relationship for as long as the contract remains on foot. Where an innocent vendor affirms the contract after a purchaser's failure to complete, the contract which is affirmed retains that element. In this particular case, the innocent vendor was restrained by an interlocutory injunction from terminating the contract for the purchaser's failure to complete, although the purchaser's claim for ultimate relief, under s 87 of the Trade Practices Act 1974 (Cth), was for the termination of the contract. On one view, the operation for s 64 in these circumstances could appear harsh. But the particular circumstances could not have been considered to be so likely to occur that they should affect the interpretation of s 64.

54. Central to the respondent's argument is the proposition that the contract remained unaffected by the terms of the order for specific performance. I would accept that proposition which, although not affecting the interpretation of the section, is relevant to the terms of the relief which should be granted to the appellant. The appellant applied for a declaration that she had duly terminated the contract on 28 January 2011. She also applied for an order that "the decree of specific performance and the ancillary and incidental orders made herein on 10 December 2010 be dissolved". This was consistent with the longstanding view that an order for specific performance should not be left in place if the contract had been or was to be terminated. In Sunbird Plaza Pty Ltd v Maloney, Mason CJ (with whom Deane, Dawson and Toohey JJ agreed) said that "… rescission after an order for specific performance requires the leave of the court or, more appropriately, the vacation of the order".[3]

55. But according to some authority, a contract could not be terminated after a decree of specific performance without first obtaining the permission of the Court, so that it would be by the Court's order that the termination occurred. For example, in JAG Investment Pty Ltd v Strati, Hope JA, citing Johnson v Agnew,[4] said that in this context "… it is clear that the contract cannot be determined until the approval or order of the court has been obtained, and that it is the order, or something done by authority of the order, that operates to terminate the contract".[5] At the same time, Hope JA said of this jurisdiction (to set aside the order for specific performance) that its "precise nature … is not entirely clear".[6]

56. In Sunbird Plaza Pty Ltd v Maloney, Mason CJ noted that a line of English authority, for the proposition that a plaintiff who has obtained an uncompleted order for specific performance cannot terminate for the defendant's subsequent repudiation, had been strongly criticised[7] and his Honour referred in particular to Meagher, Gummow & Lehane, Equity: Doctrines & Remedies (2nd ed 1984) [2053], pp 504–507 (a criticism maintained in the current edition).[8] Meagher JA repeated that criticism in Aarons v Advance Commercial Finance Ltd[9] where, after a purchaser failed to perform according to an order for specific performance, the vendor went back to Court to seek to terminate the contract. His Honour said: "… [at] that point, in my view, the vendor could have terminated the contract without further ado. However, a doctrine seems to be prevalent that a contract cannot be terminated by the innocent party if a decree for specific performance has been made by the court. I can see no justification for any such doctrine. Once it is conceded — and all authorities do concede it — that an order for the specific performance of a contract does not cause the contract to merge in the order, no rational justification of the doctrine can be formulated: sed dis aliter visum: Johnson v Agnew [1980] AC 827, JAG Investments Pty Ltd v Strati [1981] 2 NSWLR 600".[10]

57. That criticism has particular force, but it remains necessary to proceed according to Sunbird Plaza Pty Ltd v Maloney, from which it is clear that in this context, there must be some order which puts paid to the order for specific performance. Mason CJ was careful to point out that this was appropriately described as a vacation of the order for specific performance rather than the grant of the Court's permission for the termination of the contract. Here, although specific performance had been ordered, the contract retained in all respects its effect according to its terms. An order of the Court was unnecessary for the appellant to terminate this contract, as she did on 28

January. But the order for specific performance could not be left unattended, and the Court's record had to be amended to correspond with what had become the contractual position. Accordingly, the appropriate orders are those proposed by the Chief Justice.

Dalton J: I agree with the orders proposed by the Chief Justice, and his reasons for them. I also agree with the reasons of Philip McMurdo J and the views he expresses as to vacation of an order for specific performance being the preferable course after a contract is properly terminated during the currency of such an order.

HENDERSON & ANOR v THE BODY CORPORATE FOR MERRIMAC HEIGHTS

(2011) LQCS ¶90-174; Court citation: [2011] QSC 336

Decision delivered on 11 November 2011

Community schemes — Where the defendant was the body corporate of a housing complex subject to a community title scheme — Where the defendant entered into a caretaking agreement and a landscape maintenance agreement with the plaintiffs — Whether the plaintiffs breached or repudiated the agreements — Whether each agreement was enforceable against the body corporate — Whether the plaintiffs should have been awarded damages for breach of contract for their lost profits from the performance of the agreements.

The defendant was the body corporate of a housing complex which was the subject of a community titles scheme. The body corporate entered into two agreements, one of which provided for the mowing of "[a]ll grass areas including front and back yards of units, common ground, back paddock and road frontage". These two agreements were later assigned to the plaintiffs. The agreements were valuable, with the plaintiffs paying their predecessors a price of $1,280,000 for the assignments of the agreements.

The body corporate subsequently obtained legal advice which noted that one of the agreements was beyond its powers as a body corporate. It thus asserted that it was never of any effect. The body corporate asserted that this was because it had no power to engage the plaintiffs to mow the front and back yards of units unless the body corporate had an agreement with each lot owner who required the service.

In response to the legal advice, the plaintiffs suggested alternative arrangements be made to the agreements, including that they cease performing services on private lots. The body corporate claimed that this constituted conduct by way of an abandonment of the agreements or, alternatively, a repudiation of them.

The body corporate claimed to have terminated, or have been entitled to terminate, both agreements as a result of the plaintiffs' conduct. Alternatively, it argued that one of the agreements was terminated by the agreement of the parties with effect from October 2009.

The plaintiffs countered that each agreement was enforceable and validly made pursuant to s 158 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 and what is now s 167 of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 2008 ("the 2008 Accommodation Module"). As they were replaced by other gardeners from October 2009, they also claimed damages for breach of contract for their lost profits from the performance of the agreements.

The body corporate accepted that the services provided under the agreements were services of a kind which were permitted by s 167 of the Regulation, but argued that s 167 must be interpreted in the light of other provisions of the same regulation module, the evident intent of which was said to be to employ a "user pays" principle.

Held: for the plaintiffs.

Whether the agreements were valid

1. Section 167 of the Regulation does not require the body corporate to have an existing agreement with the lot owners as a condition of the exercise of the power to engage another person to supply the service. Section 167(1) provides that "The body corporate may … engage another person to supply, utility services and other services for the benefit of owners and occupiers of lots, if the services consist of 1 or more of the following …". That subsection expressly authorised the body corporate to engage the plaintiffs. Section 167(2) permits rather than requires an agreement with the lot owners where the body corporate acts under s 167(1).

2. Further, the body corporate's argument, that a body corporate cannot supply services without some sort of agreement in place with each lot owner, would cause considerable difficulty in practice. The validity of an agreement between a body corporate and the service provider would depend, in many cases, upon facts and circumstances of which the service provider could be unaware. In particular, it would depend upon whether the body corporate had made an agreement with each and every relevant owner upon terms by which the costs of servicing a lot would be assured of recovery from its owner.

Whether the plaintiffs abandoned or repudiated the agreements

3. The plaintiffs' attempts to review the agreements did not evince an intention to abandon the contracts or to refuse to perform them. Upon an objective view, the plaintiffs strongly and consistently protested the body corporate's proposal to put an end to the agreements. Further, the plaintiffs continued to perform the agreements and were paid for their services up until the time the body corporate selected a new contractor. Clearly the plaintiffs were insisting upon the enforcement of the contracts.

4. Additionally, in order to show that there was a repudiation of the contracts, the body corporate needed to demonstrate that there was conduct by the plaintiffs which evinced an unwillingness or an inability to render substantial performance of the contracts. In support of its repudiation argument, the body corporate pointed to the plaintiffs' proposal for amendments to the contracts to make them compliant with the legal advice obtained by the body corporate. However, the plaintiffs, in doing this, did not evince an intention not to be bound by the contracts or to act inconsistently with its terms if no alternative arrangement could be agreed.

Whether the plaintiffs were entitled to damages

5. The plaintiffs established a loss of profits totalling $59,200 since being replaced by the alternative gardeners.

Whether the body corporate had effectively terminated the agreements

6. The body corporate, in an attempt to terminate the agreements, had issued a remedial action notice in accordance with s 129 of the 2008 Accommodation Module. The notice listed a number of matters which the plaintiffs were required to remedy, failing which, the body corporate asserted it had the right to terminate the agreements.

However, the plaintiffs were not required to remedy any of the matters set out in the notice. For example, the body corporate asserted that the plaintiffs provided services under the agreements within individual lots "without knowing or understanding that the body corporate could not pay for work within the lots of individual members of the body corporate". That was said to have breached cl 1 of the Code in Sch 2 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act (which is taken to have been included in the terms of any contract for the engagement of a caretaking service contractor).

Pursuant to cl 1 of the Code, a caretaking service contractor must have a good working knowledge and understanding of the Act relevant to the contractor's functions. The body corporate asserted that the plaintiffs did not have a good working knowledge and understanding of the Act because they believed that the agreements were valid. However, according to this judgement, the agreements were valid. On any view, it was at least arguable that the agreements were valid and failing to say otherwise did not demonstrate an ignorance or sufficient misunderstanding of the Act as to constitute a breach of the Code and thereby a breach of the agreements.

Before: McMurdo J

McMurdo J:

[1] At Merrimac on the Gold Coast there is a housing complex consisting of 150 dwellings situated on about six hectares of land.[1] It is the subject of a community titles scheme and the defendant is the body corporate.

[2] The defendant entered into two agreements, originally made with other parties, but which were assigned to the plaintiffs in 2007. Each agreement was in writing and was varied so that it would expire in 2022. One agreement, described as a Caretaking Agreement, was for the provision of services described as "caretaking, repair, maintenance, administration, control, use and enjoyment of the improvements and other property within the complex".[2] It also permitted the managers to conduct a letting agency from within the complex. The other agreement, described as a Landscape Maintenance Agreement ("LMA"), was for the provision of gardening services.[3] Each was assignable.

[3] Immediately prior to the assignments to the plaintiffs, the Caretaking Agreement was to have expired in October 2011 and the LMA was to have expired in October 2008. As was ultimately conceded by the defendant, the agreed duration of each agreement was extended coincidentally with the assignment to the plaintiffs. Each agreement became one which was to exist until 14 April 2022.[4] The agreements were valuable, the plaintiffs paying their predecessors a price of $1,280,000 for the assignments of the agreements as extended.[5]

[4] The issues here are whether each agreement is enforceable against the defendant. It says that it has terminated, or is entitled to terminate, the Caretaking Agreement for alleged breaches or a repudiation of that contract. To a large extent, its complaints about the plaintiffs' performance as caretakers are related to its complaints about the LMA. The defendant claims to have also terminated the LMA for alleged breaches or repudiation by the plaintiffs. Alternatively, it argues that the LMA was terminated by the agreement of the parties, with effect from October 2009. And it contends, in any event, that the LMA was made beyond its powers as a body corporate under the relevant legislation so that it has never been of any effect.

The plaintiffs claim that each agreement is enforceable and they seek declarations to that effect. They continue to act under the Caretaking Agreement with the benefit of an injunction, granted with the defendant's consent, by the Queensland Civil and Administrative Tribunal ("QCAT"), which restrains the defendant from terminating or attempting to terminate the Caretaking Agreement pending the outcome of proceedings commenced in that jurisdiction. Those proceedings were transferred to this Court by an order of the President of QCAT and became BS 1792 of 2010. However, as I will discuss, this Court's jurisdiction to determine the dispute the subject of those transferred proceedings is not clear.

[6] As for the LMA, the plaintiffs were replaced by other gardeners from October 2009. They intend to resume their duties under the LMA if they are successful here. They claim damages for breach of contract for their lost profits from the performance of the LMA since October 2009 until they are able to resume its performance. Their claims in respect of the LMA are the subject of BS 14479 of 2009, for which this Court does have jurisdiction.

The LMA case

[7] The LMA, dated 26 October 2005, was originally made by the defendant with Berry Management Pty Ltd.[6] The services to be supplied included the mowing of "[a]ll grass areas including front and back yards of units, common ground, back paddock and road frontage."[7] At least in that way, the LMA required work to be done not only upon common property but also upon individual lots. The agreed consideration was $35,000 per year subject to increases according to movements in "the index", an expression which was not defined but which was apparently intended to refer to the Consumer Price Index.[8]

[8] In January 2007 the plaintiffs contracted with Berry Management Pty Ltd to purchase its rights according to the LMA and the Caretaking Agreement.[9] The contract of sale was conditional upon the defendant agreeing to extend the Caretaking Agreement for at least 15 years.[10]

[9] On 28 February 2007 there was an extraordinary general meeting of the defendant at which it was resolved to agree to the variation in the duration of both contracts to April 2022 and, in effect, to the assignment of the contracts as varied to the plaintiffs.[11] On the same day the plaintiffs and the defendant executed a deed, by which the duration of the two agreements was extended to 14 April 2022.[12]

[10] A further deed was executed on 27 March 2007, described as a deed of assignment of the Caretaking Agreement and the LMA.[13] The parties to it were the plaintiffs, the defendant and Berry Management Pty Ltd. The evident purpose of this deed was to record the consent of the defendant to the assignments to the plaintiffs and to have them covenant to perform the agreements. Within this deed, the duration of the LMA was recorded as being the (originally agreed) term to expire on 31 October 2008 and the duration of the Caretaking Agreement was recorded as expiring on 16 October 2011 (with an option for a further five years).[14]

[11] As is now accepted by the defendant, this deed of assignment wrongly recorded the duration of each of the contracts being assigned. It was not until late in the trial that the defendant made that concession, until then maintaining that the duration of the agreements had not been extended. Those extensions had been the subject of the deed dated 28 February 2007. But the defendant had alleged that this deed had not varied the LMA and Caretaking Agreement because Berry Management Pty Ltd was not a party to it. The defendant's ultimate concession that each agreement was extended to 2022 was rightly made.

[12] In January 2009 the defendant received legal advice that the LMA may be invalid as having been made by the defendant ultra vires. The defendant's solicitors advised the defendant's committee that:

> "The body corporate may only engage the gardener to perform services which it has a power or duty to carry out. The requirement for the gardener to mow the front and back yards of units would be invalid because the body corporate does not have the power to maintain those areas.

The body corporate may engage a gardener to provide services to lot owners (eg mowing the front and back yards of their lots) provided the body corporate has an agreement with each lot owner who requires the service. The agreement is made pursuant to s 167 of the Accommodation Module.

If it is not possible to separate the remuneration for services to lot owners and services to the body corporate, then the landscape maintenance agreement may be invalid in its entirety." [15]

[13] As I have said, there are other issues about the performance of this agreement which are relevant to the defendant's alternative grounds for denying that the LMA is now enforceable. But it is convenient at this point to consider the validity of the contract.

The LMA — was it valid?

[14] The plaintiffs say that the LMA was validly made pursuant to s 158 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) ("the Act") and what is now s 167 of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 2008 (Qld) ("the 2008 Accommodation Module").

[15] At all relevant times, s 158 has provided as follows:

"158 Supply of services by body corporate

The body corporate for a community titles scheme may supply, or engage another person to supply, services for the benefit of owners and occupiers of lots in the way, and to the extent, authorised under the regulation module applying to the scheme."

As at October 2005, the regulation module applying to the scheme was the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 1997 (Qld), of which s 118 was in these terms:

"118 Supply of services by body corporate — Act, s 158 [SM, s 119]

(1) The body corporate may supply, or engage another person to supply, utility services and other services for the benefit of owners and occupiers of lots, if the services consist of 1 or more of the following—

(a) maintenance services, which may include cleaning, repair, painting, pest prevention or extermination or mowing;
(b) communication services, which may include the installation and supply of telephone, intercom, computer data or television;
(c) domestic services, which may include electricity, gas, water, garbage removal, airconditioning or heating.

Example—

The body corporate might engage a corporation to supply PABX services for the benefit of the owners and occupiers of lots.

(2) The body corporate may, by agreement with a person for whom services are supplied, charge for the services (including for the installation of, and the maintenance and other operating costs associated with, utility infrastructure for the services), but only to the extent necessary for reimbursing the body corporate for supplying the services.
(3) In acting under subsections (1) and (2), the body corporate must, to the greatest practicable extent, ensure the total cost to the body corporate (other than body corporate administrative costs) for supplying a service, including the cost of a commercial service, and the cost of purchasing, operating, maintaining and replacing any equipment, is recovered from the users of the service."

As and from 30 August 2008, this regulation was remade, in relevantly identical terms, as s 167 of the 2008 Accommodation Module.

[16] As to s 158 of the Act, the defendant's argument accepts that the services provided under the LMA are services of a kind which may be provided pursuant to s 167 of the 2008 Accommodation Module. As to the regulation, the defendant says that it must be interpreted in the light of other provisions of the same regulation module, particularly what are now s 168 and s 169 of the 2008 Accommodation Module. Section 168 requires an occupier of a lot to keep those parts of the lot which are readily observable from another lot in a clean and tidy condition and to maintain the lot in good condition save for a part of the lot which the body corporate is required to maintain. Section 169 applies if the owner or occupier of a lot does not do work which it is obliged to do under, for example, s 168. In that event the body corporate may do the work and recover the reasonable cost of it from the owner. The defendant's argument also refers to s 163 of the Act, by which a person authorised by the body corporate may enter a lot in order to, amongst other things, carry out work which the body corporate is authorised or required to carry out.

[17] In the context of those provisions, the defendant submits that it is beyond the power of the body corporate to supply, or in this case engage another person to supply, the services of lawn mowing to areas within lots without having secured the recoverability of the costs of the provision of that service by having made an agreement with the relevant lot owners. This is said to result from the evident intent of ss 167–169 which is to employ a "user pays" principle. There was no agreement between the defendant and any lot owner, who required the service of lawn mowing and gardening upon his or her lot, for that work to be done.

[18] Section 167(2) is in permissive terms. It is not in terms which qualify the power under s 167(1). In other words, it does not require the body corporate to have an existing agreement with the user of the service as a condition of the exercise of the power to supply that service or to engage another person to supply it. Yet that is the defendant's argument as to the effect of s 167 as a whole. The defendant argues that "a body corporate cannot supply services without ensuring (as far as practicable) that the costs are recovered from the users of the service, and it cannot ensure that the costs are recovered from a user of the service without an agreement with that user. Accordingly, a body corporate cannot supply services without some sort of agreement in place".[16]

[19] The defendant's argument suggests that the legislative intention was to limit the powers of a body corporate, in a similar way to that found to exist under a previous statute in Humphries v Proprietors of "Surfers Palms North" Group Titles Plan 1955.[17] The provision there considered by the High Court was s 37 of the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 (Qld). It empowered a body corporate to manage and maintain the common property for the benefit of proprietors. Section 37(2)(a) empowered a body corporate to "enter into an agreement, upon such terms and conditions (including terms for the payment of consideration) as may be agreed upon by the parties thereto, with a proprietor or occupier of a lot for the provision of amenities or services by it to the lot or to the proprietor or occupier thereof". By s 38(3), a body corporate was prohibited from disbursing its funds other than for the purpose of carrying out its powers and duties under the Act. The body corporate there entered into a management agreement, under which one of the manager's duties was to conduct a letting agency for such of the lot owners who required the service. It was held that the body corporate had no power to enter into the contract to procure the provision of that letting service and that as the letting service provision was not severable from the remainder of the agreement, the contract was wholly void. As Brennan and Toohey JJ said, the agreement which a body corporate was expressly authorised to make was one with a proprietor or occupier of a lot, rather than one between the body corporate and a person who was to provide lot owners or occupiers with a service.[18] Their Honours said:

> "The body corporate did not enter into an agreement with the proprietor or occupier of any lot to provide the services of a letting agency for the benefit of that proprietor or occupier. Had it done so, it would have had authority to perform that agreement by employing an agent or servant (such as the appellants) to provide the services contracted for …. However, if an agreement had been made with particular proprietors or occupiers, it would not have been a proper exercise of the body corporate's powers to require the funds raised by contribution from all proprietors to bear the cost of provision of the service for particular proprietors or occupiers. In any event, cl 2(r) of the management agreement was not made in implementation of any agreement made under s 37(2)(a) between the body corporate and an individual lot proprietor or occupier. None of the other powers conferred by s 37(2) authorizes the making of an agreement for the conduct of the letting agency for the benefit of those proprietors of individual lots who might require such a service."[19]

Section 167 of the 2008 Accommodation Module differs from the provision considered in Humphries. In Humphries, the power of a body corporate to engage a person to provide services existed only by an implication, as incidental to the express power to agree with persons to whom the services were to be provided. That provision was comparable to the present s 167(2). But s 167(1) expressly authorises a body corporate to engage the service provider and, as I have said, is in terms of a distinct authority from that conferred by s 167(2). This case is not governed by Humphries.

[21] The defendant's argument, if accepted, would cause considerable difficulty in practice. The validity of an agreement between a body corporate and the service provider would depend, in many cases, upon facts and circumstances of which the latter could be unaware. In particular, it would depend upon whether the body corporate had made an agreement, with each and every relevant owner, upon terms by which the costs of servicing a certain lot would be assured of recovery from its owner.

[22] The body corporate's duty under s 167(3) is expressed in relative terms: it is to ensure "to the greatest practicable extent" that the user pays. In many instances, there would be a need for estimation and approximation in assessing the costs of providing the service to users. That would provide a potential for controversy as to whether the amount being charged was as much as the total cost of supplying the service. In turn, this makes it less likely that the validity of the engagement of the service provider should depend upon the merits within that controversy.

[23] The defendant's argument is that the power to engage another person to supply the services is conditional upon the existence, at that point in time, of an agreement with the relevant lot owners. Yet there could be a significant difference in time between the engagement of the service provider and the provision of the relevant services. For example, there may be an engagement for a person to provide services only once, but not immediately. Upon the defendant's argument it would not matter that, after the engagement of the service provider, the body corporate made an agreement with the lot owner but before the service was supplied and the cost was incurred by the body corporate: the defendant says that the agreement with the lot owner must be in place before the agreement with the service provider is made.

[24] The engagement of the service provider would often be upon terms that the service would be supplied continuously or regularly over a period of time (as here). During that period, the identity of the users of the service might change. For example, lots might be sold. The consequences of the defendant's interpretation of s 167 in those circumstances are far from clear. On one view, the engagement of the contractor would remain valid, if at the time of its engagement, agreements had been in place with the then lot owners. On another view, the continuing engagement to service all lots would be unlawful unless and until the body corporate agreed with each new owner under s 167(2), an impracticable situation in many cases. This potential for invalidity of the contractor's engagement is but one example of the difficulties for a contractor in having the existence of its business subject to circumstances beyond his control or knowledge.

[25] The duty imposed by s 167(3) is not so much to make the cost recoverable, but to ensure (to the greatest practicable extent) that the total cost is recovered from users. It is a duty which requires more of the body corporate than the making of an agreement with the relevant owners. It would involve the ongoing task of getting in the money from them. Much of what a body corporate is bound to do pursuant to s 167(3) would necessarily occur after the supply of the services. This makes it yet more difficult to qualify the exercise of the power under s 167(1) by a precondition of the performance of the duty under s 167(3).

[26] To accept the plaintiffs' argument is not to deprive s 167(3) of any effect. The duty of the body corporate under s 167(3) would still exist, although the engagement of a person under s 167(1) has occurred in a circumstance of non-compliance with that duty. It could be said that the likelihood of full compliance with the duty could be enhanced by accepting the interpretation of s 167 for which the defendant contends. But against that, there could be many circumstances in which the interests of lot owners could be disadvantaged by placing this impediment upon the body corporate. As I have endeavoured to stress, there is the commercial impracticality of making the engagement of the service provider susceptible to challenge by factual contests about of whether the body corporate had gone far enough to ensure that its costs were recovered. And most importantly, the defendant's argument is at odds with the terms of s 167, under which s 167(2) permits, rather than requires, an agreement with the users of the service where the body corporate acts under s 167(1).

[27] Accordingly, I am unpersuaded that the LMA was made beyond the authority given to the body corporate under what was then s 118 of the repealed module (now s 167 of the 2008 Accommodation Module).

The history

[28] Before going to the other arguments about the LMA, I will set out the relevant history, much of which is relevant also to the Caretaking Agreement.

[29] The advice from the defendant's lawyers, as to the potential validity of the LMA, was tabled at a meeting of the committee of the defendant on 6 February 2009.[20] Two of the plaintiffs, Mr and Mrs Henderson, were present. It was in that context (the possibility that the LMA was ineffective) that the plaintiffs were then exploring an alternative arrangement. However, the plaintiffs were not motivated only by the legal question of the validity of the agreement. They were interested in an alternative arrangement which would be more profitable. In those circumstances, the plaintiff Mrs Henderson wrote to the committee on 26 February 2009, suggesting in general terms that there be some change to the arrangements for mowing and gardening services.[21]

[30] On 21 March 2009, Mrs Henderson again wrote to the committee in terms which included the following:

> "Following many hours of careful deliberation and lengthy consultation with accounting & legal firms we have now compiled an account on the entire complex to enable an accurate assessment on its maintenance.
> Merrimac Heights total size — 14.683 acres (59,420 m^2)
>
> Area of Common Property — 6.178 acres (25,001 m^2)
>
> Contributions through levies can only cover Common Property, by law. Any Body Corporate responsibility on private property must be charged to the owner separately. It must be clearly defined in the By-Laws. This is the only legal way to perform such activities.
>
> While our [LMA] outlines mowing & whipper snipping all grass areas … it has not taken into account the many changes since this contract was implemented: including higher than average rainfall & temperatures. Please also consider that the original development partitioned back yards to hold the clothes line only. There are now fenced/gated yards to 75 units, hindering physical & legal access to 99 units. …
>
> Our proposal to the Body Corporate = $10 + GST/lot/week on top of existing remuneration. …
>
> The existing remuneration should be carried as we will continue to perform the basic duties + continuing weed control, which is not currently contracted.
> We hope this proposal will meet your expectation."[22]

[31] The defendant pleads that each of these letters constituted conduct by way of an abandonment of the LMA. This letter of 21 March is also relied upon as a repudiation. But neither letter evinced an intention to abandon the contract or to refuse to perform it. Each suggested that the parties make a different agreement and the second letter made a more specific proposal to that end.

[32] On 3 July 2009, the committee considered an opinion from its solicitors that the LMA was not enforceable. The minutes of its meeting also recorded that it had sought advice from a consultant, Mr Turner, to "report on the current remuneration of the gardening agreement" so as to be presented to owners at the upcoming annual general meeting.[23] Mr and

Mrs Henderson were present at this meeting of the committee.

[33] On 31 July 2009, the plaintiffs made a written request, addressed to the secretary of the defendant, for a motion to be included in the agenda for the AGM. The motion was in these terms:

> "That in the event a resolution is not reached on review of the contract (including remuneration) for Henderson & Pearl Family Trusts [the plaintiffs] the Body Corporate shall increase the current Landscape remuneration to $7.10 cents per lot per week and continue the CPI increases that exist for duties defined ONLY to common property and allowing review annually."[24]

In the same document they wrote this under the word "memorandum":

> "Under this agreement all contracted duties for private property will cease from October 2009 as no authorisation has been made to enter private lots. Refer BCCM regulations 2008."[25]

[34] The defendant pleads that this document constituted an abandonment of the LMA or, alternatively, a repudiation of it. I do not accept that it was either of those things. Firstly, it was premised upon a resolution not being reached "on review of the contract", which was an apparent reference to the work being done by Mr Turner. It was not an unequivocal statement that the contract would not be performed from that point or from October 2009. Rather, it was a proposal for consideration at the annual general meeting and an element of the proposal was that the LMA would cease to operate from October 2009.

[35] On 14 August 2009, the committee of the defendant met in the presence of Mr and Mrs Henderson. The minutes record that the committee had notified the plaintiffs that the LMA would "cease as at the 1st of October 2009".[26] It further recorded that the plaintiffs had requested an increase in remuneration and that "irrespective if the report comes back from Barry Turner advising the increase is justifiable the committee is unanimous in the decision to have an increase would be unfair to lot owners; therefore the committee will not be submitting a motion from the Body Corporate to continue with the [LMA]… but give the lot owners their own means to mow their gardens …".[27]

[36] On the same day, Ms Hunter, the so-called general manager and strata manager for the defendant, wrote on behalf of the committee to Mr and Mrs Henderson as follows:

> "The committee requested we send you this email in relation to the last point raised at today's meeting;
> 1. The committee has agreed with the point you raised in ceasing the [LMA] as of the 1st of October 2009.
> 2. They will advise in the minutes of meeting that as at the 1st of October lot owners have 3 options; being
> (a) Liaise directly with [the plaintiffs] to mow their gardens and payment will be sort directly between you.
> (b) Use an outside contractor of their choice
> (c) Or mow their property themselves.
> We will be forwarding a letter of explanation with the minutes explaining that the current [LMA] is not valid and explain how your complex is governed by the Standard Format Plan …"[28]

The committee had misinterpreted the stated position of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs had not said that, in any event, they would cease work under the LMA in October 2009.

[37] Not surprisingly, the plaintiffs responded, by an email from Mrs Henderson on the same day, rejecting that statement of their position. Mrs Henderson wrote:

> "NO … NO … NO!
>
> Please note the following and pass to committee members as you deem necessary.
>
> Our motion DOES NOT suggest ceasing the [LMA].
>
> It states that we request to only cease performing services on private lots at the increased remuneration rate documented.
>
> We signed for a 15 year contract & the committee of the day agreed and endorsed with the Body Corp common seal.
>
> This has been presented 'IN THE EVENT' that the other considerations toward
>
> [140387]
>
> resolving our contract concerns were not resolved.
>
> The committee have agreed to recruit Barry Turner and that should stand until he completes his task. He has not yet finished his work.
>
> As we agreed to pay half his cost we would like his service completed in full before any decision is made.
> You may need to revisit before minutes are sent to owners. …" [29]

[38] On 27 August 2009, the defendant's solicitors wrote to the plaintiffs as follows:

> "The committee wishes to formally advise that the [LMA] will cease as at 1st October 2009 and your last payment should be submitted at the end of September after the gardens of the lots have been mowed for that month.
> As stipulated in the minutes of meeting the Committee are contacting (4) four gardening companies to submit quotes for the common property gardens and the committee also invites you to submit your proposal for consideration. This would be required by 14th September 2009 to discuss at the next committee meeting.
> As your [Caretaking] Agreement does not require gardening equipment all of the gardening equipment will be sold and specific details of each item and expected sale prices will be disclosed to owners in the minutes of the next committee meeting. As at 1st October 2009 the Committee requests that all items be placed in the shed and the keys be given to a Committee Member. The golf buggy will also be sold as it's not an item required to carry out duties under the [Caretaking] Agreement.
> The Committee is taking these measures to resolve the unenforceable [LMA] in accordance with the Standard Format Plan regulations, which Merrimac Heights is governed under." [30]

[39] On 3 September 2009, the plaintiffs emailed committee members as follows:

> "Following recent discussions with some committee members & realising there are different opinions I wish to clear the misconception arrived at, from a motion we submitted for the upcoming AGM.
> 1. The motion will be put forward for owner vote and may or may not be accepted, therefore possibility of no change.
> 2. This was submitted as an alternative to results reached from Barry Turner's report on our contract/tasks/expectation with the Body Corporate. …" [31]

[40] On 7 September, the plaintiffs emailed committee members in these terms:

> "We hereby advise that we intend to honour the [LMA] and expect to be paid as usual." [32]

[41] On 9 September 2009, solicitors for the plaintiffs wrote to the body corporate manager (Teys Strata (Gold Coast) Pty Ltd), contending that the LMA was binding and stating that the plaintiffs would continue to perform it. They wrote that the committee was acting "… unilaterally to bring a [c]ontract to an end unlawfully …".[33] A similar letter was sent by the plaintiffs' solicitors to the managers on 11 September 2009.[34]

[42] On 30 September 2009, the body corporate manager wrote to the plaintiffs advising that the firm called Executive Property Maintenance Services had been selected by the defendant's committee, at its meeting on 25 September, "… to carry out the gardening of common property".[35]

[43] On 1 October 2009, the plaintiffs replied to that letter through their solicitors, who wrote:

> "… Our clients agree to participate under protest and without prejudice to our clients' assertion that our clients hold a valid and enforceable Gardening Agreement, which we note is more properly described as a Landscape Maintenance Agreement. …" [36]

[44] Until October 2009 the plaintiffs continued to perform the LMA and to charge and (for the most part) to receive payment according to it. Consistently with that last-mentioned letter, the plaintiffs did not attempt to provide the services under the LMA as and from October 2009. They continued to send accounts for payment under that agreement. But they have been effectively prevented from performing the LMA since the engagement of the alternative contractor.

[45] On 23 October 2009, the plaintiffs' solicitors wrote two letters to Teys (Gold Coast) Pty Ltd.[37] They wrote that the conduct of the defendant was an unlawful repudiation of the LMA but that the plaintiffs elected to affirm the contract. They foreshadowed proceedings involving a claim for specific performance of the LMA or, in the alternative, a claim for damages.

[46] The plaintiffs made an adjudication application against the defendant pursuant to the Act on 27 October 2009, seeking orders that the LMA be declared valid and enforceable and for its specific performance. Alternatively, they sought damages in the sum of $400,000.[38]

[47] The annual general meeting occurred on 30 October 2009. The minutes record that the motion put forward by the plaintiffs was ruled out of order, upon the basis that what was proposed required spending beyond a limit of $37,500, such that it could not be considered by the owners in the absence of "an alternative quote to be presented and voted on".[39]

[48] On 26 November 2009, the secretary of the defendant emailed the plaintiffs as follows:

> "We wish to advise that a Managers Report and your attendance will not be required at the meeting this coming Friday. …"[40]

None of the plaintiffs attended that committee meeting held on 27 November 2009. The minutes of the meeting record that the first item of business involved the plaintiffs.[41] They record the committee's concern that accounts totalling $3,971.87 had been submitted by the plaintiffs, over and above their annual remuneration when it was the committee which believed that this was for work required of the plaintiffs under the Caretaking Agreement. They also record that the committee then telephoned the defendant's solicitor, Mr Teys, who advised them to forward a "Caretaking Remedial Action Notice".

[49] In consequence, a remedial action notice, purportedly given pursuant to s 129 of the 2008 Accommodation Module was sent to the plaintiffs.[42] It alleged that there had been four types of contravention of the Caretaking Agreement, although in each case the point was related to the LMA. I will return to the terms of the notice when I discuss the case involving the Caretaking Agreement.

[50] On the same day, 27 November 2009, the Commissioner for Body Corporate and Community Management dismissed the adjudication application upon the basis that it should be dealt with in a court.[43]

[51] On 11 December 2009, the plaintiffs delivered their response to the remedial action notice, disputing each of the matters put forward by the defendant.[44]

[52] They commenced proceedings BS 14479 of 2009 on 22 December 2009 in this Court against the defendant, claiming specific performance and other relief in relation to the LMA.

[53] On 6 January 2010, the plaintiffs made an application to the QCAT against the defendant, seeking both interlocutory and final orders in relation to the Caretaking Agreement.[45] In some places, the application shows the applicant as Mrs Henderson alone. In others, it shows all three plaintiffs. Properly understood, it was an application by the three. They sought declarations that the remedial action notice was void and of no effect and that the Caretaking Agreement remained in full force and effect. They sought interim orders to restrain the body corporate from putting a motion to terminate the Caretaking Agreement to the extraordinary general meeting of lot owners which had been scheduled for 19 January 2010. They also sought an order that their application to the QCAT be remitted to this court to be dealt with the proceedings which had been commenced in respect of the LMA.

[54] The EGM took place on 19 January 2010. The minutes record that by a secret ballot, it was resolved (46 votes to 40, with four abstentions) that the Caretaking Agreement be terminated.[46] They also record that the defendant through its solicitor had agreed to "a limited injunction that restrains the implementation of the termination of the caretaking agreement … whilst the courts determine if the [determination] is valid".[47]

Caretaking agreement pending the resolution and determination of these proceedings. By an order made in the QCAT on 8 February 2010, the proceedings there "were transferred to the Supreme Court of Queensland to be dealt with in conjunction with proceeding number 14479 of 2009 in that Court".[48]

The LMA — other arguments

[56] According to the defendant's pleading, the plaintiffs abandoned the LMA by their letters of 26 February and 21 March 2009 and their proposed motion for the AGM which they sent on 31 July 2009. As I have discussed, that conduct did not manifest an intention to abandon the contract.[49] However, in the final submissions for the defendant, additional conduct was relied upon. The defendant's counsel referred to what they said was an unchallenged statement of an employee of body corporate manager, a Ms Hunter, that "the plaintiffs communicated to the body corporate that the current agreement is invalid and unenforceable …".[50] Ms Hunter was called as a witness in the defendant's case, but she gave no evidence that the plaintiffs had made such a communication.

[57] Reliance was also placed upon evidence of the plaintiff Ms Davies that sometime prior to August 2009, she learnt that the defendant had indicated that the LMA would end from 1 October 2009, and that she thought from her then discussions with Mr and Mrs Henderson that they understood that the LMA would no longer be on foot from that date. I accept that it may have been the expectation, common to all of the plaintiffs, that they would not be performing the LMA from 1 October 2009. But that is not the way in which they acted towards the defendant. Moreover, it is one thing to say that they expected that the agreement would not be on foot because the defendant would not perform it; it is another to say that they consented to that course in the sense that they agreed to discharge the contract: Fitzgerald v Masters.[51] An abandonment of a contract is a matter which must appear upon an objective assessment of the conduct of the parties.[52]

[58] The defendant also relied upon an email from Mrs Henderson of 20 August 2009, apparently addressed to members of the committee of the defendant. The passage relied upon is where Mrs Henderson wrote:

> "Your best chance to present for the AGM is to [a]llow Barry to complete his report that you asked for & take the care & attention when you take it the next step to rectify contract(s)".[53]

The defendant submits that this was a concession that the contract had to be "rectified", in the sense that it could not be performed upon its present terms. However, what Mrs Henderson there wrote need not be interpreted in that way. Undoubtedly, she was suggesting an amendment to the LMA or perhaps an entirely new LMA. But she was not agreeing to discharge the LMA without something being agreed in its place.

[59] The defendant's argument even extended to reliance upon conduct in 2008 (which again was unpleaded). This included the plaintiffs' attendance at a committee meeting in August 2008, in which the committee resolved to retain solicitors to advise on the validity of the LMA. The plaintiffs thereby knew of the committee's resolution. But the plaintiffs were not themselves members of the committee. Then the defendant argues that Mrs Henderson acknowledged in November 2008 "that it was illegal for the plaintiffs to enter into individual lots" to perform their work under the LMA. Nevertheless, the plaintiffs continued to perform that work. Importantly, prior to being effectively locked out from October 2009, the defendant did not argue that it became entitled to terminate the LMA because the plaintiffs had failed to perform it.

[60] The balance of the matters identified by counsel for the defendants, in their extensive written submissions on this question, need not be discussed paragraph by paragraph. The conduct relied upon falls into categories such as the plaintiffs' presence at meetings at which the suggested invalidity of the LMA was discussed, the plaintiffs' knowledge of and participation in the process by which Mr Turner was engaged and the plaintiffs' awareness of the defendant's intention to engage someone else to do work upon the common property (which the plaintiffs were required to do under the LMA). As to all of this, some matters should be restated. The first is that it is the apparent intention of the plaintiffs, that which objectively appears, which is relevant. Upon an objective view, their intention as demonstrated by their correspondence, strongly and consistently protested the defendant's proposal to put an end to the LMA. Secondly, throughout these events of 2008 and 2009, until October in that year, the plaintiffs continued to perform the LMA[54] and were paid for their services. Thus any abandonment of the contract could have occurred only from October 2009. But at that point, clearly the plaintiffs were strongly insisting upon the enforcement of the contract. In my conclusion, there was no abandonment of the LMA.

[61] Nor was there any repudiation by the plaintiffs, entitling the defendant to terminate the LMA. The repudiation alleged by the defendant appears to be what was described, in the joint judgment in Koompahtoo Local Aboriginal Land Council v Sanpine[55] as a renunciation. The defendant must prove that there was conduct by the plaintiffs which evinced an unwillingness or an inability to render substantial performance of the contract, or in other words which evinced an intention no longer to be bound by the contract or to fulfil it only in a manner substantially inconsistent with their obligations.[56]

[62] In the defendant's final argument, the conduct which was relied upon as a renunciation was the lodgement of the proposed motion for the AGM.[57] It was submitted that this was accepted by the defendant on 14 August 2009 or alternatively on 27 August 2009. But this conduct of the plaintiffs was not repudiatory. It proposed a different contractual regime and to that end, it sought the support of members at the AGM. But it is another thing to say that the plaintiffs evinced an intention not to be bound by the LMA or to act inconsistently with its terms if no alternative arrangement could be agreed. The same applies to other conduct which was pleaded as repudiatory on the part of the plaintiffs, being the letters of 26 February and 21 March 2009.[58] In the same way as the plaintiffs had not evinced an intention to abandon the contract, their conduct was not repudiatory.

[63] I have now discussed each of the matters pleaded by the defendant in response to the plaintiffs' claim for relief in respect of the LMA. In particular, I have discussed the matters pleaded in response to paragraph 16(b) of the Consolidated Statement of Claim, which alleges that the plaintiffs have duly performed their duties pursuant to the LMA, and pursuant to the schedule to that agreement. However, within the conduct upon which the defendant relies as grounds for terminating the Caretaking Agreement, the defendant has alleged certain breaches of the LMA. In paragraph 39 of its Defence, it pleads facts upon which it made the four allegations within the remedial action notice to which I referred at [49].[59]

[64] In particular, it pleads breaches of the LMA as part of the plaintiffs' conduct which it describes within that notice as "Allegation 1" and "Allegation 4". Allegation 1 was not pursued at the trial. Within Allegation 4 is a contention that the plaintiffs were unable to obtain access to some lots in order to perform the work required by the LMA. The defendant's case as there stated was not that they were in breach of the LMA by not performing the work upon those lots. Rather, it is that they were in breach of the Caretaking Agreement, in that they charged for work which could not be and was not performed, and without telling the defendant of that matter. This case is also pleaded in paragraphs 21(c) and 23 of the defendant's Counterclaim.

[65] Then in the defendant's final submissions it was argued that the plaintiffs breached the LMA by not performing some work on individual lots to which they enjoyed access. It was said that the plaintiff's carried out mowing and 'edging' tasks, but not other work which the LMA required to be performed on individual lots. The subject was explored in the cross-examination of Mrs Henderson,[60] Ms Davies[61] and a Mr Kalina.[62] It is clear that upon the individual lots the plaintiffs performed only mowing and edging and confined the performance of the other tasks to the common property. Notably the defendant did not make this complaint during the many months of manoeuvrings by each side which led to the unilateral suspension of the LMA in October 2009. Indeed the evidence does not reveal any complaint by the defendant, up to that point in time, that the plaintiffs were in breach of the LMA in any respect. This explains why no remedial action notice was given in relation to that contract. But what must now be considered is whether the LMA, objectively viewed, required further work to be performed upon individual lots.

[66] It is necessary to set out in full the schedule of work required by the LMA:

> "MOWING
>
> All grass areas including front and back yards of units, common ground, back paddock and road frontage—
>
> every 10–14 days in Summer
> 21–28 days in Winter
> EDGING
> Whippersnip all grass edges — every 10–14 days in Summer, 21–28 days in Winter
>
> PALM FRONDS
> Cocas Palms on road edges — every 3–4 months
> Palms down centre of main road — every 3–4 months
> Palms around tennis courts and pools — every 3–4 months
> Golden Palms as required
> FERTILIZING & TOP DRESSING
>
> As required
>
> PRUNING & MULCHING
>
> Pruning trees and shrubs in common areas and boons as required
>
> Mulching and spreading of mulch on gardens
>
> SUPPLEMENTARY SERVICES
>
> Plant replacement of supplementary planting from time to time as required
>
> Fill depression in lawns and top dressing as required
>
> BOONS
>
> Whippersnip boons as required including front of complex
>
> GARDEN AT FRONT GATES
> Maintain and trim garden beds at front gate entry"[63]

[67] As Mrs Henderson explained, the edging was incidental to the mowing work and therefore it may be accepted that this work was required upon individual lots as well as upon the common property. That is why the agreed frequency of the edging work coincided with that of the required mowing. The other items in the schedule can be distinguished from the mowing because it is only the mowing for which there was an express requirement for work to be done within individual lots. For some of the other items, the agreed work was to take place in areas clearly outside individual lots. For other items in the schedule, there was no specification next to that item as to whether it would be work confined to common property. For the defendant it is submitted that there is no basis for limiting that work to common property when it was not expressly so limited. However, the schedule must be read as a whole. Most significantly, it specifically extended the mowing task to individual lots. As I interpret the schedule, this means that the other tasks are not intended to be performed on individual lots, at least pursuant to the LMA. That intention is more likely because the body corporate has no specific responsibility for the maintenance of individual lots. As I have discussed, it has the power to engage a contractor to do work on individual lots. But by this schedule, it is clear enough that it was intending to exercise that power only for the mowing and associated edging work. Therefore, there was no breach of the LMA by the plaintiffs failing to do this other work.

[68] I should add that had I upheld the argument for the defendant in this respect, I would not have accepted that it involved a breach of the LMA which justified the defendant's purported termination of it. One reason for that is that no remedial action notice was given under the LMA. Another is that because this point was not pleaded, there was no investigation of whether the defendant had been precluded by an estoppel from terminating upon this basis, given the circumstance that it had made no complaint to that point that these tasks were not being performed on individual lots.

[69] In its case for terminating the Caretaking Agreement, there is also the argument for the defendant that the plaintiffs have breached the LMA by not mowing within certain lots. According to the evidence of Mr Kalina, who assisted the plaintiffs in performing work under the LMA, mowing was not done on each and every lot. Some lots had no lawn but other landscaping such as paving. On some lots, access was difficult because of fences and gates. He also recalled that there were one or two lots where the owners did not want to have the plaintiffs mow their lawn. Similarly in her Affidavit, the plaintiff Mrs Davies identified some lots which had no lawns and therefore required no work from the plaintiffs. She also said that all of the lawns within the lots were mowed "… save for those above which either did not require work or in respect of which their owners had directed we not undertake any work".[64] That suggests that there was a small number of owners or occupiers who effectively refused access. But as to all of this, the LMA required certain work to be done on lots, but necessarily only as long as the owner or occupier consented and, by a fence or otherwise, did not prevent that work being done. The LMA did require the plaintiffs to trespass upon a lot. And again, this alleged breach was not the subject of a remedial action notice under the LMA.

[70] It follows that the LMA was not terminated. The contract remains on foot and the plaintiffs should have a declaration to that effect.

The LMA — damages for breach

[71] The plaintiffs claim damages for breach of the LMA, upon the basis that they have lost profits from being prevented from performing the contract since 1 October 2009. They have proved that breach and there is no substantial contest as to the quantum.

[72] The plaintiffs rely on the evidence of two valuers, each of whom was concerned with wider questions than the present one but who offered estimates of the likely income from performing the LMA. There is little between them and it is sufficient to refer to the evidence of Mr Thynne. He adopted an income for the year ended 31 October 2010 as $40,381 from which he deducted expenses of employing one person one day a week to assist the plaintiffs in their own efforts to perform the work. He estimated the cost of that employee as $9,687 over the year providing a net income of $30,694.[65] He referred also to the year ending 30 September 2009, in which the plaintiffs received from the defendant income of $36,314 under the LMA.[66] He noted also that this had not included adjustments under the CPI, for which he said the plaintiffs should have been paid a further $3,301.[67] I accept that his calculations for the 2010 year are substantially accurate. I assess the lost profit over the two years to 1 October 2011 as being at least $30,700 per year, a total of $61,400.

[73] His report also refers to work being done by the plaintiffs for some individual lot owners. For this work, the plaintiffs have used the services of Mr Kalina. Mr Thynne recorded Mrs Henderson's instructions that from November 2009 to October 2010 the business received income of $7,620 and incurred expenses in the form of payments to Mr Kalina of $4,910, thereby representing a profit of about $2,700 over the year.[68]

However, Ms Davies gave evidence to the effect that there was no mark-up on Mr Kalina's invoices. On the basis of her evidence, the plaintiffs submit that nothing should be deducted for a profit for doing some of the work which was required under the LMA. However, I do not think that Mrs Henderson's instructions to the valuer should be ignored. Accordingly, I will deduct $2,700 per year, ie an amount of $5,400, for profits earned by the plaintiffs in performing some of the work which was required under the LMA.

[74] The result is that I am satisfied that the plaintiffs have established a loss of profits over the two years from 1 October 2009 of $56,000. Including the loss from a further six weeks to the date of this judgement, I will allow $59,200. I was also asked to include a further component, representing the loss of profits for a period after this judgment, upon the suggestion that it would take the plaintiff some time to resume performance of the LMA. I am not persuaded that there should be any significant delay in that respect and no component of that kind will be allowed. The outcome on the damages claim is that there will be judgment for the plaintiffs against the defendant in the sum of $59,200.

The Caretaking Agreement

[75] The plaintiffs sought relief in relation to the Caretaking Agreement within the proceedings which they brought originally in the QCAT. Undoubtedly, it had jurisdiction to grant the relief which was there sought, which was declaratory relief to the effect that the Caretaking Agreement was enforceable. The QCAT's jurisdiction was conferred by s 229 of the Act provides as follows:

> "229 Exclusivity of dispute resolution provisions
> (1) Subsections (2) and (3) apply to a dispute if it may be resolved under this chapter by a dispute resolution process.
> (2) The only remedy for a complex dispute is
> (a) the resolution of the dispute by—
> (i) an order of a specialist adjudicator under chapter 6; or > (ii) an order of QCAT exercising the tribunal's original jurisdiction under the QCAT Act; or > (b) an order of the appeal tribunal on appeal from a specialist adjudicator or QCAT on a question of law.
> (3) Subject to section 229A, the only remedy for a dispute that is not a complex dispute is—
> (a) the resolution of the dispute by a dispute resolution process; or > (b) an order of the appeal tribunal on appeal from an adjudicator on a question of law.
> (4) However, subsections (2) and (3) do not apply to a dispute if—
>
> (a) an application is made to the commissioner; and
> (b) the commissioner dismisses the application under part 5.
> (5) Also, subsections (2) and (3) do not limit—
>
> (a) the powers of QCAT under the QCAT Act to—
> (i) refer a question of law to the Court of Appeal; or > (ii) transfer a proceeding, or a part of a proceeding, to the Court of Appeal; or > (b) the right of a party to make an appeal from QCAT to the Court of Appeal under the QCAT Act."

[76] Section 229(2) appears to exclude the jurisdiction of this Court, except that of the Court of Appeal, in relation to what is defined for the purposes of the Act as a "dispute",[69] including a "complex dispute".[70]

After the conclusion of the hearing, I raised with the parties the question of whether this Court could determine whether the Caretaking Agreement was enforceable and I received written and oral argument on the question. The defendant submitted that this Court does not have jurisdiction in that respect. The plaintiff argues that it does. I will return to this jurisdictional question, which is more conveniently discussed after I have referred to the evidence and made findings about this part of the case. The parties agreed that I should make those findings, even if I held that I lacked jurisdiction to grant any relief, in case a different view on the jurisdictional question was reached in the Court of Appeal.

The requirement for a remedial action notice

[77] Section 122 of the Act provides that the regulation module applying to a scheme may prescribe certain things about the engagement of a person as a body corporate manager or service contractor, or the authorisation of a person as a letting agent. As is common ground, the plaintiffs were service contractors as well as letting agents as those terms were respectively defined for the Act within s 15 and s 16. The things which may be prescribed include the following as set out in s 122(1)(d):

> "(d) particular circumstances under which the engagement or authorisation may or may not be terminated … despite anything in the engagement or authorisation or in another agreement or arrangement."

[78] The relevant module, which is the 2008 Accommodation Module, makes provision for these matters in Chapter 6, Part 5. In the first of those provisions, s 126 of the module provides as follows:

> "126 Purpose of pt 5 [SM, s 128]
>
> This part provides for—
> (a) the grounds on which the body corporate may terminate a person's engagement as a body corporate manager or service contractor, or authorisation as a letting agent; and
> (b) the steps the body corporate must follow to terminate the engagement or authorisation."

[79] Section 127(1) of the Module provides that a person's engagement or authorisation may be terminated by the body corporate:

> "(a) under the Act; or > (b) by agreement; or
> (c) under the engagement or authorisation."

Section 127(2) provides that "[t]he body corporate may act under subsection (1) only if the termination is approved by an ordinary resolution of the body corporate".

[80] Section 128 of the Module identifies certain circumstances as justifying a termination of an engagement or authorisation of a service contractor or letting agent. For the most part they involve some element of illegality on the part of the contractor/agent and they are not relevant here. What is perhaps relevant is that s 128(2) provides that the body corporate may act under this section only with the approval of an ordinary resolution of the body corporate, and for a caretaking service contractor or a letting agent, where the motion to approve the termination is decided by secret ballot. This provision is relevant because it differs from s 127(2), thereby indicating that the circumstances for termination under s 128 do not overlap with those for s 127.

[81] Then there is s 129, which is headed "Termination for failure to comply with remedial action notice [SM, s 131]". This section relevantly provides as follows:

"(1) The body corporate may terminate a person's engagement as a body corporate manager or service contractor if the person (including, if the person is a corporation, a director of the corporation)—

(a) engages in misconduct, or is grossly negligent, in carrying out functions required under the engagement; or
(b) fails to carry out duties under the engagement; or
(c) contravenes—

(i) …
(ii) for a service contractor who is a caretaking service contractor — the code of conduct for body corporate managers and caretaking service contractors, or the code of conduct for letting agents; or

(2) Also, the body corporate may terminate a person's authorisation as a letting agent if the person (including, if the person is a corporation, a director of the corporation)—

(a) engages in misconduct, or is grossly negligent, in carrying out obligations, if any, under the authorisation; or
(b) fails to carry out duties under the authorisation; or
(c) contravenes the code of conduct for letting agents or, for a caretaking service contractor, the code of conduct for body corporate managers and caretaking service contractors; or

(3) The body corporate may act under subsection (1) or (2) only if—

(a) the body corporate has given the person a remedial action notice in accordance with subsection (4); and
(b) the person fails to comply with the remedial action notice within the period stated in the notice; and
(c) the termination is approved by ordinary resolution of the body corporate; and
(d) for the termination of a person's engagement as a service contractor if the person is a caretaking service contractor, or the termination of a person's authorisation as a letting agent — the motion to approve the termination is decided by secret ballot.

[140395]

(4) For subsection (3), a remedial action notice is a written notice stating each of the following—

(a) that the body corporate believes the person has acted—

(i) for a body corporate manager or a service contractor–in a way mentioned in subsection (1)(a) to (e); or
(ii) for a letting agent — in a way mentioned in subsection (2)(a) to (d);

(b) details of the action sufficient to identify—

(i) the misconduct or gross negligence the body corporate believes has happened; or
(ii) the duties the body corporate believes have not been carried out; or
(iii) the provision of the code of conduct or this regulation the body corporate believes has been contravened;

(c) that the person must, within the period stated in the notice but not less than 14 days after the notice is given to the person—

(i) remedy the misconduct or gross negligence; or
(ii) carry out the duties; or
(iii) remedy the contravention;

(d) that if the person does not comply with the notice in the period stated, the body corporate may terminate the engagement or authorisation.

(5) Despite subsection (3)(a), if the person is a body corporate manager acting under a chapter 3, part 5 engagement, the owners of at least one-half of the lots included in the community titles scheme may, on behalf of the body corporate, give the person a remedial action notice."

[82] The plaintiffs submit that any termination of the Caretaking Agreement had to be according to s 129. The defendant submits that s 129 provided one way of terminating the Caretaking Agreement, but that it did not affect the defendant's right under the general law to terminate for repudiatory conduct or for a breach of contract. In the case of the Caretaking Agreement, a document purporting to be a remedial action notice was given and I go now to its terms.

The remedial action notice in this case

[83] The notice began with a statement that it was given pursuant to s 129 and that the plaintiffs were required to remedy the matters which were referred to in the notice within 21 days, failing which the Caretaking Agreement might be terminated.[71] There followed a table containing three columns, headed "Contravention", "Details of conduct" and "Remedy required". There were four alleged contraventions, to which the parties have referred here as allegations 1 to 4.

[84] The first was that the plaintiffs had engaged in fraudulent or misleading conduct, in breach of the Code of Conduct as set out in Schedule 2 of the Act ("the Code"). It was alleged that this same conduct also breached cl 5(c) of the Caretaking Agreement, which provided as follows:

"c The Manager will check and verify accounts for goods or services payable by the Body Corporate relative to matters which are the responsibility of the Manager under this Agreement and notify the representative of the Body Corporate that they are in order for payment."

By reference to what appeared in the second and third columns against this allegation, and in further particulars provided within the notice, it can be seen that the complaint was one of overcharging. It was said that the plaintiffs had charged separately for work and materials which were within the scope of that which they were to provide under the Caretaking Agreement for the consideration fixed by it. In addition to the remuneration payable and paid under that agreement for the year ending 31 July 2009, the plaintiffs were said to have charged, in total, a further $3,971.87. Ultimately, the defendant did not rely upon this ground at the trial.

[85] Therefore, the relevant allegations are 2, 3 and 4. Allegation 2 was expressed in the notice as follows:

"By Section 118 [of the Act] the caretaking agreement includes a provision that the manager must take reasonable steps to ensure goods and services supplied to the body corporate are supplied at competitive prices (Schedule 2, Clause 10)."[72]

Section 118(2) of the Act provides that the provisions of the Code in Schedule 2 of the Act are taken to be included in the terms of any contract for the engagement of a caretaking service contractor. Clause 10 of that Code provides that a caretaking service contractor "… must take reasonable steps to ensure goods and services the person obtains for or supplies to the body corporate are obtained or supplied at competitive prices".

[86] The conduct relied upon for this allegation concerned the LMA. The notice set out the agreed remuneration under the LMA, which for the year ending 31 July 2009 was $42,996 or $3,583.03 per month. The notice then contended that "[s]ince terminating the [LMA] the body corporate has procured the same work for the year ended 31 July 2010 for $11,700 or $975 per month representing a saving to the body corporate of at least $31,296 per annum or approximately $391,200 over the alleged 12 years remaining term of the [LMA] …".[73] Under the hearing "Remedy required", the defendant said that the plaintiffs should "provide the body corporate with details of what steps were taken and by whom and when to ensure landscaping maintenance goods and services provided pursuant to the landscaping agreement were provided to the body corporate at competitive prices". It added that "the body corporate reserves its rights to recover damages for the goods and services supplied at less than competitive prices".

[87] As I have said, the Code including its cl 10 was part of the Caretaking Agreement. But the suggestion that cl 10 obliged the plaintiffs to surrender their contractual rights under the LMA cannot be accepted. The plaintiffs became parties to the LMA by a permitted assignment. The remuneration under the LMA had been negotiated by their predecessors. The plaintiffs had paid a substantial sum for the rights under the LMA and the Caretaking Agreement. Yet it is alleged that having done so, they were obliged to give up the benefit of the LMA. This was not what cl 10 of the Code required. The taking of reasonable steps according to cl 10 did not require the plaintiffs to surrender an existing contract. The general obligation under cl 10 of the Code was subject to the specific agreement constituted by the LMA. And it was not said in the remedial action notice that simply by becoming parties to the LMA as varied, the plaintiffs breached cl 10. It follows that the second ground set out in the notice had no foundation.

[88] The third ground again relied upon the Code and related to the LMA. There are two complaints made under the heading "Details of conduct" in relation to this ground. The first was that the plaintiffs provided services under the LMA within individual lots "without knowing or understanding that the body corporate could not pay for work within the lots of individual members of the body corporate".[74] That was said to have breached cl 1 of the Code, by which a caretaking service contractor must have a good working knowledge and understanding of the Act relevant to the contractor's functions. The allegation was that the plaintiffs did not have a good working knowledge and understanding of the Act because they believed that the LMA was valid. According to this judgment, it was valid. But if I am wrong about that, it does not follow that the plaintiffs were in breach of cl 1 of the Code. On any view, it was at least arguable that the LMA was valid, and failing to say otherwise did not demonstrate an ignorance or sufficient misunderstanding of the Act as to constitute a breach of the Code and thereby a breach of the Caretaking Agreement.

[89] The other complaint referred to in relation to this third ground was expressed as follows:

> "Further, and in the alternative, if (which is denied) the [LMA] was within the power of the body corporate, then the manager has failed to advise the body corporate that the body corporate could recover the cost of the work done within the lots from the individual owners for whom that work was done."[75]

In that respect, under the heading "Remedy required", this was set out:

> "The manager must advise the body corporate what work was done to which lot pursuant to the [LMA] and the reasonable cost of this work for each lot. The body > corporate reserves its right to take action to recover the amount of body corporate funds paid to the manager for work outside of the power of the body corporate."[76]
> [140397]

[90] In addition to cl 1 of the Code, the defendant referred to clauses 3(a), 3(f), 3(i) and 5(c) of the Caretaking Agreement. Clause 3(a) obliged the plaintiffs to use their best endeavours to see that the development was kept in good order and repair and maintained as a first class residential complex. The matters alleged do not seem to have involved a breach of that clause.

[92] Clause 3(i) required the plaintiffs to manage the development and endeavour to ensure that it was kept in first class order and repair and "… to protect the interest in the said development of the Body Corporate and of the owners of units therein". Again, this provision was not breached by the conduct as alleged. In particular, there was no suggestion that the grounds were not kept in a proper condition.

[93] I have discussed cl 5(c) above in relation to (the now abandoned) first ground.[77] The alleged breach here is that the plaintiffs should have given legal advice to the defendant, more particularly advice that the body corporate could recover the cost of work from individual lot owners. But cl 5(c) imposed a duty to check and verify accounts for payment from the defendant's funds, rather than to advise on how funds might be collected by the defendant. The failure to provide that advice was also said to have involved a breach of cl 1 of the Code. But that clause did not require the plaintiffs, as caretakers, to be legal advisers. Rather, it required them to have a proper knowledge and understanding of the Act so as to properly discharge their duties as caretakers. It follows that there was no act or omission which provided a basis for this third ground within the remedial action notice.

[94] Allegation number 4 was expressed as follows:

> "Honesty, fairness and professionalism
> By Section 118 BCCMA the caretaking agreement is taken to include a [clause] that the manager must act honestly, fairly and professionally in performing the person's function. By clause 3(f) of the caretaking agreement the manager must arrange maintenance contracts as required by the body corporate and ensure such contracts are in force and carried out according to their terms. The caretaker undertook landscape maintenance services for the body corporate under the landscaping agreement."[78]

[95] The conduct here was detailed as follows:

> "The manager was required by the landscaping agreement to perform work within the lots of each of the member[s] of the body corporate. A number of the lots are fenced precluding access and the manager did not do work on those lots as required. The manager has presented accounts to the body corporate for payment that do not take account of work that could not be and was not done. The manager failed to alert the body corporate to the access problem in a timely way to enable the body corporate to secure access to enable the work to be done as required by the contract."[79]

[96] As I have held, the plaintiffs' obligations under the LMA, so far as lots were concerned, was to work on lots only as individual lot owners or occupiers permitted them to do so.[80] The LMA did not require the gardeners to be unlawful entrants onto the lots of unwilling owners or occupiers. The consideration under the LMA was a fixed sum, rather than an amount per lot. It was not dishonest, unfair or unprofessional to charge and receive the agreed monthly consideration under the LMA although some owners or occupiers had refused access, or not to "alert" the defendant that the plaintiffs were being denied access to some lots. Accordingly, this fourth ground had no basis.

[97] It follows that none of the allegations set out in the remedial action notice provided a basis for terminating the Caretaking Agreement.

Other grounds for terminating the Caretaking Agreement?

[98] As already noted, the defendant contends that it can justify its termination of the Caretaking Agreement upon grounds which were not alleged in the remedial action notice. I reject that submission. To the extent that there are other alleged grounds, they are allegations that the plaintiffs breached the Caretaking Agreement, so that the plaintiffs either failed "to carry out duties under the engagement" (s 129(1)(b)) or contravened the Code (s 129(1)(c)(ii)). A termination for conduct of the kind which is within s 129(1) must be made as prescribed by s 129, because otherwise s 129 would have little or no effect. In particular, an important purpose of s 129, which is to provide the manager or contractor with an opportunity to remedy its default, would be defeated. Another important requirement, which is that the engagement be terminated only with the support of a majority of lot owners, voting by a secret ballot, could also be disregarded. But in case this argument about s 129 should ultimately prevail, it is necessary to say something about such further allegations as were not in the notice.

[99] The identification of those allegations is not a straightforward exercise. The defendant's argument refers to paragraphs 21 through 25 of its Counterclaim. But as it concedes, some of those allegations "overlap" with the third and fourth allegations of the remedial action notice.

[100] It is said that paragraphs 21(c) and 23 raise a ground which was not within the notice. The former alleges that not until at least 21 March 2009 did the plaintiffs "inform, suggest to or warn" the defendant that they were not undertaking work on all individual lots pursuant to the LMA. But I have discussed that case already in relation to ground 4 of the notice.

[101] Paragraph 23 of the Counterclaim complains that the plaintiffs accepted payment under the LMA without performing all of the work which the LMA required and that the plaintiffs failed to bring that to the defendant's attention. Again, that case has been discussed already and I have rejected it as a breach of the Caretaking Agreement.[81] Paragraph 23 contains further allegations that this conduct was misleading and unconscionable, contrary to what was s 38 and s 39 of the Fair Trading Act 1989 (Qld). Neither of those allegations can be accepted. There was no representation by the plaintiffs that they were in fact mowing each and every lot. To the extent that some lots (small in number) were not being mown because access was denied to the plaintiffs, there was no misleading conduct by not informing the defendant of that matter. In particular, that information would not have affected the entitlement of the plaintiffs to be paid the fixed sum under the LMA. Nor does the pleading explain how this conduct was unconscionable. Again, the plaintiffs were not overcharging for the fact that a small number of lots did not require mowing. Assuming that the defendant was unaware of that matter, it is not demonstrated how its position would have been different had it known of it.

[102] Paragraph 24 of the Counterclaim alleges that the plaintiffs engaged in conduct from 14 August 2009 to 19 January 2010 which was dishonest, unfair and unprofessional, was not in the best interests of the defendant, and was misleading and unconscionable. The particulars of this conduct are matters involving the plaintiffs' attempts to gain support from a sufficient number of committee members of the body corporate as well as from lot owners, in their dispute or disputes which are the subject of this litigation.

[103] One such complaint is that they sent letters and emails to members of the committee and owners of individual lots, contrary to a purported direction from the body corporate manager that they cease communicating directly with committee members. On 4 September 2009, Ms Hunter sent an email to the plaintiffs, making a request, on behalf of the committee, that "all communication pertaining to the [LMA] be in writing and submitted to [her] office, so that it would then be forwarded to the committee". She advised that neither the committee members nor her office would take any telephone calls. A similar email was sent by her to Mr and Mrs Henderson on 16 September 2009. But neither Ms Hunter nor the committee had some power to restrain communications of that kind. It was not in any sense wrongful for the plaintiffs to communicate by letters and emails to members of the committee or lot owners, as distinct from saying the same thing through the body corporate manager.

[104] Then there is a complaint that the plaintiffs were "[c]anvassing the support of individual lot holders for a motion to remove the current committee of the Body Corporate" and "[c]anvassing, approaching and otherwise seeking to induce individual lot holder investors in the Scheme to seek election on a proposed new committee once the current committee had been removed".[82] There is the further particular that the plaintiffs served a notice to requisition an extraordinary general meeting of members of the body corporate to remove the current committee and elect a new committee. Undoubtedly, this conduct occurred and the plaintiffs were motivated by a concern for their position under their two contracts. It may be accepted that they wished to bring about a change in the membership of the committee, so that the body corporate would be controlled by persons who were less hostile to their position.

[105] The defendant's submissions complain that the plaintiffs sent a circular to lot owners which was "intemperate and a personal attack on the integrity of the body corporate committee". It was there said that the committee had acted "illegally", that they were perpetrating a "vendetta", that they were using "unprecedented standover tactics" and were acting "unethically". However, I am unable to accept that any of this conduct involved a breach of their duties under the Caretaking Agreement or the relevant Code. Further, although the language was colourful, it was not misleading. It was plainly the language of someone in strong disagreement with the committee, and deeply resentful of the committee's actions in repudiating one agreement and taking steps to terminate the other. Particularly in the circumstance where the defendant had no entitlement to terminate either agreement, it is difficult to characterise this reaction by the plaintiffs as unconscionable or otherwise wrongful.

[106] It follows that there is nothing in these other allegations, which were not set out in the remedial action notice, which assists the defendant's case. As should already appear, the counterclaim for relief for contraventions of s 38 and s 39 of the Fair Trading Act has no foundation.

Jurisdiction

[107] The dispute between the parties, insofar as it involves the enforceability of the LMA, is a "dispute" as defined in s 227(1) of the Act, at least because it is a dispute between a body corporate and an owner of a lot included in the scheme: s 227(1)(b).[83] The plaintiffs are also a "caretaking service contractor for the scheme", because the Caretaking Agreement permits them to carry on the business of letting agents from within the complex.[84] Schedule 6 of the Act defines "caretaking service contractor" to mean a service contractor for the scheme who is also "a letting agent for the scheme". A "service contractor" is defined by s 15 of the Act to be a person engaged by the body corporate (other than as an employee) for a term of at least one year to supply services (other than administrative services) to the body corporate for the benefit of common property or lots included in the scheme. A "letting agent" is defined by s 16 of the Act to be a person authorised by the body corporate to conduct a business of acting as the agent of owners of lots who choose to use the person's services for securing, negotiating or enforcing leases or other occupancies of lots. Accordingly, there is also a dispute here within s 227(1)(d), in that it is between the body corporate and a caretaking service contractor for the scheme. Further, there is a dispute within s 227(1)(f), in that the body corporate is in dispute with the letting agent from the scheme.

[108] The term "complex dispute" is defined in Schedule 6 of the Act to include a dispute mentioned in, amongst other provisions, s 149B, which provides as follows:

> "149B Specialist adjudication or QCAT jurisdiction
> (1) This section applies to a dispute a claimed or anticipated contractual matter about—
>
> (a) the engagement of a person as a … caretaking service contractor for a community titles scheme; or > (b) the authorisation of a person as a letting agent for a community titles scheme."

The term "contractual matter" is defined in Schedule 6 as follows:

> "Contractual matter about an engagement or authorisation of a body corporate manager, service contractor or letting agent, means—
> (a) a contravention of the terms of the engagement or authorisation; or > (b) the termination of the engagement or authorisation; or
> (c) …
> (d) the performance of duties under the terms of the engagement or authorisation."

[109] Section 149B provides that a party to a dispute within that provision may apply under Chapter 6 for an order of a specialist adjudicator to resolve the dispute or for an order of the QCAT exercising the tribunal's original jurisdiction.

[110] By s 229(2) of the Act, the only remedy for a complex dispute (including a dispute within s 149B) is by an order of a specialist adjudicator under Chapter 6 or an order of the QCAT exercising its original jurisdiction. Section 229(3) provides that the only remedy for a dispute that is not a complex dispute is through the so-called "dispute resolution process" or by an order of the appeal tribunal on appeal from the adjudicator on a question of law. The "dispute resolution process" is defined to mean one of the processes, including specialist adjudication, which are set out in Chapter 6. They do not include resolution of the dispute by a court.

[111] As I have discussed, before commencing the first of these two proceedings in the Court (BS 14479 of 2009), the plaintiffs made an adjudication application seeking orders which were limited to the LMA. The plaintiffs then had to specify the capacity in which they were applying for an adjudication. They marked the relevant box on the application form to show that they were applying as caretaking service contractors rather than as owners.[85] The Commissioner for Body Corporate and Community Management dismissed that application upon the basis that it should be dealt with by a court.[86] Accordingly, s 229(2) and (3) do not apply to the dispute the subject of that application to the Commissioner: s 229(4).

[112] Save for the operation of s 229(4), this Court does not have jurisdiction to resolve the dispute or disputes within this litigation. That is because the only remedy for that dispute or disputes is one which can be granted under subsections (2) and (3) of s 229. In James v Body Corporate Aarons Community Titles Scheme 11476,[87] Holmes J (as she then was) construed the then equivalent provision of s 229(2), which was s 184 of the Act. Her Honour said of that provision:

> "The wording of the section itself is unusual: rather than providing for exclusive jurisdiction in so many words, s 184(2) speaks in terms of 'the only remedy' being the order of an adjudicator or that of a District Court on appeal on a question of law. But those words 'the only remedy' are not ambiguous; it is difficult to see what meaning they can have other than that in the circumstances to which s 184(2) applies, the only manner in which the dispute itself can be resolved is by the means prescribed: the adjudicator's order or that of the District Court on appeal."[88]

That view was confirmed on appeal, where Davies JA said:

> "[11] This was plainly a dispute in respect of which an adjudicator may make an order under ch 6 within the meaning of s 184. It was, at the very least, both a dispute between the body corporate and the owner of a lot included in the scheme and a dispute between the body corporate and a letting agent for the scheme. In the end, the only questions in issue in this appeal are whether the order which an adjudicator may make to resolve this dispute is one pursuant to s 223 or one pursuant to s 227; or whether the adjudicator may make such an order under either section.
> [12] Section 184 does not speak in terms, specifically, of jurisdiction to hear and decide but in terms of providing a remedy. However I think its plain intention is that the adjudicator is to have exclusive jurisdiction to make orders of the kind which the Act prescribes, relevantly in s 223 and s 227, in disputes of the kind to which s 182 refers, > subject to any statutory exception or limitation. Mr Savage SC, for the appellants did not argue to the contrary."[89]
> [140401]

[113] For the plaintiffs it is argued that s 229 is a similar, but relevantly different provision. Their argument seems to be based upon the jurisdiction which s 229 now confers upon the QCAT, together with its power to transfer matters to a court. In particular, s 52 of the Queensland Civil and Administrative Tribunal Act 2009 (Qld), provides, in part, as follows:

> "52 Transfer to more appropriate forum
> (1) If the tribunal considers the subject matter of a proceeding or a part of a proceeding would be more appropriately dealt with by another tribunal, a court or another entity, the tribunal may, by order, transfer the matter to which the proceeding or part relates to the other tribunal, the court or the other entity.
> (4) If the tribunal transfers a matter to another tribunal, a court or another entity (the relevant entity) under this section—
> (a) a proceeding for the matter is taken to have been started before the relevant entity when it was started before the tribunal …"

I do not accept that submission of the plaintiffs. The power of the QCAT to transfer a matter to a court exists only where the Tribunal considers that the subject matter of the proceeding (or a part of that proceeding) would be more appropriately dealt with by that court. That could not be the case where the court lacked any jurisdiction to deal with the proceeding. Section 52 does not confer jurisdiction upon other courts or tribunals. Rather, it permits a transfer to a court or tribunal where that entity has jurisdiction to determine the proceeding. This is confirmed by the explanatory note to the Queensland Civil and Administrative Tribunal Bill 2009 (Qld), which said this of what is now s 52:

> "This provision does not confer any additional jurisdiction on the courts or other tribunals or entities and cannot be utilised if the tribunal has exclusive jurisdiction for the matter. An example of when it may be more appropriate for a court to hear a matter and for the tribunal to make a transfer order is where a related cause of action is on foot in the court, the issues in dispute in the court and the tribunal matters are intertwined and the tribunal did not have the jurisdiction to make all the orders being sought in the matter."[90]

[114] The exclusivity of the jurisdiction conferred by s 229 is confirmed by subsections (4) and (5). The latter provides for the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal to be exercisable in any of the circumstances there specified. But it further indicates that the legislative intention was to otherwise remove a court's jurisdiction to resolve such a dispute. A transfer under s 229(5)(a)(ii) could be made only in the context where the QCAT was exercising its appellate jurisdiction under s 144 of its statute.

[115] Ultimately the plaintiffs' argument recognised that s 52 could not be the source of this court's jurisdiction. Its argument came down to a suggested interpretation of s 229, under which it would operate as if s 229(2) was in these terms:

> "(2) The only remedy for a complex dispute is—
> (a) the resolution of the dispute by—
> (i) …
> (ii) an order of QCAT exercising the Tribunal's original jurisdiction under the QCAT Act [or by an order of a court or a tribunal to which QCAT had transferred a proceeding for the resolution of that dispute]."

That involves a substantial addition to the words of s 229 and such an interpretation cannot be accepted.

[116] The question therefore turns upon the operation of s 229(4) in this case. In particular, it turns upon whether all of the matters presently in issue are within the dispute which was the subject of the plaintiffs' application to the Commissioner. The plaintiffs argue that there is one dispute with many elements. The defendant argues that issues involving the enforceability of the Caretaking Agreement constitute a dispute, distinctly from that which was the subject of the application to the Commissioner.

It is possible to say that there are distinct claims, and thereby distinct disputes, in relation to, respectively, the LMA and the Caretaking Agreement. There is a considerable overlap of factual issues but they are not identical. It can be said that success for the plaintiffs in relation to one agreement need not have resulted in success for them on the other.

[118] Commonly there are many issues or things in dispute which are to be resolved in the determination of a piece of litigation. For example, in respect of the LMA, there is (or was) a dispute as to its terms, a dispute as to its validity, a dispute or disputes as to the plaintiffs' performance, a dispute as to whether it has been abandoned or terminated and a dispute as to the extent of the plaintiffs' loss from not being able to perform the agreement. But each of those issues could also be fairly described as elements of the dispute between the parties which is resolved by this judgment. This illustrates that the word "dispute" can be used with varying degrees of generality, according to the context.

[119] The question here involves the meaning of "dispute" in a particular statutory context. The evident intent of Chapter 6 of the Act is to facilitate the resolution of controversies. It would be inconsistent with that purpose if Chapter 6, and in particular s 229, promoted rather than resolved controversies, by giving rise to unproductive jurisdictional arguments. It would also be detrimental to the operation of Chapter 6 to unduly confine the boundaries of a "dispute", because that could prevent the one body resolving the entire controversy between the parties with disadvantages of extra cost, delay and the possibility of inconsistent findings.

[120] If the defendant's argument is correct, the QCAT had jurisdiction to determine the proceeding concerning the Caretaking Agreement but it may not have had jurisdiction to resolve the proceeding concerning the LMA. That is because although the plaintiffs are "a caretaking service contractor", they have that status from the Caretaking Agreement (including as it does the power to conduct a letting agency). Their claim to enforce the LMA, at least upon one view, is not made by them as a caretaking service contractor. Upon that view, what is said to be the distinct dispute concerning the LMA would not be a "complex dispute", so that it would not be within the jurisdiction of the QCAT. Therefore, no single entity, including the QCAT, could have resolved what is now the subject of this litigation. The potential for that consequence indicates the risk in adopting too narrow an understanding of what is a "dispute".

[121] The notion of a dispute in this context should be one which promotes the whole of the controversy between the parties being able to be resolved within the one process. In this respect, assistance can be found in the body of case law dealing with accrued federal jurisdiction.[91] There are three principles affecting accrued jurisdiction which are relevant here in assessing what constitutes the "dispute". First, the identification of the relevant controversy between the parties is not to be determined only by a consideration that there are separate proceedings which were commenced.[92] Secondly, the identification of the controversy involves "a matter of impression and of practical judgment".[93] And thirdly, if proceedings were to be tried in different courts, with conflicting findings made on one or more issues common to two proceedings, this will indicate that there is but a single controversy.[94]

[122] As should be apparent from this judgment, the issues concerning the enforceability of the Caretaking Agreement are ones which almost entirely concern the enforceability and particular effect of the LMA. The possible exceptions are the complaints that the plaintiffs acted wrongly in endeavouring to change the membership of the committee of the body corporate, or more generally in their lobbying of owners for support against the existing committee. Yet even those matters have a connection with the enforceability and effects of the LMA, because the plaintiffs' conduct, the subject of those complaints, has to be considered by reference to whether they had been wrongly excluded under the LMA.

[123] In substance, this controversy concerned the respective positions of the parties under the LMA, with consequences for their respective positions under the Caretaking Agreement. All of the matters in issue in this litigation should be understood as elements of the one controversy or dispute. In consequence of s 229(4), subsections (2) and (3) do not apply in any respect to this litigation, and this court has jurisdiction in all respects.

Outcome

[124] It will be declared that the document described as the Landscape Maintenance Agreement, originally made in writing and dated 26 October 2005, is valid and enforceable as a contract between the plaintiffs and the defendant for a term expiring on 14 April 2022.

[125] It will be further declared that the document described as a Caretaking Agreement, originally made in writing and dated 24 October 2001, is valid and enforceable as a contract between the plaintiffs and the defendant for a term expiring on 14 April 2022.

[126] There will be judgment for the plaintiffs against the defendant in the sum of $59,200.

[127] I will hear the parties as to costs and any other orders.

Judgment delivered on 26 March 2010

Community schemes — Off-the-plan contract dispute — Staged development — Original Disclosure Statement provided to purchaser — Further Statement to correct inaccuracies in original Disclosure Statement provided after Stage 1 completion — Purchaser cancelled contract within 14 days due to changes in Further Statement — Whether purchaser would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete contract in light of changes to original Disclosure Statement — Purchaser validly cancelled contract under Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, s 214(4).

The developer (respondent) built a staged residential community scheme known as Tennyson Reach Development. The purchaser (applicant) entered into a contract for sale of proposed residential lot in stage 2 of that development. The developer gave the purchaser a Disclosure Statement in fulfilment of its obligations under s 213 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act.

After stage 1 of the development had been completed, the developer provided the purchaser with a Further Statement pursuant to s 214 of the Act, explaining how the first statement was or had become inaccurate and how the inaccuracies were being rectified, together with a substitute Disclosure Statement incorporating the changes. The substitute Disclosure Statement differed from the first Disclosure Statement in that the following was missing from the Asset Register and the Equipment Schedule intended for the Body Corporate:

- CCTV, cameras and security monitoring equipment
- BBQ, outdoor tables and chairs
- artworks and loose decorative items within lift foyer and common areas, and
- six lift curtains.

On receipt of the Further Statement, the purchaser purported to exercise its right to cancel the contract under the Act. She argued that she would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete, given the extent to which the first Disclosure Statement had become inaccurate. The inaccuracies which she complained of in a letter to the developer were as follows:

> "Security is and was a very important consideration for my husband and myself, given our personal circumstances, and the proximity of the Farringford building to the State Tennis Centre and proposed public parklands. Further if the fee to the caretaker was based, even in part, on the security monitoring function, and that function does not have to be performed, the fee paid is accordingly inflated.
> To a lesser extent, but still importantly, the absence of artworks, decorative items and a BBQ and tables and chairs detracts from the amenity of the development, and the Seller's unwillingness to supply these items marks an unwarranted departure from the initial Disclosure Statement. if the Body Corporate has to acquire these items it will put all unit-holders to expense.
>
> The provision of lift curtains is necessary to prevent damage occurring if items are being moved in or out of the building, and to minimise the expense that would be incurred by the body corporate if that were to occur.
> I regard the amendment to clause 4.4, the inclusion of the Body Corporate Assent Register, the omission of the assets to which I have referred, and the provision of the Caretaking Agreement to be that I would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract. Accordingly I cancel the contract pursuant to s 214(4) of the Act".

The developer responded to the purchaser that by oversight, some of the items which have already been provided by the Seller upon completion of Stage 1 were not listed on the Body Corporate Assets Register in the Further Statement. The developer enclosed a Further Statement confirming the Seller's original undertaking to provide the assets listed in the original Disclosure Statement and annexing a copy of the amended Body Corporate Assets Register to the purchaser.

Counsel for the developer submitted that the purchaser was not entitled to cancel the contract because the original Disclosure Statement never became inaccurate; the inaccuracy was in the Further Statement. Counsel also submitted that the purchaser could not be materially prejudiced by the omission of the property from the Further Statement because it was not property which the developer had contracted to provide the purchaser; rather it was to be property of a third party, the Body Corporate.

Held: purchaser validly cancelled contract.

1. The purchaser was entitled to cancel the contract and she validly did so.

2. The purchaser had only 14 days in which to cancel the contract. The error in the Further Statement was not brought to her attention or corrected in that time. She was entitled to rely on the assumption that the information in the Further Statement was accurate.

3. The Body Corporate was to come into existence on the establishment of the scheme and the purchaser as the owner of a lot would be one of its members. Under the original Disclosure Statement the developer undertook to provide at its costs, items of property which, upon establishment of the Body Corporate, would become Body Corporate Assets. The Body Corporate would administer those assets for the benefit of lot owners including the purchaser. In these circumstances, it does not follow that because the property was to be Body Corporate Assets, the purchaser could not be materially prejudiced by its omission.

4. It was enough for the purchaser to establish that she would be disadvantaged in a substantial way if she were obliged to complete the contract on the premise that the Body Corporate would not have the CCTV security system and other items of property which had been included in the original Disclosure Statement and omitted from the Further Statement.

5. Viewed objectively, a person in the purchaser's circumstances would be disadvantaged in a substantial way by the omission of the security system and arrangements for its management.

Before: Wilson J.

Editorial comment: Her Honour mentioned that the test for determining whether "the buyer would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract" within the meaning of s 214(4)(b) has not ben authoritatively determined. In her opinion some matters are clear [32]:

[140203]

- The focus is on the buyer. This suggests that the test is objective having regard to the particular buyer's circumstances: would someone in those circumstances be materially prejudiced?
- Given that the buyer has only 14 days in which to cancel the contract, and the completion date may still be some months away (as it was in this case), material prejudice must be assessed in the light of the buyer's circumstances when the Further Statement is received or at the latest at the expiration of 14 days from its receipt.
- There must be a causal relationship between the inaccuracy and the prejudice.
- There must be proportionality between the inaccuracy and the prejudice.
- Because this is a consumer protection legislation (Body Corporate and Community Management Act), it should be construed beneficially.

The result of this case and her Honour's comments will be useful to practitioners when it comes to determining whether "material prejudice" can be relied on in a vendor/purchaser off-the-plan contract dispute.

Margaret Wilson J: The applicant agreed to purchase a residential apartment in a proposed community titles scheme from the respondent.

2. The respondent provided a disclosure statement under s 213 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, and subsequently a further statement under s 214.

3. Asserting that she would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract, the applicant purported to cancel it under s 214(4) of the Act.

4. In this proceeding the applicant seeks a declaration that she validly cancelled the contract. Further or alternatively, she seeks a declaration that she validly rescinded it pursuant to s 421(3) of the Environmental Protection Act 1994.

5. The originating application came before the Court on the Applications List. Counsel for the applicant asked the Court to determine only the lawfulness of the cancellation under the Body Corporate and Community Management Act, on the basis that if that issue were determined against his client, the matter should proceed to trial on the issue of rescission under the Environmental Protection Act.

6. Counsel for the respondent submitted that the matters in issue should be the subject of pleadings and determination at trial. However, the respondent failed to satisfy the evidentiary onus it bore to persuade the Court there were relevant disputes of fact which should go to trial. Accordingly, whether the applicant validly cancelled the contract under s 214 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act is an appropriate issue for separate summary determination.

7. The Act draws a distinction between sales of existing lots and sales of proposed lots (ie. sales "off the plan"). Under s 213, before a contract for the sale of a proposed lot is made, the vendor must give the purchaser a statement disclosing various matters reasonably expected or proposed to be in place when the community titles scheme is established. Under s 214 it must give the purchaser a "further statement" if, before settlement of the contract, it becomes aware that information in the first statement was inaccurate at the date of the contract or if the first statement would not be accurate if now given. The first statement and the further statement are part of the contract[1] and the purchaser may rely on them as if the vendor had warranted their accuracy.[2] The purchaser has certain rights to "cancel" the contract in the event of the vendor's non-compliance with these obligations or inaccuracy in the statements.[3]

8. Sections 213 and 214 provide:-

> "213 Information to be given by seller to buyer
>
> (1) Before a contract (the contract) is entered into by a person (the seller) with another person (the buyer) for the sale to the buyer of a lot (the proposed lot) intended to come into existence as a lot included in a community titles scheme
> when the scheme is established or changed, the seller must give the buyer a disclosure statement.
> (2) The disclosure statement—
> (a) must state the amount of annual contributions reasonably expected to be payable to the body corporate by the owner of the proposed lot; and
> (b) must include, for any engagement of a person as a body corporate manager or service contractor for the scheme proposed to be entered into after the establishment of the scheme, or proposed to be continued or entered into after the scheme is changed—
> (i) the terms of the engagement, other than any provisions of the code of conduct that are taken to be included in the terms under section 118; and
> (ii) the estimated cost of the engagement to the body corporate; and > (iii) the proportion of the cost to be borne by the owner of the proposed lot; and
> (c) must include, for any authorisation of a person as a letting agent for the scheme proposed to be given after the establishment of the scheme, or proposed to be continued or given after the scheme is changed, the terms of the authorisation; and
> (d) must include details of all body corporate assets proposed to be acquired by the body corporate after the establishment or change of the scheme; and
> (e) must be accompanied by—
> (i) the proposed community management statement; and
> (ii) if the scheme to be established or changed is proposed to be established as a subsidiary scheme—the existing or proposed community management statement of each scheme of which the proposed subsidiary scheme is proposed to be a subsidiary; and
> (f) must identify the regulation module proposed to apply to the scheme; and
> (g) must include other matters prescribed under the regulation module applying to the scheme.
> (3) The disclosure statement must be signed by the seller or a person authorised by the seller.

(4) The disclosure statement must be substantially complete.
(5) If the proposed lot the subject of the contract is not residential property, the seller must give the buyer an information sheet (the information sheet) in the approved form with the contract in a way mentioned in section 213A.
(5A) If the proposed lot the subject of the contract is residential property, the seller must ensure that an information sheet (the information sheet) in the approved form and a warning statement are given as required under the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000, section 366, 366A or 366B.
(6) If the contract has not already been settled, the buyer may cancel the contract if —

(a) the seller has not complied with subsection (1); or
(b) the seller has not complied with subsection (5) or (5A), whichever is applicable.

(7) The seller does not fail to comply with subsection (1) merely because the disclosure statement, although substantially complete as at the day the contract is entered into, contains inaccuracies.

214 Variation of disclosure statement by further statement

(1) This section applies if the contract has not been settled, and—

(a) the seller becomes aware that information contained in the disclosure statement was inaccurate as at the day the contract was entered into; or

(b) the disclosure statement would not be accurate if now given as a disclosure statement.

(2) The seller must, within 14 days (or a longer period agreed between the buyer and seller) after subsection (1) starts to apply, give the buyer a further statement (the further statement) rectifying the inaccuracies in the disclosure statement.
(3) The further statement must be endorsed with a date (the further statement date), and must be signed, by the seller or a person authorised by the seller.
(4) The buyer may cancel the contract if—

(a) it has not already been settled; and
(b) the buyer would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract, given the extent to which the disclosure statement was, or has become, inaccurate; and
(c) the cancellation is effected by written notice given to the seller within 14 days, or a longer period agreed between the buyer and seller, after the seller gives the buyer the further statement.

(5) Subsections (1) to (4) continue to apply after the further statement is given, on the basis that the disclosure statement is taken to be constituted by the disclosure statement and any further statement, and the disclosure statement date is taken to be the most recent further statement date."

The Facts

9. The respondent is the developer of a staged development known as Tennyson Reach Development. By a contract dated 4 December 2007 the applicant agreed to purchase a proposed residential lot in stage 2 of that development, described as Lot 5111 "Farringdon".

10. The respondent gave the applicant a Disclosure Statement dated 3 December 2007 in fulfilment of its obligations under s 213. The Disclosure Statement had a table of contents, listing 11 chapters, namely:-

"CHAPTER 1	–	Information Disclosure
CHAPTER 2	–	New Community Management Statement
CHAPTER 3	–	Schedule of Finishes
CHAPTER 4	–	Plans

CHAPTER 5	–	Body Corporate Budget and Schedule of Levy Calculations and Lot Entitlements
CHAPTER 6	–	Caretaking Agreement
CHAPTER 7	–	Letting Agreement
CHAPTER 8	–	Administration Agreement
CHAPTER 9	–	Draft Site Management Plan
CHAPTER 10	–	Power of Attorney Extract
CHAPTER 11	–	FIRB Approval"

(a) The following appeared in chapter 1 –

"4.4 Proposed Assets of the Body Corporate

The Seller proposes to provide, at its cost, the following items of equipment and furnishings which will become Body Corporate Assets upon establishment of the Body Corporate, namely:

Gymnasium/Lap Pool

(a) pool cleaning equipment;
(b) pool furniture;
(c) tables and chairs for meeting room use;
(d) fitness equipment;
(e) AV equipment.

Other Recreational Pools

(a) pool cleaning equipment;
(b) outdoor pool furniture;
(c) BBQ, outdoor tables and chairs.

General

(a) artworks and loose decorative items within lift foyer and common areas;
(b) CCTV, cameras and security monitoring equipment;
(c) Caretakers' office equipment;
(d) Caretakers' gardening equipment;

[140206]

(e) Caretakers' vehicle for transport of refuse containers to compactor; and
(f) 6 lift curtains.

It is not proposed that the Body Corporate acquire any other assets after establishment of the Scheme, however, the Body Corporate may acquire other assets if the Body Corporate considers the assets would be beneficial to the operation of the Scheme."

(b) By-law 29 of schedule C to the proposed Community Management Statement contained in chapter 2 empowered the Body Corporate to operate a security system for the Scheme Land, including implementing security procedures and security equipment designed to prevent unauthorised entry to the Scheme Land.

(c) Clause 3.4 of chapter 1 provided that details of the finishes for the lot were incorporated in chapter 3, which provided, inter alia, that CCTV would be "provided to select locations within the common property".
(d) A copy of the proposed Caretaking Agreement was set out in chapter 6. Schedule 3 to the agreement listed the caretaking duties, including:-

(i) By clause 1.1:-

"The Caretaker must within a reasonable time after the Commencement Date become familiar, and maintain that familiarity, with:

(e) the security devices and systems used in the Development

(ii) By clause 3.1 (under the heading "Daily Requirements"):

"Security: check for any security breaches, vandalism, broken glass and ensure all fire doors are secured according to the code requirements and monitor (if installed) any close circuit security television cameras and keep daily video tapes for at least seven days".

11. After stage one of the development had been completed, the respondent's solicitors wrote to the applicant's husband on 6 August 2009. They said:-

"Mirvac Queensland Pty Limited ("Seller") sale to Catherine Frances Wilson ("Buyer") – Lot 5111 Tennyson Reach, Stage 2

By way of update, the Tennyson Reach Community Titles Scheme 39925 was established on 27 April 2009 upon completion of Stage 1 of the Development. As a consequence of requirements of the Brisbane City Council as part of the process of establishment of the Scheme and subsequent events (such as the Body Corporate adopting a Budget and entering into Body Corporate Agreements as contemplated by the first Disclosure Statement), a number of changes have been made to, or are proposed in respect of, the Scheme.

We enclose a Further Statement pursuant to s.214 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act which details all the changes made or proposed to the Scheme and to the information contained in the first Disclosure Statement given to the Buyer."

12. The applicant received the Further Statement on 11 August 2009. It consisted of a five page document headed "Further Statement" explaining how the first statement was or had become inaccurate and how the inaccuracies were being rectified, together with a substitute Disclosure Statement dated 6 August 2009 incorporating the changes. The five page document made no mention of any change to cl 4.4 of chapter 1.

13. The substitute Disclosure Statement had a table of contents – 11 chapters described as in the first Disclosure Statement, except for chapter 5 which was:-

"CHAPTER 5 – Body Corporate Budget and Schedule of Levy Calculations and Lot Entitlements and Schedule of Body Corporate Assets"

[140207]

Chapter 5 included a two page Body Corporate Asset Register and a four page Initial Body Corporate Equipment Schedule. Neither the Asset Register nor the Equipment Schedule contained any reference to:-

(a) CCTV, cameras and security monitoring equipment;
(b) BBQ, outdoor tables and chairs;
(c) artworks and loose decorative items within lift foyer and common areas: or
(d) six lift curtains.

But the other provisions to which I have referred (the by-law, the finishes, and the caretaking duties) were unaltered.

14. By s 214(4)(c) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act the applicant had 14 days from receipt of the Further Statement in which to cancel the contract if she would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete, given the extent to which the first Disclosure Statement had become inaccurate. She purported to do so by letter to the respondent's solicitors dated 24 August 2009. (She relied, as well, on other grounds for terminating the contract, but they are not presently relevant.)

15. The applicant wrote:-

> "Security is and was a very important consideration for my husband and myself, given our personal circumstances, and the proximity of the Farrringford building to the State Tennis Centre and proposed public parklands. Further, if the fee to the caretaker was based, even in part, on the security monitoring function, and that function does not have to be performed, the fee paid is accordingly inflated.
> To a lesser extent, but still importantly, the absence of artworks, decorative items and a BBQ and tables and chairs detracts from the amenity of the development, and the Seller's unwillingness to supply these items marks an unwarranted departure from the initial Disclosure Statement. If the Body Corporate has to acquire these items it will put all unit-holders to expense.
>
> The provision of lift curtains is necessary to prevent damage occurring if items are being moved in or out of the building, and to minimise the expense that would be incurred by the body corporate if that were to occur.
> I regard the amendment to clause 4.4, the inclusion of the Body Corporate Asset Register, the omission of the assets to which I have referred, and the provisions of the Caretaking Agreement to be such that I would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract. Accordingly, I cancel the contract, pursuant to s. 214(4) of the Act."

16. On 9 September 2009 the respondent's solicitors replied:-

> "1. Body Corporate Assets
>
> The BCCM Act only requires a seller to disclose 'details of all Body Corporate Assets proposed to be acquired by the Body Corporate after the establishment or change of the Scheme'.
> Neither the original Disclosure Statement nor the Further Statement suggested that it was proposed that the Body Corporate would be required to acquire any Body Corporate Assets. All assets that the Seller proposes will become Body Corporate Assets as listed in the original Disclosure Statement will be provided by the Seller at its cost and the Seller confirms that all the items of equipment and furnishings listed in the original Disclosure Statement have or will be provided by the Seller at its cost. It is noted that some items will be progressively provided by the Seller upon completion of each Stage of the Development. By oversight, some of those items which have already been provided by the Seller upon completion of Stage 1 were not listed on the Body Corporate Assets Register in the Further Statement. We enclose a Further Statement confirming the Seller's original undertaking to provide the assets listed in the original Disclosure Statement and annexing a copy of the amended Body Corporate Assets Register."

17. Counsel for the respondent submitted that the applicant was not entitled to cancel the contract because the original Disclosure Statement never became inaccurate: the inaccuracy was in the Further Statement.

18. Of course, the original Disclosure Statement did become inaccurate in other respects, necessitating the provision of the Further Statement.

Effect of the Legislation

19. Both the original Disclosure Statement and the Further Statement had contractual effect[4] and the applicant was entitled to rely on the information in both as if the respondent warranted its accuracy.[5]

20. The primary object of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act is:-

> "…to provide for flexible and contemporary communally based arrangements for the use of freehold land, having regard to the secondary objects."[6]

21. Its secondary objects are:-

> "(a) to balance the rights of individuals with the responsibility for self management as an inherent aspect of community titles schemes;
> (b) to promote economic development by establishing sufficiently flexible administrative and management arrangements for community titles schemes;
> (c) to encourage the tourism potential of community titles schemes without diminishing the rights and responsibilities of owners, and intending buyers, of lots in community titles schemes;
> (d) to provide a legislative framework accommodating future trends in community titling;
> (e) to ensure that bodies corporate for community titles schemes have control of the common property and body corporate assets they are responsible for managing on behalf of owners of lots included in the schemes;
> (f) to provide bodies corporate with the flexibility they need in their operations and dealings to accommodate changing circumstances within community titles schemes;
> (g) to provide an appropriate level of consumer protection for owners and intending buyers of lots included in community titles schemes;
> (h) to ensure accessibility to information about community titles scheme issues;
> (i) to provide an efficient and effective dispute resolution process."[7]

22. In construing the Act, the interpretation which best achieves these objects is to be preferred to any other.[8] Sections 213 – 219 are consumer protection provisions. As such, they should be construed beneficially, resolving any ambiguity in favour of the consumer.

23. By s 216 the applicant could rely on the information in the original Disclosure Statement and that in the Further Statement as if the respondent had warranted its accuracy. I do not accept the submission of counsel for the respondent that s 216 has no application to this case.

24. In providing the Further Statement, from which these items of Body Corporate property had been omitted, the respondent warranted that they would not be provided. The applicant had only 14 days in which to cancel the contract under s 214(4). The legislation did not cast any obligation on the applicant to ensure the information in the Further Statement was accurate before acting on it. I accept the submission of her counsel that the statutory right of cancellation is dependent on the content of the Disclosure Statement and Further Statement, and not on other facts unknown to the buyer, but known the seller.

25. The applicant was entitled to cancel the contract if she would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete, given the extent to which the original Disclosure Statement was, or had become, inaccurate.

26. The test for determining whether "the buyer would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract" within the meaning of s 214(4)(b) has not been authoritatively determined.

27. In Celik Developments Pty Ltd v Mayes[9] White J held that a requirement that a buyer purchase a furniture package for $41,900.00 in order to be part of the letting pool in an apartment complex constituted material prejudice under s 217. In Lee v Surfers Paradise Beach Resort Pty Ltd[10] Dutney J, as a member of the Court of Appeal, discussed in obiter dicta whether certain changes might constitute material prejudice. However, material prejudice was not relied on in that case and his

Honour did not discuss the test for its determination.

28. Counsel referred to a number of decisions on s 49 of the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980. In case of a contract for the purchase of a proposed lot "off the plan", the original proprietor or vendor was obliged to give the purchaser a statement in writing containing particulars of various matters such as lot entitlements, by-laws, management and maintenance agreements. The purchaser was then given a right to avoid the contract if his rights would be "materially affected" by a change in the information. In Bassingthwaighte v Butt[11] McPherson J said[12] :-

> "My conclusion is that the rights of the plaintiff as purchaser were undoubtedly affected by the change or alteration in aggregate lot entitlement between contract and registration of the building units plan. The question is whether they were altered or affected 'materially'. On the meaning of 'material' I was referred to Simons v Herald & Weekly Times Ltd,[13] where 'material' was treated as connoting 'of consequence'. Among the meanings given in the Shorter O.E.D. is '5. Of much consequence; important'. It is clear that much depends on the context in which the word is used. It is implicit in s. 49(4) that it is not any or every alteration in aggregated lot entitlement that is to be regarded as giving rise to a right of avoidance but only such as 'materially affect' the rights of the purchaser."

His Honour also considered that the issue was to be determined by an objective test – whether the possibility that the purchaser might not have purchased was a reasonable supposition.[14] His Honour's approach was doubted by Wilson J in Deming No. 456 Pty Ltd & Ors v Brisbane Unit Development Corporation Pty Ltd.[15] Wilson J dissented in the outcome of that case, but none of the other members of the Court disagreed with what he said in this regard:-

> "In an earlier case, Bassingthwaighte v Butt,[16] McPherson J offers an objective test of materiality, namely, whether the possibility that the purchaser might not have purchased is a reasonable supposition. His Honour refers to Stonham, Vendor and Purchaser, pars. 373 and 374. If that is an appropriate test, then I would agree with his Honour that the possibility that Deming might not have purchased the property had its lot entitlement been represented as 1/37 instead of 1/41 is not a reasonable supposition. However, we are not applying equitable doctrines. We are construing a statute which reflects a firm resolve on the part of the legislature to protect the purchasers of home units with quite specific statutory remedies. Section 49(4) contemplates that there will be circumstances which are capable of materially affecting the rights of purchasers. These circumstances encompass the entry into or variation of a management agreement or service agreement, the making or variation of a by-law or a change in the lot entitlement of any lot or the aggregate lot entitlement. Of course, it would be quite unjust if minor changes or adjustments in these areas were to entitle a purchaser to avoid a contract. On the other hand, if the changes are not insignificant and have the effect of changing the substance of that contracted for, the intention of the legislature would seem to be plain."

29. Then in Gold Coast Carlton Pty Ltd v Wilson[17] the question was considered by the Full Court of the Supreme Court of Queensland. Andrews SPJ said that it was a question a fact, not meaning other than to affect rights deleteriously in some way.[18]

30. Section 49 of the Building Units and Group Titles Act was subsequently amended. Sub-section (4) was omitted and a new sub-section was substituted. The new sub-section introduced concepts of inaccuracy and "material prejudice". In Sommer v Abatti Holdings Pty Ltd[19] Derrington J considered the meaning of "material prejudice" in the context of the new s 49(4) of the Building Units and Group Titles Act (and s 22 of the Land Sales Act 1984). His Honour said -[20]

> "The words 'material prejudice' in the section relate to the concepts of material disparity or material and substantial misdescription referred to in the general principle first laid down in Flight v Booth[21] that where a misdescription is in a material and substantial point, so far affecting the > subject matter of the contract that it may reasonably be supposed that, but for such misdescription, the purchaser might never have entered into the contract at all, the contract is avoided altogether. In such case the purchaser may be considered as not having purchased the thing which was really the subject of the sale."

31. With respect, I do not consider that the approach of Derrington J is applicable to the construction of s 214 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act.

32. Some matters are clear.

(a) The focus is on the buyer. This suggests that the test is objective having regard to the particular buyer's circumstances: would someone in those circumstances be materially prejudiced?
(b) Given that the buyer has only 14 days in which to cancel the contract, and the completion date may still be some months away (as it was in this case), material prejudice must be assessed in the light of the buyer's circumstances when the Further Statement is received or at the latest at the expiration of 14 days from its receipt.
(c) There must be a causal relationship between the inaccuracy and the prejudice.
(d) There must be proportionality between the inaccuracy and the prejudice.
(e) Because this is consumer protection legislation, it should be construed beneficially.

33. In Chancellor Park Retirement Village Pty Ltd v Retirement Village Tribunal[22] Chesterman J considered the jurisdiction of a Retirement Village Tribunal constituted under the Retirement Villages Act 1999. The scheme operator of a retirement village applied for judicial review of a decision of the Tribunal setting aside residence contracts between it and a number of former residents of the village. Jurisdiction turned on whether the applicant had contravened a provision of the legislation by giving the residents a document containing information which it knew to be false or misleading and if it had, whether the residents were "materially prejudiced by the contravention". The applicant gave the residents a statement of receipts and payments for the year ended 30 June 2000. The accounts had been audited, but nevertheless contained an error. The amount appearing for common lighting included an amount expended on electricity for a nursery (also owned by the applicant) which adjoined the retirement village. An offsetting reimbursement was omitted form the accounts. This led to an inflated impression of the amount the residents had to pay for common area lighting. However, the budget was prepared on the basis of the reimbursement, and was not affected by the erroneous inflated expenditure item in the accounts. The residents were not in fact overcharged. Both the audited statement of account and the budget were supplied to the residents. His Honour said –[23]

"…… The term 'material prejudice' has no special meaning. Prejudice in this context means disadvantage. It is material if it is substantial or of much consequence. The misstatement in question was the omission in the accounts of the receipt of income which would have entirely offset an item of expenditure which, on the face of the accounts, the residents would have to meet. There was no error in the actual amounts received and spent. The residents did not pay out more than they should have. The accounts did, however, wrongly, give rise to the belief that the residents had paid or were obliged to pay more than they were legally obliged to pay. However, a belief inculcated by a misstatement does not ordinarily cause disadvantage or prejudice, let alone of a substantial sort, unless it is acted on to one's detriment."

34. In the present case the applicant had only 14 days in which to cancel the contract. The error in the Further Statement was not brought to her attention or corrected in that time. She was entitled to act on the assumption that the information in the Further Statement was accurate. What Chesterman J said about the meaning of "material prejudice" is of assistance in determining its meaning in s 214 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act, but what he said about a belief inculcated by misstatement is not.

35. In my view it would be enough for the applicant to establish that she would be disadvantaged in some substantial way if she were obliged to complete the contract on the premise that the Body Corporate would not have the CCTV security system and other items of property which had been included in the first Disclosure Statement and omitted from the Further Statement. I note that the applicant's assertion of material prejudice was based principally on the omission of the CCTV security system. She relied on the other omissions as compounding the prejudice.

36. In an affidavit sworn on 10 December 2009 the applicant deposed:-

> "14. At the date of the Contract, the issue of security was very important to me. My residence, both at the time and presently, has a security system with 24 hour base monitoring and Crimsafe screens on the windows.
> 15. The Lot is to be situated in the 'Farringford' building which forms part of the Development.
> 16. At the date of the Contract, the issue of security for the (proposed) Lot (including security for the 'Farringford' building) was very important to me.
> 17. The Lot was proposed to be purchased as the principal place of residence for me, my husband and 2 of my 3 children who reside with me (aged 13 and 18 respectively).
> 18. My husband is, and has been since 14 August 2006, a Federal Magistrate based in Brisbane. My husband and I were married prior to that date. My husband presides over various matters including family law matters.
> 19. At the date of the Contract the Queensland Tennis Centre was planned to be (and is now) situated adjacent to the 'Farringford' building. The Queensland Tennis Centre was opened before 24 August 2009. The 'Farringford' building is positioned adjacent to what appears to be a public thoroughfare, King Arthur Terrace (and this was the case as at 24 August 2009).
> 20. The 'Farrington' building appears to be a stage near to, or at, completion."

In an affidavit sworn on 11 December 2009 her husband deposed:-

> "9. At the time my wife entered into the Contract (and before), the issue of security was very important to me. I was appointed as a Federal Magistrate on 14 August 2006. I am based in Brisbane. My wife and I were married prior to my appointment. In my position as a Federal Magistrate, I am provided by the Commonwealth with a monitored security system, a panic button and Crimsafe security screens at the residence of my wife and me. As a Federal Magistrate many of the cases heard by me involve family law disputes."

37. Counsel for the respondent submitted that the applicant could not be materially prejudiced by the omission of the property from the Further Statement because it was not property which the respondent had contracted to provide the applicant: rather it was to be property of a third party, the Body Corporate. However, the Body Corporate was to come into existence on the establishment of the scheme,[24] and the applicant as the owner of a lot would be one of its members.[25] Under cl 4.4 of chapter 1 of the Original Disclosure Statement the respondent undertook to provide, at its cost, items of property which, upon the establishment of the Body Corporate, would become Body Corporate Assets. The Body Corporate would then be obliged to administer those assets for the benefit of lot owners, including the applicant.[26] In these circumstances, it does not follow that because the property was to be Body Corporate Assets, the applicant could not be materially prejudiced by its omission.

38. Counsel for the respondent submitted that the matter should go to trial, because his client might wish to lead evidence of the limited nature of the security afforded by a CCTV system such that the applicant would not be materially prejudiced by its omission. One aspect of the submission was that the CCTV system would not provide the level of security apparently provided to the applicant's husband by the Commonwealth Government because of his position as a Federal Magistrate. But I understood the submission to go further and, superficially at least, to suggest that the respondent might wish to establish at trial that the CCTV system did not in fact provide much security at all. This was a curious submission in light of the respondent's having used the installation of such a system as a positive marketing tool in promoting the development. Be that as it may, while the applicant bore the onus of satisfying the Court of material prejudice, given the nature of the application, the respondent bore an evidentiary onus to raise the issue if it wished to rely on it. It failed to do so.

39. The apartment was to be the principal place of residence for the applicant, her husband, and two teenage children. It was adjacent to the Queensland Tennis Centre (a major public facility) and a busy public thoroughfare. At the time the applicant's husband's occupation was such that the whole family might reasonably have a heightened sense of vulnerability to unlawful attack. The security system had been promoted as an integral feature of the development and arrangements for its management. Viewed objectively, a person in the applicant's circumstances in August 2009 would be disadvantaged in a substantial way by its omission. That disadvantage was compounded by the omission of other items of property which would have enhanced the amenity of the apartment.

40. In short, I am persuaded that the applicant was entitled to cancel the contract, and that she validly did so. There should be a declaration accordingly.

MIRVAC QUEENSLAND PTY LTD v BEIOLEY & ANOR

(2010) LQCS ¶90-158; Court citation: [2010] QSC 113

Judgment delivered on 20 April 2010

Community schemes — Off-the-plan contract for sale of a lot in a proposed residential community title scheme — Defendants did not settle after registration of proposed scheme — Defendants terminated contract based on alleged failure to comply with s 22 of Land Sales Act by plaintiff — Balconies forming part of the Lot changed by over 5% in area — Further disclosure statement was provided by plaintiff under the Body Corporate and Community Management Act — Defendants argued a further statement should also have been provided under s 22 of the Land Sales Act after the scheme had been registered as the identification of the Lot was inaccurate — Whether change should be further disclosed under s 22 of the Land Sales Act after the scheme had been registered — Developer found to have complied with Land Sales Act — Balconies were within the proposed Lot and the area must be considered as a whole for the purposes of s 21 of the Land Sales Act — Discrepancy in the proposed Lot area over 5% was not breach of contract — Section 22 of the Land Sales Act was not engaged due to changes to the area of the proposed Lot — No material prejudice argument was put forward under the Body Corporate and Community Management Act — Defendant must specifically perform the contract.

The plaintiff (Mirvac) agreed to sell to the defendants (Beioleys) an apartment in the building to be constructed known as Tennyson, a proposed residential community title scheme. The contract had to be settled within 14 days after notice from Mirvac that the proposed community title scheme had been established. The scheme was registered on 28 April 2009 and Mirvac called for settlement on 12 May 2009. The Beioleys did not attend at settlement and subsequently purported to terminate the contract on the basis of an alleged non-compliance by Mirvac with s 22 of the Land Sales Act.

The relevant provisions of the Land Sales Act at the centre of this dispute are:

> • "Section 21(1)(a) requiring that the vendor provide the purchaser a statement which clearly identifies the lot to be purchased; and > • Section 22(1) If a statement in writing of particulars referred to in section 21(1) given in accordance with, or pursuant to section 21(4) or (6) in sufficient compliance with, section 21(1)—
> > (a) is not accurate at the time it is given; or
> > (b) contains information that subsequently to the time it is given becomes inaccurate in any respect;
> it is the duty of the vendor and the vendor's agent to give to the purchaser or the purchaser's agent a statement in writing signed by the vendor or the vendor's agent of particulars required to be included in a statement given for the purposes of section 21(1) as soon as is reasonably practicable after the proposed lot has become a registered lot."

The Beioleys resisted specific performance of the contract on three bases:

> • Mirvac's non-compliance with s 22 of the Land Sales Act
> • Mirvac's insistence upon settlement in disregard of its obligations under s 22 is a repudiation of the contract by Mirvac which entitled the Beioleys to terminate it
> • the constructed apartment does not correspond with that which Mirvac contracted to build and to sell.

Each of the above grounds arose from the fact that the sizes of the balconies within the apartment were less than Mirvac had represented that it would build in the off-the-plan contract. The area of each of the balconies varied from what was shown within the original drawing by, in one case, 10.35% and in the other by 15.30%. Clause 6.3(a) of the proposed (and actual) contract permitted a change up to 5% to the "size of the Lot or any part of the Lot".

It was argued by the Beioleys that these changes made the actual Lot different from the proposed Lot as originally identified under s 21. Hence, the statement given under s 21 contained information which subsequently became inaccurate. The inaccuracy was in the identification of the lot to be purchased as its total area and the respective areas of its internal space and balconies had changed. Mirvac was bound to give a further statement identifying the Lot by reference to those areas of the apartment as constructed.

Mirvac had provided a further disclosure statement to the Beioleys under section 214 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act regarding the changes to the area of the Lot, however, the Beioleys argued that this did not suffice for the purposes of s 22 of the Land Sales Act because the information had to be provided "after the proposed Lot became a registered Lot". Mirvac disputed Beioleys' arguments and sought an order for the contract to be specifically performed.

Held: contract be specifically performed by defendant.

1. The defendant's argument proceeds upon an incorrect construction of cl 6.1 and 6.3 of the contract. The apparent purpose of cl 6.3(a) is to qualify that the plaintiff would not be in breach of contract if Lot 1 was constructed within that 5% tolerance. It is a different matter to say that cl 6.3(a) by implication deems the plaintiff to be in breach if the Lot or any part of the Lot was outside that range. There is no necessity for such an implied term, to be superimposed upon express obligations as to the construction of the Lot within cl 6.1.

2. The balcony was within the Lot and for the purposes of identification of the proposed Lot under s 21 of the Land Sales Act, it is the area of that Lot as a whole. There is no statutory requirement for a registered plan in this context to delineate and quantify the area of a balcony within a lot. The proposed Lot was identified for the purposes of s 21 by reference to the relevant drawing, but subject to such variations as would be consistent with the due performance of the proposed contract. The proposed Lot was identified as "substantially as shown or described in the Disclosure Statement".

3. Section 22 of the Land Sales Act was not engaged. The first and second of the defendant's grounds were not established. The defendant's third ground failed as there was no breach of contract by constructing the balconies outside the 5% tolerance within cl 6.3(a) of the contract. The defendants must perform the contract.

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

M D Martin (instructed by ClarkeKann) for the plaintiff (Mirvac).

P D Dunning SC and C Jennings (instructed by Broadley Rees Hogan) for the defendants (Beioleys).

Before: McMurdo J.

McMurdo J: By a contract of sale dated 2 July 2007, the plaintiff agreed to sell to the defendants an apartment in a building to be constructed near the Brisbane River at Tennyson. The price was $1,542,000 with a deposit of 10 per cent. The contract was to be settled within 14 days after notice from the plaintiff that the proposed community title scheme had been established. The scheme was registered on 28 April 2009 and the plaintiff called for settlement on 12 May 2009. But the defendants did not attend at settlement. Subsequently they purported to terminate the contract on the basis of an alleged non-compliance with s 22 of the Land Sales Act 1984 (Qld) ("the LSA").

2. The plaintiff seeks specific performance, which the defendants resist upon essentially three bases. The first is that they were entitled to terminate for non-compliance with s 22. The second is that by insisting upon settlement in disregard of the plaintiff's alleged obligations under s 22, the plaintiff repudiated the contract which entitled the defendants to terminate it. The third is that the apartment which has been constructed does not correspond in certain respects with that which the plaintiff contracted to build and to sell. As I will discuss, each of those grounds arises from the fact that the sizes of the balconies within this apartment are less than the plaintiff had represented that it would build.

3. Prior to the contract, the plaintiff provided to the defendant a disclosure statement pursuant to s 213 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) ("the BCCM Act"). Within that document was included a statement as required by s 21 of the LSA.[1] In the disclosure statement the proposed apartment was described as Lot No 3105. The disclosure statement contained a clause 1.6 as follows:

> "1.6 Plans
> Chapter 4 of this Disclosure Statement incorporates copies of the initial plan of subdivision SP 195275 and draft Building Format Plan SP 195376 for Stage 1 identifying the Lot as described in item 3 of this Chapter and subject to the provisions of the Contract."

4. The plans within Chapter 4 depicted two apartment buildings, described as Tower A and Tower B or the Softstone and Lushington buildings. The proposed Lot 3105 was shown at the western end of Tower A, two levels above the ground floor. One of these plans was a drawing showing the rooms within each apartment upon that floor. Another showed the boundaries of each of the lots, and the balcony or balconies for each apartment, specifying the amount of internal floor space and that of the balcony or balconies. In particular, this proposed Lot 3105 was shown as having an internal area of 173 m^2, an area for its north facing balcony of 29 m^2, an area for its south facing balcony of 13 m^2 and a total area of 215 m^2.

5. The statement expressed to be under s 21 of the LSA, the validity of which is not challenged, was as follows:

"Pursuant to Section 21 of the Land Sales Act 1984 (Qld) neither the Seller not the Seller's agent (including by any employee), has made or offered to the prospective Buyer or his agent any representation, promise or term with respect to the provision to the Buyer of a Certificate of Title that relates to the Lot in question only except that a separate indefeasible freehold title pursuant to the Land Title Act 1994 (Qld) will be available on settlement of the Contract in accordance with the terms of the Contract."

6. In the contract of sale, clause 6 provided for the development to be undertaken by the plaintiff as follows:

"6. CONSTRUCTION OF THE LOT, ETC

6.1 Subject to this Contract, the Seller must cause Stage 1 and the Lot to be constructed:-

(a) in a good and tradesman-like manner; and
(b) substantially as shown or described in the Disclosure Statement.

6.2 The Seller may make the following changes to Stage 1 and any other aspect of the Tennyson Reach Development:-

(a) any changes (provided that the Buyer is not materially prejudiced by the change);
(b) change the number of Stage 1 Lots and the design of the Stage 1 Lots (this Clause 6.2(b) does not apply to the Lot);
(c) change the design or any other aspect of Stage 1 or the Tennyson Reach Development (provided that the Buyer is not materially prejudiced by the change);
(d) make a change in Stage 1 or any other aspect of the Tennyson Reach Development if the Council or any other Authority requires it even if the Buyer is materially prejudiced;
(e) alter the area or configuration of the Scheme Land (or the Base Parcels) in accordance with any approval of the Council or any other Authority;
(f) alter the Common Property or any facilities or rights in relation to use of same;

[140216]

(g) change anything in any Body Corporate Agreements;
(h) construct any services on or under the Scheme Land (and register any easements required in connection with such services);
(i) grant any exclusive use, special privileges or occupation authorities over or in respect of any Common Property areas;
(j) include any Additional Land in the Scheme Land (whether before or after settlement);
(k) exclude or remove from the Scheme any part of the Base Parcel originally intended to be included in the Scheme Land; and
(l) any change contemplated in the Disclosure Statement.

6.3 The Seller may make the following changes to the Lot:-

(a) the size of the Lot or any part of the Lot may be up to 5% different (more or less) from that shown in the Disclosure Statement; …"

The "Stage 1" referred to in that clause was defined within the contract to mean the first stage of the Tennyson Reach Development which had been detailed in the disclosure statement.

7. It can be seen then that clause 6 imposed requirements both for the construction of Stage 1 and specifically for the construction of the apartment the subject of the contract. Clause 6.1 obliged the plaintiff to cause Stage 1, including the Lot, to be constructed "substantially as shown or described in the Disclosure Statement". That was qualified by clause 6.2 which permitted the plaintiff to make certain changes to Stage 1, although not to the design of the particular apartment being purchased by the defendants, as clause 6.2(b) made clear. The plaintiff was permitted to make changes to this particular Lot by clause 6.3. The defendants argue that, upon the proper construction of clauses 6.1 and 6.3(a), changes to the size of the Lot or any part of the Lot in excess of five per cent were not permitted.

8. It is uncontroversial that as constructed, this apartment had a total area and areas of specific parts, which differed from what had been represented in the original disclosure statement as follows:

	Disclosure Statement	As Built
Total area	215 m^2	209 m^2
Interior	173 m^2	172 m^2
North balcony	29 m^2	26 m^2
South balcony	13 m^2	11 m^2

Accordingly there was a reduction in size of 10.35 per cent in the case of the northern balcony and 15.38 per cent in the case of the southern balcony.

9. On 9 November 2007 and 20 February 2009, the plaintiff sent further statements pursuant to the BCCM Act about which there is no issue. Then on 27 March 2009, the plaintiff provided a further disclosure statement which, by an attached plan, clearly advised that the total area of this Lot and the areas of the internal space and the respective balconies had been built as I have set out above. The defendants accept that this further statement met the requirements of s 214 of the BCCM Act.

10. Section 214(4) of the BCCM Act is as follows:

> "(4) The buyer may cancel the contract if –
>
> (a) it has not already been settled; and
> (b) the buyer would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract, given the extent to which the disclosure statement was, or has become, inaccurate; and
> (c) the cancellation is effected by written notice given to the seller within 14 days, or a longer period agreed between the buyer and seller, after the seller gives the buyer the further statement."

Accordingly, the defendants were entitled to cancel the contract if the results of those changes were that they would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete.

11. On 8 April 2009, the solicitors for the defendants requested further information in relation to the proposed changes and an extension of the 14 day period within s 214(4)(c). By a letter of the same date, the plaintiff by its solicitors agreed to provide the information requested and agreed to the extension of that period until 14 days after its provision. That information was provided on 14 April 2009, so that the period for s 214(4) expired on 28 April 2009, during which there was no purported cancellation of the contract. By a letter of that date, the solicitors for the plaintiff informed the solicitors for the defendants that the Tennyson Reach Community Title Scheme had been established so that the contract was due for settlement on 12 May 2009.

12. Clause 3.3 of the contract provided as follows:

> "… [i]f the Buyer's Solicitors give the Seller's Solicitors an undertaking to use the Transfer Documents for stamping purposes only and to hold them complying with the directions of the Seller pending settlement then the Seller will cause the Seller's Solicitors to forward the Transfer Documents to the Buyer's Solicitors before the Settlement Date."

An undertaking according to clause 3.3 was provided by the defendants' solicitors in their letter of 5 May 2009 which was as follows:

> "We refer to the above and to your facsimile to us dated 28 April 2009.
> In accordance with clause 3.3 of the Sale Contract, we request that you provide us with signed transfer documents as soon as possible on our undertaking to use them for stamping purposes prior to Settlement. Please do no crease or fold the Form 1 or Form 24 as this may lead to rejection by the Department of Natural Resources and Water.

Please ensure that Part B of the Form 24 is completed in full, in particular a street address for the Transferor (Item 3), Safety Switch (Item 5(f)) and Smoke Alarms (Item 5(g)).

We will require a Declaration of Non-Revocation of the Power of Attorney to be returned with the documents if they are to be signed under Power of Attorney."

13. On 12 May 2009 the solicitors for the plaintiff advised that their client was ready, willing and able to settle on that day. The defendants did not respond and did not attend at the appointed time for settlement. On 25 May 2009 the plaintiff commenced these proceedings.

14. On 12 June 2009 the defendants' solicitors wrote to the plaintiff's solicitors saying that the defendants did not intend to settle the contract. On 23 June 2009 they again wrote, for the first time suggesting that there had been a non-compliance with s 22 of the LSA. It was also asserted that the plaintiff had repudiated the contract by refusing to provide a statement under s 22. The third argument which is now advanced, which is that the apartment did not correspond with that which the plaintiff had agreed to build because of the differences in the areas of the balconies, was not then advanced. By that letter the defendants purported to terminate the contract. The third ground was not raised until a letter from the defendants' solicitors of 3 September 2009, in which there was a (further) purported termination of the contract.

15. Section 21(1) of the LSA provides as follows:

"Before a person enters upon a purchase of a proposed lot there shall be given to the person (or to the person's agent) a statement in writing, signed by the person who is to become the person's vendor or that person's agent, that –

(a) clearly identifies the lot to be purchased; and
(b) states the names and addresses of the prospective vendor and the prospective purchaser; and
(c) clearly states whether the prospective vendor or the prospective vendor's agent (whether personally or by any employee) has made or offered to the prospective purchaser or the prospective purchaser's agent any representation, promise or term with respect to the provision to the purchaser of a certificate of title that relates to the lot in question only; and
(d) if any representation, promise or term, such as is referred to in paragraph (c) has been made of offered, clearly states the particulars thereof; and

(e) states the date on which it is signed."

16. Section 22 of the LSA provides, in part, as follows:

"22 Rectification of statement under s 21

(1) If a statement in writing of particulars referred to in section 21(1) given in accordance with, or pursuant to section 21(4) or (6) in sufficient compliance with, section 21(1) -

(a) is not accurate at the time it is given; or
(b) contains information that subsequently to the time it is given becomes inaccurate in any respect;

it is the duty of the vendor and the vendor's agent to give to the purchaser or the purchaser's agent a statement in writing signed by the vendor or the vendor's agent of particulars required to be included in a statement given for the purposes of section 21(1) as soon as is reasonably practicable after the proposed lot has become a registered lot.

(2) Subsection (1) applies whether the statement in writing is given in due time in accordance with section 21 or at a later time.

(3) …"

Section 25 of the LSA provides:

"25 Avoidance of instrument for breach of s 21(1)

(1) Where in respect of a purchase to which section 21(1) relates -

(a) there has not been given to the purchaser or the purchaser's agent a statement in writing in accordance with, or that pursuant to section 21(4) or (6) sufficiently complies with, section 21(1); or
(b) there has not been given to the purchaser or the purchaser's agent when required by section 22(1) a statement in writing in accordance with that section; or
(c) a statement in writing in accordance with, or that pursuant to section 21(4) or (6) sufficiently complies with, section 21(1) (whether given in due time in accordance with that section or at a later time) and a statement in writing in accordance with section 22(1), have been given to the purchaser or the purchaser's agent;

the purchaser may avoid the instrument made in respect of the purchase of the proposed lot by notice in writing given to the vendor or the vendor's agent if the purchaser has been materially prejudiced by the failure to give a statement in writing referred to in paragraph (a) or (b) or, in the case referred to in paragraph (c), by the inaccuracy of any particular in the statement in writing first mentioned in that paragraph.
(2) A notice of avoidance under subsection (1), if it is to be effectual, shall be given -

(a) before a registrable instrument of transfer that relates to the lot in question has been delivered by the vendor or the vendor's agent to the purchaser or the purchaser's agent; or
(b) where the purchaser seeks to avoid the instrument in question by reason of the inaccuracy of any particular in the statement in writing given in accordance with, or pursuant to section 21(4) or (6) in sufficient compliance with, section 21(1) –

(i) before the expiration of a period of 30 days after the receipt by the purchaser or the purchaser's agent of the statement in writing given in accordance with section 22(1); or
(ii) before the delivery of a registrable instrument of transfer as aforesaid;

whichever occurs sooner."

17. The defendants argue that the statement given under s 21 contained information which subsequently became inaccurate. The inaccuracy is said to have been in the identification of the lot to be purchased. It is argued that the Lot had been identified originally by reference to, amongst other things, its total area and the respective areas of its internal space and balconies. Because those areas changed, it is argued, the original identification of the Lot became inaccurate. Accordingly, the plaintiff was bound to give a further statement identifying the Lot by reference to those areas of the apartment as constructed. Of course the plaintiff did provide that information to the defendants, by the further disclosure statement under BCCM Act dated 27 March 2009. However it is said that this did not suffice for the purposes of s 22 of the LSA, because the information had to be provided "after the proposed Lot [became] a registered Lot": s 22(1).

18. A similar argument was rejected by Applegarth J in Mirvac Queensland Pty Ltd v Horne & Ors,[2] a case concerning another apartment within this development. It was shown in the (original) drawing within the s 213 disclosure statement as having a total area of 177 m^2, comprising 162 m^2 of internal space and 15 m^2 of balcony. As constructed, the Lot had a floor area of 176 m^2, of which the balcony consisted of 14 m^2. Applegarth J accepted that the specification of the floor area of the lot served "to clearly identify the lot in conjunction with other matters such as the Lot number, the floor on which it is located and its position in the building".[3] However, the specification of the floor area had to be considered in the context of the term of the proposed contract which was identical to clause 6.3(a) in the present case. Consequently, the specification of the total area of 177 m^2 was to be understood as a specification of a total area within five per cent of that figure.[4] Because the total area varied by less than five per cent, the information originally provided in that respect had not become inaccurate so as to engage s 22 of the LSA.

19. I respectfully agree with that reasoning. But the present argument was not put to His Honour and therefore was not considered. It is that the area of a part of the actual Lot varies by more than five per cent from the area depicted upon the drawing for that part. In this case the area of each of the balconies varies from what was shown within the original drawing by, in one case, 10.35 per cent and in the other by 15.30 per cent. Because clause 6.3(a) of the proposed (and actual) contract permitted a change up to five per cent to the "size of the Lot or any part of the Lot" it is argued that these changes made the actual Lot different from the proposed Lot as originally identified.

20. I do not accept this argument essentially for two reasons. The first is that the balcony was within the Lot and the relevant area insofar as the identification of the proposed Lot under s 21 was concerned, was the area of that Lot as a whole. Had there been no specification of the size of the balconies and the size of the internal space, but simply a specification of the area of the Lot as a whole, still the lot to be purchased would have been clearly identified in compliance with s 21. The fact that the area of the balcony was almost certainly of interest to the defendants as prospective purchasers does not mean that it was part of the information which had to be provided under s 21. A similar view was expressed by McPherson J in Sunbird Plaza Pty Ltd v Boheto Pty Ltd.[5] That case concerned the requirement of s 49 of the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 (Qld), which required a purchaser of a lot or a proposed lot to be provided with a statement which, amongst other things, clearly identified the lot or proposed lot to which it related. The document there identified the proposed lot as "Unit A on the 14th Floor as identified in sketch plan in subject agreement (where Building Units Plan has been registered, Lot 52 in Registered Building Units Plan No …)". The contract identified the property to be sold as Lot 52 on the fourteenth floor and provided that the plan for that floor would be "in accordance substantially with the plan in the eighth schedule hereto. … The said plan is incorporated in this Agreement for identification only". It was argued that the lot was not identified because there was nothing which specified the location of the building in which this apartment would form a part, in relation to the land on which the building stood.[6] McPherson J said:[7]

> "However, there are, in the case of a building not yet constructed, obvious difficulties in describing and identifying the precise compartment of airspace into which the constructed unit will fit, and I am satisfied that by s 49(2)(a) the legislature does not require this to be done. The lot is > sufficiently identified by the unit number, lot number, the floor on which it is intended to be, and the detailed drawing contained in the eighth schedule. That is not to say that a purchaser has no need to be, or in the present case has not been, informed of the geographical aspect of the unit which he has agreed to buy. Ordinarily one would expect him before contract to make inquiries or perhaps ask to see a plan of the building to determine its location on the land. But it is quite a different matter to suggest that the incorporation of such information is required in order to 'identify' the lot."

21. There is no statutory requirement for a registered plan in this context to delineate and quantify the area of a balcony within a lot. The probable explanation for that being done in this case is that it is the practice of the Registrar of Titles to require such parts of a lot to be delineated and given a specific area within the registered plan.[8] It is apparently considered desirable for there to be the most precise definition of the boundaries of a required lot. But it does not follow that such information is necessary for the clear identification of a proposed lot for the purposes of s 21, where the apparent concern of the legislature is that there should be no misunderstanding of the subject matter, not yet in existence, of a proposed contract of sale.

22. Secondly, the defendants' argument proceeds upon what I see as an incorrect construction of clauses 6.1 and 6.3 of the contract. The same difficulty underlies the third of the defendants' grounds for resisting this case. In the defendants' argument, clause 6.3 is to be interpreted as requiring the Lot to be constructed so that the size of the Lot or any part of the Lot was within five per cent of the figure shown in the Disclosure Statement. But clause 6.3(a) was not in terms of an obligation; rather, it was in permissive terms. It is to be read with clause 6.1 which did impose an express obligation in relation to the construction of the Lot. It obliged the plaintiff to cause both Stage 1 and (in particular) the Lot to be constructed "… substantially as shown or described in the Disclosure Statement". The apparent purpose of clause 6.3(a) is to qualify that obligation, so that the plaintiff would not be in breach of contract if Lot 1 was constructed within that five per cent tolerance. It is a different matter to say that clause 6.3(a), by implication, deems the plaintiff to be in breach if the Lot or any part of the Lot was outside that range. There is no necessity for such an implied term, to be superimposed upon the express obligations as to the construction of the Lot within clause 6.1. This contract would be efficacious without such an implied term. And the position of the purchasers was also protected by the requirements of the BCCM Act. In particular they contracted with the protection of s 214 of that Act, by which they were entitled to cancel the contract if they became materially prejudiced by some change which made the Disclosure Statement inaccurate.[9]

23. Accordingly the proposed Lot was identified for the purposes of s 21 by reference to, amongst other things, the respective areas of and within the Lot on the relevant drawing, but subject to such variations as would be consistent with the due performance of the proposed contract. In other words the proposed Lot was identified as "substantially as shown or described in the Disclosure Statement".

24. The unchallenged evidence of Mr Wallace, the Chief Executive Officer of the plaintiff, is that there is no difference to the function or amenity of this apartment in any respect from the changes to the dimensions of the balconies. This evidence was tendered over the objection of the defendants, for whom it was submitted that it was irrelevant because it was no part of their case that the value or amenity of the apartment was affected by these changes. I admitted the evidence in case it became relevant to a case of "material prejudice" under s 25 of the LSA, which at that point was foreshadowed but not pleaded by the defendants. I find that the plaintiff did cause the Lot to be constructed substantially as shown or disclosed in the Disclosure Statement in compliance with clause 6.1 and otherwise according to the contract of sale.

25. I should record that I was not persuaded by the submission for the plaintiff that the balconies did not constitute parts of the Lot for the purposes of clause 6.3(a). In my view "any part of the Lot" within that clause meant any part for which a size had been shown in the Disclosure Statement.

26. Because s 22 was not engaged, the first and second of the defendants' grounds are not established. And because there was no breach of contract by constructing the balconies outside the five per cent tolerance within clause 6.3(a), the defendants' third ground fails. There was no argument for the defendants that there was some substantial disparity between the property as described in the contract and the apartment as constructed, so as to provide a basis for refusing specific performance or, if that were to be decreed, for an order for compensation.[10] It follows that the defendants are obliged to perform the contract.

27. But should a different view be taken, it is necessary that I say something more about the facts and the arguments.

28. The plaintiff argued that if s 22 was engaged, its requirements were satisfied. It relied firstly upon the further Disclosure Statement of 27 March 2009, which as already noted, included a revised drawing showing the ultimate areas for the balconies and otherwise. On 8 April 2009 the defendants' solicitors wrote to the plaintiff's solicitors referring to "changes made to its [sic] Lot" and asking for copies of the original plans showing dimensions of the Lot including the balconies and "copies of new plans showing the dimensions of the Lot including the balcony as now shown in the Further Statement." This suggests that the defendants had noticed the changes but for some reason wanted to see more detailed design or construction plans. On 14 April 2009, the plaintiff's solicitors replied, enclosing plans with more detailed information in relation to the sizes of the rooms within the apartment. On 20 April, there was an email from a solicitor for the defendants asking questions as to those internal measurements which was answered by the plaintiff's solicitor on the next day.

29. However, the relevant plan of survey was registered on 27 April 2009. It was upon that registration that the proposed Lot became a registered lot for the purposes of s 22(1) of the LSA. The plaintiff argues that the Lot became a registered lot on 16 April 2009 upon the basis of s 175 of the Land Title Act 1994 (Qld) which provides that "[a] registered instrument forms part of the freehold land register from when it is lodged". In my view, however, that does not affect the date upon which a proposed lot becomes a registered lot for the purposes of s 22 of the LSA: otherwise the vendor would be at risk of breaching s 22 by the effective backdating of the commencement of the period in which the further statement is to be given. And this point would have assisted the plaintiff only with its alternative argument that it complied with s 22 by what occurred after 16 April 2009.

30. On any view, the disclosure statement of 27 March 2009 plainly was given prior to the proposed Lot becoming a registered lot. For whatever reason, a vendor's obligation under s 22 is expressed in terms which seem to require the required notice to be given after registration of the plan, so that this statement would not have sufficed. As to the plaintiff's alternative argument that it gave the necessary information on 21 April 2009, this information referred only to certain internal dimensions and said nothing as to the areas of the balconies. Of course the reason was that the changes in these respects had already been disclosed. In summary, had a statement under s 22 been required, none was given.

31. On the premise that s 22 required a further statement, the plaintiff was not to deliver to the defendants a "registrable instrument of transfer" and the defendants were not required to pay the outstanding purchase monies until 30 days had expired after the receipt of a statement in accordance with s 22(1) (if later than the time agreed for settlement): s 22(4). Again upon that premise, the settlement was effectively postponed until there was compliance with s 22. Section 25 permits a purchaser to avoid the contract where there has not been given a statement as required by s 22, if the purchaser is materially prejudiced by the failure to give such a statement: s 25(1). The defendants plead that the plaintiff's refusal to give a statement under s 22 has had a "serious effect" upon them in that the defendants have:

> "(a) lost their ability to consider whether the changes made to the Lot are such as to give them a right to avoid the Contract;
> [140222]
>
> (b) lost their ability to exercise the rights granted to them under the LSA;
> (d) lost their ability to consider (during the 30 day period provided) whether they have been materially prejudiced by the Plaintiff's failure to give a statement under s 22;
> (e) lost their ability to check the title as registered."[11]

But there appears to be ultimately no pleaded case that the defendants were materially prejudiced, for the purposes of s 25, by the absence of a s 22 statement. There is a plea of material prejudice upon the alternative premise that the letter from the plaintiff's solicitors of 21 April 2009 was a s 22 notice. The defendants pleaded that they were materially prejudiced for the purposes of s 25 by inaccuracies in that statement because it said nothing about the variations to the areas of the balconies. In all of this, there is no demonstrated material prejudice from which the defendants could have avoided the contract. Had such a statement been required and duly provided, it would have informed them of changes to the dimensions of the balconies, which they do not suggest had any significance for the enjoyment or value of the apartment.

32. The plaintiff argued that any right to avoid the contract was lost by the defendants electing to call for the performance of the contract by a letter from their solicitors of 5 May 2009. By that letter, they required the plaintiff to immediately deliver an executed transfer pursuant to clause 3.3 of the contract. On behalf of the defendants, it was argued that they were not put to an election as at 5 May 2009, so that they should not be regarded as having elected by that correspondence. The first of those matters might be accepted. But if they were not bound to then elect, it does not follow that there was in fact no election.

33. In Agricultural and Rural Finance Pty Ltd v Gardiner,[12] Gummow, Hayne and Kiefel JJ held that "the exercise, despite knowledge of a breach entitling one party to be discharged from its future performance, of rights available only if the contract subsists, will constitute an election to maintain the contract on foot." In this case there was no issue as to the defendants' knowledge of the relevant facts because at least by 5 May 2009 they knew that the building which had been constructed had balconies of these different areas and they knew what they had or had not received insofar as s 22 was concerned. The defendants argued that they did no more than keep open the possibility of settlement, by calling for the transfer to be provided for stamping. But in doing so they invoked clause 3.3 of the contract and thereby required the plaintiff to perform the contract. That was a right only available to them whilst the contract subsisted and in my view would have constituted an election to affirm the contract had I concluded that the defendants had a right to avoid it.

Conclusion

34. The plaintiff has established its right to specific performance. It will be ordered that the contract between the plaintiff and the defendants dated 2 July 2007 be specifically performed. I will hear the parties as to other orders, including costs.

Judgment delivered on 2 June 2010

Community schemes — Off-the-plan purchase of lot within a residential community scheme — Applicant purchaser subsequently alleged breaches of s 365 of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act — Failure to direct applicant's attention to warning statement — Failure to provide substantially complete disclosure statement under s 213 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act — Failure to properly identify the lot to be purchased under s 21 of the Land Sales Act — Failures leading to the contract being uncertain — Applicant purported to terminate the contract — Applicant sought order that she was entitled to the termination of contract — Court decided that the applicant was not entitled to termination of contract.

The applicant (purchaser) contracted to purchase an apartment in a building known as Delor Vue Apartments, a proposed lot in a residential community title scheme with the respondent (Delorain). However, subsequently after entering the contract, the applicant argued that the contract was void for uncertainty and that it had been terminated for the respondent's failure to comply with s 365(3) of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000. The applicant also argued that she was entitled to avoid the contract, or not complete it or cancel it for the respondent's non-compliance with s 21 of the Land Sales Act or s 212 or s 213 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act.

In particular the applicant claimed:

- the respondent did not direct the applicant's attention to the warning statement, information sheet and contract required by legislation, and
- it should be allowed to terminate the contract because:

  – the respondent failed to provide a substantially complete disclosure statement as the services location diagrams and exclusive use plan for lots allocated exclusive use areas of common property were not provided
  – the respondent failed to clearly identify the lot to be purchased as it incorrectly referred to the lot in the contract as Lot 51 on proposed SP 207070 which is a non-existent strata plant
  – the respondent was guilty of misrepresentation and misleading or deceptive conduct – the contract was uncertain in the absence of a building format plan in relation to the particulars of the lot and common property.

Based on the above, the applicant sought an order from the court that she was entitled to terminate the contract.

Held: applicant was not entitled to terminate the contract.

1. Based on the established facts, there had been compliance with s 365(2A)(c) of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act as there was a letter accompanying the contract which directed the applicant's attention to the appropriate information and the letter was probably delivered to the applicant's solicitors in such a form as to direct their attention to the information effectively because, when it was delivered, it was on top of the bundle.

2. The disclosure statement was substantially complete as at the day the contract was entered into and the applicant was not able to cancel the contract in reliance on s 213. The omission of the services location diagram at the time of entry into the contract was not shown to be a highly significant part of the disclosure required in this case, which was evidenced by the lack of any material prejudice claimed on behalf of the applicant.

3. The mistake in the reference to "proposed SP 207070" was irrelevant as it should not have confused the applicant and there was no evidence that it had. If the applicant wished to examine floor plans of the unit, the disclosure statement contained instructions as to how to obtain that information from the respondent.

4. On a proper reading of the contract it seemed clear that lot 51 always included the car park as part of the lot and that it was sold on that basis. That was why the diagram identified the car park with the lot number. Any omission of exclusive use areas related to other lots was irrelevant to the disclosure required to be made to the applicant. There was no evidence of material prejudice, nor was there evidence of any attempt by the applicant to terminate the contract on that basis.

5. The description of lot 51 that was supplied in the contract was sufficient. It detailed, the unit number including the fact that a car park was allocated as part of the lot, the lot number, the building number and the location in which the unit was intended to be, the floor on which the unit was intended to be located, and the concept plans and elevations contained in the disclosure statement. That information clearly identified the lot to be purchased.

6. There was no suggestion that the applicant was misled or mistaken in fact by the form of the contract or that she was ignorant of the nature and dimensions of the unit or that it was to be conveyed to her including a car park. Accordingly there has been no failure by the respondent to clearly identify the lot to be purchased and no breach of s 21(1)(a) of the Land Sales Act. That conclusion also supports the view that the contract was certain.

7. The applicant was not entitled to terminate the contract on any of the grounds advanced and the application was dismissed.

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

R W Morgan (instructed by Macrossan & Amiet) for the applicant.

G J Handran (instructed by Hickey Lawyers) for the respondent.

Before: Douglas J.

Douglas J: The applicant was the purchaser of an apartment in a building called "Delor Vue Apartments" built by the respondent Delorain Pty Ltd. The contract, made in September 2007, was for the sale of unit 51 in the apartments which was described as "Proposed Lot 51 on proposed SP 207070, as highlighted on the Identification Plan contained in the Disclosure Documents".

2. The applicant seeks declarations that the contract is void for uncertainty and that it has been terminated for failure to comply with s 365(3) of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 ("PAMDA"). As the case was argued, however, the applicant relied not on an alleged breach of s 365(3) of PAMDA but on an alleged breach of s 365(2A)(c) of that Act. She also argued that she was entitled to avoid it or not complete it or cancel it for non-compliance with s 21 of the Land Sales Act 1984 ("LSA") or s 212 or s 213 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 ("BCCMA").

The facts

3. The contract was accompanied by an identification plan contained in disclosure documents annexed to it and signed by the applicant which identified lot 51 as part of stage 3 of the development envisaged on the proposed community titles scheme land. There was no proposed "SP 207070" then in existence. There was a "proposed building plan" attached which included documents that would more properly be described as a concept plan "intended only to represent an indicative development plan for the scheme land … annexed for illustrative purposes only" and which did not "accurately fix or specify the location of buildings or the boundaries of buildings, all of the same being subject to a final survey being undertaken after the completion of all relevant civil works and landscaping works to be progressively undertaken on the scheme land and as each stage is completed." [1]

4. It was intended, apparently, that there be a concept plan set out as annexure × to schedule B of the contract but the building format plan that was annexed was not labelled with the letter "X". Nonetheless it can be described as a concept plan and was said by the respondent to be a community management statement pursuant to s 66(1)(f) of the BCCMA illustrating the proposed development by concept drawings. It included illustrative diagrams highlighting lot 51 as part of "Building J" and associated with concept drawings showing the number "51" in two rectangles admittedly referable to the proposed unit and an associated car park. One significant criticism made of it was that it was insufficiently detailed for the purposes of the Act.

5. A preliminary issue was whether a first attempt by the applicant to terminate the contract in reliance on s 365 of PAMDA was effective. Then there was some criticism made of the plan scheduled to the contract that it failed to identify whether the car park was part of the title to the lot or the subject of an exclusive use agreement. Another criticism was that the community management statement did not include services location diagrams. The documentation was said to be inadequate in failing to inform the proposed lot holder properly of the details of the exclusive use areas of the common property. These issues were said to result in the contract being uncertain. A final issue related to the applicability of s 212 of the BCCMA.

6. The applicant purported to terminate the contract at first on 24 November 2008 for the respondent's alleged failure to comply with s 365(2A)(c) of PAMDA by not directing the applicant's attention to the warning statement, information sheet and contract required by that legislation. That can be done by including a paragraph in an accompanying letter giving the appropriate direction. There was an accompanying letter including the appropriate direction in a bundle of documents delivered in an envelope to the applicant's solicitors on 20 September 2007. The probabilities are that the accompanying letter was the first document, on top of the others or included behind a clear plastic cover sheet and enclosing the contract. That was how Ms Danielle Cairns, the lady who prepared the documents, normally organised them and she was aware of the importance of providing that document. The document was headed “Cover Page Statement” and the vendor’s copy was received by it in that form and in that order.

7. The envelope was delivered to the reception of the applicant’s solicitors but by the time the documents were handed to Ms Davies, the relevant solicitor, it is likely that the covering letter had been inserted loosely into the middle of the bound contract. Ms Davies did not see it until she took a photocopy of the contract on 16 November 2008 when she found it in that position. It seems likely that the receptionist may have placed the letter in that position. No receptionist was called on behalf of the applicant to contradict that view of what probably occurred.

8. Accordingly, it is my view that there has been compliance with s 365(2A)(c) of PAMDA as there was a letter accompanying the contract which directed the applicant’s attention to the appropriate information and, if it matters, the letter was probably delivered to the applicant’s solicitors in such a form as to direct their attention to the information effectively because, when it was delivered, it was on top of the bundle.

The second attempt at termination of the contract

9. The attempt to terminate the contract by the letter of 24 November 2008 was rejected by the respondent’s solicitors on 2 December 2008. On 28 January 2009 the applicant’s solicitors sent a further letter purporting to terminate the contract on a number of other grounds, namely:

[140226]

- failure to provide a substantially complete disclosure statement as required pursuant to s 213 of the BCCMA;
- failure to clearly identify the lot to be purchased contrary to s 21 of the LSA permitting the contract to be avoided pursuant to s 25 of that Act;
- misrepresentation and/or misleading or deceptive conduct;
- uncertainty in the absence of the building format plan in relation to the particulars of the lot and common property.

10. On 10 February 2009 the respondent’s then solicitors, who acted in the transaction but not in this litigation, sent a further disclosure statement to the applicant’s solicitors. The previous concept drawings attached to the contract had shown lot 51 in building “J”. The building in the new drawings was labelled “H” but was in a similar position on the diagram. The drawings attached were more detailed scale drawings than the earlier concept drawings, identified areas of common property and again identified the lot’s garage area by reference to the lot number 51.[2] The area of lot 51 was also detailed on a scale drawing.[3] The lot proposed to be conveyed included the garage as part of the lot.

Services location diagrams

11. Section 66(1)(d) of the BCCMA requires the community management statement envisaged by that legislation to include, among other things, one or more services location diagrams for all service easements for the standard format lots included in the scheme and for the common property for the standard form lots. That was not done in the disclosure documents originally provided in this case but they did appear in the further disclosure statements.[4]

12. Section 66(1)(f) also requires the community management statement to explain the proposed development and illustrate it by concept drawings. That seems to me to have been done here in the annexures in the disclosure statements.

13. Section 213 of the BCCMA also requires the disclosure statement to be given by the seller to the buyer to be accompanied by the proposed community management statement and to be substantially complete.[5] Section 214 permits variation of a disclosure statement by the giving of a further statement with a right in the buyer to cancel the contract if he or she is materially prejudiced. Section 217 also permits a buyer to cancel a contract if materially prejudiced because of a difference or inaccuracy in the information disclosed in the disclosure statement. There was no suggestion in this case that the applicant was materially prejudiced by the omission to include the relevant service location diagrams.

14. The issue, therefore, appears to be whether the omission of the services location diagrams prevented the disclosure statement from being substantially complete in the context where the concept plan was intended expressly to represent only an indicative development plan and to be subject to a final survey and no material prejudice has been shown. It also seems likely that a services location diagram was not then required by s 66(1)(b) of the BCCMA as the scheme was not one for which development approval had been given after the commencement of that paragraph.

15. In my view the disclosure statement was substantially complete and did not permit the applicant to cancel the contract. Section 213(7) is also important in this context. Section 213(6) permits a buyer to cancel a contract not already settled if there has not been compliance with s 213(1) requiring the seller to give the buyer a disclosure statement. Section 213(7) then provides:

> "The seller does not fail to comply with subsection (1) merely because the disclosure statement, although substantially complete as at the day of the contract was entered into, contains inaccuracies."

16. In my view this disclosure statement was substantially complete as at the day the contract was entered into and the applicant was not able to cancel the contract in reliance on s 213. The omission of the services location diagram at the time of entry into the contract was not shown to be a highly significant part of the disclosure required in this case, which was evidenced by the lack of any material prejudice claimed on behalf of the applicant.

Lack of exclusive use plan

17. Another complaint of the applicant was that there was no exclusive use plan for lots allocated exclusive use areas of common property. That was so in that that part of the disclosure statement said "nil" but that was said to be deliberate because no such plan had then been prepared and it was anticipated that there would be no exclusive use areas. That view had changed by the time the further disclosure statements were sent and they included an exclusive use plan for the common property.[6]

18. In further written submissions made after the hearing the applicant argued that the disclosure statement did not adequately "identify the lot to be purchased" (within the meaning of s 21 of the LSA) because it did not state whether the car park allocation for proposed lot 51 was freehold or the subject of an exclusive use by-law (applicable to common property); whereas the contract provided that the applicant had the "exclusive use and enjoyment" of the car park shown in the disclosure plan.

19. Further or in the alternative, the applicant submitted that the disclosure statement was not "substantially complete" because it failed to contain a by-law concerning the exclusive use of common property pertaining to car parks contrary to s. 213 of the BCCMA. The further argument was made that the disclosure statement was non-compliant unless it accurately depicted, by floor plan, the area of the lot to be purchased as against the common property of the scheme land.

20. It is convenient to deal with those further submissions when I consider whether the contract was certain.

Section 21 of the LSA and certainty of the contract

21. Section 21(1)(a) of the LSA requires a written statement to be given to a person entering upon a purchase of a proposed lot clearly identifying the lot to be purchased. A statement is also required to be given by a prospective vendor under s 213 of the BCCMA and if it incorporates the matters prescribed by s 21(1)(a) to (d) of the LSA then there is sufficient compliance with s 21(1); see s 21(6).

The misdescription of "proposed SP 207070"

22. The misdescription of the proposed lot 51 as being on "proposed SP 207070" was criticised for the applicant as a failure to identify clearly the lot to be purchased because of the reference to a non-existent plan, as was the failure to include the services location diagrams to which I have already referred.

23. That there was a mistake in the reference to "proposed SP 207070" seems to me to be irrelevant as it should not have confused the applicant and there was no evidence that it had. If the applicant wished to examine floor plans of the unit, the disclosure statement contained instructions as to how to obtain that information from the respondent.[7]

Was the car park identified as part of the lot conveyed?

24. The concept plan included in the disclosure statement clearly identified lot 51 and its location in the development whose address also appeared on the contract. As the respondent submitted, the lot to be purchased was identified on p 3 of the disclosure statement. It was, by reference to the cover page, "proposed lot 51" in Delor Vue Apartments, which the contract relevantly identified as including a car park. The concept plans enclosed identified the car park as being situated in the same building, depicted by a smaller rectangle. The concept plans accompanying the disclosure statement identified the location of apartment 51 in Building J and car park 51 as situated on the ground floor (or basement) of the apartment building housing apartment 51. The basement of that building contained a car park for each of the apartments. All apartments in the scheme, except for units 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17 and 20, had car parks situated under their respective buildings; whereas apartments 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17 and 20 each had exclusive use areas.

25. The applicant's further written submission under the BCCMA appears to be that the contract did not make it clear that the car park was freehold and that, if it was not freehold, it must have been an allocation of common property for exclusive use and therefore should have been disclosed in, and should have been subject to a by-law under the disclosure statement to comply with s 213 of the BCCMA. The respondent submitted, however, that the car park was part of the lot to be purchased, as evinced by the allocation of lot 51, so that the applicant's submission was incorrect. The respondent submitted that the car park for proposed lot 51 was not an exclusive use area. It was part of lot 51.

26. The respondent also submitted that, therefore, the exclusive use areas referred to by applicant in her further written submissions, at by-law 44 (Sch C) and in Sch E, as being omitted are irrelevant because they did not apply to lot 51. The exclusive use areas contained in Schedule E to the further disclosure statement, it was submitted, were self-evidently areas allocated for "car parking" entitlements for units which did not have basement allocations, being apartments 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17 and 20.

27. The respondent also submitted that this aspect of the applicant's argument proceeded on the fallacy that a developer is required to disclose both exclusive use areas which have not yet been ascertained and by-laws intended to apply to such areas whether or not they come into existence and that nothing in the BCCMA or the applicable regulations required exclusive use areas to be identified and applicable by-laws to be included in relation to areas which have not yet been ascertained. Accordingly, Mr Handran for the respondent submitted that it did not follow that, because the further disclosure statement made provision for exclusive use areas of common property for car parking entitlements for apartments 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17 and 20, that the original disclosure was inaccurate.

28. On a proper reading of the contract it seems clear to me that lot 51 always included the car park as part of the lot and that it was sold on that basis. That was why the diagram identified the car park with the lot number. Accordingly, I agree with the respondent's submissions that any omission of exclusive use areas related to other lots was irrelevant to the disclosure required to be made to the applicant. Those submissions included an argument that the contention advanced by the applicant would, if accepted, have the consequence that a developer could not, following the original disclosure, allocate exclusive use areas of common property without the risk of vitiating any contracts previously procured. The respondent submitted that the better view, and the one more consistent with the consumer protection objects of the BCCMA, was that such exclusive use areas may be allocated subsequently and disclosed by a further disclosure statement, which, upon receipt, entitles the buyer to vitiate the contract only in the event of "material prejudice". Here, the respondent submitted accurately that there was no evidence of material prejudice, nor was there evidence of any attempt by the applicant to terminate the contract on that basis.

29. The applicant also relied on directions for the preparation of building format plans prepared by the registrar of titles for a specification of what should be done to identify lot numbers and common property and argued that it was essential to delineate the common property at the stage of entry into the contract. Mr Morgan, for the applicant, submitted that the concept plans in the first disclosure statement annexed to the contract did not delineate the common property. He argued, by reference to a text book that the common property should be defined with certainty in the contract by reference to a draft of the full survey plan prepared from the proposed building plans.[8] The author recognises, however, that in many cases draft floor plans are all that are available.[9]

30. The applicant's argument that the identification of the lot required the contract to refer to a building format plan in the disclosure statement in the form required at the time of registration of a plan of subdivision does not appeal. The form of the plan required for registration of the plan of subdivision is that required when the lot defined in the plan is created. It is not required for the recording of the community management scheme which is a distinct step apparently performed in practice immediately upon registration of the relevant plan.[10]

31. The decisions referred to in the applicant's further written submissions of Mirvac Queensland Pty Ltd v Horne[11] and Hudpac Corporation Pty Ltd v Voros Investments Pty Ltd[12] do not require a different conclusion. In Mirvac, Applegarth J said:[13]

> "[34] The defendants rely on the floor area of the lot as recorded on Sheet 10 as something that identified the lot to be purchased. There is a compelling argument that the floor area of the unit is part of 'describing and identifying the precise compartment of air space into which the constructed unit will fit'. The competing argument is that the Disclosure Statement sufficiently and clearly identified the lot without reference to its floor area and that the lot was clearly identified by its lot number, the floor on which it was intended to be and the marking on the drawing that indicated its location on that floor and its shape.
> [35] Although it may be possible to clearly identify a lot to be purchased without recording its total floor area in a statement provided under s 21 (a matter which I am not required to decide in order to determine this application) in a case such as this where the floor area is included on the plan, the better view is that the description of its floor area serves to clearly identify the lot in conjunction with other matters such as the lot number, the floor on which it is located and its position in the building."

32. Although there was no floor plan here disclosing the detail provided in Mirvac, it seems to me that the description of lot 51 that was supplied in this contract was sufficient, a possibility that Applegarth J recognised. It detailed, as the respondent submitted, the unit number including the fact that a car park was allocated as part of the lot, the lot number, the building number and the location in which the unit was intended to be, the floor on which the unit was intended to be located, and the concept plans and elevations contained in the disclosure statement. In my view, that information clearly identified the lot to be purchased.

33. In this context the applicant also submitted that the absence of a floor plan made it impossible to determine what the relationship of the lot was with the common property. The submission was that a disclosure statement was non-compliant unless it accurately depicted, by floor plan, the area of the lot to be purchased as against the common property of the scheme land. Attention was paid to the absence of plans depicting details such as stairwells and common walls.

34. The respondent's submission to the contrary was that there was nothing in the BCCMA or the LSA which necessitated detailed survey plans being incorporated at the initial disclosure stage or any other plans showing the internal structures of the building in which the proposed apartment is to be built such as common walls or stairwells. That seems to me to be correct and consistent with the fact that the Act envisages that units such as these may be sold “off the plan” with purchasers’ rights protected by provisions such as s 214 of the BCCMA.

Has there been any relevant misrepresentation?

35. Under the general law relating to any innocent misrepresentation such as may have occurred here either in respect of the reference to “proposed SP 207070” or in respect of any omission of the details of exclusive areas related to other units, it is necessary to consider whether, if the truth had been made known to the applicant, it would have caused her not to enter into the contract. There is no evidence before me that these matters would have caused the applicant to take such a course.

36. It is also important to bear in mind that, as the respondent argued, all that is required to be clearly identified by s 21(1)(a) of the LSA is the lot to be purchased. The rights and obligations in respect of common property are delineated to some extent in the community management statement required by s 66 of the BCCMA. There was no suggestion that the applicant was misled or mistaken in fact by the form of the contract or that she was ignorant of the nature and dimensions of the unit or that it was to be conveyed to her including a car park. Accordingly, in my view, there has been no failure by the respondent to clearly identify the lot to be purchased and no breach of s 21(1)(a) of the LSA. That conclusion also supports the view I take that the contract is certain.

37. Section 212 of the BCCMA provided at the relevant time:

> “212 Cancellation for not complying with basic requirements
>
> (1) A contract entered into by a person (the seller) with another person (the buyer) for the sale to the buyer of a lot intended to come into existence as a lot included in a community titles scheme when the scheme is established or changed must provide that settlement must not take place earlier than 14 days after the seller gives advice to the buyer that the scheme has been established or changed.
> (2) Also, when the contract is entered into, there must be a proposed community management statement for the scheme as established or changed.
> (3) The buyer may cancel the contract if—
>
> (a) there has been a contravention of subsection (1) or (2); and
> (b) the contract has not already been settled.” (Emphasis added.)

38. This contract did not contain a provision “that settlement must not take place earlier than 14 days after the seller gives advice to buyer that the scheme has been established or changed” but cl. 26.1 had a similar effect:[14]

> “26.1 When a separate title for the Lot has issued and the Seller is of the opinion that all other Conditions Precedent contained in clause 3.1 will be satisfied within fourteen (14) days, the Seller may give notice to the Buyer calling for settlement. Settlement is due fourteen (14) days after the Seller gives that notice.”

39. The possible draconian consequences that attended the right to cancel the contract for the omission of the provision required by s 212 in its form at the time of this contract were recognised by the Court of Appeal in Bossichix Pty Ltd v Martinek Holdings Pty Ltd where McMurdo J said:[15]

> “[21] The alternative submissions for the respondent were not persuasive. In my view s 212 does not require the employment of the very words of the section. It requires the contract to have the effect prescribed by the section. No purpose would be served by requiring the exact words to be used. The purpose of s 212 is not to inform the buyer of its legal rights. Rather the purpose is to inform the buyer that the scheme has been established and to allow a sufficient time prior to settlement for the buyer to make any necessary searches > and enquiries. (It must be said that those purposes could have been just as well served by a provision which simply deemed every relevant contract to contain such a term, rather than providing a right of cancellation where the relevant term is not drafted according to the statute. In the present case, for example, there would seem to be no prospect that the buyer could have been prejudiced by the non-compliance with the statute such that it should be necessary to make the contract voidable by one side)."

40. Parliament acted swiftly to remedy the possible problems suggested by the unsuccessful argument in that case by legislating on 22 June 2009 in the form suggested by his Honour to deem such a term to be included in such contracts and to have retrospective effect applying to legal proceedings started but not decided before the commencement of the amending legislation unless the contract had been lawfully cancelled before 5 June 2009 for failure to make provision as required by the then existing s 212(1).[16]

41. In this case, the originating application sought a declaration that the applicant was entitled to cancel the contract by reason of non-compliance with s 212 of the BCCMA but no attempt to cancel the contract on that basis was made until after 5 June 2009 by a facsimile from the applicant's solicitors dated 12 June 2009 but received by the respondent's then solicitors on 16 June 2009.

42. Accordingly the contract was not cancelled before 5 June 2009. Even had there been a purported cancellation before that date it would not have been effective legally because cl. 26.1 of the contract had the effect prescribed by the section.[17]

Conclusion and orders

43. Consequently, it is my view that the applicant was not entitled to terminate the contract on any of the grounds advanced and her application should be dismissed with costs.

VIDLER v COMMISSIONER OF TAXATION

(2010) LQCS ¶90-160; Court citation: [2010] FCAFC 59

Federal Court of Australia (Full Court)

Judgment delivered on 1 June 2010

Community schemes — Vendor sold two blocks of vacant land — Vendor did not pay GST on either sale — Whether vacant land can be input taxed as sales of "residential premises" under GST Act — Meaning of "residential premises" — Whether land intended to be occupied, and capable of being occupied, as a residence or for residential accommodation — A New Tax System (Goods and Services Tax) Act 1999, s 40-65(1), 195-1.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Federal Court (Stone J) in Vidler v Commissioner of Taxation [2009] FCA 1426.

The registered proprietor (Vidler) sold two blocks of vacant land. Both blocks of the vacant land were zoned by the council as residential. Vidler did not account for GST in respect of either of the sale because in his view, they were input taxed as sales of residential properties.

The Commissioner of Taxation subsequently issued assessments to Vidler imposing GST in respect of both sales. Vidler's objections were disallowed by the Commisioner, and the Administrative Appeals Tribunal affirmed the Commissioner's objection decision (Vidler v Commissioner of Taxation (2009) 74 ATR 520). Vidler then appealed to the Federal Court claiming that both the properties were "residential premises" as defined in s 195-1 of the A New Tax System (Goods and Services Tax) Act 1999 as they were "intended to be occupied, and [were] capable of being occupied, as a residence for residential accommodation".

At first instance, Stone J applied her own reasoning in South Steyne Hotel Pty Ltd v Federal Commisioner of Taxation (2009) 71 ATR 228 at [31] that the blocks of vacant land did not satisfy the definition of "residential premises" as each lacked the necessary element of shelter and basic living facilities. Stone J dismissed Vidler's appeal on the ground that the "capable of being occupied" limb of the definition [of residential premises] was not satisfied and, accordingly, did not need to address the "intended to be occupied" limb.

Vidler appealed against this decision claiming that the primary judge erred in holding that land was not "residential premises" unless erected on that land were some shelter and basic living facilities.

Held: appeal dismissed, vacant land not residential premises under GST Act.

1. The Full Court agreed with Stone J's conclusion; the properties here were vacant land and at the time of the sales, no shelter or basic living facilities were present on the land. Neither parcel of land was "residential premises" within the meaning of s 40-65(1) of the GST Act because it was not capable of being occupied as a residence or for residential accommodation.

2. As was the case at first instance, the Full Court concluded that it need not determine whether, at the time of sale, the properties were "intended to be occupied, as a residence or for residential accommodation".

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

I S Young (instructed by Robert Richards & Associates) for the appellant (Vidler).

D F C Thomas (instructed by Australian Taxation Office Legal Services) for the respondent (Commissioner of Taxation).

Before: Sundberg, Bennett and Nicholas JJ.

Editorial Comment: The Full Court in this case concluded that the definition of "residence" connoted a dwelling, abode or house in which a person may reside (irrelevant as to the permanent or long term element of the residence). The word "occupied" in the phrase "capable of being occupied" connoted living within or inhabiting a structure. It is quite artificial to speak of someone "occupying" vacant land "as residence or for residential accommodation". Further, the word "capable" in the expression "capable of being occupied, as a residence or for residential accommodation" must involve more than an ability in the future (ie after the supply) to make the land or building suitable for occupation as a residence or for residential accommodation. It is suggested that there is a requirement of more than utilities to be connected on the land to satisfy the Court that the land is "capable" of being occupied. The Full Court agreed with the Commissioner's contention "that it would be absurd if the mere existence of a tap in the middle of an acre of vacant land transforms the land into 'residential premises' for the purposes of the GST Act".

In the case of South Steyne Hotel, Stone J concluded (with which Edmonds J, Emmett J and Finn J in the Full Court agreed in the appeal of the case) that:

> "… it is not difficult to see why the Full Court [in Marana Holdings Pty Ltd v Federal Commissioner of Taxation (2004) 141 FCR 299] reached the conclusion that an element of permanent or long term occupation was necessary before premises could be described as residential premises. As indicated above, however, the definition of "residential premises" in the GST Act now required the term of the occupation or intended occupation to be disregarded. In my view, that leaves as necessary only the element of shelter and basic living facilities such as are provided by a bedroom and bathroom".

Sundberg, Bennett and Nicholas JJ:

Background

1. The appellant purchased land at Gledston Street, North Booval in Ipswich in August 2004 for $1,000,000 and sold it in December 2004 for $2,350,000. The land comprised 2.7 hectares of vacant land and was zoned residential low density. It was connected to the electricity supply but not to the gas, water or sewerage, although access to these services was available at the boundaries of the land.

2. The appellant purchased land at Gladstone Road, Sadliers Crossing in Ipswich in May 2004 for $175,000 and sold it in April 2005 for $285,900. Access to electricity, water and sewerage was available, but the services were not in fact connected.

3. The appellant did not pay goods and services tax (GST) in relation to either sale because, in his opinion, they were input taxed as sales of residential premises. On 30 June 2006 the respondent (the Commissioner) issued notices of assessment of GST for each sale: $122,727 on Gledston Street and $10,081 on Gladstone Road. The appellant's notices of objection were disallowed, and the Administrative Appeals Tribunal affirmed the Commissioner's objection decisions. The appellant's appeal to this Court was dismissed: Vidler v Commissioner of Taxation (2009) 74 ATR 520. The present appeal is from that decision.

Legislation

4. The question before the Tribunal and later the primary judge was whether vacant land, such as the Gledston Street and Gladstone Road land, is "residential premises" for the purposes of s 40-65(1) of the A New Tax System (Goods and Services Tax) Act 1999 (Cth) (GST Act).

5. Section 40-65(1) of the GST Act provides in part that:

> "A sale of real property is input taxed, but only to the extent that the property is residential premises to be used predominantly for residential accommodation (regardless of the term of occupation)."

6. The expression "residential premises" is defined in s 195-1 as:

> "land or a building that:
> (a) is occupied as a residence or for residential accommodation; or > (b) is intended to be occupied, and is capable of being occupied, as a residence or for residential accommodation;
> (regardless of the term of the occupation or intended occupation) and includes a floating home."

7. The context in which the above provisions operate is as follows. The GST Act distinguishes between taxable supplies and those that are not taxable: s 9-5. A person who makes a taxable supply is liable for GST in respect of that supply: s 9-40. The person may be entitled to input tax credits for things acquired or imported to make the supply: Divs 11 and 15. Supplies that are GST-free or input taxed are not taxable supplies and GST is not payable on them: s 9-5. If a supply is GST-free, any entitlement to an input tax credit for things acquired or imported to make the supply is not affected: s 38-1. However, if a supply is input taxed, there is no entitlement to an input tax credit for things that are acquired or imported to make the supply: ss 11-15 and 15-10.

8. The circumstances in which a supply is GST-free or input taxed are found in Divs 38 and 40 respectively. Under s 9-30(1):

> "A supply is GST-free if:

(a) it is GST-free under Division 38 or under a provision of another Act; or
(b) it is a supply of a right to receive a supply that would be GST-free under paragraph (a)."

9. Under s 9-30(2):

"A supply is input taxed if:

(a) it is input taxed under Division 40 or under a provision of another Act; or
(b) it is a supply of a right to receive a supply that would be input taxed under paragraph (a)."

10. Section 40-65(1), which is set out at [5], is an example of a supply that is input taxed under Div 40.

Primary judge

11. The question before the primary judge was whether the two properties were "intended to be occupied, and [were] capable of being occupied, as a residence or for residential accommodation" within par (b) of the definition of "residential premises". In holding that they were not capable of being so occupied, her Honour applied what she had said about par (b) in South Steyne Hotel Pty Ltd v Federal Commissioner of Taxation (2009) 71 ATR 228 (South Steyne) at [31]:

"With these [dictionary] meanings in mind it is not difficult to see why the full court [in Marana Holdings Pty Ltd v Federal Commissioner of Taxation (2004) 141 FCR 299] reached the conclusion that an element of permanent or long-term occupation was necessary before premises could be described as residential premises. As indicated above, however, the definition of 'residential premises' in the GST Act now requires the term of the occupation or intended occupation to be disregarded. In my view, that leaves as necessary only the element of shelter and basic living facilities such as are provided by a bedroom and bathroom."

12. The primary judge said that on appeal (South Steyne Hotel Pty Ltd v Commissioner of Taxation (2009) 180 FCR 409) all members of the Court agreed with the conclusion expressed in the above passage.

13. The primary judge applied South Steyne to the facts as follows at [13]:

"Given that the Gledson Street and the Gladstone Road land were not occupied at the time of sale, if they are to fall within the definition of residential premises they must, at that time, have been capable of providing some shelter and basic living facilities. In terms of the facilities available there was no material difference between the two properties; both were vacant land; electricity, water and sewerage services were available in both cases even if not actually connected at the time. With minor differences that are presently irrelevant, both properties were zoned 'residential'. It may well be that zoning permitting residential occupation is necessary for land or a building to be capable of providing shelter and basic living facilities but it is not sufficient. Neither the Gledson Street land nor the Gladstone Road land provided any element of shelter and basic living facilities."

Her Honour dismissed the application on the ground that the "capable of being occupied" limb of the definition was not satisfied, and accordingly did not need to address the "intended to be occupied" limb.

The appeal

14. The sole ground of appeal is that the primary judge erred in holding that land is not "residential premises" as defined unless erected on that land is some shelter and basic living facilities.

15. In Marana Holdings Pty Ltd v Commissioner of Taxation (2004) 141 FCR 299 (Marana) the appellants had purchased a motel in 2002. Soon after settlement they obtained council approval to use the premises as residential apartments and applied to convert the motel to strata title lots. The former motel rooms were converted into apartments. After the strata title conversion was approved, one of the apartments was sold. The Commissioner regarded the sale as a taxable supply. The appellants challenged this on the ground that the sale should be regarded as input taxed under s 40-65 of the GST Act. At the relevant time the section was as follows:

"(1) A sale of real property is input taxed, but only to the extent that the property is residential premises to be used predominantly for residential accommodation.
(2) However, the sale is not input taxed to the extent that the residential premises are:

(a) commercial residential premises; or
(b) new residential premises other than those used for residential accommodation before 2 December 1998."

The expression "residential premises" was defined as

"land or a building that:

(a) is occupied as a residence; or
(b) is intended to be occupied, and is capable of being occupied, as a residence; and includes a floating home."

It is not necessary to set out the definition of "new residential premises".

16. The Full Court examined numerous dictionary definitions of "reside", "residence" and "residential". At [26] their Honours said that both "reside" and "residence" have the connotation of permanent, or at least long-term commitment to dwelling in a particular place. At [31] they said that the Macquarie Dictionary's three meanings of "residential" stress the relationship between "residential" and "residence", suggesting the aspect of permanent or long-term occupation. At [57] the Court stated its conclusion as to the meaning of "residential premises" in s 40-65:

"Nothing in the GST Act suggests that the expression 'residential premises' should have any meaning other than that adopted by Beaumont J at first instance. It includes premises which are occupied as a residence, or intended to be, and capable of being so occupied. In that context the word 'residence' has the meaning attributed to it by the various dictionary references, involving a degree of permanent or long-term commitment to the occupation of the premises in question."

17. At [44]-[51] the Court examined several decisions of courts in England to the effect that "residential accommodation" encompassed lodging, sleeping or overnight accommodation irrespective of the duration of the occupation. The Court rejected this more ample understanding of the word "residence" in s 40-65.

18. As a result of the Full Court's decision in Marana, s 40-65 was amended so as to assume its present form. Two changes were made to the definition of "residential premises". The first was to insert the expression "regardless of the term of the occupation or intended occupation" after pars (a) and (b). The second was to add the words "or for residential accommodation" in pars (a) and (b).

19. The effect of these amendments on what had been said in Marana was examined by Stone J at first instance in South Steyne. The description of "residential rent" that was in question in South Steyne (s 40-35) is in part as follows:

"(1) A supply of premises that is by way of lease, hire or licence … is input taxed if:

(a) the supply is of residential premises (other than a supply of commercial residential premises …)."

Stone J held that the supply was of residential premises and not of commercial residential premises, and thus was input taxed.

20. After observing that it was plain from the amendments themselves and from the explanatory memorandum to the bill effecting them that the amendments were designed to displace the Marana holding that the words "residential" and "residence" were limited to extended or permanent occupation, Stone J went on at [29] to say:

"While the Marana amendments remove the particular difficulty that confronted the taxpayer in Marana, the necessity for some degree of permanence or long-term commitment to the occupation of premises was only one aspect of the concept of residential premises. There is nothing in the Marana amendments that detracts from other aspects of the court's reasoning in that case. In particular, it is still helpful to consider the meanings of the words 'reside' and 'residence', disregarding however the need for any element of permanence or long-term occupation. The question is, taking out those elements, what is left of the concepts."

21. Having reviewed the dictionary definitions summarised in Marana at [20]-[30], Stone J said that what was left after the excision was "only the element of shelter and basic living facilities such as are provided by a bedroom and bathroom": at [31]. Her Honour went on to say at [35] that the amendment of the definition to include "residential accommodation" picked up the effect of the English decisions that had been rejected in Marana. We need not pursue this issue because, although important in South Steyne, it is not significant to the outcome of the present case.

On appeal Edmonds J expressly approved Stone J's approach recorded at [20]-[21]: 180 FCR 409 at [82], [84] and [85]. Emmett J, with whom Finn J agreed, said at [30] that Stone J made no error in the conclusion she reached.

22. The appellant submitted that the Full Court "have not necessarily accepted her Honour's dictum" that the element of shelter and basic living facilities survived the post-Marana amendments. We do not agree. Edmonds J explicitly agreed with Stone J on this point. At [82] his Honour paraphrased her process of reasoning. This included:

> "(1) The definition of 'residential premises' now requires the term of the occupation or intended occupation to be disregarded: [31].
> (2) That leaves as necessary only the element of shelter and basic living facilities > such as are provided by a bedroom and bathroom: [31]."
> [140236]

His Honour then described Stone J's process of reasoning on whether the residential premises were "commercial residential premises": [83].

23. Edmonds J said at [84]-[86]:

> "It followed from the reasoning processes in [82] and [83] above that the primary judge concluded that, for the purposes of the GST Act, the apartments in the Hotel were 'residential premises' to be used predominantly for residential accommodation and not 'commercial residential premises' and that, in consequence, their supply 'by way of lease' attracted the operation of s 40-35 and such supplies were input taxed.
>
> I agree with her Honour's conclusion, generally for the reasons she has given. I hesitate to go as far as her Honour and conclude that the apartments are 'residential premises', 'even without regard to the inclusion of "residential accommodation" ': [34]. In my view, whether accommodation is 'settled' or 'established' involves elements which go beyond mere duration of occupation. Nevertheless, I totally agree with her Honour that the inclusion of 'residential accommodation' puts the matter beyond doubt: [35].
> In my view, there is no error in the primary judge's characterisation of the first category of supply."

24. To reach the conclusion that the supply of each apartment was input taxed, Stone J had to decide that the supply was of residential premises and was not a supply of commercial residential premises. Emmett J agreed with her Honour on both issues. What his Honour regarded himself as deciding is made clear at [16]:

> • if an apartment is not residential premises as defined in the Dictionary in s 195-1, the supply is taxable;
> • if the apartment is residential premises but is commercial residential premises, the supply is also taxable;
> • if the apartment is residential premises but is not commercial residential premises, then the supply is input taxed.

Thus, said his Honour, "the categorisation of the Grant Category depends upon the definitions of residential premises and commercial residential premises".

25. Emmett J then recorded that Stone J concluded that the apartments were residential premises to be used predominantly for residential accommodation and were not commercial residential premises, with the consequence that their supply by way of lease attracted the operation of s 40-35 so that the supply was input taxed. Having set out the definition of "residential premises", and noting the post Marana amendments, his Honour said at [21]:

> "The term of occupation is to be disregarded. However, the requirement as to the purpose of the occupation must still be satisfied. Thus, there must still be occupation as a residence or an intention to occupy as a residence. Similarly, there must be occupation for residential accommodation or an intention to occupy for residential accommodation."

This is only a partial rendering of the definition of "residential premises", which his Honour set out in full at [18].

26. His Honour disposed of the positive requirement in s 40-35 at [22] by saying:

> "Whether or not the apartments are occupied as a residence, they are occupied for residential accommodation, particularly when one is to disregard the term of the occupation or intended occupation."

He then dealt with the negative requirement of s 40-35, and concluded that the apartments were not commercial premises. It was in that context that his Honour said at [30] that Stone J made no error in concluding as she did, and that the supply of each apartment was input taxed. In other words his Honour agreed with Stone J's conclusion on "residential premises" and "commercial residential premises". If Emmett J had not agreed with her Honour's reasons for reaching her conclusion on those two issues, he would have said so.

27. If, as we think is the case, Emmett and Finn JJ approved of Stone J's view of the continuing relevance of Marana (as Edmonds J did), we should follow that approach. If only

Edmonds J did, we should express our own view, which is that we agree with Stone J's conclusion as to the continuing relevance of Marana recorded at [20]-[21] for the reasons her Honour gave at [29]-[31].

28. The properties here in question were vacant land. At the time of the sales no shelter or basic living facilities were present on the land. As appears from the definitions collected in Marana at [21] and [23], "residence" connotes a dwelling, abode or house in which a person may reside. The permanent or long term element was a superadded requirement found in the dictionaries. The removal of that element by the post-Marana amendments undoubtedly left standing the requirement of "residence", namely a dwelling, abode or house in which a person may reside. That was what Emmett J was saying in the passage quoted at [25]. It is clear from par 15.2 of the Explanatory Memorandum that accompanied the amendments that the legislature was unhappy only with those elements of Marana which it identified as the decisions that:

> • the sale of a unit, which was previously a room in a motel, was the sale of 'new residential premises' and therefore subject to the goods and services tax (GST); and
> • the terms 'reside' and 'residence' connoted a permanent, or at least long-term, commitment to dwelling in a particular place.

The post-Marana amendments were designed to remove those aspects of the Full Court's decision. There is no indication in the amendments or in the explanatory memorandum of an intention to remove the requirement of residence identified by the Full Court, namely the notion of a dwelling, abode or house in which a person may reside, other than the superadded element of permanent, or at least long term, commitment to dwelling in a particular place.

29. In Re Alcan Australia Ltd; Ex parte Federation of Industrial Manufacturing and Engineering Employees (1994) 181 CLR 96 at 106-107 the High Court affirmed the proposition that where Parliament repeats words which have been judicially construed, it is taken to have intended the words to bear the meaning already judicially attributed to them. The Court said that the presumption was considerably strengthened in that case by the legislative history of the Act in question there. See also Electrolux Home Products Pty Ltd v Australian Workers' Union (2004) 221 CLR 309 at [81]. In the present case, by analogy, in disagreeing with some aspects of Marana but not with others, the Parliament is to be taken to have approved the latter.

30. The expression "residential accommodation", added by the post-Marana amendments, connotes "lodging, sleeping or overnight accommodation": South Steyne at [37]. Each of the English cases this amendment was designed to pick up involved premises in which lodging, sleeping or overnight accommodation took place – a study bedroom at a residential college, a building to accommodate students for short term courses and "living accommodation".

31. In our view the word "occupied" in the phrase "capable of being occupied" connotes living within or inhabiting a structure. It is, we think, quite artificial to speak of someone "occupying" vacant land "as a residence or for residential accommodation".

32. Marana at [63] makes clear what is obvious in any event, that land or a building must be capable of being occupied as a residence or for residential accommodation at the time of supply. The appellant's submission that par (b) of the definition is "apt to deal with future use of land", that is to say where the construction of shelter or living facilities is to occur in the future, is at odds with the requirement that land or a building have the required character at the time of supply, in this case the date of sale. Conformably with this, the word "capable" in the expression "capable of being occupied, as a residence or for residential accommodation" must involve more than an ability in the future (ie after the supply) to make the land or building suitable for occupation as a residence or for residential accommodation. Thus in Marana it was held that a motel was not capable of being occupied as a residence at the time of supply because it lacked the qualities necessary for such occupation and had to be modified so as to be suitable for use as a residence.

In support of his contention that vacant land can be "residential premises", the appellant stressed the introductory words of the definition – "land or a building". He submitted that in view of the disjunctive "or", there is no warrant to:

- read "land" to mean land with a building on it because a building is separately mentioned;
- read "land or a building" as if it was "land with a building"; or
- read "land … that is intended to be occupied and is [so] capable" as requiring existing shelter or living facilities.

34. It is common ground that "land", as defined in s 22(1)(c) of the Acts Interpretation Act 1901 (Cth), includes vacant land. However we do not agree that the appellant's exposition recorded at [33] is a fair reading of the definition as a whole. The definition is not concerned with "land" in the abstract, but with "land that …is capable of being occupied as a residence or for residential accommodation". Thus the meaning of "land", which in the abstract or in other contexts will include vacant land, may be modified by its context. See for example CIC Insurance Ltd v Bankstown Football Club Ltd (1997) 187 CLR 384 at 408. For the reasons already given, vacant land is not land that is capable of being occupied as a residence or for residential accommodation.

35. The appellant placed reliance on the explanatory memorandum which accompanied the bill that amended the definition of "residential premises" to require that land or a building be "capable of being occupied, as a residence". Paragraphs 1.167 and 1.168 of the memorandum state:

> "1.167 … The new definition requires that for land to be considered residential premises it must be intended to be occupied, and capable of being occupied, as a residence. That is, it is permissible to use the land for residential purposes and the land has some facilities ordinarily associated with residences (i.e. water and sewerage).
> 1.168 The amendment ensures that the sales of vacant residential land will not be input taxed under section 40-65. The supply of land is not input taxed where it is:
> - vacant residential land;
> - commercial land; or
> - new residential premises."

36. The appellant sought to derive from these paragraphs that land is “capable” of being occupied as a residence, even if it is vacant, if it is able to be connected to water and sewerage facilities. He submitted that the word “permissible” in par 1.167 should be understood as referring to “intended to be occupied” in par (b) of the definition; in the sense that if land is permitted to be used for a residence, it is “intended” to be so used. He contended that par 1.168 refers to “bare” vacant land, while par 1.167 refers to “serviced” vacant land.

37. This is a very strained reading of the paragraphs. In the definition’s original form it required only that the land or building be “occupied or intended to be occupied as a residence”. The amendment requiring that the land or building be “capable” of being occupied is an additional requirement. The second sentence of par 1.167 is explaining that additional requirement. Two elements are mentioned: it must be permissible (ie lawful) to use the land for residential purposes, and the land must have some facilities ordinarily associated with residency. However, par 1.167 does not mention vacant land, and the paragraph provides no foundation for a distinction between “bare” vacant land and “serviced” vacant land. The context shows that the memorandum’s use of the word “land” is shorthand for “land or a building”. Furthermore, in our view par 1.168 shows that vacant land (even with such services laid on) does not come within the definition. Reading pars 1.167 and 1.168 together, we regard the memorandum’s reference to the two facilities (water and sewerage) ordinarily associated with residences, as contemplating the existence on the land of structures serviced by water and sewerage, and not, as the appellant would have it, merely the ability to connect vacant land to such services. We agree with the Commissioner’s contention that it would be absurd if the mere existence of a tap in the middle of an acre of vacant land transforms the land into “residential premises” for the purposes of the GST Act. We note in passing that it was common ground that “(ie water and sewerage)” in par 1.167 of the memorandum should be understood as examples of “facilities”, and that “utilities” is a more apt description of the provision of water and sewerage.

Conclusion

38. The properties here in question were vacant land. At the time of the sales no shelter or basic living facilities were present on the land. No error has been shown in the primary judge’s conclusion that at the time of sale neither parcel of land was “residential premises” within the meaning of s 40-65(1) of the GST Act because it was not capable of being occupied as a residence or for residential accommodation. As was the case at first instance, we need not determine whether, at the time of sale, the properties were “intended to be occupied, as a residence or for residential accommodation”.

(2010) LQCS ¶90-161; Court citation: [2010] QSC 193

Supreme Court of Queensland

Judgment delivered on 4 June 2010

Community schemes — Contract for sale — Where a purchaser signed a contract to purchase a residential property — Where the purchaser signed a warning statement before the offer was signed in accordance with the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 — Where the vendor subsequently amended the special conditions in the offer — Whether the amendments amounted to a counter-offer — Whether the purchaser had to sign a new warning statement before signing the amended contract — Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000, s 365, 366D, 367.

The applicant (purchaser), wishing to purchase a residential property from the respondents (vendor), signed an offer to purchase in the form of an REIQ contract. Attached to the proposed contract as its first pages was a Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 (the Act) warning statement. The warning statement was signed by the purchaser before the offer was signed, in accordance with the Act.

The vendor negotiated some significant amendments to the contract and a second proposed contract was subsequently handed to the purchaser for execution. However, the purchaser did not sign a new warning statement before signing the contract. Instead, the warning statement from the first contract was attached as the first pages to the second contract. The purchaser duly paid the requisite deposit.

The purchaser later delivered notice withdrawing the offer made by the contract under s 365(3) of the Act. The purchaser then gave notice under s 367 of the Act to terminate the contract. The vendor subsequently elected and purported to terminate the contract.

The vendor filed an originating application seeking declarations that the sale agreement had been validly terminated. In these proceedings, the purchaser sought, among other things, orders that the vendor's originating application be dismissed and that it be entitled to recover the deposit. The purchaser argued that it was entitled to do so because:

- after being handed the second contract, it did not sign the warning statement (contrary to s 366D of the Act)
- the copy of the second contract given to it did not have attached to it a warning statement which complied with the Act (contrary to s 365(2) of the Act).

The vendor countered that s 366D of the Act did not apply, noting that the section only applies where the proposed relevant contract is given to a buyer for signing. The vendor submitted that their agent handed the second contract to the purchaser "for initialling changes" as opposed to "for signing". The vendor also argued that there was only a "single evolving offer which morphed into the relevant contract".

Held: for the purchaser.

1. Even though the proposed relevant contracts were similar, the vendor's required changes to the first contract were significant to the extent that this constituted a separate contract. The initial special conditions were not accepted by the vendor and acceptance must be unqualified. The changes to the special conditions and the inclusion of new terms constituted a counter-offer. In other words, the proper characterisation of the second contract was that it was a new offer made in light of the vendor's counter-offer and thus was a different contract.

2. The warning statement "is intended to be a warning applicable to the proposed relevant contract then under consideration" (as per Wall DCJ in Rice v Ray [2009] QDC 275). The proposed relevant contract under consideration was the second contract.

3. The provisions of s 366D(3) of the Act therefore applied to the second contract, requiring the purchaser, once handed the documentation, to sign the warning statement before signing the contract. The omission to do that was a breach of s 366D(3) and, therefore, the warning statement attached to the second contract was of no effect. Consequently, the purchaser had a right to terminate the contract at any time before it settled and was entitled to a refund of the deposit paid.

Before: Martin J.

Editorial comment: Although this case does not involve a purchase of a residential lot in a community scheme, it is still relevant to practitioners in terms of preparation of contracts for sale. It highlights the importance of strict adherence to procedures required under the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act (PAMDA) when it comes to providing a contract for sale to a potential purchaser. Here the court has taken the view that changes to the contract required by the vendor constituted a separate contract altogether and as such required the vendor to reissue a further warning statement to the purchaser to comply with PAMDA.

Martin J: On 9 March 2009 Gary Doolan and Leigh Doolan ("the Doolans") filed an originating application in which they sought, among other things, declarations:

> (a) that the written agreement of 10 October 2007 for the sale of property at Hope Island ("the property") from them to Rothmont Projects Pty Ltd ("Rothmont") had been validly terminated by them; and > (b) that they were entitled to forfeit the deposit of $330,000.

2. The application before the Court, though, is by Rothmont in which it seeks, among other things, orders that the Doolans' originating application be dismissed and that it be entitled to recover the deposit.

Background

3. The facts in this dispute (apart from a question relating to one aspect of the conduct of the Doolans' real estate agent) are non-contentious. The chronology of the relevant events is as follows:

6 October 2007	Rothmont signed an offer to purchase the property in the form of an REIQ contract. It was created by the seller's agent. It contained special conditions. It had a Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 ("PAMD Act") warning statement attached to it as the first pages. The warning statement had been signed by Rothmont before the offer was signed.
9 October 2007	The Doolans responded to the proposed contract with some amendments to the special conditions. Rothmont agreed to some of the proposed amendments.
10 October 2007	A second proposed contract, containing the amended special conditions, was given to the Doolans for signing. Rothmont did not sign a new warning statement before it signed the contract. The warning statement which had been attached to the 6 October documents was attached as the first pages of this set of documents. Rothmont and the Doolans signed the second proposed contract. The Doolan's real estate agent left a copy of those documents for Rothmont. Rothmont paid a deposit of $165,000. The Settlement Date was set for 1 October 2008.
16 October 2007	The Doolans' agent sent a copy of the executed contract to Rothmont's solicitor.
8 April 2008	Rothmont paid the balance deposit of $165,000, bringing the total deposit paid to $330,000.
1 October 2008	Rothmont delivered notice withdrawing the offer made by the contract under s 365(3) of the PAMD Act. The Doolans said that the contract was "still on foot". No election was made by the Doolans to terminate the contract under cl 9.1 of the terms of the contract.
2 October 2008	Rothmont gave notice under s 367 of the PAMD Act terminating the contract.
3 October 2008	The Doolans elected and purported to terminate the contract.

The applicant's case

4. It was argued on behalf of the applicant that it was entitled to judgment because, on the uncontested facts:

> (a) Rothmont did not sign the warning statement attached to the contract after being handed that document on 10 October 2007 for signing (contrary to s 366D of the PAMD Act); and > (b) The copy of the executed contract given to Rothmont on 10 October 2007 did not have attached to it a warning statement which complied with the PAMD Act (contrary to s 365(2) of the Act).

Summary judgment

5. In order that judgment can be given under r 293 of the Uniform Civil Procedure Rules the applicant must establish that the plaintiff has no real prospects of success. While the interests of justice usually require that the real issues be investigated at trial (Gray v Morris [2004] 2 Qd R 118), that interest will be satisfied where the court is persuaded that there is no need for a trial or that the plaintiff has no real prospect of succeeding. In this case, says the applicant, where there is no dispute as to facts and the rights of the parties turn on questions of law, the court is in a position where it is able to give judgment without the need for a trial provided the appropriate test is satisfied.

Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000

6. The applicant relies upon the technical and confusing provisions of Chapter 11 of the PAMD Act. The PAMD Act regulates wide areas of activity. Its long title is: "An Act to comprehensively provide for the regulation of the activities, licensing and conduct of resident letting agents, real estate agents, pastoral houses, auctioneers, property developers, motor dealers and commercial agents and their employees, to protect consumers against particular undesirable practices, and for other purposes."

7. The sections relevant to this application are to be found in Chapter 11 "Residential property sales". This part of the PAMD Act has been the subject of criticism (much of it deserved) since it was first enacted in 2000. It has been the subject of amendments and is also the subject of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers and Other Legislation Amendment Bill 2010 in which it is proposed that more changes be made to Chapter 11. In Hedley Commercial Property Services Pty Ltd v BRCP Oasis Land Pty Ltd [2008] QSC 261, Fryberg J referred to one part of Chapter 11 — s 365 — as a confused mess. He said, at [83]: "No construction of it can be devised which conforms with the canons of interpretation and the accepted theory of the law of contract." I agree.

8. It is impossible to define the statutory intent with any sense of confidence. A reader's understanding of this part of the PAMD Act is not assisted by the organisation of Chapter 11 itself.

9. For reasons which are not immediately apparent the provisions of Chapter 11 deal with events in an order which is the reverse of that which would ordinarily apply in dealings between prospective vendors and purchasers.

10. I will, in an attempt to decipher the requirements of this legislation, consider the sections of Chapter 11 out of the order in which they appear so that they might better be applied to the facts of this case.

11. First, though, it is important to note the purposes of Chapter 11 which are set out in s 363:

> "363 Purposes of Ch 11
>
> The purposes of this chapter are—
> (a) to give persons who enter into relevant contracts a cooling-off period; and
> (b) to require all proposed relevant contracts or relevant contracts for the sale of residential property in Queensland to include consumer protection information, including a statement that a relevant contract is subject to a cooling-off period; and
> (c) to enhance consumer protection for buyers of residential property by ensuring, as far as practicable, the independence of lawyers acting for buyers; and > (d) to impose obligations on seller's agents, under part 5, about the advertising and availability of information on sustainable housing measures for the sale of particular residential property." (emphasis added)

12. In s 364:

> (a) a "relevant contract" is defined as a contract for the sale of residential property in Queensland, other than a contract formed on a sale by auction. (A "proposed relevant contract" is not defined.)
> (b) a "warning statement" is defined as a statement in the approved form that includes the information mentioned in section 366D(1).

13. A warning statement is required to be given. The manner in which it is to be given depends upon the manner in which a proposed relevant contract is given. In this case, s 366B applies and it provides:

"366B Warning statement if proposed relevant contract is given in another way

(1) This section applies if a proposed relevant contract is given to a proposed buyer or the proposed buyer's agent for signing in a way other than by electronic communication.
(2) The seller or the seller's agent must ensure that the proposed relevant contract has attached a warning statement and, if the proposed relevant contract relates to a unit sale, an information sheet with the warning statement appearing as its first or top page and any information sheet appearing immediately after the warning statement.

(3) If the proposed relevant contract does not comply with subsection (2)—

(a) if the seller gave the proposed relevant contract — the seller; or
(b) if the seller's agent gave the proposed relevant contract — the seller's agent; commits an offence.

Maximum penalty — 200 penalty units.
(4) If the seller or the seller's agent hands the proposed relevant contract to the proposed buyer, the seller or the seller's agent must direct the proposed buyer's attention to the warning statement and, if the proposed relevant contract relates to a unit sale, the information sheet and any disclosure statement.

Note—

A contravention of this subsection is not an offence. Under section 366D(3), in the circumstances of this subsection a warning statement is of no effect unless it is signed by the buyer.
(5) Subsection (6) applies if the seller or the seller's agent gives the proposed relevant contract to the proposed buyer or the proposed buyer's agent in a way other than by handing the proposed contract to the proposed buyer or the proposed buyer's agent.
(6) The seller or the seller's agent must include with the proposed relevant contract a statement directing the proposed buyer's attention to the warning statement and, if the proposed relevant contract relates to a unit sale, the information sheet and any disclosure statement.

Maximum penalty — 200 penalty units.
(7) It is a defence to a prosecution for an offence against subsection (3) or (6) for the seller or the seller's agent to prove that the seller or the seller's agent gave notice to the proposed buyer or the proposed buyer's agent under section 366C." (emphasis added)

14. The contents of a warning statement and the prerequisites for its effectiveness are set out in s 366D:

"366D Content and effectiveness of warning statements

(1) The warning statement for a proposed relevant contract or relevant contract must include the following information—

(a) the relevant contract is subject to a cooling-off period;
(b) when the cooling-off period starts and ends;
(c) a recommendation that the buyer or proposed buyer seek independent legal advice about the proposed relevant contract or relevant contract before the cooling-off period ends;
(d) what will happen if the buyer terminates the relevant contract before the cooling-off period ends;

(e) the amount or the percentage of the purchase price that will not be refunded from the deposit if the relevant contract is terminated before the cooling-off period ends;
(f) a recommendation that the buyer or proposed buyer seek an independent valuation of the property before the cooling-off period ends;
(g) if the seller under the proposed relevant contract or relevant contract is a property developer, that a person who suffers financial loss because of, or arising out of, the person's dealings with a property developer or the property developer's employees can not make a claim against the claim fund.

(2) A statement purporting to be a warning statement is of no effect unless the words on the statement are presented in substantially the same way as the words are presented on the approved form.

Example—

If words on the approved form are presented in 14 point font, the words on the warning statement must also be presented in 14 point font.

(3) If the seller or the seller's agent hands a proposed relevant contract to the buyer for signing, a warning statement is of no effect unless the buyer signs the warning statement before signing the proposed relevant contract.

(4) If a proposed relevant contract is given to the buyer for signing and subsection (3) does not apply, a warning statement is of no effect unless the buyer signs the warning statement.

(5) For subsection (3), the buyer's signature on the warning statement is taken to be proof that the buyer signed the warning statement before signing the proposed relevant contract unless the contrary is proved." (emphasis added)

15. It is appropriate to deal with the requirements of s 366D now. Section 366D(3) deals with a situation where the seller or seller's agent is in physical proximity to the proposed buyer — the seller "hands" the proposed relevant contract to the buyer for signing. This is to be contrasted with the requirements of s 366D(4) which covers all other circumstances such as the mailing or faxing of the documents. It is only when the proposed relevant contract is "handed" to the buyer that the buyer must sign the warning statement before signing the proposed relevant contract. This can be contrasted with s 366D(4) which only requires that the proposed relevant contract be signed. The use of the word "before" is not to establish some time limit (such as "immediately before") but to emphasise that the purpose of the warning statement is to warn the buyer before the contract is signed, not after.

16. If the warning statement is not given or if it does not comply with s 366D then the buyer's rights are provided for in s 367:

"367 Buyer's rights if a warning statement is not given or is not effective

(1) This section applies if—

(a) a warning statement requirement for a proposed relevant contract is not complied with and notice is not given under section 366C; or
(b) a warning statement is of no effect under section 366D(2), (3) or (4).

(2) The buyer under a relevant contract may terminate the relevant contract at any time before the relevant contract settles by giving signed, dated notice of termination to the seller or the seller's agent.

(3) The notice of termination must state that the relevant contract is terminated under this section.

(4) If the relevant contract is terminated, the seller must, within 14 days after the termination, refund any deposit paid under the relevant contract to the buyer.

Maximum penalty — 200 penalty units.
(5) If the seller, acting under subsection (4), instructs a licensee acting for the seller to refund the deposit paid under the relevant contract to the buyer, the licensee must immediately refund the deposit to the buyer.
(6) If the relevant contract is terminated, the seller and the person acting for the seller who prepared the relevant contract are liable to the buyer for the buyer's reasonable legal and other expenses incurred by the buyer in relation to the relevant contract after the buyer signed the relevant contract.
(7) If more than 1 person is liable to reimburse the buyer, the liability of the persons is joint and several.
(8) An amount payable to the buyer under this section is recoverable as a debt.
(9) In this section—warning statement requirement, for a proposed relevant contract, means—

(a) if the proposed relevant contract is sent by fax — a requirement to comply with section 366(2) or (3); or
(b) if the proposed relevant contract is given by electronic communication other than fax — a requirement to comply with section 366A(2) or (3); or
(c) if the proposed relevant contract is given in a way other than by electronic communication — a requirement to comply with section 366B(2), (4) or (6)." (emphasis added)

17. Section 365 sets out the circumstances in which the parties to a relevant contract will be bound. It relevantly provides:

[140245]

"365 When parties are bound under a relevant contract

(1) The buyer and the seller under a relevant contract are bound by the relevant contract when—

(a) for a relevant contract, other than a relevant contract relating to a unit sale — the buyer or the buyer's agent receives the warning statement and the relevant contract from the seller or the seller's agent in a way mentioned in subsection (2); or

(2) For a relevant contract, other than a relevant contract relating to a unit sale, the ways are —

(c) by being handed or otherwise receiving the documents mentioned in paragraph (a)(ii) and (iii) other than by electronic communication, if—

(i) the warning statement is attached to the relevant contract and appears as the first or top page; and
(ii) the seller or the seller's agent directs the attention of the buyer or the buyer's agent to the warning statement and the relevant contract.

Example of receipt other than by electronic communication—

• post

Examples of how attention may be directed—

• by oral advice

• by including a paragraph in an accompanying letter

(3) Without limiting how the buyer may withdraw the offer to purchase made in the contract form, the buyer may withdraw the offer at any time before being bound by the relevant contract under subsection (1) by giving written notice of withdrawal, including notice by fax, to the seller or the seller's agent.

(5) If a dispute arises about when the buyer and the seller are bound by the relevant contract, the onus is on the seller to prove when the parties were bound by the relevant contract.
(6) In this section—

buyer's agent includes a lawyer or licensee acting for the buyer and a person authorised by the buyer or by law to sign the relevant contract on the buyer's behalf."

18. At common law, a purchaser who had signed the proposed contract would be bound once the vendor had signed the contract. Section 365 imposes more requirements. Notwithstanding that the purchaser has already signed the warning statement and the contract, the purchaser is not bound unless:

(a) the warning statement (which has already been signed) is attached to the relevant contract as the first or top page; and
(b) his or her attention is directed to the warning statement (which has already been signed).

19. I have referred above to the Property Agents and Motor Dealers and Other Legislation Amendment Bill 2010. That Bill was introduced in March this year and, it appears from the Bill, that it is intended that the Act commence on 1 October this year. The objectives of the Bill are to amend Chapter 11 of the PAMD Act and make parallel amendments to the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 in order to simplify the processes for the delivery and presentation of contracts for the sale of residential property. In the Explanatory Note accompanying the Bill the following appears:

"The PAMD Act requires sellers to continuously draw a buyer's attention to the warning statement, and the information sheet and disclosure statement if a unit sale, and to attach those documents to the proposed contract in a strict order. The documents must be delivered in that same order every time the buyer receives a copy of the proposed contract during the negotiation process. Different delivery methods for electronic or facsimile transmissions are prescribed and different processes must be followed. If not followed exactly by the seller, a right to terminate arises for the buyer at any time before settlement. The courts have confirmed this interpretation.

Once the contract is signed by the seller, the buyer is only bound by the contract when the documents are delivered to the buyer in the same strict order. Buyers can therefore claim they are not bound by a contract simply because it was not delivered in a particular way, although under contract law principles, the concept of offer, acceptance and communication of the acceptance is enough to bind parties to the contract. The cooling-off period commences when the parties become bound by the contract."

20. Of course, it is not a legitimate method of interpreting an Act to simply adopt what is effectively said by a legislature about a statute in a later enactment. Although the Acts Interpretation Act 1954 allows reference to a wide range of material in order to interpret a statute, an Act of Parliament which amends an earlier Act in order to achieve the purpose which was always intended does not require that Parliament's interpretation of the earlier Act be applied. Parliament "does not alter the law by merely betraying an erroneous opinion of it". (See Deputy Federal Commissioner of Taxation (SA) v Elder's Trustee and Executive Co Ltd (1936) 57 CLR 610 at 625–6.) This must apply with greater force to an Explanatory Note to a Bill which has not yet become law. Until the Bill is passed, the will of Parliament is not known. I have referred to the construction of the current Act referred to in the explanatory note for the Amendment Bill of 2010 because it is, in my opinion, correct.

21. The PAMD Act is highly technical and prescriptive in this area. The result of its faithful application may require actions which appear to be impractical. But, the practical consequences of the legislation have been recognised in MNM Developments Pty Ltd v Gerrard [2005] 2 Qd R 515 where de Jersey CJ said:

> "[16] The context of the requirement set up by s 366 tells against a liberal interpretation of that requirement. Chapter 11 of the Act, in which s 366 occurs, contains a detailed set of technical requirements plainly directed to ensuring a form of consumer protection for purchasers of residential property. One of the objects of the Act, stated in its preamble, is 'to protect consumers against particular undesirable practices'. That protection extends, in cases like these, to giving a purchaser a right to terminate even for quite technical contraventions, and whether or not the purchaser has suffered any material disadvantage. See, for example, s 366(4)(a), s 366(4)(b) (including the example) and s 367(2)."

22. The result, then, is that there is an unnecessary complexity and technicality to these provisions, but while that construction might make negotiations somewhat more complicated, it does not frustrate them to such an extent that another interpretation should be found. In the words of de Jersey CJ in MNM Developments:

> "[20] It would be an exaggeration to suggest that construction would frustrate commercial dealings. In the first place, the convenience of commercial dealings is, implicitly, only subsidiary. Of primary importance is the protection of purchasers of residential property."

The "contracts"

23. In the circumstances of this matter the PAMD Act requires that the relevant contract/s (or proposed relevant contract/s) be identified and characterised. In order to do that it is necessary to return to the events of early October 2007.

24. On 6 October 2007 the seller's agent handed Rothmont a proposed contract for signing. It had, as its first page, the necessary warning statement. Rothmont signed the warning statement first and then the proposed contract. The documents were submitted to the Doolans but they did not accept the offer. Through their agent, the Doolans proposed some changes to the special conditions contained within the offer document.

25. The proposed changes were significant. The Doolans requested substantial amendments to the special conditions. They included:

- Clause 1 (Settlement) of the 6 October 2007 contract was removed;

[140247]

- Clause 1.3 was inserted, which provided that the deposit would be non-refundable and the Buyer would have no claim against the Seller or Deposit Holder;
- Clause 2.1(a) (Buyer's right to assign) was substantially amended;
- Clause 3.4 (Buyer causing damage to the property before settlement) was inserted;
- Clause 7 (Deletion of parts of Terms of Contract) was added, and removed Terms of Contract as to matters of inspection, inquiry and surveying;
- Clause 8 (Confidentiality) was amended;
- Clause 10 (No Representations) was added;
- Clause 11 (Caveat) was added; and
- Clause 12 (Guarantee) was added.

26. Rothmont submitted that this constituted a separate contract as the initial special conditions were not accepted by the Doolans and acceptance must be unqualified (Hyde v Wrench (1840) 49 ER 132). Consequently, Rothmont argued, these changes to the special conditions and the inclusion of new terms constituted a counter-offer. In my opinion, this case falls within the description given by Bray CJ in Armour Coatings (Marketing) Pty Ltd v General Credits (Finance) Pty Ltd (1978) 17 SASR 259 where, at 277, he said: "[t]he signatory may be regarded as offering to treat on the basis of what he has signed and any additional particulars subsequently attached may amount to a counter offer by the other party needing acceptance by the first before any contract comes into existence."

27. Rothmont agreed to some of the proposed changes and, on 10 October, a new proposed contract was presented to it. In those circumstances s 366D(3) applied:

> "If the seller or the seller's agent hands a proposed relevant contract to the buyer for signing, a warning statement is of no effect unless the buyer signs the warning statement before signing the proposed relevant contract." (emphasis added)

28. There was a warning statement attached to the proposed contract in compliance with s 366B. It was the same warning statement which had been attached to the 6 October offer and which had been signed by Rothmont then. The Doolans argued that the section only applied where the proposed relevant contract is given to a buyer for signing and that, therefore, there was a triable issue as to whether the Doolan's agent handed it to Rothmont "for signing" as against "for initialling changes". I do not agree. The proper characterisation of the 10 October document is that it was a new offer made in the light of the counter-offer made by the Doolans and, thus, was a different "relevant proposed contract".

29. It was the Doolan's contention that there was only a "single evolving offer which morphed into the relevant contract" — a description used by Wall DCJ in Rice v Ray [2009] QDC 275. That cannot be accepted. While there may be situations in which it will be difficult to determine whether there has been a refusal of an offer constituted by a request for a change in the terms of an offer — for example, where only a minor and essentially irrelevant change is sought — this was not such a case. The Rothmont offer was unacceptable to the Doolans. They proposed a changed set of special conditions which were, in large part, adopted by Rothmont in the offer it made on 10 October.

30. Rothmont submitted that the warning statement referred to in s 366D(4) does not refer to a warning statement attached to an earlier proposed contract, that is, the warning statement attached to the October 6 proposed contract (see Hedley Commercial Property Services Pty Ltd v BRCP Oasis Land Pty Ltd [2008] QSC 261 at [63]–[64] and Rice v Ray [2009] QDC 275 at 8). I agree with what Wall DCJ said in Rice v Ray that the warning statement "is intended to be a warning applicable to the proposed relevant contract then under consideration". Rothmont submitted, correctly I think, that this could only mean the contract given to it for signing on 10 October 2007.

31. Although the proposed relevant contract of 6 October was similar to that of 10 October, the former had not been accepted. There were two separate, albeit related, contractual situations involving the first offer, and later, the second offer. The requirements of s 366D(3) applied to both.

A somewhat similar situation arose in Hedley Commercial Property Services Pty Ltd v BRCP Oasis Land Pty Ltd [2008] QSC 261. A submission was made to the effect that when a proposed relevant contract is given to a buyer more than once, it is sufficient if the buyer's attention is directed to the warning statement on the first occasion this occurs. I agree with the observations of Fryberg J with respect to that submission:

> "[63] … Section 366A(2) should not be construed as requiring a direction already given once to be given each time a further copy of the contract is given. Such an interpretation would be capable of producing a multitude of absurd results. The same applied where an amended copy of the contract was given to the buyer, at least where the amendments were minor and were given within a short time of each other. The proposed contract was the same proposed relevant contract.
> [64] I cannot accept that submission. While (if accepted) it may produce a sensible result in cases where only a short time elapses between the occasions on which the proposed relevant contract is given to a buyer, it might not do so in other cases. A test dependent upon the length of time between occasions when the buyer was given a proposed relevant contract would result in considerable uncertainty as to the existence of a right of termination in many cases. If such a doctrine were to be extended to cases where the contract document had undergone even minor amendment in the meantime, even greater uncertainty would result. Moreover that interpretation does not sit comfortably with the words of the section. It could hardly be suggested that if the section be complied with once, it is sufficient thereafter to ignore it. Finally, it must be remembered that the section applies only where the proposed > relevant contract is given to the buyer for signature. It does not have to be complied with where there is an exchange of drafts in the course of negotiations. When this is borne in mind some of the absurd results postulated on behalf of BRCP disappear into the realm of the improbable."

33. It follows, then, that for the purposes of this case, Chapter 11 required Rothmont to sign a warning statement (whether the one it had previously signed or another) prior to signing the proposed contract of 10 October. The omission to do that is a breach of s 366D(3) and, therefore, the warning statement attached to the 10 October contract is of no effect. A consequence of this is that Rothmont was provided with the right to terminate the contract at any time before it settled. Section 367(4) provides that if such a contract is terminated then the seller must, within 14 days after the termination, refund any deposit paid under the relevant contract to the buyer.

34. This is a conclusion I reach reluctantly. Rothmont suffered no material disadvantage by not signing the warning statement attached to the 10 October proposed contract.

35. Rothmont gave notice on 2 October 2008 and submitted that it did terminate within the time allowed in s 367(4). The Doolans argue that, as settlement had been fixed at 5.00 pm on 1 October 2008, no effective termination could take place after that time. But the contract did not settle at that time. The section refers to the time when "the relevant contract settles" not the time when it is supposed to settle. It is well known that extensions can be given to the time of settlement and the purpose of s 367(4) is, among other things, to provide that termination on this ground cannot occur after settlement. The notice of termination was given within time.

36. Other arguments were advanced by Rothmont but I need not consider them in the light of my findings above.

37. The result of Rothmont's application is that the application by the Doolans is dismissed. The deposit should be returned to Rothmont. I will hear the parties on costs and the appropriate form of orders.

Judgment delivered on 24 September 2010

Community schemes — Contract for sale of lots within community titles scheme — Buyers purported to terminate the contracts prior to settlement — Non-compliance of Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, s 212(1) — Buyers complained that the contract did not use the exact wording to inform buyers that the community titles scheme "had been established" — Seller argued that exact wording of the Act is not required to be used in the contract to comply with the Act — Primary judge agreed with seller — The seller informed the buyer of the events that cover the constituent steps for establishment of the community titles scheme and that is sufficient to comply with the Act — Buyers appealed the primary decision submitting that strict compliance with the consumer protection provisions of the Act was necessary — Court of Appeal applied the Bossichix decision and held that primary decision was correct — Advice about the dual elements of a community titles scheme (ie registration of the plan and recording of the community management statement with the Registrar) operated to inform the buyer that a scheme had been established and complied with the Act — Not necessary to use exact wording of the Act in the contract for sale — Appeal dismissed.

The appellants (a group of buyers) entered into contracts for sale of lots within a community titles scheme to be established. Pursuant to clause 8.1 of each of the contracts:

> "You must settle this contract in Cairns 14 days after the day we notify you that all of the Conditions Precedent are satisfied and you must not settle before those 14 days expire. Settlement must occur at or before 4.00pm on the fourteenth day at the place we notify, or in the absence of that notification:
> (b) if there is no mortgagee, at the office of the Seller's Solicitor."

The seller's solicitor in accordance with clause 8.1 notified each of the buyers that the Conditions Precedent of the contract had been satisfied and that settlement was due on 27 May 2008. According to the buyers, clause 8.1 did not comply with s 212(1) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act as the clause did not use the exact words used in s 212 to inform the buyers that they were not required to settle the contract until 14 days after notification by the seller that the community titles scheme had been established.

Section 212 was amended on 5 June 2009; however the amendments did not have retrospective effect in this case and the contracts were subject to the provisions of the Act prior to those amendments:

>
> (1) A contract entered into by a person (the seller) with another person (the buyer) for the sale to the buyer of a lot intended to come into existence as a lot included in a community titles scheme when the scheme is established or changed must provide that settlement must not take place earlier than 14 days after the seller gives advice to the buyer that the scheme has been established or changed.
>
> (2) Also, when the contract is entered into, there must be a proposed community management statement for the scheme as established or changed.
>
> [140250]
>
> (3) The buyer may cancel the contract if —
>
> (a) there has been a contravention of subsection (1) or (2); and
> (b) the contract has not already been settled."

The buyers purported to terminate the contracts prior to settlement and commenced proceedings seeking a declaration that pursuant to s 212 of the Act each of them had validly cancelled the contracts. Each also sought return of the deposit paid to the seller. The seller (respondent) submitted that as it was decided in Bossichix, the section at the time did not require the words of the section to be replicated within the contents of the contract to be compliant and it was sufficient if the contract provided to the effect required by the section. The primary judge at first instance agreed with the seller and held that the seller had notified the buyers of the events that cover the constituent steps for the establishment of the community titles scheme. This was sufficient to comply with s 212(1) of the Act.

The buyers appealed that the primary judge had erred in his decision as strict compliance with a consumer protection provision such as s 212 is required and if it is not expressly stated in the exact words in the contract, the consumer protection would be meaningless.

Held: Appeal dismissed, s 212 is not required to be replicated within the contract.

Applegarth J (with McMurdo P and White JA agreeing)

1. The relevant Conditions Precedent identified the dual elements for the establishment of a community titles scheme. The contract operated to inform the buyer of the matter about which s 212(1) required advice to be given prior to settlement. Advice about the dual elements of a community titles scheme operated to inform the buyer that a scheme had been established. The primary judge was correct to conclude that the contracts complied with s 212 of the Act.

2. Appeal dismissed and the appellants to pay the respondents costs of the appeal.

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

M M Stewart SC and S T Carius (instructed by Slater & Gordon) for the appellants.

M A Jonsson (instructed by Property Law Solutions) for the respondent.

Before: McMurdo P, White JA and Applegarth J.

McMurdo P: This appeal should be dismissed with costs for the reasons given by Applegarth J.

White JA: I agree with Applegarth J that s 212(1) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) does not require the exact words of the statute to be in the contract to achieve its purpose.

3. As was recognised in Bossichix Pty Ltd v Martinek Holdings Pty Ltd,[1] the purpose of s 212 is not to inform the buyer of its legal rights — they have been settled — but to inform the buyer that the scheme has been established and to allow a sufficient time prior to settlement for the buyer to make any necessary searches and enquiries. This construction is strengthened by the consequence of non compliance with s 212(1), namely, the right of the buyer to cancel the contract, even when there has been no prejudice.[2]

4. I agree with the orders proposed by his Honour.

Applegarth J: Each appellant agreed to buy a lot in a unit development "off the plan". The contract provided that the buyer must not settle before the expiry of 14 days after "we notify you that all of the Conditions Precedent are satisfied". The Conditions Precedent included "registration of the Building Plan and Community Management Statement by the registrar".

6. Section 212(1) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) ("the Act") at the relevant time required each contract to provide that settlement must not take place earlier than 14 days after the seller gives advice to the buyer that the community titles scheme in which the lot was to be included had been established. Section 24 of the Act provides that a community titles scheme is established by, firstly, the registration of a plan of subdivision for identifying the scheme land and, secondly, the recording by the registrar of the first community management statement for the scheme. A community titles scheme is established when the first community management statement for the scheme is recorded.

7. The appellants contend that their contracts did not comply with s 212(1) of the Act. The primary judge concluded that they did because the contract fixed the time for the settlement based on notification of events that cover the constituent steps for the establishment of a community titles scheme. The contract did not need to provide for advice to be given in the express terms that "the community titles scheme has been established" in order to satisfy the requirements of s 212(1) of the Act. The appellants submit that the primary judge erred in the construction and application of s 212.

Facts

8. Each of the appellants entered into a contract to purchase a lot intended to come into existence as a lot included in a community titles scheme when the scheme was established. Therefore s 212 of the Act applied to it.

9. The contract contained definitions of "Building Plan" and "Community Management Statement" and other terms. Clause 3.1 of the contract terms provided:

> "This contract is conditional on the following Conditions Precedent being satisfied on or before the Sunset Date:
> (a) completion of the Building;

(b) registration of the Building Plan and Community Management Statement by the registrar; and (d)(sic) issue of a certificate of classification under the Building Act 1975 for the Building."

10. Clause 8.1 of the contract terms governed the time for settlement. It provided:

> "8.1 You must settle this contract in Cairns 14 days after the day we notify you that all of the Conditions Precedent are satisfied and you must not settle before those 14 days expire. Settlement must occur at or before 4.00pm on the fourteenth day at the place we notify, or in the absence of that notification:

11. By letter dated 13 May 2008 the solicitors for the seller notified each buyer that the Conditions Precedent of the contract had been satisfied and that settlement was due on 27 May 2008. Prior to settlement each of the buyers purported to terminate the contract. The buyers commenced proceedings seeking declaratory and other relief. They sought a declaration that pursuant to s 212 of the Act each of them had validly cancelled the contracts. Each sought an order pursuant to s 218 of the Act that the seller repay the deposit paid to the seller's agent towards the purchase of the proposed lots. An order was made for the separate determination of the following issues:

> (a) Were the plaintiffs at liberty to rescind their contract of sale with the first defendants by reason that the terms of the said contract failed to comply with section 212 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (the Act)?
> (b) Should the first defendants return to the plaintiffs the deposit paid upon entering the said contract of sale pursuant to s 218 of the Act?

The legislation

12. Section 212 of the Act was in the following terms at the relevant time:[3]

>
> (1) A contract entered into by a person (the seller) with another person (the buyer) for the sale to the buyer of a lot intended to come into existence as a lot included in a community titles scheme when the scheme is established or changed must provide that settlement must not take place earlier than 14 days after the seller gives advice to the buyer that the scheme has been established or changed.
>
> (2) Also, when the contract is entered into, there must be a proposed community management statement for the scheme as established or changed.
> (3) The buyer may cancel the contract if —
>
> (a) there has been a contravention of subsection (1) or (2); and
> (b) the contract has not already been settled."

The reference in s 212(1) to the establishment of the community titles scheme directs attention to s 24 of the Act. Section 24 provides:

> "24 Establishment of community titles scheme
>
> (1) A community titles scheme is established by —
>
> (a) firstly, the registration, under the Land Title Act, of a plan of subdivision for identifying the scheme land for the scheme; and
> (b) secondly, the recording by the registrar of the first community management statement for the scheme.

(2) A community titles scheme is established when the first community management statement for the scheme is recorded."

A "community titles scheme" is defined by s 10(1) of the Act to mean:

(a) a single community management statement recorded by the registrar identifying land (the scheme land); and
(b) the scheme land.

A "community management statement" is defined by s 12(2) of the Act as a document that identifies land and otherwise complies with the requirements of the Act for a community management statement.

13. The provisions of the Land Title Act 1994 (Qld) governing the procedures by which a community management statement is recorded were considered in Bossichix Pty Ltd v Martinek Holdings Pty Ltd..[4] In summary, the registration of a plan of subdivision has the effect of creating the lots defined in the plan but of itself does not have the effect of creating the common property depicted in the plan. That occurs only once the plan is registered and the community management statement is recorded. Section 115K of the Land Title Act 1994 (Qld) permits the registrar to record a community management statement if, amongst other things, a request to record the statement is lodged. Section 115L(3) of the Land Title Act provides that the community management statement takes effect when it is recorded by the registrar as the community management statement for the scheme. As McMurdo J stated in Bossichix, the recording of the statement is an act which has distinct legal consequences.[5]

14. Although there is no express requirement for the registrar to record a statement immediately upon registering the relevant plan, this was said in Bossichix to be the practice of the registrar and there was good reason for this practice. Nevertheless, the two steps of registering the relevant plan and recording the community management statement are distinct. The Court in Bossichix observed that it was possible that at least by an oversight the recording of the statement might not immediately follow the registration of the plan and that a notice of registration of the plan was not the equivalent of a notice of the establishment of the scheme. This feature was critical to the decision in Bossichix in which the contract fixed the settlement date by reference to the date the seller notified the buyer that the "Building Format Plan" had been registered. The relevant clause of the contract did not have the same effect as the provision required by s 212(1), and the respondent in that case was entitled to cancel the contract.

15. The contract in this case is in different terms, but the interpretation of s 212 in Bossichix is relevant to the determination of this appeal. After concluding that the respondent was entitled to cancel the contract, McMurdo J considered and rejected an alternative submission for the respondent, and in doing so explained the purpose of s 212:

> "In my view s 212 does not require the employment of the very words of the section. It requires the contract to have the effect prescribed by the section. No purpose would be served by requiring the exact words to be used. The purpose of s 212 is not to inform the buyer of its legal rights.
> Rather the purpose is to inform the buyer that the scheme has been established and to allow a sufficient time prior to settlement for the buyer to make any necessary searches and enquiries."[6]

Holmes JA and A Lyons J agreed with the reasons of McMurdo J and each expressly agreed that compliance with s 212(1) did not necessitate the use of the precise words of the section: it would suffice if the relevant clause had the effect required by the section.[7]

The decision of the primary judge

16. After outlining the submissions of the parties, the primary judge in this case identified the issue as whether each of the contracts had the effect prescribed by s 212(1) of the Act. It was relevant that s 212(1) had a consumer protection purpose, but the primary judge observed that the manner in which that purpose had been expressed in s 212(1) was less prescriptive than other consumer protection provisions within the Act, such as those regulating disclosure statements.

17. The contractual provision in this case was unlike the provision in Bossichix that allowed the seller to fix the settlement date by reference to the registration of the relevant plan, rather than the establishment of the community titles scheme. Notice of the settlement date given under clause 8.1 of the contract in this case was on satisfaction of the Conditions Precedent which covered the registration of both the Building Plan and Community Management Statement. Technically, a community management statement is "recorded" rather than "registered", but the use of the expression "registration" instead of "recording" in clause 3.1(b) was said by the primary judge to not alter the nature of the Conditions Precedent under the contract.

18. Clause 8.1 of the contract was said to fix the time for settlement "based on notification of events that cover the constituent steps for the establishment of the community titles scheme". This was sufficient to comply with s 212(1) of the Act. It was not necessary that the notice provision in the contract require advice to be given in the express terms that "the community titles scheme has been established".

19. The conclusion reached in relation to the construction of s 212(1) of the Act meant that it was unnecessary for the primary judge to consider an additional argument of the seller that applied to some of the buyers about the content of letters of termination that made no reference to the termination of the contract being on the basis of a contravention of s 212(1). The questions posed for separate determination were each answered "no".

The appellant's submissions

20. The appellants submit that strict compliance with a consumer protection provision such as s 212 is required, and that the 14 day restriction on settlement is largely meaningless unless the consumer is expressly informed that the scheme has been established. They submit: "Only then is he or she apprised of the pertinent fact that will prompt the necessary searches and inquiries prior to settlement". The appellants concede, in the light of Bossichix, that compliance does not require the words of s 212 of the Act to be included in the contract verbatim. They submit that "some minimal and immaterial variation of the words of the statute is permissible but anything beyond this is a contravention." A substantial departure from the words of the statute was submitted to undermine the consumer protection objective of the provision.

21. The appellants further submit that the primary judge erred in concluding that it was sufficient for the contract to fix a date for settlement based on notification of events that cover the constituent steps for the establishment of the community titles scheme. For a consumer to be cognisant of the establishment of the scheme it would be necessary, at a minimum, to read clauses 8.1 and 3.1 of the contract and then move beyond the contract to consider the meaning of s 24 of the Act. The appellant submitted that the contract's compliance with s 212 should be apparent on the face of the contract without the consumer being expected to refer to s 24 of the Act so as to ascertain that the relevant conditions precedent effect the establishment of a community titles scheme.

The respondent's submissions

22. The respondent submits that the appellants' arguments overlook the fact that this Court in Bossichix has determined that the section in the form it took at the relevant time did not require the words of the section to be replicated within the contents of the contract, and that it was sufficient if the contract provided to the effect required by the section. The section did not require a contract to "state" or "specify" a particular thing, or to use a particular form of words. The section, instead, required a contract to which it applied to "provide" that settlement not take place earlier than 14 days after the seller had given advice to the buyer that the scheme had been established or changed, as the case may be. The section's purpose was submitted to be "functional rather than informational."

23. It was sufficient to satisfy s 212(1) that the clause in the contract was based on notification of all of the events that were necessary for establishment of the community titles scheme. The "functional effect" of clause 8.1 was to require that settlement not occur before the expiration of 14 days after notification was given that each of the constituent elements necessary for establishment of the relevant community titles scheme had occurred.

Did the contracts comply with s 212(1) of the Act?

24. The appellants correctly submit that the requirements of s 212(1) must be interpreted having regard to the fact that s 212 has a consumer protection purpose, and that such provisions demand strict compliance.[8] One of the Act's secondary objects is to provide "an appropriate level of consumer protection for owners and intending buyers of lots included in community titles schemes".[9] Provisions that are intended to protect consumers, like any other statutory provisions, should be construed according to their text and their context.[10] An interpretation that will best achieve the purpose of the Act is to be preferred to any other interpretation.[11] An interpretation that advances the section's purpose should be adopted even if the result is to give a buyer a right to terminate a contract for what appears to be a technical contravention that did not occasion the buyer any material disadvantage.[12]

25. The text of s 212(1) at the relevant date did not require the contract to "state" or "specify" any particular matter, unlike other provisions, for example, s 213(2) which requires a disclosure statement to "state" specified matters. Section 212(1) required the contract to "provide" that settlement must not take place earlier than a certain date, and that date was fixed by reference to the date "the seller gives advice to the buyer that the scheme has been established or changed." The statute did not require the advice to be in a particular form of words. Compliance with the statute depended upon whether the provision fixed the settlement date by reference to an event, namely the establishment of a community titles scheme. The terms of the section did not require the clause to use the expression "the establishment of the community titles scheme".

26. An interpretation that requires the contract to employ the words of the section is not necessary to achieve the purpose of the section, or the consumer protection purpose of the Act. As McMurdo J stated in Bossichix:[13]

> "No purpose would be served by requiring the exact words to be used."

27. The submission of the respondent that the section's purpose was "functional, rather than informational" over-simplifies matters. It is true that the purpose of s 212 is not to inform the buyer of its legal rights. However, the section has a purpose of providing information. As stated in Bossichix[14] :

> "the purpose is to inform the buyer that the scheme has been established and to allow a sufficient time prior to settlement for the buyer to make any necessary searches and enquiries."

The statute requires the settlement date to be fixed after the seller gives advice to the buyer that the community titles scheme has been established, but does not require that advice to use the words "community titles scheme". Bossichix is authority for the proposition that s 212 does not require those precise words to be used, and the appellants did not submit that it was wrongly decided.

28. The issue then is whether the terms of the statute and its purpose of informing the buyer that the scheme has been established are satisfied when a contract provides for settlement to not occur until 14 days after the events that constitute establishment of the community titles scheme.

In circumstances in which neither the text of s 212(1) nor its purpose requires a contract to refer in terms to the "establishment of a community titles scheme", I consider that reference to the constituent elements of registration of the relevant plan and the recording of the community management statement complies with the terms and purpose of the section. A contract that refers to the matters that, in law, establish a community titles scheme, namely the registration of the relevant plan and the recording of the community management statement, is likely to be no less informative than one that refers simply to "the establishment of the community titles scheme". Each operates to inform the buyer of an event. That event may have implications for the buyer's rights, and notification of it may encourage a buyer to make necessary searches and inquiries. Simply informing a buyer that a "community titles scheme has been established" does not inform the buyer of the practical implications of that fact (other than it being an event that governs the date for settlement) or what constitutes a "community titles scheme".

30. The section does not require the contract to spell out what a “community titles scheme” is or to outline the buyer’s legal rights. The section has the effect that a contract that complies with it will have a term that provides for settlement not to occur for at least 14 days after the buyer is advised that the community titles scheme has been established. The statute is complied with by a contract that provides for this in terms of “the establishment of a community titles scheme” or by reference to the two matters by which a community titles scheme is established.

31. Having regard to the purpose of consumer protection that is a secondary purpose of the Act and the specific purpose of s 212(1) in the form it appeared at the relevant time, a contract that serves to inform a buyer of the establishment of a community titles scheme by reference to the two matters that constitute such a scheme may be said to advance the purpose of the section. The section is concerned with the substance of the advice that the scheme has been established, not the form of words used to give that advice.

32. The appellants’ submission that a contract in a form that advises of the constituent elements for the establishment of a community titles scheme is not self-contained, requires a consumer to consider s 24 of the Act and therefore does not comply with s 212(1) is unpersuasive. It might be said with equal force that a contract that simply uses the words “community titles scheme” would require a consumer to go outside the contract and find s 24 of the Act in order to be informed about what a community titles scheme is.

33. The alternative submission of the appellants that the contract’s reference to the “registration of the Building Plan and Community Management Statement by the registrar” rather than to the “registration of the Building Plan and recording of the Community Management Statement by the registrar” is answered by the reasons of the primary judge. The use of the expression “registration” instead of “recording” in respect of the community management statement was of no consequence. The shorthand reference is clause 3.1(b) to the process of registration and recording did not alter the obvious meaning of the Conditions Precedent. The relevant Conditions Precedent identified the dual elements for the establishment of a community titles scheme. The contract operated to inform the buyer of the matter about which s 212(1) required advice to be given prior to settlement. Advice about the dual elements of a community titles scheme operated to inform the buyer that a scheme had been established. The primary judge was correct to conclude that the contracts complied with s 212 of the Act.

Conclusion

34. Contrary to the appellants’ written submissions, the primary judge did not hold that “substantial compliance” with s 212 was sufficient. The primary judge considered whether a contract that fixed the time for settlement based on notification of events that covered the constituent steps for the establishment of a community titles scheme complied with the Act. I agree with her Honour’s conclusion that it did. That conclusion had regard to the terms of s 212(1) in the form that it then appeared, which was less prescriptive than other consumer protection provisions. The primary judge’s conclusion also had regard to the purpose of s 212(1) as discussed by this Court in Bossichix. That purpose was achieved by a contract that fixed the time for settlement by reference to advice that the constituent elements for the establishment of a community titles scheme had occurred. The Act did not require additional legal advice that these matters constituted the establishment of a community titles scheme. Advice that the relevant plan had been registered and the community management statement had been recorded was effective to inform a buyer that the scheme had been established.

35. It is unnecessary to consider the respondent’s additional argument advanced by a Notice of Contention concerning the content of certain letters of termination.

36. I would order that the appeal be dismissed and that the appellants pay the respondent’s costs of and incidental to the appeal.

Judgment delivered on 10 September 2010

Community schemes — Contract for sale of lot within a community titles scheme to be established — Buyer alleged the contract does not comply with the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, s 212 — Contract Completion Date provides for two possible dates for settlement — Primary decision construction of definition of Completion Date as cumulative and not alternative — Buyer appealed decision — Court of Appeal dismissed appeal — Court to give business efficacy to construction of completion date — Contract complies with s 212 of the Act — Appeal dismissed.

The buyer (appellant) entered into a contract for the sale of a lot within a community titles scheme to be established at Airlie Beach with the developer (respondent). A year later, the plan was registered and notice was given to the buyer for settlement of the contract. The notice called for settlement on a date that was 14 days after notice had been given to the buyer that the scheme had been registered. The buyer did not complete the contract but purported to terminate it on the ground that it did not comply with s 212(1) of the Act.

Section 212 was amended on 5 June 2009; however the amendments did not have retrospective effect in this case and the contracts were subject to the provisions of the Act prior to those amendments:

>
> (1) A contract entered into by a person (the seller) with another person (the buyer) for the sale to the buyer of a lot intended to come into existence as a lot included in a community titles scheme when the scheme is established or changed must provide that settlement must not take place earlier than 14 days after the seller gives advice to the buyer that the scheme has been established or changed.
>
> (2) Also, when the contract is entered into, there must be a proposed community management statement for the scheme as established or changed.
>
> (3) The buyer may cancel the contract if —
>
> (a) there has been a contravention of subsection (1) or (2); and
> (b) the contract has not already been settled."

The relevant clauses which, according to the buyer, did not comply with s 212(1) of the Act were as follows:

Clause 7.2 provided that the conveyance of the lot and payment of the purchase price was on the "Completion Date", which was defined as:

> "Completion Date: means not less than:
>
> (a) 14 days from the Seller giving written notice to the Buyer under clause 8; or [emphasis added]
> (b) 30 days after the Contract Date."

Clause 8 was in the following terms:

> "8 COMPLETION DATE
>
> 8.1 The Seller must give the Buyer written notice within 28 days after the Seller becomes aware that the Plan and CMS have registered and a separate title for the Lot has been created.

The seller refused to accept the buyer's purported cancellation of the contract and issued proceedings for specific performance. The primary judge agreed with the seller and gave summary judgment against the buyer. The buyer appealed against the primary decision submitting that the contract clause 8 and the definition of "Completion Date" provided for two alternatives for fixing the date for settlement. Only the first complied with the requirements of s 212 of the Act but not the other. Therefore it did not comply with s 212 of the Act as the provision requires that settlement must not take place earlier than 14 days after the buyer is notified of the registration of the plan and community management statement and the scheme is established. The primary judge construed the "or" in the definition of "Completion Date" as meaning "and" so that the two elements of the definition were cumulative and not alternative.

Held: Appeal dismissed, contract complies with s 212.

Chesterman JA (with McMurdo P and Mullins J agreeing)

1. The primary judge was correct to prefer the respondent's approach. There are three reasons, the first is it gives business efficacy to the contract and harmonises the definition of "Completion Date" in clause 8 to construe "or" as meaning "and". If the appellant's construction is adopted, it can be any date after (in this case) 30 May 2008. It would leave an important date such as the date for settlement of the contract to be determined by the general law for reasonable notice to prevent the contract becoming uncertain and it is not a likely construction that a settlement date should be left to be fixed by such means.

2. The second objection to the appellant's construction of the definition of Completion Date is that it does not take into account of the fact that when the contract was entered into, the lot was still to be developed and community titles scheme to be established. On the appellant's construction of the contract, the purchaser could have called on settlement before title was issued as long as she waited one month after the contract date. It is not a likely construction of the contract that the parties intended that settlement could occur before registration of the scheme.

3. The third objection is that the appellant's construction would have invalidated the contract because the completion date would offend s 212 of the Act. The appellant is attracted to that result now but when construing the contract, the assumption is that the parties intended to be bound by their bargain, and the court endeavours where possible to construe a contract so as to validate it, not render it void. The respondent's construction, which the primary judge favoured, should be adopted.

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

J B Sweeney (instructed by Hickey Lawyers) for the appellant.

P J Roney (instructed by Macrossan & Amiet) for the respondent.

Before: McMurdo P, Chesterman JA and Mullins J.

McMurdo P: I agree with my colleagues that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

2. The construction given by Chesterman JA to "Completion Date" in s 1 of the contract between the parties, with which I agree, is also supported by the preamble to s 1:

> "In this Contract, words marked in bold have the meanings given in the particulars opposite the Items in the Reference Schedule and unless the contrary intention appears have the following meaning:"

3. It is clear when the contract is looked at as whole, as Chesterman JA explains, that "or" in the definition of "Completion Date" is not intended to have its ordinary meaning. It should be construed as "and". The primary judge's construction of the contract was plainly correct.

4. I agree with the orders proposed by Chesterman JA.

Chesterman JA: The respondent is the developer of residential land at Airlie Beach. By a written contract dated 30 April 2008 the respondent as vendor and the appellant as purchaser agreed upon the sale and purchase of proposed lot 39 in the development for a price of $654,500. The survey plan, CTS 39517, which created lot 39 was registered about a year later and notice that the plan had registered was given to the appellant on 23 March 2009.

6. Clause 7.2 of the contract provided for conveyance of the land and payment to be on "the Completion Date" which, by clause 1, was defined as follows:

> "Completion Date: means not less than:
>
> (a) 14 days from the Seller giving written notice to the Buyer under clause 8; or
> (b) 30 days after the Contract Date."

7. Clause 8 was in these terms:

>
> 8.1 The Seller must give the Buyer written notice within 28 days after the Seller becomes aware that the Plan and CMS have registered and a separate title for the Lot has been created.
> 8.2 …"

"CMS" is a reference to the "Community Management Scheme" which gave effect to the subdivision by the registration of lots pursuant to the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 ("the Act"). The notice given by the respondent to the appellant called for completion on 7 April 2009 which was a date more than 14 days after notice had been given to the appellant that the scheme had been registered. The appellant did not complete the contract but purported to terminate it on the ground that it did not comply with s 212(1) of the Act.

8.

That section provided:

> (1) A contract entered into by a person (the seller) with another person (the buyer) for the sale to the buyer of a lot intended to come into existence as a lot included in a community titles scheme when the scheme is established or changed must provide that settlement must not take place earlier than 14 days after the seller gives advice to the buyer that the scheme has been established or changed."

The section was changed by the Body Corporate and Community Management Amendment Act 2009 and the point raised in this appeal is unlikely to arise again.

9. The respondent refused to accept the appellant's purported cancellation of the contract and issued proceedings for specific performance. It applied for, and was successful in obtaining, summary judgment. The appellant's point before the learned primary judge and on appeal was that the contract by clause 8 and the definition of "Completion Date" provided two alternatives for fixing the date for completion. Only the first complied with the requirements of s 212 of the Act. The consequence was that the contract did not provide that settlement:

> "must not take place earlier than 14 days after the seller gives advice … that the scheme has been established …"

and was accordingly void for illegality.

10. The primary judge met the appellant's objection by construing, in effect, "or" as meaning "and" in the definition of "Completion Date" so that the two elements of the definition were cumulative and not alternative. On this reading of the contract the completion date was that date fixed by not less than 14 days notice and which must be a date more than 30 days after the contract date.

11. His Honour said:

> "If that definition (of completion date) were to be construed according to its grammatical structure and the frequent sense of the word "or" as separating alternatives, the contract might be thought to accommodate the possibility that the vendor could insist on completion once 30 days had elapsed after the contract date. But the contract cannot mean that.
>
> The vendor cannot insist on completion without giving the notice for which clause 8.1 provides.
>
> The heading to clause 8 and the reference in the definition of 'completion date' to a date not less than 14 days from the clause 8.1 written notice signify that, to call for completion, the vendor must give a written notice that specifies a date for completion that meets two requirements: It must be given within 28 days after the vendor becomes aware that the relevant community title scheme is established. It must also nominate a date for completion that is not less than 14 days from the giving of that notice.
> On this view, the reference in paragraph (b) of the completion date definition to '30 days after the contract date' does not express an alternative. Rather, it conveys a cumulative requirement that is designed to ensure that in no circumstance will a purchaser be obliged to complete until 30 days after the contract date. It caters for such a contingency as the plan and CMS might be registered very soon after the contract is made and confers an additional measure of protection against requiring a purchaser to complete too hurriedly.
> In other words, in the definition of 'completion date', or, in effect, means 'and'."

12. The appellant submits that the judgment is affected by two errors. The first is that there was no evidence from the terms of the contract itself or the circumstances surrounding its making which might indicate that the parties were mistaken in the choice of words and that when they used "or" in the critical definition they did not intend it to have its ordinary meaning. There was, says the appellant, "no warrant to construe 'or' as 'and' and the contract did not comply with s. 212(1)." The appellant stresses that the contract is a pro-forma agreement for the sale of proposed lots in a development, and in the task of construction:

> "The court is … left with the words of the document. If … plain and unambiguous the court must give effect to them even though the result may appear one sided or even unreasonable."

13. This general proposition may be accepted. The appellant, however, necessarily and correctly accepts that one can find many cases in which in both contracts and statutes "or" and "and" have been given interchangeable meanings, or one is read as meaning the other.

14. The appellant refers to the judgment of Blackburn J in Re The Licensing Ordinance (1968) 13 FLR 143 in which his Honour (146–7) determined that those cases fall into two categories. In fact the cases discussed by his Honour were not those where the two words are interchanged but cases in which "and" has been read as meaning "or". His Honour said:

> "The first category is that of cases where, if 'and' was given its natural meaning, the result was so extraordinary … 'an absurdity or unintelligibility' … that in order to make sense of the provision the court was obliged to say that it must read the word 'and' as if it had been 'or'. The cases in the second category were those in which there was a list of items, the items being joined by 'and' and the list being governed or affected by words which showed that the list was a list of alternatives."

The case has no particular relevance to the present appeal.

15. Of more relevance is the judgment of Lord Salmon in Federal Steam Navigation Co v Department of Trade and Industry [1974] 1 WLR 505 at 523–4. His Lordship said:

> "… I do not suppose that any two words in the English language have more often been used interchangeably than 'and' and 'or'. However unfortunate or incorrect this practice may be, many examples of it are to be found in all manner of documents and statutes. There are many reported cases which turn upon whether, in its particular context, the word 'or' is to be read conjunctively or the word 'and' disjunctively.
>
> There is high authority for the view that the word 'or' can never mean 'and' although it is sometimes used by mistake when 'and' is intended: see Sir George Jessel MR in Morgan v Thomas and MacKinnon J in Brown & Co v T & J Harrison. On the other hand, there is also the high authority of Bankes and Atkin LJJ, on appeal in Brown & Co v T & J Harrison, that 'or' is quite commonly and grammatically used in a conjunctive sense. In Sutherland Publishing Co Ltd v Caxton Publishing Co Ltd MacKinnon LJ was able pungently to restate the contrary view which he had expressed 11 years previously. The Oxford Dictionary seems to support Sir George Jessel MR and MacKinnon LJ.
>
> I do not, however, attach any real importance as to whether the one school of thought or the other is right on this interesting grammatical point. In Brown & Co v T & J Harrison, the Court of Appeal agreed with MacKinnon J as to the effect of the relevant statutory provision. MacKinnon J reached his conclusion by holding that the word 'or' should be substituted for the word 'and'. The Court of Appeal reached their conclusion by holding that the word 'or,' on its true construction, meant 'and.' The result was the same.
> There is certainly no doubt that generally it is assumed that 'or' is intended to be used disjunctively and the word 'and' conjunctively. Nevertheless, it is equally well settled that if so to construe those words leads to an unintelligible or absurd result, the courts will read the word 'or' conjunctively and 'and' disjunctively, as the case may be; or, to put it another way, substitute the one word for the other. This principle has been applied time and again even in penal statutes …." (citations omitted)

16. The principles which govern the construction of contracts are well known and it is not necessary to repeat them. In arriving at the objective intention of the parties the court will look at the words they chose to record their bargain and the commercial object they meant to achieve by it. If it is apparent that the particular words of the contract will not achieve what one can confidently conclude was the objective intended then the words can be modified to achieve the result. All depends upon the particular words in question and the contractual context. As Lord Salmon's judgment demonstrates there is no particular objection to reading "or" conjunctively. It remains a canon of construction that a contract should be construed so as to give it efficacy and, if possible, a construction which would destroy the bargain is to be avoided.

17. The construction for which the respondent contended, and which the primary judge accepted, gives to the definition of completion date a compendious meaning which consists of two elements but results in the fixing of one date. It treats the completion date as being that fixed by at least 14 days written notice required by clause 8, and is not earlier than 30 days after the contract date.

18. One can achieve that construction by:

(i) substituting "and" for "or";
(ii) replacing the words "not less than" with the words "the later of";
(iii) substituting for the word "or" the phrase "such notice not to expire earlier than" in the definition of "completion date".

19. The most economical means of achieving the construction is the first. It does the least violence to the language of the contract. It should be adopted if it is clear that it was this construction the parties intended by their contract.

20. The contest between the parties is whether the definition of "completion date" is to be read as a composite phrase producing one date or whether it is to be read distributively as producing two dates either of which may, depending on the parties' choice, be the completion date.

21. In my opinion the primary judge was right to prefer the first approach. There are a number of reasons for the conclusion.

22. The first is that it gives business efficacy to the contract and harmonises the definition of "completion date" with clause 8. The date for settlement is fixed by giving notice, the timing of which is fixed by the terms of the definition and of clause 8. By complying with those provisions, a fixed and certain completion date is determined and communicated. There can be no scope for disagreement between seller and buyer as to when payment and conveyance have to occur.

23. It is otherwise if the appellant's construction is adopted. In that case, the alternative completion date is left at large. It can be any date after (in this case) 30 May 2008. The contract provides no mechanism for determining the date whether by notice or otherwise. No doubt the general law would prevent the contract becoming uncertain by the implication of terms as to reasonable notice but it is not, I think, a likely construction of the contract that such an important occurrence as the date for settlement of the contract should be left to be fixed by such means.

24. A second objection to the appellant's construction is that the alternative definition takes no account of the fact that when a contract was executed the land was undeveloped and the respondent as seller could not convey any title to it. In fact about a year went by before the community title scheme was registered and title to lot 39 issued. On the appellant's construction of the contract the purchaser could have called for settlement before title issued as long as she waited a month after the contract date. The parties both knew that title to the lot would issue subsequent to the execution of the contract. It is not, I think, a likely construction of the contract that the parties intended that settlement could occur before registration of the scheme. To avoid this consequence of the appellant's construction one must imply into the definition of "completion date" the substantial requirement that it occurs subsequent to registration of the plan. That implication is not necessary if one adopts the respondent's "compendious" construction of the definition.

25. The third objection is that the adoption of the appellant's construction would invalidate the contract because a completion date so defined would offend s 212 of the Act. The appellant is now attracted to that result but when construing the contract from the orthodox assumption that the parties intended to be bound by their bargain, the court endeavours, where possible, to construe a contract so as to validate it, not render it void. The fact that the appellant's construction would destroy the contract is a good reason for adopting an alternative construction if one is available.

26. The consequence is that the respondent's construction, which the primary judge favoured, should be adopted.

27. The appellant's second point is that the contract requires "a lengthy and torturous construction" to understand it, and for that reason does not comply with s 212, which the appellant asserts has a consumer protection purpose. The argument is that it should be apparent at first sight whether a contract does, or does not, provide that settlement is not to take place earlier than 14 days after advice that the scheme has been established. One has to tease out the meaning of this contract, so the argument runs, with the consequence that the section has not been obeyed. In any case, the consumer protection purpose of s 212 is to ensure that the purchaser is informed that the scheme has been established and to allow sufficient time prior to settlement for the purchaser to make any necessary searches or enquiries about that: Bossichix P/L v Martinek Holdings P/L [2009] QCA 154 at [21].

28. The short answer to the point is that the question whether the contract complies with s 212 only arises after the court has ascertained its meaning. Once construed, the contract means what the court has ruled. The point is established by Upper Hunter County District Council v Australian Chilling and Freezing Co Ltd (1968) 118 CLR 429 at 436–7. The question is whether the contract, as construed by the court, complies with s 212. Any difficulty in construction is irrelevant to this second task.

29. Some changes to the orders made by the primary judge are necessary because the time fixed by his Honour for performing the contract has passed. I would vary orders 1 and 3(b) of the orders made on 18 February 2010 by deleting the date "19 March 2010" and substituting therefor the day which is 30 days after the delivery of judgment in the appeal. The appeal should otherwise be dismissed with costs.

LATITUDE DEVELOPMENTS PTY LTD v HASWELL

(2010) LQCS ¶90-164; Court citation: [2010] QSC 346

Judgment delivered on 15 September 2010

Community schemes — Developer and purchaser entered into off-the-plan contract for proposed lot in community titles scheme resort — Developer gave notice of changes to the project shortly before the settlement date — Where those changes affected the creation of common property — Defendant gave notice of termination of the contract — Developer sued the defendant for specific performance of the contract — Whether the defendant can seek summary judgment — Whether the defendant can rely on any rights said to accrue under the Land Sales Act 1984 (Qld) s 21 and s 22, and the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) s 214 and s 217 — Whether there was material prejudice established by the defendant because of the decision to stage the development — Whether the notice of termination was valid — Summary judgment granted against developer.

The plaintiff (developer) entered into a contract for sale with the defendant (purchaser) for the sale of a proposed lot within a resort which would be a community titles scheme to be established at Airlie Beach. The parties entered into the contract on 7 December 2005 but it was clear that before the project was completed, the statutory right to terminate the contract if the plan was not registered within three years of the contract would arise under the Land Title Act. Accordingly, the parties entered into a new contract under the same terms in 2008.

By April 2009 there appeared to be difficulties in completing the development. The developer made an application to council to reconfigure the land to create four lots and one area of common property. This allowed the developer to stage the development. On 27 May 2009, the developer's solicitors wrote to the defendant's solicitor advising that it had decided to stage completion of the lots in the resort. It stated that the defendant's lot was in stage 1 and that the plan would be lodged for registration by that week. It also stated that the second and final stage, the land for which was identified as lot 20 was expected to be completed by the end of June. The letter enclosed a revised Community Management Statement (CMS) and a revised budget. The letter expressly stated that it was intended to be served as a further statement under s 214 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act.

On 28 May 2009, the survey plan was registered. On 1 June 2009 the developer's solicitors gave notice that a separate certificate of title was issued for lot 713 (the lot being the subject of the contract) and that settlement was to occur on 15 June 2009.

The defendant purported to terminate the contract on 11 June 2009 on a number of grounds. The developer's solicitors rejected the termination on 12 June 2009 and again called for settlement on 15 June 2009. The developer sued the defendant for specific performance of the contract and the defendant sought summary judgment against the developer.

Contentions under s 21 Land Sales Act

The defendant argued that the events that occurred in 2009 (the reconfiguration of lots and staging of the development) gave rise to a requirement under s 22 of the Land Sales Act that the developer give a rectification notice once the survey plan was registered as the identity of the lot had changed. As such the developer could not call for settlement on 15 June 2009 and the defendant's termination letter was effective to terminate the contract. The basis for the defendant's argument was under s 35 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act, common property for a community titles scheme is owned by the owners of the lots included in the scheme as tenants in common and that an owner's interest in a lot is inseparable from the owner's interest in common property. Accordingly the changes to the scheme's common property by the reconfiguration and staging of the development has also changed the identity of Lot 713 being purchased by the defendant. The defendant suggested that the change in the identity of the lot triggered the provisions of s 22 of the Land Sales Act.

Contentions under the Body Corporate and Community Management Act

The defendant argued that the letter of 27 May 2009 from the developer's solicitor enclosing a revised CMS did not satisfy the requirement of s 214 to provide a statement "rectifying the inaccuracies" in the earlier statement. The notice identified matters which were changed, but otherwise did not include information which had previously been given.

The defendant also submitted that he was extremely concerned about the suggestion in a letter from the developer that the development would not be completely finished when he was required to settle. He is prejudiced by the fact that the decision to stage the development meant that he would not be receiving a unit in a completed resort. If he were compelled to complete the contract on 15 June 2009, he would be prejudiced because the units were not suitable for investment purposes as they were not capable of producing any investment return. The defendant argued that the availability of the swimming pool was also important to him.

The defendant argued that the staging of the development gave rise to an obligation on the seller to provide a further statement under s 214 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act and the defendant had a right to cancel the contract. The developer argued that although the staging did give rise to an obligation to give a notice under s 214, the defendant would not have suffered any material prejudice if compelled to complete the contract and in any event the defendant did not exercise the right conferred by s 214(4) of the Act.

Held: Summary judgment against developer granted.

The term "lot" is defined in the Body Corporate and Community Management Act to mean a lot under the Land Title Act. The term "lot" is defined in the Land Title Act to mean a separate, distinct parcel of land created on the registration of a plan of subdivision. The Body Corporate and Community Management Act by reference to which the term "proposed lot" is defined in the Land Sales Act, clearly distinguishes between lots and common property. In the context of the legislative framework of which the obligations of s 21(1) forms part, the requirement to identify the "lot to be purchased" is a requirement to identify a lot rather than common property. The requirement in s 21(1) of the Land Sales Act directs attention to the subject matter of the contract, that being expressly confirmed as Lot 713. The defendant would derive an interest in the common property, not as a result of a transfer of common property, but because of the transfer of Lot 713 and the effect of s 35 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act. Therefore, a change to common property does not change the identity of "the lot to be purchased" referred to in s 21(1) of the Land Sales Act so as to bring into operation the provisions of s 22 of that Act.

2. In relation to the notice provided under s 214, a notice which retains information which remains correct and includes information which is now correct in place of information which has ceased to be so, is a statement which rectifies the inaccuracies in the earlier statement. Section 214 contains no express requirement specifically to identify or otherwise draw attention to the changes in the disclosure statement.

3. In relation to the argument of material prejudice suffered by the defendant, it is apparent that if the defendant were compelled to complete the contract, the title in exchange for which he would pay the purchase price would not carry with it an interest in not insignificant areas within Lot 20 which previously had been identified as common property, including the pool. Moreover, title to the lot obviously intended to be made available to Peppers (resort management) to conduct the resort operation would not be created at that time; nor would areas of common property to be made available for resort facilities, and nor would the use of those areas be regulated by by-laws.

4. Further, at the date of the termination letter, the defendant had no binding assurance about the date by which stage 2 would be completed. Moreover, the developer had reserved the right to change the form of the development on Lot 20. It would have appeared to the defendant to be likely that a resort could not commence to operate from the date when he would otherwise have been required to complete his contract, a situation which may be contrasted with the position if the development had not been staged. The defendant had demonstrated, to a sufficient high degree of certainty, that the changes which resulted from the decision to stage the development resulted in prejudice to him which was substantial, or of much consequence.

5. The defendant's termination letter referred to statutory provisions other than s 214, but did not refer to s 214 as a source of the right to terminate. A mistake in the identification of the legal authority for the termination of the contract was not material. Since s 214 does not require the identification of the statutory provision in the notice it seems unlikely that a reference to another section of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act would make the notice ineffective. The termination letter was an effective exercise on behalf of the defendant of the right conferred on him by s 214 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act to terminate the contract.

6. The defendant's summary judgment against the developer should be granted.

Before: Lyons J.

Peter Lyons J: The plaintiff (Latitude Developments) has carried out the development of a resort at Airlie Beach, creating a number of lots and common property for which there is a community titles scheme under the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) (BCCM Act). The defendant (Mr Haswell) entered into a contract to purchase one of the units. Shortly before the settlement date, Latitude Developments gave notice of changes to the project, which affected the creation of common property. Mr Haswell then gave a notice of termination of the contract. Latitude Developments has sued Mr Haswell for specific performance of the contract. Mr Haswell seeks summary judgment against Latitude Developments. He relies principally on rights said to accrue under the Land Sales Act 1984 (Qld) (LS Act) and the BCCM Act.

Background

2. The resort was intended to be known as the Peppers Coral Coast Resort, Airlie Beach. Mr Haswell had earlier entered into a contract dated 7 December 2005 to purchase a unit then described as proposed Lot Number 77 in Building F in the resort (the 2005 contract). The 2005 contract envisaged the creation of the lot by the registration of a subdivision plan under the Land Title Act 1994 (Qld) (LT Act). It also provided that the contract might be terminated if the subdivision plan was not registered three years after the date of the contract.

3. It became apparent that the right to terminate the 2005 contract would accrue, before the project was completed and the subdivision plan was registered. As a result, the parties entered into another contract for the sale of the unit, dated 15 May 2008 (the 2008 contract). It retained most of the provisions 2005 contract, though, not surprisingly, it included a change to the date by which the contract might be terminated if the subdivision plan was not registered. Under the 2008 contract, this date was 30 June 2010. In the 2008 contract, the description of the lot was changed. It was now identified as proposed Lot 713 in Peppers Coral Coast Resort, Airlie Beach.

4. The documents constituting the 2008 contract included a single signed sheet which made applicable the 2005 contract and identified the variations; and a copy of the 2005 contract, which itself included contract terms, a subdivision plan, a Product Disclosure Statement under the Corporations Act 2001 (Cth), and a "BCCM Act disclosure statement" (given under the BCCM Act) attached to which was a proposed community management statement. The contract terms expressly stated that the contract included the product disclosure statement and the BCCM Act Disclosure Statement "which accompanied this Contract". A further Product Disclosure Statement dated 21 February 2008 (the PDS) was provided to Mr Haswell at about the time the contract was executed. A further BCCM Act disclosure statement (the BCCM DS) was provided to Mr Haswell and signed by him on 1 May 2008, again accompanied by a Proposed Community Management Statement (the CMS). The CMS included plans showing the location of the proposed buildings and lots. It is likely that the PDS and the BCCM DS, including the CMS, formed part of the 2008 contract. I understood that to be the basis on which the parties proceeded.

5. It is necessary to make reference to what the plans included in the CMS identified in relation to a building towards the southern end of the resort. It was referred to as Building A, and consisted of two towers, Tower A and Tower B. Within Building A, at level B, the plans identified a lot, Lot 101; as well as some areas of common property; and within the common property, some exclusive use areas, one for a porte-cochere, one for services or utilities associated with the proposed day spa, and others described as "Special Rights Areas".

6. The 2008 contract included a subdivision plan, SP184771 (annexed to the 2005 contract). With respect to Building A, it shows that at level B, Building A contained a single lot, there identified as Lot 1, with the balance of the building at this level (at least half of the floor space) being common property. There was also an area of common property external to the building. At level C, there were relatively large areas of common property adjacent to Tower A and Tower B, as well as what appeared to be common property external to the building. At Level D and above, there were also areas of common property, internal to the building, and servicing individual units within the two towers.

7. The PDS confirmed that the community titles scheme was to be in accordance with the subdivision plan attached to the contract of sale. It noted that there would be common property, which would include shared facilities. One of the shared facilities was the resort swimming pool. It also recorded that a day spa, conference centre and restaurant were to be constructed within "the facilities complex". These were to be owned by an entity described as "the operator", said initially to be intended to be Latitude Developments or a related entity. However, the PDS recorded that a management agreement had been entered into with Peppers Leisure Limited (Peppers), under which Peppers agreed to carry out the on-site manager's duties under a caretaking and letting agreement, and to run the business of letting apartments in the development for those owners who appointed the on-site manager as their letting agent. The PDS stated that the day spa, conference centre and restaurant were to be available to unit owners and resort guests (as well as members of the public) at commercial rates. It is plain from the PDS that what was envisaged was the on-site operation of the resort, with lot owners having the opportunity to make their units available as part of the pool of units used in the resort; and that the resort would have facilities which would be available to owners and their guests.

8. The BCCM DS identified the lot sold to Mr Haswell as Lot 713 in the community titles scheme identified on certain plans. The CMS described the scheme as “a basic community titles scheme”. It stated that the common property for the scheme included common facilities, one of which was a swimming pool. It also stated that the scheme would not be further developed. It made provision for an on-site manager, who would own a lot, and whose lot might be used for resort management and letting of lots, and the operation of a restaurant or café and day spa.

9. The BCCM DS also included proposed bylaws. One of the bylaws provided that the swimming pool and associated facilities might only be used by occupiers, or people accompanied by occupiers of a lot; and within certain hours. The bylaws also regulated the use of the areas of common property nominated for the day spa services, and the porte-cochere, identified on the plans as exclusive use areas; as well as the areas identified as special rights areas, intended as outdoor dining areas.[1]

10. By April 2009, difficulties had been experienced with completing the development. Latitude Developments made an application to Whitsunday Regional Council to reconfigure the land on which the development was being carried out, to create four lots and one area of common property. The evidence seemed to proceed on the basis that it was this application, and its approval, which put Latitude Developments into a position where it could decide to stage the development, although the development application itself refers to an earlier approval of a staged development. However, no point was made about this, and I shall ignore it.

11. On 27 May 2009, Latitude Developments’ solicitors wrote to Mr Haswell’s solicitors. The letter advised that Latitude Developments had “decided to stage completion of the lots in the Peppers Coral Coast Resort”. It stated that Mr Haswell’s lot was in stage 1, and that the plan would be “lodged for registration this week”. It also stated that the second and final stage, the land for which was identified as Lot 20, is “expected to be completed by the end of June”. The letter enclosed a revised CMS, and a revised budget. The letter expressly stated that it was intended to serve as a further statement under s 214 of the BCCM Act.

12. The revised CMS confirmed that the scheme would include Lot 20 on SP184771. It stated that the common property for the scheme included, amongst other things, the swimming pool. That statement appears to be incorrect, at least for stage 1 of the scheme. The swimming pool, under construction at this time, was located in proposed Lot 20. The revised CMS made reference to the use of “lot 101” for management of the resort, although Lot 101 was not identified as part of the scheme land, and was not created in stage 1. The revised CMS stated that the scheme was intended to be “developed progressively in stages”. However, it described the scheme as “a basic scheme initially made up of 81 housing and duplex allotments and units (it then identified the lots comprising stage 1), common property and a lot comprising stage 2 of the scheme (Lot 20 on SP184771).” The revised CMS continued, “The facilities complex including a day spa, conference centre, and restaurant will be completed as part of stage 1, but will be separately titled as part of stage 2”. Reference was made to plans, included with the revised CMS, and described as a Concept Plan of Future Development, which showed what apparently is the footprint of Building A, in Lot 20, designated on the plan as stage 2.

13. The revised CMS included revised bylaws. The bylaws relating to the exclusive use areas and the special use areas were not retained. Somewhat curiously, under the heading “USE OF COMMON PROPERTY”, the bylaw relating to the use of the pool was retained.

14. The revised CMS made reference to stage 2, stating the number of units (it would appear inaccurately), and that it included a lot for the central facilities, and additional common property. With respect to some of the stage 2 land, there were proposed additional bylaws, relating to the exclusive use areas (day spa utilities and porte-cochere) and the special rights areas (outdoor dining areas). Plans were included relating to stage 2, which showed Level B for Building A. They appear to include some variations from the plans in the CMS which was included with the contract. The revised CMS made clear the indicative nature of the Concept Plans, said to have been provided for illustrative purposes only.

15. On 28 May 2009, Survey Plan 184771 was registered. It included variations from earlier plans identified by the same number. On its face, it was described as a building format plan. Under this plan, the area of land which previously included Building A was created as a separate lot (Lot 20) in the southern portion of the site. Lot 20 was not shown as including any building. For the balance of the site, the plan made provision for other buildings in the development, and their subdivision into lots, and for common property. One of the lots created by registration of this plan was Lot 713 (in Building F).

16. On 1 June 2009 the solicitors for Latitude Developments gave notice that a separate certificate of title had issued for Lot 713, and that settlement was to occur on 15 June 2009.

17. Mr Haswell's solicitors replied to the letter of 27 May 2009 in a letter sent by facsimile transmission to the solicitors for Latitude Developments on 11 June 2009 (the termination letter). The termination letter contested a number of matters raised by the letter of 27 May 2009; and terminated the contract on a number of grounds. The letter is considered in greater detail, later in these reasons.

18. The solicitors for Latitude Developments responded on 12 June 2009, rejecting the termination of the contract. The letter took issue with a number of statements in the termination letter. It also stated that the construction of the swimming pool had been completed, and that the developer had granted a licence to the body corporate to enable all owners and occupiers to have full use of the pool from settlement (that being a matter about which the termination letter complained). The letter also stated that registration of the stage 2 plan was expected to occur within the next few weeks, and again called for settlement on 15 June 2009. The licence referred to in the letter is in evidence. It is a deed dated 11 June 2009, taking effect the following day.

19. There is a body of evidence, including photographs, identifying the extent to which work associated with the development had been carried out at various times in June 2009.

20. The survey plan for stage 2 was registered at about the end of July 2009.[2]

Summary judgment

21. A defendant's application for summary judgment should only be granted where there is no real prospect that the plaintiff will succeed in its action.[3] A real prospect of success may be contrasted with a prospect of success which is only fanciful.[4] Nevertheless, in determining whether to grant summary judgment, a court must consider whether there is a need for trial, and keep in mind the reasons why the interests of justice usually require issues to be investigated at a trial.[5] It has been authoritatively stated the propositions derived from Dey v Victorian Railway Commissioners[6] and General Steel Industries Inc v Commissioner for Railways (NSW)[7] are applicable to applications for summary judgment under the UCPR.[8] The effect of those statements is that summary judgment may only be granted in a case where there is a high degree of certainty about the ultimate outcome of the proceeding if it were allowed to go to trial in the ordinary way.

Land Sales Act

22. On behalf of Mr Haswell, it is submitted that the events which occurred early in 2009 gave rise to a requirement under s 22 of the LS Act that Latitude Developments give what is referred to as a rectification notice, once SP184771 was registered, and accordingly, it could not call for settlement on 15 June 2009; and on that basis, the termination letter effectively terminated the contract.

23. The relevant provisions of the LS Act apply to the sale or purchase of a lot resulting from the registration of a plan and the recording of a community management statement for a community titles scheme under the BCCM Act.[9] Section 21 of the LS Act requires the giving to a person who is considering entering "upon a purchase" of a proposed lot of this kind, a statement which, amongst other things, "clearly identifies the lot to be purchased". Where a statement given under s 21 is not accurate at the time it is given, or contains information that subsequently becomes inaccurate, the vendor is required by s 22 to give the purchaser a statement of the particulars required under s 21, "as soon as is reasonably practicable after the proposed lot has become a registered lot". Section 22(4) then contains provisions, the effect of which is that settlement is not to occur until the expiration of 30 days after the receipt by the purchaser of a notice given under s 22(1) (unless the contract of sale provides for a later settlement date, or the parties reach some other agreement after the purchaser has received a notice under s 22(1)). Where there has been a failure to give a notice required by s 22(1), s 25 provides that the purchaser may avoid the contract, if materially prejudiced by the failure to give the notice. The same section provides that, where a notice has been given under s 22(1) which is inaccurate, the purchaser may avoid the instrument if "materially prejudiced …by the inaccuracy of any particular …" in the notice given under s 22(1).

24. It should also be noted that s 21(6) provides that where a prospective vendor is required to give a notice under s 213 of the BCCM Act, and the prospective vendor includes in that notice the matters of which it was required to give notice under s 21(1), that is sufficient compliance with the requirements of s 21.

25. In essence, it is submitted on behalf of Mr Haswell that the result of the events associated with the staging of the development in the early part of 2009 was that the identity of the lot changed, so that it was necessary for notice to be given under s 22; and that that did not occur.

26. The submission that the identity of Lot 713 changed as a result of the staging of the development is based upon s 35 of the BCCM Act. That section provides that common property for a community titles scheme is owned by the owners of the lots included in the scheme, as tenants in common; and that an owner's interest in a lot is inseparable from the owner's interest in common property. The section includes, as an example, a statement that a dealing affecting a lot, affects, without express mention, the interest which the owner of the lot has in the common property; and, as another example, a statement that an owner cannot separately deal with or dispose of the owner's interest in the common property. It is argued on this basis, that the identity of the lot being sold had changed; and that accordingly, the provisions of s 22 of the LS Act applied.

27. The submission makes it necessary to focus on the provisions of the LS Act, and the contract. The obligation imposed by s 21(1) is to provide a statement in writing which "clearly identifies the lot to be purchased". The expression "lot" is defined to include both a registered lot and a proposed lot.[10] A proposed lot is defined to include a lot that will become a registered lot upon registration of a plan and the recording of a community management statement for a community titles scheme, under the BCCM Act.[11] A registered lot is defined to include a lot included in a community titles scheme registered under the BCCM Act. The term "lot" is defined in the BCCM Act to mean a lot under the LT Act.[12] The term "lot" is defined in the LT Act to mean a separate, distinct parcel of land created on the registration of a plan of subdivision. Such a plan may include a plan which identifies lots by reference to structural elements of a building, although such a plan must also identify common property.[13] The BCCM Act, by reference to which the term "proposed lot" is relevantly defined in the LS Act, clearly distinguishes between lots and common property.[14] In the context of the legislative framework of which the obligations of s 21(1) forms part, the requirement to identify the "lot to be purchased" is a requirement to identify a lot, rather than common property.

28. Moreover, the requirement in s 21(1) of the LS Act directs attention to the subject matter of the contract. The contract was a contract to sell Lot 713. So much is clear from its express terms. The express provisions of the contract relating to settlement required the giving of vacant possession of the lot, and a form of transfer, required to transfer the title in the lot to Mr Haswell. The contract required no action in respect of the common property. That is not surprising, in view of the provisions of s 35 of the BCCM Act, to which reference has already been made. An examination of the contract confirms that "the lot to be purchased" as a result of the transaction is Lot 713. Mr Haswell would derive an interest in the common property, not as a result of a transfer of common property, but because of the transfer of Lot 713 and the effect of s 35 of the BCCM Act.

29. In my view, therefore, a change to common property does not change the identity of "the lot to be purchased" referred to in s 21(1) of the LS Act, so as to bring into operation the provisions of s 22 of that Act.

30. A somewhat similar question was considered in Harris v Prigg.[15] The question considered in that case was whether an encroachment from common property of land the subject of a community titles scheme was an encroachment from the lot which was the subject of the contract. Reliance was placed on s 35 of the BCCM Act for a submission that that was so. The reasoning in Harris, in my view, provides support for the conclusion which I have reached about the effect of s 21 and the present contract.

31. I am therefore not prepared to grant summary judgment in favour of Mr Haswell by reason of the provisions of the LS Act on which he has relied.

Contentions relating to BCCM Act

32. Prior to entering into a contract for the purchase and sale of a proposed lot to be included in a community titles scheme, s 213 of the BCCM Act requires the seller to give the buyer a disclosure statement. It also requires the disclosure statement to be accompanied by the proposed community management statement. Under s 66 of the BCCM Act, the community management statement must identify the scheme land; it must include bylaws (unless the bylaws are those in Schedule 4 of the BCCM Act); and, if the scheme is intended to be developed progressively, it must explain the proposed development and be illustrated by concept drawings, and state the purpose of any future allocations of common property or a body corporate asset under an exclusive use bylaw for the scheme, and the stages in which the future allocations are to be made. Further, the disclosure statement must include the terms of any authorisation of a person as a letting agent proposed to be given after the establishment of the scheme. Section 214 then requires, in a case where the contract has not been settled, and a point is reached at which it can be said that a disclosure statement previously given would not be accurate if given at that point, that a further statement be given "rectifying the inaccuracies in the disclosure statement". Section 214(4) gives the buyer the right to cancel a contract which has not settled if the buyer would be materially prejudiced, if compelled to complete the contract, "given the extent to which the disclosure statement was, or has become, inaccurate", and allows 14 days for the exercise of this right.

On Mr Haswell's behalf, it was submitted that the staging of the development brought the provisions of s 214 into operation, giving Mr Haswell the right to cancel the contract, which had been exercised.

34. For Latitude Developments, it was accepted that the staging of the development in 2009 gave rise to an obligation to give a notice under s 214. However, it was submitted that Mr Haswell would not have been materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract, having regard to the extent to which the disclosure statement was no longer accurate; and that in any event he did not exercise the right conferred by s 214(4) of the BCCM Act. However, it was accepted that if the notice were otherwise in accordance with s 214, it was given in time.

35. For Mr Haswell, some reliance appears also to have been placed on s 217 of the BCCM Act, although detailed submissions were not provided in support of this. It is convenient to deal with this matter at the outset.

Termination under s 217 of the BCCM Act?

36. This section creates a right to cancel a contract if the community management statement recorded for the scheme on its establishment, is different from the proposed community management statement most recently advised to the buyer; or the information disclosed in the disclosure statement is inaccurate; or, in a case where there was a requirement to provide an explanation for inequalities in contribution schedule lot entitlements, that explanation was not provided; and because of the difference, or inaccuracy, or lack of explanation, a buyer would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract.

37. It has not been argued that the community management statement recorded for the Scheme is different from that most recently advised to Mr Haswell, nor has it been argued that the revised CMS in accurate. Nor has there been any submission based on the need to explain inequalities in the contribution schedule lot entitlements, and a failure to provide an explanation. There is no obvious difference between the community management statement recorded on 28 May 2009, and the version of it sent to Mr Haswell under cover of letter of 27 May 2009. The revised CMS included an explanation of the inequalities in the contribution schedule lot entitlements. No relevant inaccuracy (potentially giving rise to material prejudice) in the information in the disclosure statement, as revised by the letter of 27 May 2009, has been identified.

38. In those circumstances, I would not be prepared to grant the defendant's application for summary judgment on the basis of a right to cancel the contract, said to have accrued under s 217 of the BCCM Act.

Did Latitude Holdings comply with s 214 of the BCCM Act?

39. The submissions made on behalf of Mr Haswell focused on the requirement in s 214 that the seller give the buyer "a further statement … rectifying the inaccuracies in the disclosure statement". It was submitted that the letter of 27 May 2009, in providing a revised CMS, did not satisfy the requirement of s 214 to provide a statement "rectifying the inaccuracies" in the earlier statement.

40. In support of that submission, reference was made to Sommer v Abatti Holdings Pty Ltd.[16] That was a case where a notice given under s 21 contained information that subsequently became inaccurate. The vendor was required by s 22 to give to the purchaser a statement of "particulars required to be included in the statement given for the purposes of section 21(1) on registration of the plan creating the lot." The notice identified matters which were changed, but otherwise did not include information which had previously been given. Derrington J held nevertheless, the requirements of s 22 had been satisfied. His Honour observed:[17]

> "The point of the section is obviously directed to the correction of the inaccuracy, and on the understanding that a considerable body of correct information may well have been given, the expression, 'particulars required to be included', refers to the true information which was required to be given but which was missing from the original statement … the purpose of s 22 is obviously to bring the correct information to the mind of a purchaser and providing it does that in substance in a reasonable way that purpose is fulfilled."

A finding that a notice which identifies only the changes, without repeating information provided earlier and which remains correct, is sufficient to satisfy s 22, says nothing about whether the provision of the entire corrected disclosure statement does or does not satisfy the requirements of s 214 of the BCCM Act. It seems to me that a notice which retains information which remains correct, and includes information which is now correct in place of information which has ceased to be so, is a statement which rectifies the inaccuracies in the earlier statement. Although s 214 contains some formal requirements (the date of the statement, and the signature of the seller or the seller's agent), it contains no express requirement specifically to identify or otherwise draw attention to the changes in the disclosure statement. In respect of this matter, I am not satisfied that Latitude Developments has no real prospect of success in respect of its claim, by reason of this alleged failure to comply with s 214.

42. I should add that the submissions made on behalf of Mr Haswell did not place reliance upon specific matters set out in the material provided on 27 May 2009 which may be incorrect, (for example, that the common property included a swimming pool). Accordingly, it is unnecessary for me to consider that question further.

Material prejudice

43. The effect of the information communicated in the revised CMS sent to Mr Haswell's solicitors on 27 May 2009 was that on registration of SP184771, Lot 20 would be a lot in the scheme, and areas within it which had previously been identified as common property would not have that character as a result of the registration of SP184771. A consequence of that was identified in the revised CMS. It was, in effect, that title for what was referred to as the facilities complex (associated with the operation of the proposed resort), would not become available until completion of stage 2.

44. The fact that that part of the resort located within Lot 20 would not contain any common property when SP184771 was registered, meant that a person such as Mr Haswell, if he completed the purchase of a lot prior to the registration of a subdivision plan for stage 2, would not have any interest in areas which had been shown as common property within what was to be Lot 20 on completion of the contract.

45. That area included the swimming pool. In the CMS, it had been considered to be of sufficient importance to be specifically identified as part of the common property for the scheme. The evidence included photographs of the resort, including the pool, taken on 5, 11, 14 and 20 June 2009. It is apparent that it was being constructed as an attractive facility, one likely not to be unimportant to residents. If that had not been identified by earlier dealings between the parties, it would have become increasingly obvious in late May and early June 2009. The fact that Latitude Developments went to the trouble of entering into the Licence Deed on 11 June 2009 supports that conclusion.

46. The area within Lot 20 also had been identified as including facilities to be located within the "facilities complex".

47. The CMS had identified areas of common property as exclusive use areas for the day spa utilities, port-cochere, and an outdoor dining area, and included proposed bylaws regulating the use of these areas. The day spa utilities were obviously intended to be associated with a day spa to be operated by Peppers, as the resort operator. The other areas for which Peppers, under the bylaws, was to have exclusive use or other special rights were intended to be available to guests and visitors. The effect of staging the development was that the common property, of which these areas would form part, would not be created in stage 1.

48. The revised CMS included a statement that "Lot 101 … is used for management of the resort and commercial purposes expected to be used predominantly by guests in the resort". However, registration of SP184771 was not intended to create Lot 101.

49. The revised CMS dealt with the future subdivision of Lot 20, including changes to the bylaws to deal with the exclusive use areas and the special rights area. The bylaws included with the revised CMS, and which were intended to take effect on registration on SP184771, did not contain these provisions.

It is necessary to bear in mind that the contract required settlement within 14 days of registration of the subdivision plan. Latitude Development, in giving notice on 1 June 2009 that settlement was due on 15 June 2009, apparently relied upon this provision, and the registration of SP184771. Clause 4.2 of the contract permitted Latitude Developments (subject to the BCCM Act) to alter the common property or any facilities or rights in relation to their use; and to change anything in the CMS.

51. It is apparent, therefore, that if Mr Haswell were compelled to complete the contract, the title in exchange for which he would pay the purchase price would not carry with it an interest in not insignificant areas within Lot 20 which previously had been identified as common property, including the pool. Moreover, title to the lot obviously intended to be made available to Peppers to conduct the resort operation would not be created at that time; nor would areas of common property which were to be made available to Peppers in connection with the provision of resort facilities become available, and nor would the use of those areas be regulated by bylaws.

52. Latitude Developments, however, points to the Licence Deed of 11 June 2009. It also points to the statements in the revised CMS relating to stage 2, which are indicative of an intention to produce the development identified in the CMS. It relies on the advanced stage of the development in late May and the first half of June 2009. It relies on the fact that the subdivision plan for stage 2 was registered by the end of July 2009. It refers to s 215 of the BCCM Act which provides that the disclosure statement, and any material accompanying it, and each further statement and any material accompanying such a statement, form part of the provisions of the contract. It points to cl 4.2 of the contract. It submits that, having regard to these matters, Mr Haswell would not have been materially prejudiced, if compelled to complete the contract.

53. It is convenient first to deal with clause 4.2 of the contract. The power which it conferred on Latitude Developments to make changes to the common property, facilities and associated rights was expressly stated to be subject to the BCCM Act, with an express reference to the right conferred to cancel a contract if the purchaser was materially prejudiced by the changes. That reference no doubt includes s 214. Because clause 4.2 expressly recognises that a purchaser would have the right to terminate a contract if materially prejudiced by the change, the power conferred by clause 4.2 to make changes is of no assistance in determining whether a particular change results in material prejudice to a purchaser.

54. A question arises in relation to the determination of the issue of material prejudice. It is whether the question of material prejudice is to be assessed as at the date the further statement was given under s 214, that is, 27 May 2009; or at the date on which Mr Haswell's solicitors wrote to the solicitors for Latitude Developments, with a view to terminating the contract; or at some later date. This issue assumes that it is relevant to consider facts other than those apparent from the BCCM DS and the further statement.

55. The test stated in s 214(4)(d) is whether "the buyer would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract, given the extent to which the disclosure statement … has become … inaccurate". On its face, this provision suggests that what is required is a comparison between the information communicated by the disclosure statement, and that communicated by the further statement. On that basis, attempts made by Latitude Developments to mitigate the consequences of staging the development, which were not recorded in the further statement, would be irrelevant.

56. There is some merit in this approach. A buyer is allowed only 14 days within which to cancel the contract. The buyer may be located somewhere remote from the development. Verification of matters said to mitigate the effect of changes may require access to information not readily available to a buyer. However, neither party relied on this approach to s 214.

57. Similar considerations suggest that the date at which the question of material prejudice is to be determined is the date when the buyer receives the further statement. In my view, the short period within which the right to cancel a contract is to be exercised, and the likely need to obtain professional advice, support that conclusion. However, it seems to me that the latest date of which, on any view of s 214, the question is to be determined is the day on which a buyer gives a notice exercising the right.

58. Moreover, it seems to me that the question of material prejudice cannot be determined by reference to facts which might have existed at the relevant date, but which were not known to the buyer, or of which it cannot at least be said that the buyer should have known them. The exercise of such a right is an important matter, and it seems to me that it is quite unlikely that the legislature intended that an attempt to exercise the right created by s 214 to cancel a contract would turn out to be ineffective, by reason of matters unknown to the person on whom the right is conferred, at the time when the right is being exercised; or of which it cannot be said that the person should have known them.

59. Since writing what has been set out above, I have become aware of the decision at first instance in Wilson v Mirvac Queensland Pty Ltd.[18] There Margaret Wilson J has helpfully reviewed cases dealing with the test for material prejudice in s 214 of the BCCM Act, and analogous provisions. Her Honour rejected the view in Sommer[19] that the question is to be answered by reference to the principle stated in Flight v Booth[20] that the change must be in a material and substantial point, so far affecting the subject matter of the contract that it may reasonably be supposed that, but for such misdescription, the purchaser might never have entered into it at all; it being a case where it may be considered that the purchaser has not really purchased that which was proffered at settlement. The test applied by her Honour was that a purchaser would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete, if the purchaser would be disadvantaged in some substantial way if obliged to do so.[21]

60. Her Honour derived some support for this approach from the reasons for judgment of Sir Ronald Wilson in Deming No 456 Pty Ltd & Ors v Brisbane Unity Development Corporation Pty Ltd,[22] which, although given in dissent, did not, as her Honour noted, result in disagreement from the other members of the Court.[23] Indeed, it seems to me that, on analysis, his Honour's approach seems consistent with the approach taken by the majority. It might be noted that the test applied by her Honour in Wilson, in this respect, accords with the formulation applied by Chesterman J (as his Honour then was) in Chancellor Park Retirement Village

Pty Ltd v Retirement Village Tribunal,[24] where his Honour with reference to material prejudice, said that it is material "if it is substantial or of much consequence".

61. Her Honour determined the existence of material prejudice by reference to the buyer's knowledge of the effects of the change, as a result of the information in the further statement, and not by reference to corrections of errors in the further statement, communicated to the buyer after she had written a letter terminating the contract. That conclusion has the consequence, consistent with what has been stated earlier in these reasons, that material prejudice is not to be judged by reference to facts not known to the purchaser at the time when it gives a notice of termination.

62. On 11 June 2009, when the termination letter was sent, Mr Haswell knew of the proposal to stage the development. He knew that meant that on settlement, he would not receive any interest in areas within Lot 20, which had previously been identified as common property. I have previously referred to the significance of these areas. Moreover, he knew that registration of SP 184771 would not result in the creation of the lot which was to be made available to Peppers. He knew that the arrangements relating to exclusive use areas and special rights areas, as identified in the CMS, were not intended to be implemented at the time of registration of SP184771. However, there is no reason to think he had any knowledge of the effect of these matters on Peppers.

63. Submissions made on behalf of Latitude Developments point out that some of the facilities (conference centre, restaurant and day spa) were to be initially owned by the resort operator (as identified in the PDS); whereas the submissions made on behalf of Mr Haswell seem to proceed on the basis that these facilities were intended to be within common property, in which Mr Haswell was to acquire an interest.

The factual basis for the submissions made on behalf of Latitude Developments appears to be correct; and it is correct to say that the submissions made on behalf of Mr Haswell refer to the dining and spa areas as being within areas previously intended to be common property. That mistake, however, reflects the fact that Mr Haswell's concern was not simply with an interest in common property. It was with an interest in common property to be used by a resort operator, together with other facilities, to conduct a resort. It is clear the termination letter expressed concern, not simply about the fact that common property would not be the same as was previously represented, but also about the benefits which were to be made available by the commencement of the Peppers resort consequent on the completion of the entire development, including the resort facilities, simultaneously with the creation of Lot 713. While the error made in the submissions on behalf of Mr Haswell has some effect on the strength of his case, those submissions point to matters which, in my view, are relevant for determining the material prejudice question.

64. Finally, the photographs taken on 11 June 2009 demonstrate the not insignificant work remained to be done to complete the resort on that date.

65. It seems to me that these considerations lead to the conclusion that by reference to the facts known on 11 June 2009, Mr Haswell could have been materially prejudiced, if compelled to complete the contract, given the extent to which the disclosure statement by then had become inaccurate.

66. That conclusion has to be weighed against the matters raised on behalf of Latitude Developments.

67. The licence deed is dated 11 June 2009. There is no suggestion Mr Haswell had any knowledge of it prior to the termination letter. It seems to me, therefore, that regard may not be had to it, in determining whether Mr Haswell would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract.

68. The development, and in particular the development of the building on Lot 20, was well advanced. However, that seems to me to be quite a different situation from one where the development had been completed, and title had issued in respect of that part of it intended to be contained within Lot 20, by the time settlement was to occur. While the development on Lot 20 was at that stage, there was a risk that for some reason it would not proceed, or would not proceed promptly, to completion. There was also a risk, at least based on the facts so far as they were known to Mr Haswell, of some issue in relation to Peppers commencing to operate the resort. Underlying these matters is the fact that, because the development was not complete, and was to proceed in stages, on settlement Mr Haswell would not receive the bundle of rights in relation to the development which he would have received, if the development had proceeded in a single stage.

69. On behalf of Latitude Developments, it is submitted that at all times from 27 May 2009, there was no significant risk that Stage 2 of the development would not proceed. It may well be true to say that the probability that the development would not proceed to the completion of Stage 2 and the subsequent issue of titles was, objectively speaking, not high, and in that sense the risk was not significant. However, if for any reason the development was not completed, the consequences for Mr Haswell could potentially have been significant. The resort might not have commenced to operate; or it might not have commenced to operate for a substantial period.

70. In support of the proposition that there was no significant risk that Stage 2 of the development would not proceed, Latitude Developments points out that its contractor was obliged to complete the development; and Latitude Developments had in place financial arrangements necessary to pay for completion of the work. However, while it is likely that Mr Haswell would have assumed the existence of a contract with a builder, and that it was probable that financial arrangements had been made in the past to meet the expected costs of completion, there is no suggestion that he had any knowledge of the contractual position as between the builder and Latitude Developments at the end of May and in the first part of June 2009. Equally, there is no suggestion that he had any knowledge of the financial arrangements for the completion of Stage 2, as they stood in late May and early June 2009, after the decision had been made to stage the development, with delay in completing Stage 2.

71. Section 215 has the effect that the further statement (and any material accompanying it) formed part of the provisions of the contract. Section 216 entitled Mr Haswell to rely on information in the further statement as if Latitude Developments had warranted its accuracy. On its behalf, it is submitted that Latitude Developments had as a result binding obligations arising from the further statement. These sections make it necessary to pay careful attention to the content of the further statement, particularly in relation to Stage 2.

72. As mentioned, it stated that Lot 20 was intended to be subdivided into 16 lots for units, one lot for the central facilities, and additional common property. It identified exclusive use areas (day spa utilities and port-cochere) and the special rights area (outdoor dining area). Plans showing the proposed development for Stage 2 were described as “Concept Plans”, of which it was said:-

> “The attached concept drawings are intended only to represent an indicative development plan for the 9A Heritage Drive Community Titles Scheme when completed.
> Accordingly, they have been annexed for illustrative purposes only. The contract drawings do not accurately fix or specify the location of boundaries of any lots or buildings which are subject to final survey being undertaken.
> The original owner may make amendments to or add further service location diagrams and/or exclusive use plans as required to permit the progressive development and reconfiguration of the Scheme land.”

The letter of 27 May 2009 also stated that, “(t)he second and final stage is expected to be completed by the end of June (2009)”.

73. While s 215 of the BCCM Act has the effect that the further statement and accompanying material form part of the provisions of the contract, it seems to me that that does not result in a binding promise as to the timing for completion or ultimate form of Stage 2. Express rights to vary the form of Stage 2 were reserved by Latitude Developments. No more was warranted than that Latitude Developments had an expectation that Stage 2 would be completed by the end of June 2009. To the extent that that might refer to the registration of title, it is clear that that expectation proved to be wrong.

74. In summary, at the date of the termination letter, Mr Haswell had no binding assurance about the date by which Stage 2 would be completed. Moreover, Latitude Developments had reserved the right to change the form of the development on Lot 20. Nor did Mr Haswell know whether the staging had any effect on Latitude Developments relationship with its builder, its financier, or Peppers. It would have appeared to him to be likely that a resort could not commence to operate from the date when he would otherwise have been required to complete his contract, a situation which may be contrasted with the position if the development had not been staged. He was entitled to assume that the swimming pool would not, at the date nominated for completion, be on common property, and he had no knowledge of any arrangement to make it available to occupiers of Lot 713. The question is whether Mr Haswell has demonstrated, to a sufficiently high degree of certainty, that the changes which resulted from the decision to stage the development resulted in prejudice to him which was substantial, or of much consequence.

75. I am satisfied that he has done so. On completion, he would not have been in a position immediately to re-sell the unit, as part of an operating resort, and with the benefit of an interest in common property available for use by the resort operator. He would not have been in a position, had he chosen to do so, immediately to place the unit in a letting pool. There would not have been available to the occupants of Lot 713 the facilities which were intended to be provided by the resort operator; nor would the swimming pool be available to them. Moreover, Latitude Developments had reserved the right to change the form of the development in Stage 2, a position which would not have obtained but for the decision to stage the development; and it had not undertaken a binding obligation to complete Stage 2 by a fixed date in the near future. It is inherently likely that these matters would be important to a purchaser, and the changes accordingly would result in prejudice to a purchaser which is substantial, or of some consequence.

76. Some support for this conclusion may be found in the letter which Latitude Developments sent Latitude Development Group sent on behalf of Latitude Developments to Mr Haswell in about April 2008, and relied upon on behalf of Mr Haswell in support of the proposition that he suffered material prejudice as a result of the changes notified in May 2009. By April 2008 it had become apparent that Latitude Developments could not complete the development by 7 December 2008 (then referred to as the "sunset date"). The letter stated that the alternative was "to put the central facilities on hold" until the other units were completed, with the result that "we would move to settlements on time and before any of the sunset dates expire as the apartment will be fit for occupation, but the main resort facilities area will not be complete for some months afterward which would hinder operation of the resort". The letter later stated that the extension of the sunset date would avoid "the issue where you have a completed apartment, which you have paid for but minimal ability to generate income for some time".

77. Of this letter, Mr Haswell said that he "was extremely concerned about the suggestion in the letter that the development would not be completely finished when I was required to settle", resulting in a telephone call to a representative of Latitude Developments, who assured him that if he signed the 2008 contract, "the resort would be fully finished in every detail" (no doubt by the time he was required to complete the 2008 contract).

78. Moreover, Mr Haswell deposes to the fact that the availability of the swimming pool was important to him. He deposes that he is prejudiced by the fact that the decision to stage the development meant that he "would not be receiving a unit in a completed resort". He also deposes to a fact that he would have been prejudiced, if required to complete on 15 June 2009, because "the units were not suitable for investment purposes as they were not capable of producing any investment return". No attempt was made to cross-examine Mr Haswell, to demonstrate that there was any reason to think that these matters were not of substantial concern to him. Nor has any reason been identified for doubting this evidence from Mr Haswell. Latitude Developments has not identified facts sufficient to entitle it to contest whether Mr Haswell was materially prejudiced as a result of the changes.[25]

79. I am therefore satisfied that, were the matter to proceed to trial in the ordinary way, Latitude Developments has no real prospect of successfully controverting Mr Haswell's contention that he suffered material prejudice as a result of the changes notified in May 2009.

Effective termination

80. At this point, it is convenient to set out s 214(4) of the BCCM Act, which confers a right of termination on a buyer. It is in the following terms:

"(4) The buyer may cancel the contract if—

(a) it has not already been settled; and
(b) the buyer would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract, given the extent to which the disclosure statement was, or has become, inaccurate; and
(c) the cancellation is effected by written notice given to the seller within 14 days, or a longer period agreed between the buyer and seller, after the seller gives the buyer the further statement."

81. It will be apparent that this provision confers on a buyer a right to cancel a contract if certain conditions are satisfied. The conditions stated in paragraphs (a) and (b) of sub-section (4) do not require further consideration. Paragraph (c), however, is intended to identify the mechanism by which the cancellation is effected. This is done by notice. The only requirement as to form is that the notice be in writing. As to content, there is no expressly stated requirement, though it is obvious that the notice must convey that the contract is cancelled. In particular, there is no stated requirement to identify the statutory provision on which the cancellation is based, nor the fact or facts which give the buyer the right or power to cancel the contract under s 314(4).

82. The term "cancel" is not defined in the BCCM Act. In some contexts, it conveys the notion of depriving a document or instrument of any effect, by some act done in relation to it

(tearing the document up, or ruling lines through it). However, its dictionary meanings[26] include "… to decide not to proceed with (a previously arranged appointment, meeting, event, etc.); … to make void, annul …". It is apparent from the sub-section that those meanings, rather than some physical act in relation to the contractual document, is intended, for the effect is to be achieved by written notice to the seller.

83. Section 214(4) may be contrasted with s 367 of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 (Qld), a provision conferring a right of termination on purchasers of land. Section 367(3) requires that the notice of termination state "that the contract is terminated under this section".[27] Also, s 209(1)(c) of the BCCM Act requires the identification of a particular factual basis for exercising the right of termination conferred by that section. On the other-hand, s 212 confers a right of termination, but says nothing about its mode of exercise. It would seem broad enough to encompass any act manifesting an intention not to bound by the contract. A similar right is conferred by s 213(6).

84. A somewhat analogous right to terminate a contract was conferred in rather similar terms by s 49(5) of the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 (Qld). In Deming, it was held that a purchaser who gave a notice under s 49(5), which did not specify any ground, was able to rely on any ground of which the purchaser became aware.[28] However, three members of the Court (Mason, Deane and Dawson JJ) reserved the question whether a purchaser who has given a notice under s 49(5), and has notified a particular ground which ultimately is not made out, may nevertheless rely upon some other factual basis to support the termination[29] .

85. The notice requirement found in s 49 of the Building Units Group Title Act was also considered in Clegmere Pty Ltd v Samspring Pty Ltd.[30] In that case, a notice had been given, which nominated a particular basis for terminating the contract under s 49. The basis was not made out, but a different basis was later identified. At first instance it was held that a purchaser was not entitled to rely upon grounds for exercising the power to terminate found in s 49, of which it had not given notice.[31] In the result, the decision was upheld on appeal, though not on this basis. The case was there decided because the notice was out of time. Two members of the court (Connolly and Carter JJ) made no reference to the issue concerning reliance on a ground different to that stated in the notice. That, and the fact that they decided the case on the basis that the notice was out of time, rather indicates that their Honours did not support the finding at first instance on this issue. GN Williams J (as he then was) referred to the issue, and expressly reserved this question for further consideration. The same occurred in Silverton Ltd v Shearer.[32]

86. Against that background, it is necessary to give further consideration to the termination letter. It expressed concerns in a number of places about the effect of the decision to stage the development. One change was that, at settlement, Mr Haswell would not receive an interest in what had been proposed as common property but was now included in Lot 20. However, the letter also expressed concern that the development would no longer be built in one stage; and that the common property would not include the swimming pool area, (and, mistakenly, outdoor dining areas, and other facilities within the facilities complex). It also complained that Latitude Development was "demonstrably incapable of fulfilling its obligations to convey title to fulfil the very subject matter of a contract", and continued with the statement that the resort was by no means complete. Elsewhere, with reference to allegations of breaches of ss 52 and 53A of the Trade Practices Act 1974 (Cth), reference was made to the fact that the resort was marketed as an investment opportunity, and the unit to be purchased by Mr Haswell was to be part of a pool of units available to be let as part of the Peppers Resort. In the same context reference was made to representations (probably a reference to the letter of April 2008) that if the 2008 contract were entered into, Latitude Developments would achieve the completion of the entire resort at the one time, avoiding the risk associated with a reduced ability to generate income from the unit.

87. The termination letter gave notice of termination on a number of grounds. One was based on alleged repudiation of the contract, primarily in reliance on the fact that title in what was proposed to be common property would not pass at settlement, as a result of the staging proposal. Another was on the basis of representations, referred to in the context of the Trade Practices Act. Another made reference to allegations that Latitude Developments had not complied with s 214 of the BCCM Act and s 22 of the LS Act, and continued:-

> "Further, even if your client has complied with its requirements under s. 22 of the (LS Act) and s. 214 of the BCCM Act, our client is entitled to avoid, and terminate the Contract of Sale pursuant to s. 25 of the (LS Act) and s. 217 of the BCCM Act and our client elects to do so."

88. As discussed earlier, s 217 confers a right to cancel a contract which depends upon the fulfilment of one of a number of conditions. The final condition in this group depends upon the inaccuracy of the information disclosed in the disclosure statement. The others are of no relevance: there was no reference in the termination letter to the community management statement as registered, nor any suggestion that it was different to what had been notified; nor could there have been any suggestion of a failure to explain inequalities in the contribution schedule lot entitlements.

89. The passage set out above from the termination letter is based on the proposition that s 214 is complied with. That carries with it the notion that inaccuracies which have arisen in the information contained in the previous disclosure statement have been rectified. It seems to me that a notice of termination given on the basis that s 214 of the BCCM Act had been complied with could not, in the circumstances of this case, have been based on s 217, and the reference to that section was an error.

90. It seems to me that that conclusion is reinforced by complaints about the changes resulting from the staging of the development, and in particular, the delay in the completion of the resort facilities and the commencement of the operation of the resort. As I have indicated, those matters provide the factual basis for establishing prejudice which entitled Mr Haswell to cancel the contract under s 214.

91. As has been mentioned, s 214 contains no express requirement that the notice of cancellation refer to that section, or identify the basis for ending the contract. It appears in legislation intended to provide a remedy in circumstances identified in the section. The section itself is intended to identify what is to be done by a purchaser who exercises the right conferred by it. It is difficult by implication to conclude that more is required than the section states. Both the language of the section, and the brief period within which the right might be exercised, suggest that a technical approach should not be taken to the notice provision in the section. It seems to me that a written notice, given to the seller within the stated time, which makes clear that the purchaser is ending the contract, is sufficient. This conclusion, in my view, finds some support in the broad principle adopted in Minion v Graystone Pty Ltd[33] that, where a legal justification in fact exists for a course taken, it will suffice to support its validity, that a parties or one of them acted for other reasons and in ignorance of its existence. In Minion, the principle was restated as follows:[34]

"… (the principle) is that the action taken must be capable of being justified at law, but that the grounds of justification, although they must have existed, need not have been known or relied upon at the time the action was taken."

92. Counsel for Latitude Developments referred to Bankmist Holdings Pty Ltd v Azina Holdings Pty Ltd.[35] That case was concerned with a notice of termination given under s 69D of the Strata Titles Act 1985 (WA). The notice was held to be defective because it did not rely on a failure to provide relevant information, made no assertion that the conduct of the party to whom the notice was given was deficient in any way, and did not allege a breach of any statutory provision.[36] It should be noted that the legislation on which this decision is based is by no means identical with s 214 of the BCCM Act. For that reason, and because I regard the considerations discussed a little earlier in these reasons as quite significant, I do not propose to follow it.

The termination letter referred to statutory provisions other than s 214, but did not refer to s 214 as a source of the right to terminate. I do not consider that a mistake in the identification of the legal authority for the termination of the contract to be material. Since s 214 does not require the identification of the statutory provision in the notice, it seems unlikely that a reference to another section of the BCCM Act would make the notice ineffective. In other contexts it has been said that a mistake in the identification of the source of a statutory power does not make an act done pursuant to the power invalid.[37] It seems to me that there is a strong analogy between the exercise of a statutory power, and the exercise of a statutory right to terminate a contract. The statute confers a right to terminate, which carries with it a power; that is to say, it attaches legal effect to an action performed by the person on whom the right is conferred. In my view, this provides an additional basis for concluding that a mistaken reference to the statutory provision which enables a purchaser to terminate a contract does not, of itself, affect the validity of the notice of termination.

94. While the termination letter complained of a number of matters, one was the fact that the development would be staged, and resort facilities were not included in the first stage of the development, the resort not being complete. It was amongst the factual matters relied upon for the termination of the contract. If I am wrong in holding that it is not necessary that a notice given under s 214 identify the ground on which the termination is based, it seems to me that the termination letter included in the matters relied upon the changes which would justify termination under s 214.

95. The general tenor of the termination letter is that Mr Haswell intended to terminate the contract on any basis available to him. It included an express reservation of rights "in all relevant respects". To the extent it might otherwise have been argued that, by nominating other grounds and other statutory provisions Mr Haswell was intending to abandon such right to terminate the contract as s 214 might afford him, the reservation made clear that that was not the case.

96. As this issue depends entirely on the construction of statutory provisions, and the effect of the termination letter, and there have been extensive written and oral submissions from both parties, it seems to me that this question can be dealt with appropriately on an application for summary judgment. In my view, the termination letter was an effective exercise on behalf of Mr Haswell of the right conferred on him by s 214 of the BCCM Act to terminate the contract.

Conclusion

97. The matters to which I have referred are sufficient to dispose of this application. I consider that the application for summary judgment should be granted.

VENNARD v DELORAIN PTY LTD AS TRUSTEE FOR THE DELORAIN TRUST

(2010) LQCS ¶90-165; Court citation: [2010] QCA 309

Judgment delivered on 5 November 2010

Community schemes — Appeal by purchaser — Off-the-plan purchase of lot within a residential community scheme — Failure to properly identify the lot to be purchased under s 21 of the Land Sales Act — Failure to comply with s 212 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act — Disclosure Statement substantially incomplete — Primary judge held in favour of developer — Purchaser alleged primary judge erred in conclusions — Purchaser's submissions mostly not established — Contract complies with Land Sales Act — Disclosure Statement complies with new s 212 of Body Corporate and Community Management Act — Appeal dismissed.

This was an appeal from the decision Vennard v Delorain Pty Ltd (2010) LQCS ¶90-159.

The appellant (purchaser) contracted to purchase an apartment in a building known as Delor Vue Apartments, a proposed lot in a residential community title scheme with the respondent (Delorain). However, subsequently after entering the contract, the appellant argued that the contract was void for uncertainty and that it had been terminated for the respondent's failure to comply with s 365(3) of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000. The appellant also argued that she was entitled to avoid the contract, or not complete it or cancel it for the respondent's non-compliance with s 21 of the Land Sales Act (LSA) or s 212 or s 213 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act (BCCM Act).

[140281]

Original claims

In particular the appellant claimed:

- the respondent did not direct the appellant's attention to the warning statement, information sheet and contract required by legislation, and
- it should be allowed to terminate the contract because:

  – the respondent failed to provide a substantially complete disclosure statement as the services location diagrams and exclusive use plan for lots allocated exclusive use areas of common property were not provided
  – the respondent failed to clearly identify the lot to be purchased as it incorrectly referred to the lot in the contract as Lot 51 on proposed SP 207070 which is a non-existent strata plan
  – the respondent was guilty of misrepresentation and misleading or deceptive conduct
  – the contract was uncertain in the absence of a building format plan in relation to the particulars of the lot and common property.

The appellant sought an order from the court that she was entitled to terminate the contract.

Primary decision

Douglas J, the primary judge, disagreed and held that the appellant was not entitled to terminate the contract. Douglas J concluded:

- Based on the facts, the letter accompanying the contract delivered to the applicant's solicitors was in such a form as to direct their attention to the information effectively because, when it was delivered, it was on top of the bundle.
- The disclosure statement was substantially complete as at the day the contract was entered into and the applicant was not able to cancel the contract in reliance on s 213. The omission of the services location diagram at the time of entry into the contract was not shown to be a highly significant part of the disclosure required in this case, which was evidenced by the lack of any material prejudice claimed on behalf of the applicant.
- The mistake in the reference to "proposed SP 207070" was irrelevant as it should not have confused the applicant and there was no evidence that it had.
- On a proper reading of the contract it seemed clear that lot 51 always included the car park as part of the lot and that it was sold on that basis. Any omission of exclusive use areas related to other lots was irrelevant to the disclosure required to be made to the applicant. There was no evidence of material prejudice, nor was there evidence of any attempt by the applicant to terminate the contract on that basis.
- The description of lot 51 that was supplied in the contract was sufficient. That information clearly identified the lot to be purchased.
- There was no suggestion that the applicant was misled or mistaken in fact by the form of the contract or that she was ignorant of the nature and dimensions of the unit or that it was to be conveyed to her including a car park.

Accordingly there has been no failure by the respondent to clearly identify the lot to be purchased and no breach of s 21(1)(a) of the Land Sales Act. That conclusion also supports the view that the contract was certain.

The submissions on appeal

The appellant conceded that the primary judge was correct in holding that the contract was not void for uncertainty. However on appeal, the appellant challenged the primary judge's conclusion that it was not entitled to avoid the contract pursuant to s 25 of the Land Sales Act for non-compliance with s 21 of that Act and that she was not entitled to cancel the contract for non-compliance with s 212 or s 213 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act.

Misdescription of plans confusing

The appellant argued that the contract and the disclosure statement did not clearly identify the lot to be purchased as there was no annexure labelled "X" as contemplated by the proposed community management statement and there was no plan marked "SP 207070" as contemplated by the contract description. The appellant also argued that there was no "Identification Plan" as per the contractual description and the primary judge erred by referring to the plans annexed to Sch B of "the contract" rather than the Sch B of the "proposed community management statement".

Identification of proposed lot did not comply with LSA

Further, the appellant argued that the identification of proposed lot 51 lacked clarity because there was no real property description of the land which was to be the subject of the scheme, the plans and elevations did not include dimension and they did not disclose which two apartments on the first floor of "Building J" was intended to comprise lot 51. The appellant argued that s 9 of the Land Sales Act supported the view that s 21 required a precise description of the proposed lot [15].

Material prejudice established under s 25 of LSA

The appellant argued that the non-compliance with s 21(1) of the Land Sales Act prevented her from adducing evidence to prove that she had been prejudiced but nevertheless she was prejudiced.

Disclosure statement substantially incomplete

The appellant argued that she validly cancelled the contract under s 213(6) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act because the disclosure statement failed to identify exclusive use areas, it did not include a services location diagram and it failed to include a concept plan.

Non-compliance with s 212 BCCM Act

The appellant argued that the contract provision relating to settlement (at [38]–[39]) did not comply with s 212 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act. The appellant submitted that the provisions of the contract did not inform the buyer that the scheme had been established and it had 14 days after the establishment of the scheme to settle the contract (at [41]). Further, the primary judge was incorrect to say that the amending provisions of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act introduced on 5 June 2009 applied retrospectively to the appellant's case rendering the original breach irrelevant because it complied with the amended s 212. The primary judge made a factual error in concluding that the contract had not been terminated by the appellant before the amendments were introduced. The appellant argued that the termination was effected at the time the appellant served her originating application in April 2009, before the introduction of the amending s 212 in June 2009.

Held: Appeal dismissed.

Fraser JA (with whom de Jersey CJ and Philippides J agrees)

Plans not confusing

1. Although there was no plan labelled "X" the annexed plans could appropriately be described as concept plans. The contract was accompanied by an "Identification Plan". Although the term "Identification Plan" was not printed on any plan, it is obvious that the plans were intended to identify the property to be purchased. So much clearly appears from the highlighting of the number 51 where it appeared on the plans and the appellant's signature on those particular plans. The primary judge concluded that the reference to "SP 207070" was an irrelevant mistake which should not have confused the appellant. The conclusion was correct. There was no such plan proposed, and there were annexed plans and elevations which did identify proposed lot 51, the reference to the survey plan should be disregarded. A reasonable person in the appellant's position would not have been confused by any of those matters.

Identification of proposed lot in accordance with LSA

2. Section 9 of the Land Sales Act applies to a proposed allotment rather than a proposed lot. The contrast between s 9 and s 21 suggests that s 21 does not require the precise description demanded by s 9. That is consistent with the nature of the "off the plan" unit sales to which s 21 applies. Section 21 does not require a clear description of the proposed lot, but merely that it be clearly "identified".

No evidence of material prejudice under s 25 of LSA

3. The onus lay with the appellant to prove that she was materially prejudiced by the alleged failure by the seller to comply with s 21 of the Land Sales Act and she failed to fulfil that onus. The appellant failed to establish that she was entitled to avoid the contract for the alleged non-compliance.

Disclosure statement was "substantially" complete

4. There was no services location diagram which identifies what was proposed in relation to service easements, which meant that the disclosure was not complete. However, it does not follow that it was not "substantially" complete. The provision of such a diagram is merely one of the numerous requirements for a community management statement specified in s 66, which is itself merely one of the matters required to be disclosed under s 213. The appellant did not provide evidence to suggest that the absence of the diagram was significant in relation to the proposed lot or common property. The primary judge's conclusion was correct. The appellant failed to fulfil its onus of proving that the incompleteness in the disclosure statement was substantial.

Non-compliance with s 212 BCCM Act

5. The contract clause relating to settlement did not comply with s 212 of the BCCM Act before it was amended on 5 June 2009. Whether the amending provisions applied to the contract retrospectively depends on when the appellant terminated the contract. If the contract was terminated before 5 June 2009, then the amending provisions would not have applied to the contract. The appellant's originating application sought an order from the court that she validly terminated the contract on grounds other than non-compliance with former s 212. Her originating application plainly did not constitute an election to cancel the contract because of non-compliance with s 212. It related only to the question whether an entitlement to cancel the contract had arisen. As a result the appellant could not rely upon former s 212 to justify her purported termination of the contract. The appellant had no entitlement to terminate the contract under the new s 212.

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

P J Roney (instructed by Macrossan and Amiet Solicitors) for the appellant.

D A Skennar (instructed by Cronin Litigation Lawyers) for the respondent.

Before: de Jersey CJ, Fraser JA and Philippides J.

Chief Justice: I have had the advantage of reading the reasons for judgment of Fraser JA. I agree with the order proposed by His Honour, and with his reasons.

Fraser JA: By contract dated 19 September 2007 the appellant agreed to buy a proposed lot in a community title scheme to be established by the respondent for $350,000. In subsequent correspondence between the parties' solicitors the appellant purported to terminate the contract under various statutory provisions or for misrepresentation. She also contended that the contract was void for uncertainty. The respondent denied that the contract was void and that the appellant's purported terminations were effective. The respondent insisted that the appellant complete the contract.

3. On 14 April 2009 the appellant applied in the trial division for declarations that the contract was void for uncertainty or that, under various statutory provisions, the contract had been terminated or that, under other statutory provisions, the appellant was entitled to avoid it, not complete it or cancel it. The primary judge found in favour of the respondent and dismissed the appellant's application with costs.[1]

4. At the hearing of the appeal the appellant's counsel conceded that the primary judge was correct in holding that the contract was not void for uncertainty. The appellant also did not challenge the primary judge's rejection of her arguments that she had validly terminated the contract under the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 (Qld) ("PAMDA").[2] The appeal was confined to challenges to the primary judge's conclusions that the appellant was not entitled to avoid or not complete the contract pursuant to s 25 of the Land Sales Act 1984 (Qld) ("LSA")[3] for non-compliance with s 21 of that Act and she was not entitled to cancel the contract for non-compliance with s 212 or s 213 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) ("BCCMA").[4]

Land Sales Act 1984 (Qld), ss 21 and 25

5. Section 21 of LSA applied because the contract was for the purchase of a "proposed lot" within the meaning of that term in s 6 (that which will become a registered lot upon registration of a plan and recording of a community management statement for a community titles scheme under BCCMA). Subsection 21(1) provides that before a person enters upon a purchase of a proposed lot there shall be given to the person, or to the person's agent, a statement in writing signed by the person who is to become the person's vendor or that person's agent, that (amongst other things), "clearly identifies the lot to be purchased". The effect of ss 21(5) and (6) is that s 21(1) is satisfied if a prospective vendor incorporates the prescribed matters in a first statement that the vendor is required to give under s 213 of BCCMA. Under s 25 of LSA a purchaser may avoid the instrument made in respect of the purchase of the proposed lot "if the purchaser has been materially prejudiced by" a failure to give to the purchaser or purchaser's agent a statement in accordance with, or that sufficiently complies with, s 21(1).

Identification of the proposed lot: s 21 of the Land Sales Act 1984 (Qld)

6. The contract identified the lot to be purchased as "Proposed Lot 51 on proposed SP 207070, as highlighted on the Identification Plan contained in the Disclosure Documents" at "Unit No. 51 in "Delor Vue Apartments" situated at 3 Deloraine Close, Cannonvale, Qld." The annexed "Disclosure Documents" were addressed to the appellant and included the sub-heading "Re: Sale of Proposed Lot No. 51 'Delor Vue Apartments'". The appellant signed the Disclosure Documents above an acknowledgment that she had received them on 14 September 2007. The Disclosure Documents included a "Statutory Disclosure Statement" which stated that it made disclosures pursuant to s 21 of LSA and s 213 of BCCMA.

7. In the disclosure under s 21 of LSA the respondent stated that the lot to be purchased was the "Proposed Lot described on the front page of this Document". That page described the property as "Proposed Lot No. 51 'Delor Vue Apartments'". In the disclosure under s 213 of BCCMA the respondent stated that the proposed community management statement was attached. The attached "Proposed Community Management Statement", which was also described as "First/New Community Management Statement", included in Schedule B an "explanation of the development of scheme land". It described a progressive development of the scheme land over five stages. Clause 8 of Schedule B provided that each stage "will be created by way of a building format plan and a new Community Management Statement" and clause 9 provided that the development of the scheme land was depicted on the "concept plan as set out in Annexure 'X' to this Schedule B". Clause 16 stated that the concept plan annexed was intended only to represent "an indicative development plan for the scheme land", it was annexed for "illustrative purposes only", and the concept drawing did not "accurately fix or specify the location of buildings or the boundaries of buildings, all of the same being subject to a final survey being undertaken after completion of all relevant civil works and landscaping works to be progressively undertaken on the scheme land as each stage is completed."

8. The Disclosure Documents included numerous plans under the heading "Proposed Building Format Plan". The plans included:

> (a) A schematic plan labelled "Delor Vue Apartments". It shows eleven rectangles of differing dimensions identified by letters from A to K as an "Apartment Building". The plan is marked with a scale and a North arrow. "Apartment Building J" appears near the eastern boundary between buildings "I" and "K" (which is near the southern boundary). "Deloraine Close" is printed below the western boundary.
> (b) A schematic plan divided over two consecutive pages. This includes much the same information and some additional information. Some of the "Buildings" include the words "No car park level". Those words are not in "Building J". Different segments of the plan, each including one or more buildings, are labelled with "stage" numbers from 1 to 5. Each "Building" includes two or three apartment numbers for each of the three or two floors of the building. The numbers range from 1 to 62. On the second page of the plan (which shows buildings D, G, J and K) buildings J and K are marked as being in "Stage 3". "Building J" includes the following text under the word "Apartments":

"55 56 Third", "53 54 Second", and "51 52 First". The number 51 is circled and highlighted. That page is signed by the appellant.
(c) A similar but more legible plan in two parts on consecutive pages. This plan substantially replicates the preceding plan except that it omits the references to stages. A legend on the second page refers to "62 Units 1 Deloraine CL Cannonvale". On the second page of this plan the number "51", within "Building J Apartments" is circled and highlighted. That page is signed by the appellant.
(d) A "Typical Building Setouts" plan. This includes a plan of a "Typical 2 Unit Block" and "Typical 2 Unit Carspace Floorplan".
(f) Elevations of all of the buildings. The elevations of "Block J" show a three storey building with two apartments on each floor.
(g) A "Ground Floor Part Plan South". The location of rectangles and smaller, adjacent squares marked with numbers from 51 to 56 corresponds with the location of "Apartment Building J" and "Building J" on earlier plans. The location of stairs on this plan also corresponds with the location of stairs on the "Typical 2 Unit Block Carspace Floorplan". A circle is drawn around a rectangle and smaller adjacent square, each of which is numbered 51 and highlighted. This plan is signed by the appellant.

9. Taken together, those plans and elevations describe proposed Lot 51 as comprising 1 of the 62 apartments to be constructed at 1 Deloraine Close, Cannonvale, being apartment 51 on the first floor of "Building J", and the carpark and adjacent space on the ground floor of the same building, as generally described on those plans and elevations.

10. The appellant argued that the contract and Disclosure Documents did not clearly identify the lot to be purchased because the purported identification was incomplete, ambiguous and confusing. The appellant emphasised that there was no annexure labelled "X" as contemplated by the proposed community management statement and there was no plan marked "SP 207070" as contemplated by the contractual description. The appellant also argued that there was no "Identification Plan" as contemplated by the contractual description and that the primary judge erred by referring to the plans annexed to Schedule B "of the contract", rather than

Schedule B of the "proposed community management statement".

11. The primary judge held that although there was no plan labelled "X" the annexed plans could appropriately be described as concept plans. That was a correct characterisation of what I have called the "schematic plans". The primary judge held that the contract was accompanied by an "Identification Plan". I agree. The annexed plans fell within the description of the property in the contract's reference schedule as the proposed lot "highlighted on the Identification Plan contained in the Disclosure Documents". The contract defined "Identification Plan" as meaning "the plans contained in the Disclosure Documents used in order to identify the location and approximate size of the Lot in the Development". Although the term "Identification Plan" was not printed on any plan, it is obvious that the plans were intended to identify the property to be purchased. So much clearly appears from the highlighting of the number 51 where it appeared on the plans and the appellant's signature on those particular plans. The primary judge concluded that the reference to "proposed SP 207070" was an irrelevant mistake which should not have confused the appellant.[5] Again, I would affirm that conclusion. Because there was no such plan proposed, and because there were annexed plans and elevations which did identify proposed Lot 51, the reference to the survey plan should be disregarded. A reasonable person in the appellant's position would not have been confused by any of those matters.

12. The appellant argued that the identification of proposed Lot 51 lacked clarity because there was no real property description of the land which was to be the subject of the scheme, the plans and elevations did not include dimensions, and they did not disclose which of the two apartments on the first floor of "Building J" was intended to comprise Lot 51.

13. As to the first point, the land the subject of the proposed scheme was identified in the statement under s 213 of BCCMA and annexed plans by the residential address "Delor Vue Apartments" at "1 Deloraine Close, Cannonvale". The street number differed from that given in the cover page of the contract and the reference schedule ("3 Deloraine Close, Cannonvale") but it is commonplace to find a street address which includes more than one number for a large allotment. There was no evidence that the use of the different street number in the Disclosure Documents rendered the description inaccurate, confusing, or incomplete.

14. The appellant argued that a requirement for a more precise description was suggested by the objects of LSA expressed in s 2 "to protect the interests of consumers in relation to property development" and "to ensure that proposed allotments and proposed lots are clearly identified". However another object expressed in s 2 is "to facilitate property development in Queensland". It is evident that there may be some tension between that object and the consumer protection objects upon which the appellant relied. The relevant question in the construction exercise is how far the legislation goes in pursuit of the relevant purpose or object.[6]

15. The appellant argued that s 9 of LSA supported the view that s 21 required a precise description of the proposed lot. Section 9, which applies in relation to a proposed allotment rather than a proposed lot, requires the vendor to supply a copy of the plan of survey and a copy of any plan for reconfiguring a lot, with a metes and bounds description and contour map. In my view, the contrast between the terms of s 9 and s 21 suggests that s 21 does not require the precise description demanded by s 9. That is consistent with the nature of the "off the plan" unit sales to which s 21 applies. Section 21 does not require a clear description of the proposed lot, but merely that it be clearly "identified".

16. The primary judge rejected the appellant's further argument that the contract did not make it clear that the carpark for Lot 51 was freehold. In fact the identified carpark was allocated as part of the title to the Lot which the respondent proposed to convey to the appellant, but that is not relevant to the present question. The appellant referred to the allocation of common property for the exclusive use as a carpark for some other owners, as reflected in a draft community management statement, but that is equally irrelevant to the present question.

The appellant referred to the requirements of BCCMA in s 66(1)(e) that the community management statement include bylaws, unless the bylaws are those in Schedule 4, and the requirements in s 171 in relation to "exclusive use by-law[s]". However the proposed community management statement attached to the disclosure statement under s 213 of BCCMA included the word "Nil" under the heading "Schedule E Description of Lots Allocated Exclusive Areas of Common Property". That clearly conveyed that the appellant's proposed lot was not to be allocated the exclusive use of any common property. For that reason, the primary judge concluded that there was no significance in the absence of any information about the exclusive use of common property in the Disclosure Documents.[7] The appellant argued that this conclusion was inconsistent with the contractual definition of "Carpark Plan". That term was defined to mean "the plan(s) attached to the Proposed Community Management Statement used to identify the location of carpark spaces to be allocated by the Seller in accordance with clause 49". Clause 49 provided that the buyer acknowledged that it should only be entitled to "the exclusive use and enjoyment of the carparking and/or storage space/s as shown in the disclosure plan". (Presumably the area adjacent to the carpark was a storage space.)

18. There is conflict between the general provision in clause 49.1 and both of Schedule E of the proposed community management and the contractual description of the property to be purchased in the reference schedule ("Proposed Lot 51 … as highlighted on the Identification Plan contained in the Disclosure Documents", read with the highlighting of the carpark and adjoining space, both numbered 51). The construction adopted by the primary judge appropriately applied the very specific and unambiguous provisions in Schedule E and the reference schedule rather than the general, standard form provision in clause 49.1.[8] The absence of by-laws about exclusive use of common property was irrelevant because no exclusive use was proposed.

19. The appellant criticised the primary judge's further observation that if the appellant had wished to examine floor plans of the unit, the disclosure statement contained instructions as to how to obtain that information from the respondent. However the primary judge's observation was accurate. The Disclosure Documents (in a "Disclosure Statement for Offer to Participate in Management Rights Scheme Pursuant to Class Order 02/305") included the statement that floor plans could be obtained from the seller. Section 21 of LSA required a statement which itself clearly identified the lot to be purchased, but the primary judge's observation was relevant to the question of prejudice under s 25 and it did not detract from the force of the reasons for holding that there was a clear identification of the proposed lot.

20. The descriptions of the apartment, carpark, and adjacent space numbered 51 were imprecise because there were no dimensions and, more significantly, because the description of the proposed apartment did not indicate which of the two apartments intended for the first floor in "Building J" was apartment 51. That lack of precision might have produced some uncertainty about the quality and amenity of the property which the appellant contracted to purchase, but that does not mean that the lot to be purchased was not clearly identified. The lot to be purchased was clearly identified in the disclosure under s 21. It was the proposed lot which would be Lot 51 on the registered plan for the community management scheme established for Delor Vue Apartments at 1 Deloraine Close, Cannonvale, comprising apartment 51, being 1 of 62 apartments to be constructed in 11 buildings at that place, apartment 51 being adjacent to apartment 52 on the first floor of a building to be constructed in the location of "Building J", and the carpark and adjacent space on the ground floor of the same building, all as generally described on the plans and elevations annexed to the contract.

21. Decisions upon s 49 of the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 (Qld) support the conclusion that s 21 of LSA did not require any more elaborate or precise identification. In Sunbird Plaza Pty Ltd v Boheto Pty Ltd[9] the question was whether a statement under s 49 clearly identified the lot or proposed lot to which the statement related. The proposed lot was identified as "Unit A on the 14th Floor as identified in sketch plan in subject agreement (where Building Units Plan has been registered.

Lot 52 in Registered Building Units Plan No …)". The first page of the contract described the unit as "No. 14A" and as "Lot 52 on the building units plan, floor 14th" and referred to a floor plan "in accordance substantially with the plan in the eighth schedule hereto and edged in blue." The purchaser argued that the identification was insufficient because the plan did not indicate the location of the building in relation to the land on which the building was constructed.

22. McPherson J, with whose reasons Campbell CJ agreed, rejected the purchaser's argument in the following passage:[10]

> "However, there are, in the case of a building not yet constructed, obvious difficulties in describing and identifying the precise compartment of airspace into which the constructed unit will fit, and I am satisfied that by s. 49(2)(a) the legislature does not require this to be done. The lot is sufficiently identified by the unit number, lot number, the floor on which it is intended to be, and the detailed drawing contained in the eighth schedule. That is not to say that a purchaser has no need to be, or in the present case has not been, informed of the geographical aspect of the unit which he has agreed to buy. Ordinarily one would expect him before contract to make inquiries or perhaps ask to see a plan of the building to determine its location on the land. But it is quite a different matter to suggest that the incorporation of such information is required in order to 'identify' the lot. In my opinion, s. 49(2)(a) does not impose such a requirement."

23. The appellant argued that the decisions on s 49 should not be applied because the text and purpose of that section differed from the purposed underlying s 21 of LSA, but the differences are not significant for present purposes. In Mirvac Queensland Pty Ltd v Beioley & Anor[11] McMurdo J applied McPherson J's analysis in holding that s 21 of LSA did not require a statement of the area of a proposed lot. McPherson J's reasoning is equally applicable in relation to the appellant's arguments about the absence of precise dimensions, the doubt about the location of proposed Lot 51 within the first floor of the relevant building, and any imprecision in the description of the land by a street address rather than a real property description. The identification of property to be sold as a numbered lot that will bear that number in a described plan to be registered and with reference to a described scheme to be recorded was a "precise" identification which was "adequate and sufficient"[12] at the time of the contract. If further information was required to ensure a "clear" identification, sufficient information for that purpose was supplied in the plans and elevations annexed to the contract.

24. The primary judge was correct in holding that the respondent's statement clearly identified the lot to be purchased in conformity with s 21 of LSA.

25. Section 25(1) of LSA conferred a right upon the appellant to avoid the contract for non-compliance with s 21(1) only if the appellant had been "materially prejudiced by the failure" to clearly identify the lot to be purchased. The appellant did not challenge the primary judge's finding that there was no evidence that the appellant was prejudiced by the failure.

26. The appellant argued that she was nevertheless prejudiced because the alleged non-compliance with s 21(1) practically prevented her from adducing evidence to prove that she had been prejudiced. That is plainly not so. If, contrary to my conclusion, s 21 required a more detailed description of the proposed lot, the appellant might have adduced evidence, for example, that (if it was the case) the absence of necessary details contributed to her misunderstanding of the nature of the property, she lacked an opportunity to take advantage of the invitation in the Disclosure Documents to view detailed floor plans, she was misled by those plans or the contract description, the amenity of Lot 51 was less desirable or it was worth less than would have been the case if it had been in a different location on the first floor of "Building J", or the Lot was worth less than the purchase price. The onus lay upon the appellant to prove that she was materially prejudiced by the failure and she failed to fulfil that onus.

Authorities upon similar provisions suggest that "materially prejudiced" in this context means disadvantaged in a way which is substantial or of much consequence,[13] but a different view on that issue would not assist the appellant. If there was a non-compliance with s 21(1)(a), the appellant did not establish that it caused her any prejudice at all. The appellant therefore failed to establish that she was entitled to avoid the contract for the alleged non-compliance.

Body Corporate and Community Management Act* 1997 (Qld), s 213

28. Subsection 213(1) of the BCCMA requires that the seller of a proposed lot must give the buyer a disclosure statement before the contract is entered into. One requirement for such a disclosure statement, in s 213(2)(e)(i), is that it be accompanied by the proposed community management statement. Subsection 213(4) provides that the disclosure statement must be "substantially complete". Subsection 213(6) provides that if the contract has not already been settled, the buyer may cancel the contract if the seller has not complied with subsection 213(1). Subsection 213(7) provides that the seller does not fail to comply with subsection 213(1) merely because the disclosure statement, although substantially complete as at the day the contract is entered into, contains inaccuracies.

29. The primary judge referred also to s 214, which permits variation of a disclosure statement by the giving of a further statement, and to s 217, which confers a right of the buyer to cancel the contract in specified circumstances. Those provisions are not relevant to the issues in the appeal. The appellant's only contention under this heading is that she validly cancelled the contract under s 213(6) on 28 January 2009. The appellant argued that s 213(6) entitled her to terminate the contract because the disclosure statement failed to identify exclusive use areas, it did not include a services location diagram, and it failed to include a concept plan. I have already explained why the failure to identify exclusive use areas was not significant.

Services location diagram

30. The appellant argued that the omission of location diagrams for service easements prevented the disclosure statement given under s 213(1) from being substantially complete. The appellant referred to s 66(1)(d) of BCCMA, which requires a community management statement to include one or more services location diagrams for all service easements for the standard format lots included in the scheme and for the common property for the standard format lots.

31. It was common ground that the disclosure statement did not include a services location diagram. The primary judge held that the disclosure statement was substantially complete as at the day the contract was entered into so that the appellant was not able to cancel the contract in reliance on s 213. His Honour reasoned that the omission of the services location diagram was not shown to be a highly significant part of the disclosure it required, as was evidenced by the lack of any claim of material prejudice.[14] The primary judge referred also to the likelihood that, at the time of the contract, a services location diagram was not required by s 66(1)(d) because the scheme was not one for which development approval had been given after the commencement of that paragraph.[15]

32. As to the last point, in my respectful opinion the absence of development approval at the time of the contract did not render s 66(1)(d) irrelevant in relation to the obligations under ss 213(1) and 213(2)(e)(i) to give a "proposed" community management statement. The expressed premise of s 213(1) is that the proposed lot will be "included in a community title scheme when the scheme is established". The proposed community management statement should therefore include the provisions which, at the time that proposed statement is given, the seller proposes to include in the community management statement when it is recorded. Presumably a development approval for this proposed scheme had not been given before s 66(1)(d) commenced on 4 March 2003,[16] but if the approval had not been obtained before the contract was made the respondent must have intended to obtain it before the statement was recorded. That was reflected in the condition precedent in clause 3.1(a) of the contract that the appellant obtain all necessary local government approvals for the development.

Section 213(2)(e)(i) therefore incorporated the requirements of s 66(1)(d) to the extent that those requirements would be applicable in a community management statement which would be recorded after the necessary approval had been obtained.

33. Accordingly, the proposed community management statement which accompanied the disclosure statement was incomplete because it did not include any proposed services location diagrams for any proposed service easements. There was no evidence about precisely what was proposed at the time of the contract in that respect, save perhaps what might be inferred from the services location diagrams subsequently included in the further statement given by the respondent on 10 February 2009, but it may be assumed that some such service easements were always intended to be included. The question is whether the absence from the original statement of any diagram showing those easements means that the statement was not "substantially complete" in terms of s 213(4).

34. Because there was no services location diagram which identified what was proposed the disclosure was not complete but it does not follow that it was not "substantially" complete. The provision of such a diagram is merely one of the numerous requirements for a community management statement specified in s 66, which is itself merely one of the matters required to be disclosed under s 213. The appellant did not adduce any evidence to suggest that the absence of the diagram was significant in relation to proposed Lot 51, the proposed common property, or in any respect. Nor did the appellant argue that any particular feature of the diagram that was subsequently supplied indicated that the omission from the original disclosure was significant. The appellant's argument was instead that the absence of disclosure about any one of the numerous matters required to be disclosed itself established a substantial deficiency in the disclosure. That requires a non-literal and unlikely construction of s 213(4), which simply provides that the disclosure statement must be substantially complete. It does not provide that every item required to be included in the disclosure statement must be substantially complete.

35. I would affirm the primary judge's decision that the appellant failed to fulfil its onus of proving that the incompleteness in the disclosure statement was substantial.

Concept plan

36. The appellant argued that the primary judge failed to deal with the argument at trial that the disclosure statement was not substantially complete because the accompanying, proposed community management statement did not include concept plans which illustrated the intended progressive development of the scheme as s 66(1)(f) required. That is not correct. The primary judge referred to s 66(1)(f) and held that the annexures in the disclosure statements complied with the requirements that the community management statement explain the proposed development and be illustrated by concept drawings.[17] I am not persuaded that there was any error in that conclusion. It is therefore unnecessary to consider whether this scheme was intended "to be developed progressively" within the meaning of s 66(1)(f).

Former s 212 of BCCMA

37. At the time when the contract was made s 212 of BCCMA[18] ("former s 212") provided:

> "(1) A contract entered into by a person (the seller) with another person (the buyer) for the sale to the buyer of a lot intended to come into existence as a lot included in a community titles scheme when the scheme is established or changed must provide that settlement must not take place earlier than 14 days after the seller gives advice to the buyer that the scheme has been established or changed.
> (2) Also, when the contract is entered into, there must be a proposed community management statement for the scheme as established or changed.
> (3) The buyer may cancel the contract if—
>
> > (a) there has been a contravention of subsection (1) or (2); and
> > (b) the contract has not already been settled."

38. The contract did not provide "that settlement must not take place earlier than 14 days after the seller gives advice to the buyer that the scheme has been established or changed". Clause 26.1 provided:

> "When a separate title for the Lot has issued and the Seller is of the opinion that all other Conditions Precedent contained in clause 3.1 will be satisfied within fourteen (14) days, the Seller may give notice to the Buyer calling for settlement. Settlement is due fourteen (14) days after the Seller gives that notice."

39. The Conditions Precedent in clause 3.1 were:

> "(a) the Seller obtaining all necessary Local Government approvals for the Stage and the Development generally;
> (b) construction of the Lot being substantially complete, except for minor omissions and defects in respect of which the Project Manager has certified that rectification will not prejudice the convenient use of the Lot;
> (c) registration of the Plan;
> (d) recording of the Community Management Statement establishing the Scheme under the BCCM Act; and > (e) issue of a Certificate of Classification under the Building Act for the Stage."

40. The primary judge rejected the appellant's contention that she had validly cancelled the contract under former s 212 because clause 26.1 of the contract had the effect required by that section and, in any event, any right in the appellant to cancel the contract had been taken away by the replacement of former s 212 by the Body Corporate and Community Management Amendment Act 2009 (Qld)[19] with a new provision which applied in relation to the contract.[20]

Non-compliance with former s 212

41. The aim of former s 212 was to ensure that the buyer learned that the scheme had been established in sufficient time before settlement to make the necessary searches and enquiries.[21] The appellant argued that clause 26.1 did not fulfil that aim because it did not require the seller to inform the buyer that the scheme had been established. A notice merely calling for settlement in 14 days did not meet the statutory requirements. The respondent argued that it was not necessary for the contract to use the words of former s 212 and that clause 26.1 was to the effect required by that section.

42. Decisions of this Court establish that former s 212 was satisfied if the contract made provision to the effect stated in that section.[22] The contract need not require the settlement notice to state that the scheme has been established if that was implicit in the notice.[23] The contract in Bossichix nevertheless did not comply with former s 212 because the contract permitted the seller to insist upon settlement 14 days after registration of the building format plan. The difficulty was that under the Land Title Act 1994 (Qld) the scheme was established upon the recording of the community management statement and that might not occur until after the lot was created by registration of the plan.[24]

43. Clause 11.1 of this contract provides that title to the Lot is under the Land Title Act 1994 (Qld) and the Scheme will be established under BCCMA. Although the contract describes the property contracted to be sold as "proposed Lot 51", under clause 26.1 the notice calling for settlement may not be given until after issue of a separate title for "the Lot". A certificate containing an indefeasible title for a lot may be issued by the registrar on request once the particulars of the lot have been recorded, but there is no requirement in the Land Title Act 1994 (Qld) for the "issue" of any document of title for a lot.[25] The statement in clause 26.1 that a separate title has issued presumably refers to the point in time at which the "the Lot" is created and indefeasible title is established by the contemporaneous recording of particulars of that lot in the freehold register.[26] "Lot" is defined by the contract to mean a "proposed Lot in the "Scheme"" which is to be sold under the contract. "Scheme" is defined to mean "the Community Title Scheme to be established upon recording of the Community Management Statement (for Stage 1 of the Development) and registration of the Plan (for Stage 1 of the Development)". Accordingly, although a lot is created immediately upon registration of the plan, the expression "the Lot" in clause 26.1 connotes both registration of the plan and the recording of the community management statement. The establishment of the scheme is not expressed as a condition precedent, but the scheme will be established upon satisfaction of both of the conditions precedent in clause 3.1(c) (registration of the Plan) and (d) (recording of the Community Management Statement establishing the Scheme). In that context, the provision in clause 26.1 which allows "other" conditions precedent to be satisfied within the 14 days refers to conditions precedent other than those in (c) and (d).

44. The appellant argued that a similar construction was rejected in Bossichix, but the settlement clause in that case unambiguously required settlement fourteen days after the plan was registered, even if the community management statement was not recorded at the same time.[27] In this case the parties' contractual intention, objectively ascertained, was that the respondent could give a settlement notice only after both events had occurred.

45. However clause 26.1 provided simply for fourteen days' notice calling upon the buyer to settle the contract at that time. The respondent did not argue that a requirement for advice to the effect that the scheme had been established should be implied in clause 26.1. The conclusion seems inevitable that the contract did not require the settlement notice to advise the appellant that the scheme had been established. Unlike the provision held to be sufficient in Hannah & Ors v TW Hedley (Investments) & Ors,[28] the contract did not even require the settlement notice to advise that the conditions constituting establishment of the scheme (registration of the plan and recording of the scheme) had been satisfied. Whilst it was implicit in the giving of a settlement notice under clause 26.1 of the contract that the scheme had been established, former s 212 literally required the contract to provide for the seller to give the buyer advice to that effect. Having regard to the aim and consumer protection purpose of former s 212, the rather surprising results that follow from that literal meaning do not justify departure from it.[29]

46. For these reasons the contract did not comply with former s 212(1).

The effect of the Amendment Act

47. Shortly after this Court's decision in Bossichix on 5 June 2009, BCCMA was amended by the Body Corporate and Community Management Amendment Act 2009 (Qld). The Amendment Act commenced on 22 June 2009. Section 3 of the Amendment Act replaced former s 212 with a new s 212 as follows:

"(1) This section applies to a contract entered into by a person (the seller) with another person (the buyer) for the sale to the buyer of a lot intended to come into existence as a lot included in a community titles scheme when the scheme is established or changed.
(2) The contract is taken to include a term (the deemed term) providing that, despite any other term of the contract, settlement must not take place earlier than 14 days after the seller gives advice to the buyer that the scheme has been established or changed.
(3) The deemed term has priority over any other term of the contract relating to settlement.
(4) Without limiting subsection (3), any notice the seller gives to the buyer is void to the extent it is inconsistent with the deemed term."

48. Section 4 of the Amendment Act also inserted in BCCMA a new heading, Part 6A "Transitional provision for Body Corporate and Community Management Amendment Act 2009", and s 362A as follows:

"362A Section 212 to have retrospective affect

(1) Section 212, as inserted by the Body Corporate and Community Management Amendment Act 2009, (the inserted section) applies, to the exclusion of existing section 212(1), to a contract mentioned in the inserted section whether entered into before or after the commencement.
(2) Subject to subsection (3), subsection (1) applies for all purposes (including a legal proceeding started but not decided before the commencement).
(3) Subsection (1)—

(a) does not apply for the purpose of a contract settled before 5 June 2009; and
(b) does not apply for the purpose of—

[140293]

(i) a contract that has, before 5 June 2009, been lawfully cancelled because the contract failed to make provision as required by existing section 212(1); or
(ii) a legal proceeding relating to the lawfulness of the cancellation; and

(c) does not apply for the purpose of a legal proceeding decided before the commencement.
(4) In this section—

commencement means the commencement of this section.

existing section 212(1) means section 212(1) as in force before the commencement.

legal proceeding, in susbsection (2), includes an appeal from a legal proceeding mentioned in subsection (3)(c)."

49. The primary judge held that the Amendment Act applied with retrospective effect in relation to the appellant's legal proceedings started but not decided before the commencement of the amending Act, unless the contract had been lawfully cancelled before 5 June 2009 under the former s 212(3). The primary judge concluded that the appellant had not attempted to cancel the contract because of non-compliance with s 212 until she purported to do so by facsimile from her solicitors dated 12 June 2009 and received by the respondent's then solicitors on 16 June 2009. By that time former s 212 had been replaced. The primary judge therefore held that the appellant had not validly cancelled the contract under former s 212.[30]

50. It was not contentious that the appellant's repudiations of the contract by her solicitor's letters sent before she commenced proceedings were expressed to be based upon grounds other than non-compliance with former s 212. The appellant first expressly purported to cancel the contract under former s 212 by letter from the appellant's solicitors dated 12 June 2009, which seems to have been received by the respondent's solicitors on 16 June 2009. The appellant did not challenge the primary judge's conclusion that this letter was not relevant to the present issue because it was sent after 5 June 2009. The appellant argued, however, that the primary judge should have held that s 362A(3)(b)(i) and (ii) of the Amendment Act applied in relation to this contract because, before 5 June 2009, the contract had been "lawfully cancelled because the contract failed to make provision as required by existing s 212" and because her originating application was a legal proceeding "relating to the lawfulness of the cancellation".

51. The appellant argued that the primary judge's reasoning was founded upon a factual error that the appellant had not attempted to cancel the contract in reliance upon the former s 212 until after 5 June 2009. The appellant contended that she had cancelled the contract when she served her originating application in April 2009. The appellant argued that service of that application seeking a declaration that she had validly terminated the contract under s 212 amounted to communication of an election to terminate the contract on that basis. In an alternative argument, the appellant contended that she had effectively cancelled the contact under former s 212(3) by her solicitor's earlier letters even though those letters had not referred to non-compliance with or cancellation under s 212.

52. In relation to the latter argument the appellant relied upon Shepherd v Felt & Textiles of Australia Ltd[31] as it was explained in Minion v Graystone Pty Ltd.[32] In Minion v Greystone, McPherson J referred to Sir Owen Dixon's observation in Williams v Frayne,[33] in a passage cited with approval in this Court in Landers v Schmidt[34] that:[35]

> "… as a general rule, it is enough that upon true facts a party is entitled to act as he has done, and his justification is independent of his own knowledge of the facts (Cp. the cases mentioned in Shepherd v Felt & Textiles of Australia Ltd)."

McPherson J held that the authorities supported the broad principle that an "action taken must be capable of being justified at law, but that the grounds of justification, although they must have existed, need not have been known or relied upon at the time the action was taken."[36]

No authority was cited which directly concerned the requirements of an effective cancellation under former s 212(3) of BCCMA, but there is authority concerning the requirements for an effective cancellation under s 214. Section 214 applies in some circumstances where a disclosure statement is varied by a further statement. In the relevant cases s 214(4) empowers the buyer to cancel the contract if it has not been settled, if the buyer would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete, and if the cancellation "is effected by written notice given to the seller" within a specified time. That provision was considered in Latitude Developments Pty Ltd v Haswell.[37] P Lyons J analysed authorities, including Minion v Graystone, and held that a notice of termination was an effective exercise of the right to cancel the contract under s 214(4) of BCCMA even though the notice instead invoked a right to terminate the contract under s 25 of LSA and s 217 of BCCMA.

54. As appears from P Lyons J's analysis, there are conflicting decisions relating to that question[38] and the question whether the principle expressed in Shepherd v Felt & Textiles of Australia Ltd applied in a similar statutory context, under s 49(5) of the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 (Qld), was expressly left open by Mason, Deane and Dawson JJ in Deming No 456 Pty Ltd v Brisbane Unit Development Corporation Pty Ltd.[39] I would add that Minion v Graystone and the decisions cited in that case concerned the exercise of common law and contractual powers rather than the exercise of statutory powers. The point is an important one and we heard only quite limited argument about it. In these circumstances I think it preferable to refrain from deciding whether a purported cancellation for an alleged non-compliance with a different statutory provision may be an effective cancellation of the contract under former s 212(3). It is not necessary to decide that question because of the effect of the Amendment Act, to which I now turn.

55. The appellant commenced her proceeding in the trial division by an originating application filed on 14 April 2009. The application sought declarations that the contract was void for uncertainty, that the contract was properly terminated by the appellant on the 24 November 2008 by reason of non-compliance with the provisions of s 365(3) of PAMDA, that the appellant was entitled to avoid or not complete the contract pursuant to s 25 of LSA for non-compliance with s 21 of that Act, that the appellant was, by reason of non-compliance with s 213 of BCCMA entitled to cancel a contract, or "that the [appellant] is, by reason of non-compliance with s 212 of the BCCMA entitled to cancel the Contract".

56. The appellant did not seek a declaration that she had validly terminated the contract because of non-compliance with former s 212. The contrast between the form of the claimed declaration concerning the alleged non-compliance with former s 212 and the form of the claimed declarations concerning uncertainty and s 365(3) of PAMDA emphasises the point. In relation to former s 212, the appellant sought only a declaration that she had an entitlement to cancel the contract because of the alleged non-compliance with that section. Although the appellant had repudiated the contract by refusing to settle and by purporting to terminate or cancel the contract on grounds other than non-compliance with former s 212, her originating application plainly did not constitute an election to cancel the contract because of non-compliance with s 212.[40]

57. It is clear enough that "the cancellation" in s 362A(3)(b)(ii) of BCCMA refers to a cancellation described in subparagraph (i). Accordingly the only legal proceeding which qualifies under s 362A(3)(b)(ii) is a proceeding which relates to the lawfulness of a purported cancellation before 5 June 2009. The application for a declaration concerning former s 212 did not fit that description because the claimed declaration did not relate to any purported cancellation. It related only to the question whether an entitlement to cancel the contract had arisen.

58. The remaining question is whether the exception to retrospectivity in s 362A(3)(b)(i) is applicable if the appellant's purported cancellation of the contract by her solicitor's letters before 5 June 2009 was effective under the principle explained by McPherson J in Minion v Graystone. In my opinion s 362A(3)(b)(i) was not applicable, even if the appellant's purported cancellation of the contract on other grounds should have been regarded as effective under former s 212 when it was in force.

59. The appellant argued that her cancellation of the contract amounted to a vested right and she invoked the presumption against imputing to the legislature an intention retrospectively to affect vested rights.[41] However there is no doubt that the Amendment Act was intended to affect vested rights. Section 362A(1) undoubtedly applies the new s 212 to contracts entered into before that section commenced. Under s 362A(2), that amendment also applies in relation to legal proceedings which were started before the commencement of the amendment, subject only to the effect of s 362A(3).

60. The issue concerns the breadth of the exception to retrospectivity in subsection (3). That exception applies only in relation to one category of lawful cancellations, namely, a cancellation because of non-compliance with the former s 212. Had it been intended that the exception would apply to any lawful cancellation the words "because the contract failed to make provision as required by existing section 212(1)" in s 362A(3)(b)(i) would have been unnecessary. Furthermore, the Amendment Act afforded to purchasers in the appellant's position the same right to fourteen days' notice of the establishment of the community management scheme which had been the object of former s 212. That fulfilled the underlying purpose of former s 212. In that context, it is not surprising that the Amendment Act narrowly confined the exception to the retrospective operation of the new provision.

61. I would hold that s 362A(3)(b)(i) does not comprehend a cancellation which was expressed to be made only under and for non-compliance with provisions other than former s 212. For the reasons I have given, that should not be regarded as a cancellation "because the contract failed to make provision as required by existing s 212". Upon that construction the new s 212 applied in relation to the contract to the exclusion of former s 212. The appellant had no entitlement to terminate the contract under the new s 212.

62. In the result, the appellant could not rely upon former s 212 to justify her purported termination of the contract.

Proposed order

63. I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Philippides J: I have had the advantage of reading the reasons for judgment of Fraser JA. I agree with the reasons of his Honour and with the proposed order.

Judgment delivered on 19 November 2010

Community schemes — Appeal by the developer (appellant) from original decision — Further Statement to correct inaccuracies in original Disclosure Statement provided after Stage 1 completion — Purchaser cancelled contract within 14 days due to changes in Further Statement — Original decision held purchaser would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete contract in light of changes to original Disclosure Statement — Purchaser validly cancelled contract under Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, s 214(4) — Developer argued there was in fact no material prejudice — Inconsistency was the result of an oversight which was corrected once it became known — Cancellation of contract by respondent based on confusion — Respondent buyer did not take time to make inquiries to resolve confusion — Appeal by developer dismissed — Onus not on buyer to make inquiries in relation to inaccuracies found between the two statements — Material prejudice was established on the evidence.

This was an appeal by the developer from the decision of Wilson J, Wilson v Mirvac Queensland Pty Ltd (2010) LQCS ¶90-157.

The developer (appellant) built a staged residential community scheme known as Tennyson Reach Development. The purchaser (respondent) entered into a contract for sale of proposed residential lot in stage 2 of that development. The developer gave the purchaser a Disclosure Statement in fulfilment of its obligations under s 213 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act.

After stage 1 of the development had been completed, the developer provided the purchaser with a Further Statement pursuant to s 214 of the Act, explaining how the first statement was or had become inaccurate and how the inaccuracies were being rectified, together with a substitute Disclosure Statement incorporating the changes. The substitute Disclosure Statement differed from the first Disclosure Statement in that the following was missing from the Asset Register and the Equipment Schedule intended for the Body Corporate:

- CCTV, cameras and security monitoring equipment
- BBQ, outdoor tables and chairs
- artworks and loose decorative items within lift foyer and common areas, and
- six lift curtains.

Original claims

On receipt of the Further Statement, the purchaser purported to exercise its right to cancel the contract under the Act. She argued that she would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete, given the extent to which the first Disclosure Statement had become inaccurate. The inaccuracies which she complained of in a letter to the developer were as follows:

> "Security is and was a very important consideration for my husband and myself, given our personal circumstances, and the proximity of the Farringford building to the State Tennis Centre and proposed public parklands. Further if the fee to the caretaker was based, even in part, on the security monitoring function, and that function does not have to be performed, the fee paid is accordingly inflated.
> To a lesser extent, but still importantly, the absence of artworks, decorative items and a BBQ and tables and chairs detracts from the amenity of the development, and the Seller's unwillingness to supply these items marks an unwarranted departure from the initial Disclosure Statement. If the Body Corporate has to acquire these items it will put all unit-holders to expense.
>
> The provision of lift curtains is necessary to prevent damage occurring if items are being moved in or out of the building, and to minimise the expense that would be incurred by the body corporate if that were to occur.
> I regard the amendment to clause 4.4, the inclusion of the Body Corporate Assent Register, the omission of the assets to which I have referred, and the provision of the Caretaking Agreement to be that I would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract. Accordingly I cancel the contract pursuant to s 214(4) of the Act".

The developer responded to the purchaser that by oversight, some of the items which have already been provided by the Seller upon completion of Stage 1 were not listed on the Body Corporate Assets Register in the Further Statement. The developer enclosed a Further Statement confirming the Seller's original undertaking to provide the assets listed in the original Disclosure Statement and annexing a copy of the amended Body Corporate Assets Register to the purchaser. The developer submitted that the purchaser was not entitled to cancel the contract because the original Disclosure Statement never became inaccurate; the inaccuracy was in the Further Statement. It also submitted that the purchaser could not be materially prejudiced by the omission of the property from the Further Statement because it was not property which the developer had contracted to provide the purchaser; rather it was to be property of a third party, the Body Corporate.

The purchaser was entitled to cancel the contract and she validly did so. The Body Corporate was to come into existence on the establishment of the scheme and the purchaser as the owner of a lot would be one of its members. Under the original Disclosure Statement the developer undertook to provide at its costs, items of property which, upon establishment of the Body Corporate, would become Body Corporate Assets. The Body Corporate would administer those assets for the benefit of lot owners including the purchaser. In these circumstances, it does not follow that because the property was to be Body Corporate Assets, the purchaser could not be materially prejudiced by its omission.

In terms of material prejudice, it was enough for the purchaser to establish that she would be disadvantaged in a substantial way if she were obliged to complete the contract on the premise that the Body Corporate would not have the CCTV security system and other items of property which had been included in the original Disclosure Statement and omitted from the Further Statement. Viewed objectively, a person in the purchaser's circumstances would be disadvantaged in a substantial way by the omission of the security system and arrangements for its management.

The appeal

The developer submitted that the primary judge erred in finding that:

- that the Disclosure Statement was inaccurate
- that the purchaser was materially prejudiced when she was never told in clear terms that she would not receive the camera security system, and
- that the evidence was sufficient to establish material prejudice.

The developer's argument was that although there may have been some inconsistencies between the two statements, there was in fact no material prejudice because the inconsistency was the result of an oversight which was corrected once it became known. With or without that correction the original Disclosure Statement remained accurate.

The respondent did not suffer any material prejudice as the representations by the developer relating to the camera security system remained equivocal. Representations in Ch 3 of the Further Statement that the CCTV camera would be "provided to select locations" and the Ch 6 representation of the terms of the caretaking agreement which terms were at best only suggestive of a security system being installed. The respondent's cancellation based on those inconsistencies in the two statements were described by the respondent as "confusing". However, if the respondent had taken the time to make an inquiry, she would have resolved her confusion as it would have been revealed that the omission from the assets register was just an inadvertent mistake and the fact is that the items had been provided for Stage 1 of the development. The respondent made no such inquiry and gave cancellation notice on the 13th day after receiving the Further Statement, the respondent gave no time to clear up any confusion.

The developer also submitted that the matter should go to trial because it might wish to lead evidence of the limited nature of the security afforded by the camera security system and because of the reduced benefit of the system the respondent would not result in material prejudice. The primary judge rejected this submission, on the basis that Mirvac failed to adduce any such evidence. The developer also argued that the benefits of the camera security system as set out in the first Disclosure Statement, could not reasonably provide the level of security which the respondent expected or which would be adequate for the protection of herself and her family. This was a reference to her husband being then a Federal Magistrate who had been provided by the Commonwealth of Australia with a security system at his residence which included a monitored security system, a panic button and Crim-safe screens.

Held: Appeal dismissed.

Fraser JA (with whom McMurdo P and Jones J agreed)

The Disclosure Statement was inaccurate

1. There was inconsistencies between the two statements. The buyer was entitled to regard the most recent statement (Further Statement) as the warranted information. This meant that the camera security system was not to be part of the assets of the Body Corporate and that the Body Corporate did not propose to acquire it. As such the Disclosure Statement information was no longer accurate and the finding of the learned primary judge to this effect was plainly correct.

Material prejudice was established

2. There is no statutory provision obliging the buyer to make inquiries to resolve any inaccuracy and there are good reasons why no such obligation should be inferred. A buyer in such circumstances is placed in the position of having to make an election to exercise alternative and inconsistent rights. The circumstance upon which the election arises — the existence of inaccuracy — stems from the documents and can be objectively determined. That is important in the interests of certainty because contracting parties ought to know where they stand. Imposing an obligation to inquire may well lead to uncertainty, either as to the facts upon which an election could be made or whether the right of election continues to exist. Mirvac's argument that there was an obligation on the respondent to resolve any sense of confusion which Mirvac documents gave rise to is rejected.

3. On the only evidence led below, there was no challenge to the fact that the presence of a security system was "a very important matter" for the respondent. Given the location of the Farringford building and the likely intrusion of non-residents, the presence of a security system would, inherently, be important to residents generally. It was sufficiently important to be raised by the seller in its promotional material. The finding of the learned primary judge that "viewed objectively, a person in the respondent's circumstances in August 2009 would be disadvantaged in a substantial way" was clearly open on the evidence. Mirvac has not demonstrated any error in the finding of the learned primary judge that the respondent was materially prejudiced by the omission of the camera security system. The grounds of appeal were not made out and the appeal is dismissed.

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

[140300]

M D Martin (instructed by Clarke Kann) for the appellant.

S Lumb (instructed by Van de Graaff Lawyers) for the respondent.

Before: McMurdo P, Fraser JA and Jones J.

Editorial comment: In Fraser JA's judgment, the correct test for material prejudice is derived directly from the terms of the legislation. In the context of s 214 (and also s 217), the question of prejudice depends upon the information which has come to the buyer's actual knowledge and whether the information on an objective basis is inaccurate. The prejudice for the purpose of s 214 flowing from the inaccuracy arises from some detriment or disadvantage to the buyer. In its ordinary meaning "prejudice" in this context means "to injury or to impair the validity (of a right, claim or interest) to damage". A person is "prejudiced" when affected disadvantageously or detrimentally. A person would be "materially prejudiced" if disadvantaged "substantially" or "to an important extent". It is this concept that requires a consideration of the personal circumstances of the buyer in what is otherwise a determination to be made objectively. The concept of using an objective standard but having regard to personal characteristics.

The material prejudice for the purpose of s 214 (and s 217), has to be assessed in the context of the buyer's personal circumstances being required to complete the contract on its changed terms. The evaluation of whether any disadvantage or detriment reaches the level of material prejudice such as to warrant cancellation of the contract must be objectively determined in accordance with community standards.

It is also an interesting point to practitioners that the buyer may rely on the disclosure statement and further statement on face value. It is not an obligation on the buyer to investigate or resolve any apparent inaccuracies between the two statements. In Fraser JA's judgment this is in keeping with the desirability of contractual certainty and with commercial realities. The right to elect to cancel the contract is based on the existence of inaccuracy and, assuming material prejudice, the buyer would have the right to cancel at any time within the 14-day period. But at any time prior to cancellation, the seller has the power to remove any inaccuracy. If the inaccuracy is removed by the giving of a rectifying statement, the statutory right to cancel would be lost. Once the contract is cancelled, there would be no further opportunity for compliance with the disclosure requirements. As a consequence, the period of uncertainty is limited to the time preceding the election to cancel but in any event, to a period of no longer than 14 days. Any further limitation on a buyer's right to cancel would result in a further prejudice to the buyer's interest.

Margaret McMurdo P: I agree with Jones J's reasons for dismissing this appeal with costs.

2. This case highlights the onerous nature of the requirements placed on vendors selling units "off the plan" by Ch 5 Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) (the Act). The original disclosure statement of the appellant/vendor (Mirvac) of December 2007 was deemed under the Act to have become inaccurate once Mirvac sent the respondent/purchaser (Ms Wilson) the further disclosure statement provided in August 2009. This was because of the combined effect of s 214(1) and (5), s 215(1) and s 216 of the Act. It is true that Mirvac later assured Ms Wilson that, all respects relevant to this appeal, the further disclosure statement of 11 August 2009 was inaccurate and the original disclosure statement of 4 December 2007 was accurate. But this is of no assistance to Mirvac as, by the time it informed Ms Wilson of this, she had, as the trial judge and Jones J have explained, lawfully terminated the contract under s 214(4)(b).

3. Although this result may appear harsh to vendors, it is consistent with the scheme of Ch 5 of the Act, the terms of s 214 to s 216, and with the Act's primary object "to provide for flexible and contemporary communally based arrangements for the use of freehold land, having regard to the secondary objects".[1]

The most relevant of those secondary objects for present purposes is "to provide an appropriate level of consumer protection for … intending buyers of lots included in community title schemes; …"[2]

4. I agree with the orders proposed by Jones J.

Fraser JA: I have had the advantage of reading the reasons for judgment of Jones J. I agree with those reasons and the order proposed by his Honour.

Jones J: Mirvac Queensland Pty Ltd (hereinafter "Mirvac") appeals against a decision whereby the Court declared that the respondent, Catherine Frances Wilson, was entitled to cancel the contract which the parties had entered into on 4 December 2007. By that contract, the respondent had agreed to purchase a proposed lot in a staged community titled scheme development. As such, the contractual process was governed by the requirements of Chapter 5 Part 2 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 ("BCCMA"). Those requirements included provisions for the giving of information by the seller and for cancellation of the contract by the buyer if the information was, or became, inaccurate.

7. The respondent cancelled the contract by notice dated 24 August 2009. In cancelling the contract the respondent asserted she had a statutory right to do so pursuant to s 214(4) of BCCMA because she would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract on the terms of changed information identified in the further statement. The learned summary judge found the respondent to have been materially prejudiced by the changes and declared that the contract was validly cancelled.

8. Mirvac challenges the findings of the learned primary judge, asserting that there was no inaccuracy in the disclosure statement, that the disclosure statement did not become inaccurate by reason of the contents of the further statement and also, that there was no material prejudice to the respondent. It contends that the statutory right to cancel the contract did not arise in this instance.

Background facts

9. The development project was to be conducted in five stages and it involved the construction of six luxury high rise residential unit buildings. The subject lot was to be included in the third such residential unit as part of Stage 2 of the development. The proposed building was identified by the name "Farringford".

10. The community title scheme was established upon the completion of Stage 1 on 27 April 2009 and was known as "The Tennyson Reach Community Title Scheme No. 39925".

11. The respondent has acknowledged that prior to the signing of the contract, she received various documents as required by the BCCMA. These documents included a disclosure statement dated 4 December 2007. This document, including its various schedules, contained some 215 pages and dealt with topics which are identified by the following chapter headings:-

Chapter 1:	Information Disclosure
Chapter 2:	New Community Management Statement
Chapter 3:	Schedule of Finishes
Chapter 4:	Plans
Chapter 5:	Body Corporate Budget and Schedule of Levy Calculations and Lot Entitlements
Chapter 6:	Caretaking Agreement
Chapter 7:	Letting Agreement
Chapter 8:	Administration Agreement
Chapter 9:	Draft Site Management Plan
Chapter 10:	Power of Attorney Extract
Chapter 11:	FIRB Approval

Of significance, the disclosure statement in Chapter 1 dealt with the setting up of a body corporate to which Mirvac would provide certain assets. Relevantly, these included:-

> "4.4 Proposed Assets of the Body Corporate
>
> The Seller proposes to provide at its cost the following items of equipment and furnishings which will become Body Corporate Assets upon establishment of the Body Corporate, namely:
>
> Gymnasium/Lap Pool

Other Recreational Pools…

(c) BBQ, outdoor tables and chairs

General

(a) artworks and loose decorative items within lift foyer and common areas;
(b) CCTV, cameras and security monitoring equipment;
(c) Caretakers' office equipment;
(d) Caretakers' gardening equipment;
(e) Caretaker's vehicle for transport of refuse containers to compactor; and
(f) 6 lift curtains.

It is not proposed that the Body Corporate acquire any other assets after establishment of the Scheme, however, the Body Corporate may acquire other assets if the Body Corporate considers the assets would be beneficial to the operation of the Scheme.[3] "

13. In Chapter 3 of the disclosure statement, there is a schedule of standard inclusions and finishes for a typical apartment in the Farringford building containing the proposed lot. That schedule includes an entry as follows:-

"CCTV: Provided to select locations within the common property.[4] "

14. In Chapter 5 of the disclosure statement, are details of the body corporate contribution to be raised from the potential lot owners and a budget for the likely expenditure by the body corporate.

15. Chapter 6 of the disclosure statement sets out the terms of the proposed caretaker agreement which would impose on the caretaker the undertaking of a daily check "for any security breaches, vandalism, broken glass … and monitor (if installed) any close circuit security television cameras and keep daily video tapes for at least 7 days".[5]

16. On 6 August 2009, Mirvac provided a further statement as required by s 214 of the Act to rectify inaccuracies in the original disclosure statement. The letter enclosing the further statement was received by the respondent on 11 August 2009. The parties had agreed that the period for re-disclosure referred to in s 214(2) would be extended to the day on which the seller notified the buyer that the scheme had been established.[6]

17. On 24 August 2009, the respondent gave notice that she was cancelling the contract identifying eight grounds on which she claimed to be entitled so to do. They relate in particular to changes that were identified by the differences between the contents of the disclosure statement and the further statement referred to above. Only one such ground was sought to be litigated in the summary proceedings from which this appeal arises.

18. Foremost amongst the concerns raised by the respondent was the absence in the further statement of the provision of CCTV, cameras and security monitoring equipment to which reference had been made in clause 4.4 of the disclosure statement as set out in paragraph [13] above.

19. The further statement followed the same format as the disclosure statement using the same chapter headings but identifying changes chapter by chapter. In Chapter 1 of the further statement clause 4.4 was in the following terms:-

"4.4 Assets of the Body Corporate

> Details of the Body Corporate Assets are incorporated in Chapter 5 of this Disclosure Statement.
> It is not proposed that the Body Corporate acquire any other assets, however, the Body Corporate may acquire other assets if the Body Corporate considers the assets would be beneficial to the operation of the Scheme."[7]

20. The details of body corporate assets in Chapter 5 are in a list entitled "Body Corporate Asset Register"[8] and "Initial Body Corporate Equipment Schedule".[9] Neither of these lists make any reference to the provision of CCTV, cameras security monitoring equipment, BBQ, outdoor tables and chairs, artworks and loose decorative items within lift foyer and common areas, or the six lift curtains. Nor were those assets thereafter referred to in the further statement other than in the repetitions of the terms in the Schedule of Finishes and the Caretaker's Agreement as set out in the original disclosure statement. In this sense there was some internal inconsistency in the further statement. But the substantial difference arises in the comparison of the respective clauses 4.4 in Chapter 1 and the lack of provision of the particular assets referred to in the disclosure statement.

21. That was the difference relied upon by the respondent to assert there was inaccuracy in the original statement such that she would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract. As the material prejudice relied upon relates to security, it will be sufficient to refer to the missing items simply as the camera security system.

22. After the respondent had given notice of cancellation, Mirvac's solicitors wrote on 9 September 2009 advising that all assets listed in the original disclosure statement will be provided and that it was "by oversight that some of the items were not listed in the asset register".[10] A copy of an amended asset register containing the admitted items was attached to the letter.[11]

Statutory scheme

23. The statutory scheme requiring the provision of these statements is found in Division 2 of Chapter 5 of the BCCMA. By s 213 a seller of a proposed lot must give to an intending buyer a signed disclosure statement. The contents of the statement must include certain prescribed information, be accompanied by prescribed documents and identify regulations applying to the scheme. Of particular note is the requirement "to include details of all body corporate assets proposed to be acquired by the body corporate after the establishment or change of the scheme". For a proposed residential lot additional forms as required under the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 must also be given. The disclosure statement must be substantially complete as at the day the contract is entered into. Compliance with this section does not fail if there are inaccuracies in the statement. The consequence of inaccuracies, however, becomes significant for the purpose of s 214 and the following sections whose terms I set out in full:-

> 214 Variation of disclosure statement by further statement
> (1) This section applies if the contract has not been settled, and—
>
> (a) the seller becomes aware that information contained in the disclosure statement was inaccurate as at the day the contract was entered into; or
> (b) the disclosure statement would not be accurate if now given as a disclosure statement.
>
> (2) The seller must, within 14 days (or a longer period agreed between the buyer and seller) after subsection (1) starts to apply, give the buyer a further statement (the further statement) rectifying the inaccuracies in the disclosure statement.
> (3) The further statement must be endorsed with a date (the further statement date), and must be signed, by the seller or a person authorised by the seller.
> (4) The buyer may terminate the contract if—

(a) it has not already been settled; and

(b) the buyer would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract, given the extent to which the disclosure statement was, or has become, inaccurate; and

(c) the termination is effected by written notice given to the seller within 14 days, or a longer period agreed between the buyer and seller, after the seller gives the buyer the further statement.

(5) Subsections (1) to (4) continue to apply after the further statement is given, on the basis that the disclosure statement is taken to be constituted by the disclosure statement and any further statement, and the disclosure statement date is taken to be the most recent further statement date.

215 Statements and information sheet form part of contract

(1) The disclosure statement, and any material accompanying the disclosure statement, and each further statement and any material accompanying each further statement, form part of the provisions of the contract.

216 Buyer may rely on information

The buyer may rely on information in the disclosure statement and each further statement as if the seller had warranted its accuracy.

24. The terms of s 214(1) make it clear that a buyer can only become entitled to terminate the contract if firstly, there is an inaccuracy in the original disclosure statement or the disclosure statement becomes inaccurate. The inaccuracy must be "real or of substance as distinct from ephemeral or nominal"[12] such as to impact on the bargain. Secondly, by s 214(4) the buyer's right to cancel the contract arises only if the buyer is materially prejudiced given the extent of that inaccuracy. Thirdly, the right exists only for a limited time.

25. It is noted from the terms of s 215 that both the original document and the later statements have contractual effect. The respondent was entitled to rely upon the information in both as if Mirvac warranted their accuracy. These provisions highlight the level of consumer protection and disclosure that must be complied with. This is in keeping with the expressed secondary objects of the legislation set out in s 4(g) which provides:-

> "(g) to provide an appropriate level of consumer protection for owners and intending buyers of lots included in community titles schemes;"

26. In construing these sections little guidance can be gained from the decisions from other States because of the disparate terms of the legislative provisions — a point made by the authors of the article "Evaluating Information Disclosure to Buyers of Real Estate".[13] Consequently, close attention needs to be given to the decided cases on these sections and the equivalent provisions in the precursor legislation, the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980.

The decision below

27. Having considered the statutory provisions, the terms of the disclosure statements and the circumstances on which material prejudice was based, the learned primary judge found:-

> "[24] In providing the Further Statement, from which these items of Body Corporate property had been omitted, the respondent warranted that they would not be provided. The applicant had only 14 days in which to cancel the contract under s 214(4). The legislation did not cast any obligation, on the applicant to ensure that information in the Further Statement was accurate before acting on it. I accept the submission of her counsel that the statutory right of cancellation is dependent on the content of the Disclosure Statement and Further Statement and not on other facts unknown to the buyer, but known the seller.

[25] The applicant was entitled to cancel the contract if she would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete, given the extent to which the original Disclosure Statement was, or had become, inaccurate.

[35] In my view it would be enough for the applicant to establish that she would be disadvantaged in some substantial way if she were obliged to complete the contract on the premise that the body corporate would not have the CCTV security system and other items of property which had been included in the first Disclosure Statement and omitted from the Further Statement. I note that the applicant's assertion of material prejudice was based principally on the omission of the CCTV security system. She relied on the other omissions as compounding the prejudice.

[39] The apartment was to be the principal place of residence for the applicant, her husband, and two teenage children. It was adjacent to the Queensland Tennis Centre (a major public facility) and a busy public thoroughfare. At the time the applicant's husband's occupation was such that the whole family might reasonably have a heightened sense of vulnerability to unlawful attack. The security system had been promoted as an integral feature of the development and arrangements for its management. Viewed objectively, a person in the applicant's circumstances in August 2009 would be disadvantaged in a substantial way by its omission. That disadvantage was compounded by the omission of other items of property which would have enhanced the amenity of the apartment."

The issues

28. Mirvac contends that the learned primary judge erred in finding:-

(i) That the disclosure statement was inaccurate;
(ii) That the respondent was materially prejudiced when she was never told in clear terms that she would not receive the camera security system; and
(iii) That the evidence was sufficient to establish material prejudice.

Was the disclosure statement inaccurate?

29. Mirvac argues on appeal, as it did below, that the original disclosure statement remained accurate such that if the contract settled on those terms the respondent would receive what she had bargained. Mirvac further contends that the disclosure statement itself never became inaccurate and so on a literal construction of s 214(4)(b) the circumstances to found a cancellation of contract did not arise.

30. To rebut these suggestions, the respondent points to the preamble of the further statement in which Mirvac states that the information "has become inaccurate" and that the statement "rectifies any such inaccuracies by making the Further Statement".[14] Primarily, the respondent points to the absence of the camera security system in the list of assets attached to the further disclosure statement as the source of inaccuracy.

31. The substance of Mirvac's argument on this point is that although there may have been some inconsistencies between the two statements, there was in fact no material prejudice because the inconsistency was the result of an oversight which was corrected once it became known. With or without that correction the original disclosure statement remained accurate.

32. In my view, that argument overlooks the standing and the effect of the disclosure statements as provided for in the legislation. Firstly, it is necessary to note that the disclosure statement and each further statement form part of the contract and the vendor warrants their contents to be accurate (ss 215 and 216). Secondly, the obligation to disclose any inaccuracy in the information provided in the original disclosure statement continues to apply until completion. Thirdly, the date of the later statement is the disclosure statement date. (s 214(5)) If the correction of any inaccuracy is made then the corrected information becomes the subject of the warranty to apply at completion. Where a further statement has been made, the disclosure statement cannot thereafter be looked at in isolation to determine whether there is any inaccuracy. The information which the seller now warrants will be the basis on which the buyer will be compelled to settle. The issue for the buyer is whether to accept the change in the warranted information or, if there is material prejudice, to cancel the contract. This is consistent, not only with the legislative terms, but with the clear purpose of the legislation to protect buyers against having to settle on the contract which would not have been entered into had the relevant information been known.

33. In this instance there was inconsistency in the information contained in the two statements. The buyer was entitled to regard the most recent statement as the warranted information. This meant that the camera security system was not to be part of the assets of the body corporate and that the body corporate did not propose to acquire it. As such, the disclosure statement information was no longer accurate and the finding of the learned primary judge to this effect was plainly correct.

Was there material prejudice?

34. Mirvac contends that the respondent has not shown material prejudice because firstly, she was never told in clear terms that she would not receive the camera security system and secondly, that the evidence failed to establish that there was, in fact, any material prejudice in the circumstances.

35. As to the first of these points, Mirvac argues that as the result of the further statement the information about the camera security system remained equivocal. It points to the repeated representations in Chapter 3 of the further statement that the CCTV camera would be "provided to select locations"[15] and the Chapter 6 representation of the terms of the caretaking agreement which terms were at best only suggestive of a security system being installed.[16]

36. In giving notice of cancellation the respondent referred to those inconsistencies between the two statements, describing them as "confusing".[17]

37. Mirvac argues that any inquiry by the respondent to resolve her confusion would have revealed the inadvertent omission from the assets register and the fact that the items had been provided for Stage 1. She made no such inquiry. Mirvac also suggests that by giving a cancellation notice on the 13th day after receiving the further notice, the respondent gave it no time to clear up any confusion.

38. The difficulty for Mirvac in this argument is in showing that there was any obligation on the respondent either to make such an inquiry and to give notice of intention to cancel the contract. The inaccuracy was a result of the seller's conduct. If the inaccuracy was attended by material prejudice a buyer was placed in the situation of having to elect, within a 14 day period, whether to continue with the contract or to cancel it. A failure to cancel in the knowledge of an inaccuracy would result in the buyer losing the right to do so, notwithstanding the existence of material prejudice.

39. The respondent argues that if such an obligation existed the result would be that a buyer could not take any further statement at face value. That clearly is not the intention of the statutory terms. Counsel for the respondent drew support for this contention from the remarks of Peter Lyons J in Latitude Developments Pty Ltd v Haswell[18] where he said:-

> "[55] The test stated in s 214(4)(d) is whether 'the buyer would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract, given the extent to which the disclosure statement … has become … inaccurate'. On its face, this provision suggests that what is required > is a comparison between the information communicated by the disclosure statement, and that communicated by the further statement. On that basis, attempts made by Latitude Developments to mitigate the consequences of staging the development, which were not recorded in the further statement, would be irrelevant.

> [56] There is some merit in this approach. A buyer is allowed only 14 days within which to cancel the contract. The buyer may be located somewhere remote from the development. Verification of matters said to mitigate the effect of changes may require access to information not readily available to a buyer.
> [58] Moreover, it seems to me that the question of material prejudice cannot be determined by reference to facts which might have existed at the relevant date, but which were not known to the buyer, or of which it cannot at least be said that the buyer should have known them."

40. Counsel for the respondent also pointed out that the seller is usually the sole repository of relevant knowledge and would be well aware of the limited time available for inquiries, such that it may not always be easy for a buyer to make inquiries within that time.

41. The short answer to this issue is that there is no statutory provision obliging the buyer to make inquiries to resolve any inaccuracy and there are good reasons why no such obligation should be inferred. A buyer in such circumstances is placed in the position of having to make an election to exercise alternative and inconsistent rights. The circumstance upon which the election arises — the existence of inaccuracy — stems from the documents and can be objectively determined. That is important in the interests of certainty because contracting parties ought to know where they stand: Sargent v ASL Developments Limited[19] . Imposing an obligation to inquire may well lead to uncertainty, either as to the facts upon which an election could be made or whether the right of election continues to exist. Doubt as to these matters is inimical to contractual certainty and would also have the tendency to provoke litigation.

42. The time within which the election must be made, if it is not to be lost, is relatively short. This again is in keeping with the desirability of contractual certainty and with commercial realities. The right to elect is based on the existence of inaccuracy and, assuming material prejudice, the buyer would have the right to cancel at any time within the 14 day period. But at any time prior to cancellation, the seller has the power to remove any inaccuracy. If the inaccuracy is removed by the giving of a rectifying statement, the statutory right to cancel would be lost. Once the contract is cancelled, there would be no further opportunity for compliance with the disclosure requirements. As a consequence, the period of uncertainty is limited to the time preceding the election to cancel but in any event, to a period of no longer than 14 days. Any further limitation on a buyer's right to cancel would result in a further prejudice to the buyer's interest: Ferrcom Pty Ltd v Commercial Union Assurance Co of Australia Ltd.[20]

43. In this instance the respondent was confronted by information about the camera security system which rendered the original disclosure statement as inaccurate. The oblique references to the security system in Chapter 3, Standard of Finishes, and in Chapter 6, the Caretaking Agreement, were not such as to alter what was the substantial difference between the two documents — the lack of provision of the camera security assets. I reject Mirvac's argument that there was an obligation on the respondent to resolve any sense of confusion which the Mirvac documents gave rise to.

44. The second issue of material prejudice relates to whether the evidence was sufficient for a conclusion of prejudice to be drawn and whether, as Mirvac contends, the issue ought not to have been determined in a summary way. At the hearing Mirvac submitted that the matter should go to trial because it might wish to lead evidence of the limited nature of the security afforded by the camera security system and because of the reduced benefit of the system the respondent would not result in material prejudice. The learned primary judge rejected this submission, principally on the basis that Mirvac bore an evidentiary onus to raise that issue if it wished to rely upon it and that it failed to adduce any such evidence.

45. The issue presented for determination by the Originating Application was the validity of the respondent's notice cancelling the contract pursuant to s 214(4). The respondent bore the onus of establishing her entitlement to do so. As has been shown above, the question of inaccuracy fell to be determined on a consideration of the content of the two statements. The question of material prejudice was considered in the context of the affidavits of the respondent and her husband who were not cross-examined and against whose evidence no contrary evidence was led. The only evidence adduced on behalf of Mirvac was the affidavit of Steven Cardell which did not challenge the respondent's claim of material prejudice which had been the subject of detailed evidence. The onus imposed on the respondent below was thus satisfied giving her a prima facie entitlement to judgment. Thereafter, Mirvac bore an evidentiary onus to at least raise a basis for challenging the claim of prejudice. See Singh v Varinder Kaur[21] ; Hutchinson v Equititour Pty Ltd[22] . In the absence of any such evidence, the learned primary judge was correct in determining the issue in a summary way.

46. I turn then to the evidence of prejudice and Mirvac's assertion that in the absence of any detail as to the benefit of the camera security system, the lack of equipment could not be said to constitute "material prejudice".

47. To this end, Mirvac contended that the benefits of the camera security system as set out in the first disclosure statement, could not reasonably provide the level of security which the respondent expected or which would be adequate for the protection of herself and her family. This was a reference to the fact that the respondent's husband was then a Federal Magistrate who had been provided by the Commonwealth of Australia with a security system at his residence. This included a monitored security system, a panic button and crim-safe security screens.[23]

The question of material prejudice was not in this instance to be determined by a comparison of what the respondent had at her existing residence. Rather, the removal of the camera security system from the statement of assets had to be seen in the circumstances in which the proposed lot was located. In that regard, the Farringford building was in close proximity to a public arena, parklands, car-parks and a transport hub. At times the area would be used by large numbers of non-residents. Such circumstances gave rise to an expectation that effective security would be provided. Moreover, Mirvac conceded that the security system was promoted as part of its marketing effort.[24]

49. The security of her residence was a very important matter for the respondent as was acknowledged by Mirvac in the course of argument.[25] The omission of the camera security system was properly found to be a significant disadvantage to the respondent.

The concept of "material prejudice"

50. The parties are in substantial agreement as to the tests by which "material prejudice" is to be assessed. The learned primary judge, conscious of the fact that there was no authoritative decision on the point for the purpose of this legislation, considered a number of cases where references had been made to terms "material prejudice" and "materially affect". Her analysis and ultimate conclusion on this point is not challenged on this appeal. However, it is appropriate to relate the test to give the framework in which her Honour's finding of prejudice was arrived at. She said:-

> "[32] Some matters are clear.
> > (a) The focus is on the buyer. This suggests that the test is objective having regard to the particular buyer's circumstances: would someone in those circumstances be materially prejudiced?
> > (b) Given that the buyer has only 14 days in which to cancel the contract, and the completion date may still be some months away (as it was in this case), material prejudice must be assessed in the light of the buyer's circumstances when the Further Statement is received or at the latest at the expiration of 14 days from its receipt.

(c) There must be a causal relationship between the inaccuracy and the prejudice.
(d) There must be proportionality between the inaccuracy and the prejudice.
(e) Because this is consumer protection legislation, it should be construed beneficially."

Those conclusions are in accord with principle and the objects of the legislation.

51. Two passages relied upon by the learned primary judge were drawn from the decisions of the High Court of Deming No. 456 Pty Ltd & Ors v Brisbane Unit Development Corporation Pty Ltd[26] and of the Full Court of Queensland in Gold Coast Carlton Pty Limited v Wilson[27] where the Courts were concerned with the phrase "materially affect" as it applied to the interests of a buyer under s 49 of Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 (Qld). In its terms, that section provided relief to the buyer the equivalent to that provided by s 214 of BCCMA.

52. In Deming, the buyer appealed a decision on a summary hearing ordering it to specifically perform a contract for the purchase of a lot notwithstanding that it had purported to cancel the contract for the seller's non-compliance with the statutory provisions. The High Court determined that the issues ought to have been determined on trial. Relevant to the test for deciding whether the buyer was "materially affected" Wilson J said (at p 168–9):-

> "In an earlier case, Bassingthwaite v Butt, McPherson J offers an objective test of materiality, namely, whether the possibility that the purchaser might not have purchased is a reasonable supposition. His Honour refers to Stonham, Vendor and Purchaser, pars. 373 and 374. If that is an appropriate test, then I would agree with his Honour that the possibility that Deming might not have purchased the property had its lot entitlement been represented as 1/37 instead of 1/41 is not a reasonable supposition. However, we are not applying equitable doctrines. We are construing a statute which reflects a firm resolve on the part of the legislature to protect the purchasers of home units with quite specific statutory remedies.
> Section 49(4) contemplates that there will be circumstances which are capable of materially affecting the rights of purchasers. These circumstances encompass the entry into or variation of a management agreement or service agreement, the making or variation of a by-law or a change in the lot entitlement of any lot or the aggregate lot entitlement. Of course, it would be quite unjust if minor changes or adjustments in these areas were to entitle a purchaser to avoid a contract. On the other hand, if the changes are not insignificant and have the effect of changing the substance of that contracted for, the intention of the legislature would seem to be plain."

The plural judgment (Mason, Deane, Dawson JJ) dealt with the point in a cursory way having also determined that the variation relied upon by the buyer was such as to require the question of "material affect" to be determined at trial.[28]

53. In Gold Coast Carlton the court was concerned with a minor variation in the annual cost of body corporate services. Highlighting the need for a purchaser to show a significant disadvantage, Andrews SPJ said (at p 189):-

> "The respondents argued that their rights were 'materially affected'. What this amounts to is that their share of the costs of the services of Body Corporate Services Pty Ltd was to be $63.00 for the first year, rising to $70.00 for the next year. Whether this amounts to material affectation of their rights is a question of fact … I cannot accept that 'materially affect' means other than to affect rights deleteriously in some way. I am by no means persuaded that to show that a purchaser is to pay what appears to be a rather modest sum for work of this kind is to show that his rights have been affected at all."

54. The term "material prejudice" was considered by Chesterman J in Chancellor Park Retirement Village Pty Ltd v Retirement Village Tribunal[29] he said (at para [66]):

"…The term 'material prejudice' has no special meaning. Prejudice in this context means disadvantage. It is material if it is substantial or of much consequence. The misstatement in question was the omission in the accounts of the receipt of income which would have entirely offset an item of expenditure which, on the face of the accounts, the residents would have had to meet. There was no error in the actual amounts received and spent. The residents did not pay out more than they should have. The accounts did, however, wrongly, give rise to the belief that the residents had paid or were obliged to pay more than they were legally obliged to pay. However, a belief inculcated by a misstatement does not ordinarily cause disadvantage or prejudice, let alone of a substantial sort, unless it is acted on to one's detriment."

That statement found favour with the learned primary judge, except for the view expressed about the relevance of a person's belief.

55. For the purpose of assessing material prejudice for the purpose of s 214 a person's belief would not ordinarily be relevant. The statutory right to cancel the contract depends upon the existence of the facts which trigger the right. Actual inaccuracy, rather than one's belief as to inaccuracy is what is required. Mirvac's contention that the respondent acted upon a mistaken belief does not accord with facts accepted below, and not varied here. There was, in fact, inaccuracy in the disclosure statements.

56. Mirvac argues here, as it did below, that the tests for determining material prejudice was the same as that enunciated by Derrington J for the purpose of s 49(4) of Building Units and Group Titles Act in Sommer v Abatti Holdings Pty Ltd[30] . In so doing his Honour was guided by earlier decisions on that section including a decision of the Full Court of Queensland in Gold Coast Carlton Pty Ltd v Kamalesvaran[31] . These decisions followed a test laid down in Flight v Booth[32] for determining entitlement to rescind a contract for the transfer of property on the basis of a misdescription of what the premises could be used for. The Court there was applying general principles of contract. The judgment of Tindall CJ states:-

"It is extremely difficult to lay down, from the decided cases, any certain definite rule which shall determine what misstatement or misdescription in the particulars shall justify a rescinding of the contract, and what shall be the ground of compensation only … But with respect to misstatements which stand clear of fraud, it is impossible to reconcile all the cases; some of them laying it down that no misstatements which originate in carelessness, however gross, shall avoid the contract, but shall form the subject of compensation only; whilst other cases lay down the rule, that a misdescription in a material point, although occasioned by negligence only, not by fraud will vitiate the contract of sale. In this state of discrepancy between the decided cases, we think it is, at all events, a safe rule to adopt, that where the misdescription, although not proceeding from fraud, is in a material and substantial point, so far affecting the subject matter of the contract that it may reasonably be supposed, that, but for such misdescription the purchaser might never have entered into the contract at all, in such case the contract is avoided altogether, and the purchaser is not bound to resort to the clause of compensation."

57. It is difficult to see how that identification of a general principle can determine the test for a remedy provided by statute which must find its basis in the ordinary meaning of the words of the statute itself. The learned primary judge was, in my view, correct in rejecting the test referred to in Sommer and in adopting the approach derived directly from the terms of the legislation.

58. Turning then to the terms of the legislative provision. In the context of s 214 (and also s 217), the question of prejudice depends upon the information which has come to the buyer's actual knowledge and whether the information on an objective basis is inaccurate. As with the provision considered by Chesterman J above, the prejudice for the purpose of s 214 flowing from the inaccuracy arises from some detriment or disadvantage to the buyer. In its ordinary meaning "prejudice" in this context means "to injury or to impair the validity (of a right, claim or interest) to damage". A person is "prejudiced" when affected disadvantageously or detrimentally.[33]

59. A person would be “materially prejudiced” if disadvantaged “substantially” or “to an important extent”[34] . The Court of Appeal in Vennard v Delorain Pty Ltd as Trustee for the Delorain Trust[35] suggested, that in a similar context, the phrase meant “disadvantaged in a way which is substantial or of much consequence”[36] . It is this concept that requires a consideration of the personal circumstances of the buyer in what is otherwise a determination to be made objectively. The concept of using an objective standard but having regard to personal characteristics is not novel in law. It commonly finds expression in relation to personal self control in criminal law[37] and in relation to varying standard of care in “reasonable person” tests.[38] The material prejudice for the purpose of s 214 (and s 217), has to be assessed in the context of the buyer’s personal circumstances being required to complete the contract on its changed terms. The evaluation of whether any disadvantage or detriment reaches the level of material prejudice such as to warrant cancellation of the contract, must be objectively determined in accordance with community standards.

Conclusion

60. On the only evidence led below, there was no challenge to the fact that the presence of a security system was “a very important matter” for the respondent. Given the location of the Farringford building and the likely intrusion of non-residents, the presence of a security system would, inherently, be important to residents generally. It was sufficiently important to be raised by the seller in its promotional material. The finding of the learned primary judge that “viewed objectively, a person in the (respondent’s) circumstances in August 2009 would be disadvantaged in a substantial way” was clearly open on the evidence.

61. Mirvac has not, in my view, demonstrated any error in the finding of the learned primary judge that the respondent was materially prejudiced by the omission of the camera security system.

62. That being the case, Mirvac has not succeeded in any of its contentions. The grounds of appeal are not made out and the appeal should, in my view, be dismissed with costs.

Judgment delivered on 12 November 2008

Community schemes — Establishment of community title scheme — Off the plan contract of sale — Where contract provides that settlement date is 14 days after notification of registration of building format plan — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, s 212 — Legislative requirement that settlement must not take place earlier than 14 days after the seller gives advice to buyer that the scheme has been established or changed — Where purchaser may cancel if contract does not comply with legislative requirement — Whether contract complies with legislative requirement — Whether purchaser entitled to cancel contract.

The purchaser (applicant) and developer (respondent) entered into an "off-the-plan" contract of sale for a building unit to be created within a residential community titles scheme.

Clause 14 of the contract provided that:

> "The settlement date is the later of —
>
> a) 14 days after the Seller notifies the Buyer that the Building Format Plan is registered; and > b) Three days after the Seller notifies the Buyer that a Certificate of Classification is issued for the building."

The purchaser notified the developer that cl 14 of the contract failed to comply with s 212 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 and the purchaser purported to terminate the contract pursuant to s 212(3).

Section 212(1) of the Act provides:

> "A contract entered into by a person (the seller) with another person (the buyer) for the sale to the buyer of a lot intended to come into existence as a lot included in a community titles scheme when the scheme is established or changed must provide that settlement must not take place earlier than 14 days after the seller gives advice to the buyer that the scheme has been established or changed."

Section 212(3) provides that the buyer may cancel the contract if there has been a contravention of s 212(1) and the contract has not already been settled.

The developer rejected the purchaser's purported termination and affirmed the contract. The developer notified the purchaser of registration of the building format plan and fixed the date for settlement of the contract. The purchaser failed to settle the contract. The developer terminated the contract on that basis and forfeited the deposit.

Submissions from the purchaser:

1. The contract did not expressly state that "settlement must not take place earlier than" 14 days after the vendor gave notice to the purchaser that, relevantly, the scheme has been established. The unambiguous grammatical meaning of s 212 was that the contract had to expressly so provide.

2. Section 212 required the plan of subdivision (building format plan) to be registered and the first Community Management Statement be recorded by the Registrar of Titles to establish a community title scheme. Notifying the purchaser of registration of the plan to trigger settlement did not comply with s 212.

3. The contract did not comply with s 212 and the purchaser is entitled to cancel the contract before settlement under s 213(3).

Submissions from the developer:

1. Clause 14 read together with the definitions in the contract meant there was substantial compliance with the requirements of s 212(1).

2. The creation of the scheme and the registration of the building format plan are "inextricably linked". By notifying the buyer of the registration of the building format plan, the seller was notifying the buyer that the scheme has been created.

Held: contract validly cancelled by purchaser.

1. The objective of s 212 is to ensure the buyer is aware that the buyer is protected against being forced to settle a sale before the scheme is fully established or at short notice once it is.

2. Clause 14 "… does not adequately convey to the buyer that more than registration of the building format plan is necessary to establish the community title scheme and trigger the fixing of a time for settlement". Although cl 14 refers to the building format plan, there is no reference to the Community Management Statement, "which is one of the essential elements of establishing a scheme".

3. The purchaser has validly cancelled the contract pursuant to s 212 and is entitled to the return of the deposit.

Before: Mackenzie J.

Editorial comment: The developer has appealed this decision in the Court of Appeal.

Mackenzie J: This application is concerned with whether clause 14.1 of a contract for the sale of a building unit in a building called "Rivage" between the applicant purchaser and the respondent developer complies with s 212 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) (BCCM). According to it, settlement of the contract was subject to the registration of both the Building Format Plan by which the relevant lot would be created and the Certificate of Classification for the building, within three years of the date of the contract.

2. The contractual clause under consideration is as follows:

> "The settlement date is the later of —
>
> > (a) 14 days after the Seller notifies the Buyer that the Building Format Plan is registered; and
> > (b) Three days after the Seller notifies the Buyer that a Certificate of Classification is issued for the building."

3. The term "Building Format Plan" is defined by clause 2.1 of the contract as meaning the Building Format Plan that is registered to create the lot. "Community Management Statement" is defined as meaning the Community Management Statement to be registered with the building format plan. The draft Community Management Statement, according to the definition, formed part of the Disclosure Statement. The term "lot" was defined as meaning a lot within the Scheme. "Scheme" was defined as meaning the community title scheme that would be created on registration of the building format plan.

4. "Certificate of Classification" is defined in clause 2.1 as the Certificate of Classification issued by the Authority (i.e. a body or person authorised by law to give an approval or certificate the seller must obtain to perform its obligations under the contract) that permits lawful occupation of the building for residential and/or other lawful purposes as contained in the Development Approval for Rivage. Although it is referred to in clause 14.1, this has no impact on the issues argued.

5. It is convenient to mention that there are proceedings (SC No 113/08) in the Mackay Registry of this court, commenced by the respondent against the applicant and Bonnie Dean claiming damages and declarations which, it is common ground, this application will resolve in some respects. Ms Dean is a director of the applicant and a guarantor of its obligations under the contract. She has agreed to be bound by the determination of these proceedings insofar as they are relevant to the Mackay proceedings.

6. By way of further background, the full deposit was eventually paid, but on 13 November 2007 the solicitors for the applicant wrote a letter to the respondent containing the following:

> "We note that the contract provides for settlement 14 days after registration of the plan but does not state 'settlement must not take place earlier than 14 days after the seller gives advice to the buyer that the scheme has been established or changed' in accordance with s 212(1) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997.
> We further note that s 212(3) states that where there has been a breach of s 212(1) the buyer may cancel the contract.
> Our client elects to cancel the contract pursuant to s 212 and requests that your client authorise the agent to release the deposit to our client."

7. On 23 November 2007 the respondent rejected the contention that the contract failed to comply with s 212 and elected to affirm the contract. On 31 March 2008 the respondent's solicitors wrote to the solicitors for the applicant enclosing copies of the Certificate of Classification and a registration confirmation statement confirming that the building format plan had registered, and fixed the settlement date as 14 April 2008. The applicant did not complete the contract on that date. The respondent's solicitors wrote to confirm that fact and terminated the contract on that basis.

8. It is said that there are three issues requiring analysis. The first is what s 212(1) BCCM requires. The second is whether the contract contravened that requirement. The third was whether the respondent was entitled to cancel the contract in reliance on s 212(3) of the Act.

9. Section 212 provides as follows:

>
> (1) A contract entered into by a person (the seller) with another person (the buyer) for the sale to the buyer of a lot intended to come into existence as a lot included in a community titles scheme when the scheme is established or changed must provide that settlement must not take place earlier than 14 days after the seller gives advice to the buyer that the scheme has been established or changed.
> (2) Also, when the contract is entered into, there must be a proposed community management statement for the scheme as established or changed.
> (3) The buyer may cancel the contract if —
>
> (a) there has been a contravention of subsection (1) or (2); and
> (b) the contract has not already been settled."

10. Clause 14.1 fixes one of the possible triggering events of the obligation to settle the contract as notification by the seller to the buyer that the Building Format Plan has registered. The meaning of "Building Format Plan" for the purposes of the contract is set out in paragraph [3] above. There is evidence in exhibit JM5 to Mr Martinek's affidavit that notification of the registration of the Building Format Plan and the issue of the certificate of classification under the Building Act 1975 (Qld) was sent to the applicant's solicitors at 4:55 pm on 31 March 2008. A copy of the registration confirmation statement extracted from the records of the Registrar of Titles earlier that afternoon was also sent at the same time. It contains a reference to the Community Management Statement relating to the lot.

11. Section 24 BCCM provides that the community titles scheme is established by:

> (a) Registration under the Land Titles Act 1994 (LTA) of the plan of survey for identifying the scheme land; and
> [140104]
> (b) Recording by the Registrar of the first community management statement for the scheme.

12. By s 115L LTA, a community management statement takes effect when recorded by the Registrar as a community management statement for the scheme (s 115L(3)). It is part of the recording process that the Registrar records a community management statement by recording a reference to it on the indefeasible title for each lot in the scheme and for the common property (s 115L(1)(b)). Complementary to that, s 59 BCCM says that a Community Management Statement takes effect under s 115L(3) LTA. For the purposes of LTA a "Building Format Plan" is one species of survey plans. As the name implies, it defines land by reference to structural elements of a building.

13. Section 9A LTA authorises the Registrar of Titles to keep a Manual of Land Title Practice. Amongst other things, it may include practices developed in the Land Registry before or after the commencement of s 9A for the depositing and lodging of instruments. Extracts from the Land Title Practice Manual (Queensland) were made available to me. Of most relevance for present purposes is a paragraph headed "Recording a First CMS Lodged with the Plan establishing a Community Titles Scheme". Since a Community Management Statement is not an instrument in its own right, it enters the registration system by means of a Form 14 — General Request. The Community Management Statement "must be lodged with every plan of subdivision that establishes a community titles scheme". It is said that the request and the plan are registered on the existing indefeasible title and the Community Management Statement is brought forward to the indefeasible title created for the scheme common property. The titles created for the lots in the scheme are noted with a reference to the Community Management Statement (which includes a unique identifying number). No separate notation as to a first or subsequent Community Management Statement is made on the indefeasible titles for the lots in the scheme.

14. The applicant's case is that there was a failure in two respects to comply with the requirements of s 212. The first was that the contract did not expressly state that "settlement must not take place earlier than" 14 days after the vendor gave notice to the purchaser that, relevantly, the scheme had been established. The unambiguous grammatical meaning of s 212 was that the contract had to expressly so provide. Merely providing that settlement date was 14 days after the giving of advice that the scheme has been established was not sufficient compliance.

15. The second was that fixing a possible settlement date as 14 days after the date the vendor notified the purchaser that the Building Format Plan had been registered did not comply with s 212. The establishment of the Community Title Scheme required more than registration of the Building Format Plan. What was required by s 212 was that the plan of subdivision be registered under LTA and also that the first Community Management Statement be recorded by the Registrar of Titles. By setting the date for settlement in the terms used, clause 14.1 of the contract made no reference to the establishment of the Community Title Scheme or to the recording of the Community Management Statement.

16. The strict approach to provisions with evident consumer protection functions was emphasised by the applicant. The consequence that the protection may extend to giving the purchaser a right to terminate even for quite technical reasons and whether or not the purchaser has suffered any material disadvantage, was, it was said, well established. The applicant relied on a recent example of this approach in MNM Developments Pty Ltd v Gerrard (2005) Q ConvR ¶54-624; [2005] 2 Qd R 515 in which the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 (Qld) was the relevant legislation (and the provision under consideration more directly prescriptive). This is not a novel proposition.

17. As evidence that history tends to repeat itself, Deming No 456 Pty Ltd v Brisbane Unit Development Corporation Pty Ltd (1983) Q ConvR ¶54-111; (1983) 155 CLR 129 is an earlier example of the proposition that where there is a provision requiring a document or warning to be given in the interests of consumer protection, there is a tendency to adopt a "lowest common denominator" approach. The relevant provision in s 49 of the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 had not been complied with in the way required by the Act but had substantially been complied with elsewhere in the contractual documents. Failure to give the statement required triggered a right to terminate the contract within thirty days after the purchaser became aware of the failure if his rights had been materially affected thereby. The fact of non-compliance with the precise requirements of the Act was held to be critical by the majority in the High Court. The substantial issue upon which the case turned was when the reluctant purchaser had knowledge of the failure to comply with the requirements.

18. In a later case, Boheto Pty Ltd v Sunbird Plaza Pty Ltd (1984) Q ConvR ¶54-134; [1984] 2 Qd R 9 at 13, the "surprising construction" by the High Court of the concept of when knowledge of the non-compliance was gained was commented on by Lord Templeman, delivering the opinion of the Privy Council. But the underlying approach to the effect and consequences of a provision requiring a consumer to be given notice of a matter pertaining to the consumer's rights remains operative. There is a premise that, at least in a case where the requirement is not patently and directly complied with elsewhere, it is not sufficient compliance with a statutory requirement of the kind in s 212 BCCM even if a consumer might, by a process of interpretation of the contract as a whole, and perhaps with knowledge the Registrar of Titles' practice, be able to discern what rights he, she or it had.

19. That is the kind of argument which the respondent seeks to rebut. The argument was prefaced by the observation that form had to prevail over substance for the applicant to succeed. It is said that, construing clause 14.1 in light of the definitions in clause 2.1, there was substantial compliance with the requirements of s 212(1). Reading the contract as a whole, the creation of the "scheme" and the registration of the Building Format Plan were inextricably linked. By notifying the buyer of the registration of the Building Format Plan, the seller was notifying the buyer that the scheme had been created. The philosophy in s 14A(1) of the Acts

Interpretation Act 1954 (Qld) that the Act should be given an interpretation that best achieves its purpose was also prayed in aid. Attention was drawn to s 2 BCCM which says that the primary object of the Act is to provide for flexible and contemporary communally based arrangements for the use of freehold land having regard to the secondary objects.

20. A secondary object in s 4(f) BCCM of providing an appropriate level of consumer protection for owners and intending buyers of lots included in Community Title Schemes was relied on. Its relevance was said to lie in the concept that the "consumer protection" referred to reflected a balance between the rights of owners and intending buyers. It is not immediately obvious that the object is directed at some sort of relativity between sellers and intending buyers inter se, but in any event it is more an aspirational statement than a statement governing or shedding light on the issues to be decided. Reference was also made to s 4(c) BCCM which seems to have marginal relevance.

21. The respondent also relied on the inclusion of the term "basic limitation" in the heading to Division 1 Part 2 BCCM of which s 212 is the first section for the purpose of arguing that it was a mandatory minimum requirement that the contact "provide that" settlement not take place until 14 days after the seller advised that the scheme had been established. It was submitted that the contract did this, by referring to the registration of the Building Format Plan. Some stress was placed on the requirement that the contract "provide" that information. This was contrasted with what were, implicitly, more prescriptive formulations, not used, to convey what the requirement was, such as "a contract … must state" or "a contract … must express …".

22. It may be interpolated that although clause 14.1 refers to the Building Format Plan (defined in clause 2), there is no reference in clause 14.1 to the Community Management Statement, the recording of which is one of the essential elements of establishing a scheme. The definition refers to it being "registered" with the Building Format Plan, but it was not suggested that there was any statement elsewhere in the contract referring to its recording as one element of establishing the scheme. In that sense, clause 14.1 omits to mention it. Clause 14.1 fixes the date of settlement by reference to three events, the registration of the Building Format Plan, the issue of the Certificate of Classification and the elapsing of a relevant time calculated by reference to clause 14.1. The event that would trigger the obligation to settle does not equate to advice that, in all respects, the scheme has been established. Without determining at what point it is relevantly "recorded", it must be acknowledged that because of Registrar of Titles' practice, the Community Management Statement will have been recorded, at worst, virtually contemporaneously with registration of the plan of subdivision (which fits the description of Building Format Plan as defined in clause 2). However, there is no guarantee that that would be known to an average buyer and if it is accepted that the requirement in s 212 is essentially a consumer protection provision, it has not been complied with. It is not the fact that contemporaneous recording may occur that is decisive. It is the fact that clause 14(1) does not adequately convey to the buyer that more than registration of the Building Format Plan is necessary to establish the Community Title Scheme and trigger the fixing of a time for settlement.

23. With regard to an argument that the provision in s 212 is intended to achieve a balance between the seller and the buyer of a unit, principally because the obligation under s 212 is not placed on any particular person, the practical reality is that, because all the detriment that might flow from non-compliance lies with the seller, it would be imprudent for a seller to fail to ensure that the contract complies with any prescriptive requirements. If they are not complied with, it is difficult to see that the objective of s 212, of ensuring that a buyer is made aware of being protected against being forced to settle a unit sale before the scheme is fully established or at short notice once it is, is promoted by the kind of construction proposed by the respondent.

24. It is unnecessary to express any view on the question posed by the respondent as to what might or might not invalidate a contract which is subject to s 212 BCCM in the variant circumstances posed in argument. Nor is it necessary to express a conclusion on the applicant's argument summarised in paragraph [14] above. Each case will depend on its own facts. Nor is it necessary to say more about the issue of some sort of comity between the courts and Parliament raised in paragraph [39] of the respondent's written submissions, except to say that there may be different approaches to it (see eg. Hall v Jones (1942) 42 SR (NSW) 203 at 208 (Jordan CJ); Petranker v Brown [1984] 2 NSWLR 177 at 179 (Samuels JA)).

25. It follows from what has been said that the applicant is entitled to the relief sought. The formal orders are as follows:

> 1. It is declared that the applicant has validly cancelled, pursuant to s 212 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld), the contract between the applicant and the respondent headed "Rivage Sales Contract" entered into on or about 22 July 2005;
> 2. It is declared that the respondent must repay to the applicant, pursuant to s 218 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, the sum of $99,500 paid to the respondent's agent towards the purchase of the proposed lot the subject of the contract;
> 3. The respondent pay the applicant's costs of and incidental to the originating application to be assessed.

Court of Appeal

Judgment delivered on 6 March 2009

Community schemes — Common property — Encroachment — Off the plan contract of sale — Purchaser terminates on the basis of an encroachment from the lot being purchased onto adjoining land — Whether an encroachment from common property lot constitutes an encroachment from the Lot being sold — Contract does not refer to common property being part of the Lot — Common property lot is separate from a proprietors lot — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, s 35.

This was an application by the purchaser for leave to appeal the decision of the District Court of Queensland [2008] QDC 236.

The purchaser (applicant) and vendor (respondent) entered into a contract of sale for a unit within a residential community title scheme. The purchaser discovered from the body corporate records that the swimming pool located on common property for the scheme encroached onto the adjoining land to the scheme. The purchaser purported to terminate the contract pursuant to cl 7.5(4) of the contract on the basis that it was a material encroachment from the Lot.

> "Clause 7.5 provided that:
> > (1) The buyer may survey the Lot.
> > (2) If there is:
> >
> > > a. an error in the boundaries or an area of the Lot;
> > > b. an encroachment by the structures onto or from the Lot; or > > > c. a mistake or omission in describing the Lot or the Seller's title to it;
> >
> > which is > > d. immaterial; or > > e. material, but the Buyer elects to complete this contract;
> > the Buyer's only remedy against the Seller is for compensation, but only if claimed by the Buyer in writing on or before settlement.
> > (3) The Buyer may not delay settlement or withhold any part of the Balance Purchase Price because of any compensation claim under clause 7.5(2).
> > (4) If there is a material error, encroachment or mistake, the Buyer may terminate this contract before settlement."

The vendor rejected the purported termination contending that the reference in cl 7.5 is to the Lot being sold and does not include common property for the scheme.

The primary judge held in favour of the vendor, hence the purchaser made an application to appeal the decision.

Purchaser's submissions:

1. Section 35(3) provides that "an owner's interest in its lot is inseparable from the owner's interest in the common property and that when a lot is sold, the lot owner's interest in the common property is sold also". Therefore the reference in the agreement to the Lot being sold includes the vendor's interest in common property.

2. On this basis, leave should be granted to appeal the decision in the first instance.

Held: leave to appeal granted but appeal dismissed.

1. Section 35 of the Act does not assist the applicant's argument. Its effect is merely that, upon a person acquiring an interest in a lot, that person, by virtue of the acquired interest, also holds a prescribed interest in the common property. The latter interest is not sold and purchased as such. It would not follow that the Lot in cl 7.5 should be construed as including reference to the common property.

2. There is nothing in the agreement which supports the notion that the reference to Lot 18 (the lot being sold) includes a reference to the common property or may include such a reference.

3. No appealable error has been shown to exist, the appeal is dismissed.

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

S Anderson (instructed by Oric Legal) for the purchaser.

LJ Nevison (instructed by Ferguson Cannon Lawyers) for the vendor.

Before: McMurdo P, Muir JA and Atkinson J.

Editorial comment: McMurdo P and Atkinson J agreed with the reasons given by Muir JA in dismissing the appeal.

McMurdo P: I agree with Muir JA's reasons for granting leave to appeal but dismissing the appeal with costs.

2. The contract between the parties was in the standard form approved by the Real Estate Institute of Queensland Limited and the Queensland Law Society Inc as being suitable for the sale and purchase of residential lots in a community titles scheme in Queensland. This appeal raises the concern that the present terms of such a contract may not always provide adequate protection to a purchaser of a residential lot in a community title scheme where there is an error in the boundaries of, or encroachment by structures onto or from, or a mistake or omission in describing, not the lot, but the common property under the lot's community titles scheme.

Muir JA: The applicants apply for leave to appeal pursuant to s 118(3) of the District Court of Queensland Act 1967 (Qld) against a decision of a judge of the District Court given on 6 November 2008.

4. The issue for determination on the appeal, should leave be granted, is whether an encroachment of a structure built mainly on common property under a community titles scheme and extending onto adjoining land can be described as "an encroachment by structures … from a Lot" within the meaning of "Lot" in a contract for the sale of a lot in that scheme.

5. Under an agreement entered into in March 2007, the applicants agreed to purchase and the respondent agreed to sell for a purchase price of $415,000 a unit in the complex known as "Whitsunday Vista Resort". The property sold and purchased was described in the agreement as "Lot 18 on SP 121164" in the County of Herbert, Parish of Conway. On 26 April 2007, the date on which the agreement was to be settled, the applicants purported to terminate the agreement pursuant to clause 7.5 of its standard terms because the resort's swimming pool and related structures encroached onto some 93 m^2 of an adjoining parcel of land. They asserted that this constituted an encroachment from Lot 18.

6. Clause 7.5 of the agreement provides:

> "7.5 Survey and Mistake
> (1) The buyer may survey the Lot.
> (2) If there is:
>
> a. an error in the boundaries or an area of the Lot;
> b. an encroachment by the structures onto or from the Lot; or
> c. a mistake or omission in describing the Lot or the Seller's title to it;
>
> which is > d. immaterial; or > e. material, but the Buyer elects to complete this contract;
> the Buyer's only remedy against the Seller is for compensation, but only if claimed by the Buyer in writing on or before settlement.
> (3) The Buyer may not delay settlement or withhold any part of the Balance Purchase Price because of any compensation claim under clause 7.5(2).
> (4) If there is a material error, encroachment or mistake, the Buyer may terminate this contract before settlement."

The applicants contended that reference to "the Lot" in clause 7.5 includes reference to the scheme's common property. The contention is founded on s 35 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) (the Act) and on s 41C of the Land Title Act 1994 (Qld). Section 35 provides:[1]

> "35 Ownership of common property
> (1) Common property for a community titles scheme is owned by the owners of the lots included in the scheme, as tenants in common, in shares proportionate to the interest schedule lot entitlements of their respective lots.
> (2) Subsection (1) applies even though, under the Land Title Act, the registrar creates an indefeasible title for the common property for a community titles scheme.
> (3) An owner's interest in a lot is inseparable from the owner's interest in the common property.
>
> Examples —
> 1. A dealing affecting the lot affects, without express mention, the interest in the common property.
> 2. An owner can not separately deal with or dispose of the owner's interest in the common property.

8. The essence of the applicants' argument is as follows. An owner's interest in its lot is inseparable from the owner's interest in the common property and that when a lot is sold, the lot owner's interest in the common property is sold also. Consequently, the reference in the agreement to "the Lot" necessarily includes the vendor's interest in the common property which is included in the parties' bargain by force of statute.

9. This argument did not find favour with the learned primary judge and I am unable to accept it either. The question is one of contractual rather than statutory construction. The description of the property to be sold and purchased is clear. It is "Lot 18 on SP 121164". For a community titles scheme to be registered, there must be two or more lots and other land designated as the common property for the scheme.[2] The scheme plan, as reasonable persons in the position of the parties with their background knowledge knew or ought reasonably to have known at the date of the agreement, had delineated on it the scheme's common property and each of the lots in the scheme. Also, as such reasonable persons would have known, the lots were separate from each other and from the common property. A lot or an interest in it is capable of assignment and of being encumbered by a proprietor, but no proprietor of any lot is capable of assigning or encumbering the common property or any interest in it.[3]

10. Clause 1.2 of the standard conditions of contract provides that words and phrases in the Act "have the same meaning in this contract unless the context indicates otherwise". "Lot" is defined relevantly in Schedule 6 to the Act as "a lot under the Land Title Act". Section 41C(1) of the Land Title Act provides that "in this Act, a reference to a lot is taken to include a reference to common property". Sub-section (2) however provides that sub-section (1) "has effect only to the extent necessary to allow for the registration, and appropriate recognition under this Act, of dealings that (a) affect common property …; and (b) are consistent with the BCCM Act". Sub-section (4) provides that sub-section (1) has no application for the purpose of the Land Title Act's definition of lot. Lot is defined, relevantly, as "a separate, distinct parcel of land created on the registration of a plan of subdivision".

11. There is nothing in the agreement which supports the notion that the reference to "Lot 18" includes a reference to the common property or may include such a reference, depending on the context and there is certainly no indication in clause 7.5 that the words "the Lot" do not have their statutory meaning.

12. The second page of the agreement makes provision for a statement of whether an electrical safety switch is "installed in the Lot". Plainly, "the Lot" in that context means the lot as depicted on the plan. Beside the heading "Additional Body Corporate Information" the words "interest schedule lot entitlement of the Lot" and other references to “Lot entitlement” appear. All such references are obviously to physical property which does not include common property. On the third sheet, under the heading “Seller’s Disclosure”, the words “Latent or Patent Defects in Common Property or Body Corporate Assets” appear. Thus, where the agreement wishes to make reference to the common property it does so expressly.

13. Clause 4 of the Standard Conditions of contract makes provision for the consequences of obtaining a Building and Pest Inspection Report which is unsatisfactory to the buyer. The report may be obtained on “the Lot” and the “Building”. “Building” is defined as “any building that forms part of the Lot or in which the Lot is situated”. There is thus a distinction between “the Lot” and the “Building” in which “the Lot” is situated. Clause 7.7 provides for the consequences of adverse affectation of the Land. “Land” is defined as “the Scheme Land”. Again, there is no blurring in the agreement of the distinction between “the Lot” and other real property within the scheme. The agreement’s treatment of a lot and common property as quite separate pieces of real property is consistent with the scheme and language of the Act.

14. There is no reason to suppose that what was in contemplation in clause 7.5(1) by the right on the part of the purchaser to survey “the Lot” was the survey of all of the land the subject of the scheme, or for that matter, the common property. Apart from any other consideration, the respondent vendor had no right to confer on the applicant purchasers authority to survey common property. It is unlikely that “the Lot” in 7.5(1) has a meaning different from its meaning in 7.5(2), as the two provisions are interrelated. If the parties had in mind conferring the rights and remedies in clause 7.5 in respect of errors, mistakes, omissions or encroachments in or affecting the common property generally, their failure to add “or the common property” after “the Lot”, wherever those words appear in the clause, is remarkable.

15. Section 35 of the Act does not assist the applicants’ argument. Its effect is merely that upon a person’s acquiring an interest in a lot, that person, by virtue of the acquired interest, also holds a prescribed interest in the common property. The latter interest is not sold and purchased as such, but even if this analysis is erroneous, it would not follow, for the reasons I have given, that “the Lot” in clause 7.5 should be construed as including reference to the common property.

16. Leave to appeal is usually granted “only where an appeal is necessary to correct a substantial injustice to the applicant, and there is a reasonable argument that there is an error to be corrected.” [4] No appellable error has been shown to exist but, as this Court has heard all the arguments which would have been advanced on the hearing of the appeal, the preferable course is to allow the application for leave to appeal and to dismiss the appeal.

17. In view of the conclusions I have reached on the question of construction, it is unnecessary to consider the subsidiary issues which would have arisen had the applicants’ construction of the agreement been accepted.

18. I would order that the application for leave to appeal be allowed and the appeal be dismissed with costs.

Atkinson J: I agree with the orders proposed by Muir JA and with his Honour’s reasons for doing so.

BODY CORPORATE OF THE LANG BUSINESS v GREEN

(2008) LQCS ¶90-149; Court citation: [2008] QSC 318

Judgment delivered on 5 December 2008

Community schemes — body corporate seeks summary judgment against lot owner for unpaid levies — lot owner disputes calculation of levies — body corporate failed to comply with case flow management plan ordered by the court — body corporate seeks further application for summary judgment — whether summary judgment should be heard by the court — whether s 229 of the Act precludes the defendant from raising a defence to the claim for summary judgment — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, s 229.

The plaintiff (body corporate) claimed an amount of $325,930.98 was owing by the defendant (Mr Green) for unpaid levies relating to his lot within the residential community title scheme. The body corporate made an application for summary judgment against Mr Green for payment of the debt. Mr Green did not pay his levies on the basis that he has requested but not received details of the calculation of those levies.

The court ordered the body corporate to provide a case flow management plan for the determination of the dispute but the body corporate failed to comply with the order. The body corporate then filed a further application seeking the orders be set aside and its original application for summary judgment be listed for hearing.

Submissions from the body corporate

1. The defendant owes the body corporate a debt.

2. The defendant's dispute cannot be determined by this court due to the exclusivity provisions of s 229 and should have been pursued by the defendant via an adjudication application.

Section 229 provides:

> "229 Exclusivity of dispute resolution provisions:
>
> (1) Subsections (2) and (3) apply to a dispute if it may be resolved under this chapter by a dispute resolution process.
> (2) The only remedy for a complex dispute is:
>
> (a) the resolution of the dispute by:
>
> (i) an order of a specialist adjudicator under chapter 6; or > (ii) an order of the CCT under the CCT Act; or
>
> (b) an order of the District Court on appeal from a specialist adjudicator or the CCT on a question of law.
>
> (3) The only remedy for a dispute that is not a complex dispute is:
>
> (a) the resolution of the dispute by a dispute resolution process; or
> (b) an order of the CCT on appeal from an adjudicator on a question of law.
>
> (4) However, subsections (2) and (3) do not apply to a dispute if:
>
> (a) an application is made to the commissioner; and
> (b) the commissioner dismisses the application under part 5.
> (5) Subsection (3) does not affect a right, under section 289, to appeal to the District Court on a question of law."

3. Accordingly, the matters raised in the defendant's defence cannot be used to resist the application for summary judgment.

Held: application for summary judgment dismissed.

1. The dispute of calculations and resolutions relating to the levies is conventionally not appropriate to be determined by summary judgment.

2. The defendant had raised particular matters in defence of the plaintiff's claim. There is no legal or statutory impediment to the defendant's ability to raise a defence.

3. His Honour stated, "… it would be surprising indeed if chapter 6 of the BCCM [s 299] read as so significantly constraining the right of a defendant to advance a defence as to render it unable to advance a simple contention that it is 'only liable to pay such contributions as have been properly identified, calculated and resolved to be payable by members of the Body Corporate'".

4. If the defendant instituted separate court proceedings challenging the notices of contributions then the defendant would be precluded from doing so.

5. The application for summary judgment is dismissed with costs against the plaintiff.

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

MA Hindman (instructed by McInnes Wilson) for the plaintiff.

WL Cochrane (instructed by WHD Lawyers) for the defendant.

Before: Daubney J.

Daubney J: The plaintiff is a body corporate created under the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (BCCM) constituted by the various owners of the lots in a community titles scheme. The defendant owns one of the lots in the community titles scheme for which the plaintiff was created.

2. By a claim filed on 7 September 2007 (the Claim) the plaintiff claims $325,930.98 "as monies due and owing by the Defendant to the Plaintiff pursuant to s 99 of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Standard Module) Regulation 1997".

3. On 7 December 2007, the plaintiff filed an application seeking summary judgment in that sum plus interest. This application was adjourned by consent to a date to be fixed. On 27 May 2008, the registry issued a Case Flow Management Intervention Notice to the plaintiff requesting that a plan to facilitate the "timely determination of the proceeding" be provided to the registry. Such a plan was prepared and submitted by the plaintiff. On 24 June 2008, apparently without notice to the defendant, the following order was made in terms of the plan:

> "1. That if the Plaintiff intends to pursue the Application for Summary Judgment it be re-listed by 30 August 2008.
> 2. If Judgment is not obtained that disclosure be provided by each party by 4:00 pm, 15 September 2008 and that inspection of documents and provision of copies of documents pursuant to the UCPR be made by 4:00 pm, 29 September 2008.
> 3. That any amendments to the Claim arising out of disclosure be made by 4:00 pm, 13 October 2008 and any consequential amendments to the Defence by 27 October 2008.
> 4. That there be a Mediation or Case Appraisal by 31 October 2008.
> 5. That the Request for Trial be filed by 07 November 2008."

4. The application for summary judgment was not listed by 30 August 2008.

5. On 24 September 2008, the plaintiff filed a further application seeking that Orders 1 and 2 of the orders of 24 June 2008 be set aside, and that the plaintiff's application for summary judgment filed 7 December 2007 be listed for hearing on the return date of the 24 September application.

6. There are then two primary questions before me:

> 1. whether, notwithstanding the failure to comply with the order of 24 June 2008, I should entertain the summary judgment application; and
> 2. if so, whether summary judgment should be entered in favour of the plaintiff.

7. These questions, however, are not wholly discrete — determining whether to allow the application for summary judgment to proceed necessarily requires at least some consideration of the merits of the application itself. I will therefore turn to consider the summary judgment application before considering the impact of the non-compliance with the order of 24 June 2008.

The pleadings

8. The money claimed is said to be owing pursuant to unpaid Notices of Contribution issued to the defendant on 26 August 2006, 26 September 2006, 16 November 2006, 14 February 2007 and 26 June 2007 in respect of his Lot 12 in Community Titles Scheme 5941.

9. The plaintiff claims that it is now entitled to recover the amounts set out in these notices as a debt due under s 99 of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Standard Module) Regulation 1997 (Qld) (the Regulation).

10. Section 99(1) of the Regulation provides:

"(1) If a contribution or contribution instalment is not paid by the date for payment, the body corporate may recover each of the following amounts as a debt—

(a) the amount of the contribution or instalment;
(b) any penalty for not paying the contribution or instalment;
(c) any costs (recovery costs) reasonably incurred by the body corporate in recovering the amount."

11. The defendant admits having been served with purported Notices of Contribution on the dates indicated by the plaintiff but complains that he has previously requested, but not been provided with, further details of the calculations contained in the notices, namely information relating to the method of calculation, and the basis upon which the levies referred to in the notices were agreed upon by the Committee of the Body Corporate. On this basis, the defence filed 5 October 2007 "denies that the notices served on him were served in accordance with or calculated in accordance with the provisions of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997".[1]

12. The defence then states that the failure to provide such information renders the defendant unable to properly plead to the allegations in the statement of claim until disclosure has been completed between the parties and until further and better particulars have been provided.

13. In short, the defendant acknowledges that he owes some money to the plaintiff, but considers that he is "only liable to pay such contributions as have [been] properly identified, calculated and resolved to be payable by members of the Body Corporate".[2]

The application for summary judgment

14. Before summary judgment can be entered in favour of a plaintiff it is necessary for the court to be satisfied both that:

(a) the defendant has "no real prospect of successfully defending" the claim; and
(b) there is no need for a trial of the claim or part of the claim.[3]

15. Whilst it is clear that the "no real prospect of successfully defending" test is applied according to its tenor, an appropriately cautious approach is required, bearing in mind the well established principle that issues raised in proceedings will be determined summarily only in the clearest of cases.[4]

16. The burden of satisfying the court that the matters raised in r 292 are satisfied rests firmly on the plaintiff.[5]

17. The defence, in querying the calculations and resolutions underpinning the Notices of Contribution, raises issues of a type which conventionally would not be considered appropriate for summary determination.

18. This view is reinforced by a consideration of the defendant's complaints about the state of disclosure in the matter. On 29 March 2007, the defendant's solicitors wrote to the plaintiff's solicitors requesting "copies of all documentation in respect of each of the levies made which total the amount of $275,817.05 which you say remains unpaid". The documents sought included details of works to which the levies related, including contracts, invoices and the like.

19. On 4 September 2007, the plaintiff's solicitor wrote to the defendant's solicitor in relation to the request for documents and records held by the body corporate. The letter included the following passage:

"Our client does not intend to be put to the expense of collating and providing to you the extensive documentation requested. As a member of the body corporate your client is entitled to access to the full records of the body corporate. Should he wish to access the body corporate records we suggest that he contact the body corporate manager in this regard."

20. The order of 24 June 2008, made provision for disclosure to be given in the event summary judgment was not obtained. Clearly, there was no order for summary judgment and, by the terms of the order, further disclosure should have been made by 15 September 2008. This order was not complied with and the application filed 24 September 2008, seeks to have it set aside. I observe here that no proper explanation was provided for the failure to re-list the application for summary judgment by 30 August 2008, beyond information that the plaintiff's solicitor was on leave in July. Nor was there any proper explanation for the plaintiff's failure to make disclosure, it being contended, in effect, that in view of the summary judgment application now being pursued, that order for disclosure should be vacated.

21. The plaintiff contends that it has, in fact, addressed the defendant's complaints about disclosure by virtue of the answer to the defendant's request for further and better particulars and by the affidavit material filed.

22. The key outstanding issue in this respect would seem to arise out of paragraph 3 of the defendant's request for further and better particulars. In it the defendant requests further and better particulars of, inter alia, "[t]he basis upon which the Plaintiff says that that the amount of $325,930.98 was due and owing by the Defendant".

23. The plaintiff's response to the request for further and better particulars, insofar as it relates to this complaint, says only that:

> "The basis of the Plaintiff's claim that the amount of $325,930.98 was due and owing by the Defendant at the date of the Statement of Claim is as particularised in the Statement of Claim."

24. As to the requests contained in the rest of that paragraph, which are largely requests for certain documents including minutes of meetings, quotations, invoices and contracts, the plaintiff says only that the requests are not proper requests for particulars, and that the request is "properly a matter for disclosure".

25. This may be so but, in circumstances where disclosure has not occurred, it cannot be said to strengthen the plaintiff's position on a summary judgment application.

26. The importance of disclosure in the determination of applications of this type is readily apparent. In Jessup v Lawyers Private Mortgages Ltd & Ors [2006] QSC 3, Chesterman J reviewed the decision in Deputy Commissioner of Taxation v Salcedo and observed:

> "In practical terms I suspect the rule means (as the old rules meant) that summary judgment should not be given where the facts upon which the parties respective rights depend are disputed, or where the respondent to the application for summary judgment adduces evidence as to the existence of facts which, if proved, would establish a defence or a right to relief. In other words it is only where all the facts are known and/or are established beyond controversy that the court should embark upon determining whether to give summary judgment. Where relevant facts are controverted, or where it appears that facts may exist which would affect a right of action or defence, there should be a trial to determine the facts." [6]

27. In this case, relevant facts are in issue on the pleadings, pending the provision of further information. This also militates against the exercise of the discretion to grant summary judgment, in the particular circumstances of this case.

28. The plaintiff, however, continued to press for the summary remedy despite these matters having been identified to it. It did so on the basis of a contention that the matters raised in the defence are matters which cannot be determined by this court, but rather fall exclusively within the dispute resolution procedures set out in the BCCM.

29. Chapter 6 of the BCCM is entitled "Dispute Resolution". Section 228 sets out the purpose of Chapter 6. It provides:

[140115]

"228 Chapter's purpose

(1) This chapter establishes arrangements for resolving, in the context of community titles schemes, disputes about—

(a) contraventions of this Act or community management statements; and

(b) the exercise of rights or powers, or the performance of duties, under this Act or community management statements; and
(c) the adjustment of lot entitlement schedules; and
(d) matters arising under the engagement of persons as body corporate managers, the engagement of certain persons as service contractors, and the authorisation of persons as letting agents."

30. Section 227 of the BCCM defines "dispute" to include a "dispute between a body corporate for a community titles scheme and the owner or occupier of a lot included in that scheme".[7] This definition, however, does not clarify with any precision whether it covers every conceivable dispute between a body corporate and an owner or merely those within the purview contemplated by the Chapter's purpose set out in s 228. In my view, good-sense and practicability, in conjunction with a purposive approach to the legislation, dictate that the latter must be the case; it could scarcely be said, for instance, that the legislature intended for the dispute resolution processes set out in the BCCM to apply in case of a personal injuries dispute between an owner and a body corporate.

31. In any event, the present proceeding would not appear to test the boundaries established by ss 227 and 228.

32. The present matter involves the levying of members of the body corporate for contributions. This is plainly an exercise of a right or power under the BCCM or a community management statement. The defendant's failure to make the contributions set out in the notices, can also, if not otherwise excused, be said to constitute a contravention of the BCCM or a community management statement.

33. This then brings me to the question of whether the defendant is precluded from advancing their defence by virtue of the "exclusivity" provision contained in Chapter 6 of the Act.

34. Section 229(3), in the plaintiff's submission, provides the only remedy for a dispute under the BCCM. The relevant section (considering that the present matter does not involve a so-called "complex dispute") provides:

"Exclusivity of dispute resolution provisions

(3) The only remedy for a dispute that is not a complex dispute is —

(a) the resolution of the dispute by a dispute resolution process; or
(b) an order of the CCT on appeal from an adjudicator on a question of law."

35. The BCCM then goes on, in subsequent sections, to set out the "dispute resolution process" in more detail. The dispute resolution processes available include conciliation and adjudication.[8]

36. The plaintiff submits that the matters raised as underpinning the denials in the defence constitute a dispute under the BCCM and should have been pursued via an adjudication application under the BCCM. Such an application has not been made and would, in the plaintiff's submission, be out of time if it was now brought by reason of s 242. In those circumstances, the plaintiff contends that the matters sought to be raised in defence of the plaintiff's claim are not within the jurisdiction of this Court to determine and, accordingly, cannot be deployed to resist the present application for summary judgment.

37. Before considering this submission further, it is worth noting the suggestion in argument that the exclusivity provisions might work against the plaintiff so as to preclude it from pursuing the current claim. Indeed, in the course of argument it was suggested that the plaintiff's proceeding ought be struck out for this reason. It is unnecessary to agitate this speculation further. Section 99(1) of the Regulations outlined above in paragraph [9], makes it clear that amounts unpaid in respect of properly issued notices of contribution are recoverable as a debt.

38. Furthermore, s 312 of the BCCM includes the following terms:

"312 Proceedings

> (1) The body corporate for a community titles scheme may start a proceeding only if the proceeding is authorised by special resolution of the body corporate.
> (2) However, the body corporate does not need a special resolution to —
>
> > (a) bring a proceeding for the recovery of a liquidated debt against the owner of a lot included in the scheme; or
> > (b) bring a counterclaim, third-party proceeding or other proceeding, in a proceeding to which the body corporate is already a party; or
> > (c) start a proceeding for an offence under chapter 3, part 5, division 4; or > > (d) start a proceeding, including a proceeding for the enforcement of an adjudicator's order or an appeal against an adjudicator's order, under chapter 6."

39. Thus, there is no merit in the suggestion that s 229 could prevent the plaintiff pursuing its claim.

40. Returning then to the primary point for determination, it appears that, had the defendant instituted separate proceedings in this court challenging the Notices of Contribution, he would have been thwarted by the exclusivity provisions of the BCCM. He has not, however, done so. Rather, the defendant has raised particular matters in defence of the plaintiff's claim. I would be loathe to conclude, in the absence of a specific statutory provision compelling such a conclusion, that a defendant to a claim such as the one advanced by the plaintiff could not, under any circumstances, raise in a defence a matter which might trespass into the territory covered by the dispute resolution provisions of the BCCM. There is no legal or statutory impediment to these matters being raised by way of defence.

41. My view is reinforced by reference to Independent Finance Group Pty Ltd v Mytan Pty Ltd[9] , in which the Court of Appeal was called upon to consider whether an appeal to the Court of Appeal lay from a decision of the District Court made under the appeal provisions of the dispute resolution processes set out in the BCCM, McMurdo P expressed a "preliminary view" in the context of the precursor to s 229, that "it would be surprising if, in the absence of the clearest words, the inherent jurisdiction of the Supreme Court was diminished by ch 6". In the same vein, it would be "surprising" indeed if chapter 6 of the BCCM were read as so significantly constraining the right of a defendant to advance a defence as to render it unable to advance a simple contention that it is "only liable to pay such contributions as have been properly identified, calculated and resolved to be payable by members of the Body Corporate".

42. For these reasons, the application for summary judgment should be dismissed.

43. Apart from the consideration that costs should follow the event, the failure of the plaintiff to comply with the order of 24 June 2008 renders it proper for it to be ordered that the plaintiff pay the defendant's costs of and incidental to the application.

Judgment delivered on 3 April 2009

Community schemes — Common property – Powers of Body Corporate — Body corporate resolution allowing owner to extend structure onto common property — Extension of structure allows owner exclusive use and possession of that part of the common property encumbered by the structure — Whether exclusivity and possession amounts to disposition of that part of the common property to owner — Whether body corporate resolution only amounts to authority for owner to make improvements to its lot — Body Corporate and Community Management (Commercial Module) Regulation 1997, s 91 and 94 — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, s 154 and 159.

This was an appeal by the owner of lot 6 (applicant) against the decision of Southport District Court handed down on 19 August 2008.

The owner of lot 5 (the lot which was adjacent to the applicant's lot) carried out an extension of its bulkhead to the shop to align it with the frontages of lot 6 and lot 4 within the commercial scheme. The bulkhead, which was used to identify the name of the shop, occupied part of the common property of the respondent body corporate. The body corporate passed a special resolution in retrospect to allow the owner of lot 5 to retain the extension onto common property but did not specify what statutory power was exercised by the body corporate nor any conditions or revocation to the grant.

The applicant applied to the District Court (on appeal from the Adjudicator's decision) and asserted that the body corporate had illegitimately disposed of that part of the common property encumbered by the extension. The extension only benefited the owner of lot 5 and prevented the common property on which the extension was placed from being used by another person and prevented the applicant from using that part of his lot frontage on the return face of the bulkhead from being used for signage.

The body corporate argued it allowed the extension as an improvement to the common property for the benefit of the owner of lot 5 under s 94 of the Commercial Module Regulation; it was not a disposition of common property.

The District Court judge concluded that there was insufficient evidence to confirm that the body corporate had disposed of that part of the common property to the owner of lot 5. The applicant further appealed the decision.

Applicant's submissions:

1. The permitted extension was only capable of being used by the owner of lot 5 which amounted to a grant of exclusive use, for an indefinite period as there were no provisions for revocation under the body corporate resolution. As such it is a disposition of an interest in that part of the common property rather than an improvement to common property for the benefit of lot 5.

2. It can be inferred by the body corporate's conduct that the body corporate intended to act under s 91 of the regulation to dispose of common property.

Respondent's submissions:

1. The definition of "improvement" read in conjunction with s 94 concludes that an erection of a building on common property which is regarded as semi-permanent would not be a disposal of interest in common property. The extension by the owner of lot 5 is a temporary structure able to be removed, therefore it is not a disposition of common property.

2. Structural alterations can be made on common property without there being a disposition of that property.

Statutory context:

Section 91 of the Commercial Module Regulation (now repealed) provided:

"(1) This section sets out the way in which, and the extent to which, the body corporate is authorised —

(a) to sell or otherwise dispose of common property; and
(b) to grant or amend a lease over common property.

(2) The body corporate may —

(a) if authorised by resolution without dissent —

(i) sell or otherwise dispose of part of the common property; or
(ii) grant or amend a lease for more than 10 years over part of the common property; and

(b) if authorised by special resolution — grant or amend a lease for 10 years or less over part of the common property."

Section 94 of the Commercial Module Regulation (now repealed) provided:

"(1) The body corporate may, if asked by the owner of a lot, authorise the owner to make an improvement to the common property for the benefit of the owner's lot.

(2) An authorisation may be given under this section on conditions the body corporate considers appropriate.

(3) The owner of a lot who is given an authority under this section —

(a) must comply with conditions of the authority; and
(b) must maintain the improvement made under the authority in good condition, unless excused by the body corporate."

Held: Appeal allowed, matter remitted to adjudicator.

Per Douglas J (McMurdo P and Chesterman JA agreeing):

1. The terms of s 154 of the Act allows a body corporate to sell or otherwise dispose of common property and also to grant or amend a lease or licence over it in the way and to the extent authorised under the regulation module applying to the scheme. As such it suggests that the grant of a licence is one of the means of disposing of common property envisaged by the legislation.

2. The approvals given by the body corporate showed that the extension over common property will be enjoyed exclusively and indefinitely by the owner of lot 5. This amounts to a disposition of that property at least by the grant of an exclusive licence to it for some indefinite period. It may also amount to a gift of the property unless it is a mere licence that would normally be revocable.

3. The resolution purporting to authorise the extension was a disposition for the purposes of s 91(2)(a)(i). However, as the resolution was not passed by resolution without dissent, it is invalid. The application for leave to appeal is granted. The matter should be remitted to the adjudicator for determination in accordance with these reasons.

Before: McMurdo P, Chesterman JA and Douglas J.

Editorial comment: Sections 91 and 94 of the Commercial Module Regulation have been repealed and replaced with s 117 and 120 respectively.

McMurdo P: The application for leave to appeal should be granted and the appeal allowed for the reasons given by Douglas J.

2. I share Chesterman JA's concern about the delay between the filing of the appeal in the District Court at Southport on 17 March 2006 and the hearing of the appeal two years and five months later on 13 August 2008. Neither party in this Court suggested that the delay was caused by the other; nor could the parties provide any explanation for this delay. This suggests that the delay was the fault of the court. Perhaps there is some extraordinary explanation for the delay which is unknown to the parties and not apparent from the appeal record in this Court. If not, such a delay in the disposal of an appeal of this kind is undesirable, unacceptable and of institutional concern.

3. I agree with the orders proposed by Douglas J.

Chesterman JA: I have read and agree with the reasons for judgment prepared by Douglas J, and with the orders proposed by his Honour.

5. One aspect of the appeal deserves mention.

6. The application made to the Adjudicator to resolve the applicant's dispute with the respondent body corporate was lodged on 27 July 2005, four months short of four years ago. The Adjudicator gave his decision on 15 February 2006, having received and considered several lengthy submissions from a number of proprietors. The application, for an order that the bulkheads on Lots 4 and 5 of BUP 343 be removed, was dismissed.

7. The applicant's appeal from that order to the District Court was filed on 17 March 2006, three years ago.

8. The appeal was argued in the District Court on 13 August 2008. Judgment was given six days later, on 19 August 2008.

9. The chronology reveals a delay of about two and a half years between the institution of the appeal to the District Court and that Court's disposition of it. The delay was not the subject of particular complaint in this Court and there was no investigation into its causes. We were told that the applicant wanted the matter resolved and made endeavours to have it brought on.

10. Despite not knowing all the circumstances it is both possible and necessary to condemn the delay in strong terms. It is completely unsatisfactory and, indeed, unacceptable that a litigant be so long denied a hearing.

11. The case was one in which the applicant complained that his propriety rights had been infringed. The judgment of this Court has vindicated his complaint. It is not an exaggeration to describe the District Court's indifference to his complaint, and the application for its redress, as disgraceful. The appeal was self evidently of a kind that would never impose a strain on the Court's resources. It was limited to questions of law. The hearing occupied only two hours. It is impossible to conceive of any reason why the matter could not have been heard within a few months of the institution of the appeal.

12. A consequence of the delay is that the parties have acted in ignorance of their legal rights and the infringement of the applicant's rights went uncorrected for years. The primary Court failed quite dismally to deliver justice. Such a failure should not be allowed to happen again.

Douglas J: This is an application for leave to appeal from a decision of the District Court which was itself an appeal on a point of law from an adjudicator appointed under the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) (the Act).

Background

14. The dispute relates to a group of shops in an arcade called "The Centre" in Surfers Paradise. The applicant's shop, lot 6 in a building unit plan, was adjacent to lot 5. The owner of lot 5 carried out works to extend the ceiling bulkhead of his shop to align with the frontages of lot 6 and lot 4 which flanked lot 5. The design of these shops was such that the front of each odd-numbered lot was recessed 57 cms from its neighbours.

The extension of the bulkhead over the entrance to the shop by that distance meant that it, the bulkhead, which was used to identify the name of the shop, occupied part of the common property of the respondent body corporate. No previous permission was obtained from the body corporate to do the work but subsequently, on 10 November 2005, at its annual general meeting, it passed a resolution, described as a special resolution, in the following terms:

> "10. THAT owners of lots with recessed bulkheads be permitted to extend the bulkhead above the front of their lots to the same alignment as the bulkhead of an adjoining lot provided written application for that modification is first made to and approved by the Committee AND THAT any approval given by the Committee must include such conditions that the Committee considers reasonable and appropriate."

16. Forty-six votes were cast in favour of the resolution, four against with one abstention. A subsequent committee resolution of 8 March 2006 was made, in respect of lot 5, that the owner be permitted "on the usual conditions to retain the bulkhead extensions already made" but those conditions were not identified. Therefore neither resolution clarifies, for example, whether the approval constituted a licence for the use of that part of the common property and whether or when it might be revoked. Nor did it identify the relevant statutory provision permitting the common property to be appropriated for that purpose.

17. One of the applicant's main concerns was that the extension of the bulkhead limited his ability to use the return face of his lot for signage.

The statutory context

18. Section 154 of the Act allows a body corporate to sell or otherwise dispose of common property and also to grant or amend a lease or licence over it in the way, and to the extent, authorised under the regulation module applying to the scheme. Section 159 authorises a regulation module to provide for "making improvements to the common property, including making improvements for the benefit of the owner of a lot …". The term "improvement" is defined in Schedule 6 to the Act as follows:

> "improvement includes —
> (a) the erection of a building; and > (b) a structural change; and
> (c) a non-structural change, including, for example, the installation of air conditioning."

19. Sections 91 and 94 of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Commercial Module) Regulation 1997 (Qld) identified some possible methods by which this extension of the bulkhead could have been effected. They provided, relevantly, as follows:

> "91 Disposal of interest in and leasing of common property — Act, s 116 [SM, s 111]
>
> (1) This section sets out the way in which, and the extent to which, the body corporate is authorised —
>
> (a) to sell or otherwise dispose of common property; and
> (b) to grant or amend a lease over common property.
>
> (2) The body corporate may —
>
> (a) if authorised by resolution without dissent —
>
> (i) sell or otherwise dispose of part of the common property; or > (ii) grant or amend a lease for more than 10 years over part of the common property; and
>
> (b) if authorised by special resolution — grant or amend a lease for 10 years or less over part of the common property.
>
>
> 94 Improvements to common property by lot owner — Act, s 121 [SM, s 114]
> (1) The body corporate may, if asked by the owner of a lot, authorise the owner to make an improvement to the common property for the benefit of the owner's lot.
> (2) An authorisation may be given under this section on conditions the body corporate considers appropriate.
> (3) The owner of a lot who is given an authority under this section —
> [140121]
> (a) must comply with conditions of the authority; and
> (b) must maintain the improvement made under the authority in good condition, unless excused by the body corporate."

20. The resolution itself does not make clear what statutory power is being exercised by the body corporate. It is clear from the resolution, however, that there has been no sale or lease of common property. No money was offered for that use of the common property. There is no rental or term of any lease prescribed and the premises the subject of any notional lease, although capable of being made certain, were not defined in the resolution.

21. The resolution is capable, however, of being construed as the grant of an indefinite licence to the owner of lot 5 to use that part of the common property. If it were such a disposition "otherwise", to use the language of s 91(l)(a) of the regulation then in force, the resolution said to authorise it retrospectively should have been passed without dissent in order to make it valid. That did not occur as four lot owners voted against it.

22. Another possibility is that the body corporate authorised the owner of lot 5 to make an improvement to the common property for the benefit of his lot under s 94. That would not have needed the authority of a particular form of resolution, such as s 91 requires for dispositions of interests in common property, unless the grant of permission to make the improvement itself amounted to a disposition of the common property.

The opposing arguments

23. The applicant's submission, in support of the argument that the body corporate had purported illegitimately to give the relevant part of the common property to the owner of lot 5, was that the extension of the bulkhead only benefited the owner of lot 5, prevented the common property on which the extension was placed from being used by another person or the body corporate and prevented the applicant from using that part of his lot frontage on the return face of the bulkhead from being used for signage. The argument was that the alteration or improvement made by the owner of lot 5 was indefinite temporally as the resolution did not specify that the permission to extend the bulkhead may be revoked. It was also said to be an improvement only capable of being used by the owner of lot 5 and, so, amounted to the grant of the exclusive use of that part of the common property for an indefinite period and became a disposition of an interest in the common property rather than simply an improvement to the common property for the benefit of lot 5. As the resolution of 10 November 2005 was a special resolution, the applicant also argued that the appropriate inference from that conduct was that the body corporate must have intended to act under s 91 of the regulation.

24. It was submitted by the respondent, however, that the legislation permitted structural alternations to be erected on common property to which the body corporate may consent. The definition of improvement, coupled with the power in s 94 of the regulation, was said to require the conclusion that the erection of a building on the common property, which one would normally regard as being of a semi-permanent nature, was not an alienation or a disposal of an interest in that property. Rather it should be taken to be simply something that was built on the common property which could be removed. In its submission a structural change such as the extension of a bulkhead from a lot was even more clearly a temporary structure able to be removed. The submission was, accordingly, that this was not a disposition of common property as structural alterations can be made on common property without there being a disposition of that property. In that context the submission was that s 91 and s 94 of the regulation were mutually exclusive.

Discussion

25. Where the improvement permitted under s 94 of the regulation has the effect of granting the use of part of the common property exclusively to a lot owner for an unlimited period, as has happened here, it seems to me that s 94 cannot be treated separately in its effect from s 91. The sections are not necessarily mutually exclusive as there is the real likelihood of the creation of a disposition of the land in those circumstances.

That may not necessarily be the case in some examples that one may think of. For example, a lot owner may ask for permission to fix a bench or place some seats outside his lot on the common property for the benefit of the business's customers. Although it would be an improvement it may not necessarily amount to a disposition of that part of the common property, especially if it remains accessible to others. A different conclusion would be likely to follow if, for example, the permission sought was to make an improvement to enclose indefinitely a car parking space on common property for use as a private parking space exclusively for a lot owner.

27. The position accepted by both the adjudicator and the learned District Court judge was that the evidence was not sufficient to allow the conclusion that what had occurred was a de facto acquisition of common property by the owner of lot 5. In a sense that is an approach that casts the onus of proof on the applicant to show that the resolution had the effect of otherwise disposing of that part of the common property. It is not necessary in this case to decide whether that is the correct way to approach the issue as it is my view, for reasons I shall explain, that there has been a disposition of the common property on the evidence available. In making a resolution of this type, however, the body corporate is potentially interfering with the rights of unit holders to the common property and should be required to make it clear just how those rights are to be affected.

28. In this case the approvals given retrospectively show that the extensions to the bulkheads over the common property will be enjoyed exclusively and indefinitely by the lot owner. That, in my view, amounts to a disposition of that property at least by the grant of an exclusive licence to it for some indefinite period. It may also amount to a gift of the property unless it is a mere licence that would normally be revocable.[1]

29. "A licence is an agreement in which the grantor confers on the licensee permission to enter the land for specific purposes which would otherwise be unlawful or constitute a trespass."[2] Because of the uncertainty attaching to the duration of the licence in this case and the absence of any obligation to pay rent it could not be treated as a lease even though there is a clear case that the owner of lot 5 has been given exclusive possession of it.[3]

30. The words, "dispose", "disposition" and "disposal" are very wide in their effect and, depending on the context, are not restricted to arrangements involving the transfer or creation of proprietary rights.[4] The terms of s 154 suggest that the grant of a licence is one of the means of disposing of common property envisaged by the legislation. Even if one assumes that the transaction here was simply the creation of a mere licence that gave no interest, legal or equitable, in the common property and was revocable,[5] the fact that exclusive possession of that part of the common property had passed to the owner of lot 5 would, in my view, allow the conclusion that there had been a disposition of the relevant part of the common property. The right to possession of that part of the common property had been made over or parted with for the period of the licence.[6] If the licence remained unrevoked, no action of trespass could have been maintained by the respondent against the owner of lot 5.[7]

31. It would have been simple for the body corporate to clarify in its resolution whether the permission to extend the bulkhead was for a particular period or was revocable and whether it was subject to other conditions. It would then have been possible to ascertain clearly what type of resolution was required, whether one without dissent or a special resolution. That task may have been more difficult under s 91 as it stood in 2006 as it, unlike s 154 of the Act, did not then refer to the grant of licences but spoke only of sales, other dispositions and leases for more than or less than 10 years. Section 117(2)(b) of the current regulation, Body Corporate and Community Management (Commercial Module) Regulation 2008, makes it clear, however, that a licence for less than 10 years may be granted by a special resolution.

32. It is important that the rights to common property of bodies corporate are not removed unheedingly or inadvertently and to the detriment of their members. That is why the rules require such resolutions to be passed without dissent. That the infringement on those rights is relatively trivial in this case does not excuse what occurred. The principle is significant.

Conclusion and orders

33. In my view, therefore, the resolution purporting to authorise the extension of bulkheads was a disposition "otherwise" for the purposes of s 91(2)(a)(i) of the regulation and was not passed without dissent. It was therefore invalid.

34. The application for leave to appeal was argued as if it were also a hearing in respect of an appeal. Consequently, as it seems to me that the matter is one where an appeal is necessary to correct a substantial injustice to the applicant, there is a reasonable argument that there is an error to be corrected and the issue is one of some general importance to bodies corporate and their members, the application for leave to appeal should be granted.

35. The orders should be as follows:

1. The application for leave to appeal is granted;
2. The appeal is allowed;
3. The order of the District Court of 19 August 2008 is set aside and instead it is ordered that the appeal is allowed and the order of the adjudicator made under Part 9 of Ch 6 Body Corporate & Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) on 15 February 2006 is set aside;

4. The matter is remitted to the adjudicator for determination in accordance with these reasons;
5. The respondent is to pay the applicant's costs of and incidental to this application and appeal and of the proceedings before the District Court.

36. An injunction was also sought requiring the respondent to remove the bulkhead structure from lot 5 but that relief was not pressed at the hearing. It seems to me that relief of that nature should not be granted at this stage because it is open to the respondent to approve another resolution to authorise the use of the extension to the bulkhead that does conform to the powers available under the legislation. I would remit that part of the application to the adjudicator for determination in accordance with these reasons.

Judgment delivered on 14 August 2009

Community schemes — Off-the-Plan Contract for Sale entered into by seller and purchaser — Disclosure Statements provided to purchaser not signed by seller or solicitors — Purchaser terminates contract for seller's breach of Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, s 206 — Whether solicitor signed covering letter enclosing Disclosure Statement is sufficient compliance with s 206 — Whether specific authorisation was provided by sellers to its solicitors to verify Disclosure Statement — Whether contracts validly terminated by purchaser for seller's breach.

The purchaser (applicant) entered into a contract with the sellers (respondents) for the purchase of six residential lots in a community titles scheme in Cairns. The purchaser also entered into a contract with Farmilo Pty Ltd for the management and letting rights of the scheme. Upon entering into the contracts, the sellers' solicitors provided the purchaser with six contracts for sale and six disclosure statements which were not signed by the sellers or its solicitors. The sellers' solicitors provided a signed covering letter directing the purchaser's attention to the attached warning statements and accompanying documents for execution.

None of the disclosure statements were signed by the sellers until a time after the purchaser had signed the documents. The sellers did not suggest there was any formal or specific authorisation by them for their solicitors to sign any such statement, nor did the solicitors in fact sign the disclosure statements or in any way specifically verify the statement's contents.

The purchaser has applied to the court for:

(a) a declaration that the six contracts were each lawfully terminated, and
(b) the return of its deposit on the sale, on the basis that the sellers had breached its obligations under s 206 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act for failure to provide disclosure statements signed by the sellers or a person authorised by the sellers.

The relevant provisions of s 206 of the Act provides:

"(1) The seller of a lot included in a community titles scheme … must give a person (the buyer) who proposes to buy a lot, before the buyer enters into a contract to buy the lot, a disclosure statement.

(3) The disclosure statement must be signed by the seller or a person authorised by the seller …"

The sellers argued that the disclosure statements provided to the purchaser prior to entering the contracts substantially complied with s 206. It also argued that the signature by the sellers' solicitors at the front of the covering letter enclosing the documents was an effective signing for the purposes of s 206.

Question before the court

Whether the sellers' solicitors signing of the covering letter was done with the authority of the sellers and was sufficient to verify the unsigned documents.

Held: Contracts validly terminated by purchaser

Decision

1. There was no evidence of any specific conduct by the sellers from which it could be inferred that their solicitors had authority to bind them to the terms of the disclosure statements. The text of the solicitors' letter did not contain terms suggestive of authority to verify the contents of the disclosure statements.

2. The terms of s 206 properly construed requires that there be personal verification by the seller, whether by the seller's own hand or by another person specifically authorised to do so. In this instance, there was no evidence of the sellers having given specific authority to their solicitors and, as a consequence, verification required by s 206 has not therefore been fulfilled.

3. The result is that the requirements of s 206(1) of the Act have not been complied with and therefore the purchaser was entitled to cancel the contract and recover the deposit paid.

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

M Jonsson (instructed by Greenwoods Solicitors) for the applicant.

A Philp SC (instructed by MacDonnells Law) for the respondents.

Before: Jones J

Editorial comment: Interestingly, in his Honour's opinion, the relevant provisions of the BCCMA are designed to meet the consumer protection objectives of the Act which are allied to the similarly designed provisions of PAMDA. Once it is accepted that consumer protection is the rationale for its existence, then that fact must determine the approach to the proper construction of the provisions of the BCCMA.

Jones J: On 5 November 2008, the applicant entered into a contract in writing with the first respondents for the purchase of six building units, namely Lots 11, 13, 14, 16, 17 and 21 on BUP 70791 County of Nares, Parish of Cairns (hereinafter the "unit contract"). On the same day the applicant entered into a contract in writing with the second respondent for the purchase of a Management and Letting business associated with the Reef Gateway Apartments (hereinafter "the rights contract").

2. By this Originating Application, the applicant seeks a declaration that it has lawfully terminated each contract and that it is entitled to have the respective deposits repaid to it. The basis for this claim is that the applicant was not, in relation to the unit contract, given a disclosure statement signed by the first respondents prior to his entering into that contract. The giving of a disclosure statement is required by s 206 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (hereinafter "BCCMA"). It is common ground that the performance of the rights contract was linked to the unit contract such that a valid cancellation of the latter meant that the former could also be validly terminated.

3. The respondents oppose the application on the basis that upon the proper construction of the relevant terms of BCCMA, the first respondent did substantially comply with s 206 before the applicant entered into the contract.

Background facts

4. The facts are not in dispute and no oral evidence was called. The relevant circumstances and documents are contained in the affidavit of David Greenwood filed on 11 March 2009 and the affidavit of Peter William Farmilo filed on 23 April 2009.

5. In early August 2008, John Gallo, a director of the applicant, approached Peter Farmilo offering to purchase the subject units and the management business. Each of the parties retained separate solicitors to act in the transaction.

6. On 31 October 2008, the respondents' solicitors sent a letter to the applicant's solicitors enclosing the following documents for their consideration:—

(a) Residential units contract to which was attached the PAMD Form 30c Warning Statement, followed by the BCCMA Form 14 Contract Warning; and
(b) BCCMA Disclosure Statements for the relevant lots; and
(c) Contract for the sale of management business.[1]

The respondents had not executed any of the documents but the letter was signed by a partner of the respondents' solicitors.[2]

7. On 4 November 2008, the applicant returned the documents duly executed by it though containing some amendments which were agreed to by the respondents.

8. On 5 November 2008, the first respondents signed the relevant documents including the disclosure statements in respect of the units. The signed documents identified in (a), (b) and (c) above were forwarded to the applicant's solicitors on 6 November 2008.[3]

9. The applicant relies upon these facts to contend that before it entered into the contract none of the disclosure statements were signed by the first respondents and thus there was no compliance with s 206 of BCCMA. The respondents contend that there has been substantial compliance with the section, arguing primarily that the signature by the respondents' solicitors in the letter of 31 October 2008 was an effective signing for the purpose of the section. In the alternative, the respondents argue that there has at least been substantial compliance with the section.

10. These issues did not arise until 18 February 2009[4] by which time there had been a number of concessions made by the respondents — a reduction in the purchase price of the rights contract, an extension of time for finance approval and an extension of time for the date of settlement. However, the respondents do not argue that there is any question determinable by reference to waiver. The issue between the parties turns solely on whether there has been compliance with the provisions of s 206.

11. Section 206 relevantly provides:—

> "206 Information to be given by seller to buyer
>
> (1) The seller (the seller) of a lot included in a community titles scheme … must give a person (the buyer) who proposes to buy the lot, before the buyer enters into a contract (the contract) to buy the lot, a disclosure statement.
> (2) The disclosure statement must—
>
> (a) state the name, address and contact telephone number for—
>
> (i) the secretary of the body corporate; or > (ii) if it is the duty of a body corporate manager to act for the body corporate for issuing body corporate information certificates — the body corporate manager; and
> (b) state the amount of annual contributions currently fixed by the body corporate as payable by the owner of the lot; and
> (c) …
> (d) identify improvements on common property for which the owner is responsible; and
> (e) list the body corporate assets required to be recorded on a register the body corporate keeps; and
> (f) identify the regulation module applying to the scheme; and
> (g) state whether there is a committee for the body corporate or a body corporate manager is engaged to perform the functions of a committee; and > (h) include other information prescribed under the regulation module applying to the scheme.
> (3) The disclosure statement must be signed by the seller or a person authorised by the seller.
> (4) The disclosure statement must be substantially complete.
> (7) If the contract has not already been settled, the buyer may cancel the contract if—
>
> (a) the seller has not complied with subsection (1); or
> (b) …
> (8) The seller does not fail to comply with subsection (1) merely because the disclosure statement, although substantially complete as at the day the contract is entered into, contains inaccuracies."

12. The section does not prescribe any form which must be followed in making out the disclosure statement. All that is required is that the information identified in subsection (2) above must be disclosed and that the statement must be "signed by the seller or a person authorised by the seller". The applicant does not express any concern about the content or the form of any of the disclosure statements. Each of them was, in fact, in a form which appears to have been designed by Cairns Search Agents who claim to be, with others, the copyright owner.[5] The document contains the following paragraph:—

> "2. This disclosure statement is commissioned by the vendor or the vendor/s agent or solicitor MacDonnells (Solicitors) and is designed to accompany a unit sale contract for (Lot No.) 'Reef Gateway Apartments'."

13. It is common ground that none of the disclosure statements were signed by the first respondents until a time after the applicant had signed the several documents. The first respondents do not suggest there was any formal or specific authorisation by them for their solicitors to sign any such statement. Nor did the solicitors in fact sign the disclosure statements or any way specifically verify the statement's contents. It might well be that the solicitors secured the information by authorising Cairns Search Agents to make the necessary inquiries. One could easily infer that this was the process followed. But the question is whether the solicitors signing of the letter of 31 October 2008[6] was done with the authority of the first respondents and was sufficient to verify the unsigned document.

14. The authority of a solicitor to make agreements or to verify information on behalf of a client is not open-ended. The legal effect of a solicitor's action will depend on whether the solicitor has the actual, or an ostensible, authority to bind the client. In Nowrani Pty Ltd v Brown[7] McPherson J said (at p 586):—

> "The mere fact that a person is a solicitor confers no implied authority to make contracts on behalf of one who happens to be his client: Pianta v National Finance & Trustees Ltd (1964) 38 ALJR 232; Rymark Australia Development Consultants Pty Ltd v Draper [1977] Qd R 336, 344. Nor, apart from express authority, does a solicitor have authority to agree to a variation of his client's contract; see George v Pottinger [1969] Qd R 101, 107. … The proposition contended for by Mr Douglas went the length of saying that a solicitor retained to bring to completion a contract for the sale of land, has, by virtue of that retainer alone, authority (1) to extend the time for completion of the contract; and (2) to elect to (or not to) avoid, rescind or determine the contract. If that is so, solicitors are certainly very powerful people, and one should think twice before retaining them."

Also at p 587 his Honour said:—

> "For ostensible authority it is necessary to show that there was some holding out of (the solicitor) by the defendant as having her authority to make the variation agreement."

15. McPherson J made reference to Legione v Hateley[8] and to Sargent v ASL Developments Ltd[9] where the High Court on separate occasions considered when a client was bound by the actions of, or by the information held by, his or her solicitor. In neither of those cases, nor in the principles identified, was there any suggestion that a solicitor signing a letter in the course of a general authority constituted the verification of a statement of the kind mandated by s 206.

16. There is no evidence of any specific conduct by the first respondents from which it could be inferred that their solicitors had authority to bind them to the terms of the disclosure statement. The text of the solicitors' letter of 31 October 2008 (ex "DG3") does not contain terms suggestive of authority to verify the contents of the disclosure statement, rather the text is consistent with the solicitors being authorised to prepare the contractual documents and to secure their execution. That letter also contains a paragraph directing the applicant's attention to the disclosure statement and various warnings given pursuant to the Property Agents & Motor Dealers Act 2001 (PAMDA) and BCCMA. This direction was no more than what was required of the solicitors in compliance with s 366B(4) of PAMDA.

17. Neither in that direction, nor in the above quoted paragraph taken from the disclosure statement, is there any direct authority to the solicitors to verify the information contained in the disclosure statement. Nor, in my view, is there anything in the circumstances by which such authority can be inferred.

18. The relevant provisions of BCCMA are designed to meet the consumer protection objectives of the Act. In so doing, they are allied to the similarly designed provisions of PAMDA. For example, Part 2 of Chapter 5 of PAMDA relevantly places obligations both on sellers of residential property and lawyers who act on a seller's behalf, by which warnings are brought to the attention of intending buyers. These objectives were discussed by de Jersey CJ in MNM Developments Pty Ltd v Gerrard[10] who said as follows:—

> "[16] The context of the requirement set up by s 366 tells against a liberal interpretation of that requirement. Chapter 11 of the Act, in which s 366 occurs, contains a detailed set of technical requirements plainly directed to ensuring a form of consumer protection for purchases of residential property. One of the objects of the Act, stated in its preamble, is 'to protect consumers against particular undesirable practices'. That protection extends, in cases like these, to giving a purchaser a right to terminate even for quite technical contraventions, and whether or not the purchaser has suffered any material disadvantage. See, for example, s 366(4)(a), s 366(4)(b) (including the example) and s 367(2) …
> [21] Finally, had the parliament intended to sanction a situation like this, it would have done so by using language less prescriptive than, 'as its first or top sheet'. It is those terms which to my mind compellingly exclude the respondent's position. The legislature has considered an exacting obligation justified to secure the goal of consumer protection."

19. I am informed that there are no decided cases dealing directly with s 206 of BCCMA but once it is accepted that consumer protection is the rationale for its existence then that fact must determine the approach to its proper construction.

20. Mr Philp of Senior Counsel argues that the objectives of BCCMA do not highlight particularly the consumer protection intentions. He contrasts the primary objective of PAMDA as being "to protect consumers against particular undesirable practices" with the more sedate secondary objectives in s 4(g) of BCCMA "to provide an appropriate level of consumer protection for owners and intending buyers" against the background in s 4(a) of "balancing the rights of individuals". These objectives, he contends, were met by the transmission of the disclosure statement in the solicitor's letter and the details warnings provided by the letter.

21. Mr Jonsson of Counsel for the applicant points to the centrality of the disclosure to the fulfilment of the objective of consumer protection. He relies firstly on s 207 of BCCMA by which the contract includes the disclosure statement and all material accompanying the statement. Secondly, by s 208, the information in the disclosure statement may be relied upon by the buyer as if it had been warranted. Thirdly, by s 209, the buyer may, if the contract has not been settled, cancel the contract if the disclosure statement is inaccurate or its accuracy cannot be verified upon reasonable inquiry.

22. Consumer protection is clearly one of the significant motivations for the enactment of the provisions of Chapter 5 of BCCMA. It demands of the seller of lots, or proposed lots, the disclosure of information which a buyer could not easily ascertain for himself or herself. It imposes significant safeguards by imposing on the seller warranty for the truth of the information and it provides a significant sanction in that the contract may be cancelled if the information is not accurate. As well, these provisions incorporate the warning statements required under the PAMDA.

23. I accept the submissions made on behalf of the respondents that the provisions of ss 207–209 do indicate the centrality of the disclosure statement to the contractual rights and obligations of the parties. As such, the requirement that the provision of the disclosure statement be a legal and binding act of the seller is made clear.

24. Once this is accepted, the question then is whether the disclosure statement provided by the first respondents complied with the provisions of s 206 of BCCMA.

25. The first respondents argue that by reason of s 206(8) there has been substantial compliance with the requirements of the section. The argument is that subsection (8) qualifies not only the content of the disclosure statement but also its execution as required by subsection (3). The argument thereafter contends that the solicitor's signature on the accompanying letter, the likely circumstances of the preparation of the disclosure statement and the general authority of the solicitor is sufficient compliance with the terms of the Act.

26. The applicant contends, having regard to the purpose of the disclosure statement and its centrality to the contract, that verification of its contents must be given by the seller or a person duly authorised by the seller.

In this connection, the applicant refers to s 48A of the Acts Interpretation Act 1954 which is in the following terms:—

> "48A Verification of documents
> If an Act requires that, for a purpose of the Act or another law, a document, or information or a document include in, attached to or given with a document, be verified in a specified way, the purpose is not fulfilled unless the requirement is satisfied."

27. The legislature has not prescribed any form to be used in making a disclosure statement but the scope of the information to be disclosed is mandated by s 206(2). Such information must be substantially complete as at the date of the contract. If information is later found to be inaccurate, this does not invalidate the statement. This fact does not, in my view, lessen the importance of the disclosure statement in the contractual arrangement. Rather it seems to me, to be no more than a reflection of the fact that some information comes to the knowledge of the seller only upon inquiry of others. Read as a whole, the provisions of Parts 1A and 1 of Chapter 5 of BCCMA bespeak a statutory objective of providing an appropriate level of consumer protection. Even though these provisions do not contain punitive sanctions such as exist in PAMDA, the evident purpose of the provisions calls for a strict approach to the fulfilment of their terms.

Conclusion

28. In the absence of any contention as to the contents of the disclosure statement, the only issue between the parties is the manner of its verification. In this regard I take the view that the terms of s 206 properly construed requires that there be personal verification by the seller, whether by the seller's own hand or by another person specifically authorised to do so. In this instance, there is no evidence of the respondents having given specific authority to their solicitors and as a consequence verification in the sense envisaged by s 48A of the Acts Interpretation Act and by the statutory purpose, has not therefore been fulfilled. The result of this finding is that the requirements of s 206(1) of BCCMA have not been complied with. The applicant was therefore entitled to cancel the unit contract and with it the rights contract as well and to recover the deposits paid.

Orders

29. I make the following orders:—

The Court—

> 1. Declares that the first respondents failed to give the applicant a disclosure statement complying or, alternatively, substantially complying with s 206(1) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 before the applicant entered into a contract dated 5 November 2009 for the purchase from the first respondents of Lots 11, 13, 14, 16, 17 and 21 on BUP 70791, County of Nares, Parish of Cairns, (the "Unit Contract") by failing to give to the applicant a disclosure statement signed by the first respondents, or a person authorised by the first respondents, before the applicant entered into the Unit Contract.
> 2. Declares that the applicant has lawfully cancelled the Unit Contract pursuant to s 206(7) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997.
> 3. Declares that the applicant is entitled to be repaid the whole of the deposit paid by the applicant under the terms of the Unit Contract in the sum of $10,000.00.
> 4. Declares that the applicant has lawfully terminated the contract dated 5 November 2008 for the purchase by the applicant from the second respondent of the management and letting business known as Reef Gateway Apartments (the "Rights Contract") for non-fulfilment of the condition relating to completion of the Unit Contract.
> 5. Declares that the applicant is entitled to be repaid the whole of the deposit paid by the applicant under the terms of the Rights Contract in the sum of $10,000.00.
> 6. Orders that the first and second respondents pay the applicant's costs of and incidental to this application to be assessed on the standard basis.

BOSSICHIX PTY LTD v MARTINEK HOLDINGS PTY LTD

(2009) LQCS ¶90-152; Court citation: [2009] QCA 154

Judgment delivered 5 June 2009

Community schemes — Establishment of community title scheme — Off-the-plan contract of sale — Where contract provides that settlement date is 14 days after notification of registration of building format plan — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 s 212 — Legislative requirement that settlement must not take place earlier than 14 days after the seller gives advice to buyer that the scheme has been established or changed — Where purchaser may cancel if contract does not comply with legislative requirement — Whether contract complies with legislative requirement — Whether purchaser entitled to cancel contract.

This was an appeal by the developer (appellant) against the decision of the Queensland Supreme Court which was previously reported at (2008) LQCS ¶90-147. The purchaser (respondent) entered into an "off-the-plan" contract of sale with the developer for a building unit to be created within a residential community titles scheme and subsequently purported to cancel the contract on the basis that cl 14 of the contract failed to comply with the requirements of s 212 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997. The purchaser's solicitors argued that the contract did not expressly state that "settlement must not take place earlier than" 14 days after the vendor gave notice to the purchaser that, relevantly, the scheme has been established. The unambiguous grammatical meaning of s 212 was that the contract had to expressly so provide.

Clause 14 of the contract provided that:

> "The settlement date is the later of—
>
> a) 14 days after the Seller notifies the Buyer that the Building Format Plan is registered; and > b) Three days after the Seller notifies the Buyer that a Certificate of Classification is issued for the building."

Section 212 of the Act provides that:

> "A contract entered into by a person (the seller) with another person (the buyer) for the sale to the buyer of a lot intended to come into existence as a lot included in a community titles scheme when the scheme is established or changed must provide that settlement must not take place earlier than 14 days after the seller gives advice to the buyer that the scheme has been established or changed."

The developer rejected the purchaser's purported cancellation and affirmed the contract. The developer notified the purchaser of registration of the building format plan and fixed the date for settlement of the contract. The purchaser failed to settle the contract and accordingly the developer terminated the contract and forfeited the deposit.

Decision of the Supreme Court

The Queensland Supreme Court held that the contract did not adequately provide notice for settlement in accordance with s 212 of the Act as the seller failed to properly inform the buyer that the scheme had been established. To comply with s 212, the contract must notify the buyer that settlement must not take place until 14 days after the building format plan and the community management statement has been registered (and the scheme established).

Arguments on appeal

1. The judge at first instance wrongly attributed that the purpose of s 212 is to give effect to disclosure and information to assist a buyer to understand its legal position, whereas the evident purpose is rather to require relevant contracts to have the effect that the parties will not be obliged to settle the contract until 14 days after the property (the subject of the contract) is completed.

2. By law the registration of the plan of subdivision and the recording of the community management statement must occur contemporaneously or at least must immediately follow the first, so a notice that the first has occurred (ie registration of the plan) is effectively notice that both have occurred and that the scheme has been established.

3. The parties have considered the registration of the plan to be the point at which the scheme will be established and the effect of cl 14 of the contract is that the parties have agreed that the notice should be one which advises of the establishment of the scheme. In this way the contract has met the requirement of s 212.

Held: Appeal dismissed (Holmes JA and A Lyons J agree with McMurdo J's reasons)

1. McMurdo J agreed that the primary judges' reasoning is open to criticism in terms of the interpretation of the purpose of s 212; however it does not deter from the point that registration of a plan and the establishment of a scheme are not the same thing. A notice to the buyer of the first occurring (being the registration of the plan) would not appear to be, without more, a notice that the scheme had been established and thereby sufficient for s 212.

2. Registration of the plan of subdivision has the effect of creating the lots defined in the plan, but of itself does not have the effect of creating the common property depicted in the plan. That occurs only once the plan is registered and the community management statement is recorded. The recording of the statement is an act which has distinct legal consequences. The two steps are distinct and s 24 of the Act makes it clear that both steps are necessary for the establishment of the scheme.

3. The event triggering settlement unambiguously specified in cl 14 is the registration of the building format plan. The fact that the parties were mistaken about the event which, in law, established the scheme does not alter the fact that they have made registration of the plan, not the establishment of the scheme, the relevant event for fixing the date for settlement. The result is that cl 14 does not have the same effect as the provision required by s 212. The respondent was entitled to cancel the contract.

Before: Holmes JA, McMurdo J and A Lyons J

Editorial Comment: McMurdo J interestingly added that in his view, s 212 does not require the employment of the very words in the section, it requires the contract to have the effect prescribed by the section.

The precedent set by the Supreme Court and Court of Appeal decisions led to the Queensland Parliament passing the Body Corporate and Community Management Amendment Act 2009 which replaces the previous s 212 with a new s 212 and 212A. The amending Act has retrospective effect as the government hopes to remedy technical breaches of the previous s 212 in most Queensland standard off-the-plan contracts.

Holmes JA:

1. I agree with McMurdo J that clause 14.1 of the contract did not meet the requirements of s 212(1), because, as he has explained, notification that the Building Format Plan had been registered did not equate to advice that the scheme had been established (although the latter might ordinarily be expected to occur contemporaneously with the former). Like McMurdo J, I do not think that compliance with s 212(1) necessitated the use of its precise words: it would suffice if the contract clause had the required effect. I prefer, however, not to express any view on whether, in order to comply with s 212(1), it was necessary that the relevant clause preclude settlement earlier than 14 days after the necessary advice, as opposed to merely providing for settlement 14 days after it.

2. It follows that I too would dismiss the appeal with costs.

McMurdo J:

3. On 30 June 2005, the appellant agreed to sell to the respondent a home unit in a proposed building in Mackay, for a price of $995,000. The appellant promised to construct the building, in which this would be one of 57 units, and to:

> "register the Building Format Plan and to obtain a Certificate of Classification for the Building as soon as reasonably possible after construction of the Building is complete".

4. The date for completion, according to cl 14.1, was as follows:

> "14.1 The settlement date is the later of—
>
> (a) 14 days after the date the Seller notifies the Buyer that the Building Format Plan has registered; and
> (b) 3 days after the date the Seller notifies the Buyer that a Certificate of Classification has issued for the Building."

5. On 13 November 2007, which was prior to any notice under that clause, the respondent purported to cancel the contract pursuant to s 212(3) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) ("the BCCM Act"). Section 212 provides:

> "212 Cancellation for not complying with basic requirements
> (1) A contract entered into by a person (the seller) with another person (the buyer) for the sale to the buyer of a lot intended to come into existence as a lot included in a community

titles scheme when the scheme is established or changed must provide that settlement must not take place earlier than 14 days after the seller gives advice to the buyer that the scheme has been established or changed.
(2) Also, when the contract is entered into, there must be a proposed community management statement for the scheme as established or changed.
(3) The buyer may cancel the contract if—

(a) there has been a contravention of subsection (1) or (2); and
(b) the contract has not already been settled."

6. The appellant disputed that cancellation and upon completing the construction of the building and causing the community titles scheme to be established, it gave a notice to the respondent purportedly under cl 14. By an originating application, the respondent sought declarations that it had validly cancelled the contract and was entitled to the return of the deposit. The facts were not in dispute and the only question was whether cl 14 of the contract met the requirements of s 212(1) of the BCCM Act. Mackenzie J held that it did not do so and granted the declarations which were sought.[1]

7. Before his Honour, the present respondent argued that cl 14 was insufficient for two reasons. The first point, which his Honour found it unnecessary to consider, was that only a contract which contained the very words of s 212(1) would suffice. The second argument was (and is) that cl 14 refers to a notice of the registration of the Building Format Plan, whereas s 212 refers to a notice of the establishment of the community titles scheme. It argues that the registration of the plan and the establishment of the scheme are not the same thing, and they could not, or at least need not, occur contemporaneously. That argument was accepted by the learned primary judge by this reasoning:

"[22] It may be interpolated that although clause 14.1 refers to the Building Format Plan (defined in clause 2), there is no reference in clause 14.1 to the Community Management Statement, the recording of which is one of the essential elements of establishing a scheme. The definition refers to it being 'registered' with the Building Format Plan, but it was not suggested that there was any statement elsewhere in the contract referring to its recording as one element of establishing the scheme. In that sense, clause 14.1 omits to mention it. Clause 14.1 fixes the date of settlement by reference to three events, the registration of the Building Format Plan, the issue of the Certificate of Classification and the elapsing of a relevant time calculated by reference to clause 14.1. The event that would trigger the obligation to settle does not equate to advice that, in all respects, the scheme has been established. Without determining at what point it is relevantly 'recorded', it must be acknowledged that because of Registrar of Titles' practice, the Community Management Statement will have been recorded, at worst, virtually contemporaneously with registration of the plan of subdivision (which fits the description of Building Format Plan as defined in clause 2). However, there is no guarantee that that would be known to an average buyer and if it is accepted that the requirement in s 212 is essentially a consumer protection provision, it has not been complied with. It is not the fact that contemporaneous recording may occur that is decisive. It is the fact that clause 14(1) does not adequately convey to the buyer that more than registration of the Building Format Plan is necessary to establish the Community Title Scheme and trigger the fixing of a time for settlement.

[23] With regard to an argument that the provision in s 212 is intended to achieve a balance between the seller and the buyer of a unit, principally because the obligation under s 212 is not placed on any particular person, the practical reality is that, because all the detriment that might flow from non-compliance lies with the seller, it would be imprudent for a seller to fail to ensure that the contract complies with any prescriptive requirements. If they are not complied with, it is difficult to see that the objective of s 212, of ensuring that a buyer is made aware of being protected against being forced to settle a unit sale before the scheme is fully established or at short notice once it is, is promoted by the kind of construction proposed by the respondent."

8. On this appeal, much of the appellant's argument was directed to what his Honour saw as the purpose of s 212, which was to adequately convey to the buyer that "in all respects the scheme has been established". It is argued that his Honour wrongly attributed to the section a purpose of the disclosure or provision of information to assist a buyer to understand its legal position, when the evident purpose is to require relevant contracts to have a certain effect, namely that the parties will not be obliged to settle earlier than 14 days after the property, the subject of the contract, has been "perfected". His Honour's reasoning is open to that criticism but that does not resolve the present question. In particular it does not meet the point that the registration of a plan and the establishment of a scheme are not the same thing.

9. By s 10(1) of the BCCM Act, a community title scheme is defined to comprise:

> "(a) a single community management statement recorded by the registrar identifying land (the scheme land); and > (b) the scheme land."

The required content of a community management statement is prescribed by s 66, and it is that document which, subject to the operation of the Act, defines the legal relationship between the participants in a scheme, who are the owners of individual lots, the body corporate for the scheme and others such as a body corporate manager for the scheme.

10. Section 24 of the BCCM Act provides as follows:

> "24 Establishment of community titles scheme
>
> (1) A community titles scheme is established by—
>
> (a) firstly, the registration, under the Land Title Act, of a plan of subdivision for identifying the scheme land for the scheme; and
> (b) secondly, the recording by the registrar of the first community management statement for the scheme.
> [140134]
> (2) A community titles scheme is established when the first community management statement for the scheme is recorded."

There are then two acts by which a scheme is established. Each is performed by the registrar of titles[2] under the Land Title Act 1994 (Qld). A notice to the buyer that the first of them (the registration of the plan of subdivision) has occurred would not appear to be, without more, a notice that the scheme had been established and thereby sufficient for s 212.

11. However, the appellant argues that by law these two acts must occur contemporaneously or at least that the second must immediately follow the first, so that a notice that the first has occurred is effectively a notice that both have occurred, and that the scheme has been established. That requires a consideration of what the registrar is to do under the Land Title Act.

12. Division 3 of Pt 4 of the Land Title Act provides for the registration of plans of subdivision. Section 49A provides that upon registration of a plan of subdivision, "a lot defined in the plan is created". Section 49C applies to a "building format plan of subdivision", which is a "plan of survey which defines land using the structural elements of a building, including, for example, floors, walls and ceilings".[3] The plan of subdivision which was required in the present case was a building format plan, to which s 49C thereby applied. By s 49C(2), common property for the community titles scheme had to be "created under the plan". Section 49DA provides that if scheme land for a community titles scheme is to be subdivided by such a plan of subdivision:

> "the registration of the plan and recording of the new community management statement for the scheme operate, without anything further, to create the common property".

Accordingly, the registration under the Land Title Act of a plan of subdivision, which is the first of the steps within s 24 of the BCCM Act, has the effect of creating the lots defined in the plan[4] but of itself, does not have the effect of creating the common property depicted in the plan. That occurs only once the plan is registered and the community management statement is recorded.

13. The recording of the community management statement is performed by the registrar under Pt 6A of the Land Title Act, within which s 115J requires the lodgement with the registrar of a request to record the statement. When recording a statement, the registrar must record a reference to it on the title for each lot and the common property within the scheme land: s 115L(1)(b). The statement takes effect when it is recorded as the statement for the scheme: s 115L(3). To the same effect is s 52 of the BCCM Act, which provides that a community management statement has no effect unless it is recorded.

14. Accordingly, the recording of the statement is an act which has distinct legal consequences. For example, until that occurred in this case, the appellant could not have conveyed the title which was required by the contract, which was the registered ownership of a lot within the scheme.

15. Although there is no express requirement for the registrar to record a statement immediately upon registering the relevant plan, it is at least strongly arguable that the registrar should endeavour to do so and that, before registering a plan, the registrar should be satisfied that the statement is in appropriate terms to be immediately recorded. If a substantial interval of time could occur between the creation of the lots by the registration of the plan and the establishment of the scheme upon the recording of the statement, the result could be the existence of individual lots, capable of being transferred, but not as lots the subject of the scheme. Accordingly, the practice of the registrar, to which his Honour referred, corresponds with what would seem to be an implied requirement of the legislation.

16. Nevertheless, the two steps are distinct, and s 24 of the BCCM Act makes it clear that both steps are necessary for the establishment of the scheme. As Mr Lumb for the respondent argued, it is possible that at least by an oversight, the recording of the statement might not immediately follow the registration of the plan. It remains the case that a notice of registration of the plan is not the equivalent of a notice of the establishment of the scheme.

17. The question then is whether this contract complied with s 212 of the BCCM Act. At least if considered alone, cl 14 did not comply because it provided for completion at least 14 days from a notice of registration of the plan. But the appellant argues that this should be read in the context of other terms of the contract, which include the following:

> "1.1 The Seller will sell to the Buyer and the Buyer will buy from the Seller the lot identified in the Contract Details on the terms in this Contract.
> 1.4 The Lot will be a lot in a Community Titles Scheme. This means that the lot will be subject to the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 and the Community Management Statement.
> 2.1 In this contract, these terms have these meanings unless the contrary intention appears —
>
> Building Format Plan means the Building Format Plan that is registered to create the lot.
>
> Community Management Statement means the Community Management Statement to be registered with the Building Format Plan. The draft Community Management Statement forms part of the Disclosure Statement.
>
>
> lot means a lot in the Scheme.
>
> the Lot means the Lot the Buyer is buying under this Contract

Scheme means the Community Titles Scheme for Rivage that will be created on registration of the Building Format Plan

4.2 The Seller will register the Building Format Plan and obtain a Certificate of Classification for the Building as soon as reasonably possible after construction of the Building is complete."

Particular reliance is placed on the definitions of the terms "Community Management Statement" and "Scheme". The first suggests that the Community Management Statement will be "registered" at the same time as the plan is registered. The definition of "Scheme" suggests that the Scheme will be established on registration of the plan. These provisions involve some misstatement of the operation of the legislation, and particularly s 24 of the BCCM Act. However, the appellant argues that as the parties have considered the registration of the plan to be the point at which the scheme will be established, the effect of cl 14.1 is that they have agreed that the notice should be one which advises of the establishment of the scheme. In this way it is argued that the clause met the requirement of s 212.

18. I am unable to accept that argument because the event unambiguously specified in cl 14.1(a) is the registration of the Building Format Plan. The fact that the parties were mistaken about the event which, in law, established the scheme does not alter the fact that they have made the registration of the plan, not the establishment of the scheme, the relevant event for fixing the date for settlement. And in cl 13, where it was agreed that the buyer might

> "apply to the body corporate created on registration of the Building Format Plan and the Community Management Statement to do any one or more of the things specified in Section 205 of the Act …", they recognised the distinction between the registration of the plan and the "registration" (or more precisely, the recording) of the statement.

19. The learned primary judge described the registrar's practice of recording the statement virtually contemporaneously with registration of the plan. Nevertheless that is a practice which for many reasons might not be followed in every case. Notice of registration of the plan would be no more than notice that, if the practice had been followed, the scheme had been established. That is different from notice that the scheme has been established.

20. The result is that cl 14 does not have the same effect as the provision required by s 212(1). The respondent was entitled to cancel the contract and the declarations in its favour were correctly made.

21. The alternative submissions for the respondent were not persuasive. In my view s 212 does not require the employment of the very words of the section. It requires the contract to have the effect prescribed by the section. No purpose would be served by requiring the exact words to be used. The purpose of s 212 is not to inform the buyer of its legal rights. Rather the purpose is to inform the buyer that the scheme has been established and to allow a sufficient time prior to settlement for the buyer to make any necessary searches and enquiries. (It must be said that those purposes could have been just as well served by a provision which simply deemed every relevant contract to contain such a term, rather than providing a right of cancellation where the relevant term is not drafted according to the statute. In the present case, for example, there would seem to be no prospect that the buyer could have been prejudiced by the non-compliance with the statute such that it should be necessary to make the contract voidable by one side).

22. The other argument for the respondent was that s 212 requires a "prohibition" on an early settlement. On this argument, had cl 14.1(a) used the words "the community titles scheme has been established" in lieu of "the Building Format Plan has registered", nevertheless it would not have sufficed. This is because, it is suggested, the effect of that clause would have been different from one which was in terms that "the settlement must not take place earlier than 14 days after the seller gives advice to the buyer that the scheme has been established". But there would be no difference in effect between those clauses. In each case the parties would have agreed that there was no obligation to settle within the 14 days and that the contract might be settled earlier only with the concurrence of the parties. In neither case would they be precluded from later reaching that concurrence, and settling earlier. In each case a variation of the contract to provide for an earlier settlement would contravene s 212(1). But that would not mean that the variation had no legal effect, but only that it gave rise to the right of cancellation. Accordingly, I would not have accepted this submission.

23. I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

A Lyons J:

24. It is clear that the parties agreed pursuant to cl 14.1(a) of the contract that the relevant settlement date was to be "14 days after the Seller notifies the Buyer that the Building Format Plan has registered". Section 212(1) however requires that the contract "must provide that settlement must not take place earlier than 14 days after the seller gives advice to the buyer that the scheme has been established or changed". The Act required notice of establishment or change of the scheme whereas the contract provided for notice of registration of the Building Format Plan. Those two events are not the same.

25. As McMurdo J outlines in his reasons, the clear result is that cl 14 does not have the effect which s 212(1) requires and the respondent was entitled to cancel the contract pursuant to s 212(3) of the Act. I also agree that use of the precise words of s 212(1) was not required and that it is sufficient if the relevant clause has the effect required by the section. I also consider that the purpose of s 212 is to inform the buyer that the scheme has been established and then provides a period of time which is sufficient for all the relevant searches to be completed prior to settlement.

26. I agree with the reasons given by McMurdo J that cl 14 of the contract did not meet the requirements of s 212(1) of the BCCM Act and that the appeal should be dismissed as the declarations were correctly made.

27. Accordingly, I also agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

(2009) LQCS ¶90-153; Court citation: [2009] QSC 290

Queensland Supreme Court

Judgment delivered 14 September 2009

Contract of Sale — Termination rights— Interpretation of finance approval condition under contract for sale — Purchaser's failure to give express notice of finance approval by finance date — Seller and purchaser continue to negotiate terms of contract — Further terms could not be reached — Whether seller may subsequently terminate contract on the basis of purchaser's failure to notify of finance approval by finance date — Purchaser asserts contracts on foot — Seller waived its rights to terminate through its subsequent actions — Seller's solicitors failed to reserve sellers rights to terminate — Contracts remain on foot and enforceable.

The respondents (sellers), Mr and Mrs Crittenden, entered into two contracts for sale to sell units to the applicant (purchaser) Scali. The issue disputed in this case was whether the sellers had validly terminated the contract for failure by the purchaser to confirm finance approval in relation to the sale. The purchaser applied to the court for declarations that the contracts remain on foot and decrees for specific performance of the contracts by the sellers.

The relevant finance approval provision in the contracts is stated as follows:

> "3 Finance
>
> 3.1 This contract is conditional on the Buyer obtaining approval of a loan for the Finance Amount … by the Finance Date …
>
> 3.2 The Buyer must give notice to the Seller that:
>
> (1) approval had not been obtained by the Finance Date and the contract is terminated; or
> (2) the finance condition has been either satisfied or waived by the Buyer.
> 3.3 The Seller may terminate this contract by notice to the Buyer if notice is not given under clause 3.2 by 5 pm on the Finance Date. This is the Seller's only remedy for the Buyer's failure to give notice …"

The Finance Date was 17 June 2009. The purchaser failed to give notice required by cl 3.2 on 17 June 2009, and the sellers had a right to terminate the contracts by notice to the purchaser on that date. However, neither the sellers nor its solicitors gave notice to the purchaser on 17 June 2009 to terminate the contracts but rather continued to negotiate with the purchaser on further terms relating to the early release of the deposit in exchange for an extension to the settlement date under the contracts.

Subsequently, further terms to the contracts could not be reached by the parties, and the solicitors for the sellers terminated the contracts based on the purchaser's failure to advise the sellers of finance approval in accordance with cl 3.2. The purchaser disputed the termination and asserted that the contracts remain on foot.

Held: Contracts remain on foot

1. The purchaser failed to provide notice under cl 3.2 by 5 pm on 17 June 2009, and as such the sellers gained a right to terminate the contracts by notice to the purchaser. The sellers did not purport to exercise that right until later, but by then, the sellers had waived the right of termination or elected to affirm the contracts.

2. In the subsequent (after 17 June 2009) letters of negotiation between the parties, the sellers proceeded as if the contracts were on foot, contemplating an extension of time for settlement on certain conditions. The terms of the letters involved an acknowledgment that time was then "of the essence". The letters did not reserve the sellers' right to terminate or say that the further negotiation was "subject to" or "without prejudice to" that right to terminate.

The communications evidence the sellers clear and unequivocal intention to proceed to completion; they are consistent only with the sellers maintaining or affirming the contracts. It follows that the sellers could not terminate the contracts later on 2 July 2009 as they purported to do so.

4. The contracts remain on foot and enforceable.

Editorial Comment: It is interesting in his Honour's opinion (in obiter) that although it was not necessary to determine this point in the case, the letter to the seller in the subsequent negotiations, which stated on behalf of the purchasers: "Transfer documents will be forwarded to your client's execution today", did not waive the benefit of the finance condition under cl 3.2 of the contracts. Clause 3.2 required the express waiver by the purchasers, and the waiver could not be inferred from conduct.

This judgment highlights the importance of the wording of correspondence and dealings between negotiating parties to a contract. For the purposes of practice, it suggests that solicitors should be careful to note any conditions precedent to settlement or terms which give rise to a client's right to terminate. Solicitors should reserve its client's contractual rights prior to further negotiations between the parties, as failure to do so may result in a waiver of those rights.

Chief Justice:

1. The respondents, Mr and Mrs Crittenden, entered into two separate contracts to sell home units to the applicant Scali. The contracts were dated 27 May 2009. The issue is whether the contracts have been terminated, or remain on foot. Scali seeks declarations that they remain on foot, and decrees for specific performance. Because Mr and Mrs Crittenden raise a factual issue about Scali's financial capacity to complete, any relief should be confined to declarations.

2. Each contract contained the following cl 3:

"3 Finance

3.1 This contract is conditional on the Buyer obtaining approval of a loan for the Finance Amount from the Financier by the Finance Date on terms satisfactory to the Buyer. The Buyer must take all reasonable steps to obtain approval.
3.2 The Buyer must give notice to the Seller that:

(1) approval has not been obtained by the Finance Date and the contract is terminated; or
(2) the finance condition has been either satisfied or waived by the Buyer.

3.3 The Seller may terminate this contract by notice to the Buyer if notice is not given under clause 3.2 by 5 pm on the Finance Date. This is the Seller's only remedy for the Buyer's failure to give notice.
3.4 The Seller's right under clause 3.3 is subject to the Buyer's continuing right to terminate this contract under clause 3.2(1) or waive the benefit of this clause 3 by giving written notice to the Seller of the waiver."

3. The "Finance Date" was 17 June 2009. Scali failed to give the notice required by cl 3.2. Consequently, at 5 pm on 17 June 2009, Mr and Mrs Crittenden gained a right to terminate the contracts by notice to Scali.

4. The evidence shows the following exchange of correspondence after 17 June 2009:

1. On 26 June 2009, the solicitor for Scali wrote to the solicitors for Mr and Mrs Crittenden saying:

   "We confirm that we are holding the deposit funds of $170,000 in respect of both contracts.

   Mrs Crittenden has been contacting our office and requesting the release of the deposit.

   We have taken instructions from Mr Scali and while at some point during the many negotiations between our respective clients there was some talk about the early release of the deposit, as you will be able to advise your client the contracts do not make provision for early release of the deposit, and Mr Scali has instructed that he is not prepared to authorise its early release."

2. On 29 June 2009, the solicitors for Mr and Mrs Crittenden wrote to the solicitor for Scali saying:

   "We confirm that our client is agreeable to an extension of the settlement date until 31 August 2009, with time to remain of the essence for both contracts above on the provision that your client releases the deposit monies of $170,000 (in total) to our client immediately."
3. On 30 June 2009, the solicitor for Scali wrote to the solicitors for Mr and Mrs Crittenden saying:

   "Our client has not contacted us as yet with the instructions as per your correspondence however we will contact him today.

Part of the problem in this matter is that the clients continue to discuss matters amongst themselves and it would be better for all concerned if they directed their instructions through our respective selves."

4. On the same day, the solicitor for Scali wrote again as follows:

"Mrs Crittenden has requested that the deposit be released unconditionally. That did not form part of the terms of the contract.

If Mr Scali is to release the deposit unconditionally he has advised that it be on the following terms:

1. That the settlement date be extended to 31 August 2009.
2. That the contract value for each of the properties be amended to $1 million."

5. On the same day, the solicitors for Mr and Mrs Crittenden wrote:

"Our clients are unable to change the contract values for either properties as changes to the values will have serious capital gains tax implications for our clients. They are only prepared to extend the settlement date until 31 August 2009, with time to remain of the essence if the full deposit is released to our clients unconditionally immediately."

6. On 2 July 2009, the solicitor for Scali wrote:

"Our instructions are not to extend settlement nor to release the deposit to your clients.

Transfer documents will be forwarded to you for your client's execution today."

7. On the same day, the solicitors for Mr and Mrs Crittenden wrote:

"Can you please advise urgently whether your client has obtained finance for the above properties and that the contract is unconditional? Finance was due on 17 June 2009."

8. Also on 2 July 2009, the solicitors for Mr and Mrs Crittenden wrote:

"We confirm that our clients have elected to terminate both the contracts above under the Finance Clause for your client's failure to advise of your client's finance approval by the finance date in the contract.

We authorise you to release the deposit monies to your client."

9. Also on 2 July, the solicitor for Scali wrote:

"My client has not advised that he has agreed to terminate the contracts.

In addition, there is no positive obligation under the contracts for our client to advise in relation to finance. Our client is only entitled to rely on the Finance Clause in the event that finance is not available.

As far as I am concerned, the contracts remain on foot, with settlement and vacant possession to be given on 13 July 2009."

5. As mentioned, when Scali failed to give notice under cl 3.2 by 5 pm on 17 June 2009, Mr and Mrs Crittenden gained a right to terminate the contracts by notice to Scali. Mr and Mrs Crittenden did not purport to exercise that right until by fax of 2 July, referred to in para 8 above. But by then, Mr and Mrs Crittenden had waived that right of termination or elected to affirm the contracts.

6. That emerges from the letters from their solicitors of 29 June 2009 (para 2 above) and 30 June 2009 (para 5 above).

In those letters, the solicitors for Mr and Mrs Crittenden were proceeding as if the contracts were on foot, contemplating an extension of time for settlement on certain conditions. The terms of the letters involved an acknowledgement that time was then "of the essence". (The then current date for completion was 13 July 2009.)

8. The solicitors for Mr and Mrs Crittenden did not in those letters reserve the Crittendens' right to terminate, or say that the further negotiation was "subject to" or "without prejudice to" that right to terminate. In that regard see Tropical Traders Ltd v Goonan (1964) 111 CLR 41, 53, 55, 61.

9. The communications evidence Mr and Mrs Crittenden's clear and unequivocal intention to proceed to completion: they are consistent only with the Crittendens maintaining or affirming the contracts. See Sargent v ASL Developments Ltd (1974) 131 CLR 634, 641–6, 655–6. It follows that they could not terminate on 2 July as they purported to do.

10. Separately, Mr Coulsen submitted, for Scali, that by the letter of 2 July 2009 (para 4.6 above), in saying: "Transfer documents will be forwarded to your client's execution today", Scali waived the benefit of the finance condition. It is not necessary for me to determine that point, but it would have to confront an argument that cl 3.2 contemplates notice of express waiver, in terms that is, and not a waiver to be inferred from conduct (see also cl 3.4).

11. On the undisputed facts established by the evidence before me, the contracts remain on foot and enforceable.

12. There will be declarations:

> 1. that the contract of sale between the respondents and the applicant for the sale of the property at 1/32 Sunset Boulevard, Surfers Paradise, lot 1 on BUP 101831, County of Ward, Parish of Gilston, remains on foot;
> 2. that the contract of sale between the respondents and the applicant for the sale of the property at 2/32 Sunset Boulevard, Surfers Paradise, lot 2 on BUP 101831, County of Ward, Parish of Gilston, remains on foot.

13. There will also be an order that the respondents pay the applicant's cost of and incidental to the proceeding, to be assessed on the standard basis. I reserve liberty to apply in writing within seven days should a different costs order be sought.

COLLIS v CURRUMBIN INVESTMENTS PTY LTD

(2009) LQCS ¶90-154; Court citation: [2009] QSC 297

Judgment delivered 18 September 2009

Contract of sale — Purchaser entered into a contract for sale — Purchaser alleged seller did not direct purchaser's attention to warning statement — Seller argues covering letter enclosing "Important Notice to Buyer" as first page of documents is sufficient to direct purchaser's attention to the warning statement — Whether actual words "direct attention" is required — Whether seller breached the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 s 365(2A)(c)(ii) — Whether purchaser's subsequent actions in agreeing to an extension of settlement 9 months after contract signed means waiver of purchaser's statutory right to be directed to warning statement and any termination in that aspect.

The applicant (purchaser), Mr Collis, entered into a contract for sale of a house with the respondent (seller), Currumbin. Subsequently, the purchaser terminated the contract as it asserts that the seller failed to comply with s 365(2A)(c)(ii) of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act (PAMDA) in directing the purchaser's attention to the warning statement prior to entering into the contract.

One of the established facts of this case was that the seller's solicitors sent a letter enclosing the signed contract. The letter said:

[140141]

"We now enclose the following documents:

1. Important Notice to Buyer;
2. PAMD Form 27c;
3. Disclosure Statement; and
4. PAMD Form 30c and Contract."

The solicitor for the sellers confirmed that the documents were included in the order noted, and the "Important Notice to Buyer" was the first document in the set of documents spirally bound.

Under s 365(1)(b), the purchaser and seller became bound by the contract when the purchaser or its solicitor (as in this case) received the warning statement (the Important Notice to Buyer) in a way prescribed by subsection (2A). Subsection (2A)(c)(ii) refers to the agent's receiving the document if (as in this case) the seller's agent directs the attention of the buyer's agent to the warning statement; an example under the statutory provision was "by including a paragraph in an accompanying letter". When the purchaser became bound by the contract, the five-day "cooling-off period", within which the buyer might terminate (s 368), commenced.

1. Was there sufficient direction by seller to the Warning Statement?

The purchaser's solicitor asserted that the cooling off period had not commenced, because the sellers had not directed the attention of the purchaser or his solicitor to the warning statement.

Counsel for the seller submitted that the seller sufficiently directed the attention of the purchaser's solicitor to the warning statement by referring to it in the short one-page covering letter. The covering letter was the first document of the four referred to, and the first in the first set in spiral binding. Counsel for the seller also argued that it was particularly significant that the recipient of the covering letter was the solicitor for the purchaser who might have been expected to appreciate the significance of that particular document.

2. Whether purchaser waived right to terminate?

The seller also submitted as an alternative argument that the seller had waived the right to terminate the contract or was estopped from terminating because in October 2008 (9 months), after the contract had been signed, one of the directors of the seller company offered the purchaser some design upgrades to the house and at the same time requested an extension of the construction period allowed under the contract in order to complete the upgrades. The purchaser signed a form agreeing to the extension. The seller argued that the purchaser made a clear representation that he was proceeding with a subsisting contract upon which the seller relied in the steps it subsequently took.

Held: Purchaser's application dismissed, contract remains on foot

1. The seller did direct the attention of the solicitors for the purchaser to the warning statement by referring to it expressly in that short one-page covering letter, and as the first of the four numbered documents enclosed with the letter describing it as an "Important Notice to Buyer". It was not necessary in order to comply with s 365 that the words "direct attention" as such must have been used. It was, in the Chief Justice's judgement, sufficient if, by referring specifically to the document, as one of importance, and prominently in an otherwise brief communication, the seller in fact drew attention to the document. The position would have been different had the notice not been referred to expressly in the letter, and simply included in the same envelope when delivered. It follows that the purchaser became bound by the contract; the cooling-off period began and the purchaser could within the five days have terminated the contract but did not exercise that right to termination so that the contract subsisted.

The purchaser acted in such a way in October 2008 so as to waive his statutory right to have the warning statement drawn to his attention or to terminate in relation to any aspect of that requirement.

3. The application is dismissed.

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

G Radcliff (instructed by Radcliff Taylor Lawyers) for the applicant.

P L O'Shea SC (instructed by Kinneally Miley) for the respondent.

Before: de Jersey CJ

Editorial Comment: This case clarifies for practitioners that it is not necessary in order to comply with s 365 of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act that the actual words "direct attention" be used to draw a purchaser's attention to the Warning Statement. By including a covering letter as the first page of enclosed documents, and the letter prominently referring to the enclosed Warning Statement as one of importance, then it was determined in this case that the seller did in fact draw the purchaser's attention to the Warning Statement.

Further the case also suggests that where a purchaser takes subsequent action indicating an intention to complete the contract, the courts may interpret the purchaser's actions to be an implied waiver of his statutory right to have the warning statement drawn to his attention.

Chief Justice:

Introduction

1. The applicant Mr Collis seeks a declaration that he lawfully terminated an agreement dated 10 January 2008, and the return of the deposit monies of $39,500. It was an agreement for the purchase by Mr Collis of a proposed lot, on which a dwelling house was to be constructed. The case raises questions under the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 (Qld) (PAMDA).

Events of 9 January 2008

2. On 9 January 2008 Mr Collis attended the sales office of the respondent company. He signed the contractual documents proffered to him. There is a factual issue, not susceptible of summary resolution, whether the seller or the seller's agent directed the attention of Mr Collis to the warning statement, as required by s 365(2A)(c)(ii).

Events of 14 January 2008

3. Then on or about 14 January 2008, the solicitors for Mr Collis received, from the solicitors for the respondent, a letter enclosing the contract which had by then been signed by the respondent (seller). The letter said:

> "We now enclose the following documents:
>
> 1. Important Notice to Buyer;
> 2. PAMD Form 27c;
> 3. Disclosure Statement; and
> 4. PAMD Form 30c and Contract."

Mr Thorpe, the solicitor for the respondent, confirms that the documents were included in that order. The "Important Notice to Buyer" was the first document in a set of documents spirally bound.

Whether the requirement of s 365(2A)(c)(ii) PAMDA was satisfied.

4. Under s 365(1)(b), Mr Collis and the respondent became bound by the contract when, as relevant, the buyer's agent (his solicitors) received the warning statement (the Important Notice to Buyer document) "in a way mentioned in subsection (2A)". Subsection (2A)(c)(ii) refers to the agent's receiving the document if, as presently relevant "the seller's agent directs the attention of the … buyer's agent to the warning statement …" The examples under the statutory provision include "by including a paragraph in an accompanying letter". When the buyer became bound, the five-day "cooling-off period", within which the buyer might terminate (s 368), commenced.

5. There was no purported termination within the ensuing five-day period. But Mr Radcliff, for Mr Collis, submitted that the cooling-off period had not commenced, because the respondent had not directed the attention of Mr Collis or his solicitor to the warning statement. Mr Radcliff submitted the letter of 14 January 2008 "in no way draws the attention of the applicant to the warning statement". He referred to the decision of Fryberg J in Hedley Commercial Property Service Pty Ltd v BRCP Oasis Land Pty Ltd [2008] QSC 261 esp paras 84–88.

On the other hand, Mr O'Shea SC, for the respondent, submitted that the respondent sufficiently directed the attention of the solicitors for Mr Collis to the warning statement, by referring to it in the short one-page letter of 14 January 2008, with its being the first document of the four referred to, and the first in the first set in spiral binding. It was additionally significant, Mr O'Shea submitted, that the recipient of the letter was the solicitor for Mr Collis, who might have been expected to appreciate the significance of that particular document.

7. I consider that the respondent did direct the attention of the solicitors for Mr Collis to the warning statement, by referring to it expressly in that short one page letter of 14 January 2008, and as the first of the four numbered documents enclosed with the letter, describing it as an "Important Notice to Buyer". It was not necessary, in order to secure compliance with the statutory requirement, that the words "direct attention" as such must have been used. It was sufficient if, by referring specifically to the document, as one of importance, and prominently in an otherwise brief communication, the respondent in fact drew attention to the document. It did so. The position would have been different had the notice not been referred to expressly in the letter, and simply included in the same envelope when delivered.

8. It follows that Mr Collis then became bound to the contract (s 365(1)(b)), the cooling-off period began (s 364 definition of "cooling-off period"), and Mr Collis could within those five days have terminated the contract (s 368). Mr Collis did not exercise that right of termination, so that the contract subsisted.

9. I turn to the respondent's alternative position, which assumes (contrary to my view) that in mid-January 2008 there was no compliance with s 365(2A)(c)(ii).

Events of October 2008: waiver/estoppel

10. According to the affidavit of Mr Chapman, a director of the respondent, on 20 October 2008 he wrote to Mr Collis offering some "design upgrades, including dual water reticulation, each house having its own 10,000 litre tank, natural gas supply and reticulation and electrical wiring", at the same time requesting an extension of the period for construction allowed by the contract, from 18 months to 36 months. Mr Collis subsequently returned a signed form to the respondent confirming that extension.

11. Mr Chapman swears as follows:

> "Currumbin Investments (the respondent) did not contract with a builder to build houses where there was (to the knowledge of Currumbin Investments) doubt as to there being a building contract in place, or where the buyer was in default or otherwise indicating an intention not to proceed with the contract because it was unable or unwilling to settle."

12. On 25 November 2008 the solicitors for the respondent wrote to Mr Collis's solicitors saying:

> "Our client expects registration of the plan and settlement to occur in July 2009. Our client expects to appoint a builder by the end of this week. The sequencing of building of the house may change giving rise to a later settlement date. Please advise immediately (before our client appoints a builder) if your client has any issue with settlement occurring in the period from July to December 2009."

No such advice was forthcoming. The respondent proceeded to engage a builder.

13. Mr O'Shea submitted that Mr Collis thereby waived any right to terminate in relation to the warning statement. The respondent relied on waiver in the sense of estoppel rather than election, and referred to Waltons Stores (Interstate) Ltd v Maher (1988) 164 CLR 387, 428. The evidence led for the respondent would, if accepted, arguably establish the elements going to found an equitable estoppel or waiver. On that evidence, Mr Collis made a clear representation that he was proceeding with a subsisting contract, upon which the respondent relied in the steps it subsequently took.

14. In the event that the parties had not by then become bound to a contract, for the reason that the requirement in s 365(2A)(c)(ii) had not been satisfied, Mr Radcliff queried how any waiver or estoppel could operate, there being no established legal framework of rights and duties binding the parties.

Mr O'Shea referred in response to the comparable case of Blackman v Milne [2006] QSC 350, paras 14 and 20. I conclude that by his conduct in October 2008, Mr Collis waived his "statutory right … to have the buyer's attention directed to the warning statement", that being "a statutory right created for the buyer's private benefit" (para 20).

Events of March 2009

16. It remains to mention the purported determination of the contract by Mr Collis in March 2009.

17. On 3 March 2009 the respondent wrote to Mr Collis enclosing various documents, including an extension agreement and another copy of the warning notice, which it said had been "delivered to your solicitor with letter of 14 January 2008 and the Contract of Sale as a direction in accordance with the PAMD Act 2000 (s 365(2A)(c)(ii))".

The letter then said:

> "Out of an abundance of caution, we again direct your attention to the PAMD Form 30c Warning Statement; BCCM Form 14 information sheet and the relevant contract (spiral bound in that order as the document referred to as the Contract of Sale)."

18. Mr Collis proceeded on the basis that was the first and only compliance with s 365(2A)(c)(ii), and on 9 March 2009 (conceded to be within any five day period arising), the solicitors for Mr Collis wrote to the respondent purporting to terminate the contract.

19. That purported termination was of no effect, on two alternate bases:

> 1. because the only applicable "cooling-off period" had commenced on or about 14 January 2008, the letter of that date having satisfied the requirement of s 365(2A)(c)(ii), and Mr Collis did not terminate within that period; or
> 2. because if, contrary to my view, the respondent had not complied with s 365(2A)(c)(ii), in October 2008 Mr Collis acted in such a way as to waive his statutory right to have the warning statement drawn to his attention or to terminate in relation to any aspect of that requirement.

20. I should make clear the extent of my factual determination on this application. I have determined matter one, where the underlying facts are clear and undisputed. As to the alternative matter two, it suffices that I conclude that the respondent's position in that respect is factually arguable, so as to render inappropriate any summary determination of the application in Mr Collis's favour, should there have been no compliance with s 365(2A)(c)(ii) to that stage.

Orders

21. I therefore order that the originating application filed on 30 July 2009 be dismissed. I order the applicant to pay the respondent's costs, to be assessed on the standard basis. I reserve liberty to apply in writing, within seven days, should a different costs order be sought.

Judgment delivered 4 September 2009

Off-the-plan contract of sale — Where one disclosure statement given to buyer under s 21 of the Land Sales Act 1984 and s 213 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 — Where further statement given to buyer pursuant to s 214 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act — Whether further statement to correct inaccuracies in original disclosure necessitates a rectification statement under s 22 of the Land Sales Act — Whether there was anticipatory breach of contract by seller not providing rectification statement — Whether buyer must specifically perform contract.

The defendants (Horne) have applied to the court for summary judgment against the plaintiff (Mirvac) on Mirvac's claim for specific performance of an off-the-plan contract of sale entered into between the parties, and for further summary judgment on their counterclaim that they had validly terminated the contract because of an anticipatory breach by Mirvac.

On entering into the contract, Mirvac had provided Horne with one disclosure statement which contained all the required disclosure information under s 21 of the Land Sales Act 1984 (LSA) and s 213 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (BCCMA). Later in the development, Mirvac also provided Horne with further statements pursuant to s 214 of the BCCMA to correct inaccuracies in the original disclosure statement, in particular, the floor area of the proposed lot. Horne argued that s 22 of the LSA required Mirvac to also provide a "rectification statement" because the further statement provided under s 214 of the BCCMA acknowledged that the information contained in the original disclosure statement was or had become inaccurate.

Mirvac refused to provide a rectification statement and claimed for specific performance of the contract by Horne. Horne did not settle the contract as it alleged that Mirvac's failure to provide a rectification statement under the LSA was anticipatory breach of the contract thereby allowing Horne to validly terminate the contract. In its answer to Horne's counterclaim, Mirvac denied that Horne had any right to terminate the contract and denied that the contract had been validly terminated. Mirvac pleaded that pursuant to the contract terms, Mirvac was entitled to vary the size of the lot by up to 5%.

Section 22 of the LSA provides:

> "22 Rectification of statement under s 21
>
> (1) If a statement in writing of particulars referred to in section 21(1) given in accordance with, or pursuant to section 21(4) or (6) in sufficient compliance with, section 21(1)—
>
> (a) is not accurate at the time it is given; or
> (b) contains information that subsequently to the time it is given becomes inaccurate in any respect;
>
> it is the duty of the vendor and the vendor's agent to give to the purchaser or the purchaser's agent a statement in writing signed by the vendor or the vendor's agent of particulars required to be included in a statement given for the purposes of section 21(1) as soon as is reasonably practicable after the proposed lot has become a registered lot.
> (2) Subsection (1) applies whether the statement in writing is given in due time in accordance with section 21 or at a later time.
> (4) Where a vendor or a vendor's agent is required under subsection (1) to give to the purchaser or the purchaser's agent a statement of particulars then—
> (a) the vendor or the vendor's agent shall not deliver to the purchaser or the purchaser's agent a registrable instrument of transfer in respect of the lot the subject of the purchase in question; and
> (b) the purchaser shall not be required to pay the outstanding purchase moneys;
>
> until the expiration of a period of 30 days after the receipt by the purchaser or the purchaser's agent of a copy of the statement of particulars in accordance with subsection (1) or until the time stipulated by the instrument made in respect of the sale and purchase for the payment of those moneys (whichever period is the later to expire) unless it is otherwise agreed in writing between the vendor or the vendor's agent and the purchaser or the purchaser's agent, after receipt by the purchaser or the purchaser's agent of a copy of the statement of particulars in accordance with subsection (1)."

Horne's submission for summary judgment against Mirvac:

1. Firstly, s 22 of the LSA is engaged if the disclosure statement contains information that "subsequently to the time it is given becomes inaccurate in any respect", even in respect of a matter that was not required to be included in the statement given pursuant to s 21 of the LSA. This is based on the premise that if the seller provides a single disclosure statement and chooses to include in that document information that subsequently becomes inaccurate, then s 22 is engaged.

2. Secondly, the further statements given by Mirvac each state that the earlier statement given pursuant to s 213 of the BCCMA "is or has become inaccurate". That was an admission by Mirvac that the original statement (which was also given in compliance with s 21 of the LSA) has become inaccurate; thereby a rectification statement from Mirvac is required under s 22 of the LSA.

3. Thirdly, the original statement became inaccurate because the floor area of the lot was used to identify it (a requirement under s 21 of the LSA is that the seller must identify the lot being sold), and this area has now changed.

Held: Application for summary judgment dismissed

1. Horne's interpretation of s 22 of the LSA was not accepted. Section 22 refers to "a statement in writing of particulars referred to in section 21(1)". For s 22 to apply, the statement in writing of the s 21(1) particulars (ie particulars regarding identifying the lot to be purchased, the names and addresses of the vendor and buyer etc) must be inaccurate at the time the statement of particulars was given or contain information that subsequently becomes inaccurate. Inaccurate information in the statement that relates to other matters may be the subject of a separate obligation under s 214 of the BCCMA or other consequences; however, it does not trigger s 22. The language of s 22 indicates that it is concerned with inaccuracies in the statement in writing of the particulars referred to in s 21(1), not extraneous matters.

2. The further statements provided by Mirvac were admissions of inaccuracy in respect of matters required to be disclosed pursuant to s 213 of the BCCMA rather than particulars required by s 21 of the LSA. In any event, the factual issue of whether these statements are admission that the original disclosure statement had become inaccurate in respect of the particulars referred to in s 21(1) is not one appropriate for determination on an application for summary judgment.

3. Section 21(1) requires a statement to be given that "clearly identifies the lot to be purchased". The contract provided that the seller could make changes to the size of a lot of up to 5% (more or less) than that shown in the disclosure statement. Accordingly, the description of the floor area on the plan insofar as it operated to clearly identify the lot should be taken to be up to 5% different (more or less) from 177 m^2, namely that it would have an area of between 168.15 m^2 and 185.85 m^2. In short, insofar as the description of the floor area served to clearly identify the lot, the information provided did not become inaccurate after the disclosure statement was given. The reduction in 1 m^2 in the size of the lot did not give rise to an inaccuracy that would trigger s 22.

4. The defendants' application for summary judgment in respect of its defence against specific performance of the contract was dismissed. The defendants' counterclaim against Mirvac was also dismissed.

Editorial Comment: This case clarifies for practitioners that in an off-the-plan sale, if the vendor or vendor's agent chooses to provide a single disclosure statement to the purchaser in compliance with both the vendor disclosure requirements of s 21 of the LSA and s 213 of the BCCMA, then any "further statements" provided to the purchaser pursuant to s 214 of the BCCMA will not trigger the requirement that the vendor has to provide a further "rectification statement" under s 22 of the LSA, except in the circumstance where those inaccuracies concern the particulars listed under s 21 of the LSA.

Applegarth J:

1. The defendants apply for summary judgment on the plaintiff's claim for specific performance of a building unit contract, and for summary judgment on their counterclaim that they have validly terminated the contract because of an anticipatory breach. One matter in dispute between the parties is whether s 22 of the Land Sales Act 1984 (Qld) ("the LSA") required the plaintiff to give a "rectification statement" to the defendants after the proposed lot became registered because, as the defendants allege, a disclosure statement which identified the lot to be purchased contained information that later became inaccurate in respect of the floor area of the proposed lot. Another matter in dispute is whether s 22 of the LSA required the plaintiff to give a rectification statement because further statements provided pursuant to s 214 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) ("the BCCM Act") acknowledged that the information contained in the original disclosure statement given pursuant to s 213 of the BCCM Act was or had become inaccurate.

That matter involves a question of statutory interpretation about the extent of the duty in s 22 of the LSA in circumstances in which an original disclosure document is made pursuant to s 213 of the BCCM Act and s 21 of the LSA.

2. The issues to be determined in applying the principles governing applications for summary judgment are:

> (a) whether the plaintiff has no real prospect of succeeding on its claim, and there is no need for a trial of the claim because of a failure to provide a "rectification statement" pursuant to s 22 of the LSA; and
> (b) whether the defendants are entitled on their counterclaim to a declaration that they have validly terminated the contract and to the return of their deposit because the plaintiff has no real prospect of successfully defending that counterclaim and there is no need for a trial of it because the plaintiff was not entitled to insist on settlement on the date that it fixed for settlement by reason of non-compliance with s 22 of the LSA, and that the plaintiff thereby committed an anticipatory breach of contract, entitling the defendants to terminate the contract.

Facts

3. The defendants agreed to purchase a residential unit in an apartment block in a staged residential development known as Tennyson Reach. Prior to the defendants' entry into the contract on 27 June 2007, the plaintiff gave to the defendants a "Disclosure Statement" pursuant to the BCCM Act and the LSA, along with other documents including a sale contract, in respect of lot number 3209. A disclosure statement was required by s 213 of the BCCM Act, and a statement was required by s 21 of the LSA because the unit, which had yet to be constructed, was a proposed lot that was to be included as part of a community title scheme for the Tennyson Reach development. There was one disclosure document because, as contemplated by s 21(5) of the LSA, the statement in writing required by s 21(1) of the LSA was incorporated into the statement required by s 213 of the BCCM Act. The document was provided to the defendants on 24 June 2007. It consists of 196 pages, including a substantial volume of plans in Chapter 4. Clause 1.6 of Chapter 1 (Information Disclosure) states:

> Chapter 4 of this Disclosure Statement incorporates copies of the initial plan of subdivision SP 195275 and draft Building Format Plan SP 195376 for Stage 1 identifying the Lot as described in item 3 of this Chapter and subject to the provisions of the Contract." (emphasis added)

4. The plans in the document included a floor plan for Level G and Lot 3209 was depicted on this plan by a mark around its perimeter. The plan showed it to be one of six apartments on Level G in Tower A. The plan depicted Lot 3209 having a floor area of 177 m^2 including a balcony of 15 m^2. The provisions of the contract include clause 6.3 which relevantly provides:

> "6.3 The Seller may make the following changes to the Lot:—
>
> (a) the size of the Lot or any part of the Lot may be up to 5% different (more or > less) from that shown in the Disclosure Statement …"
>
> [140148]

The purchase price was $1,458,400, and the defendants paid a deposit in two parts totalling $145,840. Settlement was to occur no earlier than 14 days after the plaintiff gave notice to the defendants that "the scheme" as that term is defined in the contract had been established.

5. Further statements were provided by the plaintiff to the defendants, each of them expressed to be given pursuant to s 214 of the BCCM Act. The first "Further Statement" was dated 9 November 2007. A second further statement was dated 27 March 2009. Further statements were dated 16 April and 27 April 2009. The second further statement dated 27 March 2009 detailed various changes to the proposed community title scheme including a proposal to include a new lot in the scheme upon its establishment. The new lot was separated from the Stage 1 scheme land and its inclusion did not result in any changes to the lot entitlements of any residential unit lots. The second further statement also included as an annexure a copy of survey plans that had been submitted to the Brisbane City Council for sealing. Those plans included a plan for Level G indicating that the floor area of Lot 3209 was 176 m^2 including a balcony of 14 m^2.

6. The proposed lot was registered on 28 April 2009. The solicitors for the plaintiff nominated 12 May 2009 as the date for settlement, and sought to deliver to the defendants a registrable instrument of transfer in respect of the lot.

7. By letter dated 11 May 2009 the solicitors for the defendant noted that Lot 3209 as indicated on the registered plan was different to the proposed Lot 3209 as detailed in the plan contained in the disclosure documents provided to the defendants prior to contract. They asserted that in accordance with s 22 of the LSA the particulars of the statement given to the defendants in accordance with s 21 of the LSA had become inaccurate and requested a further statement in accordance with s 22 of the LSA. On 12 May 2009 the solicitors for the plaintiff wrote in respect of the scheduled settlement, but did not address the matters raised in the letter of 11 May 2009, possibly because its author had yet to receive or read the letter of 11 May 2009. In any event, on 12 May 2009 the defendants' solicitors wrote two further letters restating the defendants' objections to settling and requesting that the plaintiff comply with its obligations under s 22 of the LSA. They indicated that the defendants did not intend to tender at settlement that day. They suggested and requested a 21 day extension of the settlement date to enable the parties to consider their positions, with time to remain of the essence. On 13 May 2009 the plaintiff's solicitors addressed the matter raised in relation to alleged non-compliance with s 22 of the LSA and two other unrelated matters that were raised by the defendants' solicitors. The plaintiff's solicitors contended that the defendants' solicitors appeared to be confusing the disclosures given pursuant to s 213 of the BCCM Act and those required by s 21 of the LSA. The plaintiff did not accept that there had been any non-disclosure of the matters required by s 21 of the LSA and accordingly rejected the defendants' contention that a further statement was required to be delivered under s 22 of the LSA.

8. On 25 May 2009 the plaintiff commenced a proceeding for specific performance of the contract and damages in lieu of or in addition to specific performance. The defence admitted most of the allegations contained in the statement of claim, but denied that the defendants were in breach of contract in failing to complete it on the date nominated for settlement, and denied the allegation that the plaintiff was ready, willing and able to complete the contract on that date. Paragraph 4 of the defence pleaded certain facts which are not in issue concerning the provision of the original disclosure statement on or about 21 June 2007, the further disclosure statements and the fact that the original statement and the second further statement included information about the floor area of the proposed lot. Paragraph 4(e) of the defence pleaded that the original statement contained information that "subsequently to the time it was given became inaccurate, in that the Proposed Lot as disclosed in the plaintiff's Original Statement would have a floor area of 177 m^2 (including a balcony of 15 m^2); whereas the Registered Lot had a floor area of 176 m^2". The defence pleaded that, in the premises, pursuant to s 22(1) of the LSA the plaintiff was required to give the defendants a rectification statement pursuant to s 22(1) of the LSA as soon as reasonably practicable after the proposed lot had become registered on 28 April 2009. The reply and answer does not specifically plead to paragraph 4(e) of the defence, however, it denied that the plaintiff was required to provide a statement of particulars as required by s 22(1) of the LSA and pleaded that the identity of the lot did not alter from the time of disclosure to the time of registration of the lot.

9. The reply and answer also pleaded that:

> (a) the provision of the further statements as pleaded in the defence rectified any inaccuracy in the original disclosure statement so that:
>
> > (i) upon registration of the lot there were no inaccuracies in the Disclosure Statement; and > > (ii) there was no requirement to provide a s 22(1) LSA statement of particulars.
>
> (b) even if a notice pursuant to s 22 of the LSA was required (which was denied) the defendants had not been materially prejudiced within the meaning of s 25 of the LSA.

The plaintiff did not rely upon these additional matters in opposing the defendants' application for summary judgment.

10. By their counterclaim the defendants relied upon the matters contained in their defence and upon the communication by the plaintiff's solicitors of an election to affirm the contract and pursue the remedy of specific performance. The defendants pleaded that the plaintiff's "failure and/or refusal to provide the Rectification Statement when requested to do so" and calling for settlement without having complied with s 22 of the LSA constituted an anticipatory breach of the contract by the plaintiff entitling the defendants to terminate it. By the delivery of their pleading, the defendants purported to accept the anticipatory breach and terminate the contract. In its answer to the counterclaim the plaintiff denied that the defendants had any right to terminate the contract, denied that the contract had been validly terminated and pleaded that pursuant to clause 6.3 of the contract the plaintiff was entitled to vary the size of the lot by up to five per cent.

The statutory regime

11. The BCCM Act and the LSA provide for the disclosure of information by a seller to a buyer of a lot that is to be created in a community titles scheme. Each Act provides for certain disclosures to be made prior to entry into the contract. Section 213 of the BCCM Act provides for the disclosure of various matters in relation to the body corporate and the community titles scheme. Section 21(1) of the LSA provides for a statement in writing to be given that:

> "(a) clearly identifies the lot to be purchased; and
> (b) states the names and addresses of the prospective vendor and the prospective purchaser; and
> (c) clearly states whether the prospective vendor or the prospective vendor's agent (whether personally or by any employee) has made or offered to the prospective purchaser or the prospective purchaser's agent any representation, promise or term with respect to the provision to the purchaser of a certificate of title that relates to the lot in question only; and
> (d) if any representation, promise or term, such as is referred to in paragraph (c) has been made or offered, clearly states the particulars thereof; and
> (e) states the date on which it is signed."

If a prospective seller of a proposed lot is required to give a statement under s 21(1) of the LSA, also is required under s 213 of the BCCM Act to give a first statement relating to the proposed lot, and gives the first statement under that section that incorporates in the first statement the matters prescribed by ss 21(1)(a) to (d) of the LSA, then there is sufficient compliance with s 21(1) of the LSA.[1]

12. Each Act provides for further statements to be provided. Section 22(1) of the LSA requires a rectification statement to be given as soon as is reasonably practicable after the proposed lot has become a registered lot. It is necessary to set out s 22:

> "22 Rectification of statement under s 21
>
> (1) If a statement in writing of particulars referred to in section 21(1) given in accordance with, or pursuant to section
> [140150]
>
> 21(4) or (6) in sufficient compliance with, section 21(1)—
>
> (a) is not accurate at the time it is given; or
> (b) contains information that subsequently to the time it is given becomes inaccurate in any respect;
>
> it is the duty of the vendor and the vendor's agent to give to the purchaser or the purchaser's agent a statement in writing signed by the vendor or the vendor's agent of particulars required to be included in a statement given for the purposes of section 21(1) as soon as is reasonably practicable after the proposed lot has become a registered lot.

(2) Subsection (1) applies whether the statement in writing is given in due time in accordance with section 21 or at a later time.
(3) It shall be sufficient compliance with subsection (1) if 1 of them, the vendor or the vendor's agent, discharges the duty thereby imposed, whereupon the other of them shall be freed of the duty in respect of giving the rectification notice that has been given.
(4) Where a vendor or a vendor's agent is required under subsection (1) to give to the purchaser or the purchaser's agent a statement of particulars then—

(a) the vendor or the vendor's agent shall not deliver to the purchaser or the purchaser's agent a registrable instrument of transfer in respect of the lot the subject of the purchase in question; and
(b) the purchaser shall not be required to pay the outstanding purchase moneys;

until the expiration of a period of 30 days after the receipt by the purchaser or the purchaser's agent of a copy of the statement of particulars in accordance with subsection (1) or until the time stipulated by the instrument made in respect of the sale and purchase for the payment of those moneys (whichever period is the later to expire) unless it is otherwise agreed in writing between the vendor or the vendor's agent and the purchaser or the purchaser's agent, after receipt by the purchaser or the purchaser's agent of a copy of the statement of particulars in accordance with subsection (1)."

13. By comparison, s 214 of the BCCM Act applies if the contract has not been settled and:

"(a) the seller becomes aware that information contained in the disclosure statement was inaccurate as at the day the contract was entered into; or

(b) the disclosure statement would not be accurate if now given as a disclosure statement."[2]

In such a case the seller must, within 14 days (or a longer period agreed between the buyer and the seller) after subsection 214(1) starts to apply, give the buyer a further statement rectifying the inaccuracies in the disclosure statement.[3]

14. Section 214(4) provides that the buyer may cancel the contract if:

"(a) it has not already been settled; and
(b) the buyer would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract, given the extent to which the disclosure statement was, or has become, inaccurate; and
(c) the cancellation is effected by written notice given to the seller within 14 days, or a longer period agreed between the buyer and seller, after the seller gives the buyer the further statement."[4]

Subsections 214(1) to (4) continue to apply after the first statement is given, on the basis that the disclosure is taken to be constituted by the disclosure statement and any further statement, and the disclosure statement date is taken to be the most recent further statement date.[5]

15. One significant difference between the further disclosure regime under s 22 of the LSA and the further disclosure regime under s 214 of the BCCM Act relates to the timing of the further statement. As can be seen from s 22(1) of the LSA, the rectification statement under that Act must be given as soon as is reasonably practicable after the proposed lot has become a registered lot. Under s 214(2) of the BCCM Act the seller must give the buyer a further statement within 14 days (or a longer agreed period) after:

(a) the seller becomes aware that information contained in the disclosure statement was inaccurate as at the day the contract was entered into or;

(b) the disclosure would not be accurate if then given as a disclosure statement.

Accordingly, the obligation to give a further statement under s 214 of the BCCM Act may arise prior to the obligation to give a rectification statement under s 22(1) of the LSA. The obligation in s 214 of the BCCM Act does not cease once a scheme is established under the Act.[6] It continues until settlement.

16. Another significant difference between s 22 of the LSA and s 214 of the BCCM Act is that s 22(4) of the LSA effectively extends the date for settlement until the expiry of a period of 30 days after the receipt of the rectification statement. This differs from s 214 of the BCCM Act where there is "no statutory moratorium".[7] Each Act confers certain rights to avoid or cancel the contract if the buyer would be materially prejudiced by reason of the inaccuracy of a particular in the first statement or the extent to which the disclosure statement was, or has become, inaccurate.[8]

17. In Hudpac Corporation Pty Ltd v Voros Instruments Pty Ltd[9] I observed:

> "It is clear from the legislation that so far as the original disclosure statement is concerned that there is a legislative intent to ensure that there is not unnecessary duplication or repetition of the original information. However, the Act, in its terms, does not similarly state that a notice given under s 214 of the BCCM Act will operate to relieve a party from complying with the obligation in s 22(1) of the LSA. Such relief from the operation of section 22(1) cannot, in my opinion, be implied into the Act or carried forward by reason of the provisions in relation to the original statement.
>
> The principal reason that I reach that conclusion is that s 22(1) of the LSA and s 214 of the BCCM Act confer different rights in different circumstances. The obligation to give a statement, which I will refer to as a rectification statement, under each Act may arise in some cases at different times. The most important point of distinction is that s 22(4) gives a purchaser, in the circumstances in which a notice under s 22(1) is received, a period of 30 days after receipt of the relevant document to pay. That section does not give a right to avoid.
>
> However, the period of 30 days, amongst other things, will permit such a purchaser to check the title as registered and to, amongst other things, consider whether the changes are such as to give them a right to avoid the contract. By contrast, s 214 of the BCCM Act does not give that simple extension of time. It provides a buyer with an opportunity to cancel the contract if, amongst other things, the buyer 'would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract, given the extent to which the disclosure statement was, or has become, inaccurate'.
>
> In some cases the contents of the rectification statement will be relatively innocuous and not give a party such a right to avoid. In other cases, it may. In other cases, it may be a matter of uncertainty.
>
> It might have been possible for the legislation to be better aligned so as to avoid the unnecessary provision of rectification statements pursuant to both s 22 of the LSA and s 214 of the BCCM Act. However s 22 gives important rights to a purchaser. One right is to consider their position. It is a right which is conferred by statute, being a statute that has the purpose of protecting the interests of consumers in relation to property development and I do not consider that, in those circumstances, the Act can be construed so as to make it apply on a basis identical to that provided in s 214 of the BCCM. In essence, s 22(4) of the LSA gives important rights conferred by statute to an extension of time to settle."

Summary judgment principles

18. UCPR 292 and UCPR 293 govern summary judgment for the plaintiff and summary judgment for the defendant in near-identical terms. The discretion to give summary judgment for a plaintiff only arises if the court is satisfied that:

> (a) the defendant has no real prospect of successfully defending all or a part of the plaintiff's claim; and
> (b) there is no need for a trial of the claim or the part of the claim.

[140152]

The discretion to give summary judgment for the defendant against the plaintiff only arises if the Court is satisfied that:

(a) the plaintiff has no real prospect of succeeding on all or a part of the plaintiff's claim; and
(b) there is no need for a trial of the claim or the part of the claim.

The term "no real prospects" in UCPR 292 and UCPR 293 has been the subject of extensive judicial consideration, including by the Court of Appeal in Deputy Commissioner of Taxation v Salcedo[10] and more recently in Bolton Properties Pty Ltd v JK Investments (Australia) Pty Ltd.[11] In Bolton[12] Holmes JA remained of the view that was expressed by her Honour in Queensland University of Technology v Project Constructions (Aust) Pty Ltd (in liq):

> "The more appropriate inquiry is in terms of the Rule itself: that is whether there exists a real, as opposed to a fanciful, prospect of success. However, it remains, without doubt, the case that:
> > 'great care must be exercised to ensure that under the guise of achieving expeditious finality a plaintiff is not improperly deprived of his opportunity for the trial of his case'."[13]

Daubney J reached the same conclusion, and stated that the question is not whether a party's case is "hopeless" or "bound to fail".[14] Their Honours did not agree with the reasons of Chesterman JA that a case which has no real prospect of succeeding is one which is "hopeless" or "bound to fail".[15]

19. The rules require a judge to be satisfied, amongst other things, that there is "no need for a trial". Each member of the Court in Bolton emphasised the need for caution in granting applications for summary judgment. Holmes JA observed that summary judgment cannot be granted without the confidence that "there is no need for a trial of the claim or the part of the claim".[16] Chesterman JA stated that it is only where a trial can be seen to be pointless that judgment should be entered summarily.[17] Daubney J also remarked upon "the necessity for a judge to exercise great care, and proceed with appropriate caution, having regard to the patent seriousness of a decision to summarily terminate a proceeding by effectively denying a party the opportunity to present its case at a trial 'in the ordinary way and after taking advantage of the usual interlocutory processes'". [18]

20. The application of these principles may arise in a case in which the facts are not in dispute and the respective rights of the parties turn upon a question of law. Under the former rules governing summary judgment it was open to a judge to take the view that the extent and complexity of the matters of law and of argument thereon made it appropriate to decline to dispose of them "in chambers".[19] This view appears in Theseus Exploration NL v Foyster.[20] The Chamber Judge in that case dismissed the application for summary judgment without giving reasons. The High Court granted the plaintiff leave to appeal and heard full argument upon the legal issues in dispute. Barwick CJ, having reached "a clear conclusion as to the lack of validity in the respondent's submission that the appellant was unable to recover the amount claimed", stated that he was not prepared to hold that the judge erred in the course he took. Equally however, the Chamber Judge would not have been in error if he had granted the appellant's application for summary judgment. Barwick CJ stated:

> "The case was one which, in my opinion, could have been disposed of upon legal argument upon the application. But it was for the judge to be satisfied that there was a matter to be tried. Whilst there were no facts to be decided, it was open to the judge, in my opinion, to take the view that the extent and complexity of the matters of law and of argument thereon warranted a hearing."[21]

Gibbs J adopted a similar view and reviewed earlier authority which recognised the existence of some discretion by a judge to whom application for summary judgment is made in deciding whether the question of law raised is so difficult that it ought not to be decided summarily. The case involved questions that were "serious and disputable and, assuming that the learned primary judge had a discretion, it was entirely proper for him to decline to dispose of them in chambers".[22] Logically, the appeal should have been dismissed, however, the High Court having heard full argument on the questions upon which the fate of the action depended, each member of the court reached the conclusion that the defence raised by the respondent must fail. Stephen J[23] observed that while it may have been correct, on the original chamber application and after the nature of the respondent's intended defence was outlined, to have refused the application for summary judgment, it was contrary to both good sense and to justice after full argument in the High Court to permit the action to go to trial, followed perhaps by an appeal.

21. In Sunbird Plaza Pty Ltd v Boheto Pty Ltd[24] McPherson J (with whom Campbell CJ and Matthews J agreed) stated:

> "Difficult questions of law frequently arise in matters before the judge sitting in Supreme Court Chambers. There is authority for saying that in such instances the judge has a discretion which he may properly exercise by declining to determine such matters of law in Chambers for reasons such as pressure of work, the complexity of the issues involved, or the quality (or lack of it) of the submissions presented by counsel. But to require that a judge should invariably refrain from determining what are said to be difficult questions of law in Chambers, even though he may be ready, willing and able to undertake the task, is to deprive him of the discretion which the Rules unquestionably confer upon him in relation to such matters."

22. In Bolton[25] Chesterman JA observed that where the facts are settled and the respective rights of the parties turn upon questions of law, UCPR 292 would require the Court to give judgment in advance of trial, even where the point is difficult. This conclusion was said to involve a departure from the practice under the former rules.

23. I do not need to venture an opinion as to whether UCPR 292 and UCPR 293 have necessitated a departure from the practice under the former Rules concerning the discretion to determine, or to decline to determine, difficult questions of law on an application for summary judgment. The matter was not argued before me. I was prepared to hear the application for summary judgment and reserve judgment because the applicant/defendants contended that the facts were not in dispute and the issue turned on a matter of law concerning the application of s 22(4) of the LSA. It should not be assumed, however, that an application for summary judgment is the appropriate procedure to determine questions of law in advance of trial. Substantial time, legal costs and public resources can be occupied on applications for summary judgment only to reach the point in which the judge reaches the conclusion that the question of law is a complex one which cannot be conveniently heard and determined in the Applications List, or that what is presented as a question of law depends upon a contentious determination of factual issues that makes it inappropriate for summary judgment. If the application is likely to occupy more than two hours then generally it is an inappropriate matter for the Applications List and consideration should be given to the question of law being determined pursuant to UCPR 483. Even in cases in which a judge is able to embark upon difficult questions of law in the Applications List, consideration is required as to whether the determination of those questions, will facilitate "the just and expeditious resolution of the real issues in civil proceedings at a minimum of expense".[26] If the result is the entry of summary judgment then an appeal is a distinct possibility. The Court of Appeal may resolve the question of law but, in some cases, it may conclude that the matter was not a suitable one for summary judgment, for instance because what originally appeared to be a pure question of law in fact involved the resolution of contentious factual issues, with the result that the summary judgment is set aside. In such an event there will have been delay and unnecessary costs, without resolution of the question of law.

24. In this matter the question of law concerning the proper interpretation of s 22(1) of the LSA was an appropriate one for determination in the Applications List.

Defendants' application for summary judgment on the plaintiff's claim

25. On the application brought under UCPR 293 there is no dispute that a rectification statement has not been given to the defendants pursuant to s 22 of the LSA. The issue is whether s 22 of the LSA required the plaintiff to give a rectification statement because the original Disclosure Statement had become inaccurate. The defendants' submissions were in three parts. The first concerned the meaning of s 22(1). It involved the argument that s 22(1) is engaged if the disclosure statement contains information that "subsequently to the time it is given becomes inaccurate in any respect", even in respect of a matter that was not required to be included in the statement given pursuant to s 21 of the LSA. The essential argument is if the seller resorts to a single Disclosure Statement and chooses to include in that document information that subsequently becomes inaccurate, then s 22 is engaged.

26. The second aspect of the defendants' case for summary judgment is that the further statements given to the defendants each state that the earlier statement given pursuant to s 213 of the BCCM Act "is or has become inaccurate".[27] This is said to involve admissions by the plaintiff that the original statement (which was also given in compliance with s 21) has become inaccurate, thereby necessitating a rectification statement under s 22. An associated submission is that the plaintiff's reply created a deemed admission that the information in the original statement became inaccurate because the size of the lot changed from 177 m^2 to 176 m^2.

27. The third aspect of the defendants' argument is that, in any event, the original statement became inaccurate because the floor area of the lot was used to identify it, and this area changed. I shall deal with each aspect in turn.

28. The defendants contend that any information in the Disclosure Statement that becomes inaccurate in any respect triggers the operation of s 22 of the LSA. They place reliance on the words in s 22(1)(b) "contains information that subsequently to the time it is given becomes inaccurate in any respect", and submit that s 22 focuses on inaccuracies in the disclosure statement. The result is that information which the seller chooses to include in a Disclosure Statement, whether in compliance with its obligations under s 21 of the LSA, its obligations under s 213 of the BCCM Act or otherwise[28] is covered by the section. I do not accept the defendants' interpretation of s 22. It is not supported by the words of the section or its purpose. Section 22(1) refers to "a statement in writing of particulars referred to in section 21(1)". It is this statement in writing of the particulars referred to in s 21(1) (namely the statement insofar as it gives particulars that clearly identify the lot to be purchased, states the names and addresses of the prospective vendor and the prospective purchasers etc) to which reference must be had for the purpose of s 22, and not the whole of the document in which these particulars are contained. For s 22 to apply the statement in writing of the s 21(1) particulars must be inaccurate at the time the statement of particulars was given or contain information that subsequently becomes inaccurate. Inaccurate information in the document that relates to other matters may be the subject of a separate obligation under s 214 of the BCCM Act or other consequences, however, it does not trigger s 22. The language of s 22 indicates that it is concerned with inaccuracies in the statement in writing of the particulars referred to in s 21(1), not extraneous matters.

29. The defendants' contention about the scope of s 22 of the LSA would have unreasonable and even absurd consequences. For instance, a minor inaccuracy, such as an error in respect of a matter that had nothing to do with the information required by s 21(1) (such as a typographical error in the postcode of the address of a surveyor whose details appear on a plan) would trigger s 22, and if no rectification statement was given, result in a delay in settlement by at least 30 days by virtue of s 22(4). It is not a sufficient response to these unreasonable and absurd consequences to contend that a seller who chooses to include extraneous information in a document that also discloses the particulars referred to in s 21(1), must face the consequences if the extraneous information proves to be inaccurate. An interpretation of s 22 that will best achieve the purpose of the LSA is to be preferred to any other interpretation.[29] The objects of the Act are:

> "(a) to facilitate property development in Queensland; and > (b) to protect the interests of consumers in relation to property development; and
> (c) to ensure that proposed allotments and proposed lots are clearly identified; and > (d) to achieve the objects mentioned in paragraphs (a) to (c) without imposing procedural obligations on local governments
> [140155]
> in addition to their obligations under the Integrated Planning Act 1997."[30]

Although a wide view of s 22 might protect the interests of consumers in relation to property development by requiring the provision of a rectification statement in respect of information in any part of a disclosure statement that contains information that is inaccurate at the time the statement is given or which contains information that subsequently becomes inaccurate in any respect, the purpose of the section is more limited. It is the rectification of a statement of particulars given under s 21. A broad interpretation of s 22 is not necessary to protect the interests of consumers in relation to property development, since other consumer protection legislation exists to protect consumers from statements that are misleading or deceptive or likely to mislead or deceive. The wide interpretation of s 22 contended for by the defendants might frustrate the timely settlement of contracts and generate substantial costs through the provision of rectification statements that are not necessary to correct a statement of the particulars referred to in s 21(1). Such an interpretation is inconsistent with facilitating property development in Queensland and is not necessary to protect the interests of consumers in relation to property development or to ensure that proposed lots are clearly identified.

30. I conclude that the information at which s 22(1)(b) is directed is information that is contained in the "statement in writing of particulars referred to in section 21(1)", and not in other parts of a document which do not include these particulars but which, for instance, disclose other matters required by s 213 of the BCCM Act or extraneous matters which the seller is not obliged to disclose under either s 21 of the LSA or s 213 of the BCCM Act.

31. The second aspect of the defendants' application for summary judgment points to the fact that the further statements given by the plaintiff pursuant to s 214 of the BCCM Act state that "information contained in the First Disclosure Statement given to the Buyer pursuant to s 213 of the BCCM Act (and as rectified by Further Statements given pursuant to s 214 of the BCCM Act) is or has become inaccurate".[31] This is relied upon as an admission that the original Disclosure Statement (which also operated as a statement for the purpose of s 21 of the LSA) contains inaccurate information and thereby triggers s 22. However these further statements appear to be an admission of inaccuracy in respect of matters required to be disclosed pursuant to s 213 of the BCCM Act, rather than the statement of particulars required by s 21 of the LSA. Given the contents of the further statements it is at least strongly arguable that this is the case, and the factual issue of whether these statements constitute an admission that the original Disclosure Statement had become inaccurate in respect of its statement of the particulars referred to in s 21(1) is not one which is appropriate for determination on an application for summary judgment.

32. Subparagraph 4(e) of the defence pleads that the disclosure statement that was provided to the defendants in June 2007 "contained information that subsequently to the time it was given became inaccurate, in that the Proposed Lot as disclosed in the plaintiff's Original Statement would have a floor area of 177 m^2 (including a balcony of 15 m^2); whereas the Registered Lot had a floor area of 176 m^2". This allegation was not specifically pleaded to by way of a denial or non-admission in the reply and answer and the defendants accordingly rely on a deemed admission under UCPR 166(1). At the hearing of the application counsel for the plaintiff indicated that subparagraph (4)(e) should have been specifically addressed in the reply and answer and indicated an intention to amend to specifically plead to it. It is apparent from the parties' pleadings, their correspondence and the submissions on the application for summary judgment that the real issue in dispute is whether the Disclosure Statement given in June 2007 contained information that subsequently became inaccurate in a respect which obliged the plaintiff to give a rectification statement pursuant to s 22 of the LSA. The plaintiff denies that it was required to provide a statement under s 22, and pleads that the identity of the lot did not alter from the time of disclosure to the time of registration of the lot. The defendants, in their submissions, recognise that this is a matter which goes "to the heart of the issue in dispute". The reply and answer pleads that pursuant to clause 6.3 of the contract the plaintiff was entitled to vary the size of the lot by up to five per cent. The plaintiff's reply and answer should be amended so that it specifically addresses paragraph 4(e) of the defence so as to facilitate the just and expeditious resolution of "the real issues" in the proceeding at a minimum of expense.[32] The application for summary judgment should not be determined on the basis of a deemed admission that the original statement contained information in relation to the floor area of the lot which subsequently became inaccurate in circumstances in which the plaintiff's pleaded case is that it was entitled to vary the size of the lot as depicted on the plans by up to five per cent.

33. The third aspect of the defendants' case for summary judgment against the plaintiff's claim relates to the floor area of the proposed lot and whether, as alleged in paragraph 4(f) of the defence, the plaintiff was required pursuant to s 22(1) of the LSA to give the defendants a statement in writing of the particulars required to be included in the statement given for the purposes of s 21(1) as soon as reasonably practicable after the proposed lot had become a registered lot. Section 21(1) of the LSA requires a statement to be given that "clearly identifies the lot to be purchased". In this matter the lot was identified by lot number and by, amongst other things, a marking on a detailed drawing of the location of Lot 3209. The sheet is Sheet 10 of 15 amongst the plans contained in Chapter 4 of the Disclosure Statement and depicts Level G of the development. Lot 3209 appears on this sheet as one of six units in Tower A. This served to identify the lot as being located on Level G of Tower A and its position in relation to other units on that floor. Other plans in the Disclosure Statement identified other geographical aspects of relevance to the unit's location.[33]

34. The defendants rely on the floor area of the lot as recorded on Sheet 10 as something that identified the lot to be purchased. There is a compelling argument that the floor area of the unit is part of "describing and identifying the precise compartment of air space into which the constructed unit will fit".[34] The competing argument is that the Disclosure Statement sufficiently and clearly identified the lot without reference to its floor area and that the lot was clearly identified by its lot number, the floor on which it was intended to be and the marking on the drawing that indicated its location on that floor and its shape.

35. Although it may be possible to clearly identify a lot to be purchased without recording its total floor area in a statement provided under s 21 (a matter which I am not required to decide in order to determine this application) in a case such as this where the floor area is included on the plan, the better view is that the description of its floor area serves to clearly identify the lot in conjunction with other matters such as the lot number, the floor on which it is located and its position in the building. However, the identification of the lot by reference to the plan that I have described, which recorded it having a floor area of 177 m^2 (including a balcony of 15 m^2) has to have regard to the Disclosure Statement's contents concerning those plans. As previously noted, clause 1.6 of the Information Disclosure in Chapter 1 of the Disclosure Statement indicated that the plans incorporated in Chapter 4 including the draft building format plan for Stage 1 identifying the lot was "subject to the provisions of the Contract". The contract provided that the seller could make changes to the size of a lot of up to five per cent (more or less) than that shown in the Disclosure Statement. Accordingly, the description of the floor area on the plan insofar as it operated to clearly identify the lot should be taken to be up to five per cent different (more or less) from 177 m^2, namely that it would have an area of between 168.15 m^2 and 185.85 m^2. On this basis the reduction in the size of the balcony by 1 m^2 as depicted on later plans including plans that became part of the second further statement did not mean that the Disclosure Statement contained information concerning the floor area of the proposed lot that became inaccurate.

36. In short, insofar as the description of the floor area served to clearly identify the lot, the floor area was to be between 168.15 m^2 and 185.85 m^2 and this information did not become inaccurate after the Disclosure Statement was given. On this basis, the reduction in the size of the balcony by 1 m^2 did not give rise to an inaccuracy that the plaintiff was required to address in a rectification statement under s 22. The plaintiff has grounds to resist the defendants' defence to its claim for specific performance on this basis. It cannot be said that the plaintiff has "no real prospect" of succeeding on its claim because of this ground of defence or that there is no need for a trial of the claim.

37. The defendants' application for summary judgment pursuant to UCPR 293 should be dismissed.

Defendants' application for summary judgment on its counterclaim

38. The defendants' counterclaim rests on the correctness of their contentions in relation to the necessity for a rectification statement to be given pursuant to s 22. The reasons that I have given in relation to the defendants' application for summary judgment on the plaintiff's claim also preclude summary judgment on their counterclaim. Two other matters also preclude summary judgment on their counterclaim. For the purpose of addressing these issues I shall assume for the purpose of argument the correctness of the defendants' contentions that the plaintiff was obliged to give a s 22 rectification statement, failed to do so and called for settlement on 12 May 2009 in circumstances in which s 22(4) operated to delay settlement beyond that date. The relevant issue is whether the plaintiff's conduct in this regard constituted an anticipatory breach of the contract that entitled the defendants to terminate it.

39. If the defendants are correct then the plaintiff took an erroneous view of the settlement date because s 22(4) dictated that the plaintiff should not deliver to the defendants a registrable instrument of transfer in respect of the lot and the defendants were not required to pay the outstanding purchase moneys until the expiration of a period of 30 days after the receipt by the defendants or their agent of a copy of a statement of particulars in accordance with subsection 22(1) or until the time stipulated in the contract (whichever period was later to expire) unless the parties otherwise agreed in writing after receipt of the statement in accordance with s 22(1). In effect, s 22(4) postponed the settlement date.[35]

40. The plaintiff did not purport to terminate the contract. It kept the contract on foot. On the defendants' case, the plaintiff made erroneous contentions about the operation of s 22 and the date for settlement under the contract. In DTR Nominees v Motor Homes Pty Ltd,[36] Stephen, Mason and Jacobs JJ stated:

> "No doubt there are cases in which a party, by insisting on an incorrect interpretation of a contract, evinces an intention that he will not perform the contract according to its terms. But there are other cases in which a party, though asserting a wrong view of a contract because he believes it to be correct, is willing to perform the contract according to its tenor. He may be willing to recognize his heresy once the true doctrine is enunciated or he may be willing to accept an authoritative exposition of the correct interpretation. In either event an intention to repudiate the contract could not be attributed to him. As Pearson LJ observed in Sweet & Maxwell Ltd v Universal News Services Ltd [1964] 2 QB 699 at 734:
> > 'In the last resort, if the parties cannot agree, the true construction will have to be determined by the court. A party should not too readily be found to have refused to perform the agreement by contentious observations in the course of discussions or arguments …'"

This principle applies in the present circumstances. The plaintiff should not be found to have committed an anticipatory breach of contract, at least for the purpose of determining an application for summary judgment, by making what are assumed for the purposes of argument to be incorrect contentions concerning the interpretation and application of s 22 of the LSA and calling for settlement on the basis that s 22 of the LSA did not operate to postpone the date for settlement under the contract. It cannot be said that the plaintiff has no real prospect of successfully defending the counterclaim on the basis that its conduct did not constitute an anticipatory breach of the contract, and that there is no need for a trial of the counterclaim in relation to this issue.

41. Finally, it is at least arguable that the defendants' asserted entitlement to terminate the contract requires them to prove that they were ready, willing and able to perform their obligations under the contract.[37] The defendants have not pleaded this matter and not addressed it in evidence.

The defendants' application for summary judgment pursuant to UCPR 292 in respect of its counterclaim should be dismissed.

Conclusion

43. The defendants have not established an entitlement to summary judgment pursuant to UCPR 293 in respect of the plaintiff's claim for specific performance and other relief, and they have not established an entitlement to summary judgment pursuant to UCPR 292 in respect of their counterclaim.

44. The plaintiff is directed pursuant to r 375 to amend its reply and answer within seven days so as to specifically plead to subparagraph 4(e) of the defence.

45. The orders will be:

1. Application dismissed.
2. The defendants pay the plaintiff's costs of and incidental to the application to be assessed on a standard basis.
3. The plaintiff is directed to amend its reply and answer within seven days so as to specifically plead to subparagraph 4(e) of the defence.

New South Wales Supreme Court

Judgment delivered 14 May 2009

Strata Schemes — Common property — Body Corporate duty to maintain common property in good repair — Balcony railing collapse — Tenant recovered damages against Body Corporate — Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 s 62 (equivalent to s 152 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld)) — Landlords' agents confirmed balcony in good condition prior to tenancy — Body Corporate seek indemnity and contribution from landlords' agents as joint tort-feasor — Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1946 s 5(1)(c) (equivalent to s 6(c) of the Law Reform Act 1995 (Qld)) — Managing agent to contribute 25% towards damages — Body Corporate remain principally liable for damages to plaintiff.

The plaintiff was a tenant residing in a unit within a residential community scheme when she sustained injuries due to a fall to the ground over a defective railing on the second floor balcony. The plaintiff brought proceedings to recover damages from the landlords, the Body Corporate, the managing agent hired by the landlords as well as the managing agent hired by the Body Corporate. The proceedings brought by the plaintiff were resolved mostly by consent between the parties and a consent judgment was entered against the Body Corporate in the sum of $775,000 in damages to the plaintiff.

Cross-claim by Body Corporate

Evidence during the proceedings established that the managing agent hired by the landlords (landlords' agents) completed a condition report of the unit prior to leasing the unit to the plaintiff and in the report had determined that the balcony was in good condition. In this respect the Body Corporate brought a cross-claim against the landlords' agents for indemnity and contribution towards the damages payable to the plaintiff.

Pursuant to s 5(1)(c) of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1946:

> "(1) Where damage is suffered by any person as a result of a tort (whether a crime or not):
> (c) any tort-feasor liable in respect of that damage may recover contribution from any other tort-feasor who is, or would if sued have been, liable in respect of the same damage, whether as a joint tort-fesor or otherwise, so, however, that no person shall be entitled to recover contribution under this section from any person entitled to be indemnified by that person in respect of the liability in respect of which the contribution is sought …"

Submission by Body Corporate

The Body Corporate submitted that the landlord and landlords' agents entered into an agreement to manage and lease the unit, and therefore the landlords' agents are in the same position as the landlords in terms of the duty of care owed to the plaintiff.

Submissions by the landlord agents

The landlords' agents argued that a duty of care was owed only to the landlords as their agents but the duty does not extend to the plaintiff. Secondly, even if a duty was owed to the plaintiff, there was no breach of that duty as evidence did not establish the railing was in a defective condition at the time of the inspection of the unit or that, if it was, there was no sign which ought to have made the landlord agents aware of the defect.

Questions before the court

1. Whether it can be established that the landlords' agents are liable to the plaintiff for damages.

2. If so, what is the apportionment of responsibility between the Body Corporate and the landlords' agents.

Held: Judgment in favour of the Body Corporate on its cross-claim

Liability of landlords' agents

1. The landlords' agents undertook the obligation to inspect and complete the condition report of the unit and by doing so are subject to a duty of care to the plaintiff to warn the plaintiff and/or the landlords of any dangerous defects in the premises of which it was or ought to have been aware.

2. The railing, on the balance of probabilities, was in a dangerously defective condition at the time of the commencement of the tenancy and the landlords' agents ought to have been aware of the condition of the railing if an appropriate lay test had been properly carried out and the landlords' agents were negligent in either not performing or not adequately performing the appropriate test.

3. If the landlords' agents had informed the landlords of the defective condition of the railing, they would have in turn informed the Body Corporate of the problem and the Body Corporate would have rectified the railing in time to avert the injury to the plaintiff.

Apportionment of responsibility

The railing formed part of the common property which the Body Corporate had a continuing duty to maintain and keep in a state of good and serviceable repair pursuant to s 62 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (equivalent to s 152 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld)), hence the primary duty rested with the Body Corporate. The failure of the Body Corporate to make the railing safe and thereby avert injury to the plaintiff was of a much higher degree than the failure by the landlords' agents to carry out an adequate inspection of the unit at the commencement of the plaintiff's tenancy. Apportionment of responsibility is 75% to the Body Corporate and 25% to the landlords' agent.

Editorial Comment: This case highlights that the body corporate's duty to maintain common property is an absolute and primary duty. This case is especially relevant to body corporate managers and caretakers as any defects in common property should be addressed as a matter of priority. Failure to maintain common property in good condition may result in the body corporate being liable for not discharging its statutory duty.

Although this is a New South Wales case, the equivalent statutory duty in Queensland can be found under s 152 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act and s 159 of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Standard Module) Regulation 2008. The regulation states:

> "(1) The body corporate must maintain common property in good condition, including, to the extent that common property is structural in nature, in a structurally sound condition.
> [140161]
>
> (2) To the extent that lots included in the community titles scheme are created under a building format plan of subdivision, the body corporate must—
>
> (a) maintain in good condition—
>
> (i) railings, parapets and balustrades on (whether precisely, or for all practical purposes) the boundary of a lot and common property; and > (ii) doors, windows and associated fittings situated in a boundary wall separating a lot from common property; and

Introduction

1. The plaintiff was the tenant of a second floor home unit at 6/6-8 St George Parade, Hurstville, New South Wales. On 7 December 2003 she sustained significant injuries when a wooden railing on the unit balcony gave way causing her to fall to the ground, a distance, she estimated, of 7–8 metres.

2. The plaintiff brought proceedings to recover damages for her injuries from the owners of the unit (first and second defendants), the real estate agents employed by the first defendant to manage the unit (third defendant), the body corporate (fourth defendant) and the managing agent retained by the body corporate (fifth defendant).

3. The proceedings brought by the plaintiff against the first, second and fifth defendants, were resolved by consent verdicts and judgments in favour of those defendants. The cross-claims between the third defendant and the first and second defendants, and the fourth defendant's cross-claim against the first and second defendants, were dismissed by consent. Judgments were entered in favour of the fifth defendant on cross-claims against it, also by consent. A consent judgment was entered for the plaintiff against the fourth defendant for $775,000.00 plus costs.

4. There remained for determination, after the settlements above noted, a cross-claim by the fourth defendant against the third defendant seeking indemnity or contribution pursuant to s 5(1)(c) of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1946 and the proceedings by the plaintiff against the third defendant.

Background

5. I accept the following evidence which was either agreed, the subject of documentary proof, or not the subject of significant dispute.

(a) The strata plan was registered on 15 August 1972. The unit block was completed about that time.
(b) The first and second defendants purchased unit 6 on 19 April 1989.
(c) The premises comprised a brick home unit block, consisting of three residential levels above ground floor garages. Unit 6 was situated on the middle residential level, at the rear of the block.
(d) The balcony was bordered by a brick balustrade 600 mm high. Attached to the top of the balustrade was a timber railing. The railing which gave way ("the railing") was placed latitudinally to the building and was approximately 600 mm long, 140 mm deep and 32 mm thick. It was attached to the brick wall of the unit by an L shaped bracket held by a single masonry bolt with two wood screws going through the bracket into the under side of the timber. The other end of the railing was mitred and formed a right angle with the mitred end of the longitudinal railing. That join was secured by six nails, three driven into the outer face of the railing and the other three driven into the longitudinal railing. The nails were 2.5 mm in diameter and 30 mm long. They penetrated about 15 mm into the end grain of the other rail. The total height of the balustrade and railing was 940 mm.
(e) The first defendant entered into a management agency agreement with the third defendant on 8 August 1994. The agreement provided that all inspections by prospective lessees were to be carried out in the company of the third defendant, the third defendant had authority to lease the premises, sign tenancy agreements and authorise certain repairs. The owners gave the third defendant a general indemnity.

(f) The third defendant inspected the condition of the unit when new tenants were entering into a residential tenancy agreement and once yearly. The records of a number of those inspections were admitted into evidence. They revealed the following:

(i) On 25 August 1994 the third defendant inspected the premises and recorded that the condition of the balcony was "clean", "undamaged" and "working": Exhibit D.
(ii) On 7 June 1996 the third defendant inspected the premises and recorded that the condition of the balcony was "clean", "undamaged" and "working". A handwritten notation was entered that the balcony was "clean": Exhibit E.
(iii) On 3 January 1997 the third defendant undertook an "Annual Condition Report" and reported that apart from some minor matters the "unit was in satisfactory condition": Exhibit F.
(iv) On 26 July 1997 the third defendant inspected the premises and recorded that the balcony was "clean" and "undamaged": Exhibit G.
(v) About 14 April 1998 the third defendant carried out an annual inspection of the premises: Exhibit H. It did not refer to the balcony.
(vi) On 18 November 1999 the third defendant inspected the premises and recorded that the condition of the balcony was "clean": Exhibit J.
(vii) On 16 September 2000 the third defendant produced an Annual Condition Report: Exhibit K. It did not refer to the balcony.

(g) The plaintiff, her husband and a friend (Wei Liu) inspected unit 6 in company with an employee of the third defendant before the residential tenancy agreement was signed.
(i) A residential tenancy agreement condition report completed by the third defendant was handed to the plaintiff at the time of signing the agreement. The third defendant had noted on the report that the balcony was then clean, undamaged and working. The plaintiff was not present when the document was completed by the third defendant and there were no written comments by her on that document.
(j) The condition report was required to be included in the residential tenancy agreement by s 8(4) of the Residential Tenancies Act 1987 and to be completed by or on behalf of the landlord at or before the time the agreement was given to the tenant for signing — Residential Tenancies (Residential Premises) Regulation 1995.
(k) The plaintiff took up residence in the unit on 9 January 2003 and she, her husband and Wei Liu resided at the unit until the plaintiff sustained the subject injury. Another friend lived there for part of that period.
(l) A consulting engineer retained by the plaintiff attended at the site on 9 December 2003. He observed the equivalent join on the unit above had been repaired with an L shaped steel strap on the outside of the end joint and that the balcony railing of the unit below had a visible separation of the timber joint and a partial failure of the fixing to the brick work. He also observed that the railing which had fallen was on the balcony of the downstairs unit leaning against the corresponding railing.

(m) The plaintiff gave notice of intention to vacate the unit on 12 December 2003. It was in the course of cleaning the unit preparatory to moving out that the injury occurred.

The lay evidence for the fourth defendant

6. The plaintiff's evidence was, in short, as follows:

(a) She was born in 1977 in China. She contacted the third defendant maybe after seeing a for lease sign outside the unit block. An agent of the third defendant showed her, her husband and Wei Liu over the unit. The inspection took about 10 minutes, during the course of which the agent opened the door to the balcony and said "this is the balcony". The plaintiff did not step onto the balcony being more interested in the living room.
(b) After residing in the unit for a while the plaintiff, her husband and Wei Liu inspected it and made a list of faults ("Exhibit N") which they gave to the third defendant. The plaintiff understood that it was "the rule to go around the various parts of the unit and note down things" … "they gave us a check list and we need to double check". The plaintiff was concerned to tell the third defendant all of the things she thought were wrong with the unit as she did not wish to forfeit any part of the residential bond as had occurred in relation to a previous rental. Exhibit N does not refer to any damage to, or defect in, the balcony. The plaintiff was not expressly asked by either party whether she had inspected the balcony when preparing Exhibit N.
(c) The plaintiff seldom used the balcony. One or two months after moving in she observed "a little gap between the timbers", at the joinder of the railing and the longitudinal railing. She estimated the gap as being 2 to 3 cm wide. She did not tell the third defendant about it as the third defendant had not fixed some other problems which had been reported.
(d) On the day of injury she was dropping material from the balcony to her husband who was standing on the ground below catching the items as they fell. She dropped an empty plastic milk crate to her husband. She described what then happened as follows "I hold the rail to see my husband got it or not, then the rail gave way and I just fall down". She said that she had just put her two hands on the railing and did not put any weight down. No part of the front of her body touched the timber nor did the crate. When the rail gave way she lost her balance and fell to the ground.

7. The plaintiff's husband gave evidence which added little of significance to that of the plaintiff. He said he very seldom used the balcony; he noticed a "crack" between the two timbers after a couple of months residing at the premises. He was asked no questions by either party in relation to the inspection of the property giving rise to Exhibit N.

8. Wei Liu gave evidence that he, on occasions, used the balcony to dry his clothing and to smoke. He said he used the balcony one or two times per week. Neither party asked him any questions as to his observations in respect of the railing either generally or when preparing Exhibit N.

The expert evidence for the fourth defendant

9. Mr Buckland, a consulting engineer, was called by the fourth defendant. He gave evidence that;

(a) the railing failed by detaching from its connections at a loading well below its required design load thereby indicating that the railing was in a substandard and dangerous condition at that time.
(b) That condition was the result of the deterioration of the end connections of the balcony railing and would have been gradual. It was an inevitable result of poor construction practice when originally installing the railing. It was not possible to form an adequate mitred joint by merely relying on nails to secure the railing in the manner attempted. The screw connection between the timber rail and the L shaped bracket attached to the brick work was ill devised and not adequate.
(c) There was deterioration evident in the mitred joint end fixing of the railing. That involved the splitting of the abutting timber rail and the rusting of the nails used to secure the joint which, given the extensive amount of rusting, was clearly of a long term nature.

(d) The soundness of the balcony railing could have been tested at any time by applying measured loads of the value specified in the building code. Short of such exact and involved testing a simple and practical "lay" test for the soundness of the railing would have been to grip the top of the rail firmly with two hands and shake it vigorously. Any resulting undue movement in the railing and deformation or separation of the mountings would be an indication that the railing was not sound.
(e) Another practical "lay" test would have been to strike the inner face of the rail firmly near the end points with the heel of the hand, again looking out for undue movement and/or deformation.
(f) The railing would have failed if a proper inspection had been made and such simple testing had been carried out, well prior to the date of the plaintiff's accident.
(g) In cross-examination Mr Buckland agreed that he did not know whether or not there was a visible gap prior to the accident taking place, the fact that there was a gap between the railings on the unit below did not mean that there was a gap in the join of the railing which gave way, he did not know whether the railing had fallen onto the balcony of the unit below or had been placed there nor did he know if the falling railing was responsible for the gap in the railing on the downstairs unit. He agreed that the railing could have caused such a gap if it had struck the downstairs railing.
(h) He agreed that evidence of splitting in timber does not automatically result in the timber being inadequate. It depended on the position of the splitting and its extent. That was something that one with some experience needed to consider in determining whether or not timber exhibiting signs of splitting was inadequate or not.
(i) Mr Buckland agreed he did not know what the condition of the railing was in January 2003. However he said he would be surprised if the timber was any different and the condition of the railing was any different in January 2003. He didn't know if anything had occurred to the railing in the months after January 2003 and prior to 7 December 2003.

The evidence for the third defendant

10. The only witness called by the third defendant was Ms Andreadis who was the third defendant's property manager at the relevant time. She gave evidence:

(a) She was 20 years old at that time and had no qualifications or experience as a builder, architect or engineer.
(b) Her role as a property manager was to carry out routine inspections, ingoing and outgoing inspections, tribunals, showing properties, rent reviews, repairs. When carrying out an inspection she had to go around the premises and check that everything was in good order. If there were any repairs that needed to be done she had to record that on a document which she had with her during the inspection.
(c) She said she did an inspection prior to the renting of the property to the plaintiff. She said that she checked that everything was intact and there were no structural problems. The plaintiff was not with her during the inspection.
(d) She said as part of her duties she walked onto the balcony and checked it to see if it was intact by which she meant that the brackets were attached to the wall and "we used to shake the balcony to see that it was in good order." She shook the balcony on this occasion and formed the opinion that the balcony was in good condition and "everything was intact". She ticked the report form to that effect.
(e) She said in cross-examination that she had gone to the edge, held it and checked to see that it was "in good tact" because that was "our normal procedure that we were taught to do". She did it to check that it was in good order to see that it was safe for the tenants to move in. She said it was a safety issue and that if the balcony rail was defective "we wouldn't rent the property until it was fixed". She was asked detailed questions in cross-examination as to her observations at the time. She had difficulty in answering many of these questions.

The third defendant had qualified a consulting engineer but did not call him to give evidence.

Determination

12. The fourth defendant seeks indemnity or contribution from the third defendant pursuant to the provisions of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1946 which provides

"Where damage is suffered by any person as a result of a tort (whether a crime or not)–

> "… (c) any tortfeasor liable in respect of that damage may recover contribution from any other tortfeasor who is, or would if sued had been, liable in respect of the same damage, whether as a joint tortfeasor or otherwise, so, however, that no person shall be entitled to recover contribution under this section from any person entitled to be identified in respect of the liability in respect of which the contribution is sought."

13. The third defendant conceded that "to the extent that it can be shown that someone had a liability to the plaintiff in respect of the accident, the settlement which is recorded in the first of the two sets of orders that your Honour made today is an appropriate settlement". The first of the two sets of orders was the judgment in favour of the plaintiff against the fourth defendant.

14. The initial question for determination was whether a liability of the third defendant to the plaintiff for the damage conceded by the fourth defendant could be established. If this was established there was a further question as to the apportionment of responsibility between the third and fourth defendants.

15. The third defendant submitted that it did not owe a duty of care to the plaintiff. Alternatively, if a duty was owed, there was no breach of that duty as the evidence did not establish the railing was in a defective condition at the time of the inspection or that, if it was, there was any sign which ought to have made the third defendant aware of the defect.

16. It was common ground that the High Court in Jones v Bartlett (2000) Aust Torts Reports ¶81-582; (2000) 205 CLR 166 established a landlord may be liable to a tenant in respect of defects in rented property provided the landlord was aware of, or ought to have been aware of, the defect at the time the lease was entered into — see also Sakoua v Williams (2005) 64 NSWLR 588 at [3] and [8].

17. The fourth defendant submitted that, as a result of the agreement between the first and third defendants, the third defendant was in the same position as the first and second defendants in terms of the duty owed to the plaintiff. The third defendant submitted the third defendant was not the landlord. It was the agent of the landlord. As such it owed duties to the landlord but those duties did not extend to the plaintiff.

18. In State of NSW v Watton (1998) NSW ConvR ¶55-885 the Court of Appeal held that there was an obligation to inspect residential premises before the commencement of a tenancy which obligation arose under statute implied from the requirement to complete and provide the tenant with a condition report at the start of the tenancy. Pursuant to the Residential Tenancy (Residential Premises) Regulations there was a duty to carry out the inspection with due care. Fitzgerald AJA who was a member of the court said:

> "The report relating to the condition of residential premises must be completed by or on behalf of the landlord and given to the tenant at or before the time the residential tenancy agreement is executed by the landlord. These statutory regulatory provisions necessarily import a requirement that residential premises be inspected with reasonable care prior to letting to a new tenant. Breach of that obligation is evidence of negligence."

19. In my opinion the third defendant undertook the obligation to inspect and complete the condition report and by so doing became subject to a duty of care to the plaintiff to warn the plaintiff and/or the landlord of any dangerous defects in the premises of which it was, or ought to have been aware.

20. Such a duty was acknowledged by Miss Andreadis when she observed that the condition of the railing was obviously a safety issue and that if the railing was defective "we wouldn't rent the property" until it was fixed.

21. I do not accept that it has been proven that the gap at the join of the railings was present at the commencement of the tenancy. There is no direct evidence that anyone observed a gap at that time, notwithstanding that the premises were inspected by the plaintiff, her husband and Mr Liu and Miss Andreadis for defects and damage. Mr Buckland was unable to say that the gap would have been present at that time.

22. I do not accept that the evidence of splitting in the timber was, by itself, such as to put a lay person on notice that the railing was dangerously defective nor do I accept that the condition of the bracket attaching the railing to the wall of the unit was such as to put the third defendant on notice that it was defective.

23. Nevertheless I find the railing, on the balance of probabilities, was in a dangerously defective condition at the time of the commencement of the tenancy for the following reasons:

> (a) I accept the plaintiff's evidence as to the circumstances of the railing giving way without any weight being placed upon it other than the plaintiff's hands. I infer from that evidence that at that time the railing was in an extremely defective condition. I also accept the evidence of Mr Buckland that the condition of the railing was due to deterioration over a long period of time.
> (b) I accept the evidence of the plaintiff and her husband that there was a two to three centimetre gap at the join between the railing and the longitudinal railing and this was present no later than one or two months after the commencement of the tenancy. I find that the existence of the gap was a sign of the advanced deterioration of the join of the railings.
> (c) I accept the evidence of Mr Buckland that the railing was in a substandard and dangerous condition at the time it gave way and that he would be surprised if the condition of the railing was any different in January 2003. In my opinion there was no evidence that the railing had sustained accidental damage during the period of the plaintiff's tenancy.

24. In my opinion the age of the railing was such that reasonable care required that a simple lay test such as described by Mr Buckland should have been performed on the railing at the time of the inspection prior to the commencement of the plaintiff's tenancy. The third defendant apparently had instructed Ms Andreadis to perform an appropriate lay test.

25. Having regard to the condition of the railing at the time of the fall, the small amount of pressure on the railing when it gave way, the presence of the gap at the join one or two months after the commencement of the tenancy, the existence of splitting and the other matters referred to in [23], I consider it more likely than not that if an appropriate "lay test" for the soundness of the railing had been properly carried out at the commencement of the tenancy it would have resulted in undue movement in the railing or deformation or separation of the mountings such as to indicate that the railing was unsound.

26. In my opinion it is more likely than not that the test which Miss Andreadis said she carried out was either not performed on the railing or not adequately performed.

27. I therefore conclude that the railing was dangerously defective at the time of the commencement of the tenancy, that the third defendant ought to have been aware of the condition of the railing if an appropriate lay test had been properly carried out by it and that the third defendant was negligent in either not performing or not adequately performing an appropriate lay test.

28. I infer that if the third defendant had informed the owners of the defective condition of the railing they, in turn, would have informed the fourth defendant of the problem and the fourth defendant would have rectified it in time to avert the injury to the plaintiff.

Apportionment

29. In determining any apportionment under s 5(1)(c) of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1946 it is "the whole conduct of each negligent party in relation to the circumstances of the accident which must be subject to comparative examination … there must be a comparison both of culpability, that is, of the degree of departure from the standard of care of the reasonable man, and of the relative importance of the acts of the parties in causing the damage … the other tortfeasors' responsibility for the damages are to be taken into account and given weight to 'as a fundamental element' in making the finding by the court of what is just and equitable" — James Hardie & Co Pty Ltd v Roberts (1999) Aust Torts Reports ¶81-527; (1999) 47 NSWLR 425 at [89] and [90].

[140167]

30. The fourth defendant submitted that a just and equitable apportionment of responsibility for the injury between the third and fourth defendants was 50% each. The third defendant submitted that its liability, if it had any at all, was of a minor degree and the apportionment should be in the order of 10 to 15%.

31. Section 62 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 provides:

> "(1) An owners corporation must properly maintain and keep in a state of good and serviceable repair the common property and any personal property vested in the owners corporation.
> (2) An owners corporation must renew or replace any fixtures or fittings comprised in the common property and any personal property vested in the owners corporation."

32. In my opinion the railing formed part of the common property which the fourth defendant had a continuing duty to maintain and keep in a state of good and serviceable repair pursuant to section 62 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996. The primary duty in respect of the condition of the balcony railing rested with the fourth defendant. It is apparent it took no steps to make the railing safe and thereby avert injury to the plaintiff. In my opinion its culpability in failing to repair the railing was of a much higher degree than the failure by the third defendant to carry out an adequate inspection of the premises at the commencement of the plaintiff's tenancy. In my opinion the appropriate apportionment is 75% to the fourth defendant and 25% to the third defendant.

33. As I understand it the effect of my findings is that the orders in [34] are appropriate. However I grant leave to the parties to apply within three days should my orders not accurately represent the agreement of the parties in this regard.

Orders

34. I make the following orders:

> (1) Verdict and judgment for the fourth defendant on its cross-claim against the third defendant in the sum of $193,750.

(2) The third defendant is to pay the fourth defendant's costs of its cross-claim against the third defendant.
(3) By consent the proceedings by the plaintiff against the third defendant are dismissed with no order as to costs between the plaintiff and the third defendant. The fourth defendant is to pay 75% of the third defendant's costs of defending those proceedings.

Court citation: [2008] QSC 219

Supreme Court of Queensland

1 August 2006

Community schemes — Contracts for sale — Formal requirements — Vendor attaches statutory form to contract, but fails to attach latest version — Whether failure entitles purchaser to cancel contract — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld)s 213(5), 213(6) — Acts Interpretation Act 1954 (Qld)s 4, 49.

Bluestone Holdings Pty Ltd (the purchaser) purchased a lot in a community titles scheme from Juniper Property Holdings No 14 Pty Ltd (the vendor).

An information sheet was attached to the contract of sale, and therefore given to the purchaser, as required by s 213(5) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) (the BCCM Act). However, the version of the sheet that was given was version 4, whereas the most recent version was version 5.

The differences between the two versions were inconsequential. Nevertheless, the purchaser purported to cancel the contract pursuant to s 213(6) of the BCCM Act on the basis that the vendor had not complied with s 213(5). It contended that strict compliance with s 213(5) was necessary and that this required the vendor to give the purchaser the latest version of the information sheet. It applied to the Supreme Court of Queensland for a declaration that the cancellation was valid.

Held: Purchaser's application dismissed.

1. Under s 49 of the Acts Interpretation Act 1954 (Qld), strict compliance with a form approved under an Act is not necessary and substantial compliance is sufficient. However, under s 4, the application of the Acts Interpretation Act 1954 may be displaced by a contrary intention appearing in any Act.

2. Plainly, the version of the form which was attached to the contract substantially complied with the version of the form which should have been attached to the contract. Furthermore, the BCCM Act's object of providing an "appropriate level of consumer protection" indicated that substantial compliance with the requirement to give the latest version of the information sheet was sufficient. It followed that the purchaser's purported cancellation of the contract under s 213(6) was invalid.

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

Mr Philp for the purchaser.

Mr Sofronoff for the vendor.

Full text of judgment below

de Jersey CJ:

1. THE CHIEF JUSTICE: By this application the applicant seeks a declaration that it was entitled to cancel a contract dated 21st February 2005 providing for its purchase of a proposed lot in a community title scheme.

2. Before the time due for settlement, and on 22nd June 2006, the solicitors for the applicant wrote to the solicitors for the respondent cancelling the contract.

3. The right of cancellation was said to arise from section 213 subsection 6 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997. That says that a purchaser may cancel such a contract if the seller has not complied with subsection 5.

4. Subsection 5 obliges the seller to attach to the contract what is termed an information sheet. In this case that fell to be attached immediately beneath a warning statement required by the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000.

5. Subsection 5 says that the information sheet is to be in the approved form. This seller attached a superseded version of the information sheet. The requisite forms are approved by the Chief Executive Officer. It suffices to say that the seller attached version 4 whereas it should have attached version 5.

6. The differences are really quibbles. Version 4 is unsurprisingly headed “Version 4” whereas version 5 is unsurprisingly headed “Version 5”. The second difference between the two documents is that version 4 does not specify its “commencement date” whereas version 5 does.

7. The third difference appears under the heading “What help is available to owners”. The difference concerns the name of a Government department. Version 4 relevantly reads:

> “The Department of Tourism, Racing and Fair Trading has a free call telephone ‘Community Titles Advisory Service’ to answer queries by owners on community title scheme matters. Owners use this service for advice on such matters as — determining responsibility for repairs, how to conduct a committee election, what type of resolution is necessary in a particular situation, how to enforce a by-law et cetera. You may contact this service by telephoning 1800 060 119.
> The department also offers a dispute resolution service for settling disputes between owners and between owners and their body corporate. There are a variety of means available for resolving disputes including mediation, formal order or specialist assessment. For information on this service telephone the Office of the Commissioner for Body Corporate and Community Management, Department of Tourism, Racing and Fair Trading phone 0732277654 or 0732277899”.

Version 5 is in precisely the same terms save that it specifies the by then correct name of the department, which had changed from Department of Tourism, Racing and Fair Trading to Department of Tourism, Fair Trading and Wine Industry Development.

8. The important point is that the telephone numbers remained the same and the reference to the Office of the Commissioner for Body Corporate and Community Manager remained the same. In short, the difference would appear to be inconsequential and not such as relevant, to mislead a reader of the document.

9. In MNM Developments Proprietary Limited and Gerrard [2005] QCA230 the Court was concerned with the requirement to attach a warning statement required under the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000.

10. Mr Philp, who appears for the applicant, has drawn attention to paragraph 16 of that judgment where I said that in effect the requirement to attach the warning statement should not be liberally interpreted and I referred to some sections which indicated that purchasers were given a right to terminate > “Even for quite technical contraventions and whether or not the purchaser has suffered any material disadvantage”.

11. He referred also to paragraph 21 where I suggested that the legislature had considered “an exacting obligation” justified to secure the goal of consumer protection. The issue being addressed in that case was obviously different from the issue here.

12. Going to section 213 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 one sees that two documents are to be attached. The first one called “the first statement” has to be completed by the seller. Details have to be included into a pro forma document.

13. Subsection 4, then, provides that the document must be “substantially complete”. That provision was included to avoid the sort of quibbles which characterised the 1980s in relation to home unit contracts which occupied so much litigation and wasted so many people’s resources.

14. Subsection 5 requires that the information sheet — the second document — be in the approved form. Subsection 5 is not followed by a provision like subsection 4. There is no provision, in short, in the Body Corporate and Community Management Act, saying that substantial compliance with the approved form will suffice.

15. Mr Sofronoff, who appeared for the respondent, submitted that was because the legislature considered applicable section 49 of the Acts Interpretation Act 1954. It says that:

> “If a form is…approved under an Act, strict compliance with the form is not necessary and substantial compliance is sufficient.”

Plainly, in this case, the version of the form which was attached to the contract substantially complied with the version of the form which should have been attached to the contract.

16. But Mr Philp submits that section 4 [of the Acts Interpretation Act] excludes reliance on section 49, subsection 1. Section 4 provides that:

> "The application of this Act may be displaced wholly or partly by a contrary intention appearing in any Act."

17. Mr Philp draws from the Body Corporate and Community Management Act, by an approach which impressed the Court of Appeal in MNM Developments Pty Ltd and Gerrard, an intention that strict compliance with, in this case, version 5 of the form was required. I do not accept that submission.

18. Support for the contrary position emerges from section 4, paragraph (f) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act, which states as one of the secondary objects of the Act:

> "To provide an appropriate level of consumer protection for owners and intending buyers of Lots included in Community Titles schemes."

19. It is, to my mind, obvious that substantial compliance with version 5, as achieved here, would provide that "appropriate level of consumer protection". It follows, in my view, that the purported cancellation of the contract, under section 213, subsection 6, was invalid.

20. I should mention a decision of her Honour, Justice White, in Celik Developments Pty Ltd and Mayes 2005, Queensland Supreme Court, 224, in two respects. Firstly, her Honour did not consider any arguable application of section 49 of the Acts Interpretation Act, and secondly, her Honour found that there were material differences between the documents which fell for consideration in that case. See paragraph 27.

21. I also mention, finally, the decision of Justice Gibbs in Equipment Investments Pty Ltd and MJ Dowthwaite and Co Pty Ltd, 1969, 16, Federal Law Reports, 23, where his Honour offered guidance as to when divergence from a form should be considered substantial. He said this:

> "A divergence from the form would be substantial or material if it caused the statement to convey less information than the form requires, or to confuse or mislead the prospective hirer as to the matters which the form is designed to bring to his notice. The dealer is not entitled to abandon the form completely and to claim the right to represent the information to the hirer in a quite different way but, in my opinion, he does not substantially or materially depart from the form simply by including additional words, unless their presence in some way distorts or obscures or minimises the information which the form is designed to give."

22. The application is dismissed.

23. THE CHIEF JUSTICE: With costs to be assessed. Thank you.

Community schemes — Disputes — Adjudication — Adjudicator makes orders invalidating "unreasonable" body corporate resolutions on basis that majority lot owners exercising voting rights oppressively or fraudulently — Whether orders valid — Whether adjudicator wrongly importing company law principles into decision-making process and disenfranchising majority owners — Whether body corporate's resolutions inconsistent with alleged democratic ethos of legislation — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld), s 276.

Dindas (the first appellant) and her company, Edith Dindas Pty Ltd (the second appellant), held 60% of the lot entitlements in a community titles scheme (the scheme). Disputes arose between the appellants and several others (the respondents) who, together, held almost all of the remaining lot entitlements in the scheme.

The disputes were heard by an adjudicator who, pursuant to his power under s 276 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) (the Act) to make orders that are "just and equitable in the circumstances", made orders invalidating a number of resolutions of the scheme's body corporate and set aside the appointment of the second appellant as the scheme's building manager. Drawing on concepts derived from equity and company law, the adjudicator held that the body corporate's resolutions were "unreasonable". In particular, he considered that the appellants, as the majority lot owners, were guilty of a "fraud on a power" — they had exercised their voting rights in bad faith and for purposes foreign to those for which their voting rights existed.

The appellants appealed against the adjudicator's orders on questions of law to the District Court of Queensland. They argued that the adjudicator: (1) had wrongly imported company law principles into the process of decision-making under the Act; (2) having done so, had wrongly characterised the exercise of the appellants' statutory rights as "unreasonable"; and (3) on that basis, had wrongly overridden the appellants' wishes as the majority, and therefore disenfranchised them, through orders that the adjudicator wrongly deemed to be "just and equitable".

The respondents largely sought to uphold the adjudicator's orders. They argued that: (1) the Act rests upon democratic principles, which the appellants subverted through their "oppressive" practices; and (2) the adjudicator's powers under s 276 were wide enough to support the orders that were made.

Held: Appeal allowed.

1. It was a manifest error to assume that s 276 of the Act addresses either fundamental democratic or moral principles. Rather, it is posited on the existence of a dispute about legal rights within the parameters of the legislation. Therefore, a just and equitable order made under the section is necessarily one made in accordance with the law and is not one which rests on imported, and irrelevant, notions of a pure democracy.

2. The adjudicator made no findings that the resolutions were motivated, on the appellants' part, by a desire for personal or particular gain or could, on any view, be classified as fraudulent. Rather, he held that the resolutions themselves were "unreasonable". Without evidence of fraud or actual oppression, that was a step too far.

3. Therefore, the adjudicator fell into error in determining that various decisions were "unreasonable" if, in fact, they were not discordant with the appellants' rights under the Act. In particular, the powers under s 276 could only be exercised if the orders made did not unacceptably trample the appellants' rights as lot owners. The adjudicator's orders failed to meet these criteria.

Full text of judgment below

Alan Wilson SC, DCJ:

1. This is an appeal and cross-appeal from orders made by an adjudicator under the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (BCCMA) published, with reasons [1] , on 12 January 2005. A copy of the orders the adjudicator made is attached, marked "A". Each order is numbered; the numbering did not appear when the adjudicator made the orders, but the parties agreed it helps in addressing the issues.

2. The proceedings involve commercial premises at Park Road. The material, which is voluminous, reveals a sorry history of disagreement and dispute and several previous instances of recourse to adjudicative proceedings under the BCCMA. I was told that, since the appeal and cross-appeal were lodged, an administrator has been appointed under the BCCMA with limited powers. Nevertheless, the parties wished to proceed and did so over two days of oral argument, with lengthy written submissions and wide-ranging references to case law. At the outset an attempt was made, by the respondents/cross appellants, to file an affidavit containing 405 pages of material about events involving the parties since the adjudicator's order, but leave was refused. The appellants then sought to set aside an ex parte order of this court made on 12 May 2005 giving some of the respondents leave to cross-appeal out of time but that application was also refused.

3. The purpose of the BCCMA is to provide a system of governance and management of "community titles schemes" (CTS) through bodies corporate. All lot owners are members of their CTS body corporate, which manages common property and assets. The body corporate operates, here, through a committee [2] chosen at an annual general meeting. Voting rights are determined by lot entitlements. The appellants hold over 60% of the lot entitlements, and the respondents about 35%.

4. The BCCMA has a variety of mechanisms for resolving disputes about management, some of which have been tried here; they include the procedure which led to the adjudicator's orders. These matters reached the adjudicator via procedures under Chapter 6 of the Act, following "applications" by persons concerned with disputes arising about matters touched by its provisions. The appeal and cross-appeal are brought under ss 289 and 290, which permits a challenge to an adjudicator's decision, but only on a question of law.

5. The appellants' primary attack is upon those orders of the adjudicator which, they say, over-ride their wishes as the majority, and disenfranchise them. The respondents' principal contention is that the adjudicator should have appointed an administrator[3] in the face of conduct by the appellants which, they assert, was oppressive and constituted what was, to borrow (as their submissions do) a phrase usually associated with corporations and their shareholders, a "fraud on the power".

The Proceedings before the Adjudicator

6. The Adjudicator's reasons show he dealt, simultaneously, with five "Dispute Resolution Applications" brought by a number of the respondents/cross-appellants here. He published five orders, each in identical terms[4] . The orders made in the first, second, third, ninth and tenth paragraphs of those orders relate only to one application (682-2003). After the appellants brought their appeal, the adjudicator stayed two of his orders[5] , concerning mailboxes and a directory board. In the scheme of things, these were not important matters.

7.

The adjudicator's reasons are lengthy and detailed, covering 15 single spaced pages. Those reasons and the orders they are said to justify rely heavily upon significant findings the adjudicator made about the meaning and effect of the BCCMA and, in particular, s 276 which provides:

> "276. Orders of Adjudicators
>
> (1) An Adjudicator to whom the application is referred may make an order that is just and equitable in the circumstances (including a declaratory order) to resolve a dispute, in the context of a community title scheme, about—
>
> (a) A claimed or anticipated contravention of this Act or the community management statement; or > (b) The exercise of rights or powers, or the performance of duties, under this Act or the community management statement; or > (c) A claimed or anticipated contractual matter about:—
>
> (i) The engagement of a person as the body corporate manager or service contractor for a community title scheme; or

(ii) The authorisation of a person as a letting agent for a community title scheme.

8. Before turning to a more detailed discussion of the way the adjudicator construed that section (and the legislation generally) it is relevant to note that this CTS operates under what is called the Commercial Module which, as the adjudicator noted, leaves matters of nomination and election to be determined by the body corporate itself in the form of a special resolution[6] — unlike the Standard Module which, as the adjudicator also noted, had been amended in December 2003 "…to improve the transparency of committee decision making and address issues including potential stacking of the committee with the advantage of a small number of owners, a body corporate manager, or the resident manager."[7]

9. The adjudicator was persuaded that s 276 enlivened a wide ranging discretion to address the matters upon which he was called to adjudicate in a way which reflected certain principles found in company law, and equity. His reasons contain the following, various statements:

> "It is a well accepted principle of equity that a majority shareholder in a company cannot alter the rules by which the company is governed in a way that is oppressive to a minority shareholder or group of shareholders. More generally, courts in equity have established the doctrine of 'fraud on a power' stating 'a person having a power, must exercise its bone (sic) fide for the end designed, otherwise it is corrupt and void' and establishing that the doctrine of fraud on a power 'authorises intervention where the power is exercised in bad faith or for purposes foreign to the power.' The New South Wales Court of Appeal has recognised this doctrine of fraud on a power as being of general application and, specifically, as applicable to bodies corporate under the Strata Titles Act of New South Wales.
> While the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 does not expressly confer equitable jurisdiction on an adjudicator, an adjudicator is expected to make an order that is 'just and equitable' to resolve a dispute adjudicators have jurisdiction to declare a resolution void if unreasonable or to declare a motion past [sic] if the opposition to it is unreasonable (Act, 276). In considering whether a resolution is unreasonable it is instructed [sic] to consider the decisions of the courts that have found a procedurally valid exercise of a power invalid on the basis that it constitutes a fraud on the power. In particular it is relevant that a fraud on a power can be constituted if the power is exercised for a purpose or with an intention beyond the scope of the power. The conduct does not need to be dishonest or immoral to constitute a fraud on the power[8] ."

10. It was in reliance upon these premises that the adjudicator found a number of the decisions of the committee of the body corporate were "unreasonable". An example concerns the adjudicator's first order, which declared void a decision of an extraordinary general meeting which limited the committee's decision making power to decisions involving spending of no more than $500. The adjudicator said:

> "This is the type of decision by a majority group that the courts recognise as a fraud on the minority. It is a resolution that I propose to invalidate on the basis that it is unreasonable and that a just and equitable order requires restoration of effective decision making powers to the committee (Act 94 (2), 276)."

Another example concerned Order 3, touching a decision of the body corporate to appoint the second appellants as building manager, which the adjudicator declared void "…on the basis that it was unreasonable"; and, the further order that the company was prohibited from voting for itself or an associate as replacement building manager "…on a just and equitable basis". In his reasons the adjudicator said:

> "The respondents are correct in submitting that members of a company may generally vote in their own interest. However, the courts of equity have consistently invalidated the exercise of voting power by a majority of members in a company where the vote is a means of securing some personal gain rather than for purposes of the proper management of a company."

The Appellants' Submissions

11. The appellants' case is, in short, was [sic] that they were simply exercising statutory rights under the BCCMA and, in those circumstances, the principles the adjudicator sought to attach to the legislation simply had no application. Moreover, it is asserted, he made no actual findings that they had been guilty of any fraud in the exercise of their rights or powers under that legislation, or had acted oppressively; or, in the alternative, if the adjudicator is deemed by implication to have found that the appellants were acting beyond their rights, that finding was wrong.

12. The adjudicator, the appellants say, undertook this incorrect process of reasoning: first, he determined that the legislation permitted him to apply principles brought across from company law; second, he determined (by implication) that the appellants lawful exercise of their rights attracted a sanction under those principles because the appellants' acts constituted a fraud on the power and/or oppression; thirdly, he wrongly categorised those acts as "unreasonable"; and, fourthly, he took that process as the basis for a conclusion that he was, as a consequence, entitled to make wide ranging orders which took away the appellants' statutory rights, on the basis those orders were "just and equitable" (under s 276) in the face of the appellants' wrongful conduct.

The Respondents' Submissions

13. The respondents' submissions (on both the appeal and their cross appeal) went through a variety of forms, and the final one was filed by leave at the hearing. Their first contention is a very interesting one: that the legislation rests on democratic principles and, as the submissions say: "…the democratic ethos of the legislation calls for the recognition of the voice of the community, not just the satisfaction of the wishes of one person who is the majority owner. The general meetings and committee meetings are intended to reflect a communal voice… it is the intention of the Parliament of Queensland to encourage the democratic process through the Act and that the oppressive practices of the Appellants have subverted that intention"[9] . Reliance for this proposition was placed, among other things, upon an article co-authored by the respondents' Counsel, Mr Alford[10] .

14. Secondly, it is said that the adjudicator's powers under s 276 are wide enough to permit the orders he made, and that this proposition is supported by three decisions of appeal courts: Houghton v Immer (No 155 Pty Ltd) [1997] 44 NSW LR 46; McColl v Body Corporate for Lakeview Park CTS 20751 [2004] QCA 44; and, Hablethwaite v Andrijevic [2005] QCA 336.

15. Finally, in support of the cross appeal, it is said that the appellants' actions constituted such serious breaches of the legislative intent of the BCCMA and the principles of company law already mentioned that the adjudicator should have gone much further, and appointed an administrator to the scheme; and his failure to do so is described as "timid"[11] .

16. Two additional matters were raised in the respondents' submissions: the first asserted that the adjudicator erred in law by failing to recognise that an extraordinary general meeting of 6 September 2004 had been wrongly called and was invalid; and the second that, having found the appointment of the second appellants Edith Dindas Pty Ltd as building manager was invalid, the adjudicator should have ordered restitution to the body corporate in an amount of $41,275, plus interest. The first claim ought not be ventilated: it was the subject of a separate application to the adjudicator[12] and did not fall for his determination in the proceedings under appeal. Even without that procedural barrier I would not, in any event, be prepared to make an adverse finding: although, as the respondents contend, there was no secretary filling that office in the committee of the body corporate at the time that was, at worst, a procedural irregularity which should not automatically be taken to invalidate the meeting[13] .

17. As to the second point the adjudicator found[14] that he did not have jurisdiction to make an order for restitution, that matter being properly a dispute between the body corporate and Edith Dindas Pty Ltd. In any event, s 265 of the BCCMA indicates that disputes of this kind should be the subject of a "specialist" adjudication and that was not, it appears, what this process was.

18. Two other aspects of the appeal, and the parties' submissions, should be remarked: first, the appellants' Notice of Appeal asserts that the making of identical orders in five applications required the unnecessary joinder of parties[15] but the respondents specifically disavowed the point[16] and it was not pursued at the hearing.

19. Second, the respondents' submissions otherwise make it clear that, if their cross appeal fails, they actively support all of the adjudicator's orders save for the second part of Order 3, under which the body corporate was directed to refuse to accept votes from any owner in favour of appointing themselves or an associate as the replacement for the current building manager. The respondents say that the owners ought to be able to make "…such an appointment on the merits from an open field of candidates"[17] .

A Democracy?

20. The notion that a body corporate operates on democratic principles underpins the respondents' assertion that the adjudicator was required, under the legislation and, in particular, s 276 to "…balance the rights of the individuals …within the statutory and equitable powers ascribed…" by that section[18] . Arguments in support of the contention that parliament intended to "imbue" the legislation with "a democratic principle" are summarised in Mr Alford's article, and in the respondents' Outline at paragraphs 15–20[19] . Those submissions rely upon the use of words like "community" and "corporate" in the legislation, as well as specific provisions — eg, ss 94 and 100, which require that a body corporate administer the common property and assets "…for the benefit of the owners"; and, some aspects of the Minister's Second Reading Speech.

21. Mr Alford, counsel for the respondent, submitted that these elements warrant a particular approach to construction of the BCCMA:

> "The construction of the Act is evidence for the precept that minority owners in a body corporate do have a right to be heard as part of the voice of the community and that actions that silence that voice, intentional or unintentional, run contrary to the ethos of legislation."

22. If, as I understand them, these submissions are intended to support the proposition that the adjudicator's powers to make orders that are "just and equitable" under s 276 can be construed so that minority interests may prevail over the wishes of the majority (lawfully expressed through legitimate voting) in certain circumstances the proposition runs up hard, firstly, against the difficulty that the voting process is, in many instances, one based upon property interests — as the learned article co-written by Mr Alford fairly acknowledges:

> "Interestingly, although the Queensland legislation on its face supports a democratic ethos its Achilles heel is that it enables the ethos to be subverted because the voting process is based on a tally of ownership interests expressed as a percentage of ownership of the whole."

23. Counsel sought to circumvent this rather, on its face, significant difficulty by submitting that although the Act permitted a voting process based on ownership interests, that process was subsumed to other parts of the legislation which favoured a true democracy[20] . The legislation is, in truth, however, a reversion to "democratic" principles applying at an earlier stage in the evolution of the voting process in democratic countries — i.e. one based upon property rights. Nothing could be clearer but that the "ethos" created under the legislation is not always one based upon an individual's right to vote, but upon the property rights which accrue to lot owners. That is a conclusion applying with particular force to schemes operating under the Commercial Module.

24. It is a manifest error, then, to assume that s 276 addresses either fundamental democratic, or moral principles; rather, it is posited on the existence of a dispute about legal rights arising within the parameters of the legislation and, hence, a just and equitable order made under the section is necessarily one made in accordance with the law, and is not one which rests on imported, and irrelevant, notions of a pure democracy.

25. The distinction is well made, albeit in the context of a corporation, in the fourth edition of Justice McPherson's Company Liquidation, at page 177:

> "It has frequently been stressed that s 246 AA is not intended to provide minority shareholders with a means of stultifying the voting power of the majority:
>
> > 'The mere use of voting power at board meetings or at a general meeting to secure the passing of resolutions which the other members of the board or shareholders oppose would not in general constitute oppression for the purpose of the section or for any other purpose. For a petition to succeed it must be shown that there has been oppression in a real sense of members qua shareholders, and not merely a subordination of their wishes to the power of the voting majority.'
> Hence, it does not constitute oppression for those in control to insist upon the adoption of a policy on a matter of business on which there may be legitimate differences of opinion, nor is it oppression if an existing state of inequality results from the provisions of a constitution of the company and not from any action on the part of those in control."

These remarks are, with respect, entirely apposite here: the "existing state of inequality" results not from any subversion of ordinary democratic principles but, simply, from the voting rights created by the legislation.

The Adjudicator's Powers under the BCCMA

26. That the adjudicator was moved to make wide ranging orders is not, as various parts of his reasons show, unsurprising. They reveal a history of disputes between the two camps, and unsuccessful earlier attempts at resolution. Nevertheless, this appeal addresses, at its core, a simple question: whether or not the solutions he reached and the orders he imposed as a consequence (practical and sensible as they might, at first blush, appear) were within power. As the parties argued this appeal, that question revolves around the construction of the Act, and the nature and effect of the three decisions of the NSW and Queensland Courts of Appeal, mentioned earlier.

27. In the course of his reasons the adjudicator referred to three sections of the BCCMA as founding a right to declare resolutions void as unreasonable: s 276, and ss 94 (2) and 152. Section 94 provides:

> "94. Body Corporate's General Functions
>
> 1. The body corporate for a community title scheme must —
>
> (a) Administer the common property and body corporate assets for the benefit of the owners of the lots included in the scheme; and
> (b) Enforce the community management statement (including any bye-laws for the scheme); and > (c) Carry out the further functions given to the body corporate under this Act and the community management statement.
>
> 2. The body corporate must act reasonably in anything it does under sub-section (1)."

28. Section 152 provides, relevantly:

[140490]

> "152. Body Corporate's Duties about Common Property etc.
>
> 1. The body corporate for a community title scheme must —
> (a) Administer, manage and control the common property and body corporate assets reasonably and for the benefit of all owners; and …"

29. Houghton v Immer (both at first instance[21] and on appeal[22]), upon which significant reliance was placed by the respondents, was a case in which the body corporate passed a resolution permitting some lot owners to sub-divide common property for their own benefit. In both courts it was held that because the common property had value, the special resolution of some lot owners was a fraud on the minority, voidable in equity; and, relevantly here, that the doctrine of fraud on a power is of general application and could be applied to bodies corporate under the NSW Strata Title Act 1973.

30. As the judgment of Handley JA on appeal[23] makes clear, however, the transposition of company law principles into this jurisdiction does not change their nature, which continues to rely on actual wrong doing. As he pointed out (at pp 52–53) the relief flowing from these principles will ordinarily attach where the party guilty of fraud or oppression has been motivated by a desire for some personal or particular gain which, in the words of Dixon J in Peters' American Delicacy Co. Ltd v Heath [1939] 61 CLR 457 (at 511) "…does not fairly arise out of the subjects dealt with by the power and is outside and even inconsistent with the contemplated objects of the power"[24] .

31. There was no evidence that the acts and decisions which led to the resolutions declared void by the adjudicator were motivated, on the appellants' part, by a desire for personal or particular gain; or, that their actions were inconsistent with concepts of honesty or could, on any view, be classified as fraudulent. Significantly, the adjudicator made no findings to that effect. Rather, he held that the resolutions themselves were "unreasonable".

32. Without evidence of fraud or actual oppression, that was a step too far. This conclusion applies even to the finding that the resolution to appoint Edith Dindas Pty Ltd as building manager should be set aside. The adjudicator's reasons traverse the respondents' assertion, before him, that the appointment constituted a fraud because the decision was for the benefit of that company, rather than in the interests of the body corporate, but the actual findings do not go so far; he simply concluded, after reviewing the contractual terms and evidence, that because the tender price submitted by the company was in excess of other tenders, the decision was "…unreasonable and not in the best interests of the body corporate".

33. As the reasons also show, the company relied upon its "permanent onsite presence" as a justification for the higher price and the adjudicator acknowledged, while rejecting, that argument. Importantly, however, the reasons plainly indicate that whatever difficulties beset this decision, it fell short of fraud, and there is nothing to suggest the adjudicator thought the appellant company was motivated solely by self interest; or that this was not a case in which there was no actual benefit to the body corporate (in that management actually occurred); or that fraud arose as an issue when the decision had several, concurrent benefits, albeit they included a financial one for the appellant company. The respondents' complaint is, essentially, that they did not get value for money. That is, on its face, something which might in some circumstances constitute a fraud but was not, here, found by the adjudicator to be so and, indeed, any finding to that effect would be surprising.

34. Nor do the two Queensland decisions, McColl and Hablethwaite go so far as the respondents wish to take them. McColl concerns the question whether a by-law passed at an extraordinary meeting of a body corporate was "exclusive use" [sic] by law under s 133 of the BCCMA. On appeal from an adjudicator's decision a District Court Judge held that it was not, and the Court of Appeal agreed. In the course of argument it was contended that s 87 of the Act (later amended, and now s 94) compelled the body corporate to act "reasonably", and that the adjudicator should have dealt with the appellant's complaints on that basis. As Davies JA pointed out[25] , however, the section is concerned with a body corporate's general management functions and is not directed towards regulating decisions made at meetings of the body corporate.

35. The respondents' Outline here argues this conclusion is incorrect — or, perhaps, that it was per incuriam because the court does not seem to have been referred to s 276[26] — but the [sic] s 94 is clearly intended to apply to the performance of functions, and not the carriage of resolutions made at meetings; and s 276 does not take the matter further, or impinge on that conclusion.

36. In Hablethwaite the applicants were, it appears, seeking something in the nature of an advisory opinion from the Court of Appeal[27] . The matter had a complex history: in short, the original decision of the adjudicator had overridden the applicants' exercise of their controlling vote in respect of a number of motions proposed at an annual general meeting, a decision which was upheld on appeal by a District Court Judge.

37. The applicant's complaint was that, contrary to s 276, the adjudicator made an order which was not "just and equitable in the circumstances". Keane JA said, at paras [33] – [34]:

> "[33] The effect of the adjudicator's conclusion, which was upheld on appeal to the District Court, was that the applicants did not demonstrate that they would be adversely affected in the use and enjoyment of their rights as lot owners (other than their voting rights) by the nullification of their voting rights on the motions in question. The adjudicator's statutory powers extend to making orders resolving disputes about the exercise of voting rights by lot owners. The statutory conferral of power upon the adjudicator to make an order which is 'just and equitable in the circumstances' necessarily contemplates a decision by the adjudicator which may be 'just and equitable in the circumstances' even though it overrides the exercise of voting rights by a scheme member.
> [34] Accordingly, the mere circumstance that voting rights of the owner of a lot in a scheme are overridden by a decision cannot, of itself, render the decision something other than 'just and equitable'. Insofar as the rights of a lot owner, other than voting rights, are not affected by the adjudicator's decision, it is impossible to see how the lot owner can be prejudiced in a way which could not be 'just and equitable' simply by a decision to nullify his or her voting rights. As I have already noted, the applicants did not seek to demonstrate to the adjudicator that the enjoyment of their rights as lot owners would be adversely affected by the nullification of their voting rights. As a result, there is no basis on which the applicants could seek to demonstrate that the adjudicator had erred in reaching his decision so as to entitle him to succeed on appeal to the District Court on a question of law".

38. I do not think, with respect, that the statement in Hablethwaite appearing at the end of paragraph [33] was intended to extend to the notion that the discretion arising under s 276 empowers an adjudicator to ignore the voting rights associated with lot entitlements under the Act. The second and third sentences in paragraph [34] make it clear, I think, that the reference to overriding the exercise of voting rights is limited to the voting process itself, and was not intended to go further. That conclusion may be gleaned from the reference, in paragraph [34], to rights "…other than voting rights", and the implied acceptance that those further, extensive rights could not readily be destroyed by an adjudicator's decision. Here, the appellants have vigorously sought to demonstrate that the enjoyment of their other rights as lot owners would be adversely affected by the nullification of their voting rights.

39. Neither decision is, then, authority for the proposition that the adjudicator's powers under s 276 to make a just and equitable order to resolve a dispute necessarily connotes the power to override other rights which lie behind, and form the basis of, voting rights. The legislation plainly contemplates and permits a majority (determined by reference to voting rights granted by the Act) to assert its will by the legitimate exercise of that voting power. The principle adumbrated in Hablethwaite is confined to circumstances surrounding the actual exercise of voting rights; it does not support the much broader proposition which the respondents

The Appellants' Appeal

40. These conclusions mean the adjudicator has, with respect, fallen into error in determining that various decisions were "unreasonable" if, in fact, they were not discordant with the appellants' rights under the BCCMA. In particular the power arising under s 276 may only, as follows from the discussion set out above, be exercised if the orders which are made do not unacceptably trample the appellants' rights as lot owners. For reasons which follow, I am of the view the adjudicator's orders failed to meet those criteria, save in respect of the first part of Order no 3 which revoked the appointment of Edith Dindas Pty Ltd as building manager. That is a matter which, again for reasons which follow, involved a dispute referrable to s 276(1)(c)(i) and, in the face of the evidence placed before the adjudicator, warranted interference.

41. A particular, additional difficulty concerns Order no 7 which directs that the nomination and election of committee members at the annual general meeting is to be performed (as nearly as practicable) in accordance with the procedures for nomination and election of committee members under the Standard Module; and, that the first and second appellants and their associates are only entitled to nominate one individual for committee membership. An immediate and surprising aspect of this order is the reference to the Standard Module when, as the adjudicator recognised, this is a CTS to which the commercial module properly applies. More importantly, however, it is clear that none of the applications sought the orders made in no. 7 and, as I also accept, the appellants who were directly affected by it were afforded no opportunity to be heard on the question whether it should be made. If for no other reason, that order ought to be set aside on grounds relating to principles of natural justice.

42. Order 1 concerned the resolution of an extraordinary general meeting which limited the committee's decision making power to those involving expenditure of no more than $500, a resolution which was held by the adjudicator to be unreasonable and to deprive the committee of a substantial part of its function. The adjudicator found that the limit was "absurdly low"[28] and the "…type of decision by a majority that the courts recognise as a fraud on the minority". For the reasons already given, the latter is incorrect. The adjudicator's reasons show why the monetary limit is lower than might be expected for a scheme of this type, but the Commercial Module clearly granted the appellants the right to vote in favour of a motion to restrict the committee's decisions. That statutory acknowledgment makes it very difficult to see how a decision which permits actual, albeit limited, expenditure can be categorised as "unreasonable".

43. Order 2 invalidated a resolution of an extraordinary general meeting which gave the majority owners the opportunity to veto committee decisions, on the grounds that the body corporate in general meeting had no power to alter its procedures in that manner. The respondents' submissions did not directly address this order but it is plain from the adjudicator's reasons[29] that he considered the matter in some detail. In particular, he noted that the resolution was almost identical to one appearing in the Standard Module which allowed the owners of at least half the lots in a scheme governed by that module to veto committee decisions; but, also, that under s 95 of the BCCMA the body corporate is to have "…all the powers necessary for carrying out its functions".

44. As the Reasons note, the legislation does not contain anything from which it might be implied that the body corporate has unlimited power to alter the procedures under which it is to carry out its functions; and, indeed, those occasions in which the power does arise are specifically described: they include specifying the conduct of committee elections, calling committee meetings, and the power to alter, by special resolution, the procedures for voting at general meetings (Commercial Module, cl 13, 17 and 41).

45. It was said for the appellants that the resolution was simply a reiteration of the right of the majority to review a committee decision and to call an extraordinary general meeting; and, that it avoided the expense and difficulty of that procedure[30] . This order does not rest on s 276 and, indeed, the adjudicator found that there was nothing "…inherently unreasonable in this type of restriction". Nor was there any attack by the appellants upon the reasons insofar as they touched upon the procedures regulating the body corporate's performance of its functions. The mere fact that the original resolution avoided the need to call extraordinary general meetings is not overwhelming and the adjudicator's reasons — based, as they were on their face, on an analysis of the legislative provisions touching procedural matters — should stand.

46. Order 3, setting aside the appointment of the second appellant as building manager, has already been remarked. It appears to have been within the adjudicator's powers under s 276(1)(c)(i) and to have attracted justifiable interference on the "just and equitable" ground because there was evidence suggesting lower tenders from independent managers. The second part of the order, however, limiting both Edith Dindas Pty Ltd from voting for itself or an associate as building manager, or any other owner doing so, is rejected by both parties. The appellants contend that it is beyond power and the respondents that "…the owners of the body corporate should be able to make such an appointment on the merits from an open field of candidates"[31] .

47. The dispute resolution provisions do not empower an adjudicator to make orders about how a lot owner may vote in relation to a future matter, and limit the adjudicator's powers to circumstances where a power has been exercised contrary to the legislation. The adjudicator has assumed (without any factual foundation for the assumption) that all future proposals for the appointment of a building manager by either the appellants, or the respondents will be "unreasonable" and, therefore, invalid when there is no proper basis for that presumption. Further, there is nothing in the Act or modules that prevent a lot owner from voting at a general meeting in favour of the appointment of themselves as a service contractor, even though they might derive a direct or indirect benefit. For these reasons, the second part of order no.3 should be removed.

48. Order 4 concerns car parking. Findings about it were coloured by some submissions concerning the previous intervention of Edith Dindas Pty Ltd as building manager and an apparent attempt to regulate car parking in that role. The respondents' complaint was that the resolution of the general meeting of 6 September 2004 was the product of "unreasonable" conduct because it was made "…without an opportunity for discussion between committee members as representatives of all owners". For the reasons already explored at length, the mere exercise, by the appellants, of their voting rights at a general meeting would not ordinarily constitute conduct attracting the operation of s 276. In the absence of any legislative basis to go behind the resolution of the general meeting, and in particular any basis for a finding that the resolution was unreasonable, this order should not stand.

49. Orders nos. 5 and 6 were not, again, specifically addressed by the parties in their Outlines or oral submissions, and the former seems to be directed to nothing more than a repair of the current circumstance in which the office of secretary is vacant, and the holding of a meeting. The latter, however, purports to direct the committee to pass resolutions concerning car parking in circumstances where that has already been dealt with at a general meeting, and the decision of that meeting has not been shown to be unreasonable. The other parts deal with matters which have now been overtaken by the passage of time. Although I was told that an administrator with limited powers was appointed in late 2005 there was no evidence about the extent of those powers. The second and third paragraphs in the sixth order may, for all I know, remain appropriate and the fourth is not insensible in light of the removal of Edith Dindas Pty Ltd as building manager.

50. Order 7 has, for reasons already discussed, been shown to have been made in a way which breaches the rules of natural justice and, for that reason alone, should be set aside. The appellants have also advanced other persuasive reasons why it was improper to limit the first and second appellants or their associates to only one nomination of one individual for committee membership: clause 11 of the Commercial Module imposes no restriction on a member's right to nominate persons to the committee and the adjudicator has, it appears, incorrectly relied upon amendments to the Standard Module which do, in fact, impose a limitation of that kind. The absence of any similar change to the applicable module reflects, fairly clearly, a legislative intent which is inimical to the order made.

51. Orders 8, 9 and 10, while reflecting an understandable desire on the adjudicator's part to re-establish some order in this scheme, suffer from the embarrassment that the appellants' voting rights have been limited in the manner just discussed and, for that reason, fall with order 7.

52. With respect to the appeal, then, it succeeds in respect of order no. 1, the second part of order no. 3, order 4, order 5, the first sub-clause in order 6, and orders 7, 8, 9 and 10.

The Respondents' Cross Appeal

53. There was no compelling basis for a finding, by the adjudicator, that the circumstances warranted the appointment of an administrator. His reasons make it clear that, mistakenly but understandably, he strove to fashion procedures and directions which would militate against the continuance of the long history of disputes which has beset this CTS but also, as may readily be inferred, that he considered more drastic remedies. It is not correct to say, as the respondents do in their most recent submission that stopping short of appointing an administrator was a "timid" response which should now be corrected.

54. The appointment of an administrator would involve very substantial costs to the body corporate (and, in particular, the appellants) and deprive all owners of any say in its affairs. While, as I have found, the adjudicator's purported remedies lacked a sound basis in the legislation, it would be a mistake to usurp the Commissioner's right to consider each case on its merits as it arises and determine whether or not an administrator, with either absolute or limited powers, should be imposed. The fact administration, subject to some unknown limitations has now been put in place strengthens this conclusion.

55. For these reasons, the cross appeal is dismissed.

56. I will hear submissions about any further orders the parties seek.

Court citation: [2007] QSC 281

Supreme Court of New South Wales

30 March 2007

Community schemes — Management — Managers, service contractors and letting agents — Owners corporation appoints manager to provide building management services and letting services — Whether appointment void and unenforceable as a delegation of the owners corporation's functions Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW), s 13(3)

An owners corporation constituted under the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW) (the Act) entered into an agreement with 183 On Kent Management Pty Ltd (the manager).

Under the agreement, the owners corporation appointed the manager to provide certain services in relation to the relevant strata scheme, including building management services and letting services. The manager's specific duties were set out in Sch 1 of the agreement. Clause 1 provided that the manager was to "supervise and arrange for the maintenance, cleaning and repairs to the Common Property so as to keep the Common Property in good order and repair". Other clauses required the manager to report to the owners corporation with quotations for repairs; assist the owners corporation with the preparation of the annual budget; make recommendations to the owners corporation about the management, maintenance and care of the building; and comply with directions from the owners corporation in relation to the manager's duties under the agreement.

The owners corporation commenced proceedings against the manager in the Supreme Court of New South Wales, alleging that the agreement amounted to a delegation of the owners corporation's functions to the manager and, therefore, was void by reason of s 13(3) of the Act. Section 13 provides that an owners corporation may employ persons to assist it in the exercise of its functions. However, s 13(3) states that an "owners corporation may not delegate any of its functions to a person unless the delegation is specifically authorised by this Act".

Held: Judgment for the manager.

1. Section 13 of the Act deals with two different concepts. The first is that of employment, while the second is that of delegation. The concept of delegation reflects the independence of the delegate and the lack of direct control by the delegator. By contrast, the concept of employment means that the employer has direct control over the employee in the way that the employee performs its duties: Gillett v Halwood Corporation Ltd & Ors; unreported, New South Wales Court of Appeal, 26 March 1998.

There is no bright, dividing-line test to determine whether an agreement constitutes an employment or a delegation. The crucial question is whether, by the agreement's provisions, the owners corporation has "given over sufficient decision-making and control in relation to its maintenance and repair functions to amount to delegation of some of those functions": Owners — Strata Plan No 56443 v Regis Towers Real Estate Pty Ltd (2003) 58 NSWLR 78, per Hodgson JA at 92.

3 In bald terms, cl 1 of the agreement's Schedule was framed in a way that suggested that the owners corporation had delegated its statutory duty to the manager. However, the otherwise-wide words of cl 1 were cut down when read in the context of the clauses that followed. That context strongly suggested that the ultimate power of decision-making and control remained with the owners corporation and that such power of decision-making as was given to the manager was specific and limited to implementing that which had been decided or approved by the owners corporation. Therefore, on a construction of the Schedule as a whole, the owners corporation had not conferred on the manager sufficient decision-making and control to amount to a delegation.

[Editorial comment: The Queensland counterpart of s 13(3) of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW) is s 97 (formerly s 89A) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, which states: "A body corporate can not delegate its powers." Presumably, cases in Queensland concerning s 97 will follow the same line of reasoning as in this case to determine whether a body corporate has delegated its powers.]

Full text of judgment below

McDougall J: On 2 March 2000, the plaintiff (the Owners Corporation) and the defendant (Management) entered into an "Agreement for the Provision of Building Management Services, Owners' Services and Letting Services" (the Agreement). By that Agreement, the Owners Corporation appointed Management to perform and provide a number of defined services. The term of the Agreement was 5 years. Management had three options for renewal. The Owners Corporation contends that the Agreement constitutes, or includes, a delegation of some of its functions to Management. It contends further that, Management not being a "strata managing agent" as defined in s 26 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (the SSM Act), the delegation is not authorised by any provision of the SSM Act, and accordingly is void (relying on s 13(3)).

The separate question

2. On 9 February 2007, Bergin J ordered that the following question be determined separately from and before the determination of any other question in the proceedings:

> "Is the Agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant made on 2 March 2000 (as amended) relating to the provision of services by the defendant to the plaintiff in connection with 'Stamford on Kent' being strata plan no. 61643 (the Management Agreement) void and unenforceable by reason of section 13(3) of the Strata Schemes Management Act, 1996?"

3. When that separate question was argued on 8 March 2007, the parties agreed that there had been no amendment to the Agreement. Accordingly, and to avoid any possible confusion, I made an order by consent varying the separate question by deleting "(as amended)" from it.

4. The hearing was to proceed on the basis of a statement of agreed facts, to which were attached copies of the strata plan, the minutes of the Inaugural General Meeting of the Owners Corporation held on 2 March 2000 (at which meeting, among other things, the Owners Corporation resolved to enter into the Agreement) and a copy of the Agreement itself. However, each party decided that its case would be bolstered by the tender of further evidence. It is unnecessary to refer to the detail of that further evidence.

[140497]

The legislative scheme

5. Section 8(1) of the SSM Act provides for the establishment of an owners corporation on registration of a strata plan for a strata scheme. Section 8(2) gives principal responsibility for the management of the scheme to the owners corporation.

6. Upon registration of a strata plan relating to land held in fee simple, the common property comprised in that strata plan vests in the owners corporation that has come into existence on registration of the strata plan. See s 18 of the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1973.

7. Section 9 provides that the owners corporation may be assisted by its executive committee, a strata managing agent or a caretaker.

8. Section 11(1) declares an owners corporation to be a body corporate. Section 12 states that the owners corporation has the functions conferred or imposed on it by or under the Act. In Part 1 of the dictionary to the Act, "function" is defined to include "a power, authority or duty".

9. Section 13 provides that an owners corporation may employ persons to assist it in the exercise of its functions.

10. Section 26 defines a strata managing agent. It was common ground in this case that Management was not a strata managing agent so defined.

11. Section 27 provides for the appointment of strata managing agents: by instrument in writing authorised by a resolution in general meeting.

12. Section 28 sets out the functions that may be delegated to a strata managing agent, and provides for some limitations on such a delegation. Sections 29 to 32 make further provision for the exercise by strata managing agents of functions delegated to them.

13. Sections 9, 13 and 28 are the essential provisions on which the resolution of the separate question turns. Accordingly I set them out:

"9 Who else may be involved in managing a strata scheme?

The owners corporation may be assisted in the carrying out of its management functions under this Act by any one or more of the following:

(a) the executive committee of the owners corporation established in accordance with Part 3,
(b) a strata managing agent appointed in accordance with Part 4,
(c) a caretaker appointed in accordance with Part 4A.

13 Owners corporation may employ persons to assist in exercise of functions

(1) An owners corporation may employ such persons as it thinks fit to assist it in the exercise of any of its functions.
(2) An owners corporation must ensure that any person employed to assist it in the exercise of a function has the qualifications (if any) required by this Act for the exercise of that function.

Note. An owners corporation may employ such persons to assist it as, for example, caretakers and persons providing services to retirement villages. For example, a caretaker is required to be appointed under Part 4A. In addition, the Act requires certain functions to be performed by particular persons or persons having particular expertise. For example, section 24 places restrictions on the persons who can exercise functions relating to the finances and accounts of an owners corporation.
(3) An owners corporation may not delegate any of its functions to a person unless the delegation is specifically authorised by this Act.

28 What functions of an owners corporation can a strata managing agent exercise?

(1) An owners corporation may, by the instrument appointing a strata managing agent or some other instrument, delegate to the strata managing agent:

(a) all of its functions, or
(b) any one or more of its functions specified in the instrument, or
(c) all of its functions except those specified in the instrument, but only if authorised to do so by a resolution at a general meeting and subject to subsection (3).

(2) An owners corporation may, if authorised to do so by a resolution at a general meeting, revoke a delegation under this section.
(3) An owners corporation cannot delegate to a strata managing agent its power to make:

(a) a delegation under this section, or
(b) a decision on a matter that is required to be decided by the owners corporation, or
(c) a determination relating to the levying or payment of contributions.

(4) A function delegated under this section may, while the delegation remains unrevoked, be exercised from time to time in accordance with the delegation.
(5) A delegation under this section may be made subject to such conditions or such limitations as to the exercise of all or any of the functions, or as to time or circumstances, as may be specified in the instrument of delegation.
(6) Despite any delegation made under this section, the owners corporation may continue to exercise all or any of the functions delegated.
(7) Any act or thing done or suffered by a strata managing agent while acting in the exercise of a delegation under this section:

(a) has the same effect as if it had been done or suffered by the owners corporation, and
(b) is taken to have been done or suffered by the owners corporation."

14. The "key areas of management for a strata scheme" are set out in Chapter 3 of the SSM Act. Section 61 defines, by way of "overview", those key management areas, and s 62 sets out the duties of an owners corporation to maintain and repair property. Those sections read as follows:

"61 What are the key management areas for a strata scheme?

(1) An owners corporation has, for the benefit of the owners:

(a) the management and control of the use of the common property of the strata scheme concerned, and
(b) the administration of the strata scheme concerned.

(2) The owners corporation has responsibility for the following:

(a) maintaining and repairing the common property of the strata scheme as provided by Part 2,
(b) managing the finances of the strata scheme as provided by Part 3,
(c) taking out insurance for the strata scheme as provided by Part 4,
(d) keeping accounts and records for the strata scheme as provided by Part 5.

(3) Other functions of an owners corporation are included in Part 6.

62 What are the duties of an owners corporation to maintain and repair property?

(1) An owners corporation must properly maintain and keep in a state of good and serviceable repair the common property and any personal property vested in the owners corporation.
(2) An owners corporation must renew or replace any fixtures or fittings comprised in the common property and any personal property vested in the owners corporation.
(3) This clause does not apply to a particular item of property if the owners corporation determines by special resolution that:

(a) it is inappropriate to maintain, renew, replace or repair the property, and
(b) its decision will not affect the safety of any building, structure or common property in the strata scheme or detract from the appearance of any property in the strata scheme.

[140499]

Note. The decision of an owners corporation under subsection (3) may be reviewed by an Adjudicator (see section 138)."

15. Management relied on Pt 4A of Chapter 2 of the SSM Act. That part deals with "Others Assisting in Management — Caretakers". Part 4A was introduced into the Act by the Strata Schemes Management Amendment Act 2002, which commenced on 10 February 2003. However, cl 12(1) of Schedule 4 to the SSM Act provides as follows:

"12 Effect of certain common property management agreements

(1) Any agreement that was in force immediately before the commencement of Part 4A of Chapter 2 that, if entered into after that commencement, would be a caretaker agreement is taken to be a caretaker agreement appointing a caretaker."

16. For reasons that will become apparent, I conclude that Pt 4A does not assist Management; accordingly, it is unnecessary to set out what were said to be the relevant provisions of that Part.

The Inaugural General Meeting

17. The inaugural general meeting was held on 2 March 2000. In the usual way of such things, it appears to have been controlled by the developer of the strata scheme. The minutes record that, among other things, the following business was transacted:

2. MANAGING AGENT:

(a) RESOLVED that BCS Strata Management Pty Ltd trading as Body Corporate Services be:

(i) appointed as strata managing agent under section 27 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996; and
(ii) delegated all of the functions of the owners corporation, executive committee and office bearers under section 28 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996.

(b) RESOLVED that the common seal be affixed to the agency agreement tabled at this meeting incorporating the instruments of appointment of and delegation to BCS Strata Management Pty Limited t/a Body Corporate Services.

7. SERVICES AGREEMENT

RESOLVED that the Services Agreement between Strata Plan No. 61643 and Stamford on Kent Management Pty Ltd in the form of the agreement tabled and being exhibit "B" to the minutes of this meeting [be?] executed by the owners corporation affixing the common seal to it in accordance with section 238 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996."

18. Management was then known as Stamford on Kent Management Pty Ltd.

The Agreement

19. Recital C to the Agreement noted the agreement of the parties that the Owners Corporation would engage Management (which was called "the Manager" in the Agreement) and Management would accept the engagement, to provide the services set out on the terms contained in the Agreement.

20. Clause 2 constituted the appointment. It provides as follows:

"2. APPOINTMENT OF MANAGER

2.1.1 The Owners Corporation appoints the Manager and the Manager accepts the appointment to carry out the duties and provide the services comprised in the Required Works, the Additional Works, the Owners Services and the Letting Services for a period of five (5) years commencing on the Commencement Date upon the terms and conditions of this Agreement."

21. The "Required Works" to which reference was made in clause 2.1 are the works set out in Schedule 1 to the Agreement. I return to that schedule in para [25] below. It is not necessary to consider the definitions of Additional Works, Owners Services or Letting Services.

22. Clause 3 specified the duties and powers of Management. It included the following:

"3. DUTIES AND POWERS OF MANAGEMENT

3.1 The Manager must by its employees, agents or subcontractors take all reasonable steps to:

[140500]

(a) perform the Required Works; and
(b) perform such other acts and things as are reasonably necessary and proper in the performance of the Required Works.

In doing so the Manager must have regard to the obligation of the Owners Corporation under any Strata Management Statement.

3.4 Nothing in this Agreement requires the Manager to or confers any right on the Manager to:

(a) exercise any of the functions of the Owners Corporation or of the Treasurer of the Owners Corporation relating to the receipt or expenditure of, or the accounting for, money of the Owners Corporation or the keeping of the books of account of the Owners Corporation; or
(b) perform any function, duties or powers which may only be carried out by the holder of a strata managing agent's licence under the Agents Act."

23. Clause 4 specified duties of the Owners Corporation in relation to the Agreement. It includes the following:

"4. DUTIES OF OWNERS CORPORATION

4.1 The Owners Corporation must provide the Manager with copies of all documents necessary to enable the Manager to perform its duties. These include, without limiting the obligations of the Owners Corporation, all documents or plans identifying the location and specifications of any services or amenities installed or erected on or forming part of the Common Property.
4.2 The Owners Corporation must give the Manager all access to the Common Property as the Manager may require to efficiently perform its duties and provide services under this Agreement.
4.3 The Owners Corporation must not, during the term, employ or contract with any other person to perform any function or duty or provide any service comprised in the Required Works, the Additional Works, the Owners Services and the Letting Services that the Manager is entitled to perform or provide under this Agreement. This does not prevent the Owners Corporation from appointing a strata managing agent licensed as a strata managing agent under the Agents Act to carry out functions, duties or services which the Manager cannot legally carry out without such a licence.

4.7 The Owners Corporation must, from time to time, appoint a member of the Council for the Owners Corporation or a strata managing agent as its representative to communicate with, receive request from and liaise with the Manager, on behalf of the Owners Corporation. The Owners Corporation must ensure that that person, or their nominated substitute, is at all times available to give instructions promptly in relation to anything on which the Manager seeks instructions. The Owners Corporation is bound by instructions given by the person so appointed or nominated."

24. Clause 5 made it plain that the "Required Works" were those set out in Schedule 1.

25. Schedule 1 listed some 22 categories of "duties". Although the parties did not refer to all of them, I think that it is desirable to reproduce the schedule in full:

"*1. Supervise and arrange for the maintenance, cleaning and repairs to the Common Property so as to keep the Common Property in good order and repair.
*2. Report promptly with quotations to the Owners Corporation on required repairs, replacement or renewal of things on the Common Property and all matters known to the Manager causing any hazard or danger and to arrange for remedial action where practicable.
3. Have regard to all By-Laws in force from time to time in respect to the Strata Scheme.
*4. Arrange for and supervise a program for the regular cleaning of driveways, foyers, stairs, hallways, doors and windows (other than internal doors and windows of Lots in the Strata Plan), utility rooms, car parking areas, amenities and other areas of the Common Property within, upon and around the building.

[140501]

5. Implement a program reasonably designed to ensure all lighting on the Common Property is operative and efficient and arrange for the maintenance and replacement of lighting when necessary.
*6. Arrange for the maintenance of machinery and plant and equipment located on the Common Property.
7. Regularly inspect the internal and external areas of Common Property (including equipment plant and machinery forming part of the Common Property) and report to the Owners Corporation in respect of the condition of the Common Property including that equipment plant and machinery.
8. Advise the Owners Corporation in the preparation of its annual budget with respect to items involving the repairs and maintenance or renewal and replacement of the Common Property.
*9. Make recommendations to the Owners Corporation for the management, maintenance and care of the building.
10. Implement a program reasonably designed to ensure all drains running from or serving the Common Property are kept clear and functioning efficiently.
11. Implement a program reasonably designed to ensure all fire fighting equipment is operative and efficient and arrange for inspection of same from time to time to ensure it complies with the requirements of the Fire Brigades of New South Wales.
12. When necessary arrange for the treatment and supply of insecticides for the Common Property.
13. Arrange for the supply and erection of such signs and notices on Common Property as may be necessary for the proper and efficient control, management, use and enjoyment of Common Property and in particular carparking signs and notices.
*14. Supervise control and regulation of the parking of motor vehicles on Common Property.
15. Organise and supervise the removal of all garbage, rubbish, refuse and waste from the Common Property.
*16. Arrange for and supervise such licensed security guards and concierges as the Owners Corporation may employ and to act as coordinator of those security guards and concierges.
17. Supervise, control and regulate any employees or contractors of the Owners Corporation (other than any strata managing agent).
18. Advise the Owners Corporation of any correspondence, reports, enquiries and complaints relating to the Common Property and the performance of the Manager's duties.
*19. Comply with and carry out all reasonable and lawful directions by the Owners Corporation to the Manager in relation to its duties under this Agreement.
20. Keep in its possession and control Security Keys and whenever it is necessary to surrender possession or control of Security Keys to any person then the Manager agrees to take all reasonable steps to implement a system to recover possession or control of the Security Keys from the person to whom possession or control was surrendered.
21. Supervise the observance of the Special By-Laws and in doing so the Manager is authorised by the Owners Corporation to require due compliance with the Special By-Laws.
*22. As far as the Manager can reasonably and lawfully do, to keep order on the Common Property and take such precautions as it sees fit to safeguard Common Property against unlawful entry or accident or damage."

26. The asterisk denotes duties that were, or were said to be, substantially the same as duties (under a different but not dissimilar agreement) considered by Hamilton J in Owners — Strata Plan No 51487 v Broadsand Pty Ltd [2002] NSWSC 770 (Broadsand).

The issue

27. The issue between the parties is whether, by the Agreement, the Owners Corporation delegated any of its "functions" to Management. It was common ground that if that question should be answered "yes", the delegation was not (in the language of s 13(3)) one "specifically authorised by" the SSM Act.

[140502]

Approach to the question of interpretation

28. The Owners Corporation relied on the decision of Hamilton J in Broadsand, and on the earlier decision of the Court of Appeal in Gillett v Halwood Corporation Ltd & Ors (26 March 1998, unreported; BC9800883). Management relied on the decision of the Court of Appeal (Hodgson JA, with whom Handley and McColl JJA agreed) in Owners — Strata Plan No 56443 v Regis Towers Real Estate Pty Ltd (2003) 58 NSWLR 78.

29. The agreements considered by the Court of Appeal in Gillett and by Hamilton J in Broadsand were made when the Strata Titles Act 1973 (the ST Act) was in force, and fell to be considered according to the relevant provisions of that Act. Those provisions included, in s 78(1), authorisation for a body corporate in general meeting and by written instrument to appoint a managing agent and to delegate to "him" all or some of the powers, authorities, duties and functions of the body corporate. Sub section (1A) restricted, in a presently immaterial way, that power of delegation. Sub section (1AA) prohibited the appointment of a managing agent unless the appointee were the holder of a strata managing agent's licence issued pursuant to the relevant legislation.

30. Clause 2 of the statutory by-laws set out in schedule 1 to the ST Act authorised the council of a body corporate (the equivalent of what is now the executive committee of an owners corporation) to "employ for or on behalf of the body corporate such agents and servants as it thinks fit in connection with the exercise and performance of the powers, authorities, duties and functions of the body corporate."

31. Thus, in broad outline, the scheme comprised in those provisions of the ST Act resembled the scheme comprised in ss 13 and 28 of the SSM Act.

32. In Gillett, Priestley JA observed at BC 43 that the scheme set out in s 78(1) of the ST Act appeared to involve a two step procedure of, firstly, appointment and, secondly, delegation. However, his Honour doubted whether an appointment without any delegation would have any content; and said that for any appointment to have "definite content" it must include "the delegation to the appointee … of at least one of the body corporate's powers, authorities, duties and functions." It may be noted that ss 27 and 28 of the SSM Act contemplate appointment in writing and delegation, either by that instrument or by some other instrument, of functions.

33. Priestley JA contrasted s 78(1) of the ST Act and cl 2 of the statutory by-laws. His Honour said at BC 45 that the contrast between the concept of appointing a delegate (s 78(1)) and employing agents and servants (cl 2 of the statutory by-laws) "… points clearly to the intended different functions of the two powers; the former is directed to the appointment of an agent in the nature of an independent contractor, over whom the body corporate will not have the power of control that an employer has over an employee; the latter is directed to the creation of an employment relationship, in the course of which the council will have the power of an employer to control directly the way in which its employed agent or servant carries out the employment … . In a s 78(1) case, the managing agent will exercise one or more delegated powers etc of the body corporate, for the body corporate. In a by-law 2 case the body corporate will itself be exercising powers etc by the direct controlled employment of an agent or servant."

34. At BC 46, his Honour noted that "the distinction I have sought to describe is sometimes difficult to apply". He posed the alternative choices as being whether the contract in question involves "an attempted delegation" or whether it puts in place "a relationship subject to the greater control implied by by-law 2". His Honour said that the elucidation of this sometimes difficult distinction was to be achieved by looking at what the delegate or agent "is authorised and required to do under the [agreement of appointment] and the degree of authority it is given".

35. Thus, his Honour concluded, "there can be no managing agency without delegation." That conclusion must be considered in the context of the ST Act which (unlike the SSM Act) did not define a "managing agent"; although it should be noted that Handley JA said (at BC 4 of his Honour's reasons) that the term "managing agent" should have the definition accorded to it in the Auctioneers and Agents Act 1941 (as it then stood).

36. Handley JA agreed with Priestley JA, although his Honour gave additional reasons. His Honour's additional reasons did not, I think, add to what Priestley JA had said on this topic.

37. Powell JA agreed with Priestley JA and with the further observations of Handley JA (and I note that Priestley JA in turn agreed with the further observations of Handley JA).

38. In Broadsand, Hamilton J referred to the relevant passages of the judgment in Gillett. He concluded (see para [29]) that the agreement under consideration by him "constituted an appointment of the company … as managing agent and delegation to it of at least some of … the powers, authorities, duties and functions of the [body corporate]." His Honour said that "the agreement on its proper construction creates a relationship within which the agent is to perform the agreement on its part as a contractor acting independently, perhaps with some small and specific limitations, and not as an employee subject to the degree of supervision and direction inherent in the employment relationship."

39. In para [30], Hamilton J referred to "the mishmash of generality and particularity" in the schedule there under consideration (a description that could be applied to schedule 1 to the Agreement). However, his Honour noted that the first item of the schedule that he was considering imposed "a requirement to manage, supervise and arrange for the maintenance, cleaning and repair of the common property in terms which closely echo those specifying the duties of wide and general ambit imposed on the body corporate by s 68(1)(a) and s 68(1)(b) of the [ST Act]". His Honour considered that the first duty was not to be read down or qualified by reference to subsequent and more particular duties, which of themselves might indicate that the relationship was that "of employee status".

40. The approach taken by Hamilton J was to consider all the terms of the agreement. That is the approach directed, as his Honour observed, by the well known statement of Gibbs J in Australian Broadcasting Commission v Australasian Performing Right Association Limited (1973) 129 CLR 99 at 109, to the effect that, in seeking to ascertain the intention of the parties from the words of their contract, the whole of the contract must be considered and an attempt must be made to render every part "all harmonious one with another."

41. Gibbs J referred to the observation of Lord Wright in Hillas & Co Ltd v Arcos Ltd (1932) 147 LT 503 at 514, that the courts should construe commercial contracts "fairly and broadly, without being too astute or subtle in finding defects". His Honour observed at 110 that this principle "should not … be understood as limited to documents drawn by businessmen for themselves and without legal assistance." Barwick CJ expressed a similar view in The Council of the Upper Hunter County District v Australian Chilling and Freezing Co Limited (1968) 118 CLR 429 at 437: in searching for the parties' intention, "no narrow or pedantic approach is warranted, particularly in the case of commercial arrangements."

42. The agreement considered by the Court of Appeal in Regis Towers was one made after the commencement of the SSM Act. Hodgson JA said at 91 [29] that "what is prohibited by s 13(3) of the Act is the engaging of another person or corporation to undertake significant decision-making and control in relation to the various areas of responsibility of an owners' corporation." At 91 [30] his Honour contrasted the performance of duties with the giving of general authority to make decisions or exercise control. At 92 [35], his Honour stated the "crucial question" as follows:

> "It seems to me that this is the crucial question in this case: namely, has the owners corporation by these provisions given over sufficient decision-making and control in relation to its maintenance and repair functions to amount to delegation of some of those functions?".

The parties' submissions

43. For the Owners Corporation, Mr F C Corsaro SC pointed to the similarities between schedule 1 of the present Agreement and schedule 1 of the agreement considered by

Hamilton J. He submitted that the change in the legislation had not changed the basic test; and that, just as Hamilton J had concluded overall that there was a delegation in Broadsand, so I should conclude overall that there was a delegation in this case.

44. For Management, Mr P R Gray SC pointed to the agreement considered by the Court of Appeal in Regis Towers. He submitted that even powers of the width there considered did not lead to the conclusion that there was a delegation; and that the same conclusion should follow in this case.

45. Mr Corsaro referred to s 62 of the SSM Act: in particular, the obligations of maintenance and repair of common property and personal property. He submitted that cl 1 of schedule 1 to the Agreement was a delegation of the Owners Corporation's duty under s 62(1). This, he submitted, followed in particular from the duty to "arrange for" the specified matters.

46. Mr Gray pointed to the following obligations relating (either exclusively or in part) to maintenance. He referred in particular to cls 2, 8 and 9, submitting that these qualified, or defined the limits of, the duty to supervise and arrange that was the subject of cl 1. He referred also to cl 19, whereby the Owners Corporation retained, so he submitted, the power to direct Management in the performance of all its duties under the Agreement.

47. Further, Mr Gray pointed to the apparently wide terms of the equivalent power considered by the Court of Appeal in Regis Towers, which included (as appears from the reasons of Hodgson JA at 85 [15]) a duty to "[m]aintain and care for the strata scheme and attend to the gardening, cleaning and building maintenance of the building and common property … and … [to] use its best endeavours to maintain the common property of the building in a good state of repair … ".

48. Hodgson JA referred at 92 [30] to the various ways in which the respondent in that case was subject to the control or direction of the appellant. A similar observation can be made in this case. Although Management is given the duty of supervising and arranging for maintenance etc, cls 2 and 9 indicate the continuing involvement of the Owners Corporation in the direction of that process; and cl 19, as I have said, confirms that the Owners Corporation has not given away control over the process.

49. Mr Gray relied further on cl 3.4(b). He accepted that it was for the Court, and not the parties, to characterise the transaction. This is correct; see for example the decision of the High Court of Australia in Radaich v Smith and Another (1959) 101 CLR 209. However, he submitted that cl 3.4(b) remained relevant in at least two ways:

> (a) it was an objective indication of the parties' intention not to effect an appointment that would be prohibited by s 13(3); and
> (b) alternatively, and more widely, it was a test to be applied to schedule 1, on the basis that it would effectively sever from the schedule anything that would otherwise be an impermissible delegation of the Owners Corporation's functions.

50. Finally, Mr Gray relied on the terms of resolutions (2) and (7) of the inaugural general meeting. He noted that the second resolution was in terms an appointment of a strata managing agent and a delegation to that appointee of all (permissibly delegable) functions of the Owners Corporation. He submitted that the Owners Corporation could not have intended, in the very same meeting and five items of business later, to carve out from that delegation a separate delegation in favour of Management.

51. Mr Corsaro accepted that such an intention was unlikely; but submitted that the question of characterisation was to be determined by reference not to the events of the inaugural general meeting but to the language of the Agreement.

Decision

52. Section 13 of the SSM Act deals with two different concepts. The first is that of employment. The second is that of delegation. Neither term is defined in the dictionary to the Act.

53. The Oxford Australian Dictionary (2nd Edition, 2004) gives the primary meanings of the verb "delegate" as "commit (authority, power etc.) to an agent or deputy … entrust (a task) to another person". The same dictionary gives the primary meanings of the verb "employ" as "use the services of (a person) in return for payment; keep (a person) in one's employment".

54. The distinction between the two concepts that is evident from those definitions is evident also in the analysis of Priestley JA in Gillett. At BC 45–46, his Honour spoke of the distinction between s 78(1) of the STA Act and statutory by-law 2. As I have foreshadowed in para [31] above, the basic scheme of s 78(1) of the STA Act is now to be found in s 28(1) of the SSM Act, and the basic scheme of statutory by-law 2 is now to be found in s 13(1) of the SSM Act. Priestley JA observed that the concept of delegation reflected the independence of the delegate, and the lack of direct control by the delegator. By contrast, his Honour said, the concept of employment meant that the employer had the power of direct control over the employee in the way that the employee performed its duties.

55. However, the decision in Regis Towers makes it clear that there is no bright line dividing test. As I have noted in para [42] above, Hodgson JA framed the test at 92 [35] as enquiring whether the owners corporation had "given over sufficient decision-making and control … to amount to delegation … ?". It seems to follow from his Honour's statement of the test that there may be some handing over of decision-making and control without there being a delegation. The question in any given case is what is "sufficient" to amount to delegation.

56. In bald terms, the first of the Schedule 1 duties in the present Agreement is framed in a way that suggests that the Owners Corporation has delegated its statutory duty under s 62 of the SSM Act to Management.

57. I think it is correct to say, as Mr Corsaro submitted, that in principle the obligation to "arrange for" something may carry with it the power to enter into contracts to cause that thing to be done. Thus, the duties of supervision and arrangement, or arrangement (see among others cls 1, 4, 6, 12 and 16 of the schedule to the Agreement) appear to give Management the power to enter into contracts, which would be binding on the Owners Corporation, for the performance of the various obligations comprehended in those clauses. But those powers cannot be considered in isolation from their context. The context includes the specific obligations imposed by the particular requirements of cls 2, 8 and 9 relating to repair and maintenance and the general provisions of cl 19.

58. It should also be noted that cl 16 suggests that the duty to "arrange for" something does not always or necessarily confer an independent power to enter into contracts in relation to the relevant subject matter. Management is empowered to "arrange for and supervise" licensed security guards and concierges. But the clause itself makes it plain that it is the Owners Corporation that "employs" those guards and concierges. The power of arrangement and supervision would appear to be limited to day-to-day administration of those whom the Owners Corporation has decided to "employ", and not to extend to the decision as to who is to be employed.

59. Clauses 2, 8 and 9 suggest that the duties relating to maintenance and repair of the common property are to be carried out within the overall context of control by the Owners Corporation. Clause 9 indicates that there is to be an overall plan or scheme for management, maintenance and care. That is to be a scheme authorised by the Owners Corporation after considering recommendations from the manager. Clause 8 reinforces this. There is to be an annual budget for repair, maintenance, renewal or replacement. Again, this budget is to be decided by the Owners Corporation after considering recommendations from Management.

60. Thus, to the extent that cl 1 gives some general power to supervise and arrange, it is, at least in respect of planned or repetitive maintenance, cleaning and repair, a power to be exercised within the framework of the maintenance plan and budget set by the Owners Corporation.

61. Clearly, not all maintenance and repair will fall within the plan or the budget that has been approved by the Owners Corporation. But there is, nonetheless, an obligation to report with quotations where repairs, replacement or renewal are required (cl 2). It is implicit in cl 2 that any works the subject of reports and quotations are not to be carried out except with the approval of the Owners Corporation.

62. Thus, I think, the otherwise wide words of cl 1 of the schedule are to an extent cut down when they are read in context. That context suggests strongly that the ultimate power of decision-making and control remains with the Owners Corporation; and that such power of decision-making as is given to Management is specific, and limited to implementing that which has been decided or approved by the Owners Corporation.

63. This reading is reinforced by cl 19, which empowers the Owners Corporation to give reasonable and lawful directions to Management in relation to Management's duties under the Agreement. That clause is not consistent with the concept of independence to which Priestley JA referred to in Gillett; on the contrary, it is consistent with the concept of supervision or control to which his Honour also referred.

64. Clause 21 deals with enforcement of "Special By-Laws". That does not appear to be a defined term in the Agreement, notwithstanding the capitalisation of the initial letters. It is not clear whether the expression "Special By-Laws" refers to the by-laws adopted by or lodged with the strata plan on registration or subsequently amended (see ss 41 and 47 of the SSM Act), or to some more limited class of by-laws (for example, by-laws under Division 4 of Part 5 of Chapter 2 of the SSM Act conferring rights or privileges on the owners of specified lots).

65. One of the duties of the "caretaker" in Regis Towers was to "[s]upervise the observance of the by-laws", which included the duty to "serve notices on occupants in relation to breaches of by-laws". Hodgson JA said at 92 [33] that he would not construe that paragraph as authorising the caretaker to serve a notice unless the requirements of s 45, which required the owners corporation to be satisfied that there had been a contravention, had been complied with. In my view, the same approach to construction should be taken to cl 21 in this case. It should be noted that cl 21 is, as much as is any other clause in the schedule, subject to cl 19.

66. Thus, on a construction of the schedule as a whole, I do not think that the Owners Corporation has conferred on Management sufficient decision-making and control to amount to a delegation.

67. As I have noted above, Mr Corsaro based his submissions very heavily on the decision of Hamilton J in Broadsand. Whilst I do not wish to be understood to suggest that his Honour's decision was incorrect, it cannot compel the conclusion that a similar (or even identical) agreement between other parties is, likewise, void. In any event, I think, the focus of the analysis has changed somewhat, by reason of the decision in Regis Towers. Thus, without wishing to be thought to be disrespectful either to his Honour's decision or to the submissions based on it, I do not think that there is anything to be gained by the close comparison of the two agreements that Mr Corsaro undertook in his submissions. As I have sought to indicate, the question is one to be answered, in accordance with the test posed in Regis Towers, by an analysis of the particular agreement.

68. My conclusion renders it unnecessary to deal with the submissions founded on cl 3.4(b) of the Agreement and on the events of the inaugural general meeting. Nonetheless, those matters tend to confirm the conclusion. Each is inconsistent with the proposition that the parties intended the Agreement to amount to a delegation of the Owners Corporation's functions in relation to common property. In addition, I think, it is at least arguable that cl 3.4(b) should be construed so as in effect to excise from the Agreement any "duty" in schedule 1 that, on its proper construction, did involve a delegation.

"Caretaker agreement"

69. As I have noted, Mr Gray submitted that the Agreement was a "caretaker agreement" within Part 4A of Chapter 2 of the SSM Act. However, it was an agreement made before the commencement of Part 4A. Accordingly, as cl 12 of Schedule 4 makes plain, it would only be taken to be a caretaker agreement on the commencement of Part 4A if it were "in force immediately before the commencement of Part 4A".

70.

It is not necessary to decide this point. If however it were, I would conclude that it should be answered in accordance with what Hodgson JA said in Regis Towers at 91 [25]. If on its proper construction the Agreement did amount to an impermissible delegation, it would have been void, and therefore would not have been an agreement "in force" on the commencement of Part 4A.

71. Mr Gray submitted that this reasoning was obiter, and that it was incorrect. I agree that it is obiter, since the Court decided that the agreement under consideration did not give rise to any prohibited delegation. Nonetheless, I do not think that it would be open to me to decline to follow a considered (and unanimous) statement of the Court of Appeal on the precise point in issue.

72. Mr Gray submitted further that the Owners Corporation, in proceedings against Management in the Consumer Traders and Tenancy Tribunal, had alleged by its points of claim that the Agreement was a “caretaker agreement”. Perhaps not surprisingly, his client had admitted this allegation in its points of defence. There has been no determination of the Tribunal on that point.

73. I do not think that an assertion or admission in a “pleading” in one set of proceedings should be taken to be an admission for the purposes of separate proceedings. In any event, it is unnecessary to decide this point.

Conclusion

74. The separate question (amended as indicated in para [2] above) should be answered “no”.

75. I will hear the parties on the questions of further relief and costs.

Court citation: [2007] NSWSC 527

Supreme Court of New South Wales

30 May 2007

Community schemes — Management — Management agreements — Community association, under control of developer, enters into site management agreement during "initial period" — Site manager pays premium to developer for agreement — Terms of agreement excessively favourable to site manager — No moneys in administration or sinking fund when agreement made, but developer pays association's debts during initial period — Terms of agreement disclosed in community management statement, but payment of premium not disclosed — Site manager assigns agreement to assignee — Whether developer in breach of fiduciary duty to association by profiting from agreement to association's detriment without proper disclosure — Whether developer liable to association for equitable damages or to account for profits — Whether developer liable to association for causing association to incur debt during initial period without sufficient moneys in administration or sinking fund — Whether agreement terminated at end of first annual general meeting — Whether effect of agreement adequately disclosed in community management statement or ratified at annual general meeting — Whether association liable to site manager and, later, assignee under agreement — Whether assignment of agreement effective — Whether association estopped by convention from denying effectiveness of agreement and assignment — Community Land Management Act 1989 (NSW), s 23, 24.

Community Association DP No 270180 (the association) was the community association for a community titles complex in Sydney. In December 1998, during the "initial period" in which all the lots in the complex were still owned by the developer (Australand Consolidated Investments Pty Ltd), the association (under the developer's control) entered into a site management agreement (the agreement) in relation to the complex with Arrow Asset Management Pty Ltd (the site manager). The terms of the agreement were more favourable to the site manager — and therefore less favourable to the association — than those the association could have obtained on the open market in an arm's length transaction. The site manager paid the developer a premium of $190,000 for the agreement.

The association's intention to enter into the agreement with the site manager during the initial period, together with the basic terms of the agreement, were disclosed in the community management statement for the complex. However, the site manager's payment of a premium to the developer was not disclosed in the statement.

When the agreement was entered into, there were no moneys in the association's administrative or sinking funds. However, the developer undertook to pay all the association's outgoings until the association itself was able to meet its outgoings from the funds. The developer honoured that undertaking, which included paying the site manager the first instalment under the agreement.

Almost eight months after the date of the agreement, the association held its first annual general meeting (the AGM). At the AGM, the association resolved that contributions to the administrative and sinking funds be determined in accordance with specified figures set out in a draft budget. One of those figures in the budget was for "On Site Management".

Approximately 11 months after the AGM, the site manager assigned its rights and obligations under the agreement to Bondlake Pty Ltd (the assignee). The association was a party to the assignment, giving its consent to the assignment and releasing the site manager from all further obligations under the agreement.

The association commenced proceedings in the Supreme Court of New South Wales against the developer, the site manager and the assignee. Among other things, the association argued:

> 1. against the developer, that: (a) the developer owed the association a fiduciary duty when it entered into the agreement with the site manager; (b) the developer breached that duty in that it profited from the agreement to the detriment of the association without proper disclosure; (c) therefore, the developer was liable to the association for equitable damages or to account for the premium it received from the site manager; (d) the association, under the control of the developer, breached s 23 of the Community Land Management Act 1989 (NSW) (the Act) by incurring a debt during the initial period which exceeded the amount then available for repayment of the debt from the administration or sinking fund; and (e) therefore, the developer was liable to the association under s 23(5) either for the debt or for damages resulting from the breach
> 2. against the site manager and the assignee, that: (a) the agreement ended at the conclusion of the AGM pursuant to s 24(2) of the Act. Section 24(2) provides that any service agreement entered into by an association during the initial period terminates at the end of the first annual general meeting unless the effect of the agreement is disclosed in the association's management statement or is ratified at the meeting; (b) therefore, the association was not liable to the site manager under the agreement; (c) therefore, the assignment of the agreement from the site manager to the assignee was ineffective; and (d) therefore, the assignee had no right to provide site management services to the association and the association had no obligations to the assignee.

Held: Proceedings against developer upheld; proceedings against site manager and assignee dismissed.

Proceedings against the developer

Breach of fiduciary duty

1. It is appropriate to regard the developer of a community scheme as being, vis-à-vis the community association, in a position analogous to that of a promoter of a company. It follows that the relationship between the developer and the community association is a fiduciary relationship.

2. Because the consideration for the association's entry into the agreement (that is, the premium) was paid to the developer and not to the association, the developer had an interest in ensuring that the terms of the agreement were sufficiently generous to the site manager to justify the consideration. However, the developer had a conflicting duty to the association to make the agreement on the best terms commercially available to the association. The developer thereby breached its fiduciary duty to the association.

3. The developer's breach of duty was not negated by the making of adequate disclosure in the community management statement. None of the disclosures about the agreement in the statement alerted any prospective members of the association that the site manager had paid $190,000 for the rights given to it by the agreement. The disclosure of such information was material because, viewed objectively, it bore on a prospective purchaser's ability to make a proper assessment of the terms of the agreement.

4. The association was not entitled to equitable compensation for the developer's breach of duty because the evidence as to the difference between the amount payable under the agreement and an amount payable under an arm's length agreement was deficient and did not permit the necessary quantification. Therefore, the appropriate remedy was an account of profits. The developer was required to account to the association for the $190,000 profit it received for causing the association to enter into the agreement.

Incurring of debt during initial period

5. When the association entered into the agreement, it incurred a debt for the first month's instalment payable to the site manager for the performance of its duties. In breach of s 23 of the Act, this debt exceeded the amount then available for the repayment of the debt from the association's administrative or sinking fund.

6. There was no evidence that the association incurred any liability because of the breach of s 23. Pursuant to its undertaking, the developer paid the debts incurred by the association while there was no money in the funds. As to the association's future liabilities under the agreement, the Act does not require the administrative or sinking funds to cover more than the debts due and payable during the initial period. Therefore, the association was not entitled to relief under s 23(5) of the Act.

Proceedings against the site manager and assignee

Termination of agreement at AGM

7. The effect of the agreement was not disclosed by the community management statement for the purposes of s 24(2) of the Act. Furthermore, there was no express or implied ratification of the agreement at the AGM. Even if implied ratification was sufficient for the purposes of s 24(2) (which was doubtful), the mere mention of "On Site Management" in the draft budget went nowhere near providing any information about an agreement, let alone an agreement for which ratification was required. Accordingly, by force of statute, the agreement terminated at the end of the AGM.

Effectiveness of assignment

8. The Act had the effect of terminating the agreement at the end of the AGM, thereby suggesting that there was nothing left for the site manager to assign to the assignee. However, the conventional basis of the dealings between the association and the site manager between the date of the AGM and the date of the assignment was that the agreement was in force, valid and effective. Furthermore, the conventional basis of the assignment transaction was that the management agreement as between the association and the assignee was in force, valid and effective on and from the date of the assignment. Also, the site manager and the assignee would both suffer detriment if the association was permitted to depart from such conventions. Therefore, the association was estopped by convention from denying the effectiveness of the site agreement and the assignment.

9. There is nothing in the policy underlying s 24 of the Act that suggests that an agreement terminated by the section should be stigmatised as illegal, void or otherwise offensive to public policy so as to bring into play the principles relating to estoppel in the face of a statute. If it would be open to parties to renew a management agreement on identical terms to that which was terminated by the section, it must be open to them to achieve the same result through a conventional assumption adopted as the basis of their dealings thereafter.

[Editorial comment: The relevance of this case for Queensland is discussed in detail by Gary Bugden in an article entitled "Implications of the Arrow Asset Management decision". The article is reproduced with Mr Bugden's permission in the commentary at ¶38-250.]

Full text of judgment below

McDougall J: "Balmain Cove" is a large residential development on the southern shores of Iron Cove, adjacent to the Iron Cove Bridge. It was developed by the third defendant (Australand – known at the relevant time as Walker Consolidated Investments Pty Ltd) in stages pursuant to the Community Land Development Act 1989 (the CLD Act). The plaintiff (the Association) is the community association for Balmain Cove.

2. The Association entered into a Site Management Agreement (the management agreement) with the first defendant (Arrow) on 2 December 1998. On about 30 June 2000, the Association, Arrow and the second defendant (Bondlake) entered into a "Deed of Assignment of Agreement" (the deed of assignment) whereby Arrow, with the consent of the Association, purported to assign to Bondlake all Arrow's rights and obligations under the management agreement.

3. The Association now contends that the management agreement came to an end on 28 July 1999 — the date of its first annual general meeting — and that the deed of assignment was therefore ineffective. Arrow and Bondlake dispute both contentions and say in addition that the Association is estopped from raising them.

4. Further, the Association says that Australand, as the developer of Balmain Cove, owed the Association fiduciary and common law duties, and breached them when, in consideration of payment from Arrow to itself, it caused the Association to enter into the management agreement.

The issues

5. The parties agreed that the real issues for decision were as follows:

> "1. Whether the third defendant ("Australand"), when it caused the plaintiff (the "Association") to enter into the Site Management Agreement (the "SMA") with the first defendant ("Arrow") on 2 December 1998, owed the Association a fiduciary duty to:
>
> (a) Act with absolute candour and honesty to the Association;
> (b) Not to place self [sic] in a position of conflict or to profit from contracts entered into between the Association and Arrow, without proper disclosure;
> (c) Act in the best interest of the Association in the exercise of a power or discretion affecting the Association's interests;
> (d) Not to act to the detriment of the Association; and
>
> [140511]
>
> (e) To disclose relevant matters to the Association to enable it to make an informed and impartial decision about whether to enter into the SMA.
>
> 2. Whether Australand as at 2 December 1998 owed the Association a duty of care to avoid it suffering economic loss.
> 3. If the answer to questions 1 and/or 2 is yes, did Australand's conduct in causing the Association to enter into the SMA with Arrow breach its fiduciary duty and/or its common law duty?
> 4. If the answer to question 3 is yes, in so far as breach of fiduciary duty is concerned, is the Association entitled to equitable compensation from Australand being the difference between the amount payable under the SMA and an amount payable under an agreement entered into at arm's length as at 2 December 1998?

5. If the answer to question 3 is yes, in so far as breach of fiduciary duty is concerned, is Australand also liable to account to the Association for the profit of $190,000 it made by causing the Association to enter into the SMA?
6. If the answer to question 3 is yes, in so far as breach of common law duty is concerned, is Australand liable in damages to the Association for economic loss, the measure being the difference between the amounts paid by the Association under the SMA and the amounts that would have been paid on an arm's length transaction entered into as at 2 December 1988 [sic: obviously, 1998]?
6A. If:

> (a) the Site Management Agreement terminated; and
> (b) the first and second defendants establish that the plaintiff is not entitled to rely on that fact;

then the question is whether the loss suffered by the plaintiff is caused by the actions of the third defendant or its own actions.
7. (a) Was the effect of the SMA disclosed in the Association's Community Management Statement registered on 27 November 1998 within the meaning of s 24(2)(a) of the Community Land Management Act, 1989 (the "CLMA")? and
(b) Was the SMA ratified at the first Annual General meeting of the plaintiff?
8. If the answer to question 7(a) and (b) is no, then did the SMA terminate at the end of the Association's first annual general meeting on 28 July 1999?
9. If the answer to question 8 is no, then why not?
10. By entering into the SMA, did the Association incur a debt during the "initial period" for an amount in excess of the amount then available for repayment of the debt from the administrative fund or the sinking fund of the Association?
11. If the answer to question 10 is yes, is Australand liable to the Association pursuant to s 23(5)(a) or (b) of the CLMA?
12. Was the assignment of the SMA from Arrow to Bondlake on 30 June 2000 ineffective?
13. If the SMA terminated on 28 July 1999, can the conduct of the Association pleaded in paragraphs 18 and 19 of Arrow's Response and paragraphs 18 to 20 of the second defendant's ("Bondlake") Response give rise to the alleged estoppels?
14. If the answer to question 13 is no, were the payments made by the Association to Arrow and Bondlake made under a mistake of law requiring Arrow and Bondlake to make restitution to the extent of the payments exceeding the true benefit received by the Association?
15. If the answer to question 13 is yes, do the estoppels cease to have any operation from the time when Arrow and Bondlake were on notice that the Association believed the SMA had been terminated?
16. If the SMA terminated on 28 July 1999, what is the value of the true benefit of the services received by the Association from 2 December 1998 to date?
17. In relation to 7(b) above, does the term "ratification" in s 24 include implied ratification?
18. If yes to question 17, does the conduct of the plaintiff amount to ratification in accordance with s 24?

[140512]

19. Did the conduct of the plaintiff and the first defendant prior to and after 28 July 1999, create an estoppel (promissory or conventional) which either (a) precludes the plaintiff from now asserting that the SMA was not unenforceable at all times prior to the execution of the deed of assignment on or about 20 June 2000, or (b) precludes the plaintiff from now asserting that the SMA was not unenforceable at all times after 31 August 1999?
20. If yes to question 19(a) or (b), will the first defendant suffer detriment if the plaintiff is permitted to depart from that conduct?
21. Was an agreement made on 30 June 2000 between the plaintiff and the second defendant that in consideration of the plaintiff paying to the second defendant the regular duties fee, the second defendant would perform the obligations under the SMA as if it was named "site manager" in the SMA?

22. Was there a separate and new agreement created by the novation of the SMA by 30 June 2000?
23. Was there a separate and enforceable agreement between the plaintiff and the second defendant made on or about 30 June 2000 by deed that the second defendant would perform the obligations under the SMA as if it was named the "site manager" in the SMA?
24. Did the following:

> (a) The assignment of the SMA from the first defendant to the second defendant effective 30 June 2000;
> (b) The plaintiff's consent to that assignment; and
> (c) The continued operation of the SMA subsequent to the assignment, create an assumption that the SMA was valid and enforceable and capable of assignment?

25. If yes to question 24, has the second defendant relied upon the assumption to its detriment?
26. If yes to question 24, is it unjust to allow the plaintiff to depart from the assumption?
27. Did the second defendant and the plaintiff in executing the deed of assignment on or about 30 June 2000 conduct themselves on the common assumption that the deed of assignment created a new agreement between the plaintiff and the second defendant such that an estoppel (promissory or conventional) now prevents the plaintiff from denying that assumption?
28. Has the plaintiff established that the true value of the services provided under the SMA was other than the regular duty fee paid by the plaintiff from time to time?
29. Has the plaintiff contravened the Trade Practices Act 1974 (Cwth) ("TPA") by conduct comprising representations to the first and/or second defendants that the SMA is binding and enforceable; or
30. If the answer to question 29 is yes:

> (a) Is the first defendant entitled to relief under sections 80, 82 or 87 of the TPA? and
> (b) Is the second defendant entitled to relief under s 80, s 82 or s 87 of the TPA? or
> (c) In respect of the second defendant, that it was additionally bound to perform the duties and obligations of the SMA under a fresh agreement as if it was named as the site manager in the SMA and was entitled to receive the remuneration thereunder.

31. If the answer to either 30(a) or 30(b) is yes, [to] what relief is either the first defendant or second defendant entitled?
32. In the event that an injunction in favour of either the first or second defendant is declined in the exercise of the Court's discretion, although the basis of an injunction is made out, is either the first or second defendant entitled to equitable damages?"

The legislative scheme

6. The CLD Act provides for the staged development of land into parcels for separate development or disposition, with those parcels retaining an interest in common facilities or property. The parcels created may be developed both horizontally, through further subdivision in the traditional way, and vertically, in accordance with the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1973.

7. When a community plan is registered, there is constituted a corporation with the corporate name "Community Association D.P. No … ", with the number being that of the deposited plan (see s 25(1) of the CLD Act). A community association thus incorporated has the functions given to it by the Community Land Management Act 1989 (the CLM Act).

8. Because land subdivided by a community plan may be further divided, both horizontally and vertically, there may be a number of other associations that have management functions with respect to different parts of the overall parcel — precinct associations, neighbourhood associations and owners' corporations.

9. Section 5(1) of the CLM Act provides that a community association constituted pursuant to s 25(1) of the CLD Act "is a community association for the purposes of this or any other Act". Subsection (4) declares a community association "to be an excluded matter for the purposes of s 5F of the Corporations Act 2001 … in relation to the whole of the Corporations legislation."

10. By s 5(2) of the CLM Act, the members of a community association are the proprietors of each community development lot that has not been further subdivided, and any precinct or neighbourhood association or owners' corporation in respect of lots that have been further subdivided.

11. By s 5(4) of the CLD Act, there is to be registered with any community plan a "community management statement". By s 13(1) of the CLM Act, such a community management statement binds the community association, each subsidiary body within the community scheme (ie, the precinct or neighbourhood associations or owners' corporations) and all proprietors, lessees, occupiers etc of development lots, neighbourhood lots or strata lots within the community scheme.

12. The CLM Act seeks to limit the activities of associations during their "initial period". That expression is defined in s 3 of the CLM Act. It is unnecessary to set it out because one of the few things on which the parties to these proceedings are agreed is that the management agreement was made during the initial period for the community scheme of which the Association is the community association. In essence, the initial period expires when the developer of the scheme loses control of at least one third of the unit entitlements in the scheme — ie, after the developer becomes unable to muster the votes for a special resolution.

13. Section 23 restricts the powers of an association during its initial period. Subsection (1) restricts among other things its power of borrowing, and subs (5) gives a right of recovery against the developer in the event of breach:

"23 Restriction on powers during initial period

(1) During the initial period for its related scheme, an association may not, unless an order made under subsection (4) otherwise provides:

(a) incur a debt of an amount in excess of the amount then available for repayment of the debt from the administrative fund or sinking fund, or
(b) borrow money or give security for the repayment of money, or
(c) make, amend or repeal a by-law creating restricted property.

(5) An association may recover from the original proprietor under the relevant scheme:

(a) as a debt — any liability incurred by the association because of a breach of subsection (1), (2) or (3), or
(b) as damages — any loss suffered by the association as a result of such a breach."

14. Section 24 of the CLM Act restricts the kinds of management agreements that an association may make during its initial period. In essence, any such agreement made during the initial period terminates at the end of the first annual general meeting unless its effect was disclosed in the management statement, or unless it is ratified at the meeting:

"24 Termination of certain agreements

(1) This section applies to an agreement with a person (other than a public authority) for the continuing provision to an association, or to the members of an association, of services or recreational facilities.

[140514]

(2) If, during the initial period for a scheme, an association enters into an agreement to which this section applies, the agreement terminates at the end of the first annual general meeting of the association unless:

(a) its effect was disclosed in the association's management statement before the transfer of any lots in the scheme, or
(b) it is ratified at the meeting.

(3) An association is guilty of an offence if:

(a) during the initial period, it enters into an agreement to which this section applies, and
(b) the agreement would terminate at the end of the first annual general meeting of the association unless ratified at the meeting, and
(c) the association did not, before entering into the agreement, inform the other party, or each of the other parties, to the agreement that it would so terminate.

Maximum penalty: 5 penalty units.

(4) In this section:

services does not include the services of a managing agent."

15. Section 50 of the CLM Act empowers associations to appoint managing agents and delegates functions to managing agents by appointment, or by instrument in writing authorised at a general meeting of the association.

Disclosure in relation to the management agreement

16. Clause 42 of the community management statement for Balmain Cove noted that the Association had power to enter into agreements including for "management, operation, maintenance and other services for Community Property and subsidiary property … services or amenities to owners and occupiers … and … services or amenities to Community Property and Subsidiary Property."

17. Clause 43 sought to make disclosure in relation to the management agreement. Clause 43.1 noted that the Association intended to make the agreement. Clause 43.4 noted the term of the agreement, and cl 43.5 dealt with the remuneration payable under it. Clause 43.6 set out the duties of the site manager and cl 43.8 dealt with other rights. I set out the relevant provisions of cl 43:

"43 Agreement with the Site Manager

Initial period disclosure

43.1 The Community Association intends to enter into an agreement with the Site Manager during the initial period. The effect of the agreement is disclosed in this by-law for the purposes of section 24 of the Act.

Terms of the agreement

43.4 The term of the agreement may be up to ten years with two options of up to five years each. The agreement may have provisions about:

(a) the rights of the Community Association and Site Manager to terminate the agreement early; and
(b) the Site Manager's rights to assign the agreement.

43.5 The Site Manager's remuneration for the first year of the agreement will not exceed $200,000. The Site Manager's remuneration for subsequent years of the agreement may be increased by 5% or by the Consumer Price Index (All Groups) for Sydney (whichever is higher).

Site Manager's duties

43.6 The Site Manager's duties may include:

(a) caretaking, supervising and servicing Community Property, Restricted Subsidiary Property and other Subsidiary Property for which the Community Association is responsible;

(b) supervising the security, cleaning, repair, maintenance, renewal or replacement of Community Property, Restricted Subsidiary Property and other Subsidiary Property for which the Community Association is responsible;

[140515]

(c) providing services to the Community Association, Subsidiary Bodies, owners and occupiers including, without limitation, the services of a handyperson, room cleaning and servicing, food and non-alcoholic drink service;
(d) providing a letting, property management and sales service for owners and occupiers (at the cost of owners or occupiers);
(e) supervising, controlling and regulating employees and contractors of the Community Association as required by the Community Association;
(f) supervising Balmain Cove generally; and
(g) doing anything else that the Community Association agrees is necessary for the operation and management of Balmain Cove.

43.7 The Site Manager must comply with the Community Association's reasonable instructions about performing its dues [sic: obviously, duties] under the agreement.

Letting and tenancy management service

43.8 The Site Manager may have the sole right to enter into an agreement with the Community Association to conduct a letting service and a tenancy management service and to provide ancillary services.

43.9 Despite by-law 43.8, the agreement must contain an acknowledgment by the Site Manager that owners and occupiers:

(a) are not bound to use the letting services, property management services and ancillary services provided by the Site Manager, and
(b) may use the person of their choice to provide those services.

The inaugural Special General Meeting

18. The community plan for Balmain Cove was registered on 27 November 1998. On 2 December 1998, when Australand owned all the lots in the community scheme (I interpose that there was no evidence to suggest that any contract for sale for any lot, or interest in a lot, had been made as at 2 December 1998), what was called the inaugural special general meeting (SGM) of Australand was held. That meeting was attended by Mr Matthew Crews of Australand (or its parent company), representing the only member of the community scheme at that time, and Ms Cathy Laws of Mallesons Stephen Jaques (Mallesons), who were Australand's solicitors.

19. The business transacted at the inaugural SGM included the following:

(1) The appointment of Dynamic Property Services (DPS) as the Association's strata managing agent, and the delegation of functions to DPS;
(2) Noting an undertaking given by Australand to pay the Association's outgoings from the date of registration of the community plan until one month after Australand notified the Association that the undertaking would terminate;
(3) Resolving, in light of that undertaking, to determine contributions to the administrative and sinking funds at "$Nil";
(4) Resolving that the executive committee of the Association (see s 27 of the CLM Act) be constituted by the appointment of Mr Crews as the nominee of all relevant parties; and
(5) Resolving that the Association enter into the management agreement with Arrow.

20. The management agreement appears to have been made on the same day — 2 December 1998.

The Management Agreement

Negotiations for the agreement

21. Arrow was formerly known as Astor Apartment Management Pty Limited, part of the Astor Management Group. That group was controlled by Mr Ken Gresham (who was at the relevant time the CEO of the group) and Messrs Andrew and Luke Veron. The Astor Management Group provided consulting and management services to residential apartment buildings. Some of the buildings managed by it were occupied by proprietors or lessees, and others were operated as hotels.

22. On 17 April 1997, Mr Gresham of the Astor Management Group wrote to Mr David Edelstein of Walker Corporation Limited (Walker Corporation, the holding company of, among others, the third defendant) concerning "Management Rights — Balmain Cove". That letter provided (omitting formal parts) as follows:

"I write to confirm our terms as follows:

1. We will purchase a retail space (shop) for our on-site management office at nett value exchanging on 2.5% deposit.
2. We will require either exclusive or contractual rights of use of some common and community areas.
3. We will require Walker Corporation to put in place of [sic] a ten year management agreement.
4. Appropriate By-Laws and rules will need to be put in place so that we may carry out our duties unimpeded.
5. We will consult with you in the design of common areas, security systems, handover book, budgeting and any other appropriate issues.
6. The PABX will be leased by the Community resulting in no cost internal calls eg. to the building manager and low cost calls locally and internationally. The cabling costs are inclusive of the lease and co-ordinated with the builder as they would with Telstra.
7. The management service facility and it's [sic] supporting By-Laws are put in place at the inaugural meeting. Systems remain the property of the Community under control of the manager.
8. Our fee to the Community will be $580.00 per lot plus approved other expenses rising annually by the CPI or 5% (whichever is greater).
9. We will pay Walker Corporation the sum of $140,000 for the management rights for Balmain Cove upon registration [of] the appropriate by law and signing of the Management Agreement.

The detail of services and rights under the agreement need to be finalised, however, we feel sure that the decision to contract with the Astor Group will be one which enhances this excellent project.

Please confirm your acceptance of our offer."

23. On 27 May 1997, Mr Gresham wrote again to Mr Edelstein, as follows (again omitting formal parts):

"We have reconsidered our offer in our letter of 17th April 1997 to increase the consideration payable in Item 9 to $190,000.

… ".

24. On 11 August 1997, Mr Haig Conolly of the Astor Management Group, wrote to Mr Mark Randall of Walker Corporation, introducing to Mr Randall "the full range of Astor Management Group Services".

25. There is no direct evidence of any express acceptance of the revised offer, nor any evidence of any written agreement between Walker Corporation and Arrow. The absence of that evidence was explained by Mr Michael Newsom, the General Counsel and Joint Company Secretary of the holding company of Australand (affidavit sworn 10 April 2007, paras 5 to 7):

"…

5. Documentary investigations conducted by the third defendant during the discovery phase of the proceedings indicated that the records and files Australand had received from Walker in relation to the Balmain Cove project were incomplete.

6. In addition, my inquiries revealed that Australand no longer employed any personnel who had been closely involved in the events relating to the site management rights in 1998 and 1999.
7. As a result, the third defendant does not have a complete evidentiary record of the events forming the basis of the plaintiff's claim in the Amended Summons. The third plaintiff does not have any documents which identify the process by which the decision to appoint the first defendant was made. Further, the third defendant does not have any contemporaneous records indicating what the fair market value of the site management rights was at the relevant time."

26. Mr Newsom was not challenged on this (or any other) part of his evidence.

Terms of the agreement

27. It is not necessary to set out in detail all the relevant terms of the management agreement. The parties accept that (to adapt the wording of s 24(1) of the CLM Act) the agreement was one for the continuing provision to the Association, or its members, of services or recreational facilities. The term of the management agreement was ten years. Arrow was given two options for renewal, each for a period of five years.

28. Clause 5 requires more attention, since it bears on issues 10 and 11. I set it out so far as it is relevant:

"5 Regular Duties Fee

Paying the fee

5.1 The Community Association must pay the Regular Duties Fee to the Site Manager according to this clause (and clause 6 if the Community Association and the Site Manager agree to vary the Regular Duties Fee).

Calculating the fee

5.2 The Regular Duties Fee for the first year of this agreement is the amount shown in item 3 of schedule 1.

5.3 The Site Manager must calculate the Regular Duties Fee for the second and subsequent years of this agreement by this formula:

$$\frac{\textit{Previous Regular Duties Fee} \times \textit{Current CPI}}{\textit{Previous CPI}}$$

[I omit the definitions of the terms in this formula.]

5.4 The Regular Duties Fee cannot be less than it was in a previous year. If the increase calculated under clause 5.3 is less than 5%, then the Regular Duties Fee for that year is the Previous Regular Duties Fee increased by the percentage shown in item 4 of schedule 1.

5.5 [Sets out some exclusions from the fee.]

Dates for paying the fee

5.6 The Community Association must pay:

(a) the first instalment of the Regular Duties Fee on the date this agreement commences; and
(b) after the first instalment, the Regular Duties Fee in equal instalments on the first day of each month.

5.7 The Community Association must adjust instalments if they are not for a full month.

5.8 [Dealt with disputes]."

29. Schedule 1 specified that the regular duties fee for the first year was $168,200; and that the minimum percentage increase in a year was 5%.

Mr Andrew Veron's evidence in relation to the agreement

30. Mr Andrew Veron swore three affidavits. Two were sworn on 26 September 2006: one in his capacity as a director of Arrow, and the other in his capacity as a director of Bondlake.

31. In paras 5 and following of the former, Mr Veron (as from this point on I shall call him) dealt with events up to the making of the management agreement and afterwards, in relation to payment. He referred to discussions that he said he had had with Mr Crews of Walker Corporation and concludes as follows in para 8:

> "8. During my discussions with Matt Crews in relation to the SMA as outlined above, in my mind Mr Crews was representing The Walker Group which was at that time in my mind effectively acting as the Community Association of Balmain Cove in all dealings with me regarding the SMA. As a consequence of the matters referred to above, it was my belief that the Walker Group, acting as the Community Association of Balmain Cove:
>
> (a) considered that the disclosure contained in the Community Management Statement of the SMA was adequate to satisfy any legal requirement associated with the SMA; and
> (b) considered that by reason of that disclosure the SMA was valid, binding and enforceable according to its terms and was in all respects in order,
>
> [140518]
> in reliance upon which I caused the First Defendant to complete its agreement with The Walker Group."

32. Mr Veron was cross-examined on that evidence. He accepted that Arrow had solicitors acting for it in relation to the acquisition of the management rights (T 216.50, T 218.10). Mr Veron accepted that his solicitor's role was to look after "the legalities of the transactions" (T 228.5) and to ensure "that whatever [he was] doing was done properly and that [his] company was protected" (T 228.15). Nonetheless, Mr Veron asserted that he did not rely on his solicitor to advise whether sufficient disclosure of the management agreement had been made in the community management statement, or whether it was safe for Arrow to pay to Australand the consideration of $190,000 for the grant of the management agreement (T 228.30–.55). He explained this by saying that he was speaking to Walker Corporation and DPS, and that he relied on what they had told him to pay the consideration (T 229.1–.17):

> "A. Because to settle the proposition, I was speaking to Walker Corporation and I spoke to the strata agents, and it was after those discussions that I released the funds.
>
> HIS HONOUR
>
> Q. Do you mean by that that you relied on what you'd been told by Walker Corporation and the strata managing agent when you on behalf of Arrow agreed to release the funds?
>
> A. The $190,000, yes.
>
> CORSARO
>
> Q. That was advice that you received from Mr Cruz, who was from the Walker Group. Is that right?
>
> A. Yes, when he requested it, I then contacted the strata agents."
>
> (The reference to "Mr Cruz" should be read as a reference to Mr Crews of Australand, referred to in para 8 of Mr Veron's affidavit.)

33. Mr Veron did not suggest in his oral evidence that he understood that Mr Crews, or Australand, was "acting as the community association of Balmain Cove".

34. Mr Veron plainly sought in cross-examination to play down his knowledge of s 24 of the CLM Act. He had however said the following in para 5 of his affidavit sworn on behalf of the first defendant:

> "Prior to the First Defendant's entry into the SMA, I was aware from both discussions with the First Defendant's then solicitors, and from discussions with David Edelstein and Matt Crews of The Walker Group, that there was a requirement that the SMA be disclosed in the Community Management Statement of the Plaintiff, which would be a document registered at the Land Titles Office and disclosed to all purchasers of individual lots in the development."

35. In cross-examination, Mr Veron sought to disavow this evidence. He denied that it was likely that he had become familiar with s 24 as at 2 December 1998, and said that he had not "been exposed to it" at that time (T 222.23–.38). He reaffirmed this at T 223.1–.11 (averring that he was "fair dinkum" in giving this evidence). When confronted with paragraph 5, and having considered it, he said "I'll have to go with my affidavit" (T 224.34). However, having made that concession, Mr Veron sought again to withdraw from it (see for example T 226.11–.40 where, apart from effectively disavowing paragraph 5 once more, he also disavowed his evidence at T 222.23–.38 that I have referred to above).

36. I deal in paras [69] to [74] below with Mr Veron's evidence relating to entry into the deed of assignment. I formed the very strong impression, both from reading the two affidavits to which I have referred, from observing him in the witness box and considering the evidence that he there gave, that Mr Veron is a man who is prepared to say whatever he thinks might be conducive to the success of his litigious enterprise. I formed the very clear view that expediency, rather than veracity, was the lodestar by which Mr Veron plotted his evidentiary course. That tendency was demonstrated not only in the evidence to which I have referred in this section of my reasons, but also in the evidence to which I refer in paras [69] and [70] below.

37. I have come to the conclusion that Mr Veron is not a witness whose evidence I can accept unless it is corroborated by other, acceptable, evidence, is consistent with the probabilities objectively ascertained, or is against interest. In reaching that conclusion I have taken into account also Mr Veron's demeanour in the witness box. I would hesitate to reject anyone as a credible witness simply on grounds of demeanour. However, to the extent that a consideration of demeanour is relevant, it certainly does not assist Mr Veron in this case.

38. My view as to the acceptability of Mr Veron's evidence relates not only to his evidence concerning the entry into, and payment of the consideration relating to, the site management agreement and the entry into the deed of assignment. It relates to the whole of his evidence.

Australand's undertaking

39. I have referred (in para [19(2)] above) to Australand's undertaking to pay the Association's outgoings. The evidence relating to the undertaking and its performance was somewhat sketchy. Nonetheless, it appears to be the case that Australand honoured the undertaking and met all the Association's liabilities (including those to Arrow under the management agreement) until the Association was in a position, through the establishment and funding of its administrative and sinking funds, to meet those expenses itself.

The first Annual General Meeting

40. The first annual general meeting (AGM) of the Association was held on 28 July 1999. There is some dispute as to whether the notice of that meeting was given to members of the Association. That notice (leaving aside for the moment the question as to whether it was given) included items of business relating to contributions and ratification of an agreement. Those items (two and four respectively) read as follows:

> "2. To decide whether amounts determined as contributions to the administrative fund and sinking fund should be confirmed or varied.
>
> The Community Association must have two funds:
>
> (a) an administrative fund to cover management fees, insurance premiums, community property maintenance and other day to day running costs according to clause 13 in schedule 1 of the Act; and > (b) a sinking fund for long term capital replacements of community property according to clause 13 in schedule 1 of the Act.
>
> At this stage, the Community Association has not determined administrative fund or sinking fund contributions. Dynamic Property Services Pty Ltd will table a proposed budget at the meeting to help the Community Association assess its administrative and sinking fund costs.

4. To decide whether an agreement to which section 24 applies should be ratified.

Section 24 applies to agreements with a person for the continuing provision to the Neighbourhood Association of services or recreational facilities. The section does not apply to agreements with public authorities or a Managing Agent.

Agreements under section 24 terminate at the first Annual General Meeting unless:

(a) the agreement was disclosed in the community management statement; or
(b) the agreement was ratified by the Community Association at the first Annual General Meeting.

There are no other agreements under section 24."

41. The wording of item 4 — particularly, the word "other" — is somewhat obscure, given that neither item 4 nor anything else in the notice discloses that the business to be transacted at the meeting included consideration of the ratification of any agreement. Presumably, it was intended to refer to the agreement with Howitt Solutions (see the following paragraph). Be that as it may, there was no notice given to members that the business of the meeting would include consideration of the ratification of the management agreement.

42. The minutes of the first AGM record the following resolutions in relation to items 2 and 4:

"CONTRIBUTIONS:

(a) RESOLVED that contributions be determined in accordance with Section 76

[140520]

(a) of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 for the twelve month period from 1st July 1999.

(i) to the Administrative Fund for the sum of $597,475.83; and
(ii) to the Sinking Fund for the sum of $20,000.

SECTION 24:

RESOLVED that the agreement entered into with Howitt Solutions on 8th June 1999 be ratified for cleaning and landscaping at Balmain Cove."

43. There was a dispute in the evidence as to whether DPS had tabled a "Proposed Budget" at the first AGM, as contemplated by item 2 of the notice. The Association called its former Chairman, Mr Ronald Glew. Mr Glew denied that any budget had been tabled at the first AGM. Whilst I have no doubt that Mr Glew sought to give evidence truthfully and accurately to the best of his ability, I think that his memory must have failed him in this. There was evidence that DPS had prepared a budget, the various components of which (in relation to the administrative fund) added up to the precise sum of $597,475.83 referred to in the minutes.

44. It is difficult to accept that the members of the Association would have voted to create an administrative fund of almost $600,000 without requiring some justification of the amount. It is even more difficult to accept that they would have voted to create the administrative fund in the precise figure that was the subject of the resolution unless they had been guided by the draft budget that, according to the notice of meeting, DPS was to prepare and table.

45. In my view, the inference that the draft budget was tabled, and formed the basis of the resolution, is near inescapable. Thus, notwithstanding Mr Glew's testimony to the contrary and my view of his honesty, I draw that inference.

46. The first item in the draft budget related to "On Site Management". It read as follows:

"Administration Fund

On Site Management $ 168,200.00

Manager]

Secretary]

Assistant]"

The caretaker agreements

47. Arrow entered into a number of agreements appointing people to the position of "On Site Manager/ Caretaker of 'Balmain Cove'." The first such agreement was made on 6 November 1998. Mr Tony Claridge was the nominated caretaker. He was to be paid $25,000 per annum and was to have the use of an unfurnished two bedroom apartment in Balmain Cove. This was apartment 5 (or lot 12) in a building known as "The Knoll", which lot Australand had sold to Arrow by contract dated 30 October 1997.

48. Mr Claridge was required to work "a forty hour week … spread across Monday to Friday and Saturday mornings". However, by the terms of the appointment, he recognised "that the nature of being 'On Site' [would] require [him] to be available or contactable outside these hours, so there is an inherent flexibility in these working hours." No doubt to assist in his being available or contactable, Arrow was to supply Mr Claridge with a mobile phone.

49. Arrow undertook to contribute superannuation at "the minimum requirement as set by Superannuation Guarantee Legislation."

50. On 13 July 2000, after the deed of assignment had been made, Bondlake agreed to employ Mr Claridge in the same role as, hitherto, he had been employed by Arrow. His remuneration was increased to $26,260. Otherwise, I think, there was no significant change to the terms of employment, although it was acknowledged that Mr Claridge would have the use of a car space (no doubt, he had enjoyed this luxury de facto under the previous regime).

51. On 1 March 2001, Mr Claridge was replaced by Mr David Warren. Mr Warren was appointed as "Building Manager of 'Balmain Cove'." His salary was $35,000 per annum. He too enjoyed the rent free use of an apartment. This was said to lead to "an overall package of $58,100 per annum." Presumably, Mr Warren enjoyed the benefit of some superannuation contributions. The letter appointing Mr Warren did not specify the number of hours to be worked, or when they were to be worked. Nor did it deal with availability outside those hours.

52. On 16 November 2001, Bondlake appointed Mr Joshua Smith and Mrs Adriana Smith to be "On Site Manager/Caretaker of Balmain Cove." They were to be paid $35,000 per annum plus superannuation, and to have the benefit of rent-free accommodation. The printed text of the letter specified the working hours in the same way as they had been specified for Mr Claridge. However, a handwritten annotation, initialled by someone unidentified, reads:

"Joshua — 40 hrs

Adriana — 25–30 hrs."

53. Arrow had purchased a commercial unit in the Balmain Cove development, known as lot 11. That lot had a floor area of approximately 65 square metres. It was used as the office from which the caretakers from time to time have performed their duties.

54. The evidence of Mr Theodore Stamoulis, a valuer retained by the defendants, was that the rental value of the residential apartment (apartment 5, or lot 12) ranged from $22,880 per annum in 1998–1999 to $26,004 in 2005–2006. According to Mr Stamoulis, the rental value of the commercial unit (lot 11) ranged from $20,231.25 per annum in 1998–99 to $24,881.88 in 2005–06. Mr Stamoulis was not cross-examined.

The deed of assignment

Proposals for "assignment" of the management agreement

55. On 10 August 1999, Mallesons wrote to the Association. Mallesons advised that Arrow "has entered into an agreement with Max Management Pty Ltd to sell its rights under the site management agreement to Max". They stated that "completion of the Agreement [to sell] is subject to the approval by the Community Association to the assignment of the Site Management Agreement to Max." They asked the Association to indicate, in substance, what information it would require to consider the assignment.

56. After various dealings which it is not necessary to recount, DPS wrote to Mallesons on 15 September 1999 informing them that the Association refused its consent to the assignment. There were further dealings thereafter, apparently directed to persuading the Association to change its mind. Ultimately, on 24 November 1999, the Association resolved to consent to the assignment subject to a number of specified conditions. DPS notified Arrow of that resolution by letter sent the following day. However, on 28 January 2000, Arrow notified the Association that Max Management had decided not to proceed with the assignment.

57. The Association then turned its attention to "purchasing the Site Services Agreement". At some stage, it communicated to Arrow its interest in this proposition.

58. On 4 February 2000, Arrow notified the Association that it proposed to assign the management agreement to Bondlake. On 8 February 2000, Arrow confirmed to the Association that Bondlake would continue to employ Mr Claridge as on site manager/caretaker.

59. It is apparent that the Association was dissatisfied with aspects of Arrow's performance of its obligations (or what the Association perceived to be Arrow's obligations) under the management agreement. On 10 February 2000, Mr Glew, in his capacity as chairman of the Association, wrote to Arrow setting out detailed allegations of non performance by Arrow of its obligations under the management agreement, and calling on Arrow to perform. Arrow replied to some aspects of that letter on 14 February 2000. Mr Glew replied on 18 February 2000, disputing that Arrow had complied with its obligations. He also requested information as to the assignment to Bondlake.

60. On 25 February 2000, Arrow provided a substantial amount of information to the Association. That information was considered at a meeting of the executive committee held on 29 February 2000. The outcome of that meeting is obscure. In any event, there was further correspondence, both about the proposed assignment and about the prospect of the owners' corporation's buying out the management agreement. This correspondence culminated in a letter from Arrow to the Association dated 23 May 2000, threatening legal action. That letter stated, relevantly:

>
> We are becoming increasingly frustrated at the neglect or refusal of the Community Association to properly address our notice relating to assignment of our interest under the Site Management Agreement.
>
> In the circumstances we have no alternative but to press the matter of assignment, if necessary by means of legal action or alternate dispute resolution.
>
> On advice, we will be giving the Community Association a fresh notice under clause 14.4 of the Site Management Agreement. You should receive this shortly.
>
> We believe that the Community Association has had ample opportunity to conclude the "continuing" investigations that you have been referring to since at least 5th March 2000.

61. The executive committee met again on 5 June 2000. Relevantly, it resolved to "establish a working group to respond to the request for assignment of the Site Management Agreement … ". The members of that working group included Mr P Hennessy (a barrister, and one of Her Majesty's Counsel) and Mr F Cahill (a solicitor).

62. On 27 June 2000, Mr Glew wrote to Arrow, notifying it that the Association would "grant approval for the Site Services Agreement … to be assigned to Bondlake" subject to a number of specified conditions.

63. Arrow, whilst disputing that all those conditions could be imposed, nonetheless prepared a draft deed of assignment and sent it to the Association. Mr Cahill gave advice on that draft deed. He expressed the view that what was proposed was a novation and not an assignment:

"However, the 'Deed of Assignment of Agreement' is really a novation of the Site Management Agreement and it is not at law an 'assignment'. This is because under clause 2 the Transferor assigns to the Transferee ' … the rights, powers and obligations of the Transferor under the Agreement'. (emphasis in original)

In the legal process of novation, a new contract is created and the old one is terminated. This means that the Transferee and the Community Association effectively enter into a new agreement. That new agreement would be subject to GST from its inception."

64. As the last sentence indicates, the particular focus of Mr Cahill's concern was liability for GST.

65. Mr Cahill also advised that one clause of the draft deed could be deleted, because it was dealt with in the management agreement. The Association conveyed that comment to Arrow.

The deed of assignment

66. The deed of assignment is undated, but appears to have been made on or about 30 June 2000. The parties were Arrow, Bondlake and the Association. The recitals to the deed read as follows:

> "A. The Transferor is the site manager under the Agreement.
> B. The Transferor wants to assign to the Transferee all of the interests, rights and obligations of the Transferor under the Agreement.
> C. The Community Association agrees to the assignment."

67. Clauses 2, 3, 4 and 5 of the deed read as follows:

"2 Assignment

The Transferor as beneficial owner, assigns to the Transferee from an [sic] including the Effective Date all the rights, powers and obligations of the Transferor under the Agreement.

3 Consent by the Community Association

3.1 The Community Association releases the Transferor from compliance with the obligations of the Transferor under the Agreement from but excluding the Effective Date.

4 Covenants and acknowledgments by Transferee

The Transferee agrees to comply with all the Transferor's obligations under the Agreement from and including the Effective Date for the term of the Agreement as if the [140523]

Transferee had been named in the Agreement as the site manager.

5. Undertakings and indemnities

5.1 The Transferee indemnifies the Transferor against any liability or loss arising from, and any costs, charges and expenses incurred in connection with the non-compliance of the Transferee with its obligations under this deed including, without limitation, legal costs and expenses on a full indemnity basis or solicitor and own client basis, whichever is the higher.

5.2 The Transferor indemnifies the Transferee against any liability or loss arising from, and any costs, charges and expenses incurred in connection with the non-compliance of the Transferor with its obligations under the Agreement up to the Effective Date including, without limitation, legal costs and expenses on a full indemnity basis or solicitor and own client basis, whichever is the higher."

68. By cl 1.1, the "Effective Date" was defined to mean 30 June 2000.

Mr Veron's evidence in relation to the assignment

69. In his affidavit sworn on behalf of the second defendant, Mr Veron gave evidence of an understanding that the agreement between the Association and Bondlake "was in effect a new agreement … the terms of which were the same terms contained in the SMA plus the additional terms and conditions that the plaintiff required as conditions of the assignment and [Bondlake] agreed to accept" (affidavit sworn on 26 September 2006 on behalf of the second defendant, para 12). I consider that to be a self serving statement not based on or reflective of any actual state of mind as at the relevant time.

70. Mr Veron also gave evidence of the significance to him of what he said was his understanding, engendered by acts of the Association, that the Association considered the management agreement to be valid (paras 15 and 16 of the same affidavit):

> "15. As a consequence of the fact that the Plaintiff:
>
> (a) formally consented to an assignment of the SMA from the First Defendant to the Second Defendant; and
> (b) relied on the terms and provisions of the SMA both in dealing with and in delaying the request for that assignment; and > (c) was a party to and executed the Deed of Assignment of the SMA from the First Defendant to the Second Defendant.
>
> I had no doubt in my mind and believed that the Plaintiff considered that the SMA was in all respects valid, binding and enforceable according to its terms. It would simply not have made sense to me that the Plaintiff would consent to an assignment of the rights in the SMA from the First Defendant to the Second Defendant and join in a formal Deed of Assignment of the SMA as a consenting party if the Plaintiff did not believe in all respects that the SMA was valid, binding and enforceable between the Site Manager and the Plaintiff according to its terms.
>
> 16. Had I not believed that the Plaintiff considered the SMA to be in all respects valid, binding and enforceable according to its terms, I would never have caused the Second Defendant to:
>
> (a) accept an assignment of the SMA from the First Defendant; or > (b) execute the Deed of Assignment; or > (c) assume the obligations and liabilities of Site Manager under the SMA; or > (d) accept and assume the obligations and liabilities of and connected with the additional terms and conditions imposed by the Plaintiff as conditions of assignment; or > (e) pay to the First Defendant the sum of $125,000.00 for the assignment of the rights in the SMA."

71. However, in cross-examination, Mr Veron gave somewhat inconsistent evidence. He said repeatedly that, having entered into the management agreement and paid the consideration of $190,000 for it, there was in his mind a valid agreement and he had no reason ever to doubt its validity. He then gave the following evidence bearing on his state of mind leading up to the assignment to Bondlake (T 233.18–234.26):

> "Q. Do you agree that there was no reason ever to think about the site management agreement's validity from that time on?
> [140524]
>
> A. What time, the time?
>
>
> Q. The time when you paid the money to the Walker Corporation for the purchase of the management rights?
>
> A. No I don't believe, I can't recollect an issue in terms of it at this stage.
>
>
> Q. And in thinking about the question it [sic: presumably, "of"] its validity ever again, correct?
>
> A. No I would, as I mentioned when we were looking to sell the agreements it was put forward. We had a number of prospective parties that were negotiating on the purchase of the management rights and one of them, which we contracted with was Blessington Judd and Andreones and which we had the purchases utilised. They did not have an issue with the validity of the agreement. We had a number of other parties we were dealing with that looked at the agreements. Nobody called the agreement into question, its validity or the issues around it so, no, I didn't have an issue. The management rights were put on the open market and the open market and the open market was—

Q. Thank you so you would say to his Honour in the light of everything you have just said, from the moment you paid the money and settled on the transfer of the unit there was no reason for you ever again to think about the validity of that agreement, correct?

A. No I mentioned I had all the agreements and everything checked. At the time us or Arrow Management had taken over from Mr Gresham, there were issues within the company and I had all the items and looked at all the items within the company, I had spent a considerable period of time doing that. We had fresh agreements coming online, we had all these different buildings and I had the agreement, I looked at and I had looked at the details I had no reason to call it into question. I can't recall taking specific advice as to it but I may have.

Q. And when was that, that you had the agreements looked at by others by Blessington Judd for example?

A. We didn't have Blessington Judd look at the agreement. Max Management had Blessington Judd look at the agreement. They acted for the purchaser. We recommended Andreones as a strata solicitor that had the best expertise in the field.

Q. So I take it then your position is this, from the moment that you paid the money and settled on the transfer of the unit, you moved forward and provided the services on the basis that you had a valid agreement in place and because, from that time on, no one ever alerted you to any difficulty you had no reason to even think the agreement was invalid?

A. When you say no one alerted me, are you talking in respect to issues of numbers of CAs? I can't recall a specific instance of issue.

Q. Do you agree or disagree with the proposition I put to you?

A. I will agree with the proposition."

72. Mr Veron said that he had had the management agreement and others reviewed at the time he and his brother bought out Mr Gresham (T 234.35; the words "which you" at line 35 should read "reviewed"). He then gave the following evidence (T 234.39–.56):

"Q. Am I to understand nothing in that review caused you any concern about the validity of the site management agreement which is the subject of this case?

A. No.

Q. And do I take it from that, that when it was assigned from Arrow to Bondlake, you did not concern yourself at all with the question of validity?

A. No.

Q. And you did not even have in mind as an issue at that time the issue [sic: presumably, "of"] the validity?

A. No.

Q. And nothing in the course of that transaction as between Arrow and Bondlake entered your mind either way on the topic of validity?

[140525]

A. No."

73. The clear inference from Mr Veron's evidence in cross-examination is that the topic of validity of the management agreement did not cross his mind after Arrow paid the sum of $190,000 to Walker. To the extent that the agreement was reviewed, it was, plainly enough, the outcome of that review on which Mr Veron relied, and not (as he would seek to suggest in paras 15 and 16 of his affidavit) some implied representation made by the Association.

74. In my view, this aspect of Mr Veron's affidavit evidence is another example of his willingness to give evidence by reference to considerations of expediency rather than veracity. A consideration of this aspect of his affidavit and oral evidence confirms the view that I have expressed above as to his credibility.

The expert evidence

75. The Association and the defendants called expert evidence, seeking to quantify the value of the services provided by Arrow or Bondlake (as the case may be) to the Association under the management agreement.

The Association's expert evidence

76. The Association called Messrs Nicholas Ferrara and Harn Goh of Rider Hunt Terotechnology (NSW and ACT) Pty Ltd. Messrs Ferrara and Goh prepared a joint report dated 11 April 2006, and Mr Ferrara prepared a report in reply dated 15 March 2007.

77. The methodology adopted by Messrs Ferrara and Goh was to build up a total "current market value" of the services by using a formula that divided the whole value into the caretaker's salary (38% of the total), overhead costs (21%) and profit margin (41%).

78. They sought to derive the first component by comparing the relative value of the caretaker's work under the site management agreement with that of a "facility manager". This rather unusual methodology involved comparing what they saw to be the "core competencies" of the caretaker under the management agreement with the core competencies of a "practitioner" facility manager, in six different areas.

79. By definition, the practitioner was assigned a total "effective competency factor" of 600 (100 points, for want of a better word, for each of the 6 core competencies). Messrs Ferrara and Goh concluded that a caretaker under the management agreement would score (if that is the right word) a total effective competency factor of 305.

80. Messrs Ferrara and Goh thus assessed the value of the caretaker's role under the management agreement as worth 305/600 of the services of a facility manager practitioner. For the year 2006, and by reference to what they said was a survey recognised in the discipline of facility management, they concluded that a facility manager practitioner's salary would be $107,980. (This involved taking a salary figure for the previous year from the survey and increasing it by what they said was an applicable percentage, 15%.) They thus concluded that, applying the proportion 305/600, the nominal value of the caretaker's services would be $54,890, which they rounded out to $55,000.

81. Messrs Ferrara and Goh considered the hours that they thought would be required to perform the caretaker's duties under the management agreement. They concluded that it would take 32.71 hours per week to do this. Apparently, they either did not appreciate, or ignored, the consistent requirement for the caretaker to work a 40 hour week, and the obligation to be "available or contactable outside [those] hours" (see para [48] above). Messrs Ferrara and Goh took the view that a facility manager practitioner would work a 40 hour week. Thus they prorated their derived value of $55,000 by 32.71/40.0 to arrive at an adjusted value of $44,976 for the caretaker services, which they rounded off to $45,000. They said that there could be variance of plus or minus 20%, giving a range of $36,000 to $54,000.

82. Messrs Ferrara and Goh sought to ascertain the allowance that should be made for overhead costs. They concluded that it was $24,415 per annum, which they rounded off to $25,000. This included an allowance for 25 square metres of office space at a rental of $300 per square metre per annum; and it included other obvious and proper overhead or on costs.

It did not, however, include any allowance for the value of the residential apartment supplied rent free to the caretakers from time to time.

83. Messrs Ferrara and Goh then returned to their view that an appropriate profit would be 41%. They calculated the dollar amount of this not by taking 41% of what they said was the total for salary and overheads and adding it to that total to obtain a grand total. Instead (see para [77] above), they assumed that salary and overheads would amount to 59% of the total cost, divided the total for salary and overheads by 59 and multiplied it by 100. I have to say that I find this rather puzzling. If it were appropriate to use that methodology then I do not understand why it was not applied consistently. Given their view that salary would constitute 38% of the total "cost components", one would think that their methodology would require the derived salary figure to be divided by 38 and multiplied by 100, without the need to itemise and cost overheads. But they were not cross-examined on this, and I do no more than note the curiosity.

84. There are at least four major flaws in the methodology adopted by Messrs Ferrara and Goh. Three of those are practical and one is conceptual.

85. I have adverted to two of the practical flaws above. Their methodology does not take account of the requirement for the caretaker to work a 40 hour week, and to be on call outside those working hours. Nor does it take account of the value of the accommodation provided rent free to the caretaker (a benefit which is even more valuable to the caretaker than the dollar value of the rent free use, because it is a pre-tax benefit). Further, as to the first matter, if it were the case as the evidence suggests — see para [52] above — that Mr and Mrs Smith were required to work between them in excess of 40 hours per week, then the prorating exercise undertaken by Messrs Ferrara and Goh is even less sustainable.

86. The third practical flaw is that, although Messrs Ferrara and Goh purported to build up their assessment of the hours required having had the benefit of a view of Balmain Cove, they appear to have made their assessment of times on a theoretical or a priori basis, rather than undertaking it on a site specific basis. In other words, they did not assess the times taking into account whatever particular features there were of the Balmain Cove site that might have an impact on the time required for performance of the various tasks that they analysed.

87. The conceptual flaw in their methodology relates to the choice of a facility manager practitioner as the yardstick by which to measure the value of the caretaker's services. The evidence showed that facility manager status encompassed three, ascending, levels of skill: practitioner, manager and leader. Not surprisingly, the competency requirements increased as one ascended the ladder (a manager was required to have more competencies than a practitioner, and a leader to have more competencies than a manager). It is obvious that the level of responsibility would increase as one ascended the ladder. However, the methodology used by Messrs Ferrara and Goh had the necessary consequence that a leader who was employed in a role that demanded of him no more than the six core competencies of a practitioner would be paid the same as the practitioner, notwithstanding his greater seniority, competency and (presumably) experience. Further, the methodology led to the result that the practitioner, manager or leader would be paid at the same rate regardless of the size of complexity of the facility under management. Mr Goh was loath to accept that this was a defect; but Mr Ferrara (after some struggle) did so: see for example T 178.50, 179.45–180.55 and 183.15–184.30.

88. There are other problems too with the methodology of Messrs Ferrara and Goh. For example, the evidence showed that facility managers (at the practitioner level) were paid more in New South Wales than in other States. Messrs Ferrara and Goh however used the national average, notwithstanding that the services were to be performed in this State. Further, the evidence showed that the amount paid varied according to the kind of "site" that was managed. Again, however, Messrs Ferrara and Goh used the average.

89. Messrs Ferrara and Goh did not seem to think that it was appropriate to go into the marketplace and seek to ascertain what was being paid for services of the kind provided by Arrow or Bondlake (as the case may be) under the management agreement. It may be that it would have been difficult to obtain this evidence — or, at least, to obtain enough to lead to reliable conclusions. It may be that, as a result, building up a total cost by valuing the components is an appropriate methodology. But the flaws in their methodology are such that I do not accept their evidence.

90. Mr F C Corsaro SC, who appeared with Mr D B Studdy of counsel for the Association, submitted that the only relevant result of the flaws to which I have adverted was that Messrs Ferrara and Goh had overvalued the services. It may be that some of the flaws lead to that result — for example, use of the salary level of a facility manager practitioner as the appropriate yardstick. But other flaws do not — for example, disregard of the actual hours and site conditions, and of the value of the rent free accommodation.

91. In the result, although accepting (as I have said) that it may be appropriate to analyse the cost of the services by costing their individual components, and allowing a reasonable profit, I do not accept the evidence of Messrs Ferrara and Goh as to the value of those services. Nor do I accept that, regardless of the flaws in their methodology, I can be confident that the cost could be no more than that assessed by them.

The defendants' experts

92. The defendants called three experts: Mr Delwyn Linkhorn, Mr Terry Short and Mr Stamoulis (to whose evidence I have referred in para [54] above).

93. Messrs Linkhorn and Short sought to value the services provided by Arrow or Bondlake (as the case may be) under the management agreement. Mr Stamoulis sought to ascertain the rental value of the residential accommodation (apartment 5) and the office accommodation (lot 11). As I have said, Mr Stamoulis' evidence was unchallenged. I accept it, although it should be noted that his valuation of the office was of the whole area (65 square metres), and it was accepted by all the other experts after a conference that the actual area required for performance of the caretaker's duties was 25 square metres. Thus, in principle, it might be open to Bondlake (and might have been open to Arrow) to partition lot 11 in some way, and to turn the 40 square metres not required for performance of the caretaker's duties to account in some other way. This was not explored in the evidence, although Mr Linkhorn said that, having regard to the configuration of lot 11, he doubted that it would be practicable.

94. Mr Linkhorn sought to identify the various tasks that the caretaker would perform, and to cost them by deriving a time value for their performance. Mr Short sought to identify the overhead and on costs that a site manager such as Arrow or Bondlake would incur relating to performance of the site manager's duties under the management agreement. However, Mr Short went further and "broadly checked Mr Linkhorn's estimates" (T 286.40).

95. In principle, as I have indicated, the methodology of Messrs Linkhorn and Short may produce an appropriate indication of the value of the management services. However, there are flaws in their approach: more specifically, flaws in Mr Linkhorn's approach.

96. Mr Linkhorn listed out what he said were the duties that a caretaker would be required to perform under the management agreement, and estimated the time that in his opinion would be taken for their performance. He concluded that performance of those duties would require a "total site manager's weekly minimum weekly labour content" of 70.526 hours. He then selected what he thought was an appropriate yardstick, namely the Real Estate Industry (Clerical and Administrative) State Award, decided that a Grade 5 employee under that award would provide an appropriate yardstick, and thereby fixed on a full time salary of $700.50 per week as the starting point for his calculations. He deduced an hourly rate of $17.31 from this, and applied that to his total calculation of hours to produce a labour cost, for the duties required under the management agreement, of $89,978.19 in the 2005/2006 financial year. (To enable this to be related to the amounts actually paid to Messrs Claridge and Warren and Mr and Mrs Smith: the equivalent figure deduced by Mr Linkhorn for the 1998–1999 year was $73,081.64, increasing by approximately $2,000 to $3,000 per year thereafter.)

To this figure, Messrs Linkhorn and Short then added what they said was an appropriate amount for "operating costs that would be required to carry out the duties as per the Site Management Agreement for Balmain Cove". Those amounts included the rental value of the residential apartment and the office, and other obvious and appropriate allowances. They then assigned alternative profit margins of 25% and 40% of the total cost thus derived (this being their opinion of the likely range of profit margins) to derive a total value for the services.

98. The outcome of their conclusions demonstrated that, with a 25% profit margin, the amount actually payable under the management agreement always exceeded the valuation. If however one took a profit margin of 40%, the amount payable was less than their valuation for the first three years, but a little more for the fourth year, with the margin (of actual over estimated) increasing steadily thereafter: a reflection of the power of annual compounding. In this context, I note that Messrs Ferrara, Linkhorn and Short agreed, after conferring, that 41% was an appropriate allowance for profit.

99. I have three principal concerns with this methodology. The first two relate to Mr Linkhorn's quantification of the number of hours of labour required. In essence, he was valuing the caretaker's duties. There was no evidence that the caretakers could not perform their duties broadly within the allotted hours under their agreements. (I recognise that there is some latent ambiguity in this proposition, in the case of Mr and Mrs Smith, if it is proper to regard them as having been required to perform a combined total of 65 to 70 hours per week. However, there was no evidence that this is in fact what the notation to which I have referred in para [52] above meant. Nor is there any indication of the separate duties (if any) to be performed by Mrs Smith.)

100. The second matter, also connected with the subject of hours required, relates to Mr Linkhorn's understanding of the extent of the duties required under the management agreement. It would appear that Mr Linkhorn assumed that duties (for example, in relation to "Recreational Facilities") related to the whole of the Balmain Cove site. However, on a proper construction of the relevant provisions of the management agreement and the community management statement, those duties relate only to such facilities as are located on "Lot 1". At least in terms of area, lot 1 is a relatively small part of the overall site; and there was evidence that there were "Recreational Facilities" located on the Balmain Cove site other than on lot 1. Thus, I think, Mr Linkhorn's estimate of hours may involve some over-allowance, because the components include matters outside the caretaker's responsibility.

101. The third matter relates to the yardstick. When pressed, Mr Linkhorn was unable to offer any logical justification for the choice of the award to which he referred. Nor was he able to explain why a figure derived from that award might be appropriate when the evidence showed that a number of people had agreed to perform the caretaker's duties for the figures to which I have already referred, and had apparently done so freely and voluntarily. (The value of the rent free accommodation can be disregarded, because that is a matter expressly taken into account, and incorporated into the total cost of services, in Mr Short's part of the calculations.) In particular, Mr Linkhorn was unable to explain why he used the award that he did rather than an award that specifically included caretakers: the Miscellaneous Workers' General Services (State) Award. As to the award selected by Mr Linkhorn: he could not indicate why, in his view, the duties that might be performed by a person under the award relied on by him could be equated to the duties performed by a caretaker under the management agreement. As to the latter award: Mr Linkhorn said that his researches had not uncovered the award.

102. Thus, whilst in principle I accept Mr Linkhorn's (and Mr Short's) methodology, I do not accept the outcome. It might be noted that if Mr Linkhorn has wrongly estimated the cost of the labour content, then that error will flow on to so much of Mr Short's calculations as relate to on costs (superannuation, replacement caretaker during annual leave, payroll tax and other on costs).

103. Having said that, I think that the result of what I see as shortcomings in the exercise undertaken by Mr Linkhorn would lead to overstatement of the true value of the services. Whether this means that the total cost (including a 40% profit) would exceed the actual cost for the first three years, I cannot say. But I can accept the conclusion flowing from the figures provided by Messrs Linkhorn and Short, that, at least from year 4 on, the actual amount payable under the management agreement has exceeded the true value of the services performed under it, and that the margin between the two is likely to increase thereafter during the remaining life of the agreement (including, if the options are taken up, any further terms). The adjustment of the profit margin from 40% to the agreed figure of 41% does not affect the substance of this conclusion.

Other matters

104. Each of the experts (apart from Mr Stamoulis) sought to characterise the features of the management agreement, including its term (with options) and ratchet compounding remuneration in qualitative ways. To the extent that they sought to suggest that something was or was not "grossly" excessive, or "unfair", I rejected that evidence. I did however allow it as evidence to the effect that in their experience, they had not come across such terms.

Conclusion

105. Thus, I conclude, on the whole of the expert evidence, that:

(1) The term of the agreement (10 years with two further options, each of five years and given to the manager only) is, and was at the time the agreement was made, unusual in the relevant industry.
(2) At least after the first three years of the agreement, the minimum remuneration actually payable under it has exceeded, and is likely to continue in the future to exceed, the true value (including profit margin) of the services provided, with the disparity increasing over time because of the minimum compounding 5% annual increase in the remuneration payable.
(3) The evidence does not permit a quantification of the past or present margin of disparity between the actual remuneration and the true cost of services, nor does it permit any projection of the likely actual amount of that disparity (from year to year) into the future.
(4) On the now agreed basis that 41% is an appropriate profit margin, the agreement has always provided at least a reasonable remuneration to the manager (Arrow or Bondlake) from time to time; and the effect of the compounding is that for most of the life of the agreement, and probably during any extensions arising from the exercise of the options, the agreement will provide for a remuneration that is more than fair and reasonable, and in this sense, "excessive".

106. I should add, by way of possible qualification of what I have said as to the disparity between the actual remuneration and the true cost of services, that no expert suggested that the cost of the services would increase as the complex ages and its facilities deteriorate.

Approach to the issues

107. It will be seen that the joint statement of issues commences with issues as between the Association and Australand. I propose however to start with the issues dealing with the management agreement (which commence with issue 7), to move from there through the issues to issue 32 and then to return to issues 1 to 6A.

Issue 7(a): disclosure

108. The defendants accepted that I was constrained by the decision of the Court of Appeal in Hudson Property Group Pty Ltd v Community Association DP 270238 [2005] NSWCA 374 to conclude that the effect of the management agreement was not disclosed by the community management statement for the purposes of s 24(2)(a) of the CLM Act. They were correct to take that position. There is no material distinction between the form of disclosure considered by the Court of Appeal in that case and the form of disclosure in this case.

109. Thus, although the defendants formally submitted that the decision in Hudson Property Group was wrong, they accepted that I was bound to answer issue 7(a) "no"; and I do so.

Issues 7(b), 17 and 18: ratification

110. I have set out the relevant facts in paras [40] to [46] above.

111. Plainly, there was no express ratification of the management agreement.

[140530]

However, Mr J S Wheelhouse SC, who appeared for the first and second defendants, submitted that there was evidence of implied ratification. He relied on the decision of the Court of Appeal in Aztech Science Pty Ltd v Atlanta Aerospace (Woy Woy) Pty Ltd (2006) 55 ACSR 1.

112. I have some doubt that implied ratification is sufficient for the purposes of s 24(2)(b) of the CLM Act. The clear policy of s 24(2) is to protect purchasers of lots in community development plans from long term commitments made at the instigation of the developer during the initial period. Implied ratification, depending on inferences from matters that might or might not be apparent from the minutes of the first AGM, would not serve that purpose in many — if not the majority of — cases.

113. In this context, it is instructive to note cl 4(1) of Schedule 5 to the CLM Act. (By s 10 (2) of that Act, "Schedule 5 has effect in relation to the first annual general meeting of an association".) Clause 4(1) states that "[a] motion that does not relate to the business set out in the notice of the meeting is out of order." That is difficult to reconcile with the concept of implied ratification.

114. However, even if implied ratification is sufficient for the purposes of s 24(2)(b), I do not think that it has been established.

115. The verb "ratify" is defined by The Australian Oxford Dictionary (2nd Edition, 2004) to mean "confirm or accept (an agreement made in one's name) by formal consent, signature, etc." It is implicit in this that the ratifier at least knows of the existence, and perhaps as well the terms, of the agreement, and that it was purported to have been made in the name of, or on behalf of or for the benefit of, the ratifier. This suggests that a decision to ratify an agreement must involve some consideration not just of the fact of making of the agreement but also of its terms and their impact on the ratifier.

116. Basten JA (with whom Handley JA agreed) considered what was required for ratification in Aztech Science at 23–24 [81]–[82]. It is apparent from what his Honour said in the latter paragraph that the distinction between express and implied ratification may not be one that is always usefully drawn; but to the extent that it can be drawn, language is likely to be the source of express ratification and conduct the source of implied ratification.

117. In substance, and with some presently irrelevant qualifications, Basten JA accepted the explanation given by the primary judge, Barrett J: (2004) 51 ACSR 147 at 159 [49]–[50]. Implied ratification may arise where acts of the ratifier can only be explained on the basis that the ratifier accepts the contract as its own. As with express ratification, the words or conduct relied upon must demonstrate the intention of the ratifier to be bound to the contract.

118. It follows from this that there can be no ratification of a contract of which the alleged ratifier has no knowledge. Whether the requisite knowledge must be actual knowledge, or whether in some circumstances imputed knowledge will be sufficient, is a debate that can be left for another day, because there is simply no evidence that the existence of the management agreement was communicated to the members of the Association (apart from Australand if, at that time, it was still a member of the Association) prior to or at the first AGM. The notice of meeting (assuming that it had been distributed) gave no hint to members that the management agreement existed, let alone that it was to be ratified.

119. The minutes of the meeting disclose that one item of business concerned ratification under s 24 of the CLM Act. The agreement considered and ratified was that made with Howitt Solutions on 8 June 1999 for cleaning and landscaping services. There is no suggestion that the management agreement was even mentioned at the first AGM. One might think that the express reference to and consideration of the agreement with Howitt Solutions impliedly negatived the existence of any other agreement to which s 24, or the question of ratification, might be relevant.

120. Mr Wheelhouse relied on the item in the draft budget to which I have referred in para [46] above. However, that entry gives no indication that the amount for on site management is related to any agreement, let alone an agreement for which ratification is required, or of the terms of any such agreement. If the owners in general meeting had been asked to ratify an agreement, one would expect them to have given consideration to the terms of the agreement, including the obligations that it imposed on, and the benefits that it provided to, the Association. One would also expect them to have considered whether such benefits as the Association received under the agreement might be available in the market for a lesser price. One would expect them to have paid particular attention to the duration of the agreement and to the fee structure. The line entry in the draft budget goes nowhere near providing any such information.

121. Mr Wheelhouse relied also on the "disclosure" made in cl 43 of the community management statement. Perhaps a particularly alert or astute reader, who had the terms of cl 43 in mind when he or she read the draft budget, might have linked the two. But there is no reason to think that those who attended the first AGM would have refreshed their memories of the contents of the community management statement before the meeting. Nor, in my view, is the question of ratification to be answered by speculation of this nature.

122. Thus, even if implied ratification is sufficient for the purposes of s 24(2)(b), I do not think that it is established in the present case. Further, in this context, it would be a curious result if a "disclosure" were held to be insufficient for the purposes of s 24(2)(a) but sufficient for the purpose of imputing knowledge to members so as to lead to ratification under s 24(2)(b). That is not to say that, in particular cases, the contents of an inadequate (for s 24(2)(a) purposes) disclosure might not be sufficient, when considered with other relevant circumstances, to give rise to an inference of ratification. But this is not such a case.

123. It follows that issue 7(b) should be answered "no".

124. In the light of what I have said, it is unnecessary to express a concluded view on issue 17.

125. If issue 18 were to arise for consideration, it follows from what I have said that it should be answered "no".

Issues 8 and 9: termination of the management agreement

126. What I have said in relation to issue 7 means that the answer to issue 8 is "yes", and the answer to issue 9 is "does not arise".

Issues 10 and 11: incurring a debt during the initial period

127. The Association's case in relation to s 23(1)(a) appeared to be that the Association incurred a debt for at least ten years' worth of the "Regular Duties Fee" payable by the Association to Arrow under clause 5 of the management agreement. The minimum amount of the debt, on that approach, was the total over 10 years of the fees, starting at $168,200 for the first year and compounding at 5% per annum thereafter for a further nine years.

128. If the foregoing paragraph appears to be expressed in uncertain terms, there is a reason: the Association's case on this point was never clearly articulated. Paragraphs 25 and 26 of the statement of contentions in the amended summons read as follows:

> "25. As at 2 December 1998 the Association did not have any funds in:
>
> (a) the administrative fund; or > (b) sinking fund.
> 26. The Association did not levy any contributions to its administrative or sinking fund until the first annual general meeting of the association held on 28 July 1999."

129. In their written outline dated 12 April 2007 and filed before the commencement of the hearing, Messrs Corsaro and Studdy said the following (paras 47 to 49):

> "47. Australand's conduct in causing the Association to enter into the SMA in the initial period meant the Association was incurring a debt in excess of the amount then available for repayment of the debt from the administrative or the sinking funds. This constituted a breach of section 23(1) of the CLMA.
> 48. Australand is liable to the Association under section 23(5)(a) or (b).
> [140532]
> 49. The debt incurred was not limited to the initial period. Although it was first incurred during the initial period, it continued after that whenever the SMA remained on foot. Alternatively, the loss suffered by the Association was on-going whilst the SMA was on foot."

130. In paragraph 26 of their reply submissions dated 23 April 2007, Messrs Corsaro and Studdy said, among other things:

> "If a liability is incurred in the initial period and continues well after the expiry of the Undertaking given by a developer, and there is insufficient money in the funds, that is the vice that section 23(5) addresses".

131. The "Undertaking" referred to was the undertaking by Australand to pay the Association's outgoings (see para [19(2)] above). It was accepted that such an undertaking had been given and honoured.

132. In their submissions in reply, Messrs Corsaro and Studdy referred to the decision of the Court of Appeal in Bondlake Pty Ltd v The Owners — Strata Plan No 60285 [2005] NSWCA 35: in particular, to the judgment of Giles JA (with whom Handley and McColl JJA agreed) at paras [16] and following. It is plain from para [16] that Giles JA treated the agreement under consideration in that case as requiring payment of the management fee by monthly instalments, and treated the respondent in that case as having incurred an obligation to pay the first monthly instalment on entry into the agreement. The references, and the use sought to be made of them, suggest that the Association would contend that its case based on s 23(2)(b) would succeed even if the only "debt" incurred was that for the first month's instalment of the fee.

133. Mr Corsaro did not advert to this topic in oral address. Thus, the case sought to be made out is left in a state of some obscurity. Given the ways that it has been articulated, I think that the safer course is to approach it on the basis that:

> (1) The Association's case is that s 23(1)(a) was breached on entry into the management agreement, because it then incurred a debt for the first instalment of the management fee and had no funds to pay that debt; but
> (2) In some way that remains unclear, the claim against Australand may extend beyond the amount of that month's debt and to the whole value of the fee thereafter.

134. In its defence to the amended summons, Australand admitted paras 25 and 26 of the Association's contentions. Thus, if the Association did incur a debt when it entered into the management agreement, or for that matter, at any time at least up until the first AGM, Australand admits that the relevant fund of the Association did not then have money available for repayment of that debt. There was never any approval pursuant to s 23(4) of the CLM Act.

135. Mr N Perram SC, who appeared with Mr J S Emmett of counsel for Australand, submitted that:

> (1) no "debt" was incurred, when the agreement was made, for any amount beyond — at most — the first month's fee;
> (2) section 23 applied only to debts that were to be paid out of the administrative fund or the sinking fund, and that it was not applicable in this case because, by reason of Australand's undertaking, there was no such debt; and > (3) section 23 did not apply to contracts governed by s 24.

The decision in Bondlake

136. Bondlake concerned s 113(1)(b) of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (the SSM Act). Section 113(1)(b) (as it stood at the relevant time) provided that an owners corporation could not, during the initial period, incur a debt for an amount exceeding the amount then available for repayment of the debt in the administrative fund or sinking fund without the authority of the Strata Titles Board under s 182 of the SSM Act. Thus, s 113(1)(b) of the SSM Act as it then stood is not materially distinguishable from s 23(1)(a) of the CLM Act.

137. At an extraordinary general meeting of the respondent on 25 May 1999, the respondent, having noted an undertaking by the developer to pay the respondent's outgoings (with presently immaterial temporal restrictions), resolved to enter into a caretaker agreement. That agreement was made on 25 May 1999. It provided for an annual fee (for the first year) of

$84,042, payable by monthly instalments. The first instalment was due on the date of commencement of the agreement. At that time, there was nothing in the administrative or sinking fund.

138. Giles JA (with whom Handley and McColl JJA agreed) held at para [20] that the respondent incurred a debt at the very least for the first instalment of the fee when it entered into the agreement, even if the time for payment was fixed by reference to the date of issue of the invoice: 28 May 1998. His Honour noted, but did not resolve, the argument as to whether the debt incurred extended beyond the first instalment of the fee to the whole of the first year's fee or, indeed, fees falling due thereafter during the life of the caretaker agreement.

139. Giles JA held at paras [18] and [21] that where a debt to which s 113(1)(b) of the SSM Act applied was incurred pursuant to a contract, then the express statutory prohibition of the incurring of the debt extended to an implied statutory prohibition of the making of the underlying contract.

140. His Honour held at para [16] that these statutory consequences followed notwithstanding the developer's undertaking. That was because, as between the appellant and the respondent, it was the respondent who was obliged to pay the debt, even though the respondent had the benefit of the developer's undertaking, and even though in practice it appears to have been the developer that paid the instalments from time to time.

141. The principal question for decision in Bondlake was whether the contract was void for illegality. (The Court of Appeal held that it was not.) That issue does not arise in this case: the Association has expressly disavowed any such suggestion.

Analysis– the first month's instalment

142. By cl 5.6, the Regular Duties Fee was payable by monthly instalments, with the first instalment (subject to adjustment under cl 5.7) due on the date of commencement of the management agreement and instalments thereafter due on the first day of each month.

143. It follows from the decision in Bondlake that, for the purposes of s 23(1)(a), when the Association entered into the management agreement, it incurred a debt for the first month's instalment (adjusted as necessary) of the regular duties fee. Neither the existence nor the performance of Australand's undertaking intercepted or prevented the incurring of that debt.

144. The reasoning in Bondlake renders Australand's first submission (that "debt" does not include a future or continent debt) irrelevant. It is sufficient for the operation of s 23(1)(a) that when the Association entered into the management agreement, it incurred a debt for the first month's instalment of the fee.

145. Further, the decision in Bondlake requires the rejection of Australand's second submission (that the effect of Australand's undertaking was that the relevant debt was not one to be paid out of the Association's administrative or sinking funds).

146. Finally, the decision in Bondlake must lead to the rejection of Australand's third submission (that s 23 of the CLM Act does not apply to agreements authorised by s 24). The caretaker agreement with which the Court of Appeal was concerned in Bondlake was an agreement authorised by Part 4A of Chapter 2 of the SSM Act. It would have been possible to enter into a caretaker agreement that did not infringe s 113(1)(b) of the SSM Act. Equally, it would have been open to Australand and Arrow to enter into a site management agreement that did not infringe s 23(1)(a) of the CLM Act. Nothing in s 24 authorises an agreement to be made in breach of, or confines the operation of, the prohibition in s 23.

147. Thus, I conclude that when the Association entered into the management agreement, it incurred a debt — for the first month's instalment of the Regular Duties Fee payable to Arrow — that exceeded the amount then available for the repayment of that debt from the Association's administrative or sinking fund.

148. That conclusion makes it necessary to consider s 23(5). What is recoverable (as debt or damages respectively) is any liability incurred, or loss suffered, because of a breach of (here) s 23(1)(a).

149. The language of para (a) speaks of recovery, as a debt, of "any liability incurred by the Association … ". That may be contrasted with para (a) of subs (1), which uses the expression "incur a debt". The liability to which para (a) of subs (5) refers is, for the purposes of this case, a liability incurred by the Association because of the breach of para (a) of subs (1). In other words, what is recoverable under subs (5)(a) is any liability incurred by the Association because it incurred a debt to Arrow in excess of the amount then available in its funds for the repayment of that debt.

150. In the present case, there is no evidence that the Association has incurred any liability because it incurred a debt to Arrow in excess of the amount then available to it in its funds for the repayment of that debt. Nor would one expect to find that the Association incurred any liability, for the purposes of subs (5)(a), in circumstances where, on the evidence, Australand in fact, and pursuant to the undertaking that it had given, paid debts incurred by the Association from time to time.

151. Thus, I conclude, the Association is not entitled to recover any amount — whether for one month's instalment of the management fee, or more — from Australand pursuant to subs (5)(a).

152. The claim pursuant to subs (5)(b) must also fail. The Association has not proved any such liability or loss. Again, the evidence indicates that Australand, true to its undertaking, met the Association's obligations until the Association was in a financial position to do so.

153. It follows that the Association has not made good its claim for relief pursuant to s 23(5).

Analysis — future liability

154. In Hawkins and Others v Bank of China (1992) 26 NSWLR 562, Gleeson CJ (with whom Sheller JA agreed) pointed out at 572 that the word "debt" may include a contingent liability. On the same page, his Honour said that a debt may be "incurred" by "the undertaking of an engagement to pay a sum of money at a future time, even if the engagement is conditional and the amount involved uncertain." As his Honour had pointed out earlier on the same page, "[t]he words "incurs" and "debt" are not words of precise and inflexible denotation. … [T]hey are to be applied in a practical and commonsense fashion, consistent with the context and with the statutory purposes."

155. The statutory context in this case includes s 24 of the CLM Act. That section contemplates that associations may enter into long term management agreements, subject only to adequate disclosure or ratification. If Mr Corsaro's submission is to be accepted, any association that does enter into long term management agreements must at the same time pay into its administrative fund an amount sufficient to cover the whole of that association's present and future liabilities under such an agreement. I do not believe that the legislature intended that this should be done.

156. In Bondlake, Giles JA at para [37] identified the policy underlying s 113(1)(b) of the SSM Act as being to protect those who became proprietors of lots in the strata plan "from burdensome dealings undertaken by the developer prior to the Owners Corporation coming under the control of the lot owners." Similar considerations would apply to s 23(1)(a) of the CLM Act. There may also be an additional purpose: to protect third parties to whom an association incurs debts during the initial period.

157. Neither purpose requires more than that debts that are, or become, due and payable during the initial period be covered by the administrative fund. In this case, Arrow could not have demanded payment of anything more than the instalment due on the signing of the management agreement, and (as they fell due for payment) monthly instalments thereafter. There was no need for the administrative fund to make provision for amounts that would not fall due for payment within the initial period.

158. It may be that, for the purposes of s 23(1)(a) of the CLM Act, the Association incurred a debt to Arrow as each monthly instalment fell due in accordance with the terms of the management agreement. But even if it did, the only relevance of this can be to the claim under s 23(5). What I have said in paras [149] to [151] above would apply equally to any such claim for subsequent monthly instalments.

159. Australand relied on other matters in answer to this aspect of the Association's case.

[140535]

The conclusion to which I have come makes it unnecessary to consider them.

Conclusion

160. Issue 10 should be answered "yes, at least as to the first month's instalment of the Regular Duties Fee payable under the management agreement" and issue 11 should be answered "no".

Issues 12 to 15, 19, 20, 24 to 27: effectiveness of the assignment; estoppel

161. One might think that if (as I have concluded is the case) the management agreement terminated at the end of the Association's first AGM on 28 July 1999, there was nothing left thereafter that could be the subject of the deed of assignment made on about 30 June 2000. However, Arrow and Bondlake submitted that this result does not follow, for a number of reasons. One group of reasons relates to the estoppel cases that they allege against the Association.

162. Arrow and Bondlake relied on estoppel by representation and conventional estoppel (including estoppel by deed). Further, issue 19 refers to promissory estoppel; it is difficult to see a clear basis for this in the defences of Arrow and Bondlake.

Estoppel by representation

163. Arrow and Bondlake allege that the Association made a number of representations expressly, both in writing and orally, and impliedly, including by conduct.

164. The representations alleged by Arrow are as follows (para 18 of its amended defence to the amended summons):

> "(a) At all material times between 28 July 1999 and 30 June 2000, the plaintiff represented to the first defendant that:
>
> (i) The SMA was binding and enforceable upon each of the plaintiff and the first defendant, and > (ii) The first defendant was bound to perform the contractual obligations imposed upon it under the SMA; and > (iii) The SMA had been ratified on 28 July 1999 by the plaintiff and, or in the alternative, had its effect disclosed for the purposes of s24 of the Community Lands Management Act 1989."

165. The representations alleged by Bondlake are as follows (para 18 of its amended defence to the amended summons):

> "18. Further,
>
> (a) At all material times from 30 June 2000, the plaintiff represented to the second defendant that
>
> (i) The SMA has [sic] binding and enforceable upon each of the plaintiff and the second defendant, and > (ii) The second defendant was bound to perform the contractual obligations imposed upon it under the SMA, and,
> (iii) The SMA had been since 28 July 1999 a binding and enforceable document."

166. In each case, the amended defence particularises in some detail the material relied upon to support the allegation that the relevant representations were made. Speaking at a level of some generality, I think that the evidence supports the proposition that the first and second (but not the third) of the representations alleged by Arrow were made, and that all three of the representations alleged by Bondlake were made.

167. It is not necessary, however, to undertake a detailed analysis of the evidence leading to the conclusion that I have just expressed. That is because, for both Arrow and Bondlake, the only evidence of reliance came from Mr Veron. For the reasons that I have given, I do not accept that aspect of his evidence. Thus, reliance being an essential element of the defence (as in this case it is) of estoppel by representation, in each case that defence fails.

Promissory estoppel

168. As I have indicated, there is no clear "pleading" (to use an inaccurate but convenient term) of a defence of promissory estoppel. The first and second defendants' outline of contentions, filed shortly before the commencement of the hearing, suggested that promissory estoppel was relied upon as an alternative to conventional estoppel. However, the first and second defendants' final submissions appeared, if I may say so, to confuse the question of promissory estoppel with that of conventional estoppel (see paras 99 to 122 of those submissions, noting in particular the categorisation of the alleged promissory estoppel in paras 99 and 100).

169. In view of this confusion, I do not propose to express a concluded view on the defence of promissory estoppel. If it were intended thereby to refer to the defence of estoppel by representation, then I refer to what I have said above. If it were intended thereby to refer to the defence of estoppel by convention (including by deed), then I refer to the following section of these reasons. If it were intended to refer to something separate and distinct, then I have to say that the submissions for the first and second defendant leave me entirely ignorant as to what that might be.

Estoppel by convention

170. Again, the defences did not plead separately and distinctly the facts relied upon in support of the defence of estoppel by convention.

171. In their final written submissions, Arrow and Bondlake stated the basis of the conventional assumption as follows:

> (1) As between the Association and Arrow:
>
> > (a) The assumption by each of them, to the knowledge of the other, from 28 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 (the effective date of the deed of assignment), that their relationship was governed by the terms of the management agreement;
> > (b) Performance by each of them, to the knowledge of the other, of their respective obligations under the management agreement on the basis that it continued to govern the relationship between them; and
> > (c) The recitals in, terms of and execution of the deed of assignment.
>
> (2) As between the Association and Bondlake:
>
> > (a) The recitals in, terms of and execution of the deed of assignment.
> > (b) From 30 June 2000, the assumption by each of them, to the knowledge of the other that their relationship was governed thereafter by the terms of the management agreement as made applicable by the deed of assignment; and
> > (c) Performance by each of them, to the knowledge of the other, of their respective obligations under the management agreement as so made applicable on the basis that it governed the relationship between them.

172. Further, and separately, Arrow and Bondlake relied on the defence of estoppel by deed, arising out of the terms of the recitals in the deed of assignment.

173. The Association took no point as to the inadequacy of the pleading of this aspect of the estoppel case. The statement of agreed issues makes it plain that the Association regarded estoppel by convention and estoppel by deed as being available for argument. It sought to meet those arguments on their merits.

174. The doctrine of estoppel by convention is well understood. It was dealt with very recently by the Court of Appeal (speaking through Tobias JA) in Ryledar Pty Ltd & Anor v Euphoric Pty Ltd [2007] NSWCA 65 at para [193] and following. Brereton J discussed the principles in detail in Moratic Pty Ltd v Lawrence James Gordon & Anor [2007] NSWSC 5 at paras [30] and following. His Honour's analysis was referred to, with evident approval, by Tobias JA in Ryledar at paras [199] to [201].

175. It is not necessary to go into detailed analysis of the doctrine. Neither its existence nor its substance was in dispute; the dispute was to whether it applied in this case.

176. In Estoppel by Conduct and Election (Thomson, 2006), the Hon K R Handley AO QC explained the doctrine of estoppel by convention thus at 115 (omitting citations):

> "When parties make a statement of fact or of mixed fact and law the conventional basis of their transaction, without giving cross warranties, both are estopped from questioning its truth for the purposes of that transaction. Estoppels by convention can be created ad hoc, expressly, by a course of dealings, or by other acts and declarations. In such a case "there must be some mutually manifest conduct by the parties" with the intention of affecting their legal relationship. … This is a form of estoppel by representation which does not depend on the representee's reliance on the truth of the > conventional facts. The representation is not necessarily that the convention is true but that it has been mutually adopted and each party relies on its adoption when they enter into the transaction. A distinctive feature of this form of estoppel is its mutuality … ".

177. In this case, it cannot be disputed that the Association and Arrow conducted their relationship between 28 July 1999 and 30 June 2000 on the basis that it was regulated by the terms of the management agreement. The Association made a number of demands on Arrow for performance of the agreement (perhaps more accurately, for performance of the agreement as the Association perceived that it should operate). Those demands are explicable only on the basis that the Association thought that the agreement was in force, that it was entitled to the benefit of Arrow's promises (as the Association understood them) in it and that Arrow was bound to perform accordingly.

178. Arrow sought to justify its performance under the agreement. Further, on two occasions (each involving numerous letters and attendances) it sought the Association's consent to the assignment of the agreement — firstly to Max Management, and secondly to Bondlake. Again, those actions are consistent only with a belief that the agreement remained in force, that Arrow was bound to perform it and that Arrow was entitled to the benefit of the terms relating to assignment.

179. The Association dealt with those requests for consent on their merits. It did not suggest to Arrow and the prospective assignees that there was nothing to assign, because the management agreement had come to an end. In each case, as I have said, it gave consent — although on conditions — the validity of some of which were the subject of disagreement.

180. Again, the payment and receipt of the remuneration under the agreement can be attributed only to a belief by each party that it was in force. No one suggested that the relationship was one merely from month to month, or ad hoc.

181. More generally, there is no ground for concluding that either party had any occasion whatsoever, during the period in question, to question the continuing validity and effect of the agreement. Neither of them turned their minds to this topic (I have already said that I do not accept Mr Veron's evidence that might suggest that Arrow, through him, did so).

182. All this was confirmed on or about 30 June 2000 when (having negotiated its terms) the Association and Arrow, and Bondlake as well, entered into the deed of assignment. Quite apart from the terms of the recitals to that deed, it is impossible to understand how it could have been made on any assumption other than that the management agreement was in force and effective according to its terms.

183. Further, and as between Arrow and Bondlake, it is clear that each of them entered into the deed of assignment on the basis that it related to a valid management agreement that had effect, and would continue to have effect, according to its terms. There is no other reason for making the deed; and there is no other explanation of the recitals in it.

184. Put shortly, the conventional basis of the dealings between the Association and Arrow from 28 December [sic] 1999 to 30 June 2000 was that the management agreement was in force, valid and effective; and the conventional basis of the transaction between the Association and Bondlake was that the management agreement was in force, valid and effective on 30 June 2000 and would continue so (to some extent modified by the terms of the deed of assignment) thereafter according to its terms.

185. Notwithstanding my view of Mr Veron's evidence, I cannot conceive that he would have permitted Arrow and Bondlake to enter into the deed of assignment had he been told that the conventional basis of the dealings between Arrow and the Association was in law incorrect, because of the operation of s 24(2) of the CLM Act.

186. It is plain that Arrow and Bondlake would each suffer detriment if the Association were now permitted to depart from that convention. Arrow would suffer detriment because it would be exposed to an action for return of the consideration paid to it by Bondlake in connection with the deed of assignment, and perhaps to an action for damages. Bondlake would suffer detriment because it would lose the benefit of the agreement. Whilst it might have remedies as against Arrow, there may well be a question as to Arrow's ability to satisfy any judgment recovered against it.

187. Thus, I conclude, the defence of estoppel by convention is made good.

Issue 15

188. I do not think that issue 15 is intended to relate to the estoppel by convention. But if it is, I do not think that anything relevant for present purposes flows from the Association's notification to Arrow and Bondlake of its current belief that the management agreement had come to an end on 28 December 1999. That is because the relevant detriment was established, at the latest in each case, when the deed of assignment was made. Subsequent notification of a change of position on the Association's part cannot undo that detriment; and permitting the Association to act on its current state of mind would crystallise the consequences of that detriment.

Estoppel by deed

189. The doctrine of estoppel by deed antedates, but is now a subset of, the doctrine of estoppel by convention. In the case of estoppel by deed, the conventional or assumed basis of dealing is that appearing on the face of the deed: customarily, from such facts as may be recited in the deed. Handley explains the doctrine thus at 109 (again omitting citations):

> "This type of estoppel is created when a deed contains one or more statements of specific fact which are adopted as the basis of the transaction. Such a statement is commonly made in a recital but can appear in the operative provisions. … The statement must be certain to every intent, without any ambiguity."

190. In the present case, the basis on which the parties contracted in the deed of assignment is explained clearly, and in my view without ambiguity, in the recitals, which I repeat for convenience:

> "A. The Transferor is the site manager under the Agreement.
> B. The Transferor wants to assign to the Transferee all of the interests, rights and obligations of the Transferor under the Agreement.
> C. The Community Association agrees to the assignment."

191. The "Transferor" is Arrow; the "Agreement" is the management agreement; and the "Transferee" is Bondlake.

192. The first recital is consistent only with the existence of the management agreement, in full force and effect according to its terms, as at the date on which the deed was made (or, if they be different, as at its effective date 30 June 2000). Thus, the existence, validity and effect of the management agreement is made the basis of the deed of assignment. The operative provisions of the deed reflect that:

> (1) The assignment effected by clause 2;
> (2) The consent, and prospective release of Arrow, given by the Association pursuant to clause 3;
> (3) The assumption of responsibility by Bondlake pursuant to clause 4; and > (4) The mutual indemnities given between Arrow and Bondlake pursuant to clause 5.

193. Detriment, in the relevant sense, is established for the reasons given in para [186] above.

194. Thus, if it were necessary to do so (ie, if my conclusion as to conventional estoppel in the wide sense were incorrect), I would conclude that the Association is estopped by its deed from disputing the continued existence and validity, according to its terms, of the management agreement.

Estoppel in the face of a statute

195. The parties devoted some attention, both on paper and in oral address, to this topic. However, it does not seem to me to have any relevance. Section 24(2) of the CLM Act does not render illegal or void an agreement of the kind referred to in subs (1) that continues beyond the term of the first AGM without either disclosure or ratification in accordance with subs (2). It provides, in a simple and straightforward way, that in those circumstances the agreement will terminate at the end of the first AGM. There is no reason why an association and a manager, having made such an agreement and having recognised at the first AGM that it was void, could not contract immediately after the AGM on the same terms.

There is nothing in the policy underlying s 24 that even suggests, let alone requires, the conclusion that an agreement whose termination the section effects should be stigmatised as illegal, void or otherwise offensive to public policy so as to bring into play the somewhat uncertain (as to their application) principles relating to estoppel in the face of a statute. If, as I have suggested is the case, it would be open to parties to renew a management agreement, on identical terms, it must be open to them to achieve the same result through a conventional assumption adopted as the basis of their dealings thereafter.

197. I therefore conclude that the issues presently under consideration should be answered as follows:

(1) Issue 12: no, because estoppel by convention or by deed is made out.
(2) Issue 13: does not arise.
(3) Issue 14: does not arise.
(4) Issue 15: does not arise; but if it did, I would answer it "no".
(5) Issue 16: does not arise; but if it did, I would answer it (on the basis of my conclusions as to the expert evidence) "The evidence does not permit an assessment to be made.".
(6) Issue 19: yes, as to conventional estoppel.
(7) Issue 20: yes.
(8) Issue 24: unnecessary to answer.
(9) Issue 25: unnecessary to answer.
(10) Issue 26: unnecessary to answer.
(11) Issue 27: yes, as to conventional estoppel.

Issues 21, 22 and 23: characterisation of the deed of assignment

198. I said in para [161] above, that Arrow and Bondlake raised several answers to the Association's claim that the management agreement terminated immediately after the first AGM. One group of answers depended on estoppel; and I have dealt with this aspect of the defences. The other group of answers depended on the characterisation of the deed of assignment as bringing into existence, either on its terms as properly construed or by operation of the doctrine of novation, a fresh or separate agreement between the Association and Bondlake on the terms of the management agreement as varied by the deed of assignment.

199. On the view to which I have come as to the estoppel defences, it is not necessary to answer these issues. Since they raise questions of law, and involve no issues of fact other than those that I have found (which are in substance non contentious), I do not think that it is profitable to investigate them further.

200. Accordingly, I answer each of issues 21, 22 and 23: "does not arise".

Issue 28: true value of the services under the management agreement

201. For the reasons that I gave in dealing with the expert evidence (see in particular my conclusions at para [105] above), it is plain that the true value of the services provided under the management agreement, from at least the fourth year onwards, was less than the Regular Duties Fee paid from time to time; and it is likely that this situation will continue into the future for the life of the management agreement (including any options for renewal). However, the evidence does not permit an assessment to be made of the amount of the excess.

202. Issue 28 should be answered accordingly.

Issues 29 to 32: contravention of the Trade Practices Act

203. I have concluded, in considering the question of conventional estoppel (including estoppel by deed), that the Association in its dealings with Arrow and Bondlake did conduct itself on the basis that the management agreement was in force and effective. It follows from my findings on that aspect of the estoppel case that:

(1) As between the Association and Arrow, the management agreement must be taken to have been effective between 12 December 1998 and 30 June 2000; and
(2) As between the Association and Bondlake, the management agreement (as made applicable by the deed of assignment) must be taken to have been effective from 30 June 2000 and, subject to termination in accordance with its terms or some other supervening disabling factor, to continue to be effective in accordance with its terms.

On that basis — ie, in effect, that the Association is held to the relevant common assumptions — I do not think that any question arises of contravention of the Trade Practices Act. It follows that each of issues 29 to 30 should be answered "does not arise".

Issues 1 and 2:

205. I now return to the question of the fiduciary and common law duties alleged against Australand.

Australand's duties to the Association

206. The Association alleged the following in its contentions (paras 10, 11 and 33):

> "10. By entering into the site management agreement with Arrow, the Association incurred a debt during the 'initial period' for an amount in excess of the amount then available for repayment of the debt from the administrative fund or sinking fund.
>
> 11. By deed of assignment dated 30 June 2000 Arrow purported to assign the rights, interests and obligations under the site management agreement to the second defendant ('Bondlake') in circumstances when because of its earlier termination, Arrow was not in a position to make any assignment to Bondlake and Bondlake has no entitlement by virtue of any assignment from Arrow to receive payment from the Association on the basis that the site management agreement is in existence.
>
>
> 33. The developer was able to influence and control the Association's decisions up and until the first annual general meeting. In the circumstances alleged in this summons the developer owed a fiduciary or alternatively a common law duty to the Association as follows:
>
> (a) A duty to act with absolute candour and honesty to the Association.
> (b) A duty not to place itself in a position of conflict or to profit from contracts entered into between the Association and Arrow, without proper disclosure.
> (c) A duty to act in the best interests of the Association in the exercise of a power or discretion affecting the Association's interests.
> (d) A duty not to act to the detriment of the Association.
> (e) A duty of disclosure to enable the Association to make an informed and impartial decision about whether to enter into the site management agreement."

207. Australand's response was as follows (paras 7, 8 and 29):

> "7 In answer to paragraph 10, the third defendant:
>
> (a) admits sub-paragraphs (a), (b) and (c);
> (b) says that the third defendant was able to exercise control over the plaintiff as provided by and subject to the limits set out in:
>
> (i) the community management statement registered with DP 270108 ('Community Management Statement');
> (ii) the Community Lands Management Act 1989 (NSW); and > (iii) As otherwise provided for by law; and
>
> (c) otherwise denies the paragraph.
>
> 8. The third defendant denies paragraph 11.
>
> 29. In answer to paragraph 33, the third defendant:
>
> (a) refers to and repeats its answer to paragraph 10 of the Amended Summons; and > (b) otherwise denies the paragraph."

208. In essence, the Association's case was that Australand, as developer of the community scheme, stood in a position vis-à-vis the Association analogous to that of a promoter vis-à-vis the company promoted. It relied on the judgment of Else-Mitchell J in Re Steel and Others and The Conveyancing (Strata Titles) Act 1961 (1968) 88 WN (Pt 1) (NSW) 467, and on an article by Mr David Bugden, Management Rights — Are Developers Promoters? (1996) QLSJ 281.

209. Australand's submissions on this point were somewhat coy. It did not really engage with the proposition that it was in substance a promoter, and therefore owed the Association duties of the kind held to have been owed by promoters towards the companies that they promote. Instead, its submissions focussed more on the reasons why there was no breach of any duty that might be owed.

The decision in Re Steel

210. The question for decision in Re Steel was whether an administrator should be appointed to a body corporate (to use the terminology relevant at the time). At a time when the developer of the strata plan controlled the body corporate, it made arrangements for the management of the body corporate, which effectively secured that management to nominees or representatives of the promoter. Other proprietors alleged that there were "irregularities in the conduct of the affairs of the body corporate and in the charging and payment of maintenance and other expenses" and a want of full disclosure (Else-Mitchell J at 469).

211. Else-Mitchell J said at 469 that it was clear that the developer "was in the position of a promoter of the strata title enterprise and, as such, that company had a duty to ensure that full disclosure was made to the strata lot holders, apart altogether from the statutory duties cast on it as a member of the council under the [applicable] by laws … ". In my view, his Honour's characterisation of the role of a developer of a strata (or community) scheme is as much applicable today as it was in 1968.

212. Although his Honour concluded that the developer was in the position of a promoter, and as such owed a duty of full disclosure to proprietors, his Honour was concerned with the subsequent conduct of the developer "as self designed [sic: obviously, self-designated] administrator". (His Honour's reference to "a duty to ensure that full disclosure was made" might require further consideration, having regard to the current view that fiduciary duties are proscriptive rather than prescriptive: see para [216] below. But since his Honour's findings of breach appear to relate to breaches of the applicable by-laws — see para [214] below-nothing of present significance turns on this.) His Honour had earlier concluded that the developer, through its control of the body corporate, appointed itself "as administrator for the body corporate under the supervision of" someone who appears to have been the principal of the developer.

213. His Honour found that the developer had not made appropriate disclosure in relation to the affairs of the company. However, that appears to have been non disclosure in the course of acting as a manager, not non disclosure in relation to transactions between the developer (as promoter) and the body corporate.

214. Further, his Honour's findings were, for the main, cast in terms of breach of by laws then applicable (either under the legislation or as adopted by the body corporate). The gravamen of his Honour's finding, and the reason why he held that an administrator should be appointed, appear at pages 470–471. His Honour said that those who managed the affairs of the body corporate (on behalf of the developer):

> " … are at least in a position analogous to company directors; they may even have a higher fiduciary duty, and when they are promoters as well this duty has a dual basis. It is plain that the respondents have failed to recognise that it is their duty to manage the affairs of the body corporate for the benefit of all the lot holders, and that the exercise of any of their powers in circumstances which might suggest a conflict of interest and duty requires them to justify their conduct … .
> There is no doubt in my mind that … there have been breaches of the fiduciary duty which flows from membership of a council of a body corporate … ."

215. Thus, I think, the decision in Re Steel gives little guidance for the application of the principles relating to fiduciaries in the circumstances of this case, where the breach alleged relates specifically to the developer's conduct as promoter.

Fiduciary obligations: the principles

216. It is, and for many years has been, accepted that a fiduciary relationship exists between the promoter of a company and the company promoted. See (by way of example only) Tracy and Others v Mandalay Proprietary Limited (1953) 88 CLR 215. However, to say that one person stands in a fiduciary position vis-à-vis another is to begin, not to end, the enquiry: see the observation of Frankfurter J in Securities and Exchange Commission v Chenery Corporation (1943) 318 US 80 at 85, 86, cited with approval by the majority (McHugh, Gummow, Hayne and Callinan JJ) in Pilmer and Others v Duke Group Limited (In Liquidation) and Others (2001) 207 CLR 165 at 198–199 [77]. Their Honours earlier at 197–198 [74] had referred with approval to the observation of Gaudron and McHugh JJ in Breen v Williams (1996) 186 CLR 71 at 113, that the obligations of a fiduciary are proscriptive — "not to obtain any unauthorised benefit from the relationship and not to be in a position of conflict" — and not positive (or prescriptive): "positive legal duties on the fiduciary to act in the interests of the person to whom the duty is owed."

217. Any analysis of the nature and content of a fiduciary duty must take into account the nature of the relationship and the facts of the particular case. See Gibbs CJ in Hospital Products Limited v United States Surgical Corporation and Others (1984) 156 CLR 41 at 73; and see Mason J in the same case at 102.

218. Clearly, any application in this case of the principles relating to fiduciaries must take account of the way in which the legislature has sought to impose duties of disclosure in certain cases, and to provide for the consequences of non disclosure. But it does not follow from the legislative scheme that all principles relating to the obligations of fiduciaries have been excluded. In particular, I think, nothing in that scheme excludes the basic principle that a fiduciary should not benefit from its position.

219. In Consul Development Pty Limited v D.P.C. Estates Pty Limited (1975) 132 CLR 373, Gibbs J stated the rule, and its basis, as follows at 393:

> " … the rule that a person in a fiduciary position is not entitled to make a profit without the knowledge and assent of the person to whom the fiduciary duty is owed is not limited to cases where the profit arises from the use of the fiduciary position, or of the opportunity or knowledge gained from it. The basis of the rule is that a person in a fiduciary position may not place himself in a situation where his duty and his interest conflict."

220. His Honour said at 394 that "[w]here the rule applies, the liability of the person in a fiduciary position does not depend on the fact that the person to whom the duty is owed has suffered injury or loss."

221. In Kak Loui Chan v Zacharia (1984) 154 CLR 178, Deane J (with whom Brennan and Dawson JJ agreed) referred at 198 to what he called the "fundamental rule" that a fiduciary should not put itself in a position where its interest and duty would or might conflict. However, as his Honour noted, "[t]he equitable principle governing the [fiduciary's] liability to account is concerned not so much with the mere existence of the conflict between personal interest and fiduciary duty as with the pursuit of personal interest by, for example, entering into a transaction or engagement 'in which he has, or can have, a personal interest conflicting … with the interests of those whom he is bound to protect'." (The quotation comes from Lord Cranworth LC in Aberdeen Railway Co v Blaikie Brothers (1854) 1 Macq 461 at 471.)

222. Deane J then pointed out at 198–199 that the "fundamental rule" embodied two themes. His Honour said:

> "The first is that which appropriates for the benefit of the person to whom the fiduciary duty is owed any benefit or gain obtained or received by the fiduciary in circumstances where there existed a conflict of personal interest and fiduciary duty or a significant possibility of such conflict: the objective is to preclude the fiduciary from being swayed by considerations of personal interest. The second is that which requires the fiduciary to account for any benefit or gain obtained or received by reason of or by use of his fiduciary position or of opportunity or knowledge relating from it: the objective is to preclude the fiduciary from actually misusing his position for his personal advantage. … Stated comprehensively in terms of the liability to account, the principle of equity is that a person who is under a fiduciary obligation must account to the person to whom the obligation is owed for any benefit or gain (i) which has been obtained or received in circumstances where a conflict or significant possibility of conflict existed between his fiduciary duty and his personal interest in the pursuit or possible receipt of such a benefit or gain or

[140543]

(ii) which was obtained or received by use or by reason of his fiduciary position or of opportunity or knowledge resulting from it. … [I]t is immaterial that there was no absence of good faith or damage to the person to whom the fiduciary obligation was owed."

223. In Warman International Limited and Another v Dwyer and Others (1995) 182 CLR 544, the High Court of Australia (Mason CJ, Brennan, Deane, Dawson and Gaudron JJ) stated at 557–558 that:

> (1) The liability of a fiduciary to account does not depend on detriment to the plaintiff or dishonesty or lack of good faith on the part of the fiduciary.
> (2) A fiduciary must account for a profit or benefit obtained either when there was actual or possible conflict between duty and interest or by reason of the fiduciary position, or the use of opportunity or knowledge derived from it.
> (3) It matters not that the plaintiff was unwilling, unlikely or unable to make the profit taken by the fiduciary, nor that the fiduciary acted honestly and reasonably.

Application to this case

224. In the present case, significant factors include the following:

> (1) Development of community schemes takes place within a legislative structure (including the CLD Act, the CLM Act and where applicable the SSM Act) that imposes a substantial degree of regulation on the activities of associations during the initial period;
> (2) When the agreement between Australand and Arrow was made, and when the management agreement was made, Australand owned all the unit entitlements in the community scheme;
> (3) The Association's intention to enter into a management agreement generally of the kind that was in fact made was disclosed (although insufficiently for the purposes of s 24(2)(a) of the CLM Act) in the community management statement;
> (4) The decision taken at the inaugural SGM to enter into the management agreement was disclosed in the minutes of that SGM;
> (5) The community management scheme was available on search to any intending purchaser, and the records of the Association (including, no doubt, its copy of the management agreement) were likewise available on search to intending purchasers; and > (6) What was not available on search to intending purchasers was the detail of the agreement between Australand and Arrow, including Arrow's payment of $190,000 for the rights conferred by the management agreement.

225. As I have said in para [211] above, I accept, by analogy with the reasoning of Else-Mitchell J in Re Steel, that it is appropriate to regard the developer of a community scheme as being, vis-à-vis the community association, in a position analogous to that of a promoter of a company. It follows that the relationship between the developer and the community association is a fiduciary relationship. Having thus got to the beginning of the enquiry (see para [216] above), it is necessary to consider the incidents of that relationship.

226. If one returns to the five duties alleged by the Association in para 33 of its contentions (see para [206] above), it may be seen that the first of itself offers no meaningful content by which the standard of Australand's dealings, in relation to the management agreement, could be assessed. The second does, and I do think that Australand owed the Association a duty of the kind alleged. The third is prescriptive rather than proscriptive, and for that reason cannot be accepted. The fourth may be accepted, but adds little if anything of substance to the second. The fifth is misconceived, for the reason given in para [241] below.

227. The management agreement was made a few days after the registration of the community plan for Balmain Cove. (The community plan was registered on 27 November 1998 and the management agreement was made on 2 December 1998.) It is common ground that Australand controlled the Association on 2 December 1998. Australand's representative, Mr Crews, was the only person, apart from Australand's solicitor Ms Laws of Mallesons, who attended the inaugural SGM at which, among other things, the Association was authorised to enter into the management agreement.

228. The terms of the management agreement were negotiated between Australand and Arrow. In my view, the inference that Australand, when it negotiated the terms of that agreement, had regard to its own interests is inescapable. Arrow agreed to pay Australand a consideration — effectively, a premium (as for convenience I shall hereafter call that consideration) — for causing the Association to enter into the agreement. There are three possible explanations for this:

> (1) The revenue stream fixed by the agreement itself, in the form of the Regular Duties Fee, was perceived to be sufficiently valuable to justify the payment of a premium for the opportunity to earn it; or
> (2) The additional remuneration that might be earned by reference to the agreement — including the revenue that might be derived from performance of the Letting Services — was so perceived (see para [233] below); or > (3) The combination of those actual and possible revenues was so perceived.

229. For present purposes, it does not seem to me to matter which of the three explanations is correct. Whichever is correct, the opportunity to earn the revenue — the opportunity for which the premium was paid — was an opportunity derived from entry into the management agreement. The management agreement was made by the Association, not by Australand. If a premium was to be paid for the making of that agreement, it should have been paid to the Association and not to Australand.

230. Because the consideration for the Association's entry into the management agreement was paid to Australand and not to the Association, it was in Australand's interests to ensure that the terms of that agreement were sufficiently generous to justify the consideration. However, Australand's duty to the Association required that the management agreement be made on the best terms commercially available to the Association.

231. There was a clear conflict between Australand's interest and its duty. Australand's interest was to extract the maximum price from Arrow. That conflicted, or might conflict, with its duty to the Association: to get the benefit of management services at the most reasonable terms commercially available. Further, to the extent that the management agreement provided for an "excessive" remuneration (see para [105(4)] above), Australand acted to the detriment of the Association in causing it to enter into the management agreement on the terms contained in that agreement.

232. There can be no doubt that Australand made a profit by causing Arrow to enter into the management agreement. In substance, Australand sold to Arrow the benefit of the rights created (or that would be created) pursuant to the management agreement. Australand did this by causing the Association, for a payment not to it but to Australand, to give away its right to secure management services on the open market, and on such terms (including as to remuneration and duration) that it might be able to negotiate. In this context, it is worth bearing in mind that, whatever may be the shortcomings in the expert evidence, it is plain, following from what I have said in para [105] above, that the management agreement is more than generous to the manager. Indeed, it can hardly be supposed that Arrow would have agreed to pay $190,000 for the rights unless it thought it were getting the opportunity to make a reasonable return not just on the cost to it of performing its obligations under the agreement but also on the premium of $190,000 that it paid.

233. I should mention that Mr Veron sought to explain this by saying that the real value of the management agreement lay not in the remuneration for the Regular Duties, but in the opportunity to provide "Letting Services". Although there is no doubt that the management agreement does entitle the manager to perform those services (see clause 9), there is no evidence of their extent or profitability. There is no reason to treat this evidence in any way differently to Mr Veron's other evidence; but even if (contrary to what I have said in para [37] above) I were to accept it, it would not assist Australand, for the reasons given in paras [228] to [230] above.

234. Thus, I conclude that:

> (1) Australand put itself in a position where its interest conflicted with its duty to the Association;

(2) Australand thereby breached the fiduciary duty that I have found it owed to the Association (see para [226] above); and
(3) Australand garnered a profit for itself, in the form of the premium of $190,000, through its exploitation of its control of the Association.

Disclosure

235. In some cases, what is prima facie a breach of the fiduciary duty not to make a profit may be cured by adequate disclosure. Australand did not suggest that it had disclosed to the Association the relevant terms — including, specifically, the consideration payable and paid — of its agreement with Arrow for the "sale" of the management rights. It did however rely on disclosures in relation to the management agreement that, it submitted, were made to prospective purchasers.

236. The question thus arises as to what is meant by "adequate disclosure" in the specific context. To my mind, that question is not to be answered either in the abstract or simply by reference to cases such as those involving sales by the promoter to the company of the promoter's own property (see for example the seminal case of Emile Erlanger and Others v The New Sombrero Phosphate Company and Others (1878) 3 App Cas 1218). The first step is to identify those to whom the "proper disclosure" is required to be made. The second is to consider, by reference to the specific duty and the particular facts of the case, what it is that should be disclosed. That exercise is to be undertaken bearing in mind that the question is not whether there is a duty to disclose but, rather, whether such disclosure as has been made negates an existing breach of duty (see para [241] below).

237. Further, where there is a relevant statutory scheme, an examination of the nature and sufficiency of the disclosure should take into account the statutory scheme, including in particular in this case the requirements of s 24 of the CLM Act.

238. Australand submitted that it was open to it to make adequate disclosure either by disclosure of all relevant facts to a completely independent board of directors (which did not occur in this case), or by such disclosure to the existing and potential members of the Association. It relied on what Austin J said in Aequitas v A.E.F.C. (2001) 19 ACLC 1006 at 1060 [293], where his Honour accepted the statement of principle in the 6th Edition of Gower, Principles of Modern Company Law:

> "The position therefore seems to be that disclosure must be made to the company either by making it to an entirely independent board or to the existing or potential members as a whole. If the first method is employed the promoter will be under no further liability to the company, although the directors will be liable to the subscribers if the information has not been passed on … . If the second method is adopted disclosure must be made in the prospectus, or otherwise, so that those who are all or become members, as a result of the transaction in which the promoter was acting as such, have full information regarding it. A partial or incomplete disclosure will not do; the disclosure must be explicit."

239. In essence, Australand submitted that adequate disclosure was made to prospective purchasers of the terms of the management agreement, and that no more was required. It relied on:

(1) The statements in clause 43 of the community management statement, this being a document required to be, and that the evidence suggests was in fact, attached to contracts for sale; and
(2) The proposition that the management agreement itself was disclosed to purchasers because it was annexed to the minutes of the inaugural SGM.

240. It is I think likely that intending purchasers would have become aware of the existence of the management agreement, and that they could have ascertained its terms had they so desired. However, none of the disclosures that was made would have alerted any prospective purchaser to the fact that Arrow considered the rights given to it by the management agreement sufficiently valuable to pay $190,000 to Australand for Australand's service in causing the Association to enter into the management agreement.

241. It is necessary to bear in mind the role of informed consent in this context. As the majority (Brennan CJ, Gaudron, McHugh and Gummow JJ) put it in Maguire and Another v Makaronis and Another (1997) 188 CLR 449 at 467, a fiduciary has "no duty as such … to obtain an informed consent … . Rather, the existence of an informed consent would … negate what otherwise was a breach of duty."

242. Informed consent would require, at a minimum, the disclosure of all relevant information: Queensland Mines Limited v Hudson (1978) 52 ALJR 399 at 403. I say "at a minimum" because, as the majority pointed out in Maguire at 466, "[w]hat is required for a fully informed consent is a question of fact in all the circumstances of each case and there is no precise formula which will determine in all cases if fully informed consent has been given … ."

243. In Fexuto Pty Ltd v Bosnjak Holdings Pty Ltd and Others (2001) 37 ACSR 672, Spigelman CJ said at 693 [124] that the word "relevant" in this context "imports … an objective standard." On this approach, disclosure of the premium of $190,000 would be material if, viewed objectively, that information could bear in a rational way on a prospective purchaser's consideration of the terms of the management agreement.

244. Australand submitted that it was not necessary for prospective purchasers to know of the payment of the premium. It said that what was relevant to them was "full information about the present value and future liabilities of the … Association" (final submissions, para 73). It relied on the statement by Hutley JA in Walden Properties Ltd v Beaver Properties Pty Ltd [1973] 2 NSWLR 815 at 847 that "a person subject to a fiduciary duty to provide information can escape liability by showing that the information which he failed to disclose could not have caused any change in the attitude of the principal."

245. There are difficulties in the application of this observation to the facts of the present case. Firstly, what Hutley JA said was predicated on the existence of "a fiduciary duty to provide information". For the reasons given by the majority in Maguire at 467 (see para [241] above), this is not such a case; it is instead a case where a breach of a negative or proscriptive duty may be overcome by the provision of appropriate information. Secondly, as Spigelman CJ pointed out in Fexuto at 694 [134], Hutley JA's formulation "appears to focus on issues of causation, not informed consent", and therefore raises the application of the reasoning in Brickenden v London Loan & Savings Co [1934] 3 DLR 465.

246. Nonetheless, I think, what Hutley JA said in Walden may be taken as stating in effect a negative test of relevance: information may be regarded as irrelevant if its disclosure would not have caused any change in attitude. On this analysis, his Honour's observation lends some support to the approach that I have stated in para [243] above.

247. Australand's submission fails to take account of the fact that the subject of the assessment is the management agreement as a whole, and not just "the present value and future liabilities of the … Association". Prospective purchasers could well wish to understand not only the benefits and obligations that the management agreement conferred and imposed on the Association, but also the value of those benefits to the Association. I think that it could well be material to an assessment of the management agreement to know that the original manager perceived the income streams that might flow under it as sufficiently valuable to warrant the payment of a substantial premium for the grant of the agreement. A purchaser armed with that information could well conclude that the Association might be overpaying for the benefits that it would receive under the agreement, and that his or her liability (by way of levies) might be inflated to accommodate that overpayment.

248. It is one thing to say that levies are high because of the wide range and high quality of the services provided. It is quite another to say that levies are high because payment for such services as are provided is being made at an inflated rate. Whilst it may be accepted that the ultimate question for a prospective purchaser is the amount of the levies, that cannot be extricated from the purposes for which the levies are paid, and the value of the underlying benefits.

249. In substance, Australand's approach to this question does not focus on the nature of the breaches of fiduciary duty that I have found. It focuses on one aspect of that breach — the management agreement — but ignores the other aspect — the agreement with Arrow, including payment and receipt of a premium for Australand's services in causing the Association to enter into the management agreement. Australand's submissions assume that the only relevant disclosure required is in relation to the terms of the management agreement. They do not address what seems to me to be the critical feature: that the management agreement had its genesis in a separate agreement undertaken by Australand in breach of its fiduciary duty to the Association.

250. Thus, I conclude, the breach of duty that I have found is not negated by disclosure.

Unanimous consent

251. Australand appeared to rely alternatively on the doctrine of unanimous consent. It submitted that there had been full disclosure to its current "member" — ie, itself — at the time of the impugned conduct. No doubt, Australand knew (as prospective purchasers did not) the full details of the transaction. Australand accepted that the doctrine of unanimous consent may not be applicable to a breach of fiduciary duty alleged against a promoter. However, it submitted, the general principle relating to unanimous consent should apply in this case.

252. There is no doubt that the unanimous consent of shareholders in a company may authorise or validate an action of the directors of that company which otherwise would be voidable, as involving a breach of fiduciary duty. See (to cite one case out of many) Pascoe Ltd (in liq) v Lucas (1999) 33 ACSR 357 at 386 [264] and following, where Lander J (with whom Millhouse and Duggan JJ agreed) discussed the rule, its application and exceptions to it. His Honour pointed out at 387 [270] that there was no need for a formal decision of the shareholders; informal consent could be sufficient; and this is so a fortiori where the corporation has but one shareholder.

253. The only "unanimous consent" that might be inferred in this case was that given by Australand at the time it owned all the unit entitlements in the community scheme. But, as the promoter cases make clear, the consent of the promoter does not excuse a breach of fiduciary duty. That was the whole point of the decision in Erlanger. The reason why that is so was explained by Lord O'Hagan in Erlanger at 1255 as depending on the obligation to have "careful regard to the protection of future shareholders."

254. Australand's submissions on this point depended on the proposition that the full disclosure that was required to be made was full disclosure only of the terms of the management agreement. For the reasons that I have given above, I do not accept that submission. Full disclosure required revelation of the fact that Arrow had paid a premium of $190,000 to Australand for Australand's services in causing the Association to enter into the management agreement.

255. It is therefore not necessary to explore in detail the extent to which, or the ways in which, the principles relating to unanimous consent might qualify the principles relating to promoters' duties. It is sufficient to observe that if disclosure by the defaulting fiduciary promoter to itself is sufficient, the promoter cases could not have been decided as they were.

Conclusions

256. Thus, I conclude:

(1) Australand was in substance the promoter of the security scheme;
(2) In that capacity, Australand was obliged not to permit its own interest to conflict with its duty to the Association;
(3) Australand breached that duty by receiving the premium of $190,000 for causing the Association to enter into the management agreement; and
(4) That breach of duty has not been negated by disclosure to prospective members of the Association;
(5) Nor has it been negated by the unanimous consent of the members of the Association at the time the breach occurred.

257. On that basis, it is not necessary to consider the alternative common law duty of care (the subject of issue 2).

258. Issue 1 should be answered "yes, as to the duties alleged in paras (b) and (d) but not otherwise"; issue 2 should be answered "does not arise"; and issue 3 should be answered "yes, as to the fiduciary duties identified in the answer to issue 1".

Issues 4, 5, 6 and 6A: equitable compensation, account of profits, damages

259. The Association submitted that it was entitled to receive from Australand:

> (1) Equitable compensation, being the loss suffered by the Association from entry into the management agreement; and
> (2) An account of the profit made by Australand when it caused the Association to enter into the management agreement.

260. It is clear that the range of remedies for breach of fiduciary duty includes both equitable compensation and account of profits. See Meagher, Gummow and Lehane's Equity Doctrines and Remedies (4th Edition, Meagher, Heydon and Leeming, 2002) at [5-245], [5-260]. However, as the Court pointed out in Warman at 559, the remedies are in the alternative (I omit citations):

> "Ordinarily a fiduciary will be ordered to render an account of the profits made within the scope and ambit of his duty. Of course, if the loss suffered by the plaintiff exceeds the profits made by the fiduciary, the plaintiff may elect to have a compensatory remedy against the fiduciary. That election will bind the plaintiff."

261. In the present case, there are two difficulties with the remedy of equitable compensation. The first relates to s 24(2) of the CLM Act. The second relates to the less than satisfactory state of the expert evidence.

262. The effect of s 24(2) is that the management agreement terminated at the end of the first AGM. It is at least arguable that the loss to which equitable compensation might be directed should stop when, in accordance with s 24(2), the management agreement terminated. (By reason of Australand's undertaking, there was no loss up until this time.) The Association did not address this difficulty in its submissions.

263. The second question is one of proof. The claim for equitable compensation is framed (see prayer 5 of the amended summons) as a claim for "the difference between the amount found as the true benefit received and the amount actually paid" for the services rendered to the Association under the management agreement. The deficiencies in the expert evidence are such that it is not possible to assess "the true benefit received" (or, perhaps more accurately, the value of that true benefit). Nor does the evidence permit any assessment to be made on the basis of comparison with an "arm's length" agreement. (Nor, for that matter does the expert evidence permit the quantification of the present value of the amounts paid and payable under the management agreement according to its terms.)

264. Thus, in my view, the appropriate remedy is an account of profits. That is a remedy appropriate to secret commission cases (see eg Reading v Attorney General [1951] AC 507); the present case is in many ways similar to the secret commission cases. Further, as pointed out in para [220] above, it is not necessary, before awarding an account of profits, to demonstrate that the beneficiary has suffered loss equal to the amount of the profit made by the fiduciary — or, indeed, any loss at all.

265. It is unnecessary to consider the question of damages for breach of a common law duty of care; but the difficulties of proof to which I have adverted in connection with equitable compensation would apply equally in this context also.

266. Thus, I conclude that issue 4 should be answered "no"; issue 5 should be answered "yes"; issue 6 should be answered "does not arise"; and issue 6A should be answered "does not arise".

Summary of conclusions

267. For convenience I set out each of the issues, together with its answer:

> (1) Whether the third defendant ("Australand"), when it caused the plaintiff (the "Association") to enter into the Site Management Agreement (the "SMA") with the first defendant ("Arrow") on 2 December 1998, owed the Association a fiduciary duty to:
>
> (a) Act with absolute candour and honesty to the Association;

(b) Not to place self in a position of conflict or to profit from contracts entered into between the Association and Arrow, without proper disclosure;
(c) Act in the best interest of the Association in the exercise of a power or discretion affecting the Association's interests;

[140549]

(d) Not to act to the detriment of the Association; and
(e) To disclose relevant matters to the Association to enable it to make an informed and impartial decision about whether to enter into the SMA.

Answer: Yes, as to the duties alleged in paras (b) and (d), but not otherwise.

2. Whether Australand as at 2 December 1998 owed the Association a duty of care to avoid it suffering economic loss.

Answer: Does not arise.

3. If the answer to questions 1 and/or 2 is yes, did Australand's conduct in causing the Association to enter into the SMA with Arrow breach its fiduciary duty and/or its common law duty?

Answer: Yes, as to the fiduciary duties identified in the answer to issue 1.

4. If the answer to question 3 is yes, in so far as breach of fiduciary duty is concerned, is the Association entitled to equitable compensation from Australand being the difference between the amount payable under the SMA and an amount payable under an agreement entered into at arm's length as at 2 December 1998?

Answer: No (but on the basis that the evidence does not permit any such quantification).

5. If the answer to question 3 is yes, in so far as breach of fiduciary duty is concerned, is Australand also liable to account to the Association for the profit of $190,000 it made by causing the Association to enter into the SMA?

Answer: Yes (save for the word "also").

6. If the answer to question 3 is yes, in so far as breach of common law duty is concerned, is Australand liable in damages to the Association for economic loss, the measure being the difference between the amounts paid by the Association under the SMA and the amounts that would have been paid on an arm's length transaction entered into as at 2 December 1988 [sic: obviously, 1998]?

Answer: Does not arise.

6A. If:

(a) the Site Management Agreement terminated; and
(b) the first and second defendants establish that the plaintiff is not entitled to rely on that fact;

then the question is whether the loss suffered by the plaintiff is caused by the actions of the third defendant or its own actions.

Answer: Does not arise.

7. (a) Was the effect of the SMA disclosed in the Association's Community Management Statement registered on 27 November 1998 within the meaning of s 24(2)(a) of the Community Land Management Act, 1989 (the "CLMA")?

Answer: No.

(b) Was the SMA ratified at the first Annual General meeting of the plaintiff?

Answer: No.

8. If the answer to question 7(a) and (b) is no, then did the SMA terminate at the end of the Association's first annual general meeting on 28 July 1999?

Answer: Yes.

9. If the answer to question 8 is no, then why not?

Answer: Does not arise.

10. By entering into the SMA, did the Association incur a debt during the "initial period" for an amount in excess of the amount then available for repayment of the debt from the administrative fund or the sinking fund of the Association?

Answer: Yes, at least as to the first month's instalment of the Regular Duties Fee payable under the management agreement.

11. If the answer to question 10 is yes, is Australand liable to the Association pursuant to s 23(5)(a) or (b) of the CLMA?
Answer: No.
12. Was the assignment of the SMA from Arrow to Bondlake on 30 June 2000 ineffective?
Answer: No.
13. If the SMA terminated on 28 July 1999, can the conduct of the Association pleaded in paragraphs 18 and 19 of Arrow's Response and paragraphs 18 to 20 of the second defendant's ("Bondlake") Response give rise to the alleged estoppels?

[140550]

Answer: Does not arise.
14. If the answer to question 13 is no, were the payments made by the Association to Arrow and Bondlake made under a mistake of law requiring Arrow and Bondlake to make restitution to the extent of the payments exceeding the true benefit received by the Association?
Answer: Does not arise.
15. If the answer to question 13 is yes, do the estoppels cease to have any operation from the time when Arrow and Bondlake were on notice that the Association believed the SMA had been terminated?
Answer: Does not arise; but if it did, it should be answered "No".
16. If the SMA terminated on 28 July 1999, what is the value of the true benefit of the services received by the Association from 2 December 1998 to date?
Answer: Does not arise; but if it did, it should be answered "The evidence does not permit an assessment to be made".
17. In relation to 7(b) above, does the term "ratification" in s 24 include implied ratification?
Answer: Unnecessary to decide.
18. If yes to question 17, does the conduct of the plaintiff amount to ratification in accordance with s 24 ?
Answer: Unnecessary to decide; but if it were, it would be answered "No".
19. Did the conduct of the plaintiff and the first defendant prior to and after 28 July 1999, create an estoppel (promissory or conventional) which either (a) precludes the plaintiff from now asserting that the SMA was not unenforceable at all times prior to the execution of the deed of assignment on or about 20 June 2000, or (b) precludes the plaintiff from now asserting that the SMA was not unenforceable at all times after 31 August 1999?
Answer: Yes, as to conventional estoppel.
20. If yes to question 19(a) or (b), will the first defendant suffer detriment if the plaintiff is permitted to depart from that conduct?
Answer: Yes.
21. Was an agreement made on 30 June 2000 between the plaintiff and the second defendant that in consideration of the plaintiff paying to the second defendant the regular duties fee, the second defendant would perform the obligations under the SMA as if it was named "site manager" in the SMA?
Answer: Does not arise.
22. Was there a separate and new agreement created by the novation of the SMA by 30 June 2000.
Answer: Does not arise.
23. Was there a separate and enforceable agreement between the plaintiff and the second defendant made on or about 30 June 2000 by deed that the second defendant would perform the obligations under the SMA as if it was named the "site manager" in the SMA?
Answer: Does not arise.
24. Did the following:

(a) The assignment of the SMA from the first defendant to the second defendant effective 30 June 2000;
(b) The plaintiff's consent to that assignment; and
(c) The continued operation of the SMA subsequent to the assignment, create an assumption that the SMA was valid and enforceable and capable of assignment?

Answer: Unnecessary to answer.
25. If yes to question 24, has the second defendant relied upon the assumption to its detriment?
Answer: Unnecessary to answer.
26. If yes to question 24, is it unjust to allow the plaintiff to depart from the assumption?
Answer: Unnecessary to answer.
27. Did the second defendant and the plaintiff in executing the deed of assignment on or about 30 June 2000 conduct themselves on the common assumption that the deed of assignment created a new agreement between the plaintiff and the second defendant such that an estoppel (promissory or conventional) now prevents the plaintiff from denying that assumption?

[140551]

Answer: Yes, as to conventional estoppel.
28. Has the plaintiff established that the true value of the services provided under the SMA was other than the regular duty fee paid by the plaintiff from time to time?
Answer: Yes, in that the evidence does show that from about the fourth year of the term of the management agreement the Regular Duties Fee was excessive; but the evidence does not permit an assessment to be made of the extent to which it was excessive.
29. Has the plaintiff contravened the Trade Practices Act 1974 (Cwth) ("TPA") by conduct comprising representations to the first and/or second defendants that the SMA is binding and enforceable;
Answer: Unnecessary to answer.
30. If the answer to question 29 is yes:

(a) Is the first defendant entitled to relief under sections 80, 82 or 87 of the TPA? and
(b) Is the second defendant entitled to relief under s 80, s 82 or s 87 of the TPA? or
(c) In respect of the second defendant, that it was additionally bound to perform the duties and obligations of the SMA under a fresh agreement as if it was named as the site manager in the SMA and was entitled to receive the remuneration there-under.

Answer: Does not arise.
31. If the answer to either 30(a) or 30(b) is yes, what relief is either the first defendant or second defendant entitled?
Answer: Does not arise.
32. In the event that an injunction in favour of either the first or second defendant is declined in the exercise of the Court's discretion, although the basis of an injunction is made out, is either the first or second defendant entitled to equitable damages?
Answer: Does not arise.

Relief

268. The relief claimed by the amended summons included:

(1) A declaration that the management agreement "came to an end" at the conclusion of the first AGM, by operation of s 24 of the CLM Act.
(2) A declaration that there was nothing that could have been assigned by Arrow to Bondlake pursuant to the deed of assignment.
(3) A declaration that Bondlake has and had no right to provide services to the Association, and the Association has no corresponding obligation to pay Arrow, "under the [deed of] assignment or otherwise".
(4) A declaration of the true benefits received by the Association from Arrow and Bondlake.
(5) Equitable compensation representing the difference between the true value of those benefits and the amounts actually paid.
(6) A declaration that Australand owed the Association fiduciary and common law duties of care.
(7) A declaration that Australand breached those duties.
(8) Damages for breach of duty.

(9) An account of profits, with an order for payment.

269. The parties' submissions did not deal in detail with the Association's various claims for relief.

270. As to the first declaration sought: I have concluded that the effect of s 24(2) of the CLM Act is that the management agreement did terminate at the end of the first AGM. However, since I have concluded that the Association is estopped from asserting this, a declaration to the effect prayed would lack utility. For the same reason, no declarations should be made as sought by prayers 2 and 3 of the amended summons.

271. As to prayers 4 and 5: for the reasons that I have indicated, the evidence does not permit an assessment of the relevant amounts. Thus (as to prayer 4) no declaration should be made; and (as to prayer 5) no order can be made. In addition, as to prayer 5, there is a problem flowing from the estoppel (as raised by issue 6A).

272. I have concluded that Australand did owe the Association a fiduciary duty, that it breached that duty by, for reward to itself, causing the Association to enter into the management agreement, and that the breach has not been negated by adequate disclosure. I have not concluded that Australand owed or breached any common law duty of care. Again, there seems to me to be no utility in making a declaration of breach, particularly in circumstances where the appropriate remedy is an account of profits, where the amount of the profit is clear and where it is not necessary, for the taking of those accounts, to make a declaration setting out the terms of the duty and its breach.

273. As to prayers 8, 9 and 10: there should be no award of damages. There should however be an account of profits and an order for payment.

274. The result would appear to be that the proceedings should be dismissed as against Arrow and Bondlake, but that the Association should succeed against Australand to the extent just indicated. In the ordinary way, costs should follow the relevant events. However, I think, the appropriate course is to give the parties an opportunity to consider these reasons, and to direct the parties to bring in short minutes of order to give effect to these reasons. If the parties cannot agree on the form of the orders to be made, or as to costs, then I will hear further argument.

Order

275. Thus, I make the following orders:

(1) Stand the proceedings over for mention at 9.30 am on Wednesday 20 June 2007.
(2) Direct the parties to bring in short minutes of order to give effect to these reasons.
(3) Reserve for further consideration the question of costs.
(4) Direct any party seeking orders for costs to notify the party or parties against whom the orders are sought of the orders sought and in brief the reasons why they are sought; any such notification to be given within 14 days of the date of publication of these reasons; a copy of any such notification to be delivered to my associate.

Court citation: #2007] NSWCA 207

New South Wales Court of Appeal

16 August 2007

Community schemes — Management — By-laws — Exclusive use by-laws — By-law giving proprietor of strata lot exclusive use of one of four lifts in building — By-law requiring proprietor to pay all maintenance costs in relation to relevant lift and 25% of costs relating to lift system generally — Proprietor pays sums specified in by-law, but owners corporation also claiming contribution from proprietor for lift system costs in quarterly levy notices — Whether owners corporation liable to repay contributions levied in quarterly notices — Whether by-law capping proprietor's liability for lift system costs at 25% — Whether contract law principles applicable to construction of by-laws — Strata Titles Act 1973 (NSW) (repealed), s 58(5), (7).

A 44-storey building in Sydney comprised a motel and residential units. The motel was lot 1 in the relevant strata plan and included a ground-floor lobby, a car-parking level and motel accommodation on levels 6–15 of the building. The unit entitlement of lot 1 was 19.382% of the total number of units in the strata scheme.

The building was serviced by four lifts. The motel had de facto exclusive use of lift 4. Later, its exclusive use of the lift was formalised in a special by-law (by-law 21) made under s 58(7) of the now-repealed Strata Titles Act 1973 (NSW). By-law 21 read as follows:

> "The proprietor for the time being of lot 1 shall be entitled to the exclusive use and enjoyment of the lift known as Lift No. 4 on the following terms and conditions: —
>
> > (i) The Body Corporate shall be responsible for the proper maintenance and keeping in a state of good and serviceable repair and the cleaning, replacement and running costs of the lift;
> > (ii) Such proprietor shall pay to the Body Corporate such sums as are identified to it by the Body Corporate for the repair, maintenance, renewal, replacement and running costs of such lift being:—
> >
> > > (a) those attributed directly to Lift No. 4;
> > > (b) One quarter of the costs attributed to the running and routine maintenance, servicing and repair of the lift system.
> > > …"

Tate (the proprietor) purchased the motel. Thereafter, he received special levy notices from the body corporate/owners corporation for expenses in relation to the lift system, pursuant to by-law 21. He paid the amounts levied. He also made general contributions to the administrative and sinking funds in accordance with the levy notices issued to all proprietors every three months. The special levy notices required the proprietor to pay 25% of the lift system costs (by-law 21(ii)(b)). The general, quarterly levy notices required the proprietor to pay 19.382% of the total contributions levied for the strata scheme in accordance with his unit entitlement.

The lift system costs were levied in the quarterly levy notices. Therefore, the proprietor, in addition to paying 25% of the lift system costs pursuant to by-law 21(ii)(b), was also required to pay a further 19.382% of the same costs. The proprietor contended that by-law 21 capped his liability for the lift system costs at 25% and, therefore, that he had paid too much. He sued the owners corporation in the Supreme Court of New South Wales to recover the alleged overpayments as money had and received by the owners corporation to the use of the proprietor.

The proprietor's proceedings were successful. The trial judge, construing by-law 21 as a contract for the exclusive use and enjoyment of lift 4, held that the mutual intention of the owners corporation and the proprietor for the time being of lot 1 was that: (1) all costs relating to lift 4 were to be paid solely by the proprietor; (2) 25% of all costs attributable to the lift system were to be paid by the proprietor; and (3) the remaining 75% of the lift system costs were to be paid by the remaining proprietors of the strata scheme. Central to his Honour's determination of the parties' mutual intention was the "surrounding circumstance" of the motel's prior de facto exclusive use of lift 4. His Honour held that it could not have been intended that the proprietor would have to contribute 44.382% (25% + 19.382%) of the lift system costs merely to convert the de facto exclusive use of lift 4 to an actual legal entitlement to exclusive use.

The owners corporation appealed against the trial judge's decision to the New South Wales Court of Appeal.

Held: Appeal allowed.

Per McColl JA (with whom Mason P agreed):

1. By-laws may be characterised as either delegated legislation or statutory contracts. They do not deal with commercial rights, but, rather, with the governance of strata schemes. Therefore, an exclusive use by-law should be construed so that it is consistent with its statutory context and a tight rein should be kept on having recourse to surrounding circumstances.

Special by-law 21 dealt only with the proprietor's liability to contribute to the costs of lift 4 of which exclusive use was being obtained. This was consistent with the statutory scheme. The by-law said nothing about relieving the proprietor from liability to contribute to the maintenance of the remaining lifts in the system. The burden of meeting those costs arose because of the proprietor's unit entitlement of 19.382% and that liability continued. The primary judge's interpretation of the by-law did not have regard to these considerations and unduly favoured the proprietor at the expense of the other proprietors in the strata scheme.

Per Harrison J (with whom Mason P agreed):

3. By-law 21 consisted of two parts. Firstly, it granted the proprietor the exclusive use and enjoyment of lift 4. Secondly, it set out a mechanism for the calculation of the price, or consideration, that the proprietor was required to pay for the continued use and enjoyment of the exclusive right. That price was calculated, in the case of by-law 21(ii)(a), as the costs directly attributable to lift 4 and, in the case of by-law 21(ii)(b), as an arithmetical function of the total cost of maintenance of all the lifts in the building.

4. Therefore, payment of a price for the exclusive use of lift 4 did not mean that the proprietor was "overpaying" just because he was required also to contribute, via his quarterly levies, to the cost of the upkeep of the other three lifts in the building. The proprietor became and remained liable for the payment of both 25% of the costs of the lift system in accordance with by-law 21, as well as his proportionate 19.382% of the remaining 75% of such costs as one of several proprietors of the owners corporation.

5. It followed that the proprietor had been overcharged, but only by an amount equal to 19.382% of his 25% share of the costs of the lifts as a whole, for which he was otherwise levied in accordance with by-law 21.

Mason P, McColl JA and Harrison J:

Mason P: I agree with Harrison J and with the additional remarks of McColl JA as to the approach to interpretation of by-laws.

2. McColl JA: This case concerns the question of the proper construction of an exclusive use by-law relating to common property made in 1989 pursuant to s 58(7) of the Strata Titles Act 1973, since re-named the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1973 (the "1973 Act"). It involves the proper characterisation of such a by-law and the principles which should apply in its interpretation. The ability to make exclusive use by-laws in respect of the common property of strata schemes continues under Ch 2, Div 4 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (the "Management Act").

3. I have had the benefit of reading Harrison J's judgment in draft. I agree with the reasons Harrison J has given for disposing of the cross appeal. I agree with the orders his Honour proposes on the appeal for the following reasons.

4. I gratefully adopt his Honour's recitation of the background facts and shall only repeat them to the extent necessary to give content to my reasons.

The primary judgment

5. Both counsel who appeared before the primary judge submitted the Court should approach the construction of Special By-Law 21 on the basis that it created contractual rights of exclusive use and enjoyment under s 58(7) of the 1973 Act "which should be interpreted in the ordinary way". His Honour accepted this submission, referring to North Wind Pty Ltd v Proprietors — Strata Plan 3143 [1981] 2 NSWLR 809. He then interpreted it by reference to its language and what he inferred were the surrounding circumstances in which it was made, an exercise directed to ascertaining the mutual intention of the parties to Special By-Law 21.

6. The primary judge took as his starting point the appellant's entitlement to levy contributions determined by it in accordance with s 59 and s 68(i), (j), (k) and (p) of the 1973 Act. He next considered the development history of the Park Regis building. The precise passage appears in Harrison J's judgment at par [91]. In summary, he referred to the fact that when the development was approved in 1966, or thereabouts, lifts 1 and 2 were only intended to serve the residential units and not the Park Regis Motel and its guests. He also had regard to the fact that by 1989 there had been no change in relation to the non-use of lifts 1 and 2 by the motel and its guests and that lift 4 did not go to the residential floors and the proprietor of that lift already had exclusive, de facto use of it. On that basis his Honour inferred that the intention of the proprietor of Lot 1 and the remaining owners in the strata plan was that the former would get exclusive use of lift 4 in substitution for the de facto exclusive use which had been enjoyed up to that point of time.

7. His Honour next referred to the respondent's submission that:

> "…[W]hen By-law 21 was made it could not have been intended that Lot 1 would have to contribute 44.38 per cent (or something in that order) of the overall running costs of the lift system in order merely to convert the de facto exclusive use of Lift 4 to an actual legal entitlement to exclusive use, particularly when employees of the Park Regis Motel and its guest had hardly ever used Lifts 1,2 and 3. In my opinion there is merit in this submission."

8. His Honour then analysed the sub-clauses of Special By-Law 21, noting the potential overlap between category (ii)(a) and category (ii)(b) costs, an overlap avoided in his opinion by the category (ii)(a) requirement that the appellant identify the costs directly attributable to Lift 4 before they could be claimed. He noted that category (ii)(a) costs included costs for the renewal and replacement of Lift 4.

9. His Honour's critical finding was expressed as follows:

> "It follows from the above analysis that when the parties to By-law 21 made it, their mutual intention was that in order for the plaintiff to have exclusive enjoyment of Lift 4:

1. All costs for the renewal and replacement of Lift 4 identified to the proprietor of Lot 1 by the defendant were to be paid exclusively by that proprietor; none of such costs would therefore be directly payable by the remaining proprietors of Strata Plan 3397.
2 All costs for the repair, maintenance and running costs directly attributable to Lift 4 identified to the proprietor of Lot 1 by the defendant were to be paid exclusively by that proprietor; none of such costs would therefore be payable by the remaining proprietors of Strata Plan 3397.
3. Twenty-five per cent of all costs attributable to the running and routine maintenance servicing and repair of the lift system were to be payable by the proprietor of Lot 1.

As a matter of commonsense, it must follow that the parties who made By-Law 21 intended that 75 per cent of the balance of all such costs would be payable by the remaining proprietors of Strata Plan 3397. This gives By-Law 21 a commercial, businesslike interpretation. Otherwise, it would mean that on top of the liability to pay the 25 per cent of all costs attributable to the routine maintenance servicing and repair of the lift system, the proprietor of Lot 1 would still be required to contribute a substantial amount towards such costs based on Lot 1's unit entitlement of 1004 out of the aggregate of 5780 merely to convert exclusive de facto use of Lift 4 to a legal entitlement of exclusive use. Plainly, that cannot have been the intention of the parties who made By-Law 21."

Submissions

10. Mr G Sirtes, who appeared for the appellant on appeal, but not at trial, submitted that it could not have been the intention of those who made Special By-Law 21 to exempt the proprietor of Lot 1 who was obtaining exclusive use of Lift 4, which was only one part of the common property, from meeting statutory obligations as a lot owner in relation to another part of the common law property (the lift system maintaining lifts 1-3), which was not included within the scope of the Special By-Law. In other words he submitted that after Special By-Law 21 was made, the proprietor of Lot 1 had to meet the payments specified in it, but those payments did not impinge upon the obligations that proprietor had as a lot owner in respect of lifts 1-3.

11. He emphasised the statutory background to Special By-Law 21. He submitted that the body corporate did not have statutory authority to relieve anyone from their obligations in relation to common property other than that referred to in an exclusive use by-law and that a by-law which purported to do so would be ultra vires.

12. Mr Sirtes also submitted that it was not appropriate to seek to discern the meaning of Special By-Law 21 by applying principles of contractual interpretation. Rather, he contended, such principles have limited application in the case of a contract passed against the background of a statutory regime involving third parties.

13. Mr Sirtes illustrated the difference between the parties' respective positions by what he described as the following "crude example", which operated on the assumption that in any given year the costs of lift maintenance for all four lifts was $100,000.

14. On that assumption, as found by the primary judge, Special By-Law 21 limited the respondent's total contribution for lift maintenance of all four lifts to 25%, i.e. $25,000 and he was exonerated from paying any amount towards the remaining $75,000, the burden of which fell on the remaining lot owners.

15. The appellant argued, however, that Special By-Law operated in the following manner:

(a) of the $100,000 lift costs, the respondent was liable to pay 25% pursuant to Special By-Law 21;
(b) of the remaining $75,000.00, the respondent was liable to contribute $14,250, 19.38% of $75,000.00, as a lot owner required to maintain the building pursuant to Part 3, Chapter 3 of the Management Act.

16. In total on the appellant's example, and on the approach for which it contended, the respondent was liable to contribute $39,250.00 of the costs of maintaining the lifts.

17. Mr M Young, who appeared for the respondent, contended that Special By-Law 21 should not be understood as involving a statutory right, but having regard to the fact that it operated as a covenant under the Act, operated, and should be interpreted, as a contract. Accordingly he argued that "if detailed semantic and syntactical analysis" of the by-law "led to a conclusion that flouted business commonsense, it must be made to yield to business commonsense": Antaios Cia Naviera SA v Salen Rederierna AB [1985] AC 191 (at 201) per Lord Diplock. He contended that there could be no apparent commercial justification for a by-law which led to the proprietor of Lot 1 paying 44.382% of the cost of the lift system, merely for the privilege of conveying de facto exclusive use of Lift 4 into a legal entitlement thereto: cf MFI Properties Ltd v BICC Group Pension Trust Ltd [1986] 1 All ER 974 (at 977) per Hoffmann J.

18. Mr Young submitted that, properly understood, Special By-Law 21 was the exclusive source of the respondent's obligation to contribute to the costs of all lifts in the lift system and capped his liability to contribute to those costs at 25%.

19. As to Mr Sirtes' example, he pointed out that this was not, in fact, how the appellant had charged the respondent. Rather than the second calculation Mr Sirtes postulated (14(b) above), the appellant had taken the figure of $100,000 as the starting point for its second calculation, thus leading to the respondent being charged 44.328% of the costs of the lift system, an interpretation the primary judge had properly rejected.

20. Mr Sirtes conceded in reply that the appellant had not charged the respondent in accordance with his example, but contended this went to quantum only and the appellant's fundamental argument, that the respondent's liability was not capped at 25%, had been consistently maintained.

Legislative Framework

21. In 1989, when Special By-Law 21 was made, the proprietors for the time being of Strata Scheme 3397 constituted a body corporate with the powers, authorities, duties and functions conferred or imposed on it by or under the 1973 Act, or the by-laws: s 58.

22. The proprietors were obliged to pay administrative levies raised by the body corporate by way of contributions to meet its actual or expected liabilities incurred or to be incurred under s 68(1)(b) or for the payment of insurance premiums or any other liability: s 68(1)(j), 1973 Act. The proprietors were also obliged to contribute to amounts determined by the body corporate in accordance with s 68(1)(k) which amounts were to be paid into a sinking fund established pursuant to s 68(1)(m).

23. Once the body corporate had determined s 68(1)(j) and (k) contributions it levied those contributions on proprietors by serving notice in writing of the contributions payable by them in respect of their respective lots: s 59(1). The contributions were payable by the proprietors, in shares proportional to the unit entitlements of their respective lots: s 59(3).

24. Special By-Law 21 was made in accordance with s 58(7). That provision, and relevant ancillary provisions, provided:

> "58(1) Except as provided in this section the by-laws set forth in Schedule 1 shall be the by-laws in force in respect of each strata scheme.
> (5) Without limiting the operation of any other provision of this Act, the by-laws for the time being in force bind the body corporate and the proprietors and any mortgagee in possession (whether by himself or any other person), or lessee or occupier, of a lot to the same extent as if the by-laws had been signed and sealed by the body corporate and each proprietor and each such mortgagee, lessee and occupier respectively and as if they contained mutual covenants to observe and perform all the provisions of the by-laws.
> (7) With the written consent of the proprietor or proprietors of the lot or lots concerned, the body corporate may, pursuant to a special resolution, make a by-law —
>
> (a) conferring on the proprietor of a lot specified in the by-law, or the proprietors of several lots so specified-
>
> (i) a right of exclusive use and enjoyment of; or > (ii) special privileges in respect of, the whole or any specified part of the common property, upon conditions (including the payment of money, at specified times or as required by the body corporate, by the proprietor or proprietors of the lot or lots concerned) specified in the by-law; or

(b) amending, adding to or repealing a by-law made in accordance with this subsection.

(7AA) A by-law referred to in subsection (7) shall either —

(a) provide that the body corporate shall continue to be responsible for the proper maintenance, and keeping in a state of good and serviceable repair, of the common property or the relevant part of it; or
(b) impose on the proprietor or proprietors of the lot or lots concerned the responsibility for that maintenance and upkeep, and in the case of a by-law that confers rights or privileges on more than one proprietor, any money payable by virtue of the by-law by the proprietors concerned —

(c) to the body corporate; or
(d) to any person for or towards the maintenance or upkeep of any common property, shall, except to the extent that the by-law otherwise provides, be payable by the proprietors concerned proportionately according to the relative proportions of their respective unit entitlements.

(7B) a plan lodged under section 8 for registration as a strata plan is accompanied by an instrument, in a form approved under the Real Estate Property Act 1900 containing the terms of a proposed by-law of the kind referred to in subsection (7) —

(a) a by-law in those terms shall be deemed to have been made, and to take effect, on registration of the plan; and
(b) the by-law so made may be amended, added to or repealed in the same way as a by-law made by the body corporate in accordance with subsection (7).

(8) A by-law referred to in subsection (7), while it remains in force, continues to operate for the benefit of, and (subject to section 70(3)) is binding upon, the proprietor or proprietors for the time being of the lot or lots specified in the by-law.

(9) To the extent to which such a by-law makes a person directly responsible for the proper maintenance, and keeping in a state of good and serviceable repair, of any common property, it discharges the body corporate from its obligations under section 68(1)(b).

(10) Any moneys payable by a proprietor to the body corporate under a by-law referred to in subsection (7) or pursuant to subsection (9A) may be recovered, as a debt, by the body corporate in any court of competent jurisdiction." (emphasis added).

25. As I shall later explain, s 58(5) is an important guide to the interpretation of Special By-Law 21. It is not clear that s 58(8) added to s 58(5); it may be that it would facilitate the beneficiary of the exclusive use by-law enforcing it against third parties. Nothing appears to turn upon its inclusion in s 58 for the purposes of the present interpretative exercise.

26. A "special resolution" was a resolution passed at a duly convened meeting of a body corporate and against which not more than one-quarter in value of votes was cast, ascertained in accordance with cll 11(3) and (4) of Pt 1 of Schedule 2 or Cll 12(3) and (4) of Pt 2 of Schedule 2: s 3, 1973 Act. A person was entitled to vote in respect of any lot if he or she was the proprietor of the lot shown on the strata roll: cl 2(1), Pt 1 of Schedule 2. Clauses 11(3) and (4) of Pt 1 of Schedule 2 or cll 12(3) and (4) of Pt 2 of Schedule 2 (in respect to proprietors other than the original proprietor) provided that each person had one vote in respect of each lot in respect of which he or she was entitled to vote.

27. Part 5 of the 1973 Act, Disputes, created a scheme for the resolution of disputes in connection with strata schemes. It permitted the appointment of a Strata Titles Commissioner (s 97) and a Strata Titles Board, the latter being constituted by a Magistrate: s 98A. Section 120A enabled the Board to make orders with respect to exclusive use by-laws, either prescribing that they be made, amended or repealed. An order under s 120A, when recorded in accordance with s 141 in the Register of the Registrar-General, had effect, subject to any order of a superior court, as if its terms were a by-law: s 120A(4).

28. At the time Special By-Law 21 was made the proprietor of Lot 1 (the respondent's predecessor in title) had a unit entitlement of 1004 units of the total of 5,780 units, or 19.382%, in the strata scheme. Special By-Law 21 was registered at the Land Titles Office on 8 November 1981 in accordance with subs 58(7B).

Consideration

29. The appellant is "a statutory corporation, created by Act of Parliament for a particular purpose [and] is limited, as to all its powers, by the purposes of its incorporation as defined in that Act": Humphries v Proprietors Surfers Palms North Group Titles Plan 1955 [1994] HCA 21; (1994) 179 CLR 597 at 604 per Brennan and Toohey JJ; Margiz Pty Ltd v Proprietors Strata Plan No 30234 (1993) 30 NSWLR 364 at 372; see Ridis v Strata Plan 10308 [2005] NSWCA 246; (2005) 63 NSWLR 449 (at [116] ff).

30. At the time the Special By-Law was made the appellant was the occupier of the common property in Strata Plan No 3397 by virtue of its management and control of the use of that area pursuant to s 54(3) and s 68(1)(a): Puflett v Proprietors of Strata Plan No 121 (1987) 17 NSWLR 372 at 375 per Lee J; that position continues under s 61(1)(a) of the Management Act: see Ridis v Strata Plan 10308(at [117]). As Holland J explained in Jacklin v Proprietors of Strata Plan No 2795 [1975] 1 NSWLR 15 (at 24):

> "The legislation takes the common property as a whole and treats each proprietor as having an undivided beneficial interest in every part of it, whether or not that part is susceptible of any use or enjoyment by that proprietor or of greater use or enjoyment by that proprietor than by any other. Similarly, with respect to the provision of funds for the repair and maintenance of all or any part of the common property, the legislation provides for only one fund with contributions to be levied proportionately on all proprietors irrespective of any individual proprietor's use and enjoyment thereof. Thus the ownership and the financial burden of common property is to be held and shared by all proprietors in common in shares according to their respective unit entitlements. Consistently with this unity of approach, the duty of control, management, administration, repair and maintenance of common property is imposed by the legislation upon the body corporate. This duty is necessarily owed to each and every proprietor. In my opinion, there flows from the scheme of the legislation as an incident of proprietorship of a lot a right in each proprietor to have the body corporate's duty performed in relation to all of the common property at the cost and expense of all proprietors in proportion to unit entitlements. As the duty is not only to repair and maintain but also to control, manage and administer, the right of each proprietor includes a right to have the whole administration of repairs and maintenance of common property carried out by the body corporate by its servants and agents." (emphasis added).

31. As this passage indicates, at the time Special By-Law 21 was made the obligations of the proprietors of the body corporate reflected their unit entitlement, but bore no necessary relationship to their use or enjoyment of any part of the common property. Proprietors were obliged to contribute to the repair and maintenance of the common property whether or not they had, as a matter of fact, exclusive, partial or no use or enjoyment of it. To apply that proposition to the present case, all proprietors in the appellant were obliged to contribute to the maintenance and repair of Lift 4 even though, as the Park Regis was constructed, the lift primarily served the Motel floors, although it could also be used to access the car park on level 3.

32. Section 58(7) permitted a body corporate (i.e. the proprietors of the strata scheme) to alter that situation by passing a special resolution to make a by-law granting exclusive de jure use of a part of the common property to one, or several, proprietors. Section 58(7AA) mandated that any such by-law should either provide that the body corporate continued to be responsible for the maintenance and repair of the common property or the relevant part of it, or impose that responsibility on the proprietor or proprietors obtaining the benefit of the exclusive use by-law. If the beneficiary of the exclusive use by-law assumed that responsibility, the body corporate was discharged from its obligations under s 68(1)(b): s 58(9). It was left to the parties to determine whether the by-law would contain any other provisions, dealing, for example, with the renewal or replacement of the common property with which it dealt. In this case, the parties agreed that the direct costs renewal [sic] or replacement of Lift 4 were to be paid by the proprietor of Lot 1. Thus, to that extent, the body corporate was relieved of its s 68(1)(c) responsibility for Lift 4 and could not levy the other proprietors to contribute to such costs.

33. The primary judge reached his conclusion by applying principles of contractual interpretation, apparently unconstrained by the statutory framework in which Special By-Law 21 was made. For the reasons that follow, in my view that was not the correct approach and led his Honour into error. The question of the proper approach to interpreting the by-law turned on the nature of by-laws made under the 1973 Act.

34. There appear to be at least two available, and not necessarily inconsistent, views of the proper characterisation of strata scheme by-laws.

35. One is that such by-laws are delegated legislation, being instruments "made under an Act": s 3, Interpretation Act 1987. According to D Pearce and S Argument, Delegated Legislation in Australia, 3rd ed, Butterworths, 2005 (at [1.7]), "[t]he term by-law is used to describe the legislation of a body having a limited geographical jurisdiction, and is the expression most commonly used for the primary legislative instruments made by local government authorities". In Re Taylor [1995] 2 Qd R 564 (at 570), speaking in the context of exclusive use by-laws in a strata title scheme, Dowsett J said it was "the nature of a by-law that it deals with matters of internal regulation and operates in a particular context".

36. If by-laws constitute delegated legislation, then they should be interpreted in accordance with principles of statutory interpretation: Collector of Customs v Agfa-Gevaert Ltd [1996] HCA 36; (1996) 186 CLR 389 at 398. The statutory context will therefore be the first point of reference in interpreting the purpose or object underlying the Act (or instrument): One.Tel Ltd v Australian Communications Authority [2001] FCA 54; (2001) 110 FCR 125 (at [64]) per Hill J.

37. Although this case does not concern the validity of Special By-Law 21, it is appropriate to refer briefly to principles by which the validity of delegated legislation is determined to test the parties' respective contentions as to its meaning. Critically, delegated legislation is subject to the inconsistency principle, that is to say it is invalid if it contradicts or is repugnant to, or inconsistent with, the Act under which it is made: Pearce and Argument (at [19.1]). The learned authors quote in support of this proposition the "most frequently cited statement of the law relating to repugnancy", being Channell J's statement in Gentel v Rapps [1902] 1 KB 160 (at 166) that:

> "A by-law is not repugnant to the general law merely because it creates a new offence, and says that something shall be unlawful which the law does not say is unlawful. It is repugnant if it makes unlawful that which the general law says is lawful. It is repugnant if it expressly or by necessary implication professes to alter the general law of the land. …Again, a by-law is repugnant if it adds something inconsistent with the provisions of a statute creating the same offence; but if it adds something not inconsistent, that is not sufficient to make the by-law as repugnant…" (emphasis added)

38. Shepherdson J concluded that strata scheme by-laws were delegated legislation in Dainford Ltd v Smith (1984) Q ConvR ¶54-140 when considering model by-laws in force in respect of a building unit plan made pursuant to s 30(2) of the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 (Qld), a provision relevantly on all fours with s 58(2) of the 1973 Act.

39. Dainford concerned the question whether a vendor of a home unit who had contracted to grant to the proprietor for the time being of the unit the exclusive use of a car parking space on part of the common property pursuant to a by-law made under s 30(7) of the Building Units and Group Titles Act (relevantly on all fours with s 58(7) of the 1973 Act), had repudiated the contract because the by-law did not designate the car space directly or by reference to an identification otherwise made before or at the time of the making of the by-law. By-law 40 provided that "the proprietor for the time being of each lot in the building shall be entitled to the exclusive use … of the car space or spaces the identifying number or numbers of which shall be notified in writing by [the vendor] to the Council of the Body Corporate within twelve months after the date of registration of the Plan". The purchasers argued by-law 40 was invalid because it effected an unauthorised delegation of legislative power.

40. The Queensland Court of Appeal (Campbell and Shepherdson JJ, Campbell CJ dissenting) held the by-law was not a valid exercise of the s 30(7) power because the body corporate had sub-delegated to the vendor the power to identify the car space attached to the unit. That decision was reversed on appeal, Dainford Ltd v Smith [1985] HCA 23; (1985) 155 CLR 342 (Gibbs CJ, Wilson and Dawson JJ, Mason and Brennan JJ dissenting). All members of the Court approached the case on the basis that by-law 40 was an exercise of statutory power to be interpreted in accordance with principles relevant to delegated legislation: see Gibbs CJ (at 347 – 348), Mason J (at 351 – 352), Wilson J (at 355 – 359), Brennan J (at 361 – 363).

41. Wilson J, however, observed (at 359) that:

> "… it may be questioned whether the power conferred by s 30(7) is properly to be regarded as a delegation to the body corporate of legislative power. The by-laws which are made in exercise of that power are not of general application; they bind only the body corporate itself and the proprietors and any mortgagee in possession, lessee or occupier of a lot to the extent described in s 30(5). However, the matter need not be pursued."

42. The question Wilson J posed was taken up by Dowsett J in Re Taylor, albeit without reference to Dainford. In Re Taylor the Registrar of Titles challenged the validity of exclusive by-laws purportedly made pursuant to s 30(7) of the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 (Qld). The body corporate applied for a determination of their validity. Dowsett J first considered whether the by-laws were properly so described. In concluding they were, he said (at 567):

> "The Shorter Oxford Dictionary defines 'by-law' as, 'a law or ordinance dealing with matters of local or internal regulation, made by a local authority, or by a corporation or association'. A similar view was expressed by Lindley L.J. in London Association of Shipowners and Brokers v London and India Docks Joint Committee [1892] 3 Ch. 242 at 252 as follows:
>
> > 'A by-law is not an agreement, but a law binding on all persons to whom it applies, whether they agree to be bound by it or not. All regulations made by a corporate body, and intended to bind not only themselves and their officers and servants, but members of the public who come within the sphere of their operation, may be properly called 'by-laws', whether they be valid or invalid in point of law …'
>
> Clearly, by-laws have their operation within an identifiable and limited environment. Section 30(5) of the Act provides that by-laws made pursuant to s 30 bind persons other than owners of units." (emphasis added)

Section 30(5) was in the same terms as s 58(5).

43. Having concluded the by-laws were properly so described, Dowsett J held (at 569 – 570) that they must be construed in the context of the authorised functions of the body in question and the legislation conferring the power to make them. He held, applying the inconsistency principle, that s 30(7) could not be invoked to extend the powers or functions of the body or to contradict a provision of the Act, at least in the absence of express or necessarily implied authority to do so. He concluded the exclusive use by-laws were invalid because they were inconsistent with express provisions of the Act.

44. The by-laws with which London Association of Shipowners and Brokers v London and India Docks Joint Committee [1892] 3 Ch 242 dealt were purportedly made pursuant to s 83 of the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 27) which enabled the company to make by-laws under its common seal for the use of its docks and property. The by-laws relevantly did not have effect unless confirmed in accordance with s 85; notices had to be given before they were confirmed (ss 86 and 87), and, when confirmed, they had to be published as directed by s 88. Once they were duly made, confirmed, and published, the by-laws become binding on all parties (s 89). They could only be altered by other by-laws similarly made and confirmed: see judgment (at 251 – 252).

45. It was of that power that Lindley LJ said (at 252), immediately before the passage Dowsett J quoted:

> "This power of making by-laws is something very different from the power which every owner of property has of making agreements with those persons who may desire to use it."

46. Exclusive use by-laws under the 1973 Act had both qualities to which Lindley LJ referred: they bound all those referred to in s 58(5) whether or not, in the case of proprietors of the strata scheme, they voted in favour of them and they had to be agreed to by at least 75% of those entitled to vote in respect of the common property in which they had a proprietary interest.

47. The presence of s 58(5) suggests an alternative characterisation of strata scheme by-laws, namely that they are a statutory contract, deemed to exist by statute and constituted by the "bundle of rights and liabilities" created by the 1973 Act, the model by-laws and any special by-laws, such as Special By-Law 21, made pursuant to s 58: cf Sons of Gwalia Ltd v Margaretic; ING Investment Management LLC v Margaretic [2007] HCA 1; (2007) 81 ALJR 525 at [30] per Gleeson CJ; at [191], [203], [205] per Hayne J (with whom Gummow J generally agreed).

48. Section 58(5) is clearly modelled on the deemed covenant provisions adopted in corporations law to ensure the memorandum and articles of association of a company bound "the company and the members thereof to the same extent as if they respectively had been signed and sealed by each member and contained covenants on the part of each member to observe all": see Australian Coal & Shale Employees' Federation v Smith (1937) 38 SR (NSW) 48 at 54-55, cited by McHugh and Gummow JJ in Bailey (as executrix of the estate of the late Dr Harry R Bailey) v New South Wales Medical Defence Union Ltd [1995] HCA 28; (1995) 184 CLR 399 at 434.

49. Section 58(5) is in substantially the same terms as s 33(1) of the Companies Act 1961 as in force at the time the 1973 Act was enacted. That subsection provided:

> "33.(1) Subject to this Act, the memorandum and articles shall when registered bind the company and the members thereof to the same extent as if they respectively had been signed and sealed by each member and contained covenants on the part of each member to observe all the provisions of the memorandum and of the articles."

50. In Bailey (at 433 – 440), McHugh and Gummow JJ discussed the development of such legislative provisions. They observed (at 435) that "[i]n so far as the memorandum and articles, pursuant to such legislative provision, constitute a contract between the company and its individual members or between the members inter se, [it] is of an unusual type". This was because, inter alia, its terms could be varied by special resolution without the agreement of both parties to the variation, the articles could not be rectified even if they did not reflect the common intention of the original signatories and they could only be amended with statutory authority. Their Honours cited (at 437) with apparent approval, Cussen J's statement in Land Mortgage Bank of Victoria Ltd v Reid [1909] VLR 284 at 288 – 289 that:

> "… the primary function of the articles [is] similar to that of by-laws, namely the provision of a series of enactments to govern the company in the administration of its affairs and to bind members in that respect whilst they [are] members."

51. After referring (at 437 – 438) to the line of authorities holding that that the memorandum and articles have no direct contractual effect insofar as they purport to confer rights or obligations on a member, otherwise than in the capacity of a member, their Honours observed (at 439):

> "…[T]he broad trend of authority referred to above, particularly since Hickman , has been to identify the subject matter of the 'statutory contract', so far as concerns the relations between the corporation and the members, not as commercial rights but as the government of the corporation and the exercise of the constitutional powers of the corporation."

52. Finally, their Honours distinguished (at 439) between a "statutory contract" and a "special contract", describing the latter as "a contract which is constituted otherwise than solely by the articles unsupplemented by any external facts…[one] which, in truth, is ordinary rather than 'special' in nature". The latter, in their Honours' view, was the proper description of the policy of professional indemnity insurance provided by the New South Wales Medical Defence Union Limited to Dr Bailey, in accordance with the terms of its articles of association. Brennan CJ, Deane and Dawson JJ (at 414) preferred to characterise the policy as a "special contract", which they described as "distinct from the covenants … deemed to arise from the articles under the relevant companies legislation".

53. In North Wind, Rath J appears to have understood s 58(5) to mean that an exclusive use by-law had the effect of a statutory contract. North Wind concerned the question whether the registered proprietor of a lot in a strata plan, who had the exclusive use and enjoyment of an area which formed part of the common property pursuant to a by-law made under s 58(7) of the 1973 Act, could obtain an injunction to restrain the defendant which had constructed, or was constructing, works which encroached into the air space above the exclusive use area. The defendant argued (see 811) that the Court had no jurisdiction to determine the issues raised by the summons because the 1973 Act contained detailed provisions dealing with disputes. It relied upon the principle that where a statute creates an obligation and enforces performance in a specified manner, the general rule is that performance cannot be enforced in any other manner: Doe d Murray, Bishop of Rochester v Bridges (1831) 1 B & Ad 847 (at 859); 109 ER 1001 (at 1006).

54. Rath J held (at 814) that the rights and obligations arising under the by-law were not within the principles stated in Doe d Murray, Bishop of Rochester v Bridges. In his Honour's opinion the by-law had contractual effect because of the mutual covenants in s 58(5) and the Act contemplated the enforcement of those rights and obligations by the ordinary provisions of the law, including injunctive relief. He could find nothing in the Act which indicated that the statutory dispute provisions were exclusive of common law and equitable remedies, or inconsistent with the jurisdiction of the ordinary courts in regard to the enforcement of covenants and contractual rights. While he concluded, therefore, that the Court had jurisdiction, he declined to exercise it for discretionary reasons. His Honour did not discuss the principles which might apply to the interpretation of the by-law.

55. Subsequent decisions have held that Rath J's characterisation of the exclusive use by-law as having contractual effect did not preclude the conclusion that such by-laws also confer a proprietary right, even though their "detailed articulation stems from the by-laws": see Young & Anor v Owners – Strata Plan No 3529 & Ors [2001] NSWSC 1135; (2001) 54 NSWLR 60 (at [14] – [18]) per Santow J (as his Honour then was); White v Betalli [2006] NSWSC 537 (at [60]) per White J.

56. As I explained earlier in these reasons, the parties and the primary judge proceeded on the basis that because Rath J identified an exclusive use by-law as having contractual effect, the usual principles of contractual interpretation applied. However not all principles of contractual interpretation apply unreservedly to statutory contracts.

57. In National Roads and Motorists' Association Ltd v Parkin [2004] NSWCA 153; (2004) 60 NSWLR 224 Ipp JA (with whom Santow and Bryson JJA agreed) considered the extent to which such principles apply in construing the statutory contract formed by the articles of association of the National Roads and Motorists' Association Limited ("NRMA").

58. In NRMA, NRMA disputed the validity of two resolutions contained in a requisition calling the general meeting (and, hence, the validity of the requisition) on the grounds that they were ambiguous, alternatively, uncertain. It brought proceedings seeking a declaration that the requisition was void and that the directors of NRMA were therefore not required to call and hold the general meeting. Its argument, in substance, was that the objects and powers of a company must be defined in plain and unambiguous terms, that the proposed resolutions were ambiguous and that the mere existence of the ambiguities, because they concerned a proposed alteration to the constitution that would limit the company's powers, rendered the resolutions void: see Ipp JA (at [34]). It argued that the Court should approach the question whether the proposed resolutions were ambiguous in accordance with the "stringent" test laid down by Lord Wrenbury in Cotman v Brougham [1918] AC 514 (a case dealing with legislation that concerning the objects specified in the memorandum of a company), rather than the "forgiving" test in Upper Hunter County District Council v Australian Chilling and Freezing Company Limited [1968] HCA 8; (1968) 118 CLR 429: see Ipp JA (at [31], [36]).

59. Ipp JA held (at [78], [88]) that the Upper Hunter test should be applied to determine which of two possible meanings was to be given to the words of a clause in the statutory contract constituted by the articles of association.

60. Ipp JA (at [72]) noted that the NRMA rendered its services in competition with other commercial entities and that its constitution must be construed in that context. Accordingly he applied (at [68], [75]) the "general principle" concerning the construction of articles of association, to regard them as a business document and construe them "so as to give them reasonable business efficacy, where a construction tending to that result is admissible on the language of the articles, in preference to a result which would or might prove unworkable": Holmes v Keyes [1959] Ch 199 (at 215) per Jenkins LJ.

61. Although his Honour held (at [71]) that Egyptian Salt and Soda Co Ltd v Port Said Salt Association Ltd [1931] AC 677 was "fundamentally contrary to the proposition that there should be a special rule of construction relating to the powers of a company", he did not regard all the usual principles of contractual interpretation as applying unreservedly to the articles. He held (at [86]) that extrinsic evidence should not be used in construing the company's constitution. In doing so he followed the approach in Egyptian Salt and Soda Co Ltd where Lord Macmillan observed (at 682) that:

> "It must be borne in mind that the purpose of the memorandum is to enable shareholders, creditors and those who deal with the company to know what is its permitted range of enterprise, and for this information they are entitled to rely on the constituent documents of the company. They have not access to other sources of information such as the antecedent transactions which the learned judge invokes, and have no means of knowing, for example, 'that the intention of the promoters that the company should not export salt was known to the defendant company,' a circumstance which the learned judge adduces. The intention of the framers of the memorandum must be gathered from the language in which they have chosen to express it." (emphasis added)

62. Ipp JA also referred to Bratton Seymour Service Co Ltd v Oxborough [1992] BCLC 693 in which it was held was held that "the articles of association of a company constitute a statutory contract with its own distinct features". Steyn LJ held (at 698) that "neither the company nor any member can seek to add to or to subtract from the terms of the articles by way of implying a term derived from extrinsic surrounding circumstances." Dillon LJ was of the same view, as, too, was Sir Christopher Slade although the latter also held (at 699) that "evidence of surrounding circumstances may be admissible for the limited purpose of identifying persons, places or other subject matter referred to therein".

63. National Roads and Motorists' Association Ltd v Parkin was applied by Finn J in Lion Nathan Australia Pty Ltd v Coopers Brewery Ltd [2005] FCA 1812; (2005) 56 ACSR 263. Lion Nathan concerned the interpretation of the phrase "any transfer of shares" in article 38 of Coopers Brewery Ltd's Articles of Association. As originally adopted, Coopers' articles did not contain a definition of "transfer", however such a definition was inserted at an extraordinary general meeting in 1995.

64. Finn J considered that the question of interpretation turned on the text of the article, as well as "the surrounding circumstances known to [Coopers and its members] and to the purpose and object of [Art 38]", referring to Pacific Carriers Ltd v BNP Paribas [2004] HCA 35; (2004) 218 CLR 451 at [22]. He concluded that he could take the surrounding circumstances into account even if the article was not ambiguous or susceptible of more than one meaning, although as the following passages from his judgment reveal, he applied a caveat to their use.

65. In reaching his conclusion, Finn J considered the extent to which principles of contractual interpretation applied to the contract constituted by the memorandum and articles of association, saying:

> "[73] (ii) Nonetheless, [the statutory contract] is not a contract which in all respects attracts those principles which are applicable to contracts in general or to commercial contracts in particular. The reason for this is that corporate constitutions historically have served public purposes going beyond the mere delineation of the rights and obligations of the contracting parties for their benefit. So, for example, the memorandum of association in times past served the important purpose of enabling creditors and those who dealt with a company to know what was 'its permitted range of enterprise and for this information they are entitled to rely on the constituent documents of the company': Egyptian Salt and Soda Ltd v Port Said Salt Assn [1931] AC 677 at 682. As in other fields where contractual documents serve public purposes beyond those of the parties themselves … the bifurcated functions so performed by a company's memorandum and articles has lead to the exclusion of … principles ordinarily applied to contracts.
> [74] (iii) The function of a company's constitution in informing those who dealt with it or who acquired shares in it, has in the past influenced in a direct way the principles of construction that have been applied to the constitution and, in particular, to the extent to which extrinsic materials were admissible as an aid to interpretation. Because third parties who dealt with a company would not have had access to information (other than the constitution itself) which might reveal the true meaning of a provision in the constitution, '[t]he intention of the framers of the [constitution] [had to] be gathered from the language in which they have chosen to express it': Egyptian Salt and Soda Co Ltd at 682.

[78] (vii) Until very recently there has been considerable controversy as to whether in the interpretation of contracts evidence of surrounding circumstances was admissible only if it first appeared that the language of the contract was ambiguous or whether it is admissible at the outset for the purpose of ascertaining the meaning of contractual language in its context … For the purposes of Australian law, while the above controversy took some time to be stilled: cf Royal Botanic Gardens and Domain Trust v South Sydney City Council (2002) 186 ALR 289 at [39]; it must now be accepted that the meaning of commercial contract is to be construed objectively by reference to what it conveys to a reasonable person: but see McLauchlan, 'Objectivity in Contract' (2005) 24 UQLJ 481. This normally 'requires consideration not only of the text of the documents, but also the surrounding circumstances known to [the parties], and the purpose and object of the transaction': Pacific Carriers at [22]: see also Peden & Carter 'Taking Stock: the High Court and Contract Construction' (2005) 21 JCL 172 at 180. …
[79] (viii) The approach to contractual construction affirmed in Pacific Carriers marks another step in the convergence in organising principles governing the construction of contracts and of statutes. It is now well settled in this country that, irrespective of the provisions of s 15AB of the Acts Interpretation Act 1901 (Cth):

> '… the modern approach to statutory interpretation (a) insists that the context be considered in the first instance, not merely at some later stage when ambiguity might be thought to arise, and (b) uses 'context' in its widest sense to include such things as the existing state of the law and the mischief which, by legitimate means such as those just mentioned, one may discern the statute was intended to remedy.'

See CIC Insurance Ltd v Bankstown Football Club Ltd (1997) 187 CLR 384 at 408. While what constitutes 'context' for the purposes of statutory construction and 'surrounding circumstances' (or 'the matrix of facts') for contractual construction will differ significantly given the differing end purposes of construction in each case, what is common to both is the recognition that meaning is contextual: what a document or statute conveys to a reasonable person is what, against the relevant background, the words used by the parties in one case, the legislature in the other would reasonably be understood to have meant… Though the principles of statutory construction are not directly relevant to the present matter, in their congruence with the principles of contractual construction they reinforce my view that the Pacific Carriers' principles provide the appropriate approach that ought be adopted in the construction of the pre-emptive rights regime of Coopers' articles. Nonetheless I do recognise that a tight rein may well need to be kept on what should count as 'surrounding circumstances' when construing at least aspects of a company's constitution. In taking the above approach I probably am doing no more than applying to the construction of articles of association the new understanding of what was conveyed by Mason J in Codelfa, earlier cases having applied a more limited understanding of what Mason J said to the construction of articles: see eg Buche v Box Pty Ltd (1993) 31 NSWLR 368 at 374." (emphasis added).

66. Applying his "tight rein" approach, the only surrounding circumstances Finn J considered were the pre-1995 articles, and the materials supplied to the 1995 extraordinary general meeting: see Lion Nathan (at [92]).

67. Finn J's judgment was approved on appeal in Lion Nathan Australia Pty Ltd (ACN 008 596 370) v Coopers Brewery Ltd (ACN 007 871 409) and Others [2006] FCAFC 144; (2006) 156 FCR 1 (Weinberg, Kenny and Lander JJ).

68. Weinberg J accepted (at [56]) "the case for restraint in using surrounding circumstances as an aid to the construction of a corporate constitution remain[ed] a powerful one" and "that the rules of construction applicable to ordinary contracts should be applied with great caution when construing a company's constitution". He then said:

> "[57] Despite the changes to company legislation to which Finn J referred, the statutory contract which s 140 of the Corporations Act deems to exist is, as his Honour recognised, very different from an ordinary contract. There are a number of sound reasons for adopting a different approach to its interpretation. It is a deemed contract, created by statute, without the normal elements of a contract having to be established, and without the usual defences being available to a defendant. Unlike ordinary contracts, it cannot be rectified, the rationale for that prohibition being so that third parties can be confident in relying upon it.
> [58] In addition, as a number of cases have noted, a corporate constitution is by its nature more likely to be read and relied upon by a third party than an ordinary contract. …
> [59] That is not to say that a court can never have regard to extrinsic material when construing a corporate constitution. Even absent ambiguity or uncertainty, context is always relevant. Some 'surrounding circumstances', particularly those that are likely to be well-known, not just to members of the company, but also to relevant third parties, are very much part of that context."

69. Kenny J also accepted (at [97] – [101]) that the articles could be interpreted in accordance with principles of contractual interpretation applicable to commercial contracts, but noted that a court's consideration of surrounding circumstances is "necessarily more constrained in the case of a corporate constitution than in the case of an ordinary commercial contract". Her Honour said:

> "[123] Lion Nathan has not persuaded me that the principles for construction as stated in Pacific Carriers and Toll have no application to corporate constitutions. It is true that the constitution of a company is a commercial contract, with special characteristics. A corporate constitution has what I have called a public dimension. It serves a public purpose and third parties will rely on it from time to time. It is not merely a private record of a private bargain; rather, a corporate constitution has statutory force: compare Re Blue Arrow Plc [1987] BCLC 585 at 590 per Vinelott J. While these considerations cannot be disregarded, they do not, it seems to me, provide a sufficient justification to remove corporate constitutions entirely from the range of commercial documents governed by the principles for construction outlined in Pacific Carriers and Toll.
> [124] A court can and should take account of the special characteristics of a company's constitution, both generally and specifically, in the manner in which it applies these general principles. That is to say, it may be proper to place greater store by the constitutive text in construing a company's constitution as opposed to a private contract: compare Stanham v National Trust of Aust (New South Wales) (1989) 15 ACLR 87 at 91 per Young J. Further, in accordance with these general principles, reference is properly made to the surrounding circumstances, although the range of these circumstances may be more limited in this context than as regards some other commercial documents. In particular, the special or public dimension of a corporate constitution may sometimes constrain the ambit of the matters to which a court has regard." (emphasis added)

70. Lander J expressed similar views to Weinberg and Kenny JJ: see especially [232], [255] and [259].

Conclusion

71. The following propositions emerge from the foregoing discussion:

> 1. By-laws are the "series of enactments" by which the proprietors in a body corporate administer their affairs; they do not deal with commercial rights, but the governance of the strata scheme: Bailey;
> 2. By-laws have a public purpose which goes beyond their function of facilitating the internal administration of a body corporate; cp, Parkin, Lion Nathan;
> 3. Exclusive use by-laws may be inspected by third persons interested in acquiring an interest in a strata scheme, whether, for example, by acquiring units, or by lending money to a lot proprietor; such persons would ordinarily have no access to the circumstances surrounding their making; their meaning should be understood from their statutory context and language: NRMA; Lion Nathan.
> 4. By-laws may be characterised as either delegated legislation or statutory contacts: Dainford; Re Taylor; Bailey; North Wind; Sons of Gwalia;
> 5. Whichever be the appropriate characterisation, exclusive use by-laws should be interpreted objectively by what they would convey to a reasonable person: Lion Nathan;

6. In interpreting exclusive use by-laws the Court should take into account their constitutional function in the strata scheme in regulating the rights and liabilities of lot proprietors inter se: Parkin; Lion Nathan.

7. Unlike the articles of a company, there does not appear to be a strong argument for saying exclusive use by-laws should be interpreted as a business document, with the intention that they be given business efficacy: cf NRMA (at [75]). That does not mean that an exclusive use by-law may not have a commercial purpose, and be interpreted in accordance with the principles expounded in cases such as Antaios Cia. Naviera S.A., but due regard must be paid to the statutory context in so doing;

8. An exclusive use by-law should be construed so that it is consistent with its statutory context; a court may depart from such a construction if departure from the statutory scheme is authorised by the governing statute and if the intention to do so appears plainly from the terms of the by-law:Re Taylor;

9. Caution should be exercised in going beyond the language of the by-law and its statutory context to ascertain its meaning; a tight rein should be kept on having recourse to surrounding circumstances: Lion Nathan.

72. The question of whether the by-laws constitute delegated legislation or a statutory contract was not fully argued. As the foregoing discussion reveals, the decision on their characterisation may be a distinction without a substantial difference from the interpretative perspective. It is not appropriate to express a final view on these issues. It is sufficient to say that on either approach the interpretation of Special By-Law 21 had to be approached on a basis which was consistent with the statutory scheme and that caution had to be exercised in considering surrounding circumstances.

73. The primary judge did not, with respect, apply the approach I have outlined. Again, it should be noted that his Honour approached the issue of interpretation on the basis for which both parties contended and his attention was not drawn to the authorities to which I have referred. However it was erroneous to apply principles of contractual interpretation unconstrained by the statutory framework under which Special By-Law 21 was made. The primary judge interpreted Special By-Law 21 in a way which was inconsistent with the 1973 Act, and in a manner, in my opinion, which was not authorised by that legislation.

74. Special By-Law 21 was made in the context of a statutory scheme which operated on the premise that lot proprietors shared the financial burden of the common property without regard to their entitlement to use any particular part of it. Further, s 58(7) only permitted an exclusive use by-law to impose conditions in respect of the common property with which it dealt. Thus Special By-Law 21 imposed extra obligations to contribute to the costs of Lift 4 on the proprietor of Lot 1 and, to that extent, relieved the other proprietors of their liability to maintain that part of the common property.

75. Special By-Law 21 dealt only with that proprietor's liability to contribute to the costs of Lift 4 of which exclusive use was being obtained. That was an appropriate exercise of the s 58(7) power which was consistent with the statutory scheme. Special By-Law 21 said nothing about relieving the proprietor of Lot 1 from liability to contribute to the maintenance of the remaining lifts in the lift system. The burden of meeting those costs arose because of that proprietor's unit entitlement of 19.382% and that liability continued. The fact that the proprietor of Lot 1 may have no need to access the remaining lifts was irrelevant: Jacklin. The primary judge's interpretation did not have regard to these considerations and, in my view, unduly favoured the proprietor of Lot 1, at the expense of the other proprietors.

76. The other reason I have difficulty with the primary judge's conclusion lies in his premise that Special By-Law 21 required a commercial, businesslike interpretation. While the by-law may have had a beneficial commercial effect for the proprietor of Lot 1, viewed objectively it was not a commercial transaction. Rather it was an adjustment of statutory obligations which conferred a proprietorial estate upon the proprietor of Lot 1 in respect of Lot [sic] 4 and, conversely, deprived the remaining proprietors in the strata scheme of the proprietary interest they had hitherto had in that part of the common property. The proprietorial nature of the by-law was indicated by its registration. The public nature of the by-law called for the interpretative exercise to focus on its language and statutory context rather than inferred intentions drawn from the de facto position concerning Lift 4 prior to the making of Special By-Law 21.

77. Finally I observe that in taking surrounding circumstances into consideration, the primary judge drew inferences from the original development approval in 1966 and the layout of the strata scheme in relation to lifts. No evidence was led before the primary judge concerning the actual making of Special By-Law 21. The papers and minutes of the meeting at which it was made were not tendered: cf Lion Nathan per Finn J (at [92]). It cannot be assumed that the surrounding circumstances his Honour considered relevant were so regarded by those who made Special By-Law 21. Consistently with the "tight rein" approach, those matters should not have been taken into account.

78. Harrison J: The respondent purchased Lot 1 in Strata Plan 3397 in November 1990 and sold it in February 2004. Lot 1 is known as the "Park Regis Motel" and is part of a 44-storey building known as the "Park Regis" building at 27 Park St, Sydney. The appellant is the Owners Corporation, which manages the Strata Scheme under the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 ("the Act").

79. When the respondent purchased Lot 1, it had the benefit of Special By-Law 21. That by-law had been registered at the Land Titles Office on 8 November 1989 in accordance with the provisions of s 58(7) of the Strata Titles Act 1973. It is in the following terms:

> "SPECIAL BY-LAW 21
>
> The proprietor for the time being of lot 1 shall be entitled to the exclusive use and enjoyment of the lift known as Lift No. 4 on the following terms and conditions:—
>
> (i) The Body Corporate shall be responsible for the proper maintenance and keeping in a state of good and serviceable repair and the cleaning, replacement and running costs of the lift;
> (ii) Such proprietor shall pay to the Body Corporate such sums as are identified to it by the Body Corporate for the repair, maintenance, renewal, replacement and running costs of such lift such costs being: –
>
> (a) those attributed directly to Lift No. 4;
> (b) One quarter of the costs attributed to the running and routine maintenance, servicing and repair of the lift system.
> (iii) Such proprietor shall not cause or permit any lift mechanic or maintenance contractor to interfere with the operation of the lift or carry out any repairs, maintenance, renewal or replacement unless that mechanical contractor is approved or retained by the Body Corporate."

80. It is uncontroversial, and his Honour, the trial judge, found that the intention of Special By-Law 21 was to give the proprietor of Lot 1 exclusive use and enjoyment of Lift 4 on the terms and conditions set out above.

81. Sometime in late 2001, the respondent formed the view that certain amounts paid by him from time to time to the Body Corporate as levies, which it had raised, purportedly in accordance with By-Law 21(ii), had been incorrectly calculated and that as a result he had made an overpayment. He sued to recover the overpayments as money had and received by the appellant to the use of the respondent and as moneys paid under a mistake of law. He also sought restitution, upon the basis that the appellant had been unjustly enriched by demanding and keeping the overpayments.

82. His Honour found in favour of the respondent and gave judgment in the amount of $179,399.24. The significant issue in the court below was the proper construction of Special By-Law 21. That remains the principal issue in this Court.

Background

83. The Park Regis building comprises a basement, ground floor and 43 upper floors. Approaching the building from street level, there are two separate entrances and lobby areas – one for the residential premises and the other for the motel. There are four lifts in the building in two pairs of two.

84. The area comprising Lot 1 is a small storage area at basement level, an area on the ground floor (described in the Strata Plan as "level 1"), extensive car parking spaces on level 2, some further car parking on level 3, and the motel accommodation that is located on levels 6-15 (inclusive) of the building. The other levels in the building from 16-44 (inclusive) are residential apartments with a pool and laundry facility on the roof.

85. During the period of the respondent's ownership of the Park Regis Motel, Lift 4 served the basement, ground floor, levels 2 and 3 and levels 6-15. As his Honour noted, the respondent, as owner of Lot 1, did not strictly speaking have the exclusive use of Lift 4 in the sense that, occasionally, people other than motel guests or employees of the motel used it to gain access to the car park on level 3. In addition, motel guests occasionally used Lifts 1 and 2 to gain access to the roof level, or to come down from it, and the respondent admitted, for the purpose of the proceedings, that throughout the period 6 November 1998 until 25 February 2004, some employees and guests of the motel used Lift 3 as well.

86. The appellant did not request payments from the respondent pursuant to By-Law 21 until 19 March 1998. On that day it issued a levy notice requiring payment by the respondent of arrears of moneys due pursuant to By-Law 21 for the period 1 October 1996 to 1 March 1998. This was the first such notice received by the respondent. He paid it in full and continued to pay all similar levy notices that he received thereafter until he sold Lot 1 in February 2004.

87. The unit entitlement of Lot 1 was 1004 units out of a total of 5780 units in the Strata Scheme, or 19.382 per cent. The respondent made quarterly contributions to the Administrative Fund and Sinking Fund at this rate in accordance with levy notices issued to him from time to time.

88. It was the respondent's case in the court below that between 1 April 1998 and 1 July 2003, when all owners in Strata Plan 3397 were levied by the appellant, the levies included amounts relating to the lift system (including Lift 4), so that when the respondent paid his levies he was, in effect, complying with his obligations under By-Law 21 to the tune of 19.38 per cent. The respondent says, therefore, that by virtue of the [sic] By-Law 21, levies made upon him, such as the one on 19 March 1998, he was overcharged, because the By-Law 21 levy notices purported to claim from him 25 per cent of the running costs of the lift system, including Lift 4. The respondent contended that, in these circumstances, he was charged for and paid 44.382 per cent of the lift costs in relation to the whole building, including Lift 4, when, upon a proper construction of By-Law 21, he should not have been charged more than 25 per cent in total.

89. Counsel for the parties in the Court below urged upon his Honour, and he accepted, that he should approach the construction of By-Law 21 upon the basis that it had created contractual rights of exclusive use and enjoyment under s 58(7) of the Strata Titles Act* 1973 which should be interpreted in what is Honour described as "the ordinary way". See North Wind Pty Ltd v Proprietors – Strata Plan 3143 [1981] 2 NSWLR 809.

90. His Honour then observed (at 9-10): –

> "The Court must therefore consider the chosen language of and the surrounding circumstances in which By-Law 21 was made in order to determine, objectively, the mutual intention of the parties. As a starting point, the surrounding circumstances included the [appellant's] entitlement to levy contributions determined by it in accordance with s 59 and s 68(i), (j), (k) and (p) of the Strata Titles Act 1973. These provisions also governed the establishment of the [appellant's] administrative fund and the [appellant's] sinking fund. It is not in dispute that, in 1989, at the time when Special By-Law 21 was made, the [appellant] was entitled to include in its levies made on each of the owners in Strata Plan 3397 in accordance with the above provisions, amounts relating to actual or expected liabilities relating to the lift system in the Park Regis, including Lift 4."

91. His Honour then proceeded to record what he referred to as "the other surrounding circumstances" which he took into account. His Honour said this at page 10: —

> "Although the Sydney City Council's development approval was not in evidence, from all of the evidence, it may be safely inferred that, in 1966, or thereabouts, when the development was approved, lifts 1 and 2 were only intended to serve the residential units and not the Park Regis Motel and its guests. The evidence establishes that in 1989 there had been no change in relation to the non-use of Lifts 1 and 2 by the motel and its guests. In 1989, Lift 4 still did not go to the residential floors and the proprietor of Lift 4 already had exclusive, de facto use of it. The Court therefore infers, and so finds, that what was intended on 16 October 1989 by the proprietor of Lot 1 and the remaining owners in Strata Plan 3397 when they made By-Law 21, was that the proprietor of Lot 1 would get exclusive use of Lift 4 in substitution for the de facto exclusive use which had been enjoyed up to that point at that time".

92. The respondent submitted in the court below that when By-Law 21 was made, it could not have been intended that Lot 1 would have to contribute 44.382 per cent of the overall running costs of the lift system in order merely to convert the de facto exclusive use of Lift 4 to an actual legal entitlement to exclusive use, particularly when employees of the Park Regis Motel and its guests had hardly ever used Lifts 1, 2 and 3.

93. His Honour accepted that submission and proceeded to explain why he did so. He referred to the terms of the by-law. He said that before the appellant could recover from the respondent sums directly attributed to Lift 4, being repair, maintenance, renewal, replacement and running costs of that lift, in accordance with By-Law 21(ii)(a), it was obliged to identify those repair, maintenance and running costs which were directly attributable to Lift 4. His Honour said that, on the evidence, with one irrelevant exception, the appellant did not do this. The appellant merely sent to the respondent levy notices that captured his liability for the category (b) costs. His Honour observed that that was not surprising, given the inference that he drew on the evidence, that the lift maintenance company did not have a separate maintenance contract with the appellant for Lift 4, but only a contract for the maintenance of the lift system as a whole.

94. His Honour also observed that costs for the renewal and replacement of Lift 4 were included in category (a). He said, in his opinion, that the respondent was liable for such renewal and replacement costs of Lift 4 over and above those costs for which he was liable in respect of category (b) and the other category (a) costs to which he referred.

95. His Honour's conclusions were then set out at pages 12-13. It is convenient for present purposes to record them in full as follows:—

"It follows in my opinion from the above analysis that when [sic] the parties to By-Law 21 made it their mutual intention was that, in order for the plaintiff to have the exclusive use and enjoyment of Lift 4:

> 1. All costs for the renewal and replacement of Lift 4 identified to the proprietor of Lot 1 by the [appellant] were to be paid exclusively by that proprietor; none of such costs would therefore be payable by the remaining proprietors of Strata Plan 3397.
> 2. All costs for the repair, maintenance and running costs directly attributable to Lift 4 identified to the proprietor of Lot 1 by the [appellant] were to be paid exclusively by that proprietor; none of such costs would therefore be payable by the remaining proprietors of Strata Plan 3397.
> 3. Twenty-five per cent of all costs attributable to the running and routine maintenance servicing and repair of the lift system were to be payable by the proprietor of Lot 1. As a matter of common sense, it must follow that the parties who made By-Law 21 intended that 75 per cent of the balance of all such costs would be payable by the remaining proprietors of Strata Plan 3397. This gives By-Law 21 a commercial, businesslike interpretation. Otherwise, it would mean that on top of the liability to pay the 25 per cent of all costs attributable to the routine maintenance servicing and repair of the lift system, the proprietor of Lot 1 would still be required to contribute a substantial amount towards such costs based on Lot 1's unit entitlement of 1004 out of the aggregate of 5780 merely to convert exclusive de facto use of Lift 4 to a legal entitlement of exclusive use. Plainly, that cannot have been the intention of the parties who made By-Law 21. (Emphasis added — see below)

The appellant's submissions

96. The appellant's contentions in this Court include the identification of errors said to have been made by his Honour in the italicised portion of the extract set forth in the preceding paragraph.

97. The appellant argued that his Honour's interpretation of By-Law 21 was impermissible according to its plain meaning. It argued that the by-law was confined to the payment of levies by the owner of Lot 1 in relation to Lift No 4. The by-law said nothing about the pre-existing obligations of the lot owner to continue to pay levies imposed upon it in the normal course of events. It said nothing about the lot owner's obligation to pay levies for the maintenance of lifts 1, 2 and 3. The appellant argued that his Honour, in effect, interpreted

By-Law 21 as if it were an exclusion clause, limiting the respondent's statutory obligation to contribute to the upkeep of the common property.

98. The appellant also argued that his Honour was erroneously influenced by what he saw to be the lack of commercial sense in an owner of Lot 1 agreeing to pay 25 per cent of the costs incurred for the upkeep of all lifts, in return for the exclusive use of Lift 4 (whilst remaining liable for the payment of 19.382 per cent of the costs of the other three lifts), if all that he was to secure in return was a formalisation of the pre-existing de facto exclusive use of that lift. The appellant contends that, in this way, his Honour imputed an intention on the part of those who agreed to the by-law that it could not have meant that an owner of Lot 1 would be required to contribute something in the order of 44.382 per cent to the overall running costs of the lift system. In any event, the appellant submitted that the terms of By-Law 21 were sufficiently clear to obviate any need to resort to a consideration of surrounding circumstances as an aid to interpretation.

99. If it were the case that his Honour was justified in considering surrounding circumstances, the appellant submitted that his Honour erred by failing properly to consider what a reasonable person would have understood the words of the by-law to mean. In this respect, the appellant argued that his Honour approached the matter purely from the perspective of an hypothetical owner of Lot 1, instead of attempting to discern the objective intention of the parties.

100. Finally, the appellant contended that his Honour failed to have proper regard to the obligations imposed upon the respondent by the relevant provisions of the Act. The appellant argued that his Honour failed to have regard to the difference between liabilities imposed upon the respondent having the benefit of the exclusive use of Lift 4 (pursuant to s 53 of the Act) and his ongoing and separate liability for contributions as a lot owner pursuant to Divs 1 and 2 of Pt 3 of Ch 3 of the Act.

101. In this respect, the appellant argues that the "paramount obligation" of a lot owner is to pay amounts levied as contributions to the administrative and sinking funds. Section 76 of the Act requires an Owners Corporation to levy such contributions on each person liable. By-Law 21, by way of comparison, deals with the grant of the exclusive use and enjoyment of Lift 4 to the proprietor of Lot 1, and with the terms and conditions upon which such use and enjoyment is granted. The terms of By-Law 21 do not say, and should not be interpreted to mean, that the owner of Lot 1 is, or has been, in some way released from the obligations, imposed by law on all of the proprietors, to contribute to the repair and maintenance of the other three lifts.

The respondent's submissions

102. The respondent identified what is said to have been the issue for his Honour in the following terms: did the by-law mean that the respondent had to pay 25 per cent extra (or 44.382 per cent in total) of "the costs attributed to the running and routine maintenance, servicing and repair of the lift system" ie 25 per cent extra to the 19.382 per cent he was already paying as part of his administrative fund levy for the same thing, or did it mean, as his Honour found, and the respondent contended, that he was literally required to pay 25 per cent of the "running and routine maintenance, servicing and repair of the lift system"?

103. The respondent submitted that his Honour's interpretation of the by-law correctly followed proper principles of construction and that, read in the ordinary way in accordance with modern authority, his Honour's analysis in the italicised portion of his judgment reproduced at par [20] above "is impeccable".

104. The respondent submitted that the owner of Lot 1 and the Owners Corporation, at the time of making the by-law, must be taken to have known that, in terms of unit entitlement, the owner of Lot 1 was already paying 19.382 per cent of the very costs referred to in (ii)(b) of the by-law through administrative fund levies. The respondent emphasised that the by-law does not say an "extra" one-quarter of the costs; it says "one-quarter", which was precisely the fraction of those costs that the respondent maintained he should have been paying. The respondent submitted that if the parties had intended that 44.382 per cent of such costs should have been paid, clear language to that effect would have been required.

The Statutory Regime

105. In 1989 the Strata Titles Act 1973 included the following relevant provisions:-

58 (1) Except as provided in this section the by-laws set forth in Schedule 1 shall be the by-laws in force in respect of each strata scheme.
(7) With the written consent of the proprietor or proprietors of the lot or lots concerned, the body corporate may, pursuant to a special resolution, make a by-law:

> (a) conferring on the proprietor of a lot specified in the by-law, or the proprietors of several lots so specified:
>
> > (i) a right of exclusive use and enjoyment of; or > > (ii) special privileges in respect of, > the whole or any specified part of the common property, upon conditions (including the payment of money, at specified times or as required by the body corporate, by the proprietor or proprietors of the lot or lots concerned) specified in the by-law; or > (b) amending, adding to or repealing the by-law made in accordance with this subsection.
>

(7AA) A by-law referred to in subsection (7) shall either:

> (a) provide that the body corporate shall continue to be responsible for the proper maintenance, and keeping in a state of good and serviceable repair, of the common property or the relevant part of it; or
> (b) impose on the proprietor or proprietors of the lot or lots concerned the responsibility for that maintenance and upkeep, and in the case of a by-law that confers rights or privileges on more than one proprietor, any money payable by virtue of the by-law by the proprietors concerned:

> (c) to the body corporate; or
> (d) to any person for or towards the maintenance or upkeep of any common property,

shall, except to the extent that the by-law otherwise provides, be payable by the proprietors concerned proportionately according to the relative proportions of their respective unit entitlements.
(9) To the extent to which such a by-law makes a person directly responsible for the proper maintenance, and keeping in a state of good and serviceable repair, of any common property, it discharges the body corporate from its obligations under s 68(1)(b).
(10) Any moneys payable by a proprietor to the body corporate under a by-law referred to in subsection (7) or pursuant to subsection (9A) may be recovered, as a debt, by the body corporate in any court of competent jurisdiction.
59(1) A body corporate may levy the contributions determined by it in accordance with s 68(1)(j) and (k) and contributions referred to in s 68(1)(p) by serving on the proprietors notice in writing of the contributions payable by them in respect of their respective lots.
(7) Any contribution levied under this section:

> (a) becomes due and payable to the body corporate in accordance with the decision of the body corporate to make the levy;
> (b) …

68(1) A body corporate shall, for the purposes of the strata scheme concerned, but subject to the provisions of any development statement affecting common property and to the operation of this Act in relation to the development statement:

> (a) control, manage and administer the common property for the benefit of the proprietors;
> (b) properly maintain and keep in a state of good and serviceable repair:
>
> > (i) the common property; and
> > (ii) any personal property vested in the body corporate;

(c) where necessary, renew or replace any fixtures or fittings comprised in the common property and any personal property vested in the body corporate;

(j) not later than fourteen days after the constitution of the body corporate and from time to time thereafter, determine subject to subsection (3) the amounts necessary to be raised by way of contributions for the purpose of meeting its actual or expected liabilities incurred or to be incurred under paragraph (b) or for the payment of insurance premiums or any other liability of the body corporate, other than amounts referred to in paragraph (k) or (p);
(k) from time to time after the expiration of one month after the constitution of the council or one year after the constitution of the body corporate, whichever first happens, determine subject to subsection (3) the amounts necessary to be raised by way of contribution for the purpose of meeting its actual or expected liabilities:

(i) …
(ii)…
(iii) under paragraph (c); and …

Consideration

106. In my opinion, Special By-Law 21 is not ambiguous or uncertain. Its words and their meaning are as clear when read in isolation as they are when read by the hypothetical reasonable person having all the background knowledge which would reasonably have been available to the parties in the situation in which they were at the time Special By-Law 21 was formulated.

107. For presently relevant purposes, the by-law consists of two parts. First, it grants to the proprietor of Lot 1 for the time being exclusive use and enjoyment of the lift known as Lift No 4. Secondly, it sets out a mechanism for the calculation of the price, or consideration, which the proprietor of Lot 1 will be required to pay for the continued use and enjoyment of that exclusive right.

108. For reasons which no doubt seemed logical and sensible to those involved at the time, that price, or consideration, was not set as a fixed sum. There may have been a number of reasons for taking this approach, such as a desire to maintain a relationship between that price, or consideration, and costs which the Owners Corporation might have been expected to incur to repair and maintain the lifts in the building on an annual basis. Whatever may have been the reason, or reasons, for choosing this method of calculation, or even if there were no reasons, they form no part of the present enquiry.

109. In my opinion, because the by-law (unfortunately) expresses the price, or consideration, to be paid by the proprietor for the time being of Lot 1, for the exclusive use and enjoyment of Lift 4, not as a fixed sum, but in terms of costs, there has arisen a tendency, evident in some of the arguments in this Court and in the Court below, to treat the payment of the price, or consideration, as discharging what is in truth a separate and different obligation upon the proprietor for the time being of Lot 1 to pay levies raised by the Owners Corporation in the normal course. This tendency has, perhaps understandably, been heightened by the fact that levies raised in this way are clearly, or at least usually, calculated by reference to the actual or anticipated outgoings of the Owners Corporation, including, relevantly, costs incurred for the repair and maintenance etc of lifts. It has been suggested that the obligation to pay both the price, or consideration, and the obligation to pay levies in the normal course, amount (unfairly) to a double payment.

110. The various formulations of the respondent's case before his Honour would appear to have arisen in this way. Whether described as an overpayment, or as money had and received, or as resulting in an unjust enrichment, they all proceed upon the basis that the respondent has paid twice for the same thing.

111. For the reasons that follow, I do not think that this is correct. The original parties to the formulation of the by-law could no doubt have calculated the price, or consideration, not as a function of costs but as a fixed sum, possibly with annual CPI increases. The proprietor for the time being of Lot 1 would have been obliged to pay that sum for the continued exclusive use and enjoyment of Lift 4, and could not have been heard to complain that he also had an obligation to pay other levies raised by the Owners Corporation from time to time. Indeed, the words of clause (ii) of the by-law speak in terms of "such sums as are identified" to the proprietor of Lot 1 by the Body Corporate. In my opinion, the use of that word serves clearly to emphasise that the obligation upon the proprietor of Lot 1 is not an obligation to pay those costs, but to pay a price, or consideration, calculated conveniently, but in any event irrelevantly, by reference to those costs.

112. Inherent in the respondent's arguments would appear to be the proposition that the by-law somehow operates, or should operate, as a partial exoneration or discharge of his obligation to contribute his share of the costs of the Owners Corporation by the payment of other levies calculated by reference to his unit entitlement in the ordinary way. In my opinion, the terms of By-Law 21 do not have this effect, and if they were intended to have this effect they should have said so.

113. The fact that the proprietor of Lot 1 has become entitled to maintain a right to the exclusive use and enjoyment of Lift 4 by paying a price calculated, in the case of (ii)(a), as the costs directly attributed to Lift 4, and in the case of (ii)(b), as an arithmetical function of the total cost of maintenance of all lifts in the building, does not mean that he is "overpaying" just because he is required, in addition to the payment of those sums, to contribute via his annual levies, to the cost of the upkeep of the other three lifts in the building. The obligations discharged by the payment of those two sums are different obligations and do not overlap.

114. I have already referred at par [90] to that part of his Honour's judgment where he refers to the need for the court to consider the chosen language, and the surrounding circumstances in which By-Law 21 was made, in order to determine, objectively, the mutual intention of the parties. These principles were not a matter of dispute between the parties in this appeal. See, for example, Pacific Carriers Ltd v BNP Paribas (2004) 218 CLR 451 at 461-462 [22]; Toll (FGCT) Pty Ltd v Alphapharm Pty Ltd (2004) 219 CLR 165 at 179 [40]; Ryledar Pty Ltd v Euphoric Pty Ltd [2007] NSWCA 65 [103] – [106].

115. In Ryledar (supra) [107] – [108] Tobias JA said the following:

> [107] The primary judge accepted (at [30]) that it was not necessary for him to find that the language of a contract was ambiguous before considering its meaning as may be revealed in the context and purpose of the transaction commonly known to its parties: Lion Nathan Australia Pty Ltd v Coopers Brewery Ltd (2005) 223 ALR 560 at 573-574 [78].
> > "31. However, that does not mean that when the Court begins the task of construction it puts the words of the document aside and endeavours first to ascertain the commonly known factual context and purpose of the transaction, often only by resolving a strenuous contest between the parties. The Court does not, once it has found the commonly known factual context and purpose, then look at the words of the contract and, if they do not readily accommodate the context and purpose so found, force them to do so by a process of interpretation.
> > 32. When the Court is construing a commercial contract, it begins with the words of the document: there it often finds expressed the factual context known to both parties and the common purpose and object of the transaction. But the court is alive to the possibility that what seems clear by reference only to the words on the printed page may not be so clear when one takes into account as well what was known to both parties but does not appear in the document. When that is taken into account, the words in the contract may legitimately have one or more of a number of possible meanings. It is then the Court's task to identify which of the possible meanings represents the parties' contractual intention.
> > 33. However, when a party to a contract argues that the known context and common purpose of the transaction gives the words of the contract a meaning which, by no stretch of language or syntax they will bear then, in truth, one has a rectification suit, not a construction suit.
> > 34. That is the case here. …

116. When one has regard to the circumstances in this case, in my opinion they include, and persuasively suggest, that the proprietor of Lot 1 at the time when the by-law was formulated was demonstrably intent upon converting an informal, exclusive use of Lift 4 into a legal and enforceable right to the same thing. The disadvantages of the former, and the significant advantages of the latter, seem to me to be so obvious as to require no elaboration. The readjustment and entrenchment of the right of exclusive use and enjoyment of Lift 4 by the proprietor of Lot 1 was patently valuable to that proprietor, particularly having regard to the type of business conducted at those premises. The payment of a price to secure it, over and above the proportionate cost of maintaining Lift 4, would appear to me, as a matter of "common sense", to conform to "a commercial, businesslike" approach.

117. The relevant statutory provisions also reinforce this. Special By-Law 21 is a by-law made in accordance with s 58(7) of the Act conferring on the proprietor of Lot 1 a right of exclusive use and enjoyment of a specified part of the common property. The by-law provides that the body corporate should be responsible for the proper maintenance and keeping in a state of good and serviceable repair of Lift 4, as well as its cleaning, replacement and running costs in accordance with the alternative described in s 58(7AA)(a) of the Act. Conversely, but significantly, the by-law does not impose on the proprietor of Lot 1 the responsibility for that maintenance or upkeep in accordance with s 58(7AA)(b). Section 58(9), therefore has no application in the present case and does not operate to discharge the body corporate from its obligations under s 68(1)(b) to maintain the lift, or to keep it in a state of good and serviceable repair.

118. However, as a condition — indeed, the only condition — for the conferring on the proprietor of Lot 1 of a right of exclusive use and enjoyment of Lift 4 pursuant to s 58(7)(a)(i), the proprietor of Lot 1 was obliged to pay money as "specified in the by-law". The moneys specified in the by-law as payable by the proprietor of Lot 1 are the costs attributed directly to Lift 4 and one quarter of the costs attributed to the running and routine maintenance, servicing and repair of the lift system. These monies could be recovered by the body corporate from the proprietor of Lot 1 as a debt in accordance with s 58(10) of the Act.

119. Therefore, to the extent that the body corporate, by the express terms of By-Law 21, retained its s 68(1)(b) responsibility for the proper maintenance and keeping in a state of good and serviceable repair and the cleaning, replacement and running costs of Lift 4 (ie "the lift"), it retained the corresponding responsibility to pay for it. However, as a condition of the grant of excusive use and enjoyment of Lift 4 on the proprietor of Lot 1, it required and obliged that proprietor, and that proprietor agreed, by the terms of the by-law, to pay the cost of meeting that responsibility. The body corporate thereby became entitled to recover it from the proprietor of that lot as a debt pursuant to s 58(10). No other levy upon proprietors of the strata scheme was necessary and they all became thereby relieved of any burden of the costs of Lift 4 as long as the proprietor of Lot 1 complied with the terms of the by-law.

120. Nothing in the terms of the by-law, and nothing in the Act, relieved either the body corporate of its obligation to meet the costs of repair, maintenance, renewal, replacement and running for the remaining three lifts, or the proprietor of Lot 1 of its obligation to continue to contribute its proportionate share of such costs of the remaining three lifts, in accordance with levy notices issued by the body corporate from time to time for this purpose. In my opinion, this meant that the respondent became and remained liable for the payment of both 25 per cent of the costs of the lift system for the building in accordance with Special By-Law 21, as well as his proportionate 19.382 per cent of the remaining 75 per cent of such costs as one of several proprietors in the Owners Corporation.

The Cross Appeal

121. The respondent has filed a cross appeal in which he seeks to argue that his Honour erred in the way in which he dealt with the respondent's claim for interest. In light of the view I have formed about the result of this appeal, the precise issue raised on the cross appeal does not need to be considered. However, by reason of a concession made by the appellant concerning an amount that it now says is repayable to the respondent, it becomes necessary to revisit that issue. This is explained below.

122. One of the principal matters dealt with by the respondent in his submissions is what is said to be an error in the way that the appellant's submissions purport to treat one of his Honour's significant findings. The relevant passage to which attention is drawn is to be found at p 16 of his Honour's judgment, and is as follows:-

> "In addition, I am comfortably satisfied that when the [respondent] received a levy notice, not only was he being charged one quarter of the costs attributed to the running and routine maintenance, servicing and repair of the lift system as a whole, pursuant to By-Law 21, but as part of his administration levies, he was being charged at least 19.38 per cent as well for costs which were identical."

123. In order to expose the error, the respondent drew attention to certain paragraphs of the applicant's submissions in this Court in which $100,000 is assumed, by way of example, to represent the total cost for one year to maintain all four lifts in the building. In the context of this example, the appellant argued that the Owners Corporation approached the respondent's obligations in the following manner:

> 48.1 from the $100,000 lift costs, it levied 25 per cent of these costs to the respondent pursuant to his obligations under By-Law 21;
> 48.2 from the remaining $75,000, it struck a levy against the respondent, as a lot owner required to maintain the building pursuant to Part 3 of Chapter 3 of the Act, of a further sum of 19.38 per cent of $75,000 (i.e. $14,250).

124. Relying upon the passage quoted at par [47], the respondent submitted that this analysis is erroneous. The respondent submitted that the relevant portion of the example set forth in par [48.2] should read, "from the same $100,000, it struck a levy against the respondent … of a further sum of 19.38 per cent of $100,000 (i.e. $19,380)".

125. In the respondent's submission, this is a significant difference for the reason that, if it is correct, the respondent was being levied 44.382 per cent of the whole costs attributed to the running and routine maintenance, servicing and repair of the lift system as a whole, a circumstance tending to suggest (according to this submission) that the appellant's interpretation of the by-law was, in effect, uncommercial and that his Honour's opinion of the by-law, as one in need of "a commercial, businesslike interpretation", ought to be adopted. The respondent maintained that submission in this Court as supporting his Honour's conclusions. Indeed, the respondent argued, relying upon Coulton v Holcombe (1986) 162 CLR 1, that the appellant ought to be bound by the conduct of its case in the Court below and, in effect, ought not to be permitted in this Court to argue for some less onerous and burdensome alternative interpretation of the by-law.

126. However, as will by now be apparent from what appears above, I am of the opinion that his Honour's interpretation of the by-law is incorrect. It follows from this result, therefore, that the respondent has been overcharged, but only by an amount equal to 19.382 per cent of his one-quarter share of the costs of the lifts as a whole, for which he was otherwise levied, for the excusive use and enjoyment of Lift 4, in accordance with the terms of By-Law 21. According to the appellant's concession, the amount of that overcharge is $18,758.14.

127. The respondent sought to argue on the cross appeal that his Honour should have awarded interest on the whole of the amount overpaid. The effect of the conclusion I have come to, having regard to the appellant's concession, is that the respondent's arguments on the question of interest may be conveniently transposed to the smaller sum.

128. The respondent argued in this Court that his Honour fell into error in awarding interest only from the date of a letter written by the respondent to the Owners Corporation on 9 September 2002 in which, as his Honour found, the respondent "was making clear to the body corporate that they had overcharged him". He argued that the primary purpose of an award of interest is compensatory and is payable, and ought to have been awarded, in any circumstances where the respondent had been kept out of his money or denied the opportunity to earn interest upon it or otherwise to utilise his overcharged payments from the date or dates he made them. The respondent argued that his Honour's discretion miscarried.

129. The respondent offered, in his submissions in this Court, to bring in an updated calculation of interest. Such interest would ordinarily run from the date upon which the cause of action arises. In the present case, being an action to recover money paid under a mistake, that would mean that interest would run from the respective dates upon which the appellant received the overpaid amounts.

130. The appellant made no submissions in this Court on the cross appeal. Even having regard to the discretionary nature of a judicial decision concerning the award of interest under the statute, I can see no reason why the respondent would not have become entitled to an award of interest on the amount found by his Honour to have been overcharged or, correspondingly, to an award of interest on such smaller sum as the appellant now concedes was overpaid, in circumstances where its appeal to this Court were allowed.

Costs

131. It was submitted on behalf of the respondent that, whatever the outcome of the present appeal, this Court should not dismiss the plaintiff's case in the court below as the appellant did not challenge the finding that it had overcharged the respondent, but instead sought merely to argue that the extent of the overcharging was less that found by Rolfe DCJ. Even though the appellant's submissions in reply do not concede that contention, they do not put it directly in issue either. However, the appellant's Notice of Appeal asked for an order that the respondent pay three quarters of the appellant's costs of the trial, presumably based upon an estimation of the time occupied by the issue of interpretation of the by-law. Counsel for the respondent did not propose a smaller proportion. In my opinion, those proportions are appropriate.

Orders

132. In my opinion, this Court should make the following orders:

(1) Appeal allowed with costs.
(2) Cross appeal allowed with costs.
(3) Judgment and orders of Rolfe DCJ of 17 November 2005, save order 3(c) be set aside.
(4) In lieu thereof, judgment for the respondent for $18,758.14 plus interest, such interest to run from the date of the overpayments.
(5) Appellant to pay one-quarter of the respondent's costs of the trial before Rolfe DCJ, and, pursuant to s 229 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 , such costs to be payable by contributions levied in relation to lots other than lots owned by the respondent.
(6) Respondent to pay three quarters of the appellant's costs of the trial before Rolfe DCJ.
(7) The appellant and the respondent to have a certificate under the Suitors' Fund Act 1951 if otherwise entitled.

New South Wales Court of Appeal

14 September 2007

Community schemes — Management — By-laws — Special by-laws — Special by-law giving owner of one lot right to store watercraft on part of another lot — Whether by-law valid — Whether legislation permits making of by-laws giving one lot owner the right to use and occupy part of another owner's lot — Whether any power to make such by-laws displaced by specific power to create easements and restrictions as to user in conveyancing legislation — Whether other lot owner's registered, indefeasible title free of right given by by-law — Anthony Hordern & Sons Ltd v Amalgamated Clothing and Allied Trade Unions of Australia (1932) 47 CLR 1 considered — Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW), s 43 — Conveyancing Act 1919 (NSW), s 88B — Real Property Act 1900 (NSW), s 42(1).

A strata scheme was situated beside Port Hacking in Sydney. It consisted of two lots. A free-standing house occupied each lot. Lot 1 was the higher of the two lots and faced the street. Lot 2 was behind lot 1 and had frontage to the waters of Port Hacking.

[140579]

A special by-law, promulgated by the developer of the strata scheme, was registered along with the relevant strata plan. It said:

> "The Registered Proprietors for the time being of Lot 1 shall have the right to store small watercraft within the area denoted (A) on the sketch annexed to [the strata plan]."

The area in question consisted of approximately 15m² of lot 2.

The owner of lot 2 (White) undertook landscaping work in and around the watercraft storage area. The effect of this work was to reduce the area to approximately 8m² and to make it more difficult for the owners of lot 1 (the Betallis) to move watercraft between the storage area and the water.

In due course, White commenced proceedings against the Betallis in the Supreme Court of New South Wales, seeking: (1) a declaration that the special by-law was ultra vires and of no force or effect; and (2) an order restraining the Betallis from storing watercraft on lot 2. The Betallis cross-claimed in the proceedings, seeking a declaration that the by-law was valid and an order that White restore the storage area to its former condition.

The Supreme Court dismissed White's proceedings and gave judgment to the Betallis on the cross-claim. White appealed to the New South Wales Court of Appeal.

On appeal, White argued that:

- the by-law, made pursuant to the general power to make by-laws in s 43 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW) (the Management Act), effectively created an easement or restriction as to user which benefited the Betallis and burdened her. However, the specific power to create easements and restrictions as to user is found in s 88B of the Conveyancing Act 1919 (NSW). Therefore, in accordance with the principle enunciated in Anthony Hordern & Sons Ltd v Amalgamated Clothing and Allied Trade Unions of Australia (1932) 47 CLR 1, which precludes reliance on a general statutory power where a specific power is given, the by-law was null and void
- the by-law was invalid because the power to make by-laws in the Management Act cannot be used to give one lot owner the right to use and occupy part of another owner's lot;
- the by-law was not recorded on the folio for lot 2 and, therefore, pursuant to s 42(1) of the Real Property Act 1900 (NSW), she held her interest in lot 2 free from any interest the Betallis allegedly had by virtue of the by-law. The only relevant entries in the second schedules of the folios for lot 2 and the common property were: (1) in the lot 2 folio, "Interest recorded on [the registered folio for the common property]"; and (2) in the common property folio, "Attention is directed to the strata scheme by-laws filed with the strata plan".

Held: (per Santow and Campbell JJA; McColl JA dissenting) Appeal dismissed.

The by-law and s 88B of the Conveyancing Act

Per Santow JA (with whom Campbell JA agreed):

1. The "Anthony Hordern principle" is, in reality, no more than a presumption in aid of construction, applicable in construing a particular provision conferring power as opposed to general provisions of the same instrument which might otherwise confer the same power. It has nothing to say to two particular and distinct sets of provisions conferring distinct though overlapping powers, especially when in different, albeit connected, statutory instruments.

2. Here there were two distinct statutory regimes for the creation of what was in the nature of an easement or restrictive covenant. Each had its own distinct mode of application, subject to distinct conditions and giving rise to distinct consequences affecting attributes of the easement or restrictive covenant created under each regime. Therefore, the Anthony Hordern principle did not apply in the present case.

Per McColl JA:

3. The by-law conferred exclusive use and enjoyment of the watercraft storage area on the Betallis, leaving White with no right to use that section of lot 2. A by-law which purports to have that effect is not an easement because it purports to confer rights of occupation that substantially deprive the owner of the affected lot of proprietorship. In those circumstances, the by-law did not satisfy the fourth condition for a valid easement in Re Ellenborough Park [1956] Ch 131 — namely, that the right claimed must be capable of forming the subject matter of a grant. Therefore, the by-law did not create an interest of the sort caught by s 88B of the Conveyancing Act, in which case the Anthony Hordern principle could not be invoked.

Validity of by-laws permitting use and occupation of another lot

Per Santow JA:

4. The restriction under the by-law constituted a matter "appropriate to the type of strata scheme concerned", for which by-laws could be made under s 43(1) of the Management Act. Furthermore, s 43(2), providing that "[s]ubsection (1) does not limit the matters for which by-laws may be made", was also available to be called into aid had it been necessary to extend the scope for by-laws beyond those in the list in subsection (1).

Per McColl JA (dissenting):

5. The by-law effectively conferred exclusive use and enjoyment of the watercraft storage area on the Betallis. It did not confer any benefit on White. On the contrary, she was burdened with the costs of maintaining that part of her lot for the Betallis advantage. Nothing in the Management Act, or in the history of strata titles legislation, supports the conclusion that the by-law-making powers permit a by-law to be made which has this effect.

6. To the extent that by-laws can affect the rights of individual proprietors, it is because the by-law is presumed to operate for the benefit of the strata scheme as a whole. The by-law in this case did not operate for the benefit of the strata scheme as a whole. It operated only for the benefit of the Betallis, to the detriment of White.

Per Campbell JA:

7. Nothing in the notion of a by-law prevented there being a by-law entitling the owners of the lot located away from the water frontage to store a boat within the defined area immediately adjacent to the waterfront but within the lot located on the water frontage. And nothing in the particular legislative framework that governed the strata plan in question detracted from the validity of the by-law.

8. The strata scheme here was little different to a subdivision into two freehold parcels on which free-standing houses were constructed. In the way in which it used the strata title legislation to achieve this functional end, it was a distinct oddity and quite different to the situation with which the strata titles legislation is usually concerned. These were relevant matters in deciding what counted as "matters appropriate to the type of strata scheme concerned" within the meaning of s 43 of the Management Act.

The by-law and indefeasibility of title

Per Santow JA (with whom Campbell JA agreed):

9. Even were it insufficient for the Real Property Act register merely to incorporate by reference a relevant strata scheme by-law filed with the strata plan (as happened here), a proposition which could not be accepted, the actual by-law had, in fact, been sufficiently "recorded in the folio" of the register, within the meaning of s 42(1). Registration did include in a folio "interests and ... entries" in respect of the by-law.

Per Campbell JA:

10. From the instant of its creation, the proprietary right of the owner of lot 2 was subject to the right created by the by-law. Therefore, the by-law was no more an infringement on the proprietary rights of the owner of lot 2 than is the right of the owner of a dominant tenement to exercise, on the land of another, rights that have been created by an easement.

[140581]

ORDERS

(1) Leave to appeal granted.
(2) Appeal dismissed.
(2) Appellant to pay the respondent's costs.

Santow JA, McColl JA and Campbell JA:

Santow JA:

INTRODUCTION

The appellant, owner of Lot 2 in a two-lot strata scheme, challenges the validity of a by-law (by-law 20) purporting to give the respondent owners of Lot 1 a watercraft storage area on the appellant's lot. The appellant Lynda Margaret White sought leave to appeal and a concurrent hearing.

2. By-law 20 purported to provide access for Lot 1 to use a specified watercraft storage area on the adjoining Lot 2, the latter being a waterfront lot. By-law 20 if valid, was created as a by-law when adopted by and lodged with the strata plan registered by the Registrar General for the strata scheme as in force at the date of lodgement. This could only be pursuant to s 43 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 ("SSMA"). Thus it was not a by-law made by the owners' corporation relating to common property (compare s 52 SSMA). Nor was it registered as a statutory easement under s 88B of the Conveyancing Act 1919 that being said by the appellant to be its vice. Rather it was associated with such a registered easement being the right of footway allowing the respondents access over Lot 2 to its waterfront on Port Hacking.

3. The question of validity ultimately turns on the answer to two questions:

Question One: was s 88B of the Conveyancing Act 1919 the only available source of power for creating what was, if validly created, in the nature of an easement or restrictive covenant? In particular was the "Anthony Hordern principle" applicable that,

> "when the Legislature expressedly gives a power by a particular provision which prescribes the mode in which it should be exercised and the conditions and restrictions which must be observed, it excludes the operation of general expressions in the same instrument which might otherwise have been relied upon for the same power."

Anthony Hordern & Sons Ltd v Amalgamated Clothing and Allied Trades Union of Australia (1932) 47 CLR 1 at 7.

Question Two: was the purported by-law rendered invalid under s 43(4) SSMA due to inconsistency with s 42 Real Property Act 1900 (NSW), on the basis that Lot 2 could not be said to be burdened by the interest in favour of Lot 1 where that interest was not recorded on the folio of Lot 2?

4. The trial judge concluded these two questions in favour of the respondents Christopher Nadir Betalli and Nicole Lee Puckeridge. His Honour accordingly ordered restoration of the watercraft storage area to its former condition so as to remove certain obstructing landscaping works held to be in breach of by-law 20.

5. There are some ancillary issues in relation to these questions which I deal with under "Disposition" below.

SALIENT FACTS

6. The salient facts are essentially undisputed. There are however some issues of interpretation of what was recorded on the register to which I shall make reference later.

Nature of the land and Strata Plan in question

7. Strata Plan 67662 divides land located on Marina Crescent, Gymea Bay into the two lots. That land extends down from Marina Crescent to a frontage to Crown land at mean high watermark for Port Hacking which then extends further into Port Hacking.

8. The appellant is the owner of Lot 2 in SP67662. The respondents are the owners of Lot 1.

9. Lot 2 is the lower lot, fronting onto the Crown land. There is a right of footway over Lot 2 in favour of Lot 1, allowing the respondents as owners of Lot 1 access to Port Hacking.

By-law 20 and the challenge to it

10. A special by-law (by-law 20) was purported to be made under s 52 SSMA. That by-law provided that the registered proprietors of Lot 1 had the right to store small watercraft within a specified area of Lot 2. That area comprised approximately 15 square metres. It was thus in place from the time the strata plan was registered having been promulgated by the developer. It was never sought, through the owners' corporation, to introduce such a provision later via an amendment to the by-laws; that is to say after the creation of the lots in the strata plan.

11. Various disputes arose between the appellant and the first respondent concerning the first respondent's use of the watercraft storage area and the validity generally of by-law 20.

[140593]

12. Subsequent to the failure of mediation to resolve these disputes, the appellant undertook landscaping work on the area designated by by-law 20 as the watercraft storage area. Landscaping encompassed installation of wooden steps, erection of retaining walls and planting of native plants in a constructed earth bank. These works caused the area available for storage to be reduced to approximately 8 square metres and increased the difficulty with which watercraft may be placed in and removed from the storage area.

The dispute in the proceedings below

13. In the proceedings below, the appellant sought a declaration that by-law 20 was ultra vires and of no force or effect, and an order restraining the respondents from storing watercraft on Lot 2.

14. The respondents filed a cross-claim, successfully seeking a declaration that by-law 20 was valid and consequential relief, including removal of the wooden steps and retaining wall, and restoration of the watercraft storage area to its former condition.

15. The trial judge considered the principal issue to be the validity of by-law 20 and determined that it was valid as a by-law. His Honour answered the two questions earlier posed in the negative. The trial judge therefore did not have to determine whether, in the event of a finding of invalidity, the appellant was estopped from preventing the respondents storing a boat in the watercraft storage area. This would have been on the basis of certain alleged representations by the appellant and her solicitor in July 2004 indicating that there was no objection on their part to the storage of a small or inflatable boat in that area. The reasoning of that judgment otherwise emerges in the discussion under "Disposition" below.

DISPOSITION

16. By-law 20 is in the following terms:

"The Registered Proprietors for the time being of Lot 1 shall have the right to store small watercraft within the area denoted (A) on the sketch annexed to this instrument."

17. The instrument in question is designated SP 67662 being the relevant strata plan for the two lots.

18. SP 67662 refers to a "

right of footway, itself created pursuant to s 88B of the Conveyancing Act 1919 and s7(3) of the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1973". That right of footway is in favour of Lot 1 to the rear of Lot 2. As the trial judge made clear at [7], the purpose of the right of footway and of by-law 20 is plain, namely to give the owners of Lot 1 access to the water at Port Hacking and a space on which to store a small boat near the water.

19. The by-law was expressed to be made under s 52 of SSMA. It was and remains common ground that that section provided no authority for the by-law. Section 52 provides that an owners' corporation may make by-laws to which Div 4 of Part 5 of Chapter 2 applies if certain conditions are satisfied. That category of by-law relates to the conferment of the right of exclusive use or enjoyment of common property or special privileges in respect of common property, neither being the case here.

20. Nor, as was common ground, was s 46 applicable, relating as it does to by-laws made by an owners' corporation in accordance with a special resolution.

21. The question then became under what source of power was by-law 20 capable of being promulgated. This is when, indubitably, by-law 20 purported to create what was in the nature of an easement or restrictive covenant. According to the appellant, the legislature had expressly given that power (to create what was in the nature of an easement or restrictive covenant) by another particular provision, effectively "in the same instrument", namely s 88B of the Conveyancing Act. Section 88B prescribed with particularity the mode in which that power should be exercised and the conditions and restrictions which must be observed. It thereby was said to exclude the operation of general expressions in the SSMA, such as s 43 to achieve the same object.

[140595]

22. The appellant thus invoked what I have earlier by way of shorthand called the " Anthony Hordern principle". In Anthony Hordern & Sons Ltd v Amalgamated Clothing and Allied Trade Unions of Australia (supra) an award of the Commonwealth Court of Conciliation and Arbitration granting preference to unionists was struck down. This was on the ground that the provisions of that order did not conform with the conditions which s 40 of the Commonwealth Conciliation and Arbitration Act 1904 prescribed as regards as giving preference to members of organisations. The question thus becomes whether that principle applies to the by-law-making power under SSMA.

[140597]

23. The relevant provisions of s 88B of the Conveyancing Act 1919 are set out below:

88B Creation and release of easements, profits à prendre and restrictions on use of land by plans

(1) …… .
(2) A plan shall not be lodged in the office of the Registrar-General for registration or recording under Division 3 of Part 23 unless it indicates in the manner prescribed in respect of the plan by regulations made under this Act or the Real Property Act 1900:

(a) what easements, if any, are intended to be created:

(i) burdening land comprised in the plan and appurtenant to any existing roads shown on the plan, and
(ii) appurtenant to any roads to be vested upon registration of the plan,

(b) what easements, if any, referred to in section 88A are intended to be created burdening land comprised in the plan and in whose favour those easements are intended to be created,
(c) what other easements or profits à prendre, if any, are intended to be created appurtenant to or burdening land comprised in the plan, and
(c1) what easements or profits à prendre, if any, appurtenant to or burdening land comprised in the plan are intended to be released or partially released, and
(d) what restrictions on the use of land or positive covenants, if any, are intended to be created benefiting or burdening land comprised in the plan.

(3) On registration or recording under Division 3 of Part 23 of a plan upon which any easement, profit à prendre, restriction or positive covenant is indicated in accordance with paragraph (a), (b), (c) or (d) of subsection (2) then, subject to compliance with the provisions of this Division:

(a) any easement so indicated as intended to be created as appurtenant to any existing public roads shown in the plan or any roads to be vested in the council upon registration of the plan shall be created and shall without any further assurance vest in the council by virtue of such registration and of this Act,
(b) any easement so indicated as intended to be created pursuant to section 88A shall be created and shall without any further assurance vest in the relevant prescribed authority referred to in that section by virtue of such registration and of this Act,
(c) any other easement, profit à prendre or any restriction on the use of land (not being a restriction as to user of the type that may be imposed under section 88D or 88E) so indicated as intended to be created shall:

(i) be created,
(iii) not be extinguished by reason of the owner of a parcel of land benefited by such easement, profit à prendre or restriction holding or acquiring a greater interest in a separate parcel of land burdened thereby, and

(d) any restriction on the use of land or positive covenant that is of the type that may be imposed under section 88BA, 88D or 88E and is so indicated as intended to be created takes effect as if it had been so imposed.

24. The plan is to be lodged in the office of the Registrar General for registration or recording of, relevantly, easements or other restrictions on the use of land. Such a plan is one lodged pursuant to Div 3 of Part

23 being relevantly s 195A of that Division and Part, but also, relevantly to the present case, includes a plan lodged pursuant to s 7(3) of the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1973. The latter is in the following terms:

"(3) The provisions of section 88B of the Conveyancing Act 1919 apply to a strata plan and a strata plan of subdivision in the same way as they apply to a plan referred to in that section relating to land under the provisions of the Real Property Act 1900, except in so far as that section authorises the creation or release of easements, or the creation of restrictions on the use of land or positive covenants burdening or benefiting land not under those provisions."

25. The exception above is not applicable this not being old system land.

26. At the time of registration of a strata plan, s 7(3) enables the creation of easements or restrictions on the use of land burdening or benefiting lots or common property in a strata plan. It thereby extends to strata plans the procedure set out in s 88B of the Conveyancing Act 1919, so long as the land is held under the provisions of the Real Property Act 1900, as is this land; see "Strata Titles" by Neville Moses and others (Thompson Law Book Company) at 603.

27. The authors of the above work explain that the procedure represented a marked improvement on that adopted under the earlier 1961 Strata Titles Act. This was in overcoming the considerable delays which were frequently encountered when local councils insisted on the creation of easements before approving a strata plan. That usually necessitated the preparation of a further plan and involved delay pending its registration. Because of the terms of s 88B(3)(c), notwithstanding the rules of law or equity to the contrary, the result will not differ should the dominant and servient tenements be vested in the same owner, as is the case where a developer wishes to create restrictions in the nature of easements or restrictive covenants at the inception of the strata plan.

28. The appellant then sought to invoke the Registrar General's supervision of the registration process and the essential requirements for the creation of, relevantly, a restriction on use. The appellant did so in order to establish that the regime with its administrative outworking, under s 88B was a distinct and particular one. This was to demonstrate that s 88B did indeed satisfy the Anthony Hordern principle in its detailed prescription of the mode in which the relevant power to register such a restriction is regulated and supervised. The detailed procedure for such registration is set out in "Baalman & Wells Land Titles Office Practice" edited by Ticehurst (LBC) at 397–400. In particular, the restriction must comply with s 88(1) of the Conveyancing Act so as to clearly indicate:

> (a) the land to which the benefit of the restriction is appurtenant;
> (b) the land which is subject to the burden of the restriction;
> (c) the persons (if any) having the right to release, vary or modify the restriction other than the persons having, in the absence of agreement to the contrary, the right by law to release, vary or modify the restrictions; and
> (d) the persons (if any) whose consent to a release, variation or modification of the restriction is stipulated for.

29. The way in which restrictive covenants under s 88B may be varied or released is likewise prescribed in some detail; see Baalman and Wells at 401 and following.

30. The appellant's argument invoking the Anthony Hordern principle seeks to overcome the difficulty that the Conveyancing Act does not constitute the same instrument as the relevant strata titles legislation. She does so by invoking s 7(3) of the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act as effectively constituting the one regime in a broad statutory sense.

31.

The appellant likewise contends that the power expressed in detailed prescriptive terms in s 88B is to be contrasted with a general power to create by-laws lacking any such detailed prescription under the strata titles legislation.

32. It is however at this point that the argument breaks down. This is because it can be clearly shown that the strata titles legislation creates an alternative mode for creating what is in the nature of an easement or restrictive covenant, with its own detailed prescription distinct from that under the Conveyancing Act. That mode has its own quite distinct legal requirements and consequences such as how one alters a particular restriction.

33. In this analysis it must be remembered that the "Anthony Hordern principle" is in reality no more than a presumption in aid of construction applicable in construing a particular provision conferring a power as opposed to general provisions of the same instrument which might otherwise confer the same power. It has nothing to say to two particular and distinct sets of provisions conferring distinct though overlapping powers more especially when in different albeit connected statutory instruments.

34. I need to turn to the distinct particularities in mode of exercise of the by-law-making power and in particular to the distinct conditions and restrictions which attend the creation of a by-law purporting to create what is in the nature of an easement or restrictive covenant under the strata titles legislation and specifically SSMA.

35. Division 1 of Part 5 of SSMA is headed "What by-laws apply to a strata scheme?".

36. Section 41 then deals with new strata schemes in the following terms:

> "41 What by-laws apply to new strata schemes?
> (1) This section applies to strata schemes that came into existence after the commencement of this section.
> (2) The by-laws in force for a strata scheme are the by-laws adopted by or lodged with the strata plan registered by the Registrar-General for the strata scheme, as in force at the date of lodgment, subject to any amendment, repeal or addition recorded by the Registrar-General under section 48."

37. Section 41 is accompanied by a note in the following terms:

> "Note. Section 8 of the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1973 and section 7 of the Strata Schemes (Leasehold Development) Act 1986 require that when a strata plan is submitted for registration it must be accompanied by the proposed by-laws for the strata scheme. Those by-laws are registered with the strata plan."

38. Section 43 in the same Division, is in the following terms:

> "43 What can by-laws provide for?
>
> (1) By-laws may be made in relation to any of the following:
>
> safety and security measures
>
> ……
>
> matters appropriate to the type of strata scheme concerned.
> (2) Subsection (1) does not limit the matters for which by-laws may be made.
> (4) A by-law has no force or effect to the extent that it is inconsistent with this or any other Act or law."

39. I agree with the trial judge's conclusion that the proposed restriction under by-law 20 did constitute a matter "appropriate to the type of strata scheme concerned" (see judgment [38]-[39]). I also agree with the trial judge that s 43(2) could be called in aid were that necessary as extending the scope for by-laws beyond that in the list. Thus there is no threshold difficulty in by-law 20 providing as it does for the right to store small watercraft in the limited area. While it may affect the exercise or enjoyment by the appellant of her land, I do not consider that it is incompatible with the appellant's right of possession; compare Wright v Macadam [1949] 2 KB 744(CA) and Copeland v Greenhalf [1952] Ch 488. The area in question is a small one, it allows the continued use by the appellant of the affected area, though subject to the respondent's right to store a small watercraft within the designated area. Thus even were the traditional constraints applicable to easements to be imported to the strata titles legislation, I would not consider this requirement to be contravened that an easement must not be incompatible with the servient owner's right of possession.

40. The trial judge at [37] sets out what in his view are the only limitations on the power of the owner of land being subdivided by a strata scheme of subdivision after 1 July 1997 to make by-laws:

> "[37] In my view, the only limitations on the power of the owner of land being subdivided by a strata scheme of subdivision after 1 July 1997 to make by-laws are:

(a) the need for the consent of mortgagees and other holders of security under ss 8(4C) and 16 of the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act;
(b) the express restrictions and prohibitions in s 49 of the Strata Schemes Management Act;
(c) the need to avoid inconsistency with any Act or law; and
(d) that the provision is made for a proper purpose and fairly falls within the concept of a by-law, that is, the regulation of the rights and responsibilities of lot owners, occupiers, or the owners corporation, in respect of the lots, or the lots and common property, for the strata scheme."

41. The trial judge then quotes from the second reading speech of the New South Wales Minister for Fair Trading on the introduction of the Bill which became the Strata Schemes Management Act (Interpretation Act 1987 (NSW), s 34(2)(f)), where in introducing the Bill the Minister said:

"… one of the major initiatives in this Bill is to allow more flexibility in the use of by-laws, and to encourage the adoption of by-laws more appropriate to the nature of individual strata schemes. Too often in the past, bodies corporate simply accepted the by-laws included in the legislation without giving any thought to how well they fitted their scheme …

… there will now be a range of models from which by-laws can be selected depending upon the type of scheme involved. Six models are to be available and these will relate to the special aspects of residential schemes, mixed use schemes, commercial retail schemes, industrial schemes, hotels-resorts and retirement villages. The models will be in the regulations.

The contents of the models will reflect the types of matters which need to be addressed in the various types of strata developments. A strata scheme will not be able to be registered unless one of the models or alternative custom designed by-laws are selected …

I am hoping that there will be a more conscious effort made by developers to tailor by-laws to fit individual circumstances. There is a great opportunity for some innovation and I believe that it will be of great benefit to people if they could buy into a strata scheme where the by-laws reflected particular aspects of that scheme's approach to day-to-day issues. The model by-laws would ensure there is a range of selection available, … However, there will still be room for further refinement where a strata scheme wants to make variations of the models …" (NSW Legislative Assembly, Parliamentary Debates (Hansard), No 254, 13 November 1996 at 5921)."

42. I agree with the trial judge's view that this is confirmatory of there being, as the strata titles legislation indicates, a broad capacity under that legislation to create by-laws, subject only to there being no incompatibility or inconsistency with any Act or law. Thus, the trial judge correctly concludes that certain restrictions in a by-law are precluded by s 49. This exemplifies the distinctness of the regime for by-laws in imposing specific constraints on what by-laws may do. Here by-law 20 would clearly conform to s 49, as it contains no restriction preventing dealings or restricting children or preventing the keeping of a guide dog. Section 49 also precludes a by-law resulting from an order being changed save by unanimous resolution.

43. Section 88B on the other hand is itself a distinct regime where prima facie such an easement or restrictive covenant would not be so constrained, save to the extent public policy would intervene.

44. It is significant that under Division 2 headed "How are the by-laws enforced?" s 44 provides as follows:

"44 Who is required to comply with the by-laws?

(1) The by-laws for a strata scheme bind the owners corporation and the owners and any mortgagee or covenant chargee in possession (whether in person or not), or lessee or occupier, of a lot to the same extent as if the by-laws:

(a) had been signed and sealed by the owners corporation and each owner and each such mortgagee, covenant chargee, lessee and occupier, and
(b) contained mutual covenants to observe and perform all the provisions of the by-laws.

……"

45. The effect of s 44 is to bind those specified including the relevant owners. This is as if the by-laws were the subject of mutual covenants to observe and perform their provisions signed and sealed by the owners' corporation and each owner as well as by mortgagees, etc. That again is distinct from the s 88B regime which actually requires that there be a covenant restricting the use of the servient land and otherwise satisfying the distinct requirements for a valid restriction to which I have earlier made reference.

46. The appellant sought to rely upon s 47 of SSMA which is in the following terms:

> "47 Can an owners corporation add to or amend the by-laws?
> An owners corporation, in accordance with a special resolution, may, for the purpose of the control, management, administration, use or enjoyment of the lots or the lots and common property for the strata scheme, make by-laws adding to, amending or repealing the by-laws for the strata scheme."

47. In particular, the appellant contends that, based on the reasoning of the trial judge quoted below, it would follow that if a by-law could operate as a restriction on use of the land when created at the inception of the strata scheme, it could likewise be introduced by an addition or amendment to existing by-laws. It would thus, it is said, operate oppressively on someone who had acquired a strata lot before such addition or amendment took effect. This is what I call a "floodgates" argument.

48. I should quote the reasoning of the trial judge on this matter:

> "[44] By-laws frequently interfere with the rights of property of an owner of a lot. In Sydney Diagnostic Services Pty Ltd v Hamlena Pty Ltd (1991) 5 BPR 11,432, the Court of Appeal upheld the validity of a by-law which prohibited a proprietor or occupier of a lot from engaging in any enterprise other than the practice of medicine, but excluding the practice of pathology. It was held that the power in s 58(2) of the Strata Titles Act enabling by-laws to be made for the purpose of, inter alia, the use of lots, extended to regulating what activities could and could not be conducted on each lot. The Court (at 11,443 and 11,434) rejected the argument that s 58(2) of the Strata Titles Act (the predecessor to s 47 of the Strata Schemes Management Act) only permitted the making of "non-discriminating by-laws" which equally affected all lots.
> [45] As by-laws may be made which substantially interfere with the right of an owner of a lot to use the lot, it is hard to see why it should be contrary to the "scheme" of the Strata Schemes Management Act for a by-law to confer on one lot owner the right to use part of another lot. It may be that if such a by-law were made by the owners corporation, it could lead to injustice. As the Court of Appeal said of the same argument in Sydney Diagnostic Services v Hamlena, the remedy against such an injustice may be found in two quarters. One is that an owners corporation can only exercise the power to make a by-law for proper purposes. The second is to be found in the power of an adjudicator to make orders revoking an amendment to a by-law made by an owners corporation pursuant to s 157 of the Strata Schemes Management Act, or orders declaring a by-law made by an owners corporation to be invalid pursuant to s 159 of the Act.
> [46] No question of such an injustice arises in relation to the original by-laws which accompany the registration of the strata plan, as a person who buys a lot in the strata scheme is on notice of the rights and obligations created and imposed. In the present case, the consequence of the by-law being invalid would be a windfall to the plaintiff, who bought her property knowing that her use of it was subject to the rights of the owner from time to time of lot 2 to use the watercraft storage area, and a corresponding detriment upon the defendants who bought their land in the expectation of being able to enforce the rights provided by the by-law."

49. The appellant's argument really amounts to saying that such a by-law could operate oppressively if it could create restrictions on user. The oppression concededly is not from a by-law operating at the inception of a strata plan, since a purchaser would know what he or she was buying. Rather it is said to arise when introduced by later amendment after purchase. The trial judge correctly refuted that contention, pointing to the safeguards available to challenge such an amendment to a by-law. This could be by challenging the amendment as a fraud on the power or as a use of a by-law so amended for other than its proper purpose.

Other safeguards include invoking the power of an adjudicator to make orders revoking such an amendment pursuant to s 157 of SSMA or obtaining orders declaring such a by-law as amended to be invalid pursuant to s 159.

50. Finally, I would adopt what is said by the trial judge at [47]–[48] in regard to s 50 of SSMA:

> "[47] Section 50 of the Strata Schemes Management Act imposes restrictions on by-laws which may be made by an owners corporation during the "initial period". That is the period commencing when the owners corporation was constituted and ending on the day on which there are owners of lots, other than the original owner, whose unit entitlements are at least one-third of the aggregate of the unit entitlement. Subsection 50(1) provides:
>
> '50 Restrictions on by-laws during initial period
>
> (1) An owners corporation must not, during the initial period, make, amend or repeal a by-law in such a manner that a right is conferred or an obligation is imposed on one or more, but not all, owners or in respect of one or more, but not all, lots.'
> [48] The implication from s 50(1) is that after the initial period, an owners corporation may make a by-law in such a manner that a right is conferred or an obligation is imposed on one or more, but not all, owners, or in respect of one or more, but not all, lots, if the by-law is otherwise authorised by s 47. It is hard to see why that implication would not extend to authorising an owners corporation making a by-law under s 47 that conferred a right in respect of one lot and imposed a correlative obligation in respect of another lot."

51. In sum, I consider that the Anthony Hordern principle does not apply to the present case. Here there are two distinct statutory regimes for the creation of what is in the nature of an easement or restrictive covenant. Each has its own distinct mode of application, subject to distinct conditions and gives rise to distinct consequences affecting, though not radically, attributes of the easement or restrictive covenant created under each regime. Those distinct attributes are illustrated by the greater entrenchment of a s 88B easement or restrictive covenant compared to one created by by-law.

Inconsistency with s 42 of the Real Property Act?

52. Section 42 of the Real Property Act relevantly provides:

> "42(1) Notwithstanding the existence in any other person of any estate or interest which but for this Act might be held to be paramount or to have priority, the registered proprietor for the time being of any estate or interest in land recorded in a folio of the Register shall, except in case of fraud, hold the same, subject to such other estates and interests and such entries, if any, as are recorded in that folio, but absolutely free from all other estates and interests that are not so recorded except:

There follow five exceptions, none of which is relevant to the present case.

53. I agree with the trial judge's conclusion that the appellant's contention that the by-law is inconsistent with s 42 of the Real Property Act cannot be dismissed on the ground that the by-law merely has contractual effect; it clearly represents a proprietary interest.

54. The trial judge, by the reasoning set out below, concluded that:

> (a) there was no relevant inconsistency between the by-law and the Register having regard to the entries made, though these consisted of an entry directing attention to the strata scheme by-laws filed with the strata plan rather than setting these out; and
>
> (b) with the reservation that the matter had not been argued and need not be decided, the statutory contract under s44 of SSMA provides an exception to indefeasibility in the same way as personal rights arising from contract between the registered proprietor and a person claiming an interest in land under a contract for the registered proprietor are enforceable, notwithstanding s 42.

55. I set out the trial judge's reasons below:

[65] The plaintiff's estate in lot 2 is therefore subject to such other estates, and to such entries, as are recorded in the folio to her lot. Section 32(1)(c) of the Real Property Act authorises the Registrar-General to record on a folio:

'such particulars, as the Registrar-General thinks fit, of

(i) other estates or interest, if any, affecting the land; and
(ii) other information, if any, that relates to the land or any estate or interest therein and is included in that record pursuant to this or any other Act (including an Act of the Parliament of the Commonwealth) or an instrument made under any such Act.'

These particulars are recorded in the Second Schedule to the relevant folio of the Register (F Ticehurst, Land Titles Office Practice (NSW), 'Folios of the Register', Lawbook Co, 2005 at [205.600]).

[66] The Second Schedule to the folio for lot 2 contains the entry "Interest recorded on registered folio CP/SP67662". The Second Schedule for the folio of the common property, folio CP/SP67662, contains three notifications as follows:

'1. Reservations and conditions in the Crown grant(s)
2. Attention is directed to the strata scheme by-laws filed with the strata plan
3. Deed 280488 land excludes minerals.'

[67] The purpose of the Second Schedule is to record interests or reservations which affect the title to the land. The entry directing attention to the strata scheme by-laws filed with the strata plan is a record made on the folio CP/SP67662 of interests created by the by-laws. It follows that the interest created in favour of the registered proprietors from time to time of lot 1 over lot 2 pursuant to by-law 20 is recorded on the folio to lot 2 and is the subject of the entry on the folio to lot 2. Therefore, there is no relevant inconsistency between the by-law and the Register.

[68] Even if the interest created by by-law 20 was not recorded on the folio to lot 2, or was not the subject of an entry on that folio, it would not follow that by-law 20 was ultra vires, that is, made without power. It would not follow from the omission of the Registrar-General to record that interest on the folio to lot 2 that the by-law was inconsistent with s 42 of the Real Property Act, and therefore invalid because of s 43(4) of the Strata Schemes Management Act. Rather, the question would be whether the plaintiff held her land free of the interest created by the by-law which was not recorded on, or the subject of an entry on, the folio to lot 2. The question would then arise whether the statutory contract under s 44 of the Strata Schemes Management Act provides an exception to indefeasibility in the same way as personal rights arising from a contract between the registered proprietor and a person claiming an interest in land under a contract with the registered proprietor are enforceable, notwithstanding s 42. This matter was not argued, and need not be decided, having regard to my conclusion that the interest created by the by-law is recorded in, or is the subject of an entry upon, the folio to lot 2."

56. The respondent on appeal developed an argument which amounted to a contention that the actual by-law had in fact been "recorded in the folio" of the Register within the meaning of s 42(1) of the Real Property Act, doing so by reference to an annexures F and H of the affidavit of Mr David Tremain of 11 November 2006, he being a registered surveyor.

57. The respondents contend that by virtue of the relevant provisions including definitions of the Real Property Act read with the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act and in the events that happened, both the strata plan itself and the instrument by which the special by-law 20 was registered were not only required to be registered in the Register but were both so registered, these constituting annexures F and H to the Tremain affidavit.

58. The steps in this reasoning are as follows. The Register is defined in s 3(1)(a) of the Real Property Act as "the Register required to be maintained by s 31B(1)".

59. The Real Property Act refers to the Register in these terms:

"31B The Register

(1) The Registrar-General shall cause a Register to be maintained for the purposes of this Act.
(2) The Register shall be comprised of:

(a) folios,
(b) dealings registered therein under this or any other Act,

……
(3) The Register may be maintained in or upon any medium or combination of mediums capable of having information recorded in or upon it or them.
(4) The Registrar-General may, from time to time, vary the manner or form in which the whole or any part of the Register is maintained."

60. These provisions should be read with the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act, of which ss6(1) and 6(2) read as follows:

"6 Construction of Act

(1) This Act shall be read and construed with the Real Property Act 1900 as if it formed part thereof.
(2) The Real Property Act 1900 applies to lots and common property in the same way as it applies to other land except in so far as any provision of that Act is inconsistent with this Act or is incapable of applying to lots or common property.

……"

61. I agree that this means that the definition of the "the Register" in the [140603]

Real Property Act will thus apply to folios registered for strata plans, thus linking to s 31B of the Real Property Act quoted above which directs the Registrar General to keep a register of folios, dealings and other records.

62. With respect to Torrens Title land generally the Registrar General creates a folio in the Register recording a description of the land to which it relates and certain particulars as to the estate or interest held in the land by the named proprietor or owner, etc; s 32(1).

63. By s 32(2) of the Real Property Act, it is provided that s 32(1) does not apply in respect of the folio of the Register constituted under s 22 or s 23 of the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act.

64. Section 22 of the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act requires the Registrar General to create a separate folio stating that there is no common property, and containing certain other details relating to the administration of a strata scheme, where there is no common property. Section 23 of that same Act requires the creation of a folio for the common property of strata plans where there is common property.

65. It follows that s 32(1) will thus still apply to the folio in the Register for each individual lot in the strata scheme, as there is no exclusion or separate provision in relation to individual lots.

66. I have earlier set out what is comprised in the Register, as distinct from the folio, pursuant to s 31B(2) of the Real Property Act. From this it is apparent that it includes both folios and dealings registered under the Real Property Act or any other Act. This encompasses the record required to be kept pursuant to s 32(7), being the requirement that the Registrar General "shall maintain a record of all dealings recorded in, or action taken in respect of, a computer folio, and such other information, if any, relating to the folio as the Registrar General thinks fit".

[140604]

67. "Dealing" is defined in s 3 of the Real Property Act as follows: "Any instrument other than a grant or caveat which is registrable or capable of being made registrable under the provisions of this Act, or in respect of which any recording in the Register is by this or any other Act or any Act of the Parliament of the Commonwealth required or permitted to be made".

68. It follows that both the strata plan itself and the instrument by which the special by-law 20 was registered are required to be registered in the Register. These, as I have said, were so registered as evidenced by the Tremain annexures F and H. The latter contains the actual by-law.

69. I should add that a document recording a by-law, or change of by-law, is under s 48 SSMA a "dealing": Mulwala & District Services Club v Owners Strata Plan 37724 (2000) 50 NSWLR 458 per Young J.

70. Reverting to s 42 of the Real Property Act, exceptions to indefeasibility for a registered property of an estate or interest in land recorded in a folio of the Register include "such other estates and interests and such entries, if any, as are recorded in that folio" [emphasis added].

71. An interest is sufficiently "recorded in the folio" of the Register of the land if the folio states the registration number of the dealing creating it and identifies the interest (if only in generic terms): Bursill Enterprises Pty Ltd v Berger Bros Trading Pty Ltd (1971) 124 CLR 73 at 77-8, 92-3; see also Butt, "Land Law", 5th edition (2006) para [2079].

72. I should add that Annexure H itself contains a notification of registration at the foot thereof; see Tremain affidavit pp25-6.

73. It follows from the foregoing that even were it insufficient for a Register to merely incorporate by reference a relevant strata scheme by-law filed with the strata plan, a proposition which I would not accept, the registration here did actually include in a folio the interest or entries in respect of by-law

20.

74. It is thus not necessary to consider the proposition contained in the judgment at [68] quoted above. This is insofar as it relies upon s 44 of SSMA as providing an exception to indefeasibility on the supposition that the Registrar General had omitted to record the relevant interest so as to invoke s 42(1) by reason of the by-law being inconsistent therewith.

OVERALL CONCLUSION

75. I consider that by-law 20 was validly created and that the declarations and orders made in consequence were correctly made.

ORDERS

76. Accordingly I would propose orders as follows:

(1) Leave to appeal granted.
(2) Appeal dismissed.
(3) Appellant to pay the respondent's costs.

77. McColl JA: This case concerns the question whether the power to make by-laws in the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (the "Management Act") can be used to confer a right on one proprietor in a strata scheme to use or occupy part of the lot of another proprietor. In this case by-law 20 purported to confer on the respondents the right to use part of the appellant's lot, measuring approximately 15 square metres, to store watercraft.

78. I have had the benefit of reading Santow JA's reasons in draft. I agree with his Honour that leave to appeal should be granted. However I differ with his Honour's proposal as to the disposition of the appeal.

79. In my opinion by-law 20 is invalid. The Management Act does not expressly authorise the making of a by-law conferring a right on one proprietor in a strata scheme to use or occupy part of the lot of another proprietor. Nor can the power to make such a by-law be implied.

[140606]

Legislative framework

80. The long title of the Management Act is "an Act to provide for the management of strata schemes and the resolution of disputes in connection with strata schemes; and for other purposes". The objects of the Management Act reflect its long title: see s 3. The owners corporation has the principal responsibility for the management of the strata scheme: s 8(2). It is constituted by the owners of the lots from time to time in a strata scheme: s 11(1) and has the functions conferred or imposed on it by or under the Management Act or any other Act: s 12.

81. Part 5 of the Management Act deals with the making of by-laws. It appears in Chapter 2 of the Act which is headed, "Management of Strata Schemes". According to the Introductory Note to Part 5, it "deals with by-laws for a strata scheme governing such things as the behaviour of residents of the scheme and the use of common property". The Note does not form part of the Management Act (s 7), but being set out in the document containing the text of the Act as printed by the Government Printer, may be considered in its interpretation: s 34(2)(a), Interpretation Act 1987.

82. Part 5, Div 1 deals with the by-laws which apply to a strata scheme. Pursuant to s 41 the by-laws in force for the strata scheme for lots 1 and 2 were the by-laws adopted by or lodged with the strata plan registered by the Registrar-General for the strata scheme, as in force at the date of lodgement, subject to any amendment, repeal or addition recorded by the Registrar-General under section 48.

83. Part 5, Div 1, s 43 provides:

"43 What can by-laws provide for?

(1) By-laws may be made in relation to any of the following:

safety and security measures

details of any common property of which the use is restricted the keeping of pets parking

floor coverings

garbage disposal

behaviour

architectural and landscaping guidelines to be observed by lot owners matters appropriate to the type of strata scheme concerned.

(2) Subsection (1) does not limit the matters for which by-laws may be made.
(3) The regulations may prescribe model by-laws which may be adopted as the by-laws for a strata scheme.
(4) A by-law has no force or effect to the extent that it is inconsistent with this or any other Act or law."

84. Part 5, Div 3 deals with the amendment or repeal of by-laws. Section 47 permits an owners corporation, in accordance with a special resolution, for the purpose of the control, management, administration, use or enjoyment of the lots or the lots and common property for the strata scheme, to make by-laws adding to, amending or repealing the by-laws for the strata scheme.

85. Part 5, Div 3 also restricts the making of by-laws. Thus s 49(1) provides:

"Restrictions on by-laws

(1) By-law cannot prevent dealing relating to lot

No by-law is capable of operating to prohibit or restrict the devolution of a lot or a transfer, lease, mortgage, or other dealing relating to a lot."

[140607]

86. In addition s 49 provides that by-laws cannot change a by-law resulting from an order made under Chapter 5 (Disputes And Orders Of Adjudicators And Tribunal), cannot prohibit or restrict persons under 18 years of age occupying a lot and cannot prohibit or restrict the keeping on a lot of a dog used as a guide or hearing dog by an owner or occupier of the lot or the use of a dog as a guide or hearing dog on a lot or common property.

87. Section 50(1) provides:

"(1) An owners corporation must not, during the initial period, make, amend or repeal a by-law in such a manner that a right is conferred or an obligation is imposed on one or more, but not all, owners or in respect of one or more, but not all, lots."

88. Part 5, Div 4 makes special provisions for by-laws conferring certain rights or privileges. It enables an owners corporation to make by-laws conferring on the owner of a lot specified in the by-law, or the owners of several lots so specified, (a) a right of exclusive use and enjoyment of the whole or any specified part of the common property, or (b) special privileges in respect of the whole or any specified part of the common property (including, for example, a licence to use the whole or any specified part of the common property in a particular manner or for particular purposes): s 51(1).

89. A by-law made pursuant to s 51 must provide for the maintenance of the common property as follows:

"54 By-law must provide for maintenance of property

(1) A by-law to which this Division applies must:

(a) provide that the owners corporation is to continue to be responsible for the proper maintenance of, and keeping in a state of good and serviceable repair, the common property or the relevant part of it, or
(b) impose on the owner or owners concerned the responsibility for that maintenance and upkeep.

(2) Any money payable under a by-law to which this Division applies by more than one owner to the owners corporation or to any person for or towards the maintenance or upkeep of any common property is payable by those owners proportionately according to the relative proportions of their respective unit entitlements unless the by-law otherwise provides.
(3) To the extent to which a by-law to which this Division applies makes a person directly responsible for the proper maintenance, and keeping in a state of good and serviceable repair, of any common property, it discharges the owners corporation from its obligations to maintain and repair property under Chapter 3."

90. Title to lots in a strata scheme is dealt with in Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1973 (the "Freehold Development Act"), the long title to which is, relevantly, "[a]n Act to facilitate the subdivision of land into cubic spaces and the disposition of titles thereto". The Freehold Development Act enables land, including the whole of a building, to be subdivided into lots, or into lots and common property, by the registration of a plan as a strata plan: s 7(2). The provisions of s 88B of the Conveyancing Act 1919 apply to a strata plan and a strata plan of subdivision in the same way as they apply to a plan referred to in that section relating to land under the provisions of the Real Property Act 1900: s 7(3).

91. Registration of the strata plan creates both the strata title lots comprised therein and any common property: ss 7, 8, Freehold Development Act. Once the strata plan is registered, the common property vests in the owners corporation constituted under s 11 of the Management Act: s 18, Freehold Development Act.

92. Each lot is owned by a proprietor, being the person for the time being recorded in the Register kept by the Registrar-General as entitled to an estate in fee simple in that lot: definition of "proprietor", s 5, Freehold Development Act.

93. A plan intended to be registered as a strata plan must indicate that specified model by-laws prescribed by the regulations made under the Management Act were proposed to be adopted for the strata scheme and that other specified by-laws are proposed to be adopted for the scheme: s 8(4B), Freehold Development Act. If a strata plan indicates that by-laws other than the model by-laws prescribed by the regulations made under the Management Act are to be adopted for the strata scheme, the plan must be accompanied by the by-laws specified: s 8(4C). The by-laws proposed for a strata scheme have no effect until the strata plan (and any proposed by-laws that are required to accompany it) are registered, however, registration does not give effect to by-laws that were not lawfully made: s 8(4D), Freehold Development Act.

94. At the time Strata Plan 67662 was registered, the model by-laws for different types of strata schemes were set out in Schedule 1 of the Strata Schemes Management Regulation 1997 (see now cl 27, Sch 1 – 6, Strata Schemes Management Regulation 2005). The model by-laws for residential schemes were adopted on the registration of the strata plan for lots 1 and 2: see SP67662, Sheet 1 of 4. Those by-laws largely dealt with behavioural matters such as noise, parking of vehicles, appearance of lots. Clause 19 provided:

[140608]

19 Provision of amenities or services

(1) The owners corporation may, by special resolution, determine to enter into arrangements for the provision of the following amenities or services to one or more of the lots, or to the owners or occupiers of one or more of the lots:

(a) window cleaning,
(b) garbage disposal and recycling services,
(c) electricity, water or gas supply,
(d) telecommunication services (for example, cable television).

(2) If the owners corporation makes a resolution referred to in clause (1) to provide an amenity or service to a lot or to the owner or occupier of a lot, it must indicate in the resolution the amount for which, or the conditions on which, it will provide the amenity or service.

Note: Section 111 of the Act provides that an owners corporation may enter into an agreement with an owner or occupier of a lot for the provision of amenities or services by it to the lot or to the owner or occupier."

95. I will return to the significance of this by-law.

Statement of the case

96. The facts are not in dispute and can be reproduced from the reasons of the primary judge, White J: White v Betalli & 1 Or [2006] NSWSC 537; (2006) 66 NSWLR 690 (at [2] – [19]):

"Background

2 Strata plan SP 67662 was registered on 11 April 2002 by a Mr and Mrs Thompson. The strata plan divided land then known as lot 36 in DP 215533 at Marina Crescent, Gymea Bay, into two strata lots. The plaintiff owns lot 2 in SP 67662. The defendants own lot 1. A house is constructed on each lot.

3 The two lots lie between Marina Crescent to the west and Port Hacking to the east. The northern boundary of both lots abuts a reserve. Lot 1 is the higher lot, with street frontage to Marina Crescent. It lies to the west of lot 2. Lot 2 is the lower lot, with frontage to Crown land at mean high watermark and thence to the water. There is a right of footway in favour of lot 1 to the rear, or eastern end, of lot 2. The rear of lot 2 is steeply sloping ground. From its boundary at mean high watermark there is a strip of Crown land. This was formerly grassed and is now partially landscaped. On this land there is a seawall dividing the land and the water at Port Hacking.

4 The strata plan adopted residential model by-laws 1–19, plus two special by-laws, 20 and 21. These by-laws were said to be made under s 52 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW). The present dispute concerns by-law 20. It provides:

> "The registered proprietors for the time being of lot 1 shall have the right to store small watercraft within the area denoted (A) on the sketch annexed to this instrument."

5 The area denoted "A" abuts the Crown land at mean high watermark at its eastern end. This boundary is irregular in shape. The northern boundary of the area marked "A" coincides with the boundary of lot 2 and extends four metres. The western boundary of the area is three metres long. Its southern boundary is over four metres long, reflecting the irregular eastern boundary. A copy of a survey sketch of the area is attached to these reasons. All of the area denoted "A" on the sketch annexed to the by-law is on lot 2.
6 The owner of lot 1 has access to the watercraft storage area via the right of footway. At the eastern end of lot 2, the right of footway extends across the whole of the lot, except for a boatshed which is on the south-eastern corner of the lot. This boatshed belongs to lot 2, save for a portion of it which encroaches onto Crown land below the mean high watermark. That portion of the boatshed is common property. By-law 21 provides that the portion of the boatshed that extends beyond the mean high watermark is for the exclusive use, and is to be maintained by, the registered proprietor of lot 2.
7 The purpose of the right of footway and of by-law 20 is plain. The purpose is to give the owners of lot 1 access to the water at Port Hacking, and a space on which to store a small boat near the water.
8 Lot 2 is known as 2 Marina Crescent, Gymea Bay. The plaintiff bought this property on or about 13 April 2002. Lot 1 is known as 2A Marina Crescent. This land was initially bought in or about August 2002 by a Mr and Mrs Dedda. On or about 31 March 2004, the defendants exchanged contracts to purchase lot 1 from Mr and Mrs Dedda. They moved into the property on 29 June 2004.
9 After they moved in, the first defendant, Mr Betalli, put a 3.5 metre boat and trailer in the watercraft storage area. The trailer was connected to a sapling by a winch. The plaintiff and her husband objected to this, pointing out that there was no right to store a trailer. The plaintiff also complained that the boat and trailer extended outside the storage area and were not stored safely. On 16 July 2004, the solicitors for the plaintiff, Benetatos White, wrote to Mr Betalli. They contended that the boat then stored on lot 2 was not a small watercraft but a medium sized boat. They demanded that the defendant remove the boat, the trailer and the winch. Benetatos White also stated that the plaintiff had no issue with the storage of small watercraft by Mr Betalli in accordance with the terms of by-law 20.
10 After receiving this letter, Mr Betalli asked the plaintiff if she would have any objection to an inflatable boat being put in the watercraft storage area. She said she did not, provided the boat fitted in the designated area, was safe, and did not cause damage.
11 Following this conversation, Mr Betalli purchased an inflatable boat.
12 On 8 August 2004, the boat and trailer then being stored in the watercraft storage area were removed. In about late August 2004, the inflatable boat was put in the watercraft storage area and secured to a tree. The plaintiff's husband helped with this.
13 It might have been hoped that this would be the end of the issue. However, that was not the case.
14 In December 2004, the plaintiff advised Mr Betalli that she had received a letter from the Department of Lands indicating that the by-law for the storage of the boat was invalid, because it was on her property and not common property. She advised him that she proposed to call an annual general meeting of the body corporate so that the by-law could be removed. On 27 January 2005, she convened that meeting. The meeting was held on 12 February 2005. However, the resolution to repeal by-law 20 on the ground of its not being valid was not passed. The defendants voted against that resolution.
15 A mediation was held on 5 May 2005, but it failed to resolve the dispute.

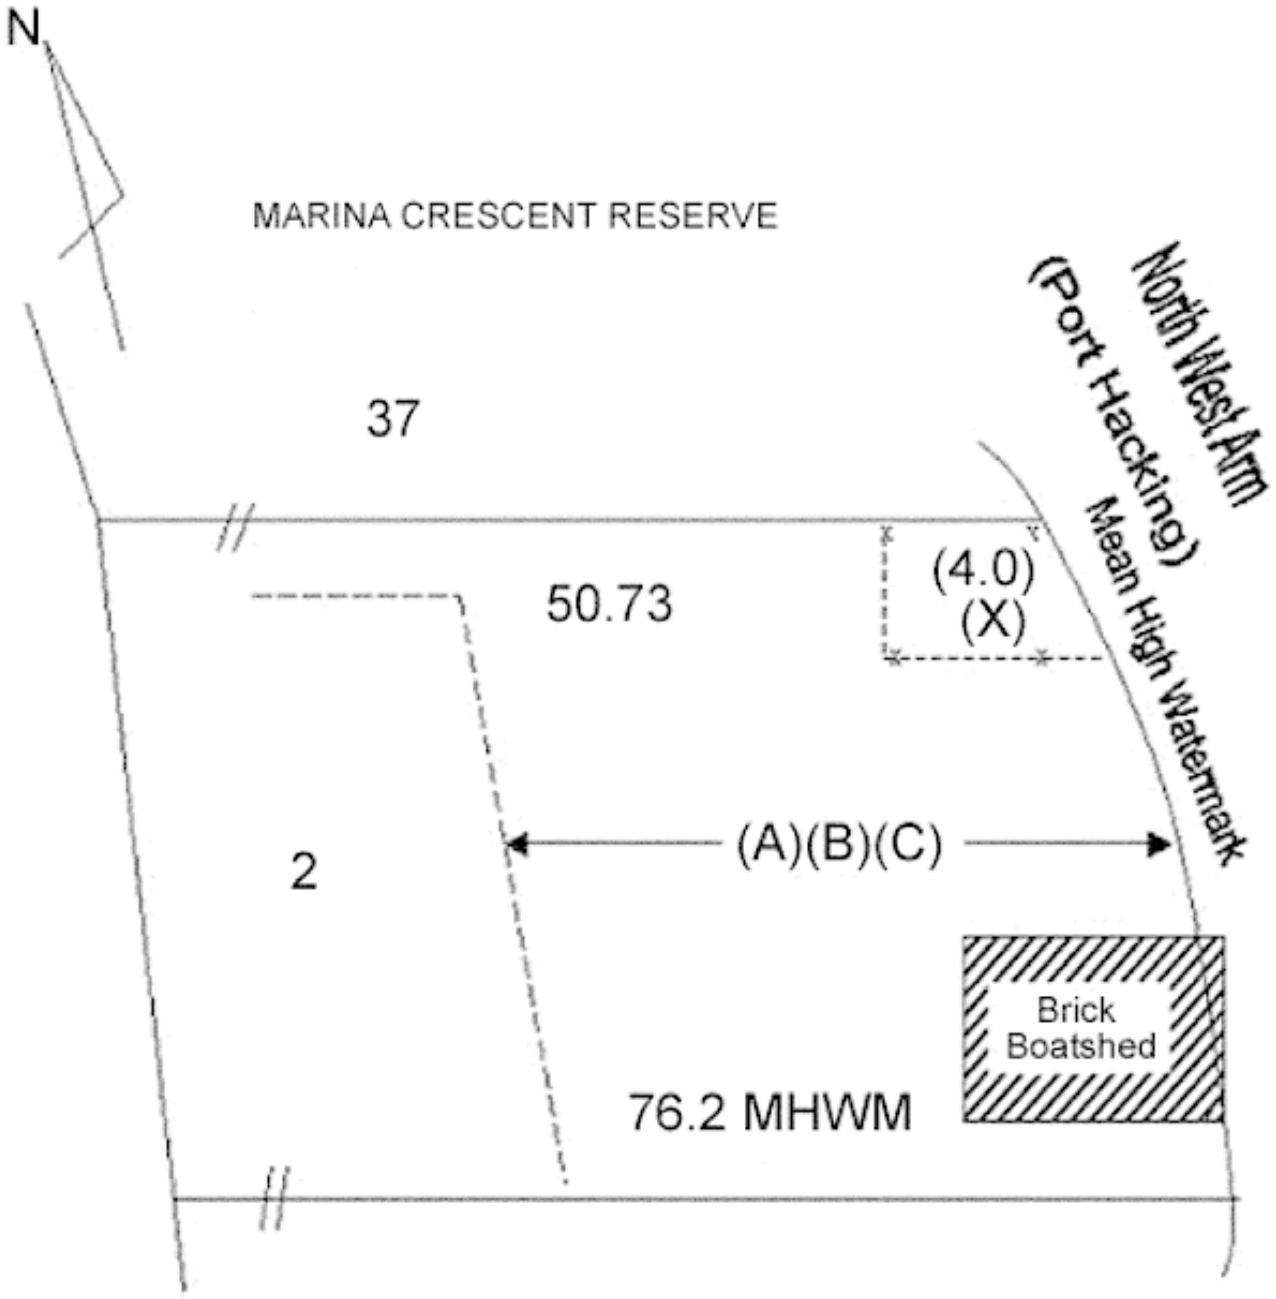
16 On the weekend of 4 and 5 June 2005, without prior notice, the plaintiff caused a retaining wall to be constructed in the watercraft storage area. At or about this time, she also caused steps to be built extending down to the water's edge. These were wooden steps which joined up with existing concrete steps. However, the steps also extended into the watercraft storage area. Associated with these works, the plaintiff carried out landscaping work, involving the construction of an earth bank on which native plants were planted, and which appears then to have been covered with wood chips. This work was done partly on the watercraft storage area and partly on the Crown land.

17 The result of these works is that the area which can physically be used for the storage of watercraft has been substantially reduced. Before the work was carried out, the watercraft storage area was about fifteen square metres. It was a grassed area which extended at its southern edge to the bottom concrete step. At its eastern edge, which was the boundary of lot 2, there was an earth and grass bank which led over the grassed strip of Crown land to the seawall. After the work was carried out, the effective area for storing a boat was effectively the area within the retaining walls. These walls were about 0.6 metres high and were positioned well inside the watercraft storage area. They extended about 0.7 metres into the adjacent reserve so that the practical storage space extended into the reserve and outside the boundary of lot 2. Within the confines of lot 2, the area now physically available for the storage of a boat is limited to an area of about four metres by two metres.

18 The construction of the retaining wall and steps, and the landscaping, has made it more difficult for a boat to be taken down to the water from the watercraft storage area. A boat now has to be lifted over the retaining wall and across the garden which has a steeper incline than existed previously as a result of the earth fill which has been put on the site. The plaintiff said in evidence that there has been no change in the incline, but I do not accept this evidence. The change is apparent from the photographs.

19 Mr Betalli continued to store the inflatable boat in the watercraft storage area until November 2005. After the construction of the retaining wall and the steps in June 2005, it was difficult to drag the boat over the retaining wall and down to the water and back again without assistance. In November 2005, he replaced that boat with a 3.5 metre aluminium boat because the inflatable had a deflated keel and floor."

97. Lot "A" (albeit identified by the letter "X") was set out in the plan reproduced below which was attached to the primary judge's reasons:



(A) - EASEMENT TO DRAIN WATER VARIABLE WIDTH
(B) - EASEMENT FOR SERVICES VARIABLE WIDTH
(C) - RIGHT OF FOOTWAY VARIABLE WIDTH
(X) - WATERCRAFT STORAGE AREA - VIDE SPECIAL BY-LAW 20 SP 67662

98. In the proceedings the appellant claimed a declaration that by-law 20 was ultra vires and of no force or effect and an order restraining the respondents from storing watercraft on lot 2. The respondents filed a cross-claim seeking a declaration that the by-law was valid and consequential relief, including an order that the appellant be required to remove the wooden steps and retaining wall constructed in the watercraft storage area, and restore that area to its former condition.

99. It was common ground before the primary judge, and in this Court, that no section of the Management Act expressly conferred power on the owner of land to be subdivided into a strata scheme to make by-laws: primary judgment at [33]. The primary judge concluded that that power was to be inferred from the combination of ss 41 and 43 of the Management Act and s 8(4C) of the Freehold Development Act: see primary judgment at [33] – [36].

100. After referring to those provisions, the primary judge concluded (at [37]):

> "[T]he only limitations on the power of the owner of land being subdivided by a strata scheme of subdivision after 1 July 1997 to make by-laws are:
>
> (a) the need for the consent of mortgagees and other holders of security under ss 8(4C) and 16 of the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act;
> (b) the express restrictions and prohibitions in s 49 of the Strata Schemes Management Act ;
> (c) the need to avoid inconsistency with any Act or law; and
> (d) that the provision is made for a proper purpose and fairly falls within the concept of a by-law, that is, the regulation of the rights and responsibilities of lot owners, occupiers, or the owners corporation, in respect of the lots, or the lots and common property, for the strata scheme."

101. He held (at [38]) that the subject matter of by-law 20, the provision of a storage area for small watercraft for the benefit of the upper lot, was an appropriate matter to be regulated by a by-law (s 43(1)). In his Honour's opinion (at [38]) whether or not by-law 20 was authorised under s 43(1) of the Management Act being "in relation to … matters appropriate to the type of strata scheme concerned", it would be valid, provided it was not inconsistent with s 49, or any other Act or law: see s 43(4).

102. His Honour (at [39]) did not consider that s 43(1) should be construed narrowly or at too high a degree of generality. Thus, in his view:

> "The present strata scheme could be classified as a residential scheme of a type, being a subdivision of land next to water into a small number of residential lots and common property. The storage of boats belonging to the occupier of any lot in such a subdivision is a matter appropriate to that type of scheme."

103. The primary judge then turned to determine whether by-law 20 was inconsistent with any other provision of the Management Act, or any other Act or law. He opined (at [40]) that if by-law 20 was not authorised by s 43(1), that subsection was "not an exhaustive statement of the power of the original owners to make by-laws to accompany the registration of the strata plan and the by-law is otherwise within the scope and object of the Act." His Honour did not identify any other source of power for original owners to make by-laws to accompany the registration of the strata plan. The argument has proceeded in this Court on the basis that ss 41 and 43 were the critical provisions to which regard should be paid in determining the validity of by-law 20.

104. His Honour found confirmation (at [41]) for his view in the Second Reading Speech of the New South Wales Minister for Fair Trading on the introduction of the Bill which became the Management Act (New South Wales Legislative Assembly, Parliamentary Debates, (Hansard) 13 November 1996, 5916 at 5921). In her speech the Minister elaborated on the proposition that:

> "… one of the major initiatives in this Bill is to allow more flexibility in the use of by-laws, and to encourage the adoption of by-laws more appropriate to the nature of individual strata schemes."

105. The primary judge then considered s 47 of the Management Act, on the premise (at [42]) that there was no reason to think that the power of the original owner to make by-laws which accompany the strata plan on its registration should be any narrower than the power of the owners corporation to make by-laws. He noted (at [44]) by reference to the decision in Sydney Diagnostic Services Pty Ltd v Hamlena Pty Ltd (1991) 5 BPR 11,432 that "by-laws frequently interfere with the rights of property of an owner of a lot", then observed:

> "45 As by-laws may be made which substantially interfere with the right of an owner of a lot to use the lot, it is hard to see why it should be contrary to the 'scheme' of the Strata Schemes Management Act for a by-law to confer on one lot owner the right to use part of another lot."

106. His Honour also implied (at [48]) from s 50 that after the initial period an owners corporation may make a by-law in such a manner that a right is conferred, or an obligation imposed, on one or more but not all owners, or in respect of one or more but not all lots, if the by-law is otherwise authorised by s 47. He concluded that "[i]t is hard to see why that implication would not extend to authorising an owners corporation making a by-law under s 47 that conferred a right in respect of one lot and imposed a correlative obligation in respect of another lot."

107. Finally the primary judge (at [50]) inferred that, but for the restrictions in s 49(1), a by-law could be made which would have the effect of doing any of the things which that section prohibits, an inference reinforced by Hamlena Pty Ltd v Sydney Endoscopy Centre Pty Ltd (1990) 5 BPR 11,436 where Young J (as his Honour then was) said of the equivalent provision in the Strata Titles Act 1973 (the "1973 Act"):

> "S 58(6) prevents a by-law being made which would restrict the devolution of a lot. This subsection seems to me to envisage the possibility that were it not for its existence, there would be power within s 58 to pass a by-law limiting the right to assign a lot."

108. The primary judge concluded (at [51]) that:

> "51 If, but for s 49(1), a by-law could validly restrict the transfer or lease of a lot, there cannot be anything intrinsically wrong in a by-law interfering with the property rights of an owner in fee simple of a lot." (emphasis added)

109. The primary judge accordingly held that by-law 20 was validly made pursuant to s 43 of the Management Act and, therefore, enforceable. He also held that the construction and landscaping work undertaken by the appellant within the watercraft storage area was done in breach of the by-law. He ordered the appellant to remove the wooden steps and the retaining wall and restore the watercraft storage area to its former condition. He also restrained the appellant from preventing or impeding the cross-claimants from storing small watercraft within the watercraft storage area.

110. The primary judge's conclusions meant it was unnecessary to determine the respondents' alternative claim to be entitled to store their boat on the subject area by reason of the appellant being estopped from departing from her representations that the defendants could use the watercraft storage area to store a boat, provided the boat was a small watercraft which fitted within the storage area and did not cause damage: see primary judgment (at [70] – [73]). The respondents have not sought to agitate the estoppel argument in this Court by way of Notice of Contention.

Submissions on appeal

111. Mr B W Rayment of Queens Counsel, who appeared for the appellant on appeal with Mr R Tregenza, but not below, advanced two principal submissions. The first was that by-law 20 was a nullity by virtue of the principle enunciated in Anthony Hordern & Sons v Amalgamated Clothing & Allied Trades Union of Australia [1932] HCA 9; (1932) 47 CLR 1.

112. Mr Rayment submitted that the application of the Anthony Hordern principle had the consequence that the specific power to create easements in s 88B of the Conveyancing Act 1919 precluded the creation of an easement using the general power in s 43 of the Management Act.

113. Mr Rayment acknowledged that there might be doubt about whether the interest created by by-law 20 was an "easement strictly so-called" but contended that even if it was not, it created an interest within s 88B(2)(d) of the Conveyancing Act. He contended that by-law 20 created both a restriction on the use of lot 2 as it prevented the appellant from building structures in the watercraft storage area which interfered with the respondents' right of storage and amounted to a positive covenant to permit the respondents to bring a boat onto the appellant's land and leave it there.

114. Mr P Gray of Senior Counsel who appeared for the respondents with Ms P Koroknay, submitted that it was debateable whether the right by-law 20 created was capable of being created by an easement. He referred to Copeland v Greenhalf [1952] Ch 488.

115. Next he contended that, in any event, the appellant's attempt to invoke the Anthony Hordern principle must fail first, because this was not a case of comparing a general and a specific power, but of comparing

2 specific powers and secondly, because the powers referred to were not in "the same instrument". He accepted, however, that the power to create easements for the purposes of strata schemes was part of the same legislative scheme as the power to create by-laws.

116. Mr Rayment's second argument was that by-law 20 was invalid because the power to make by-laws in the Management Act could not be used to confer a right on the respondents to use and occupy part of the appellant's lot.

117. Mr Gray submitted that this Court had already ruled in Sydney Diagnostic Services Pty Ltd v Hamlena Pty Ltd that an owners' corporation could make by-laws which restricted the occupation a lot owner could carry on from one or more but not all lots in a strata plan. He contended that by-law 20 was another illustration of the valid exercise of that power. He also argued that the appellant's submissions failed to acknowledge the High Court's recognition of the power of a body corporate "to interfere with the rights of proprietors in respect of their lots" by means of by-laws, relying upon Humphries v Proprietors Surfers Palms North Group Titles Plan 1955 [1994] HCA 21; (1994) 179 CLR 597 at 615 per McHugh J.

118. Mr Gray also argued that it could be inferred from the fact that s 50 restricted the making of a by-law during the initial period which conferred a right or imposed an obligation on one or more, but not all, owners or in respect of one or more, but not all, lots, that after the initial period an owners corporation could make such by-laws. A fortiori, he contended, so too could a developer under s 43 at the stage of the original lodgement of the strata plan.

Validity of by-law 20

119. The effect of the primary judge's ruling is that the appellant is not permitted to do anything on the watercraft storage area that might prevent or impede the respondents from storing small watercraft there. The respondents can store watercraft on the watercraft storage area in a manner that precludes the appellant from having physical access to that part of her land. A logical extension of his Honour's ruling is that she cannot enter the watercraft storage area if her entry interferes with the respondents exercising their by-law 20 rights.

120. By-law 20 effectively, therefore, confers exclusive use and enjoyment of the watercraft storage area on the respondents. It does not confer any benefit on the appellant. She has no right to use that section of lot 2, save, it might be assumed, that she has a "right", probably better expressed as a "duty", to maintain it to ensure its continued availability to the respondents to store watercraft. Thus she is burdened with the costs of maintaining that part of her lot for the respondents' advantage.

121. In my opinion nothing in the Management Act, or in the history of strata title legislation, supports the conclusion that the by-law making powers permit a by-law to be made which has this effect.

122. Strata title involves the ownership of individual parcels (lots) of floor and airspace. The concept was pioneered in the Conveyancing (Strata Titles) Act 1961 (the "Strata Titles Act"), the long title to which was, relevantly, "An Act to facilitate the subdivision of land in strata and the disposition of titles thereto". It was intended to "give a satisfactory system of title to a flat or a home unit": Second Reading Speech to the Conveyancing (Strata Titles) Bill, New South Wales Legislative Assembly, Parliamentary Debates, (Hansard) 21 February 1961 at 2524.

123. The Strata Titles Act was passed at a time when "absolute ownership of flats in the sense that one may 'own' a cottage", did not exist: Strata Titles, A F Rath, P J Grimes and J E Moore, The Law Book Company Ltd, 1966, ("Rath et al", at p xi). According to Macfarlan J's Foreword, Mr Rath and Mr Grimes were associated with the drafting of the Strata Titles Act, "practically from the beginning". Rath et al pointed out that before the Strata Titles Act was passed, "a variety of schemes existed calculated to secure to flat-dwellers the nearest practical equivalent to ownership". All had their disadvantages. Home-unit companies systems, for example, the most common scheme associated with flat-ownership, whereby ownership of specified shares carried with it the right to occupy particular parts of a building, fell short of giving the practical equivalent to ownership. Courts would not recognise the shareholder as the owner of his or her flat and, accordingly, the owner could not pursue the normal legal remedies of a land-owner, such as trespass, ejectment etc: Rath et al (at xii); see also Tittman v Traill (1957) 74 WN (NSW) 284; Wilson & Anor v Meudon Pty Ltd & Anor [2005] NSWCA 448 per Bryson JA (at [61] – [65]).

124. The committee which drafted the Strata Titles Act identified two problems it was expected to solve. First, to provide conclusive title for various parts of a building and secondly, and consequentially, to formulate a code for living in close community: Rath et al, at xiii. It was the latter problem which the drafters described as the "harder, by far" and which they sought to regulate by what they described as "house-rules" but, which, in the Strata Titles Act, were called "by-laws": Rath et al, at xiv, 31.

125. The Strata Titles Act enabled certificates of title to issue for individual parcels (lots) of floor and airspace in buildings shown on a registered strata plan: s 3(1). While the central concept of strata schemes is the ownership by individual proprietors of the cubic space within a building forming part of the parcel to which a strata scheme relates, as in the case of the present strata scheme, a lot may also include land: s 7(2), Freehold Development Act; see also Woollahra Municipal Council v Local Government Appeals Tribunal & Renwyn Pty Ltd 1975] 2 NSWLR 594.

126. Land in a strata plan that was not comprised in a lot was common property: s 2. The common property was held by the proprietors as tenants in common in shares proportional to the unit entitlement of their respective lots: s 9(1).

127. The strata title building was regulated by by-laws providing for the control, management, administration, use or enjoyment of the lots and the common property and had to include the by-laws in the First and Second Schedules: ss 13(1) and (2), Strata Titles Act. In their notes to s 13, Rath et al observed (at 31):

> "The management of the building is achieved by two means, first the setting up of a controlling body [the body corporate, s 14] and secondly the provision of rules, known as by-laws, relating to the structure of the controlling body and the general administration of the building." (emphasis added).

128. The First Schedule by-laws dealt with duties of the proprietor of a behavioural nature (repairing and maintaining lots, not using the lot in a manner which would cause a nuisance or a hazard to another occupier), duties of the body corporate and procedural matters relating to the body corporate. Clause 3(f) enabled the body corporate to grant a proprietor the right to exclusive use and enjoyment of common property, or special privileges in respect thereof, a power continued in Ch 2, Pt 5, Div 4 of the Management Act. The Second Schedule constrained a proprietor from using his lot for any illegal or injurious purpose, from making undue noise and from keeping pets if forbidden by the body corporate.

129. Section 13(3) provided, in substantially the same terms as s 49(1) of the Management Act, that a by-law could not prevent a dealing relating to lots. In an article written after the Strata Titles Bill had passed the first reading stage in the Legislative Assembly and while the second reading had been deferred to permit public comment, Rath described s 13(3) as a "fundamental provision" intended to ensure "that no alteration of the by-laws shall be capable of changing the structure of strata titles as virtually equivalent to surface titles": A. F. Rath, "Strata Titles in New South Wales", (1961) 3 Sydney Law Review 316 (at 320).

130. This brief description of the Strata Titles Act and the historical context in which it was enacted identifies the central constructs on which it is based. Lot proprietors were to have title to their lot, whether it be the cubic space within the building to which the strata scheme related or any land which formed part of their lot. By-laws were to be used to regulate the management of the building in the common interest of the proprietors. These core constructs have been continued as strata title legislation has evolved.

131. The Strata Titles Act was repealed by the Strata Titles Act 1973 (the "1973 Act") which was passed, at least in part, to expand strata titles law to provide for day to day management issues arising in strata title schemes: Review of the Strata Titles Act 1973, Issues Paper, Strata Titles Act Review Committee, March 1992, at 3 (the "Issues Paper"). Section 58, the by-law making power, appeared in Part 4 dealing with "Management". Save as provided in s 58, the by-laws in Schedule 1 to the 1973 Act were the by-laws in force in respect of each strata scheme: s 58(1).

132. By-laws 1–11 in Schedule 1 dealt with procedural matters relating to the body corporate. By-laws 12 – 29 considerably expanded the 1961 by-laws dealing with behavioural issues. They were substantially reproduced in the model by-laws for residential schemes adopted by the Strata Schemes Management

Regulation 1997. In Hamlena Pty Ltd v Sydney Endoscopy Centre Pty Ltd (at 11,440) Young J (as his Honour then was) observed that to the extent the by-laws in Schedule 1 did not deal with the administration of the body corporate or the common property, "[they] related to conduct within a lot, that … would have some impact on the owners as a whole, but that is as far as one could take the matter."

133. Section 58(2), subject to an exception not presently relevant, enabled the body corporate, by special resolution, to make by-laws adding to, amending or repealing the by-laws in Sch 1 for the purpose of the control, management, administration, use or enjoyment of the lots or the lots and common property the subject of the strata scheme.

134. Section 58(7) enabled the body corporate to grant a proprietor the right to exclusive use and enjoyment of whole or any specified part of the common property, or special privileges in respect thereof, on conditions (including the payment of money, at specified times or as required by the body corporate, by the proprietor or proprietors of the lot or lots concerned) specified in the by-law common property. An exclusive use by-law had to specify who was to be responsible for the maintenance of the common property to which it related: s 58(7A). The characterisation and construction of an exclusive use by-law relating to common property made pursuant to s 58(7) has been discussed recently in The Owners of Strata Plan No 3397 v Tate [2007] NSWCA 207 at [34] ff.

135. In 1992 the Strata Titles Act Review Committee was established to review the management and disputes provisions of the 1973 Act. It was briefed to identify "the limitations of strata title law in adequately addressing the changing nature of modern strata schemes": Issues Paper at 2.

136. Several aspects of the Report of the Strata Titles Act Review Committee (March 1993) deserve mention. First, the Committee noted (at 21) that "the twenty-nine standard by-laws… cover the behavioural issues that decide whether a strata scheme is a desirable place to live in" and pointed out that "[m]ost disputes arising in strata schemes are about alleged breaches of the by-laws". It recommended (at 42 – 43) that the Act allow for compulsory and optional by-laws, and the development of model by-laws. To the extent the Report looked at specific by-laws, the two that occupied its attention were the keeping of animals, described as a "divisive and emotional issue", and the by-law on parking. I observe, parenthetically, that had by-laws been passed by that stage with the effect of by-law 20, one might infer the power to do so would have ranked at least equal to, if not above, concerns about keeping pets. Secondly, the Committee observed (at 42) that "reconstruction of the Act is likely to result in the standard by-laws being more logically located in the legislation". Finally, the Committee observed (at 42) that a requirement that by-laws be included when the strata plan was being developed, would ensure that "the model by-laws are properly used by developers."

137. The Issues Paper (at 16) identified the question whether the 1973 Act should be separated into two Acts, one dealing with title aspects and the other with management and disputes, for consideration. Although the Final Report did not refer to this issue, it was plainly adopted. The Management Act separated the provisions of the 1973 Act dealing with development and subdivision issues, from the provisions of the 1973 Act dealing with the management and administration of strata schemes. At the time the Management Act was passed the 1973 Act was re-named the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1973 on and from 1 July 1997: Strata Schemes Management (Miscellaneous Amendments) Act 1996, Sch 2.30; and see Ridis v Strata Plan 10308 [2005] NSWCA 246; (2005) 63 NSWLR 449.

138. The significance of the amendments effected by the Management Act and its separation from the provisions of the 1973 Act dealing with development and subdivision issues was explained by the responsible Minister in the Second Reading Speech to the Strata Schemes Management Bill (New South Wales Legislative Assembly, Parliamentary Debates, (Hansard) 13 November 1996, at 5916):

> "A large segment of the New South Wales community is affected in some way by this legislation, either living in, owning or managing a strata title property. The benefits of this revised legislation will be far-reaching. There are now about 45,000 schemes housing perhaps a million people, and it is clear how significant these new laws are going to be. It is expected that a high proportion of all residential buildings constructed over the coming decades will reflect the tendency towards urban consolidation, and strata title is likely to be used in respect of smaller parcels of land … Even the title of this Bill is significant. It is made clear by the use of the title Strata Schemes Management Bill, that this bill deals with the management and administration of strata schemes rather than the development and subdivision issue…. The management and dispute provisions will now stand alone under a separate statute. This will reduce confusion among the public on who administers the laws applying to quite different aspects of strata title schemes." (emphasis added)

139. It should be noted that while the owners corporation is the occupier of the common property by virtue of its management and control of the use of that area (s 61(1)(a); Puflett v Proprietors of Strata Plan No 121 (1987) 17 NSWLR 372 at 375 per Lee J), the Management Act does not confer any express role on it in relation to a proprietor's use of the lot or lots owned by that person. It is "a statutory corporation, created by Act of Parliament for a particular purpose [and] is limited, as to all its powers, by the purposes of its incorporation as defined in that Act": Humphries v Proprietors Surfers Palms North Group Titles Plan 1955 (at 604) per Brennan and Toohey JJ.

140. As Rath et al observed (at 3) of a body corporate, "[i]t is merely a statutory body comprising all lot proprietors and acting as a convenient agent to administer their common interests". That observation is equally applicable to an owners corporation.

141. The Management Act created a more comprehensive regime for by-laws in Ch 2, of the Management Act, headed "Management of Strata Schemes". That heading is taken to be part of the Management Act: s 35, Interpretation Act. The Introductory Note to Pt 5, specifies that it "deals with by-laws for a strata scheme governing such things as the behaviour of residents of the scheme and the use of common property" as well as "procedural requirements for the making of certain by-laws and [their] amendment or repeal". Section 43 enumerates the matters for which by-laws may provide. Section 49 specifies matters which cannot be dealt with in by-laws. Section 50 imposes restrictions on the by-laws which can be made during the initial period. Those provisions govern the power to make by-laws whether by a developer before the registration of the strata plan, or following its registration, by an owners corporation.

142. Most of the matters specified in s 43 deal with the behavioural issues which have been part of strata title scheme by-laws since 1961. However there are three new matters. First, the power to make a by-law in relation to the "details of any common property of which the use is restricted". Secondly, the provision permitting by-laws in relation to "matters appropriate to the type of strata scheme concerned" and thirdly, s 43(2) providing that subs 43(1) does not limit the matters for which by-laws may be made. The last two items were clearly inserted to give effect to the Review Committee's recommendation that there should be greater flexibility in by-laws. They are, it must be conceded, expressed in extremely general terms, as, too is the power (s 47) to make by-laws for the purpose of the control, management, administration, use or enjoyment of the lots or the lots and common property for the strata scheme and the inhibition in s 50 on making by-laws conferring a right or imposing an obligation on one or more, but not all, owners or in respect of one or more, but not all, lots.

143. However even general words should not be construed without limitation, if to give them their "wide prima facie meaning would lead to results that would be contrary to the manifest policy of the Act looked at as a whole or would conflict with the evident purpose for which it was enacted": Quazi v Quazi [1980] AC 744 (at 808) per Lord Diplock, cited with approval by Spigelman CJ in Deputy Commissioner of Taxation v Clark [2003] NSWCA 91; (2003) 57 NSWLR 113 at [129]; see also R v Young [1999] NSWCCA 166; (1999) 46 NSWLR 681 (at [23] – [29]) per Spigelman CJ.

144. There is no express provision in the Management Act authorising a by-law which confers a right on one lot proprietor to use another proprietor's lot. In my opinion the general words in the provisions to which I have referred do not authorise such a by-law. The primary judge's conclusion that the power to make by-laws can be used to confer a right on one proprietor in a strata scheme to use or occupy part of the lot of another proprietor is inconsistent with the Management Act, both with its express terms and with its manifest and evident purpose.

145. The purpose of the Management Act was to permit owners corporations to manage strata schemes as a whole, not to confer rights on one proprietor at the expense of another. That purpose was emphasised in the Second Reading Speech. It can be discerned from the long title to the Act, the heading to Chapter 2 in which the by-law making provisions appear in Pt 5 and in the Introductory Note to Pt 5. It is consistent with the legislative history of strata titles legislation.

146. Returning to s 43, it is notable that the legislature thought it necessary to insert the power in s 43(1) to make a by-law in relation to the "details of any common property of which the use is restricted". In my opinion that indicates that the legislature thought it necessary to specify that head of by-law power to validate such a by-law. The absence of such a head of power to make a by-law relating to one proprietor's use of another's lot is a strong indication that there is no power to make a by-law having that effect.

147. The provision in s 43(2) that s 43(1) does not limit the matters for which by-laws may be made needs to be understood in context of the model by-laws set out in Schedule 1 to the Strata Schemes Management Regulation 1997. In addition to residential schemes, the model by-laws covered retirement villages, industrial schemes, hotel/resort schemes, commercial/retail schemes and mixed use schemes. While the model by-laws for each of these schemes dealt largely with behavioural matters, it can be inferred the legislature was concerned to ensure the flexibility the Review Committee had recommended. Section 43(2) ensured that result. Significantly, however, none of the model by-laws for any of the schemes expressly permitted a by-law enabling one lot proprietor to use another proprietor's lot.

148. In contrast, Ch 2, Pt 5, Div 4 makes elaborate provision for by-laws conferring a right of exclusive use and enjoyment of the whole or any specified part of the common property on the owner of a lot, or the owner of several lots. Part 5, Div 4 sets out the method for making an exclusive use by-law (s 52), explains the circumstances in which such a by-law may contain conditions (s 53), provides that such a by-law must detail the corporation, or person who is to be responsible for the maintenance of the common property the subject of the exclusive use by-law (s 54), explains its effect (s 55) and details the circumstances in which a by-law relating to parking may be made during the initial period despite s 50 (s 56).

149. The fact that the legislature saw it as necessary to spell out in such detail the circumstances in which one lot owner may obtain exclusive enjoyment of the whole or part of the common property is a strong contrary indication to an interpretation of the general words of s 43, s 47 or s 50, as permitting a by-law in terms of by-law 20. If the legislature intended that one or more lot proprietors could use another proprietor's lot, one would at least have expected provisions in similar terms to ss 52 – 55 to accompany that power.

150. The same reasoning applies to the inclusion of cl 19 in the model by-laws for residential schemes. The specification of the circumstances, including the conditions and costs, in which the owners corporation can enter into arrangements to provide amenities or services to the owners or occupiers of one or more lots but not all indicates a legislative intention that the general words in s 43, s 47 and s 50 could not support by-laws affecting individual lot owners.

151. I cannot draw the same comfort from s 49 of the Management Act as the primary judge (at [51]). As Rath explained the restraint on the power to make by-laws preventing dealings relating to lots was intended to secure, rather than detract from, a strata proprietor's right to unfettered title to a lot equivalent to that of a homeowner. A by-law which impinges on one proprietor's title to a lot by giving another proprietor the equivalent of property rights over part of it is inconsistent with that core construct of strata titles legislation.

152. Finally, I note that the primary judge's conclusion rested, at least in part, on the premise that a developer's power to make by-laws was no less than the power available to an owners corporation. The conclusion that an owners corporation could make a by-law like by-law 20 conflicts with the principle that a statutory power will not be interpreted as permitting interference with vested proprietary rights unless that intention is made manifest by express statement or necessary implication: Clissold v Perry [1904] HCA 12; (1904) 1 CLR 363 at 373.

153. The authorities on which the respondents rely do not, in my opinion, support their case. Humphries v Proprietors Surfers Palms North Group Titles Plan 1955 concerned the validity of a management agreement entered into by the body corporate with the appellants under which, in consideration of a lump sum annual payment, they agreed to ensure that the property was properly maintained and administered and kept in good repair. One of the appellants' specific duties was to conduct a letting agency for the letting of townhouses on the property on behalf of such of the owners as required the service. The individual owners who took advantage of that service were not themselves required to remunerate the appellants, whose recompense was part of the lump sum annual payment. The High Court held that the body corporate had no power to enter into a contract to procure the provision of a letting service for particular lot proprietors or occupiers and that the letting services provision was not severable from the remainder of the agreement which, accordingly, was wholly void.

154. On appeal, the appellants contended the body corporate had power to make the management agreement under the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 (Qld) (the "Queensland Act"). They relied, in part, on the by-law making power conferred in s 30 which permitted a body corporate "for the purpose of the control, management, administration, use or enjoyment of the lots and common property the subject of the plan" to amend the pro forma by-laws contained in the Third Schedule to the Queensland Act. The Third Schedule by-laws dealt in substantially the same terms with the behavioural matters the subject of cll 1 – 17 of the Strata Schemes Management Regulation 1997.

155. Brennan and Toohey JJ (at 603) rejected that submission. They regarded the Third Schedule as indicating the range of by-laws which might be made, saying:

> "Whatever the scope of that power may be, it does not avail the appellants in this case. There was no by-law made which might have authorised the body corporate to secure the provision of the services of a letting agency for the proprietors of the individual lots. In general, the Third Schedule does not authorise a body corporate to provide services to individual lots although cl 10 impliedly authorises a body corporate to provide a garbage disposal service for individual lots. If cl 10 is an exception to the general scheme of the Third Schedule, the exception is explicable by the common interest of all proprietors and occupiers in the removal of garbage from any part of the premises." (emphasis added)

156. It should be inferred from this passage that their Honours were of the view that the by-law making power authorised the body corporate to secure the provision of the services of a letting agency for the proprietors of the individual lots, if such an agreement was in the common interest of all proprietors.

157. Deane and Gaudron JJ referred to s 37(1)(a) and s 27(3) (relevantly in substantially the same terms as s 61(1)(a) and s 12 of the Management Act) and concluded (at 608):

> "Wide though those powers of control, management and administration may be, they are confined to the common property. They simply do not extend to the making of a contract binding the body corporate to pay 'remuneration' to the proprietor of a particular unit or townhouse as consideration for the conduct by that proprietor 'from his unit' of a letting agency whose services would be available to any proprietors who desired, as individuals, to lease their townhouses. Entry into such a contract is neither an incident of, nor reasonably necessary for, the control, management or administration of the common property." (emphasis added).

158. Their Honours did not refer to s 30(2) of the Queensland Act which empowered the body corporate to make by-laws, inter alia, for the purpose of the control, management, administration, use or enjoyment of the lots as well as the common property. However, they agreed (at 608 – 609) with Brennan and Toohey JJ and McHugh J's conclusions that there was no other provision of the Act which either expressly or impliedly authorised the body corporate to enter into such a contract or to expend its funds in the payment of such remuneration, nor was there any by-law of the body corporate which conferred such authority.

159. McHugh J concluded (at 612) that nothing in the Queensland Act, expressly or by implication, authorised a body corporate to enter into the management agreement. Further in his Honour's view (at 614) the exclusivity provisions of the management agreement were inconsistent with the right of other proprietors to conduct lawful businesses from their lots. The implication to be drawn from the Queensland Act was that a body corporate had no power to enter into an agreement giving exclusive rights to a particular person in relation to the use of the lots and common property which carried with it the implied power to prevent proprietors from enjoying those rights.

160. McHugh J (at 615 ff) found comfort for his conclusion that the general powers conferred by ss 27 and 37 did not authorise the making of the agreement in s 30(2) of the Act which provided:

> "Save where otherwise provided in subsections (7) and (11), a body corporate, pursuant to a special resolution, may, for the purpose of the control, management, administration, use or enjoyment of the lots and common property the subject of the plan, make by-laws amending, adding to or repealing the by-laws set forth in the Third Schedule or any by-laws made under this subsection."

161. His Honour interpreted that provision to mean:

> "[T]he body corporate can interfere with the rights of proprietors in respect of their lots only by means of by-laws passed in accordance with the Act." (emphasis added)

162. His Honour observed that the specific by-laws in the Third Schedule to the Queensland Act did not authorise the making of the agreement and that the body corporate had not exercised the power conferred by s 30(2) to make a by-law giving it power to enter into the management agreement.

. 163 McHugh J's observation concerning the by-law making power was part of his reasoning and appears to have been endorsed by Deane and Gaudron JJ (at 609). Section 30(2) of the Queensland Act was in substantially the same terms as s 47 of the Management Act upon which the primary judge relied. His Honour did not, with respect, explain why s 30(2) authorised a by-law under which the body corporate could enter an agreement which, inter alia, divested individual proprietors of their rights to let their own premises. It might be inferred, however, that, like Brennan and Toohey JJ, he thought such a by-law would be valid if it was in the common interest of all proprietors in the strata scheme.

164. Humphries is important for two reasons. First, it emphasises the necessity to have recourse to contextual considerations to determine the ambit of general words such as "for the purpose of the control, management, administration, use or enjoyment of the lots and common property the subject of the plan". Secondly, it underlines the proposition that to the extent by-laws can affect the rights of individual proprietors, it is because the by-law is presumed to operate for the benefit of the strata scheme as a whole. McHugh J's comment that "the body corporate can interfere with the rights of proprietors in respect of their lots only by means of by-laws passed in accordance with the Act" said no more than the Management Act itself. At the end of the day it is still necessary to determine the ambit of the power in s 47 to make by-laws which entrench on the rights of individual proprietors.

165. The other case on which the respondents rely, Sydney Diagnostic Services Pty Ltd v Hamlena Pty Ltd also illustrates the proposition that by-laws which operate for the benefit of the strata scheme as a whole are authorised.

166. Sydney Diagnostic concerned the by-law power in s 58(2) of the 1973 Act. The building covered by the strata plan was a medical centre. The body corporate purported to pass a by law which confined the conduct of the medical practice of pathology to two lots (5 and 6) in the strata plan. The respondent, which carried on the business of pathology on lot 35 contended the by-law was invalid because s 58(2) of the 1973 Act did not permit a discriminatory by-law.

167. In holding that the by-law was valid, Meagher JA (with whom Mahoney and Priestley JJA agreed) said (at 11, 434):

> "…[T]he words of the section do bear their prima facie meaning. Since plurals include singulars, Parliament must have intended bodies corporate to have power to pass by laws regulating 'the use' of each lot in a strata plan, and it must have been apparent to Parliament when arming bodies corporate with this power that it extended to regulating what trades, avocations and activities could and could not be conducted on each lot. This is particularly so when it is remembered that the Act was passed at a time when it was not uncommon for business and commercial buildings to be built with a view to different avocations being practised in different lots."

168. Sydney Diagnostic supports the proposition that in a commercial strata scheme, by-laws can be passed which requires one lot to be used by its proprietor in a particular way to ensure a "mix" of uses regarded as appropriate by the necessary majority of members of the owners' corporation. Such a by-law would be expressly authorised now by the power in s 43 to make by-laws appropriate to the type of strata scheme concerned. Meagher JA reached his conclusion by giving the words "for the purpose of …the use of a lot" their literal meaning. However he also had regard to the historical context in which the by-law making power was adopted, a context in which buildings were constructed for special purposes, and by-laws ensuring that the right "mix" was maintained operated for the benefit of the strata scheme as a whole.

169. By-law 20 does not operate for the benefit of the strata scheme as a whole. It operates only for the benefit of the respondents, to the detriment of the appellant. Sydney Diagnostic does not, in my opinion, support the conclusion that by-law 20 is valid.

170. In my opinion by-law 20 is inconsistent with the Management Act and, accordingly, has no force and effect: s 43(4).

Anthony Hordern

171. The conclusion that by-law 20 is invalid is sufficient to dispose of the appeal. However while I agree with Santow JA that the Anthony Hordern submission should be rejected, I do so for different reasons.

172. In Anthony Hordern (at 7), Gavan Duffy CJ and Dixon J (as his Honour then was) formulated the core principle that:

> "When the Legislature explicitly gives a power by a particular provision which prescribes the mode in which it shall be exercised and the conditions and restrictions which must be observed, it excludes the operation of general expressions in the same instrument which might otherwise have been relied upon for the same power."

173. That principle, as explained by Gummow and Hayne JJ in Minister for Immigration and Multicultural and Indigenous Affairs v Nystrom [2006] HCA 50; (2006) 81 ALJR 1 (at [54]) is based on the notion:

> "…that affirmative words appointing or limiting an order or form of things may have also a negative force and forbid the doing of the thing otherwise."

174. The Anthony Hordern principle is a manifestation of the maxim expressum facit cessare tacitum (when there is express mention of certain things, then anything not mentioned is excluded: Nystrom (at [54])). In Wilcox, Judge of the Federal Court, Re; Ex parte Venture Industries Pty Ltd (1996) 66 FCR 511 (at 64) the Full Federal Court (Black CJ, Cooper and Merkel JJ) said the maxim was usually applied to reconcile or read down by implication a general power which was inconsistent with a specific power in the same instrument or enactment and had little, if any, applicability to powers expressly conferred in separate enactments, even, apparently, if they were part of the same legislative scheme. It has been said that there appears to be no reason for this qualification: Pearce & Geddes, Statutory Interpretation in Australia 6th ed at 4.31.

175. As Gummow and Hayne JJ demonstrated in Nystrom (at [56] – [59]) in their analysis of the post-Anthony Hordern cases, the question whether the maxim applies turns on the construction of the provisions in question. After reviewing the authorities their Honours said (footnotes omitted):

> "[59] Anthony Hordern and the subsequent authorities have employed different terms to identify the relevant general principle of construction. These have included whether the two powers are the 'same power', or are with respect to the same subject-matter, or whether the general power encroaches upon the subject-matter exhaustively governed by the special power. However, what the cases reveal is that it must be possible to say that the statute in question confers only one power to take the relevant action, necessitating the confinement of the generality of another apparently applicable power by reference to the restrictions in the former power. In all the cases considered above, the ambit of the restricted power was ostensibly wholly within the ambit of a power which itself was not expressly subject to restrictions." (emphasis added)

See also Deputy Commissioner of Taxation v Dick [2007] NSWCA 190 per Santow J (at [121]) and per Basten JA (at [140]).

176. In order to invoke the Anthony Hordern principle, it is necessary that the appellant first establish that by-law 20 created an interest of the sort caught by s 88B of the Conveyancing Act. It is at this point that I disagree, with respect, with Santow JA as to the nature of the interest created by by-law 20. In my view by-law 20 did not create an easement or other interest caught by s 88B.

177. There are four conditions necessary to create a valid easement. There must be a dominant and servient tenement, the easement must "accommodate" the dominant tenement, the same person must not own and occupy the dominant and servient tenements and, finally, the right claimed as an easement must be capable of forming the subject matter of a grant: Re Ellenborough Park [1956] Ch 131 at 163.

178. In Re Ellenborough Park (at 164) Evershed MR said of the fourth condition:

> "The exact significance of this fourth and last condition is, at first sight perhaps, not entirely clear. As between the original parties to the 'grant' it is not in doubt that rights of this kind would be capable of taking effect by way of contract or licence. But for the purposes of the present case, as the arguments made clear, the cognate questions involved under this condition are: whether the rights purported to be given are expressed in terms of too wide and vague a character; whether, if and so far as effective, such rights would amount to rights of joint occupation or would substantially deprive the park owners of proprietorship or legal possession; whether, if and so far as effective, such rights constitute mere rights of recreation, possessing no quality of utility or benefit; and on such grounds cannot qualify as easements." (emphasis added)

179. The requirement that the right conferred by the grant must not amount to exclusive possession of the servient tenement was encapsulated by Lopes LJ in Reilly v Booth (1890) 44 Ch D 12 (at 26) as follows:

> "The exclusive or unrestricted use of a piece of land, I take it, beyond all question passes the property or ownership in that land, and there is no easement known to the law which gives exclusive and unrestricted use of a piece of land. It is not an easement in such a case; it is property that passes."

180. The same conclusion was reached in Bursill Enterprises Pty Ltd v Berger Bros Trading Co Pty Ltd [1971] HCA 9; (1971) 124 CLR 73 (at 91) by Windeyer J (with whom Barwick CJ agreed on this point).

181. There is a line of authority holding that the fourth condition is not satisfied where the right claimed is to store goods on another's land.

182. In Copeland v Greenhalf the defendant and his father before him had carried on business as wheelwrights for fifty years or so. Their home and workshop adjoined a road and in part confronted a strip of land on the opposite side of the road, some 150 feet long and of a width varying from fifteen to thirty-five feet, which gave access from the road to an orchard. During the whole of the fifty years the defendant and his father had placed vehicles, wheels, and other articles on the land on the opposite side of the road to await repair or removal after repair. They had also from time to time carried out repairs to vehicles on the land. They had always left a way to permit access to and from the orchard from and to the road. On a claim by the plaintiff, the owner in fee simple of the orchard and the strip of land, for an injunction to restrain the defendant from continuing to place articles on the land, the defendant contended that he was entitled to an easement so to use the land by virtue of the Prescription Act, 1832, s 2.

183. Upjohn J (as his Lordship then was) held (at 812) that the right claimed by the defendant went "wholly outside any normal idea of an easement, that is, a right of the occupier of a dominant tenement over a servient tenement". He continued:

> "This claim really amounts to a claim to a joint user of the land by the defendant. Practically he is claiming the whole beneficial user of the strip of land on the south-east side of the track so that he can leave there as many or as few lorries as he likes for any time that he likes and enter on it by himself, his servants and agents, to do repair work. In my judgment, that is not a claim which can be established as an easement. It is virtually a claim to possession, if necessary to the exclusion of the owner, or, at any rate, to a joint user, and no authority has been cited to me which would justify me in coming to the conclusion that a right of this wide and undefined nature can be the proper subject-matter of an easement. It seems to me that for this claim to succeed it must really amount to a right of possession by long adverse possession. I say nothing, of course, as to the creation of such rights by grant or by covenant." (emphasis added)

184. Brightman J followed Copeland in Grigsby v Melville and Another [1972] 1 WLR 1355, holding that an easement of unlimited storage within a confined space could not exist in law. It has been said that the major significance of Grigsby is "that it extends the principle of Copeland v Greenhalf beyond prescriptive easements to all easements, however acquired": A J Bradbrook and M A Neave, Easements and Restrictive Covenants in Australia, (Second Edition, Butterworths, 2000, at [1.9]). This comment would appear also to support the authors' observation (ibid) that there is no logical reason why a stricter test should apply to prescriptive easements than those created by express or implied grant: cf Mercantile General Life Reassurance Co v Permanent Trustee (1988) 4 BPR 9534.

185. There are differing views as to whether Copeland is inconsistent with the Court of Appeal's decision in Wright v Macadam [1949] 2 KB 744 in which it was held that a permission given by the landlord of a flat to his tenant to use a coal shed on his property to store such coal as might be required for the domestic purposes of the flat was a right or easement recognised by law. Upjohn J did not refer to Wright. Bradbrook and Neave (at [1.9]) regard the decisions as inconsistent and point out, correctly, that Copeland has been preferred in Australia. Campbell J (as his Honour then was) was not persuaded that there was any inconsistency in Lolakis v Konitsas [2002] NSWSC 889; (2002) 11 BPR 20,499 (at [25]).

186. Bradbrook and Neave's observation that Copeland has been preferred in Australia is based on King J's decision in Harada v Registrar of Titles [1981] VR 743 which concerned the question whether an easement was created by a "notice to treat" in the following terms:

> "… [to] empower the Commission to enter upon and clear the said land of timber and undergrowth and of any other obstructions and to lay and erect thereon such apparatus and appliances as are required for the purposes of transmitting electricity and will bind the owner not to build on the easement area and not to interfere with the use of the easement or grow trees or erect any structure thereon. The transmission wires will be at the lowest point about 22 feet above the ground." (emphasis added)

187. King J held (at 752) that the fourth condition for the grant of an easement was not present. He said:

> "… the restriction on the owner not to build on the easement area and not to erect any structure thereon goes much further than a prohibition of interference with the enjoyment by the SEC of its rights. I think that if the rights the subject of the notice to treat were acquired the plaintiff would be left with very few rights over her property and could do little more with it than move over it and park cars on it. I think that the rights sought go far beyond those appropriate to an easement, and that for this reason also the rights sought to be acquired by the SEC do not fall within the category of a common law easement. They would really amount to rights to joint user by the SEC of the plaintiff's land: Copeland v Greenhalf, [1952] 1 Ch 488, at p. 498." (emphasis added)

188. Copeland and Harada were followed in Clos Farming Estates Pty Ltd (Recs and Mgrs Apptd) (ACN 003 435 256) v Easton and Another [2002] NSWCA 389; (2002) 11 BPR 20,605 (at [40], [42], [45] – [46]) (per Santow JA, Mason P and Beazley JA agreeing). Santow JA observed (at [45]) that in order to determine whether the fourth condition has been established, it is necessary to assess the degree to which the rights conferred interfere with the servient owner's exclusive possession of the site. He added (at [46]) that the fact that "the rights conferred only touch part of the lot is insufficient to preclude the finding that the rights so vastly interfere with the servient owners' rights, were they exercised, as to preclude them constituting an easement".

189. The question whether a grant of rights over another's land fails the fourth condition required for an easement is one of fact. In Pennant Hills Golf Club Ltd v Roads and Traffic Authority of New South Wales [1999] NSWCA 110; (1999) 9 BPR 17,011 for example, the respondent was granted the right to use the appellant's land to secure underground rock anchors as part of the construction work for the M2 expressway. The effect of the grant prevented the appellant from making any changes to the design or topography of the golf course which intruded into that part of the land in which the rock anchors were to be embedded. The Court (Stein JA, Handley and Giles JJA agreeing) held (at [20]) that the grant did not "wholly" deprive the appellant of its property rights in the land, nor (at [22]) "purport to vest unlimited or unconstrained rights in the respondent…nor…give it any right of possession beyond that…necessary to house the rock anchors". The Court did not refer to Harada.

190. As I have already said, by-law 20 confers exclusive use and enjoyment of the watercraft storage area on the respondents, leaving the appellant with no right to use that section of lot 2. A by-law which purports to have that effect is not an easement because it purports to confer rights of occupation on the respondents that substantially deprive the appellant of proprietorship.

191. In those circumstances by-law 20 does not satisfy the fourth condition in Re Ellenborough Park.

192. Mr Rayment's alternative Anthony Hordern contention was that by-law 20 created a restrictive covenant which could only be created in accordance with s 88B. He advanced this argument with little enthusiasm. He did not articulate how a by-law which required the appellant to permit the respondents to store watercraft on her land came within the necessary conditions of a restrictive covenant, the first of which is that the covenant be negative in character: as to which see Marquess of Zetland v Driver [1939] Ch 1; Pirie v Registrar-General [1962] HCA 58; (1962) 109 CLR 619, the leading modern authorities on the Tulk v Moxhay doctrine (the genesis of the modern law of restrictive covenants), Forestview Nominees Pty Limited and Another v Perpetual Trustees WA Limited [1998] HCA 15; (1998) 193 CLR 154(at [9]). In my opinion by-law 20 did not create a restrictive covenant which might have attracted the operation of s 88B.

193. For these reasons I would reject the Anthony Hordern argument. However the conclusion that by-law 20 did not create an easement because it failed the fourth Ellenborough Park condition, underline why it is invalid.

Orders

194. I propose the following orders:

1. Grant leave to appeal.
2. Appeal allowed with costs.
3. Set aside the orders of White J on 30 June 2006.
4. In lieu of the orders made by White J:

(a) Declare that by-law 20 in strata plan 67662 is made ultra vires and is of no force or effect;
(b) Order that the first and second respondents be restrained from storing watercraft on the land comprised in lot 2 of strata plan 67662.
(c) Order that the first and second respondents pay the appellant's cost of the proceedings before White J.

195. Campbell JA: The term "by-law" is an ancient expression in English law. Its antiquity can be gauged from the fact that its etymological origin is in the Danish word "by" (sometimes spelt "byr"), meaning a town. Thus, in etymological origin, a by-law is a law applicable only to a local community.

196. Harding, A Social History of English Law (Penguin Books, London, 1966) says that in the 13th century

> "… the disputes of the peasantry, the bye-laws necessary for fruitful agriculture, the substance of daily life, were still matters for the landlord and were transacted in his manorial court." (p 70)

197. Such by-laws were at one stage customary, and not necessarily written. Stoljar, Groups and Entities (Australian National University Press, Canberra, 1973) records:

> "Such by-laws (i.e. the laws of a by or tun or township or village) begin to be recorded, though at first only sporadically, when manorial rolls begin in the thirteenth century; and they are recorded often at the express request of the villagers themselves who then declare the by-laws to have been by 'all the tenants', or by 'the community', or 'plebiscitum ville', thus also indicating their customary independence of the lord, at least as regards their own communal affairs." (p 21)

198. The range of topics covered by by-laws was wide. Stoljar, op cit, page 21, gives as examples:

> "For example, only those might be allowed to glean who were too young or too old to reap; or neighbours might be forbidden to carry off sheaves as it was difficult to say whether they had come by them "well and truly" or had got them "without leave". Some by-laws even deal with hired labour, specify a maximum wage etc., thus anticipating 'in a remarkable way the Statute of Labourers of 1351' …".

199. Stoljar gives other examples at p 20 – 21 of a medieval by-law requiring farm produce to be carted only by day and then "openly through the midst of the town and not secretly by back ways", and another by-law that dealt with

> "a problem posed by an obdurate or unco-operative villager, one who would neither properly work his tenement nor 'do any neighbourliness to his neighbours'."

200. Medieval guilds, when created by royal franchise, made their own by-laws. The by-laws of mediaeval guilds covered, according to Stoljar, op cit, page 26,

"… unfair practices such as overcharging, forestalling, including unfair competition among themselves; even to prevent guildsmen from acting as agents for outsiders…".

201. Likewise, when burgesses of towns began to seek royal charters of incorporation in the fifteenth century, the "… right to make by-laws … [was] eagerly sought by those applying for charters …" (Stoljar, op cit, page 33). (See also Harding, op cit, page 249. According to Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law (Oxford University Press, New York, 1980), entry "Bye-law", page 163,"A common-law corporation has implied power to make bye-laws incidental to and within the purposes of its constitution …".

202. Harding, op cit, page 229 sketches how by-laws came to be incorporated into a wider legal fabric:

"Statute was neither an independent, nor the earliest, form of legislation. But it came to control the other forms. The powers of rule-making it can now delegate to officials and bodies outside Parliament are the successors to the many independent modes of legislation in medieval England. The bye-laws of the manor, the regulations of the city companies and other corporations, the rules of the Common Law Courts — all these were only slowly brought under the surveillance of Parliament. The judgment of any court made a sort of law, and every considerable medieval baron had a court … This local law-making of medieval England was first brought under the control of the king in his council, as powers to be granted and censored by charter and letters-patent. So, in 1575, for the sake of quiet between the university and city of Oxford, 'places necessary to be ordered always by the order and authority of the Privy Council', the government had certain orders written into 'the common book of the said University and the city'."

203. When statute came to create bodies to carry out particular functions, and delegated powers to them, the pre-existing concept of the by-law was pressed into service. For example, the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act 1845 (Imp) permitted companies regulated by that Act to make by-laws, and made provision in section 127 for the manner of proof of those by-laws. The case law provides examples of by-laws made by railway companies (Motteram v Eastern Counties Railway Company (1859) 7 CB (NS) 58; 141 ER 735), and of by-laws made under the Public Health Act 1875 (Imp) (Andrews v Wirral Rural District Council [1916] 1 KB 863). See also R v Powell (1854) 3 E & B 377; 118 ER 1183; Johnson v Barnes (1873) LR 8 CP 527.

204. It is that ancient notion of a by-law that the New South Wales legislature chose to adopt, without definition or explanation, when first enacting legislation concerning strata titles in 1961: section 13 Conveyancing (Strata Titles) Act 1961. It has appeared in legislation governing strata titles ever since. Such legislation creates a statutory framework within which a type of local community can be created and administered. It is a type of community where co-ownership, and the physical proximity of the spaces that the owners are entitled to occupy, create the opportunity for both cooperation and conflict. It is a type of community that was new in 1961, though it had some analogies with the communities that had previously existed through the creation of home unit companies under the Companies Act, or allowing for individual occupation of apartments in a building through a tenancy in common scheme.

205. There is nothing in the notion of a by-law that, of itself, imposes any kind of limitation on the kind of regulation that might be adopted, beyond that it is for the regulation of the particular community to which it applies. Any limitation on the type of restriction or regulation that can be a by-law must arise from the statute that enables the by-laws to be created, or from the general framework of statute law, common law and equity within which that local community is created and administered.

206. The particular local community that was created under the strata plan in question in the present case involves only two lots of land in separate ownership. However, they are located in a part of Sydney where access to the water is a significant benefit to a lot of land. Nothing in the notion of a by-law prevented there being a by-law entitling the owner of the lot that was located away from the water frontage to store a boat within a defined area immediately adjacent to the waterfront but within the lot located on the water frontage. And, as Santow JA has demonstrated, nothing in the particular legislative framework that governs the strata plan in question detracts from the validity of the by-law that is the subject of this litigation.

207. Subject to one matter, I agree with the reasons of Santow JA, and with the orders he proposes. That one matter concerns whether the rights that by-law 20 conferred upon the respondents' lot could have been validly created as an easement. In my view, it is not necessary to decide that question. Even if those rights could have been validly created as an easement, the reasoning of Santow JA explains why the Anthony Hordern principle would not suffice to make the by-law invalid. And if, as McColl JA has concluded, those rights could not have been created as an easement, no question would arise of inconsistency between section 88B Conveyancing Act 1919 and the provisions governing the creation of by-laws for strata schemes, and that provides a different reason why the Anthony Hordern principle does not have the effect of making the by-law invalid. I would say, however, that the rights conferred by by-law 20 on the owner of lot 1, concerning the watercraft storage area, are extensive, but not as extensive as an exclusive right of possession. The proprietor of lot 2 can still use that area to whatever extent is consistent with the proprietor of lot 1 using it to store a watercraft, at such times as the proprietor of lot 1 might want.

208. There are some additional matters that I should state to explain why I do not, with respect, agree with the reasoning of McColl JA. First, there are some provisions of the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1973 that are not set out in either of the other judgments. Section 5 of that Act defines a "strata scheme" as meaning:

> "(a) the manner of division under this Act, from time to time, of a parcel into lots or into lots and common property and the manner of the allocation under this Act, from time to time, of unit entitlements among the lots, and > (b) the rights and obligations, between themselves, of proprietors, other persons having proprietary interests in or occupying the lots and the body corporate, as conferred or imposed by this Act or by anything done under the authority of this Act and as in force from time to time."

209. In spelling out the content of that definition, section 5 defines a "lot" as meaning:

> "… one or more cubic spaces forming part of the parcel to which a strata scheme relates, the base of each such cubic space being designated as one lot or part of one lot on the floor plan forming part of the strata plan, a strata plan of subdivision or a strata plan of consolidation to which that strata scheme relates, being in each case cubic space the base of whose vertical boundaries is as delineated on a sheet of that floor plan and which has horizontal boundaries as ascertained under subsection (2), but does not include any structural cubic space unless that structural cubic space has boundaries described as prescribed and is described in that floor plan as part of a lot."

210. It defines a "parcel" as meaning:

> "(a) except as provided in paragraph (b), the land from time to time comprising the lots and common property the subject of a strata scheme, and > (b) in relation to a plan lodged for registration as a strata plan, the land comprised in that plan."

211. It defines "common property" as meaning:

> "… so much of a parcel as from time to time is not comprised in any lot."

212. The effect of these definitions is that, once a strata scheme has been registered, the entirety of the legal rights in the land that has been made subject to the strata scheme are divided into either lots, or common property.

213. The drawings that are part of the strata plan in the present case divide the surface area of the land into two separate areas, lot 1 and lot 2. There is a minuscule amount of common property identified on that plan, comprising a wall that is a party wall between the carport available for use by lot 2, and the house and courtyard erected on lot 1. If one looks just at the drawings on the plan, it looks like the sort of plan that effects a subdivision of land that is not intended to create a strata scheme. The way in which this particular plan is able to create the "cubic spaces" that are essential for the existence of a "lot" in the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act is by a note that provides "Lots 1 & 2 are limited in height and depth to 30m above and below the upper surface of their respective ground floors." The plan makes clear that, at the time of lodgment of the plan, there was already a residence constructed on each of lot 1 and lot 2 – no doubt it would be those residences that fixed the location of the "respective ground floors". In so far as the land that had been made subject to the strata plan conferred rights in the airspace more than 30 m above the upper surface of the ground floors, and in the subterranean space more than 30 m below those floors, those rights would pass, upon registration of the strata plan, into the common property.

214. Thus, from the point of view of the rights likely to be of significance to an ordinary house occupier, this particular subdivision was little different to a subdivision into two freehold parcels on which freestanding houses were constructed. In the way in which it used the strata title legislation to achieve this functional end, it was a distinct oddity, and quite different to the situation with which the strata titles legislation is usually concerned, where the functional objective is to enable separate titles to be created to different parts of the one building. These are, it seems to me, relevant matters in deciding what count as "matters appropriate to the type of strata scheme concerned", within the meaning of section 43 Strata Schemes Management Act 1996.

215. Section 6 Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) provides:

> "(1) This Act shall be read and construed with the Real Property Act 1900 as if it formed part thereof.
> (2) The Real Property Act 1900 applies to lots and common property in the same way as it applies to other land except in so far as any provision of that Act is inconsistent with this Act or is incapable of applying to lots or common property."

216. The proprietary right of the registered proprietor in relation to a lot in a strata scheme is, thus, the right set out in section 42 Real Property Act (quoted in the judgment of Santow JA at [52]). For the reasons given by Santow JA, the limitation that by-law 20 imposes upon what may be done with the appellant's lot operates as either "estates and interests … recorded in that folio" or "entries … recorded in that folio", within the meaning of section 42. Thus, the proprietary right of the appellant in her lot is subject to by-law 20. Further, from the instant of its creation Lot 2 has been subject to by-law 20. To say that by-law 20 permits one lot proprietor to use another proprietor's lot suggests that the by-law infringes proprietary rights – but the proprietary right of the owner of Lot 2 has always been subject to the right created by by-law 20. The by-law is no more an infringement on the proprietary rights of the owner of Lot 2 than is the right of the owner of a dominant tenement to carry out on the land of another rights that have been created by an easement.

217. It is not necessary, in the present case, to decide whether it would be open to an owners corporation to resolve to adopt a by-law like by-law 20 after the creation of the lots in the strata plan. While the trial judge drew some comfort from his view that it would be possible for an owners corporation to pass such a resolution, the rest of his reasoning can stand without that part.

218. I am not prepared to conclude that by-law 20 does not operate for the benefit of the strata scheme as a whole. The strata plan is one that enables two houses and associated facilities to be separately owned on land where formerly only one land title existed. It arranges the land so that both lots can have car parking immediately adjacent to the street, and, through by-law 20, also makes provision for both lots to have boat parking immediately adjacent to the water. In my view, arranging the land use in that way can be seen as being for the benefit of both lots. Including by-law 20 in the strata plan as registered was part of the developer making available to potential purchasers the advantage of both car and boat parking, for a dwelling constructed on a smaller parcel of land.

219. I do not doubt the principle that general words should not be construed in their full generality if there is a context, such as the policy of the Act in which they appear, that is not consistent with giving the words as wide a meaning as they might have outside that context. However, I do not, with respect, find a general policy, in the various pieces of legislation that govern strata titles, that is inconsistent with according to the words "matters appropriate to the type of strata scheme concerned" in section 43(1) a meaning sufficiently wide to permit by-law 20 to be validly enacted. I do not regard the model by-laws as limiting by implication the kinds of topics with which a by-law can validly deal, when section 8(4B) and (4C) Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act specifically contemplates that by-laws different or supplementary to the model by-laws might be adopted. In the form they had at the date of registration of this strata plan (11 April 2002) they provided:

> "(4B) A plan intended to be registered as a strata plan must indicate in the relevant panel of the approved form:

(a) that specified model by-laws prescribed by the regulations made under the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 are proposed to be adopted for the strata scheme and, if those model by-laws contain one or more alternative versions of any by-law, that the specified version of that by-law is proposed to be adopted, or

(b) that other specified by-laws are proposed to be adopted for the scheme.

(4C) If a strata plan indicates that by-laws other than the model by-laws prescribed by the regulations made under the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 are proposed to be adopted for the strata scheme, the plan must be accompanied by the by-laws specified. The by-laws must be in the form approved under the Real Property Act 1900 and must be signed by the persons required to sign the strata plan under section 16(1)."

220. As mentioned earlier, I agree with the orders proposed by Santow JA.

(2008) LQCS ¶90-141

Court citation: [2008] QCA 29

Supreme Court of Queensland, Court of Appeal

26 February 2008

Community schemes — Development — Off-the-plan sales — Disclosure statements — Purchasers buy apartment in proposed community titles scheme "off the plan" — Disclosure statement given to purchasers leaves details of proposed caretaking and letting agreement blank — Vendor refuses to give further statement to correct alleged inaccuracies of first statement — Purchasers purport to cancel contract and do not complete — Vendor terminates contract and retains deposit — Whether vendor's termination valid — Whether vendor obliged to give further statement — Whether purchasers' purported cancellation valid — Whether purchasers materially prejudiced by inaccuracies in statement if required to complete — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997s 213, 214.

Surfers Paradise Beach Resort Pty Ltd (the vendor) built a residential, commercial and retail complex at Surfers Paradise. The residential portion of the complex was subdivided to create a community titles scheme pursuant to the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) (the Act).

During construction of the complex, and before creation of the community titles scheme for the residential lots, the Lees (the purchasers) contracted to purchase one of the lots "off the plan".

[140616]

Upon executing the contract, the purchasers received, among other things, a "first statement" (later called a "disclosure statement") pursuant to s 213(1) of the Act and a draft caretaking and letting agreement between the body corporate and the letting agent (referred to in the draft agreement as "the resident caretaker"). Under s 213(2)(c), any authorisation of a person as a letting agent for a proposed scheme must include "the terms of the authorisation" and s 213(4) requires the disclosure statement to be "substantially complete". Despite this, several matters were left blank in the draft agreement. The draft did not specify: (1) the identity of the proposed letting agent/resident caretaker; (2) the dates between which the agreement was to run; (3) the lot number of the resident caretaker's unit; or (4) the parts of the common property that the letting agent/resident caretaker would occupy for a tour desk, staff, a brochure stand, signage and the like.

In due course, the community scheme was established and a caretaking and letting agreement, now including all the information left blank in the draft agreement, was executed.

Prior to completion of the contract of sale between the vendor and the purchasers, the purchasers alleged that the vendor was obliged to furnish a "further statement" under s 214(2) of the Act, rectifying what they considered to be the "inaccuracies" in the first statement. They contended that a further statement was required because the first statement would not have been accurate if now given as a first statement (s 214(1)(b)).

The vendor did not give a further statement and the purchasers purported to cancel the contract under s 214(4) of the Act. Among other things, that subsection provides, in para (b), that a buyer may cancel the contract if "the buyer would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract, given the extent to which the first statement was, or has become, inaccurate".

Under the contract, the time set for completion had become essential. Therefore, when the purchasers failed to complete on the date fixed for completion, the vendor purported to terminate the contract.

The purchasers commenced proceedings against the vendor in the Supreme Court of Queensland for a declaration that the vendor's termination was invalid and for an order for the return of the deposit under the contract of sale. However, the Supreme Court dismissed the proceedings. The trial judge considered that the blanks in the draft agreement made the first statement incomplete, but not inaccurate. Therefore, the vendor had not been obliged to furnish a further statement under s 214 of the Act. His honour declared that the contract had been validly terminated and that the deposit had been rightly forfeited to the vendor.

The purchasers appealed against the trial judge's decision to the Court of Appeal.

Held: (per McMurdo P and Dutney J; Jerrard JA dissenting) Appeal dismissed.

Per McMurdo P:

1. The changes between the draft letting agreement contained in the first statement under s 213 of the Act and the final agreement invoked s 214(1)(b) of the Act. But that alone did not entitle the purchasers to cancel the contract. The purchasers did not plead or otherwise establish that they would have been materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract given the inaccuracies in the statement (s 214(4)(b)). Therefore, they did not establish an entitlement to cancel the contract under s 214.

Per Jerrard JA (dissenting):

2. From the date of the executed letting agreement, the first statement would no longer have been accurate if given then as a first statement. Accordingly, the vendor was obliged to give a further s 214 statement to the purchasers, as the purchasers claimed at the time.

3. Because the obligations imposed by s 214 on the vendor were imposed on it as a contracting party, and when not complied with, could result in the purchasers having the right to cancel the contract, the vendor was obliged to show that it was ready, willing and able to perform those obligations before being able to claim a right to terminate. It did not demonstrate that readiness and, instead, disputed its obligation to deliver a further statement

4. The purchasers were not obliged to settle without receipt of the further statement. Thus the vendor's entitlement under the contract to terminate upon the purchasers' failure to comply with an obligation under the contract (ie to settle) had no application. Instead, the contract was terminated without default by the purchasers. Therefore, pursuant to the contract, the purchasers were entitled to receive the deposit and any interest on it.

Per Dutney J:

5. None of the variations between the draft letting agreement contained in the first statement and the final agreement were obviously materially prejudicial to the purchasers.

6. Notwithstanding that the contents of the first statement were given contractual effect by s 215 of the Act, the limitation on the right to rescind in s 214(4)(b) rendered inessential an inaccuracy not materially prejudicing the purchasers. This was because the same statute which made the statement part of the contract also limits the extent to which rescission is available for what becomes a breach of a contractual warranty. Therefore, notwithstanding the vendor's breach of a non-essential term, the vendor retained the right to terminate for fundamental breach by the purchasers.

Full text of judgment below

McMurdo P: Because the relevant facts, issues and provisions of the Body Corporate & Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) ("the Act") are set out in the reasons for judgment of Jerrard JA, my reasons for dismissing the appeal can be relatively briefly stated.

2. The appellants entered into a contract with the respondent to purchase a residential apartment in a proposed community titles scheme in the landmark Gold Coast highrise building, Q1. The appellants applied for a declaration that the respondent's termination of the contract was invalid. They contended this was so because of the respondent's failure to comply with the Act. The primary judge dismissed their application and instead declared that the contract had been validly terminated and the deposit paid under the contract rightly forfeited to the respondent.

3. Jerrard JA has set out the differences between the draft letting agreement contained in the disclosure statement required to be made by the respondent under s 213 of the Act and the final letting agreement that came into effect upon the commencement of Q1's community titles scheme. I agree with his Honour's reasons for concluding that those changes invoked s 214(1)(b) of the Act. The changes had the result that "the disclosure statement would not be accurate if now given as a disclosure statement". That conclusion is consistent with the ordinary meaning of the words used in s 214. It is also consistent with the primary object of the Act (s 2) and the relevant secondary objects of the Act (s 4(b),(g) and (h)).

4. But that alone did not entitle the appellants to cancel the contract. Section 214(4) of the Act entitled them to do so only if all of the matters set out in s 214(4)(a), (b) and (c) were met. The appellants acted to cancel the contract before settlement (s 214(4)(a)). The primary judge made no finding as to whether the appellants would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract given the extent to which the disclosure statement had become inaccurate (s 214(4)(b)). The appellants in any case did not plead material prejudice in their Points of Claim in support of their application before the primary judge. Additionally, s 214(4)(c) assumes that the seller has given the buyer a further statement and requires any cancellation to be made effective by written notice given to the seller within 14 days of the further statement. The appellants did not establish that s 214(b) or (c) applied in their case. It follows that they did not establish an entitlement to cancel the contract under s 214.

5. It may be possible that a purchaser becomes entitled to a further statement under the Act only after the settlement date of the contract. The Act does not necessarily leave such a purchaser unprotected. Section 217 of the Act allows a purchaser to cancel the contract if it has not already settled (s 217(a)) and at least one of the situations set out in s 217(b)(i)-(iv) applies. In my view, consistent with the objects of the Act, the legislature can be taken to have intended that s 217(b)(iv) applies where information disclosed in the disclosure statement, required by the Act to be rectified by a further statement, is inaccurate.

6. Before enabling a buyer to cancel a contract, s 217 also requires a third condition to be met, namely, that because of a difference or inaccuracy under s 217(b) the buyer would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract. As I have noted, the appellants did not plead that issue at first instance; and nor have they placed any material before this Court to demonstrate material prejudice. The primary judge specifically made no finding in this respect.[1] Despite White J's observations in Celik Developments Pty Ltd v Mayes,[2] I am far from persuaded on the present material that the differences between the draft letting agreement and the final letting agreement would materially prejudice the appellants if they were compelled to complete the contract (s 214(4)(b) and s 217(c)). But in any case, it is impossible to express a concluded view on this because it was neither pleaded at first instance nor asserted or demonstrated on appeal. The appellants have not established an entitlement to cancel the contract under s 217.

7. The appellants at the hearing developed two new grounds of appeal. The first was that it was an implied term of their contract with the respondent that each party comply with statutory requirements, including those imposed by the Act. In rejecting that ground, it is sufficient to observe that the necessary requirements to imply such a term, set out in BP Refinery (Westernport) Pty Ltd v Hastings Shire Council,[3] and Codelfa Construction Pty Ltd v State Rail Authority of New South Wales,[4] have not been met in the present case.

8. The appellants' second newly developed ground of appeal was that this Court should not enforce a contract which is illegal because it breaches statutory obligations. If the legislative purpose of the Act can be fulfilled without finding a contract between parties void and unenforceable, the contract will be construed as valid: see Fitzgerald v FJ Leonhardt P/L,[5] Tonkin v Cooma-Monaro Shire Council[6] and QuestCrown Pty Ltd v Insignia Towers (Southport) P/L.[7] The Act aims to provide an appropriate level of consumer protection for owners and prospective buyers of lots included in community title schemes (s 4(g)) and to promote economic development by establishing sufficiently flexible administrative and management arrangements for community title schemes (s 4(b)). Those objects are not met by allowing a buyer to avoid a contract in the absence of establishing material prejudice resulting from the changes to the disclosure statement. See also s 213(7), s 214(4)(b) and s 217(c). The appellants have not pleaded nor established material prejudice. This ground of appeal is also without merit.

9. Under the contract between the appellants and the respondent, the appellants were required to complete their contractual obligations on 14 October 2005. The Act did not relieve them of that obligation. Their failure to settle meant that the respondent was entitled to terminate the contract.

10. The primary judge's orders were correctly made. The appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Jerrard JA: This is an appeal from orders made in the Trial Division of this Court on 27 April 2007, dismissing an originating application filed by the appellants on 19 February 2007, and declaring that on 8 December 2005 the respondent Surfers Paradise Beach Resort Pty Ltd had validly terminated a contract of sale dated 8 February 2003. The learned judge also declared that the respondent was entitled to forfeit a deposit paid by the appellants pursuant to the contract, together with any accrued interest, and ordered that the appellants pay the respondent's costs of and incidental to the proceedings, assessed on the standard basis. The litigation concerned the provisions of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) ("the BCCM Act").

12. The contract of sale between the appellants and the respondent was in respect of a Proposed Lot No 3703 in a residential, commercial and retail complex being constructed at Surfers Paradise, and known as "Q1". The following description of the relevant facts is taken from the judgment of the learned trial judge:

"[6] … It was developed by a joint venture between the respondent which owned the land on the one hand and Sunland Group Limited ("SGL") and Camryville Pty Limited (a wholly owned subsidiary of SGL) on the other. The residential tower has been subdivided to create a community titles scheme pursuant to the BCCM Act.
[7] While the complex was still under construction, and before the creation of the community titles scheme for the residential tower, the applicants agreed to purchase one of the residential apartments (described as lot 3703) "off the plan" for $940,000. On executing the contract on 8 February 2003 they received two bound books of documents required to be given to them under various statutes. Of present relevance were –

(i) Disclosure statement under the Corporations Act 2001 (Cth) made by the respondent on 19 July 2002;
(ii) Disclosure statement under the BCCM Act made by the respondent on 19 July 2002;
(iii) Pro forma Caretaking and Letting Agreement "Q Tower" between the Body Corporate for Q Tower CTS # and an unnamed Resident Caretaker;
(iv) Contract of sale.

They paid an initial cash deposit of $1,000 and subsequently provided a bank guarantee for the balance deposit of $93,000.
[8] In June 2003 the respondent sold the caretaking and letting rights for the residential tower to Sunland Hotels and Resorts Pty Ltd ("SH & R"), a wholly owned subsidiary of SGL. When the community titles scheme was established more than 15 months later, a Caretaking and Letting Agreement between the Body Corporate for Q1 CTS 34498 and SH & R was executed on 30 September 2005."

13. SH & R had written to the appellants on 16 September 2004, advising them that if they intended to place their apartment into what SH & R described as "Our Q1 Letting Pool", it was a prerequisite that the appellants purchase a "Q1 Homeware and Furniture Package." That required, inter alia, reviewing, signing, and returning two copies of what was described as the Q1 Furniture & Homeware Package "Supply Agreement", and also required that the appellants read a "Product Disclosure Statement" supplied by SH & R.

14. The cost of the Q1 Furniture & Homeware Package was $49,900. The learned trial judge found that when the appellants signed the contract in February 2003, they were unaware of any requirements that they buy a furniture package from the resident caretaker, if they wanted to holiday let the apartment through the proposed letting pool. The judge was satisfied that it was the appellants' intention to holiday let the apartment. The appellants were unable to on-sell their apartment, and by a facsimile dated 30 September 2005 the solicitors for the respondent advised the appellants' solicitors that completion was due on 14 October 2005. The appellants' solicitors suggested that the respondent was obliged to provide an amended disclosure statement under the BCCM Act. The respondent did not do so, and completion did not take place on 14 October 2005 or at all. On 8 December 2005 the respondent purported to terminate the contracts, and resold the apartment.

15. The appellant argued to the learned trial judge that the Product Disclosure Statement and the Apartment Management Agreement provided to them by SH & R were relevant to the respondent's obligations under each of s 213 and s 214 of the BCCM Act. Those sections relevantly provide:

[140620]

"213 Statement to be given by seller to buyer

(1) Before a contract (the contract) is entered into by a person (the seller) with another person (the buyer) for the sale to the buyer of a lot (the proposed lot) intended to come into existence as a lot included in a community titles scheme when the scheme is established or changed, the seller must give the buyer a statement (the first statement) complying with subsections (2) to (4).
(2) The first statement –

(a) must state the amount of annual contributions reasonably expected to be payable to the body corporate by the owner of the proposed lot; and
(b) must include, for any engagement of a person as a body corporate manager or service contractor for the scheme proposed to be entered into after the establishment of the scheme, or proposed to be continued or entered into after the scheme is changed –

(i) the terms of the engagement, other than any provisions of the code of conduct that are taken to be included in the terms under section 118; and
(ii) the estimated cost of the engagement to the body corporate; and
(iii) the proportion of the cost to be borne by the owner of the proposed lot; and

(c) must include, for any authorisation of a person as a letting agent for the scheme proposed to be given after the establishment of the scheme, or proposed to be continued or given after the scheme is changed, the terms of the authorisation; and
(d) must include details of all body corporate assets proposed to be acquired by the body corporate after the establishment or change of the scheme; and
(e) must be accompanied by –

(i) the proposed community management statement, and
(ii) if the scheme to be established or changed is proposed to be established as a subsidiary scheme — the existing or proposed community management statement of each scheme of which the proposed subsidiary scheme is proposed to be a subsidiary; and

(f) must identify the regulation module proposed to apply to the scheme; and
(g) must include other matters prescribed under the regulation module applying to the scheme.

(3) The first statement must be signed by the seller or a person authorised by the seller.
(4) The first statement must be substantially complete.
(5) The seller must attach an information sheet (the information sheet) in the approved form to the contract—

(a) as the first or top sheet; or
(b) if the proposed lot is residential property under the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 — immediately beneath the warning statement that must be attached as the first or top sheet of the contract under section 366 of that Act.

(6) The buyer may cancel the contract if—

(a) the seller has not complied with subsections (1) and (5); And
(b) the contract has not already been settled.

(7) The seller does not fail to comply with subsection (1) merely because the first statement, although substantially complete as at the day the contract is entered into, contains inaccuracies

In this section—

residential property see the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000, section 17.

214 Variation of first statement by further statement

(1) This section applies if the contract has not been settled, and —

(a) the seller becomes aware that information contained in the first statement was inaccurate as at the day the contract was entered into; or
(b) the first statement would not be accurate if now given as a first statement.

(2) The seller must, within 14 days (or a longer period agreed between the buyer and seller) after subsection (1) starts to apply, give the buyer a further statement (the further statement) rectifying the inaccuracies in the first statement.
(3) The further statement must be endorsed with a date (the further statement date), and must be signed, by the seller or a person authorised by the seller.
(4) The buyer may cancel the contract if—

(a) it has not already been settled; and
(b) the buyer would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract, given the extent to which the first statement was, or has become, inaccurate; and
(c) the cancellation is effected by written notice given to the seller within 14 days, or a longer period agreed between the buyer and seller, after the seller gives the buyer the further statement.

(5) Subsections (1) to (4) continue to apply after the further statement is given, on the basis that the first statement is taken to be constituted by the first statement and any further statement, and the first statement date is taken to be the most recent further statement date."

16. The appellants argued to the learned trial judge, but not on this appeal, that the "authorisation" in s 213(2)(c) referred both to the authorisation by the body corporate, and to the authorisation by an owner of an individual lot, in the reference to any authorisation of a person as a letting agent for the scheme. The learned judge disagreed, holding that on the proper construction of s 213(2)(c), the respondent's obligation was only to disclose the terms on which the body corporate proposed granting an authorisation to a letting agent. The learned judge stated that neither the contents of the product disclosure statement, nor those of the apartment management agreement, related to the terms of the authorisation of the letting agent for the scheme. That was because they did not relate to the terms on which the body corporate proposed to authorise someone as the letting agent for the scheme. They related instead to the terms upon which SH & R would accept an appointment from an individual lot owner, to let an apartment. The appellants did not challenge that conclusion on this appeal.

17. The appellants maintained on this appeal submissions also advanced below, regarding s 214. Those submissions pointed to the differences between the draft or pro-forma caretaking and letting agreement supplied to them with the contract on 8 February 2003, and the terms of the executed caretaking and letting agreement. Those differences included that the identity of the proposed agent was not inserted in the draft, nor were the dates between which the agreement was to run. Nor was the lot number of the resident caretaker's unit specified in the draft agreement, as it was in the executed one, and nor were the parts of the common property to be occupied by the resident caretaker disclosed in the draft statement.

18. The learned judge held that "inaccuracy" ordinarily connotes error, rather than incompleteness resulting from matters not yet being capable of ascertainment. The judge held that in the context of legislation which aimed to provide "an appropriate level" of consumer protection (a reference to s 3(A) of the BCCM Act), those differences were not "inaccuracies" for the purpose of s 214(2). The respondent was not thereby obliged to provide a further statement to the appellants under s 214(2). The appellants challenge that conclusion on this appeal. They contend that when information came to hand which rendered the first statement inaccurate, the respondent was obliged to provide a further statement, correcting the inaccuracy. That was said to follow from s 214(1)(b).

There were actually three versions of the caretaking and letting agreement. The first was the one supplied to the appellants on 8 January 2003. That was a draft agreement between the body corporate for Q Tower CTS and an unidentified entity, described as "the Resident Caretaker". Clause 1.1(x) of that draft agreement provided that the expression "term" meant the period of 15 years commencing from (an undisclosed date) and expiring on (another undisclosed date). Both dates were left blank. Clause 1.1(i) provided that the expression "Further Term" meant the period of 10 years commencing from (a date left blank) and expiring on (a date left blank). Clause 15 of that draft agreement provided that the resident caretaker must ensure that any written agreement entered into or to be entered into with any owner of a lot in the scheme relating to the letting of their lot included provisions as specified in Schedule E of CO 00/570 (Management Rights Schemes Class Order) (or any Class Order, other document, law or provision that replaces CO 00/570 from time to time). Clause 25 provided that the body corporate gave the resident caretaker the authority to occupy any part of the common property on level C of the building for the purposes of installing or placing, and if appropriate, manning, a tour desk, brochure stand, signage and other similar things.

20. The second such caretaking and letting agreement was an agreement in a form set out in Schedule 1 to an agreement dated 24 June 2003 entered into between the respondent (as "Seller") and SH & R (as "Buyer") and SGL (as "Guarantor"), in which the respondent agreed to cause the body corporate to grant to SH & R the rights, title and interest in the buyer's caretaking and letting agreement on the terms of that agreement.

21. The buyer's caretaking and letting agreement, Schedule 1, purported to be between the body corporate for Q Tower CTS (the Body Corporate) and SH & R, as the Resident Caretaker. In that draft Clause 1.1(y) defined "term" as meaning the period of 15 years commencing from (a date left blank) and expiring on (a date left blank). Clause 1.1(i) described "Further Term" as meaning the period of 10 years commencing from (a date left blank) and expiring on (a date left blank). Clause 15 was in the same terms as before, but referred now to the provisions specified in Schedule CO 02/305 (Management Rights Schemes Class Order) (or any Class Order, other document, law or provision that replaces CO 02/305 from time to time). Clause 25 now had a Clause 25.2 and 25.3, and 25.2 referred to an attached plan which showed the area that the body corporate gave the resident caretaker the authority to occupy.

22. The third version of the caretaking and letting agreement in evidence was the one actually entered into between the body corporate Q1 CTS and SH & R, on 30 September 2005.

23. That agreement specified in clause 1.1(y) that the expression "term" meant the period of 15 years commencing from 18 October 2005 and expiring on 17 October 2020. Clause 1.1(h) provided that "Further Term" meant the period of 10 years commencing from 18 October 2020 and expiring on 17 October 2030. Clause 15 was in the same terms as in the second version of the caretaking and letting agreement, and clause 25 was considerably more detailed. It now described, by reference to two attached plans, the part of the common property which the body corporate authorised the resident caretaker to occupy.

24. Mr O'Donnell QC, senior counsel for the respondent, accepted that the terms of the respondent's engagement would include the commencing and ending dates. He submitted that the omission of those from the draft agreements supplied to the appellants in January 2003 rendered that draft incomplete, but not inaccurate. He accepted that if a seller disclosed only part of what a seller knew, in a first statement provided under s 213, the result might render the first statement inaccurate. Mr O'Donnell submitted that the first statement supplied under s 213 was not inaccurate because incomplete, pointing to the terms of s 213(7). He submitted that section provided that there could be substantial compliance with the requirements, in a first statement which contained inaccuracies.

25. He conceded that s 214 was expressed to require compliance with the obligation it imposed up until the date of the settlement of the contract, but submitted that once a scheme became established, as this one had been on 30 September 2005, neither s 213 nor s 214 could have any sensible application. That was because they referred back to a first statement as defined in s 213, which was expressed in prospective terms, about a "proposed" lot. He argued that once the scheme was established, the BCCM Act gave a potential purchaser a separate route to get information about the scheme, under s 205. That section required a body corporate to give information to an interested person, which includes in its definition a prospective purchaser.

26. He referred to the provisions of s 215, making the first statement and any material accompanying it, and each further statement and other accompanying material, part of the provisions of the contract; and to the provision in s 216 that the buyer might rely on information in the first statement, and each further statement, as if the seller had warranted its accuracy. He then referred to the provision in s 217(b)(iv), providing that the buyer might cancel the contract if it had not already been settled, and if the information disclosed in the first statement, as rectified by any other further statement, was inaccurate, and if the buyer would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract, because of the difference or inaccuracy.

27. He argued that a seller aware of a change in circumstances after the first statement was given under s 213, and who did not give a further statement under s 214, created a problem for the seller because of the warranty of accuracy. He contended that s 214(1)(b) operated up to the time the scheme was established, but not later.

28. With respect to those submissions, they imposed a time limit on the application of s 214 which does not appear in the section, and which would affect the operation of s 217(b)(iv) and s 217(c). Those later sections assume that inaccuracy in a first statement is rectified by a further statement. The assumption is therefore that a further statement has been provided, correcting what was now inaccurate. On Mr O'Donnell's construction of s 214, that further statement would not need to be given once the scheme was established. That construction tends to frustrate the object of s 217 and its provisions, allowing a buyer to cancel. Those depend upon the provision of a further statement establishing the inaccuracy in a first one, and reflect the requirement in s 214 that such further statement has to be given if a first statement would not be accurate, if given now in its original terms.

29. There was no relevant difference between the draft caretaking and letting agreements provided to the appellant, and the one ultimately executed, in the amount of annual contributions reasonably expected to be payable by a lot owner, the terms of the engagement of SH & R as a body corporate manager or the terms of the authorisation given to it as the letting agent, the estimated costs of the engagement to the body corporate, the proportion of the costs be borne by the owner of the proposed lot, or the details of all body corporate assets proposed to be acquired by the body corporate.

30. Those were the matters expressly required to be stated or included by s 213(2)(b)(c), and (d). The information revealed in the executed agreement did not change any of those terms, but it did identify the parties to be bound by the terms, and the period of the engagement. Mr O'Donnell QC was correct in conceding that the period of the engagement was one of its terms, as indeed was the identity of the resident caretaker, and it followed that from 30 September 2005 — the date of the executed agreement — the first statement would no longer be accurate if given then as a first statement. It would be inaccurate because the identity of the resident caretaker, and the period of engagement of it, were both known to the respondent vendor. Indeed, the respondent had contracted with SH & R on 24 June 2003, promising to cause it to be the resident caretaker with a letting agreement. It knew the probable identity of that party since that date.

31. Further, the area the resident caretaker had authority to occupy was specified. A first statement which suggested as at 30 September 2005 that those matters were not settled would be inaccurate, not simply incomplete. Accordingly, the seller was obliged to give a further s 214 statement to the appellants, as they claimed at the time.

The respondent was accordingly in breach of a statutory obligation to the appellants, imposed with respect to their contract, and capable (if fulfilled) of giving the appellants a right to end the contract, in the circumstances described in s 214 and s 217. Mr O'Donnell QC argued that the respondent had 14 days, ending at midnight on 14 October 2005, to provide the information, whereas Mr O'Donnell QC contended that the buyers were required to complete by 5.00 pm on that date. That was when settlement was to occur, at the latest. Accordingly, he argued, when the appellant failed to complete at that moment, the respondent was not in breach of the Act at that time, (having some seven hours to go), and was entitled to terminate. He submitted that right arose from Clause 7.1 of the contract entered into on 8 February 2003, giving the seller the right to terminate if the buyer failed to comply with any obligation under the contract.

33. Both counsel made submissions on a terminating party's obligation to establish that it was ready and willing to perform its obligations under the contract, referring to authority (including Foran v Wight (1990) 168 CLR 385 and Bahr v Nicolay [No 2] (1988) 164 CLR 604). Because the obligations imposed by s 214 on the respondent were imposed on it as a contracting party, and, when carried out, could result in the appellants having the right to cancel the contract, the respondent was obliged to show that it was ready, willing and able to perform that obligation before being able to claim a right to repudiate. It did not demonstrate that readiness, and the appeal record showed instead that it disputed, at the time, its obligation to deliver an amended disclosure statement. It asserted that in correspondence dated 14 October 2005.[8] The appellants were not obliged to settle without receipt of the further statement the respondent was obliged to give them. It follows that Clause 7.1 of the contract, entitling the seller to terminate upon the buyer's failure to comply with an obligation under the contract, has no application. That in turn means that the provisions of clause 2.4 of the contract applied in the appellant's favour. That read:

> "2.4 Payment of Deposit
>
> The party entitled to receive the Deposit and any interest on the Deposit is:
>
> (a) if the Contract settles – the Seller is entitled to the Deposit and the Buyer is entitled to the interest on the Deposit;
> (b) if the Contract is terminated without default by the Buyer – the Buyer; or > (c) if the Contract is terminated owing to the Buyer's default – the Seller."

34. The contract was terminated by the seller without default by the buyer, and accordingly clause 2.4 provides, as Mr R Douglas SC submitted for the appellants, that they are entitled contractually to receive the deposit and any interest on it. That was the point of their prosecuting this appeal.

35. I would order that the appeal be allowed, the orders made on 27 April 2007 be set aside, and in lieu thereof it be ordered and declared that:

- the amended originating application filed by the applicants on 19 February 2007 be allowed;
- the respondent is not entitled to forfeit the deposit paid pursuant to the contract of sale dated 8 February 2003, together with any accrued interest, and declare that the appellants are entitled to the return of that deposit, together with accrued interest, from the respondent;
- the respondent pay the appellants' costs of and incidental to the proceedings (including the counter-claim and of this appeal), to be assessed on the standard basis.

Dutney J: I have had the advantage of reading the reasons for judgment of Jerrard JA. The facts are set out in his Honour's reasons and I will not repeat them.

37. I agree with his Honour's conclusions that the obligation in s 214 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 ("the Act") to furnish the purchaser with a further statement terminates only upon settlement and not when the scheme comes into existence. To conclude otherwise entirely ignores the plain language of the opening part of sub-section (1).

38. Regrettably, I am unable to agree with his Honour's ultimate conclusion as to the disposition of the appeal for the reasons which follow.

39. The changes between the draft agreement granting authorisation to a letting agent ("the draft agreement") contained in the first statement under s 213 and the final agreement that came into effect upon the commencement of the scheme ("the final agreement") were identified during the course of argument by senior counsel for the appellants as follows:

- The name of the agent is inserted in the final agreement
- The commencement date is inserted in the final agreement
- The expiry date of the agreement is inserted in the final agreement

• The number of the caretaker's unit is identified
• The number of the Class Order for the Management Rights Scheme has changed although the content of those statutory rules is unchanged
• The letting agent has been allocated exclusive occupancy of three areas of the common property. The area on Level A marked OA1 is a vacant space behind the lifts not allocated for car parking. The area marked OA2 is the corresponding space on level B of the car park. The area marked OA3 is a small area on the roof now designated for the placement of a satellite dish.

40. It is unnecessary for the reasons which follow to determine whether the effect of these omissions and changes, had they been known or applied at the time the first statement was provided to the appellants, would be to render the disclosure contained in the first statement inaccurate and therefore trigger the obligation on the respondent to provide a further statement pursuant to s 214(2). For the purposes of these reasons, I shall assume that they do render the first statement inaccurate.

41. Where the first statement was or has become inaccurate, s 214(4) permits the purchaser to rescind the contract provided each of subparagraphs (a) to (c) inclusive is satisfied. One of the prerequisites to the right to rescind is that the purchaser would be materially prejudiced if required to complete the contract in the light of the inaccuracies in the first statement. Section 214(4) appears to presuppose that a further statement is provided. The time for rescission is limited by the date the further statement is provided.

42. On the other hand, if no further statement is provided but the first statement as varied by any further statement is inaccurate (see s 217(b)(iv)), there is a separate right to rescind under s 217(d)(i). That right must be exercised not later than 3 days before the purchaser is otherwise required to settle. Sub-paragraphs (d)(ii) and (iii) of s 217 have no application in this case. By s 217(c) it remains a pre-requisite to the right to rescind that the inaccuracy would make it materially prejudicial to the purchaser if compelled to complete. Thus, there does not seem to be any practical difference between a right to rescind under either section.

43. None of the variations between the draft agreement and final agreement were obviously materially prejudicial to the purchasers.

44. It was not suggested by the appellants that the name of the letting agent was of any consequence to them. That the final agreement was to commence upon the scheme coming into existence was also not obviously materially prejudicial. The agreement could not sensibly commence any earlier. It was a long term agreement with a right of renewal. The appellants' intention was to let their unit. Provided the letting authorisation was in place when the appellants' contract was due for settlement, it is hard to see how their position was affected by the actual commencement date.

45. A change in the statutory designation of the Class Order without change to its content is immaterial.

46. The areas now allocated to the exclusive occupancy of the letting agent are small, out of the way, otherwise vacant and not previously designated for any particular use. The intended use of AO1 and AO2 is for storage.

Having regard to the wording of s 214(4) and s 217(c), it seems to me that the onus falls on the purchasers to prove that they would be materially prejudiced if required to settle given the changes that had taken place between the time they were provided with the first statement and the date for settlement.

48. The appellants pleading did not allege that any of the changes resulted in material prejudice. The appellants' case below was based on the proposition that they had been deprived of the opportunity to consider whether or not they would be prejudiced.

49. In written submissions in reply, the appellants asserted that the changes following the first statement and which obligated the giving of a further statement were not trivial having regard to their nature. This submission was made in the context of a submission that the imposing of the obligation to give a further statement in the circumstances was not unduly onerous on the respondent. This is different from a submission that enforcing the appellants' obligation to settle would be materially prejudicial. The latter submission was not open on the pleadings or the evidence.

50. Despite any wrongful assertion that it had no obligation to provide a further statement, the respondent's failure to do so did not result in any right on the part of the appellants to rescind the contract. Any right of rescission was based on the fact that the statement or statements provided were or had become inaccurate and on the appellants being able to demonstrate that they would be materially prejudiced if now forced to settle on the basis of the true facts. It follows that the purchasers' obligation to tender the purchase price in accordance with the terms of the contract was not conditioned on the receipt of the further statement.

51. The principles discussed in Foran v Wight (1990) 168 CLR 385 on which both parties relied afford no assistance to the appellants. The relief from the obligation to tender performance discussed in the case is prefaced on the intimation by the other party to the contract that such tender would be pointless because of the second party's inability or refusal to tender in exchange that which the first party was entitled to receive.

52. In this case, in the absence of material prejudice the appellants were entitled at settlement to receive no more than the respondent was prepared to give in exchange for payment of the purchase price. In this case, that was a conveyance of Lot 3703 in the residential complex Q1. At the time of contracting for the purchase of the lot, the appellants were aware that the body corporate would, by the time of settlement, have given a letting authorisation on terms not substantially different from those in fact granted to Sunland Hotels & Resorts Pty Ltd.

53. The correct approach to this case is illustrated by the judgment of the Court of Appeal in New South Wales in Roadshow Entertainment Pty Ltd v CEL/Vision (1997) 42 NSWLR 462 at 479-481 where the following passages appear:

> "As a general rule, a party in breach of a non-essential term is not prevented from rescinding for a fundamental breach or repudiation by the other party: see J. W. Carter, Breach of Contract 2nd ed. (1991) at 347 and Halsbury's Laws of Australia, vol 6 'Contract' (1992) par 110-9520, by the same author. The question is whether there is an exceptional qualification to this general rule which prevented Roadshow from rescinding. Such an exception or qualification might exist if there were a causal relationship between the breaches of non-essential terms by the party attempting to rescind, and the fundamental breach relied upon: see Nina's Bar Bistro Pty Ltd (formerly Mytcoona Pty Ltd) v MBE Corporation (Sydney) Pty Ltd (at 614, 620-621, 632); and compare Suttor v Gundowda Pty Ltd (1950) 81 CLR 418 at 440-442.
>
> A party in breach of non-essential terms, who has not repudiated may rescind for fundamental breach: see Hong Kong Fir Shipping Co. Ltd v Kawasaki Kisen Kaisha Ltd [1962] 2 QB 26; State Trading Corporation of India Ltd v Golodetz Ltd (at 286-287) a party in breach of an essential but independent term may also rescind for fundamental breach: see State Trading Corporation of India Ltd v Golodetz (at 285-287); compare Geraldton Building Co Pty Ltd v Christmas Island Resort Pty Ltd (1992) 11 WAR 40 at 50-51. Roadshow, we consider, was not, by reason of its conduct, unable to terminate on the ground of CEL/Vision's repudiation."

54. The test to apply to determine whether or not a term of a contract is to be regarded as essential is that set out in the judgment of Jordon CJ in Tramways Advertising Pty Limited v Luna Park (NSW) Ltd (1938) 38 SR (NSW) 642 at 641-642:

> "The test of essentiality is whether it appears from the general nature of the contract considered as a whole, or from some particular term or terms, that the promise is of such importance to the promisee that he would not have entered into the contract unless he had been assured of a strict or substantial performance of the promise, as the case may be, and that this ought to have been apparent to the promisor: Flight v. Booth ((1834) 1 Bing. (NC) 370, 377; 131 ER 1160, 1162-1163), Bettini v. Gye ((1876) 1 QBD 183, 188), Bentsen v. Taylor, Sons & Co (No. 2) ([1893] 2 QB 274, 281), Fullers' Theatres Limited v. Musgrove ((1923) 31 CLR 524, 537-538), Bowes v. Chaleyer ((1923) 32 CLR 159), Clifton v. Coffey ((1924) 34 CLR 434, 438, 440). If the innocent party would not have entered into the contract unless assured of a strict and literal performance of the promise, he may in general treat himself as discharged upon any breach of the promise, however slight."

55. In my view, notwithstanding that the contents of the first statement are given contractual effect by s 215 of the Act, the limitation on the right to rescind in s 214(4)(b) and s 217(c) renders inessential an inaccuracy not materially prejudicing the purchaser. This is because the same statute which makes the statements part of the contract also limits the extent to which rescission is available for what becomes a breach of a contractual warranty.

56. Applying the principles to which I have referred to the facts of the present case, notwithstanding the respondent's breach of a non-essential term, the respondent retained the right to rescind for fundamental breach by the appellants. In this case the fundamental breach lay in failing to tender the purchase price on the date specified in the contract where time has been made of the essence by clause 1.4.

57. The argument for the appellants appeared to be that notwithstanding that it is now known that the inaccuracies in the first statement would not have given rise to a right to rescind the contract, they were nonetheless entitled to defer settlement upon becoming aware that there may have been such inaccuracies. I cannot accept that proposition. If the failure to provide the further statement was a non-essential breach of the contract, then absent a separate right to defer settlement I can see no basis for any moratorium on the vendor insisting on settlement in accordance with the contractual obligation.

58. There is no statutory moratorium. The statutory rights are limited in the way I have set out. Indeed, s 217(d)(i) appears to assume that settlement on the due date can be insisted upon if the purchaser has not otherwise rescinded.

59. An alternative argument was based upon illegality. It was submitted that the court should not lend itself to the enforcement of a contract where the respondent was in breach of a statutory obligation. Reliance was placed on Fitzgerald v FJ Leonhardt Pty Ltd (1997) 189 CLR 215 at 227, 229, 230.

60. In this case the principles enunciated in that case have no application. The terms of the contract did not require the seller to contravene s 214(2) in performing the contract and the non-delivery of the further statement was not something done by the respondent in performance of the contract.

61. Finally, it was submitted that a term that each party would comply with its obligations under the Act should be implied. I can see no reason to imply such a term. The Act itself provides remedies for non-compliance when the non-compliance is prejudicial to the other party, this argument must also fail.

62. I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Supreme Court of Queensland — Court of Appeal

Decision delivered on 28 March 2008

Conveyancing — Where sale contract was a standard REIQ contract for the sale of residential lots in a community titles scheme — Where s 206 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 requires that a seller of a lot in a community titles scheme provide a disclosure statement — Appeal against finding that the purchasers were not entitled to terminate the contract for the vendors' non-compliance with s 206 of the Act — Where purchasers argued a different construction to s 206 from that of the primary judge — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, s 206.

In 2005, the purchasers entered into a sale contract with the vendors of a block of units situated in Queensland. The vendors had retained ownership of all of the units in the building, and had managed the building and run the affairs of the body corporate informally, without complying with the requirements of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997.

The sale contract was a standard REIQ contract for the sale of residential lots in a community titles scheme. The purchasers purported to terminate the contract, claiming they were entitled to do so as a result of the vendors' breaches of s 206 of the Act in respect of the disclosure statement they were given. In a number of instances, the vendors had inserted the words "not applicable" as answers to questions in the disclosure statement. By way of explanation, the notation on the disclosure statement stated "NB Body Corporate not being formally operated as all lots owned by [the vendors]".

The vendors countered that the purchasers' purported termination was a wrongful repudiation of the contract and advised that they were themselves electing to terminate the contract and would keep the deposit.

The purchasers initiated proceedings against the vendors, with the trial judge finding in favour of the vendors. The purchasers are now appealing against this decision.

Held: appeal dismissed. Indemnity costs awarded.

1. Section 206(1) of the Act requires the seller of a lot in a community titles scheme to give the buyer a disclosure statement. By virtue of s 206(2), the disclosure statement must "state", "identify", "list" and "include" information about specified matters concerning the body corporate and its affairs.

2. The purchasers have sought to argue on appeal that pursuant to s 206(2), the vendors were obliged to cause the body corporate to remedy any relevant non-compliance with statutory obligations imposed upon it by other provisions in the Act and then, secondly, to state information about that changed state of affairs in the disclosure statement.

3. However, s 206(2) makes provision for matters to be stated by the seller in the disclosure document and is thus imposed on a person, who will not usually have any control over the body corporate.

4. Further, the plain words of s 206(2) make it clear that it is not possible to perceive any legislative intention to impose on a seller an obligation to create the kind of information required to be disclosed by s 206. If there is no information created by the body corporate in relation to a particular item mentioned in s 206, an answer of "not applicable" by a seller is accurate, and the seller's obligation of disclosure under s 206 is satisfied to that extent.

The purchasers' argument in this regard also fails to take into account that there is a clear legal distinction between a corporation and the individuals who control it. The body corporate is a legal person with its own obligations, separate and distinct from those of individual lot owners. Thus, the vendors were not under any obligation to ensure that the body corporate was in a position to provide responses in respect of the items listed in s 206(2) of the Act, despite the vendors managing the affairs of the body corporate.

5. Additionally, the evident policy of the Act in relation to the protection of buyers of lots, is that buyers should be told "what they are getting into" in terms of the state of the affairs of the body corporate. It is not that buyers should be given a guarantee that the affairs of the body corporate have been conducted in accordance with the Act.

6. Finally, the buyer has a right to terminate pursuant to s 206(7) if the seller does not provide a s 206(1) disclosure statement. However, the effect of s 206(4) and 206(8) is that even if the disclosure statement contains inaccuracies, it is still a "disclosure statement" for the purposes of s 206(1).

7. Indemnity costs should be awarded because none of the grounds of appeal were faintly arguable.

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

CJ Carrigan (instructed by PHV Law Solicitors) for the appellants.

PL O'Shea SC, with JW Peden (instructed by Flower & Hart Lawyers) for the respondents.

Before: Keane, Muir and Fraser JJA.

Keane JA: I agree with the reasons of Muir JA, and with the orders proposed by his Honour. Because the making of an order for indemnity costs is somewhat out of the ordinary in terms of the practice of the Court,[1] I propose to state my reasons for concluding that the appellants' argument is so entirely lacking in substance as to warrant the making of an order for costs on the indemnity basis. Gratefully accepting the summary of facts and issues by Muir JA, I proceed directly to a consideration of the appellants' argument.

2. The appellants' argument on the appeal was that their purported termination of the contract was authorised by s 206(7) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) ("the Act") by reason of the respondent's "substantial non-compliance" with s 206(2) of the Act. This non-compliance was said to flow from the fact that the respondent's answers in the disclosure statement reflected the absence of information which should have been available had the affairs of the body corporate been properly administered.

3. The appellants urge that a broad view should be taken of the provisions of s 206(2) of the Act because they are intended to protect consumers. They emphasise that the objects of the Act include s 4(g) and (h), which are in the following terms:

> "(g) to provide an appropriate level of consumer protection for owners and intending buyers of lots included in community title schemes;
> (h) to ensure accessibility of information about community scheme issues".

4. The appellants' argument fails, however, to articulate how the objects of the Act alter the operation of the plain words of the Act. No matter how generous an operation the words of s 206(2) of the Act are given, it is not possible to perceive any legislative intention to impose on a lot owner an obligation to create the kind of information required to be disclosed by s 206.

5. Section 206 of the Act both creates, and determines the limits of, a vendor's obligation of disclosure of various categories of information. The generation and maintenance of these categories of information is an obligation imposed, not upon an individual lot owner (the vendor referred to in s 206), but upon the body corporate pursuant to s 93 to s 95, and s 143 to s 147 inclusive of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Standard Module) Regulation 1997 (Qld). If there is no information created by the body corporate in relation to a particular item mentioned in s 206, an answer of "not applicable" by a vendor is accurate, and the vendor's obligation of disclosure under s 206 is satisfied to that extent.

6. The appellants' argument overlooks, both the role assigned by the Act specifically to the body corporate, and the crucial legal distinction between a corporation and the individuals who control it, a distinction that has been firmly established in our law since the decision of the House of Lords in Salomon v Salomon & Co Ltd,[2] and which is observed by the Act and its subordinate legislation. The body corporate is a legal person with its own obligations, separate and distinct from those of individual lot owners. The appellants' argument proceeds in disregard of this fundamental distinction.

7. The contention originally pleaded by the appellants in an apparent endeavour to overcome this problem was that the respondent had failed to exercise reasonable care to ensure that the body corporate was in a position to provide responses in respect of the items listed in s 206 of the Act. For the learned trial judge to have upheld that contention would have required her Honour to add to the obligation of disclosure expressly created by s 206 of the Act, an obligation to exercise care with a view to ensuring that they will be able to comply with this obligation of disclosure. Her Honour correctly rejected that contention.

8. The first problem with the argument put to the learned trial judge is that the Act does not confer a right of termination by reason of a lot owner/vendor's non-compliance with this super-added obligation. The second problem with the appellants' pleaded contention is that it depends upon the proposition that the respondent was under an obligation to all future purchasers to exercise reasonable care to ensure that the body corporate would be in a position to provide a fulsome disclosure of the matters referred to in s 206 of the Act. That proposition is not stated in the text of the Act, but is said to be an inference from the evident policy of the Act to protect purchasers of units. This process of reasoning is flawed technically, and also it misconceives the policy of the Act in relation to the protection of purchasers of units.

9. The technique of the common law, whereby a judge analyses past decisions to identify the principle which underlies and explains those decisions and then applies that principle to a new set of facts, does not apply to the interpretation of a statute. In the interpretation of a statute one does not seek to distil a general policy which one then applies without regard to the language of the statute. The striking of the relevant "policy balance" is effected by the words used by the legislature, not by the judge generalising the perceived policy of the statute according to his or her own lights.

10. In any event, the evident policy of the Act, in relation to the protection of purchasers of lots, is that purchasers should be told "what they are getting into" in terms of the state of the affairs of the body corporate: it is not that purchasers should be given a guarantee that the affairs of the body corporate have been conducted in accordance with the Act. To subject a lot owner's right of alienation of a lot to an obligation to use his or her voting entitlements to ensure that the body corporate has performed its statutory functions would be to fetter the proprietary rights of lot owners in a way which would be so startling, as a matter of policy, as to require the clearest expression of legislative intention. The Act gives not the faintest hint of any such intention. Further, while lot owners are entitled to participate in the management of the body corporate, the Act does not oblige individual lot owners to exercise their voting rights, and certainly not to ensure that the affairs of the body corporate are conducted in a particular way.[3]

On the hearing of the appeal, the appellants seemed to eschew reliance upon the assertion in their pleadings that the respondent was under some duty to potential purchasers of a lot to exercise reasonable care to ensure the quality of responses to the queries raised by s 206 of the Act. The appellants continued to urge, however, the proposition that a lot owner is obliged by the language of s 206(2), as understood in the light of other provisions of the Act, to bring about the state of affairs necessary to enable substantive responses to be made by way of disclosure.

12. There is simply no warrant for amending the language of the Act in the way the appellants would have it. The argument advanced for the appellants on appeal suffers from some of the same fundamental flaws as the pleaded case, in that it fails to recognise, first, that the functions of information creation and retention are not required by the Act to be performed by owners of individual lots, but by a separate legal person, the body corporate, and, secondly, that the entitlement of a lot owner to sell his or her lot is not made conditional upon the performance by the body corporate of its functions under the Act and applicable subordinate legislation.

13. In my respectful opinion, this appeal was always bound to fail. The pursuit of the appeal was distinctly unreasonable. The successful respondents have been obliged to incur the costs of resisting an appeal which was, as was said in Smits v Tabone; Blue Coast Yeppoon Pty Ltd v Tabone,[4] "wholly without any arguable merit." The respondents should, therefore, receive as full an indemnity for their costs as the Court is empowered to award. Accordingly, I am of the opinion that the appeal should be dismissed with the respondent's costs to be paid by the appellants on the indemnity basis.

Muir JA: The appellants entered into a written Contract dated 19 March 2005 under which they agreed to purchase from Professor & Mrs Chan a block of nine flats located at Toorak Road, Hamilton for a price of $2,715,000. Professor Chan became incapable of managing his financial affairs in 2004 and, since that time, the respondent, Ms Winn, pursuant to an order of the Guardianship and Administration Tribunal, acted as his administrator for all financial matters. Prior to the entering into of the Contract, the appellants were given a disclosure statement in respect of the property in purported compliance with the respondents' obligations under s 206(1) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld).

15. By a letter from their solicitors dated 1 April 2005 to the respondents, the appellants purported to terminate the Contract in reliance on a number of alleged breaches of s 206 of the Act in respect of the disclosure statement. The Act applies, as a building units plan had been registered in respect of the building under the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 (Qld). The respondents' solicitors, in a letter to the appellants' solicitors dated 20 April 2005, gave notice that the respondents terminated the Contract in consequence of the appellants' alleged wrongful repudiation of it. Proceedings commenced by the appellants against the respondents on 31 May 2005 were tried in the Supreme Court in February and March 2007. The appellants' claims were dismissed and judgment on the respondents' counterclaim in the sum of $663,311.23 was given in their favour.

16. The appellants appealed against these orders.

The issues for determination

17. The notice of appeal contains a number of grounds but the appellants' counsel, in his outline of submissions and in argument, identified the issues for determination as—

> (a) whether the respondents complied with s 206 of the Act in giving the appellants a disclosure statement for the sale of the property; and
> (b) if there was non-compliance with s 206, whether that entitled the appellants to terminate the Contract on 1 April 2005 pursuant to s 206(7) of the Act.

18. The questions for determination thus concern the construction of s 206 and the application of that provision to the disclosure statement provided by the respondents to the appellants in purported compliance with the respondents' obligations under s 206.

[140632]

The relevant provisions of the Act

19. Section 206 of the Act relevantly provides:

>
> (1) The seller (the seller) of a lot included in a community titles scheme (including the original owner of scheme land, or a mortgagee exercising a power of sale of the lot) must give a person (the buyer) who proposes to buy the lot, before the buyer enters into a contract (the contract) to buy the lot, a disclosure statement.
> (2) The disclosure statement must—
>
> (a) state the name, address and contact telephone number for—
>
> (i) the secretary of the body corporate; or > (ii) if it is the duty of a body corporate manager to act for the body corporate for issuing body corporate information certificates — the body corporate manager; and
> (b) state the amount of annual contributions currently fixed by the body corporate as payable by the owner of the lot; and
> (c) if the seller is the original owner and the contribution schedule lot entitlements for each lot included in the scheme are not equal — state the reason stated in the community management statement for the lot entitlements not being equal; and
> (d) identify improvements on common property for which the owner is responsible; and
> (e) list the body corporate assets required to be recorded on a register the body corporate keeps; and
> (f) identify the regulation module applying to the scheme; and
> (g) state whether there is a committee for the body corporate or a body corporate manager is engaged to perform the functions of a committee; and > (h) include other information prescribed under the regulation module applying to the scheme.
>
> (3) The disclosure statement must be signed by the seller or a person authorised by the seller.
> (4) The disclosure statement must be substantially complete.

(7) If the contract has not already been settled, the buyer may cancel the contract if —

(a) the seller has not complied with subsection (1); or
(b) the seller has not complied with subsection (5) or (6), whichever is applicable.

(8) The seller does not fail to comply with subsection (1) merely because the disclosure statement, although substantially complete as at the day the contract is entered into, contains inaccuracies."

20. Paragraphs 4 (a), (f) and (g) of s 4 of the Act, upon which the appellants place reliance, provide:

"4 Secondary objects

The following are the secondary objects of this Act—

(a) to balance the rights of individuals with the responsibility for self management as an inherent aspect of community titles schemes;

(f) to provide bodies corporate with the flexibility they need in their operations and dealings to accommodate changing circumstances within community titles schemes;
(g) to provide an appropriate level of consumer protection for owners and intending buyers of lots included in community titles schemes;

…"

21. A copy of the disclosure statement is Annexure A to the primary judge's reasons. It is now reproduced:

[140635]

The appellants' criticisms of the primary judge's approach to the construction of s 206

22. The appellants' counsel, in his written submissions, criticised the primary judge's approach to the construction of s 206 as failing to:

(a) have regard to the secondary objects in paragraphs (a), (f) and (g) of s 4 of the Act;
(b) have regard to s 318 of the Act;
(c) construe the Act as a whole;

(d) have sufficient regard to the words "complying with" and "The statement must" in s 206(1) and s 206(2) respectively.

The correct approach to the construction of s 206(2)

23. It is difficult to discern what relevance paragraphs (a) and (f) of s 4 have to the construction of s 206. Section 318, which prevents persons from contracting out of the Act's provisions and from waiving rights under it, would also seem to provide no particular assistance in the construction of s 206. Paragraph (g) of s 4 shows that one of the objects of the Act, and one may safely infer, of s 206 is to afford protection to the purchasers of lots in a community titles scheme.

24. The meaning of a statutory provision is to be determined "by reference to the language of the instrument viewed as a whole"[5] . The Court's role is "to construe the relevant provision so that it is consistent with the language and purpose of all the provisions of the statute" and the process of construction "begins by examining the context of the provision that is being construed."[6]

25. Section 206 is in Pt 1 of ch 5 of the Act which is concerned with the sale of lots. Section 207 provides that a contract for the sale of a lot includes the disclosure statement and s 208 provides that the buyer may rely on the information in the disclosure statement "as if the seller had warranted its accuracy." Section 209 provides for the circumstances in which inaccuracies in a disclosure statement permit a buyer to cancel the contract. Part 2 of ch 5 is concerned with the sale of proposed lots. Part 3 implies warranties into contracts for the sale of lots and prescribes the circumstances in which a breach of warranty gives a right on the part of the buyer to terminate the contract. Division 2 of Pt 2 of ch 4 provides for access to a body corporate's records by purchasers of lots and other interested persons. By these sections and others, the Act makes quite specific provision for the protection of buyers of lots in community title schemes.

26. Section 14A(1) of the Acts' Interpretation Act 1954 (Qld) relevantly provides:

> "(1) In the interpretation of a provision of a Act, the interpretation that would best achieve the purpose of the Act is to be preferred to any other interpretation."

27. However, neither s 14A nor the purposive approach to construction, authorises a departure from the grammatical or literal meaning of a statute, where that meaning gives effect to the purpose or object of the statutes.[7] The court's role is one of construction not legislation.[8] As subsequent discussion shows, the construction of s 206 advanced by the appellants is inconsistent with the grammatical or literal meaning of the words of s 206 and, far from best achieving the purpose of the Act, would be productive of some quite improbable results.

The disclosure statement

28. In a number of cases, the third column of the statement has been completed by inserting the words "not applicable". An explanation for these entries and some of the others is provided by the notation on the form:

> "NB Body Corporate not being formally operated as all lots owned by Huo Yen Francis Chan and Amy Chan Kung Wai Ying."

29. In her reasons the primary judge explained:

> "[6] Because they retained ownership of all of the units in the building, Professor and Mrs Chan managed the building and ran the affairs of the body corporate informally, without complying with the requirements of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act. They endeavoured to visit the property once a year. They left the payment of recurring expenses such as electricity, gardening, rubbish removal and the servicing of fire extinguishers to Harcourts, who met these expenses out of rent receipts. Communications with the insurer also went through Harcourts. Annual > meetings of the body corporate were held in Hong Kong, but these were not always conducted as they should have been under the legislation. There was no administrative fund or sinking fund established, and no annual contributions were set. (footnotes removed)"[9]

The substance of the appellants' contentions concerning the alleged deficiencies in the disclosure statement

30. The appellants' contentions concerning non-compliance with s 206 proceed on the premise that the section imposes a positive obligation on the seller of a lot, not merely to do the things which the subsection (2) requires, but to complete the disclosure statement by inserting the information which would have been available for inclusion in the statement had there been compliance with the Act and the provisions of the Standard Module[10] . For example, s 9(5) of the Standard Module requires bodies corporate to have a secretary. The argument advanced is to the effect that if the subject body corporate had no secretary, the respondents as "seller" would be in breach of the requirements of s 206(2)(a) if the disclosure statement failed to state the name, address and contact telephone numbers for the non-existent secretary. In other words, the disclosure statement must be completed, not by reference to the true facts, but by reference to what the facts would have been had there been compliance with the legislation. It seemed to be argued in the alternative, at least by inference, that where there is no secretary and the information specified in s 206(2) cannot be inserted, the disclosure statement cannot comply with s 206(2)(a)(i).

Construction of s 206(2)

31. The appellants' construction of s 206(2) pays little or no attention to its terms. The subsection makes provision for matters to be stated in a document by the seller of a lot. The obligation is thus imposed on a person who, except in comparatively few cases, will have no control of the body corporate or its committee and who will thus be unable to ensure compliance by the body corporate with the requirements of the Act. It is thus unlikely that s 206(2) contemplated that a vendor would fail to meet the requirements of sub-section (2) by accurately stating the facts pertaining to that requirement. But the more obvious difficulty with the appellants' construction is that sub-section (2), in plain terms, merely requires the provision of the information which it specifies.

32. The role of s 206 is to provide information to enable the purchaser to make an informed decision on whether to proceed with the contract. The section imposes obligations on vendors, not on Bodies Corporate. It is thus an unlikely construction of s 206(2) that each of its requirements cannot be satisfied by a true statement of the factual position in relation to that requirement. It follows from the foregoing that where, for example, the disclosure statement requires the "name, address and contact telephone number for … the secretary of the Body Corporate" to be stated if there is no secretary, an appropriate entry in the disclosure statement will be "there is no secretary". So, too, with the requirement to state "the amount of annual contributions currently fixed by the Body Corporate as payable by the owner of the lot". If no such contributions have been fixed, irrespective of the requirements of the Act or the Standard Module, an appropriate response will be to the effect that none have been fixed.

33. The right of termination conferred by s 206(7) is conferred, relevantly, for non-compliance by the seller with s 206 (1). That sub-section requires the giving of the disclosure statement before the entering into of a contract for the sale and purchase of a relevant lot or lots. The effect of sub-sections (4) and (8) is that a document which does not comply fully with the requirements of sub-section (2) nevertheless meets the description of a "disclosure statement" for the purposes of sub-section (1) as long as it is "substantially complete as at the day the Contract is entered into". The fact that it contains inaccuracies does not prevent it from being a "disclosure statement" for the purposes of sub-section (1).[11]

34. The disclosure statement, with one exception, contained a response to each of the matters listed in s 206(2). The exception is that there is no entry with statement opposite "Information prescribed under applicable Regulation Module." There was no such prescription.

The construction of s 206(2)(h)

35. One of the alleged inadequacies of the disclosure statement is that it fails to include "other information prescribed under the Regulation module applying to the scheme". It is common ground that the applicable module is the Standard Module. It provides that a body corporate must:

> "(a) prepare and keep a roll containing information including names and addresses of the original owner; the contribution schedule entitlement of each lot; the interest schedule lot entitlement of each lot; name and address of current owners of each lot; prescribed particulars relating to any mortgagee in possession of a lot.[12]
> (b) a register of Body Corporate assets;[13]
> (c) a register of each engagement by the Body Corporate of a person as Body Corporate Manager or Service Contractor and each authorisation of a person as a letting agent;[14]
> (d) a register recording each authorisation for a person as a letting agent;[15]
> (e) a register recording each authorisation for a service Contractor or letting agent to occupy a particular part of common property;[16]
> (f) a register of allocations made under any exclusive use by-law;[17] "

36. The appellants' contention is that all of the information required to be brought into existence and/or kept by the body corporate under s 143–s 147 inclusive, must be set out in the disclosure statement, or, at least, referred to in it. The argument misunderstands the obligation imposed by s 206(2)(h). That provision merely acknowledges the possibility that a section or sections in an appropriate module might prescribe that information additional to that already specified in s 206(2), be included in disclosure statements. If the appellants' contentions were to be accepted, it would follow that the disclosure statement would need to contain, not only the very substantial body of information required by s 143–147 of the Standard Module, but the information contained in the books, records, accounts, minutes and correspondence of the body corporate.[18] That would be an improbable construction of a provision which, on its face, is limited in scope and is designed to impart quite specific information of practical value to a purchaser of a lot. Another section of the Act, s 205, enables a purchaser to inspect body corporate records or to obtain copies of records.

Analysis of the disclosure statement and the adequacy of its content

37. In her reasons the primary judge set out the particulars of breach of s 206 listed in paragraph 5 (d) of the Amended Statement of Claim and her findings in respect of them are as follows[19] :

> "[45] …
> (i) that there were no body corporate records, informal or otherwise. Section 206 imposes no obligation to maintain records. In any event, there were body corporate records, many of them in evidence.
> (ii) that there was no person listed as acting formally or informally for the management of the body corporate interests or property. Section 206 does not require the statement to include this.
> (iii) that there were no annual or any contributions fixed to be payable by the lots within the scheme. The statement was correct.
> (iv) that there was no identification of improvements or otherwise on the common property of the body corporate. The statement was correct.
> (v) that there were no body corporate assets listed. There were none to be listed.
> (vi) that there was no identification of the relevant regulation module applying to the scheme. The Standard Regulation Module was identified.
> (vii) that there was no listing of any person or persons acting formally or informally for the body corporate or who performed the functions of the body corporate committee. Section 206 does not require the statement to include this.
> (viii) that there was no s 206 Body Corporate and Community Management

> Act statement, formal or informal, available. This is an extraordinary allegation in the face of exhibit 2. If it means that the statement was so defective as to be a nullity, I reject the contention.
> (ix) that there were no details as to the insurance or insurance policy of the building apart from a notation allegedly endorsed thereon. Section 206 does not require this. In any event, the endorsement on the policy was set out in the disclosure statement provided.
> (x) that there was no aggregate interest schedule, formal or informal, available or in existence. Section 206 does not require this.
> (xi) that there was no lot entitlement schedule, formal or informal, available or in existence. This is incorrect; it was part of the registered building units plan.
> (xii) that there was no differentiation, formal or informal, between common and other property in the scheme. This is incorrect; see the registered building units plan.
> (xiii) that there was a body corporate in name only and for all intents and purposes did not operate as a body corporate, formally or informally or at all. There was a body corporate and it did operate, albeit informally. For example, it held insurance cover and an electricity account.
> (xiv) the defects pleaded in paragraph 4(d)(iii). This is incomprehensible.
> (xv)–(xxi) Doing the best I can to understand the structure of the pleading, these particulars all relate to non-disclosure of documents about the condition of the building, correspondence with the insurer, and rectification costs. None of them was required to be disclosed under s 206. (footnotes removed)"

38. In the above passage from her reasons, the primary judge carefully addressed each of the alleged breaches of s 206 particularised in paragraph 5 of the Amended Statement of Claim, even though the connection between some of the particulars and the requirements of s 206(2) were difficult to discern. Neither in his outline of submissions, nor in oral argument, did counsel for the appellants attempt to expose any errors in the primary judge's findings in relation to those particulars.[20] There is one qualification which, perhaps, ought be made to this statement.

39. Section 206(2) requires the statement to state the name, address and contact telephone number for the secretary of the body corporate or the body corporate manager where it was the duty of the body corporate manager to act for the body corporate for issuing body corporate information certificates.

40. It was argued that the respondent, Mrs Chan, was the secretary of the body corporate at relevant times and that there was a body corporate manager. Consequently, it was submitted, the disclosure statement should have been filled out accordingly. If the contention was correct the disclosure statement would have been inaccurate but it would not follow that it was not "substantially complete". The appellant's case did not rely on inaccuracies in the statement. This argument, therefore, cannot advance the appellant's case but even if it could, it has no sound foundation in fact.

41. There was no evidence to support the contention that there was a body corporate manager at the relevant time, let alone a manager whose duty it was to act for the body corporate for issuing body corporate information certificates.

42. The argument which relies on the failure to state the name, address and contact number of the secretary suffers from a few difficulties. No such allegation appears in the particulars of breach of s 206. Consequently, the primary judge was not invited to address the matter and she did not. The contention that Mrs Chan was the secretary at the date of the disclosure statement is inconsistent with the appellants' pleaded case: see paragraphs 5(d)(vii) and (xiii). Mrs Chan was not cross-examined on this point or even in relation to the accuracy of the contents of the disclosure statement.

43. The appellants' counsel conceded that the notes of the annual meeting dated 30 July 2004[21] was "the only document that potentially relates to the relevant year." In it Mrs Chan was described as “chairperson” and a Mr Kevin Chan as “member”. The document made no reference to the body corporate secretary. The argument advanced, however, was that it could be inferred from the document’s failure to refer to a secretary or to any change in that regard that Mrs Chan continued as secretary. It was contended that “Notes of the Annual General Meeting”[22] on 10 December 2003 showed Mrs Chan to be the secretary. The document contained the entry:

> “DIRECTORS PRESENT:
>
> • Amy Chan, Chairperson
> • Francis HY Chan, secretary
> • Kevin Chan, member”

44. Paragraph 8 of the notes provided:

> “All directors agreed to stay on to be reappointed. Francis Chan will be the chairperson and Amy Chan will be the secretary, and Kevin Chan will remain director for the next term of service.” (emphasis added)

45. The terminology used and the participation of non-proprietors is consistent either with the respondent’s contention that the “Body Corporate [was] not being formally operated” or with the conclusion that the meeting, although relating to the subject Body Corporate, was a meeting of directors of another corporation. Whatever the participants in these two meetings intended, the meetings were not meetings of the proprietors of lots in a community titles scheme.

46. These documents do not make out a case not pleaded and not argued below.

47. After completing her analysis of the merits of the allegations of breaches of s 206 particularised in paragraph 5 of the Statement of Claim, the primary judge briefly discussed the scheme of the relevant provisions of the Act and concluded “… the disclosure statement was substantially complete.” There was no challenge to that finding except on the basis of the appellants’ erroneous construction of s 206 and as just discussed. It follows that the appellants have failed to establish a breach of s 206 which entitled them to terminate the Contract.

48. For the sake of completeness, however, it is proposed to consider paragraphs 5(d)(i) to (xiii) with a view to ascertaining whether the primary judge’s conclusions in paragraph [45] of her reasons are correct. The letter beside each Roman numeral below is a reference to the paragraph of s 206(2) to which the nominated particular appears to relate.

> (ii)(a) The evidence was to the effect that no committee of the body corporate was functioning, no body corporate manager had been engaged[23] , and Mrs Chan, for most purposes, managed the building in a general sense[24] . The allegation is not in respect of a requirement of the Act and the disclosure statement in respect of (a) is adequate.
> (iii)(b) The disclosure statement correctly stated “nil”. No annual contributions had been fixed.
> (iv)(d) The disclosure statement correctly stated, “not applicable”. The evidence did not disclose the existence of any improvements covered by (d).
> (v)(e) Again, “not applicable” was stated in the disclosure statement. “None” would have been a preferable description but the words used in the context of the wording of the form as a whole conveyed the same meaning. The evidence did not disclose the existence of any assets of the requisite class.
> (vi)(f) The primary judge’s findings are correct and unchallenged.
> (vii)(g) The response was “no committee or manager Body Corporate not being operated formally”. The response was accurate.
> (viii) The primary judge explained the oddity of this particular.
> (i)(ix)(x)(xi) and (xiii) None of these matters are mentioned in or required by s 206(2).
> (xii) This particular has nothing to do with s 206(2) and, as the primary judge pointed out, the allegation is wrong.

49. The respondents argue that the appellants neither pleaded nor conducted their case at trial on the basis of a right to terminate under s 206. It is submitted that had the case relying on s 206 been pleaded and argued on the trial, the respondents "would (and could) have dealt with that claim …".

50. The Amended Statement of Claim does not make out a case of termination of the Contract pursuant to s 206 paragraph (5)(d) which contains the particulars of the alleged breach of s 206, is itself a particular of an allegation that certain representations were false, misleading and deceptive and/or negligent. The only express allegation of termination is contained in paragraph 9 which states:

> "As a result of the breaches aforesaid, the plaintiffs, by letter dated 1 April 2005, had as it was entitled to so do;
>
> (a) terminated the Contract pursuant to and within the time limited for same under s 224 of the … Act;
> (b) demanded of the defendants the return of the deposit."

51. Paragraph 6 of the pleading, however, contains a discrete allegation of breach of s 206 in the manner particularised in paragraph 5(d). The trial commenced on 26 February 2007. On 8 February the solicitors for the respondents wrote to the solicitors for the appellants noting, accurately, that the relief claimed was based only on a purported termination under s 224 of the Act. The letter continued:

> "We put you on notice that we, and our clients, have prepared the defendants' case based on the claim as pleaded and, if your clients wish to raise matters so as to rely upon either s 206 or s 209, then we would expect that any amended pleading be provided to us by no later than 4pm on Friday 9 February 2007."

52. In his opening of the defendants' case, senior counsel for the respondents informed the primary judge that the appellants relied only on s 224 of the Act. Counsel for the appellants responded that s 206 was relied on as well. An argument then ensued. The letter of 8 February 2007 was tendered in the course of this debate. The primary judge was not invited to rule on the point and did not do so.

53. In their written submissions on the conclusion of the trial, counsel for the respondents maintained the position that the appellants made no claim under s 206 or s 209 of the Act. Unfazed by the respondents' stance that the appellants would be held to their pleaded case, the appellants' counsel addressed on the basis that the Contract had been terminated, inter alia, under s 206 of the Act. The primary judge, in her reasons, did not deal with the respondents' objection to the appellants straying outside their pleaded case, choosing to address the appellants' argument based on s 206 on its merits. Her Honour thus either implicitly did not uphold the respondents' contentions concerning the scope of the appellants' pleading in relation to s 206, or concluded that the appellants' argument had no merit and could thus be disposed of without the need to make a ruling.

54. Whether the appellants should have been permitted to argue that the Contract was terminated pursuant to s 206 at first instance and whether they should be permitted to raise that argument on appeal depends on whether, had the issue been raised properly at first instance, "evidence could have been given which by any possibility could have prevented the point from succeeding".[25] Senior counsel for the respondents argued, heroically in my view, that the respondents could well have adduced other evidence had they not met the appellant's pleaded case. Having regard to the scope of the pleaded allegations, I consider it improbable that an amendment to the pleading would have necessitated the calling of further evidence, assuming a conventional approach to the construction of s 206. The primary judge, it would seem, was of that opinion. However, in view of the fact that none of the grounds of appeal have been made out, it is unnecessary to delve further into the pleading question.

Conclusion

55. For the above reasons I would dismiss the appeal with costs. The costs should be on the indemnity basis; none of the grounds of appeal were faintly arguable[26] . The inadequacy of the appellants' case had been exposed by the primary judge's reasons. The appeal, with the possible exception of the diversion in relation to the alleged failure to state the particulars of the secretary or manager, took the form of a construction argument which studiously ignored the words required to be construed. The diversion, as has been explained, was conspicuously lacking in any factual foundation. Nor was it within the case pleaded or advanced at first instance.

Fraser JA: The relevant statutory provisions, the issues in the appeal, and the factual background are set out in the reasons of Muir JA, which I have had the advantage of reading and with which I agree.

[140641]

57. The critical issue concerns the construction of s 206(2) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld).

58. The obligation imposed upon the seller of a lot by s 206(1) is to "give … a disclosure statement" which, as s 206(2) requires, must "state", "identify", "list" and "include" information about specified matters concerning the body corporate and its affairs.

59. The effect of the appellants' arguments is that, by those words, s 206(2) imposes obligations upon the seller, firstly, to cause the body corporate to remedy any relevant non-compliance with statutory obligations imposed upon it by other provisions in the Act and then, secondly, to state information about that changed state of affairs in the disclosure statement.

60. That propounded meaning of those words is not open. Their natural and literal meaning is to require only that the seller give the buyer information about the specified topics: if the body corporate is in breach of a relevant provision of the Act, so much will appear from the seller's disclosure statement. That meaning makes sense, it is not contradicted by any other provision, it gives effect to the object of consumer protection expressed in s 4(g) of the Act, and it is not inconsistent with any other object of the Act.

61. For those reasons and for the reasons given by Muir JA and Keane JA with which I agree, the construction of s 206 propounded by the appellants must be rejected. The appeal should be dismissed with costs.

62. In my opinion, those costs should be assessed on the indemnity basis. The learned trial judge rejected the construction propounded by the appellants because it was not what s 206 provided. In this appeal, the fundamental task for the appellant was to demonstrate error in that decision.[27] Presumably because of the hopelessness of that task, the appellants' counsel did not essay the attempt. No submission was made that explained how the words of s 206 could accommodate the construction the appellants propounded; nor did the appellants' counsel articulate any canon of construction or identify any authority that even arguably justified the substantial revision of s 206 necessary for success by the appellants. The particular arguments that were advanced in support of the appeal were hopeless, for the reasons given by Muir JA.

63. I also agree with the reasons of Keane JA for concluding that an indemnity costs order is appropriate here.

64. I agree with the orders proposed by Muir JA.

(2008) LQCS ¶90-143 Court citation: [2007] QCA 453

Supreme Court of Queensland - Court of Appeal

Decision delivered on 21 December 2007

Community Schemes — Exclusive use by-laws — Where the respondent was a body corporate for a community title scheme in respect of four lots in a commercial building — Where the use of common property at the rear of the building was the subject of a dispute — Whether the District Court failed to correctly apply and interpret s 60 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997: s 60.

The applicants were the registered owners of Lot 3 in respect of a four lot commercial premises situated in Brisbane. Each lot received a right of exclusive use of an area situated at the rear of the property.

The first Community Management Statement recorded in respect of the premises contained a "community management statement notation" from the local government (being an endorsement by local government to the effect that it has noted the Community Management Statement). However, neither the second or the third Community Management Statement recorded for the scheme contained that notation.

By-law 15 set out in the first Community Management Statement provided for the exclusive use area to be used for car parking purposes only. The substance of the by-law essentially remained unchanged in the second Community Management Statement.

However, by-law 19 in the third Community Management Statement altered the way in which the common property was allocated into the exclusive use areas. Instead of one general area with designated car-parks, each occupier was allocated that part of the common property which abutted the rear of the unit he or she occupied, so that each had the use of a quarter of the common property. The by-law also removed the restriction on the use of the exclusive use area for car parking only.

Part (c) of by-law 19 did however, provide that:

> "(c) Owners may only use an exclusive use area for the purposes permitted by the town planning scheme of the local government and any other federal, state or municipal authorities having jurisdiction in that regard and shall ensure that all necessary consents, permits and approvals are obtained before commencing such use".

The owners of Lot 1 subsequently indicated that they wished to operate a bar and restaurant on their lot, including on their exclusive use area. Their intention was discussed at an extraordinary general meeting held by the respondent body corporate and three resolutions were passed, being resolutions 2, 3 and 4. The applicants were the only dissenters. Resolution 2 consented to improvements being made to the exclusive use area of Lot 1. Resolution 3 consented to the use of Lot 1 and its exclusive use area as a bar and licensed premises and Resolution 4 consented to certain alterations to Lot 1.

Before the adjudicator, the applicants had argued that the third Community Management Statement was invalid on the basis that it did not have the relevant local government notation on it as required by s 60 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (BCCM Act) and as a consequence, any motions passed by the body corporate in reliance on this Statement (ie resolutions 2 and 4) were also invalid.

Section 60(1) of the BCCM Act precludes the recording of a community management statement without a "community management statement notation". However, s 60(6) (as it existed at the relevant time) provided an exception to the above as follows:

> "Despite subsection (1), a new community management statement may be recorded without the endorsement on it of a community management statement notation if —
>
> > (a) there is no difference between the existing statement for the scheme and the new statement for any issue that the local government could have regard to for identifying an inconsistency mentioned in subsection (4) …"

Subsection 60(4) provided that:

> "(4) For a community titles scheme intended to be developed progressively , the local government is not required to endorse the notation on the proposed statement if there is an inconsistency between a provision of the statement and —
>
> > (a) a lawful requirement of, or an approval given by, the local government under the Planning Act; or
> > (b) the local government's planning scheme; or
> > (c) a lawful requirement of, or an approval given by, the local government under its planning scheme (emphasis added)."

The applicants argued that the exception to the requirement for a notation contained in s 60(6) did not apply, because the Community Management Statement had altered the car parking arrangements so as to contemplate tandem parking in each of the exclusive use areas. That meant that cars had to reverse onto the lane at the rear of the property in order to leave it. Those changes raised issues of conflict with the Brisbane City Council's Transport Access Parking and Servicing policy.

For the purposes of determining whether a s 60(6) exception applied, the adjudicator had identified two possible interpretations of s 60. The first was that s 60(6) required that regard be had to inconsistencies of the kind identified in s 60(4)(a), (b) and (c), whether or not the community title scheme was "intended to be developed progressively".

The second interpretation was that the reference to "an inconsistency mentioned in subsection 60" encompassed the whole of 60(4) so that it applied only to schemes "intended to be developed progressively". If the second interpretation was favoured, no relevant inconsistency would arise in this case as the community title scheme was not intended to be developed in such a way.

The adjudicator expressed a preference for the second interpretation, but made findings for the purposes of the first interpretation. On the first interpretation, the adjudicator reached the conclusion that a notation was not required because the difference between the Community Management Statements was not of a kind that would fall for consideration in respect of the matters set out in s 60(4)(a)(b) or (c). It was found that the third Community

[140644]

Management Statement did not contemplate parking in the exclusive use areas at all. Instead, the adjudicator noted that a plain reading of by-law 19 suggested that it is was for each owner to determine how and for what purpose their exclusive use areas were to be used (subject to them ensuring that any use complied with the relevant planning scheme and that they had all relevant approvals).

The adjudicator also concluded that there was merit in the argument that part (c) of by-law 19, prevented the arising of any inconsistency and hence of any s 60(4) issue.

The applicants' subsequent appeal to the District Court was also unsuccessful. The applicants then sought leave to appeal from the District Court's decision.

Held: Application for leave to appeal dismissed.

1. The District Court determined that the adjudicator was correct in her conclusion that part (c) of by-law 19 by restricting the use of the exclusive use areas to purposes permitted by the town planning scheme, precluded the arising of any inconsistency, and hence of any s 60(4) issue.

However, the applicants correctly argued on appeal to this court that this conclusion incorrectly focused attention on whether inconsistency had been precluded by the effect of the by-law and not on whether there were relevant differences between the two community management statements which could give rise to s 60(4) issues. Part (c) of by-law 19 could not be conclusive against any possibility of an inconsistency of the s 60(4) kind. It was still possible that other parts of the new Community Management Statement might raise an issue of inconsistency meeting one of the s 60(4) descriptions. In concluding otherwise, the District Court and the adjudicator were in error.

2. Despite the above, the adjudicator's view in this regard was independent of, and did not detract from, the finding that a relevant difference had not been identified. In making that finding, the adjudicator correctly directed attention to what the differences between the Statements were, and whether they were such as to raise a s 60(4) point.

McMurdo P, Holmes JA and Jones J:

Application for leave to appeal dismissed with costs

McMurdo P: The application for leave to appeal should be refused with costs for the reasons given by Holmes JA.

Holmes JA: The applicants seek leave to appeal from a decision of a District Court Judge upholding an adjudicator's determination made under s 289(2) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld). The respondent is the body corporate for a community title scheme in respect of four lots in a commercial building. The applicants have owned Lot 3 since 2003. At the rear of the building is common property; its use was the subject of the dispute before the adjudicator. The appeal for which the applicant sought leave raised, in essence, three grounds: that the learned judge below had erred in construction of s 60 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act and had made wrong findings in consequence; that she had not given adequate reasons for her conclusions relating to s 60; and that she had erred in failing to set aside the adjudicator's decision as made in breach of the rules of natural justice.

The relevant legislative provisions

3. Under the Body Corporate and Community Management Act, a community management statement is integral to a community title scheme. It performs a number of functions, which include identifying the subject property, providing schedules of lots which specify the entitlements and contributions applicable to each, and setting out the by-laws by which the community management scheme is administered and regulated.[1] A community management statement has no effect unless it is recorded by the Registrar of Titles under s 115K of the Land Title Act 1994 (Qld).[2] However, the Registrar is under no obligation to examine a community management statement to ensure its compliance with the statute's requirements, and recording does not lead any presumption that the statement is valid or enforceable.[3]

4. Section 60(1) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act precludes, with certain exceptions, the recording of a community management statement without a "community management statement notation": an endorsement by local government to the effect that it has noted the community management statement. It is one of the exceptions to that requirement which has presented difficulty here. At the time when this community management statement was recorded, s 60(6) provided:

> "(6) Despite subsection (1), a new community management statement may be recorded without the endorsement on it of a community management statement notation if —
>
> > (a) there is no difference between the existing statement for the scheme and the new statement for any issue that the local government could have regard to for identifying an inconsistency mentioned in subsection (4) …"

5. Subsection 60(4) provided:

> "(4) For a community titles scheme intended to be developed progressively, the local government is not required to endorse the notation on the proposed statement if there is an inconsistency between a provision of the statement and —
>
> > (a) a lawful requirement of, or an approval given by, the local government under the Planning Act; or
> > (b) the local government's planning scheme; or
> > (c) a lawful requirement of, or an approval given by, the local government under its planning scheme."

6. The language of s 60(6) does not make for an easy incorporation of the instances identified in s 60(4); but, in essence, the first subsection is directed at establishing whether any changes as between successive community management statements may have town planning implications to which the local government's attention should be drawn.

The community management statements

7. The first community management statement for this community title scheme was recorded in 1998. Its by-laws entitled the owners and occupiers of the lots in the scheme to "exclusive use and enjoyment for car parking" of areas identified on a schedule (Schedule E) and a sketch plan. The areas so identified were 10 designated car parks in the common property at the rear of the building. Each lot holder had two car spaces.

That community management statement was replaced by another in 2000,[4] the relevant by-law of which (By-law 19) did not alter the parking arrangement. However, Schedule E was changed slightly in its form and now bore a sub-heading > "Exclusive use — car spaces

>
> Lots affected:"

The body of Schedule E then identified the lots and the exclusive use area allocated to each by reference to the sketch plan.

8. On 22 November 2002, the respondent body corporate approved another community management statement. By-law 19 was amended so as to alter the way in which the common property was allocated into exclusive use areas. Instead of one general area with designated car parks, each occupier was allocated that part of the common property which abutted the rear of the unit he or she occupied, so that each now had the use of a quarter of the common property in the form of a long narrow strip of land. No reference was now made to car parking. Instead, the by-law provided:

> "19. EXCLUSIVE USE
>
> (a) The Owner holding a grant of exclusive use shall be responsible at the Owner's expense for the performance of the duties of the Body Corporate as defined in Section 123(2) of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Standard Module) Regulation 1997.
>
> (b) The Owner holding a grant of exclusive use under the by-law may authorise the reallocation of any such exclusive use area from that Owner to any other Owner of a Lot in the community titles scheme subject to notice in writing to the Body Corporate from both Owners.

Schedule E, however, remained unaltered. The new community management statement was recorded on 11 July 2003.

9. The third community management statement did not contain any community management statement notation. In 2006, conflict arose between the lot holders when resolutions (against which the applicants voted) were passed permitting the holder of Lot 1 to make certain alterations to its premises. The effect was to allow Lot 1's owner to use its exclusive use area as an adjunct to a bar it was proposing to establish on its premises, for which it had lodged a development application with the Brisbane City Council. The dispute was referred to an adjudicator for resolution under Part 9 of the Act, the applicants contending that the resolutions relating to the use of the exclusive use area and the lot itself for the purposes of the bar were null and void, because the community management statement on which the resolutions were based was itself invalid for non-compliance with s 60. They sought declarations accordingly.

The adjudicator's decision

10. The applicants' argument before the adjudicator (to which they adhere) was that the exception contained in s 60(6) did not apply, because the community management statement had altered the car parking arrangements so as to contemplate tandem parking in each of the exclusive use areas. That meant that cars had to reverse onto the lane at the rear of the property in order to leave it. Those changes raised issues of conflict with the Brisbane City Council's Transport Access Parking and Servicing (TAPS) policy. The relevant parts of the TAPS policy were said to be ss 3.4, 6.2.1 and 6.8.1, which, respectively, regulated the construction of driveways so as to provide minimum site distances on egress; regulated car park design so as to provide for appropriate site distances in areas of potential pedestrian and vehicle conflict; and required a minimum width of 2.3 metres in at least a quarter of the available car park spaces.

11. The adjudicator had the difficult task of construing s 60. She identified two possible interpretations. The first was that s 60(6) required that regard be had to inconsistencies of the kind identified in ss 60(4)(a), (b) and (c), whether or not the community title scheme was "intended to be developed progressively". The second was that the reference to "an inconsistency mentioned in ss 60(4)" embraced the whole of sub-s (4), so that it applied only to schemes "intended to be developed progressively"; since this was not such a scheme, no relevant inconsistency would arise.

12. The adjudicator expressed a preference for the second interpretation, but made findings for the purposes of the first:

> "If I were to apply the first interpretation, I am not entirely persuaded that a relevant issue exists. While the applicants suggest that the Third CMS 'contemplates tandem parking', I am not of the view that the Third CMS necessarily contemplates parking in the exclusive use areas at all. By-law 19 [does] not indicate the exclusive use areas are intended for parking or for any other specific purpose. A plain reading of By-law 19 suggests it is for each owner to determine how and for what purpose their exclusive use areas is to be used, subject to them ensuring that any use complies with the relevant planning scheme and that they have all relevant approvals. Because the new By-law 19 does not specifically contemplate car parking, it arguably does not specifically contemplate tandem parking or any other particular form of parking arrangement."

She continued:

"Moreover, the applicants have provided no expert advice, other than their own opinion, that By-law 19 is contrary to a requirement or approval under the Planning Act or BCC planning scheme. Their claim is not supported by any opinion from an authority in planning law, or any evidence that the BCC considers that the Third CMS parking requirements are contrary to BCC requirements. They have also provided no evidence of the original development approval for the scheme and any requirements or approvals provided in respect of parking."

[140647]

13. The adjudicator reached the view that no notation was required. Giving her reasons in point form, she dealt first with the second possible interpretation of s 60(6)(a), and then went on to say:

- "If the first interpretation of subsection (6)(a) is correct, the applicants have not sufficiently convinced me that the difference in the two CMS is an issue that the BCC could consider.
- I consider that there is merit in the argument that the provision of clause (3) of By-law 19 provides coverage to the BCC for any issues arising under the planning provisions."

She dismissed the application to invalidate the statement and the resolutions.

14. In the course of giving her determination, the adjudicator noted the content of a letter dated 8 September 2006 from the Brisbane City Council. The solicitors for the owners of Lot 1 had written to the Council asking for an opinion as to whether it considered there was a requirement that the community management statement be endorsed. Originally the Council had indicated that it would give an opinion, but it advised in the letter of 8 September that it considered it inappropriate to do so: the query concerned a matter under the Body Corporate and Community Management Act, it related to an already recorded community management statement, and any debate about whether the community management statement was valid and enforceable without a local government notation was up to the Body Corporate and did not concern the Council. The adjudicator expressed her regret that no opinion was forthcoming on whether the changes in the third community management statement were inconsistent with the planning scheme.

The appeal to the District Court

15. A person aggrieved by an adjudicator's order may appeal to the District Court, but only on a question of law.[5] On the District Court appeal, the parties agreed that the Certificate of Readiness they had filed identified the issues. Those issues included two which remain relevant on this application: whether the adjudicator had erred by concluding that a difference between community management statements for the purposes of s 60(6)(a) required an actual inconsistency, as opposed to a difference which could give rise to a relevant issue of inconsistency; and whether she had failed to observe the rules of natural justice. (In investigating an application the adjudicator is not bound by the rules of evidence but must observe natural justice.)[6] The relief sought was that the appeal be allowed, the adjudicator's decision set aside and orders substituted declaring the various resolutions and the community management statement null and void.

16. On appeal, the applicants made these arguments. The adjudicator's preferred interpretation of s 60(6)(a) was wrong. Although she had posed the correct question for the alternative interpretation, namely, "was there a difference between the third CMS and the second CMS for an issue that the local government could have regard to for identifying such an inconsistency?", she had in fact addressed whether the community management statement was inconsistent with the terms of the Town Planning Scheme requirements or approval. Car parking arrangements were an issue which fell within s 60(4). The adjudicator's receipt of the letter from the solicitors for Lot 1's owner, without advising the applicants, gave rise to a reasonable apprehension of bias.

17. The learned District Court judge (consistently with a concession by the respondent) concluded that the second interpretation of s 60(6)(a) considered by the adjudicator was not open. Adopting the first interpretation, she decided that the adjudicator's approach to s 60(6) was correct. As to the question of whether the adjudicator's decision had been made in breach of the rules of natural justice, her Honour observed that, while it might have been preferable had the letter been disclosed, it did nothing more than confirm the Council's position that resolution of the notation question was best left to the adjudicator. Its receipt did not give rise to any reasonable apprehension of bias.

The District Court judge's "findings"

18. On this application, the applicants argued that the District Court Judge had wrongly found that the difference between the second and third community management statements was that the third community management statement did not limit the use of exclusive use areas to car parking. The applicants sought to argue that the finding was wrong, because the sub-heading to Schedule E still referred to car parking; the relevant difference, it was said, was the introduction of new car parking arrangements, which conflicted with the provisions of the TAPS policy.

19. But her Honour's reference to the extent of the difference appears under the heading "Background Facts". It is no more than a reiteration of what the adjudicator had found. The learned judge did not make the finding; she could not have been asked to do so on an appeal limited to questions of law, and nothing in the Certificate of Readiness, said to identify the issues, suggests that she was. The content of the respective community management statements involved, in this case, no construction question. It was a matter of fact, as was establishing in what respect they differed. The adjudicator having made the finding of fact as to what the difference between the statements was — that the amended By-law 19 did not indicate the exclusive use areas were intended for parking or for any other specific purpose — no appeal lay from it; and it is certainly not open for agitation in this Court.

The construction of s 60(6)

20. The question of law for the District Court judge was as to the correctness of the adjudicator's application of s 60(6). It was no longer contended that the second interpretation was sustainable, so the controversy was limited to whether her approach to the combined operation of ss 60(4) and (6) was correct.

21. The relevant portion of her Honour's judgment is as follows:

> "While the argument put forward by Counsel for the appellant, at first blush, certainly holds some attraction, I am unable to accept that submission. It ignores in my mind, the true meaning of s 60(6) and s 60(4) and its' intended effect, particularly when regard is had to s 60 as a whole. In this instance, clause 3 of by-law 19 specifically states that owners may only use an exclusive use area for the purposes permitted by the town planning scheme of the local government and other relevant bodies and shall ensure that all necessary consents, permits and approvals are obtained before commencing such use. The adjudicator was of the view that clause by-law 19 therefore covered the situation, whether it was accepted or not, that the use of that area might include tandem car parking arrangements, a matter relevant under the local government town planning scheme, clause (3) of by-law 19 would cover that situation together with any other situation where the proposed use might be of a kind that a relevant government body could have regard to for identifying whether there was an inconsistency between that provision in the 3rd CMS and any of the matters set out in s 60(4)(a), (b) or (c). While there is no case authority relating to the interpretation of s 60 of the Act which may have been of assistance, I am of the view that the adjudicator was correct in her approach to s 60 and as such, did not fall into error as asserted."

22. The thrust of that passage seems to be that the adjudicator was correct in her conclusion that Clause 3 of By-law 19 (by restricting use of exclusive use areas to purposes permitted by the town planning scheme for which any necessary consents, permits or approvals had been obtained) precluded the arising of any inconsistency, and hence of any s 60(4) issue. The applicants say, with some justice, that the conclusion suggests a focusing of attention, not on whether there were relevant differences between the two community management statements which could give rise to s 60(4) issues, but on whether inconsistency had been precluded by the effect of that clause.

23. By-law 19(3) could not, in my view, be conclusive against any possibility of an inconsistency of the s 60(4) kind. Whatever the sub-clause's practical effect, it was still possible that other parts of the new statement might raise an issue of inconsistency meeting one of the s 60(4) descriptions. In concluding otherwise, the learned judge and the adjudicator were, in my respectful opinion, in error. But the adjudicator's view in this regard was independent of, and did not detract from, her earlier conclusion that she was not satisfied that any relevant difference had been identified. In making that finding, she correctly directed her attention to what the differences between the statements were, and whether they were such as to raise a s 60(4) point.

24. Nor do I think that the reference to the applicants' having identified no conflict suggests that the adjudicator departed from that approach. It is true that the applicants were not required to identify inconsistency, as opposed to a difference between the statements in respect of an issue relevant to identifying inconsistency; but it is hard to see how the latter could be achieved without evidence as to what might give rise to an inconsistency. The observation as to the absence of that evidence does not demonstrate error.

The failure to give adequate reasons

25. The applicants complained that the learned District Court Judge had not provided sufficient reasons to explain why she preferred the adjudicator's interpretation of s 60 or why she had dismissed their argument that the adjudicator erred in approaching s 60 as if it required an actual inconsistency between the new statement and the relevant town planning scheme. There may be something to those complaints, but given the conclusion that the adjudicator made the necessary finding in accordance with the requirements of s 60(6)(a), they would not justify the granting of leave to appeal.

The natural justice argument

26. In respect of the natural justice argument, counsel for the applicants relied on statements in Kanda v Government of Malaya[7] and Re JRL; Ex parte CJL.[8] In the first, Lord Denning, delivering the Privy Council's opinion, said:

> "If the right to be heard is to be a real right which is worth anything, it must carry with it a right in the accused man to know the case which is made against him. He must know what evidence has been given and what statements have been made affecting him: and then he must be given a fair opportunity to correct or contradict them … It follows, of course, that the judge or whoever has to adjudicate must not hear evidence or receive representations from one side behind the back of the other. The court will not enquire whether the evidence or representations did work to his prejudice. Sufficient that they might do so."[9]

27. In Re JRL, Mason J had this to say:

> "[T]he receipt by a judge of a private communication seeking to influence the outcome of litigation before him places the integrity of the judicial process at risk. A failure to disclose that communication will seriously compromise the integrity of that process. On the other hand, although the terms of a subsequent disclosure by the judge of the communication and a statement of its effect in some, perhaps many, situations will be sufficient to dispel any reasonable apprehension that he might be influenced improperly in some way or other, subsequent disclosure will not always have this result. The circumstances of each case are all important. They will include the nature of the communication, the situation in which it took place, its relationship to the issues for determination and the nature of the disclosure made by the judge."[10]

28. Here, as the learned District Court Judge observed, it would have been better had the adjudicator informed the applicants that she had received the letter before proceeding to give her decision. But the Council letter did no more than decline to express an opinion. It did not amount to evidence or statements affecting the applicants, and it did not seek to influence the outcome of the litigation. The concerns identified in Kanda and Re JRL do not arise. Her Honour was right to conclude that there was no breach of natural justice in an undisclosed receipt of the letter.

[140650]

The application for leave to appeal raises no error of law warranting the intervention of this Court. I would dismiss it with costs.

Jones J: For the reasons expressed by Holmes JA I believe the application for leave to appeal should be dismissed.

(2008) LQCS ¶90-144 Court citation: [2007] QDC 006

District Court of Queensland

Decision delivered on 31 January 2007

Community Schemes — Dispute regarding selection of body corporate committee members — Whether owners of multiple lots entitled to nominate one eligible individual for each lot held — Whether Adjudicator erred in his interpretation of s 14(2) of Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 1997 — Whether Adjudicator wrongly relied on a passage in the explanatory notes to the 2003 amendments to s 14 without attempting to interpret the section itself — Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 1997: s 14(2).

The respondent was the co-owner of a lot in a community titles scheme and consequently a member of the body corporate. The applicant was the holder of a number of lots in the community titles scheme.

There was a long-standing dispute between the two parties about the composition of the body corporate committee. The respondent made two dispute resolution applications to the Commissioner for Body Corporate and Community Management, the second of which resulted in the orders made by an adjudicator to whom the commissioner referred the dispute. The orders declared invalid and ineffectual the election of persons nominated by the appellant to the committee and declared other persons to be the members.

On appeal to the District Court, one of the questions to be determined was whether the adjudicator erred in his interpretation of s 14 of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 1997 (since repealed — see the Editorial Comment below), which governed the body corporate.

Section 14 of the regulation provided the procedure for, and entitlement of members regarding nomination of candidates for election to the committee of a body corporate.

The adjudicator determined that a member could only nominate one individual for election regardless of how many lots the member held in the community titles scheme, unless insufficient nominations were received to fulfil the statutory requirements for the number of committee members.

[140651]

The appellant argued that in reaching this view, the adjudicator wrongly relied on a passage in the explanatory notes to the 2003 amendments to s 14, without attempting to interpret the section itself. It was also argued that the adjudicator failed to reach the proper conclusion as to the meaning of s 14. It was asserted that the correct interpretation of the section was that the right of nomination attached to each lot and that an owner of a multiple lot should receive a notice inviting nomination for each lot held.

Held: appeal allowed.

1. In interpreting a provision of a regulation, a decision maker may consider extrinsic material such as explanatory notes if:

- the provision is ambiguous or obscure — for the purpose of providing an interpretation
- the ordinary meaning leads to a manifestly absurd or unreasonable result — for the purpose of providing an interpretation that avoids that result, or
- for the purpose of confirming the interpretation conveyed by the ordinary meaning of the words.

In no circumstances can the explanatory notes be considered instead of interpreting the provision itself. The adjudicator in this case erred in placing reliance on the explanatory notes without first considering s 14 and then addressing whether consideration should be given to the explanatory notes and for what purpose.

2. Section 14(2) provided that:

> "The secretary must serve a notice on each lot owner shown on the body corporate's roll, inviting each lot owner —
>
> (a) if the lot owner is an individual — to nominate —
>
> (i) the lot owner; or
> (ii) another individual who is a lot owner or who may be nominated by the lot owner in accordance with section 11(1)(b)(i); or
> (b) if the lot owner is not an individual — to nominate an individual who is a lot owner or who may be nominated by the lot owner in accordance with section 11(1)(b)(ii) or (iii)."

The phrase "each lot owner" in s 14(2) was specific. It referred not to the identity of an owner but to its relationship to each lot. A notice needed to be served on the owner shown on the roll in respect of each lot, not on each individual or corporation that owned one or more lots. To mean the latter, a proper description would have been "each owner of one or more lots".

As the notice for each lot invited one nomination, it followed that for each lot held, the owner has a right to nominate one person. That was the ordinary meaning of the words of the section.

A proper reading of the explanatory notes to the 2003 amendment supports this interpretation. The explanatory notes to amendments to s 14 provided that "... a lot owner may... nominate only one individual ... This amendment ... limits the possibility of the committee being stacked by owners nominating multiple other people for election to the committee". It is clear that the amendments were intended to prevent multiple nominations in relation to each lot but not that it was intended to restrict the nomination entitlements of the owner of more than one lot.

Editorial comment: The Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 1997 has been replaced by the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 2008. Section 18 of the 2008 Regulation now clearly sets out a lot owner's right of nomination.

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

[140652]

Mr W. Cochrane (instructed by Hynes Lawyers) for the Appellant.

No appearance by the Respondent.

Before: Kingham DCJ.

Kingham DCJ: As I indicated I would try to give these reasons quickly, I am reading them into the record.

Ms Young was the co-owner of a lot in a community titles scheme, Aarons, and as such a member of the Body Corporate for Aarons. Lee Parker Pty Ltd is the holder of a number of lots in Aarons.

There is a longstanding dispute between them about the management of the affairs of Aarons through its committee and in particular, the composition of its committee.

Ms Young made two dispute resolution applications to the Commissioner for Body Corporate and Community Management, the second of which resulted in the orders made by an Adjudicator to whom the Commissioner referred the dispute. The orders declared invalid and ineffectual the election of persons nominated by Lee Parker to the committee for Aarons and declared other persons to be the members.

Lee Parker appealed the orders asserting errors of law by the Adjudicator. In essence, those errors relate to the adequacy of the Adjudicator's reasons and his interpretation of the regulation which governs the management of this type of body corporate. Ms Young has since sold her interest in the scheme.

The questions which must be determined are:

1. Whether the Adjudicator erred in failing to give any or adequate reasons for his decision
2. Whether the Adjudicator erred in his interpretation of the relevant provisions of the regulation; and
3. If he erred in either respect, whether the matter should be referred back to the Adjudicator or whether his order should be set aside and substituted by an order of this Court.

As to the adequacy of the Adjudicator's reasons, counsel for Lee Parker asserted the Adjudicator gave no or inadequate reasons to support a number of the findings upon which the Adjudicator's orders were based. They related to the accuracy of the Body Corporate's submissions, whether steps taken to convene meetings and the outcomes of those meetings were valid, the legitimacy of Lee Parker's actions in nominating and voting for certain candidates; and the proper composition of the committee of the body corporate.

In essence, Lee Parker's complaint is that the Adjudicator's reasons do not disclose either the factual basis for or the reasoning which supported the various findings and orders complained of.

An Adjudicator is required to act quickly and with as little formality and technicality as is consistent with a fair and proper consideration of the application at Section 269(2)(b) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997.

“A minimum of formality and technicality in a process must be balanced by fair and proper consideration of an application and must be read in conjunction with the Adjudicator's obligation to give reasons for orders made” (Section 274(2)(a)).

However, the reasons need not descend to a degree of particularity or sophistication that would be expected in a judicial proceeding (Cypressvale Pty Ltd v Retail Shop Lease Tribunal at 485). What is necessary is that the reasons provide an explanation for the orders made.

It is true that some of the Adjudicator's findings were not clearly expressed or adequately explained. For example, his assessment of the body corporate's submissions, his finding as to the Chairperson's non-compliance with requirements for convening an extraordinary general meeting and his conclusion that meetings held on the 20th May 2005 and the 24th June 2005 are out of order and invalid.

With respect to that last of the findings, it should be noted that this was made in his earlier order which was not the subject of this appeal and appears to be of no relevance to these proceedings.

Returning to the other findings, when the reasons as a whole are assessed in the context of the Adjudicator's functions and statutory obligations, I am satisfied that he adequately explained the basis upon which he made his orders. On a fair reading of his reasons, it is clear enough that he based his orders on his finding that the nominations by Lee Parker of candidates for the committee were invalid. Likewise it is clear enough that this finding of invalidity was based on his interpretation of the Regulation which governs the nomination of committee members. Whether that interpretation and the finding based upon it is correct is a different question and one to which I will now turn.

The Regulation which governs this body corporate is the Body Corporate and Community Management Accommodation Module Regulation 1997. Section 14 provides the procedure for and entitlements of members regarding nomination of candidates for election to the committee of a body corporate. The Adjudicator took the view that a member can only nominate one individual for election regardless of how many lots the member holds in the community titles scheme, unless insufficient nominations are received to fulfil the statutory requirement for the number of committee members.

There are two questions raised by Lee Parker about the Adjudicator's decision. Firstly, whether he adopted the proper process in interpreting the Regulation, in particular the reliance he placed on a passage from the explanatory notes to 2003 amendments to that Regulation, and, secondly, whether he reached the proper conclusion as to the meaning of the relevant provision, in particular whether a multiple lot owner is confined to only one nomination regardless of the number of lots held.

As to the Adjudicator's process, counsel argued that, in reaching his view, the Adjudicator wrongly relied on a passage in the explanatory notes to the 2003 amendments to Section 14 without attempting to interpret the provision itself.

This submission has some force. In interpreting a provision of the Regulation, a decision maker may consider it extrinsic material such as explanatory notes, provided this is done in specified circumstances and for limited purposes. Those circumstances and purposes are:

- if the provision is ambiguous or obscure — for the purpose of providing an interpretation;
- if the ordinary meaning leads to a manifestly absurd or unreasonable result — for the purpose of providing an interpretation that avoids that result; or
- Otherwise, for the purpose of confirming the interpretation conveyed by the ordinary meaning of the words.

Further, in deciding whether to consider extrinsic material, the decision maker must have regard to the desirability of the provision being interpreted as having its ordinary meaning — Section 7 and 14B of Acts Interpretation Act 1957.

In no circumstances can the explanatory notes be considered instead of interpreting the provision itself. This is what counsel contends the Adjudicator did. In his reasons, the Adjudicator did not specifically rely on any particular provision of the Regulation. Rather, he repeated some three pages from his reasons from earlier order involving Aarons. In turn, those reasons cited a passage from the explanatory notes and annexed a letter, apparently addressed to another member of Aarons. The Adjudicator did not directly address the terms of Section 14 in any of that material.

The annexed letter did make an indirect reference to Section 14. It cited extracts from two other apparently unrelated orders which, said the Adjudicator, interpreted the equivalent provision of the Standard Module Regulation. However there is no indication in the Adjudicator's reasons, either for the first or the second order, that he considered the provision itself or its application to the matter before him. Nor is there any statement as to the circumstances in which and the purpose for which he considered the explanatory notes.

I am persuaded by the terms of the reasons themselves that the Adjudicator erred in placing reliance on the extracted portion of the explanatory notes without first considering Section 14 and then addressing whether consideration should be given to the explanatory notes and for what purpose.

As to the proper interpretation of Section 14, counsel submitted that this was that the right of nomination attaches to each lot and that an owner of a multiple lot should receive a notice inviting nomination for each lot held.

Section 14 subsection (2) requires the secretary to serve a notice on each lot owner shown on the body corporate roll inviting them to nominate one person who fulfils the eligibility requirements for membership of the committee.

14(2) The secretary must serve a notice on each lot owner shown on the body corporate's roll, inviting each lot owner —

(a) if the lot owner is an individual — to nominate —

(i) the lot owner; or

(ii) another individual who is a lot owner or who may be nominated by the lot owner in accordance with section 11(1)(b)(i); or

(b) if the lot owner is not an individual — to nominate an individual who is a lot owner or who may be nominated by the lot owner in accordance with section 11(1)(b)(ii) or (iii).

The use of the descriptor “each lot owner” is specific. It refers not to the identity of an owner but to its relationship to each lot. A notice must be served on the owner shown on the roll in respect of each lot, not on each individual or corporation that owns one or more lots. To mean the latter, a proper description would be “each owner of one or more lots.”

As the notice for each lot invites one nomination it follows that, for each lot held, the owner has a right to nominate one person. That is, in my view, the ordinary meaning of the words of the section.

If I am wrong in that conclusion and the provision is ambiguous or obscure, a proper reading of the explanatory notes to the 2003 amendment supports the interpretation contended for.

It appears the Adjudicator failed to consider all relevant passages of the explanatory notes. The passage here relied upon appears at page 6 of the explanatory notes. It refers in general terms to the amendments and does not specify to which sections the statement related. The passage states relevantly:

> “An owner can nominate only one person for committee membership. This is to limit stacking of committees.”

From this general statement, the Adjudicator has, apparently, concluded that the mischief that the amendment sought to address was a single owner of multiple lots nominating more than 1 one individual for the committee.

A proper reading of the explanatory notes demonstrates this was not the mischief to which the amendments were said to be directed. The concern stated in the explanatory notes was that persons were being nominated and elected to committees who were not acting in the interests of owners and that owners could make multiple nominations.

To remedy this, amendments were made to the provisions dealing with eligibility for committee membership — section 11, and nominations to the committee — section 14.

The amendments to section 11 inserted requirements for eligibility for nomination. The explanatory notes to those amendments state, at pages 21 to 22:

> “This amendment deals with concerns raised by stakeholders of committee's being stacked. The effect of the amendment is that a committee will be more representative of the lot owners as it will consist only of persons who are lot owners or persons with a connection to lot owners such as a family member (eg mother, father, brother or sister), a director or secretary of a corporate owner or a person appointed under a power of attorney to act for a lot owner. These amendments place significant restrictions on the persons that can be committee members."

Section 14 was amended so that body corporate members could only nominate those who fulfilled the eligibility requirements set out in section 11, and an owner of each lot could make only one nomination.

Explanatory notes to amendments to section 14 at page 23:

"This clause provides, in section 14(2), that a lot owner may, in response to a notice inviting nominations for election of the committee, nominate only one individual. If the owner is a corporation, the owner may nominate one individual who is a director, secretary or other nominee of the corporation. This amendment, and the amendment in clause 10, limits the possibility of the committee being stacked by owners nominating multiple other people for election to the committee."

It is worth noting that the reference to "owners nominating multiple other people for election" is general. That is, the section as it then stood allowed an owner of a single lot to make more than one nomination. It is clear that the amendments were intended to prevent multiple nominations in relation to each lot but not that it was intended to restrict the nomination entitlements of the owner of more than one lot.

My reading of those notes is reinforced by the terms of section 14 prior to the amendment. As it then stood, section 14 required the secretary to invite each lot owner to nominate an individual. The invitation to nominate, both before and after amendment, is to each lot owner. The relevant change of wording is from "an individual" to "one individual". That makes explicit the limit of one nomination for each lot as the use of the singular "an individual" includes the plural — section 32 Acts Interpretation Act.

Had it been intended also, to restrict the rights attaching to a lot because the owner holds another lot, that could easily have been stated. This is a significant restriction on the entitlements flowing from ownership, and it could be expected that such an amendment would be clear.

It follows from what I have said that if it was proper for the Adjudicator to consider the explanatory notes, I find he erred in failing to take into account all relevant passages of those notes and, in particular, those specifically pertaining to section 14.

Further, I find the Adjudicator has erred in his interpretation of section 14 of the Regulation. In deciding this appeal the Court has a power to confirm or amend the order appealed, set it aside and substitute a different order or refer the order back to the Adjudicator with appropriate direction, having regard to the question of law raised by the appeal — section 294. Counsel for Lee Parker submitted the appropriate relief in the circumstances of this case is to set aside the Adjudicator's order and substitute it with the orders sought in the notice of appeal.

Ms Young has sold her unit, no longer has any interest in the appeal and did not appear at the hearing; nor did any other lot owner. As there no longer appears to be any person with an interest in maintaining the Adjudicator's orders it would artificially maintain the dispute were the order referred back to the Adjudicator with directions.

There was no contest before me, nor apparently, before the Adjudicator, that individuals nominated by Lee Parker and elected at the extraordinary general meeting of Aarons held on 18 August 2005 met the eligibility requirements.

There is no evidence before me and nothing in the Adjudicator's reasons that persuades me that either the nomination or the election of those nominated by Lee Parker was invalid and of no effect.

Accordingly, I will make orders in terms of paragraphs 1 to 3 of the notice of appeal. Because of Ms Young's early notice to Lee Parker that she had no interest in pursuing the matter I will not make any order as to costs.

The orders are:

1. Appeal allowed;

2. The decision of the Office of the Commissioner for Body Corporate and Community Management dated 20 January 2006 is set aside;

3. Margaret Howard, Ron Merrick, Rachel Sparks and Bettina Salada are declared to be members of the committee of the body corporate of Aarons CTS 11476.

Those are my orders.

I will order that the transcript be provided to the parties and I presume also to the Office of the Commissioner.

New South Wales Supreme Court; Land and Environment Court of New South Wales

Decision delivered on 27 August 2008

Community Schemes — Variation of community development scheme — Development contracts — Variation of development contracts — Community Land Development Act 1989 (NSW) s 70 — Community Land Management Act 1989 (NSW) s 106, Sch 2 — Developers' covenants to develop in accordance with the development contract and the development consent — Where development not in accordance with plans accompanying development application — Whether unregistered development applications and plans are incorporated in development consents referred to in registered development contracts and statutory covenants — Whether continuation or completion of scheme impracticable — Meaning of impracticable – Land and Environment Court Act 1979 (NSW) s 20(2) and (5), s 71 — Breach of development contracts and statutory covenants — Whether developers in breach of obligations — Damages for breach of development contracts — Specific performance of developers' obligations under development contracts and statutory covenants — Whether orders for specific performance appropriate.

Deep Creek was a lagoon joined to the Murray River. The Deep Creek houseboat marina included a public wharf, a boat ramp and mooring berths available for purchase. It was developed by way of a community scheme and subsidiary neighbourhood schemes.

The following features of the scheme documents were relevant to the proceedings:

Key document	Status	Significance to proceedings
Development application (DA)/ development consent (DC) 18/90	Consent granted 1991	A plan (accompanying the DA) of the completed development showed an access track to the mooring berths. Consent was granted subject to the conditions "as per attached letter" (from the council to the applicant). The letter (reproduced at [77]) required the access road to be sealed.
DA/ DC 66/92 (community title subdivision)	Consent granted 1992	The letter (reproduced at [79]ff) from the applicant to the council accompanying the DA stated "The access way to the site will be part of the community association property and will be established as a private access way". Three accompanying Stage 1 subdivision plans showed that the community property included a substantial amount of the foreshore, the whole of the waters of Deep Creek and a boat ramp. An accompanying Stage 2 subdivision plan was substantially the same as the plan accompanying DA 18/90 (referred to above). Consent was granted subject to the conditions "as per attached letter" (from the council to the applicant). The letter (reproduced at [93]) required the access road to be sealed.
Community plan	Registered 1995	Most of the community property (referred to above), including the location of the access track, was now shown as part of the lot owned by the developers (developers' land), rather than as community property.
Community development contract	Registered 1995	The contract differed from the draft contract accompanying DA 66/92. The developer agreed that at the time DA 66/92 was lodged, the intention was to develop the land so as to provide vehicular access in accordance with the plans accompanying DA 66/92. The contract contained various clauses stating that development would be in accordance with the plans shown in DA/DC 18/90. Under CLM Act s 15, the community development contract was taken to include the covenants in CLM Act Sch 2 Pt 1 (the "statutory covenants"). These covenants referred to the "development consent".
Community management statement	Registered 1995	The statement contained a by-law giving the community association control of all aspects of boat traffic and usage (the public wharf was owned by the developers).

Neighbourhood plans, development contracts and management statements	Registered 1995 (Central), 1997 (Western) and 1998 (Eastern)	The development lots containing the mooring berths were subdivided by neighbourhood plan, and were owned by the Central, Eastern and Western Neighbourhood Associations respectively. Neighbourhood and community property contained extremely limited land access to the mooring berths (two metre strip, steep terrain, obstructed by trees). The associations were members of the community association and were parties to the community development contract, giving rise to the binding covenants in Sch 2 to the CLM Act.

Access to mooring berths

Although they were not shown on the registered community plan, the developers' land contained access roads and access stairs that were used by mooring berth owners (Owners) to access their mooring berths.

Prior to 2005, the developers repeatedly made oral and written representations (including in marketing material and in at least one contract for sale of mooring berths) that the Owners were entitled to use the access roads for vehicular access to their moorings and that there was no issue about access to the public wharf and boat ramp. The developers also represented that Owners' access rights would be formalised in due course. To prospective purchasers of mooring berths, the marina appeared as if it had a vehicular access road to the western moorings, and two vehicular access roads to the eastern moorings.

These access roads were used by Owners until about 2005, when the developers closed the access roads, fenced off the public wharf, and installed a boom gate that temporarily blocked vehicular access to a boat ramp. The developers also put up signs at the mouth of the marina that stated "Private Property — No Entry". The developers' lawyers then alleged trespass by Owners, and threatened legal action. One of the proprietors of the developers' land indicated that access to the boat ramp would be allowed for a fee.

The closures created serious problems for Owners, guests and the neighbourhood associations, including:

- the inability to use a vehicle to restock houseboats with supplies
- the inability of emergency vehicles to access the mooring berths
- the difficulty of guests (particularly elderly or injured guests) accessing the houseboats (the evidence established that the only way to provide complying disability access to the mooring neighbourhoods was to obtain part of the developers' land behind the limited community property and the neighbourhood property)
- difficulties in conducting necessary repairs to moorings (without trespassing on the developers' land)
- loss of patronage for the owner of the hotel and general store at the marina, and
- an allegation that one owner's boat was too long (ie trespassing into the water that was part of the developers' land).

In 2006, an owner of the developers' land wrote a letter to the Owners explaining his position in relation to some of the disputes, which included:

- the access roads were used primarily as temporary access roads to facilitate construction; there was no planning approval for any access roads to houseboat lots; it was therefore illegal for the developers to continue to allow Owners to use the construction roads to access their houseboats; if an accident occurred the developers would be uninsured
- the boat ramp had no planning approval to be used as a boat ramp; as the developers had been unsuccessful in controlling use of the ramp by the public, they would therefore close it; Owners would be given the opportunity to use a new boat ramp
- casual permits for visitors and guests of Owners would be issued at a nominal cost
- cars parked illegally on the developers' land would be towed away.

The community association

Also in 2005, there were negotiations to transfer, from the developers to the community association, land required for vehicular access to the mooring berths, in return for improvement works to be carried out by the community association. The developers had considered that the community association had not been functioning and that the Deep Creek Marina gave the impression of being neglected. The developers were looking to advance the development of their land, and had applied to the tribunal for the appointment of a managing agent to perform the functions of the community association. The manager was appointed (although subsequently removed after concerns from the neighbourhood associations that they had insufficient input into how the community association's money was being spent), and commissioned professional reports as to what works were required.

Proceedings

The plaintiffs (including the Central, Eastern and Western Neighbourhood Associations) commenced proceedings as follows:

Key submission	Relief sought	Key legislation	Court	Key defendants

The community scheme had become impracticable, both in its continuation (see [419]) and its completion (see [421]), essentially because the development had not proceeded in accordance with DC 18/90 and DC 66/92, which resulted in the access problems from 2005	Variation of the community development scheme and related development contracts, to match the plans that accompanied DA 66/92 (ie to transfer certain areas owned by the developers to community property to allow vehicular access to the mooring berths, and to delete certain facilities that could no longer be constructed due to supervening facilities)	CLD Act s 70	Supreme Court	Current developers and proprietors (including the first defendant, Mr Watson)
The original proprietors of the developers' land covenanted that the land would be developed in accordance with the development contract and "the development consent", and the subsequent proprietors covenanted that they would permit the original proprietors to do so — the covenants were breached in that the community scheme was not developed in accordance with the DAs	Specific performance of the contracts, and damages for breach of those contracts	CLM Act s 15, s 106, Sch 2 Pt 1 and Pt 3; Land and Environment Court Act 1979 s 20(2) and (5), s 71	Land and Environment Court	Original developers and proprietors (including Mr Watson)

[140660]

The court was required to determine:

- What was included in the "development consent" for the purpose of the statutory covenants? Did the "development consent" incorporate the terms of the DA(s) and accompanying plans?
- Can an unregistered plan form part of a community development contract? The developers submitted that even if the plans were incorporated into the development consents, registration was required because the definition of "development contract" in the CLM Act and CLD Act refers to "plans ... that are registered".
- Was continuation or completion of the community scheme impracticable? The developers submitted that the access problem was not something that "has become impracticable" within the meaning of CLD Act s 70 but something that was always a characteristic of the registered scheme. The developers submitted that the purpose of s 70 was to provide a power to vary or terminate a scheme where something had changed since the scheme was registered. In addition, they submitted that the access problem was an inconvenience rather than an impracticability.
- Did the developers breach their obligations under the development contracts?
- Was it appropriate to order specific performance of the development contracts in relation to the varied plan (proposed by the plaintiffs as relief under s 70 of the CLD Act)? The developers submitted that specific performance should not be ordered because the plaintiffs had not established that damages were not an adequate remedy, and the orders sought (eg construction of certain facilities) were not suitable orders for specific performance.

Held: plaintiffs entitled to relief.

Construction of scheme documents

Development consent

1. In construing a development consent, the DA and plans, or other documents, accompanying a DA can only be looked at if they are incorporated in the consent expressly or by necessary implication and only where this is necessary for the purpose of interpreting the consent.

2. Development consents 18/90 and 66/92 incorporated expressly or impliedly the respective DAs and accompanying plans (referred to above) because the conditions of the consents could not be understood without looking at those DAs and accompanying plans.

Development contract

3. A development consent (including a plan or other document incorporated in the development consent) that is expressly or impliedly incorporated in a development contract or in the statutory covenants may be looked at for the purposes of construing those covenants and the development contract, without the development consent having to be registered.

The statutory covenants expressly incorporate a development consent, which can include plans, into every community development contract without any requirement that the development consent be registered.

4. The “development consent” referred to in the statutory covenants must be the development consent or consents that bring land under the community titles legislation. Therefore, the “development consent” referred to in the statutory covenants at least included DC 66/92.

5. Preliminary cl 4 of the community development contract stated that the land would be developed in accordance with DC 18/90, and the statutory covenants required the land to be developed in accordance with the contract.

[140661]

Mr Watson's subjective intention or understanding was not relevant to the interpretation of the community development contract, although it may have been relevant to the exercise of the statutory discretion to vary the community scheme or contract.

Variation of scheme (CLD Act s 70)

7. The claim for variation of the community scheme because continuation and completion of the scheme had become impracticable required close attention to:

- the definition of “community scheme” in the CLD Act
- the terms of s 70 of the CLD Act
- the terms of the statutory covenants
- the provisions of the community development contract.

8. The definition of “community scheme” does not refer to a “registered” scheme, and includes the rights conferred, and obligations imposed, by or under the CLD Act and the CLM Act. Those obligations include the statutory covenants whereby the original proprietors covenant that the land will be developed in accordance with the development consent and the development contract, and subsequent proprietors covenant that they will permit the original proprietors to develop the land in that way.

9. “Impracticable” in the context of s 70 means that in the particular circumstances of the case the scheme cannot continue as a matter of practicality. Continuation of a scheme may become impracticable because a problem, inherent in the terms of the scheme itself, is eventually seen as inevitably producing impracticability during the life of the scheme: Community Association DP 270212 v Registrar General for the State of New South Wales (2005) NSW Titles Cases ¶80-092 considered.

The “development consent” referred to in the statutory covenants included 66/92, which required subdivision in accordance with the plans accompanying that DA. The subsequently registered community plan did not reflect that development consent, which gave rise to the physical impracticability that appeared in 2005 and 2006 when the developers denied access to the access tracks, public wharf and, for a time, the boat ramp. From that time at least, completion of the community scheme had become impracticable within the meaning of s 70.

10. Continuation of the scheme became impracticable because:

- the original developers were (and would nearly always be in the future) in breach of their obligations in the development contract to deliver the scheme in accordance with those proposals
- of the physical access problems— on the evidence, these constituted an impracticability rather than a mere inconvenience.

Completion of the scheme became impracticable because the scheme had not been developed in accordance with what had been proposed, ie:

- the registered community plan represented a major departure from what was approved in DC 66/92
- the facilities that were developed on the land departed significantly from that which was the subject of development (and to develop the land in accordance with the original plans would require developments to be demolished).

11. The by-law in the community management statement giving the community association control of all aspects of boat traffic and usage naturally belonged with ownership of the waters of Deep Creek by the community association, as indicated in the plans accompanying DA 66/92.

Relief

12. The community scheme should be varied as follows (see [462]–[471]):

[140662]

- The land containing the access tracks, and certain other parts of the developers’ land, should be converted to community property as per the Stage 1 subdivision plans accompanying DA 66/92. Those plans were part of DC 66/92. The statutory covenants bound the original developers to develop the land in accordance with that development consent— the conversion of land and waters shown as community property on those plans into community property gave effect to the statutory covenant. The access tracks should not be shown on the varied plan.
- The varied plan should delete the facilities shown on the DA plans (referred to above) that could no longer be constructed due to the supervening facilities.
- The varied plan should delete certain facilities (eg public toilets) that had been superseded by actual development.
- The varied plan should not show the facilities that were not shown on the DA plans, but had actually been (partially) constructed, because to include such facilities on the varied plan would subject them to the statutory regime (including the application of the statutory covenants), with potentially harsh results.

• The development contracts and community management statement should be amended to reflect the amendments to the community plan.

Breach of contract

13. The original developers covenanted under the statutory covenants that the land would be developed in accordance with the "development consent" that at least included DC 66/92. Many of the facilities shown on the Stage 2 subdivision plan could not be developed as shown on that plan because of other superseding development. Therefore, the original developers were in breach of their obligations in the development contract to deliver the scheme in accordance with those proposals.

In particular, the developers were in breach of the obligation in the community development contract:

• to seal the carpark and access way with bitumen (see [476]–[507])
• to provide all electricity services (see [508]–[570]; assessment of damages at [571]–[580]).

Specific performance

14. The legislative intention for community titles schemes is easily set at nought or diluted unless specific performance is generally available in relation to the statutory covenants.

The following orders for specific performance were appropriate:

• that the original developers seal the access way with bitumen to the satisfaction of the Traffic Committee of the Shire of Murray
• that the original developers seal the carpark with bitumen
• that the original developers use all reasonable endeavours to obtain all necessary approvals for the construction of a manager's residence consistent with, and in the location shown on, the varied plan that was to become part of the development contracts.

Editorial Comment: Biscoe AJ did not determine the final form of relief in the Supreme Court proceedings. However, note the following comments:

• In relation to the conversion of property to community association property (at [466]):

> "The relief could take the form of an order that that land be vested in the community association and an order for registration of a new community plan to reflect the vesting. The Court is empowered to make such orders under s 70(3) (c), (f) and (g) of the Development Act. "

• In relation to possible conversion of the public wharf to community association property (at [467]–[468]):

> "Unless the developers consent or do not object, I am not minded to make [the proposed order] … because the public wharf was never shown as community property in any development application plan. …
> If the public wharf were to be converted to community property the developers would be relieved of any further obligation to repair or maintain it. Presumably, this would also alleviate their insurance burden. Having regard to those considerations … the developers may prefer to consent or not object to an order converting it to community property. The alternative is to order them to repair and open it to the public within, say, 60 days and thereafter to take all reasonable steps to keep it in good repair and open to the public. It may be appropriate for the community development contract or the community management statements, or both, to be amended to impose an obligation on the public wharf owners to take all reasonable steps to keep it in good repair and open to the public."

• In relation to an undertaking from the developers (pursuant to a proposed local environmental plan associated with proposed development of the developers' land, which the developers submitted, would have eventually given the Owners the access relief that they sought) (at [472]–[474]):

> "… the undertaking is couched so unclearly that it raises doubt as to whether it could be enforced through the contempt of court coercive sanction … it is of little weight as a discretionary consideration given the strength of the plaintiffs' case for relief, the uncertainty as to whether the proposed development will eventuate, and the fact that it could only give the plaintiffs a modified version of the relief to which I think they are entitled."

INTRODUCTION

BISCOE AJ: In these two closely related proceedings there are claims for variation of a community development scheme and related development contracts and also for specific performance and damages for breach of those contracts. The scheme and contracts relate to an 85 berth houseboat marina on Deep Creek. Deep Creek is a quiet, picturesque lagoon joined to the Murray River by a narrow channel. It is situated 17 kilometres by road west of the twin towns of Moama (in New South Wales) and Echuca (in Victoria).

2. One of the proceedings is in the Supreme Court. The other is in the Land and Environment Court. They have been heard together by me as an acting judge of the former and as a judge of the latter. In this way duplication of costs and judicial resources has been minimised. An order has been made that evidence in one is evidence in the other. The two proceedings are in different courts because the legislature has given exclusive jurisdiction:

> (a) to the Supreme Court to vary community development schemes and related development contracts: s 70 Community
> [140664]
> Land Development Act 1989 (NSW) (Development Act); and > (b) to the Land and Environment Court to order specific performance and award damages in relation to development contracts: s 20(2) and (5), s 71 Land and Environment Court Act 1979 (NSW); s 106 Community Land Management Act 1989 (NSW) (Management Act).

OVERVIEW OF THE CASE

3. Deep Creek Marina is the subject of a community scheme and subsidiary neighbourhood schemes established under the New South Wales community titles legislation. That legislation essentially comprises two companion statutes, the Development Act and the Management Act. The legislation enables a subdivision of land which incorporates common property and offers facilities in accordance with a pre-determined theme.

The development applications and consents

4. In 1990, development application 18/90 (DA 18/90) was lodged with Murray Shire Council for a 100 berth marina as Stage 1 and a tourist complex as Stage 2 on land with an area of 243 hectares and frontages to the Murray River and Deep Creek. The land was formally described as Lot 12 in deposited plan 846348 being part of Lot 1 in deposited plan 521202, Parish of Benarca, County of Cadell. The registered proprietors and original developers of the land were Anthony Watson and Sammy One Pty Ltd (Sammy One), a company owned and controlled by Mr Watson and his wife.

5. Accompanying DA 18/90 were four plans showing the completed development including marina berths, an access track behind the eastern berths, and a public wharf. The plaintiffs place particular reliance on one of these plans, Plan 4, entitled "Detailed Landscape Masterplan": a copy is annexure A to this judgment. The land described as a "wildlife refuge" on Plan 4, on the opposite side of Deep Creek from the development, was sometimes later called "the island" (although it is not actually an island). In 1991, the council granted consent to DA 18/90.

6. In 1992, development application 66/92 (DA 66/92) was lodged with the council for subdivision of the land under the community titles legislation in two stages. The plaintiffs place reliance on three accompanying Stage 1 subdivision plans: copies are annexures B, C and D to this judgment. These plans show that community property included, inter alia, a substantial amount of the foreshores and the whole of the waters of Deep Creek. The plaintiffs also place reliance on the accompanying Stage 2 subdivision plan: a copy is annexure E to this judgment. It shows subdivision of the developers' residual parcel into five lots and shows essentially the same facilities as are shown on Plan 4 accompanying DA 18/90. In 1992, the council granted consent to DA 66/92.

Registration of the community plan

7. In January 1995, the developers registered a community plan, community development contract and community management statement. The community plan effected a subdivision of the land in which most of the community property shown on the plans accompanying DA 66/92 had disappeared, including most of the foreshores and waters of Deep Creek. Instead that area was shown as part of the lot owned by the developers. This gross loss of community property has led to serious access problems for houseboat mooring lot owners at the Deep Creek Marina and, ultimately, to this litigation. One sheet of the community plan as originally registered in January 1995 is annexure F to this judgment. It was subsequently amended. The community plan as registered on 16 May 2006 is annexure G to this judgment.

8. In 1995, 1997 and 1998 the developers registered three neighbourhood plans for mooring berths together with related neighbourhood development contracts and neighbourhood management statements.

Access at the Deep Creek Marina

9. Notwithstanding the disparity between the plans accompanying DA 66/92 and the registered community plan, access difficulties did not arise until about 2005. That is because access roads to the moorings physically existed over the developers' land (now called Lot 16 and so described in these proceedings), even though they were not shown on the registered community plan. Mooring berth owners used these access roads for vehicular access. On the western side of the marina, where the foreshore is steeper, access was facilitated by several access stairs, apparently constructed by the developers, leading from the access road to the mooring berths. Also, until 2005, there was no impediment to access to the public wharf and boat ramp.

10. The developers represented orally in marketing material and in at least one contract for sale of mooring berths that the existing access roads were for use by mooring berth owners. The developers also represented that the berth owners' access rights would be formalised in due course.

11. All this changed following reconstitution of the ownership of Lot 16 (see [28] below). The current proprietors of Lot 16 are Mr Watson, Hillington Valley Pty Ltd (Hillington) and Perricoota Boat Club Investments Pty Ltd (Perricoota Company). In or about 2005 the developers closed the access roads to the mooring berths, fenced off the public wharf and, for a time, blocked access to the boat ramp. The consequential access difficulties are examined in detail below.

Claims in the Supreme Court proceedings

12. In the Supreme Court proceedings, the plaintiffs claim that the community scheme has become impracticable, both in its continuation and its completion. This is said to be because (a) what was proposed cannot be delivered and (b) what has been delivered is not physically functional and practical. The plaintiffs seek variation of the scheme by amending the related development contracts and the community management statement under s 70 of the Development Act in order to alleviate impracticability and to provide what is said to be appropriate.

13. The alleged impracticability arises largely because of access problems in three respects:

> (a) the mooring owners have no legal vehicular access to their moorings and, since the developers closed the access roads in 2005 have not had any actual vehicular access;
> (b) since 2006 the developers have denied access to the public wharf by fencing it off; and
> (c) for a time in 2005, the developers blocked access to the boat ramp by installing a boom gate. The boom gate has since been opened, but remains in place in the open position.

14. The plaintiffs claim that the consents to DA 18/90 and DA 66/92 respectively incorporate those applications, including the plans accompanying each application, subject to the conditions of each consent.

15. The plaintiffs' proposed variations involve accretions to community property to reflect the plans which accompanied DA 66/92 (annexures B to E to this judgment). These variations would convert foreshores and the waters of Deep Creek owned by the developers into community property, or at least to the extent of providing vehicular access to the moorings. The proposed accretions are shown on the plan which is annexure H to this judgment.

16. The plaintiffs' proposed variations under s 70 of the Development Act also involve variation of the development contracts, primarily by appending a plan showing facilities, which is itself a variation of Plan

4 accompanying DA 18/90 and the Stage 2 plan accompanying DA 66/92. These proposed variations are shown on the plan which is annexure J to this judgment. The plaintiffs propose related amendments to the text of the development contracts and the community management statement.

17. There is an alternative claim for a right of vehicular access to the moorings under s 88K of the Conveyancing Act 1919 (NSW).

Claims in the Land and Environment Court proceedings

18. In the Land and Environment Court proceedings the plaintiffs allege that the defendants are in breach of the development contracts in respect of: (a) developing the community scheme in accordance with what was proposed; (b) providing electricity and telephone services; and (c) doing road works and sealing.

19. The plaintiffs claim specific performance of the development contracts and damages for electricity and road works already undertaken. Alternatively, they claim damages only.

PLANS ANNEXED

20. The following plans annexed to this judgment

[CCH note: these annexures are not reproduced by CCH. See www.lawlink.nsw.gov.au/scjudgments/2008nswsc.nsf, to which I have already referred, are essential to an understanding of the issues:]

A	Plan 4 accompanying DA 18/90 to which Murray Shire Council consented.
B, C and D	Three Stage 1 subdivision plans accompanying DA 66/92 to which council consented.
E	Stage 2 subdivision plan accompanying DA 66/92 to which council consented.
F	Sheet 2 of the community plan for Community Association DP 270076 registered in January 1995.
G	Additional sheet 12 of the community plan registered on 16 May 2006.
H	Plaintiffs' plan of proposed accretions to community property, pursuant to variation under s 70 of the Development Act.
J	Plaintiffs' plan of proposed facilities to be provided by the original developers to be included in community and mooring neighbourhood development contracts, pursuant to variation under s 70 of the Development Act. This shows a modification of the facilities shown on annexures A and E above, and is Schedule 2 to the plaintiffs' Second Further Amended Statement of Claim as further amended.

THE PARTIES

21. In each of the proceedings, the plaintiffs are the owners of Lots 2, 3 and 6 (respectively, the Central, Eastern and Western Neighbourhood Associations), which are the mooring neighbourhoods, and the owner of Lots 14 and 15 (Mr Cunnington). (For ease of reference I will refer to the applicants and respondents in the Land and Environment Court proceedings as plaintiffs and defendants).

22. In the Supreme Court proceedings the defendants are the current developers and proprietors of Lot 16 (Mr Watson, Hillington and Perricoota Company), the Registrar-General, the community association, the Lot 16 mortgagee (Statewide Secured Investments Ltd), Murray Shire Council, and the owner of Lot 12 Neighbourhood Association DP 285882 which is called "Murray River's Edge". In the proceedings "Murray River's Edge" was generally referred to as the "Honeyman Lot".

23. In the Land and Environment Court proceedings the defendants are the original developers and proprietors, Mr Watson and Sammy One. They caused development consents 18/90 and 66/92 to be obtained. They caused to be registered in 1995 the community plan, community management statement and community development contract for the community association. They caused to be registered the neighbourhood plan, neighbourhood management statement and neighbourhood development contract in 1995, 1997 and 1998 for, respectively, the Central, Western and Eastern Neighbourhoods. They were the parties to the community development contract and neighbourhood development contracts under which they became bound by certain covenants, including those found in Schedule 2 to the Management Act, on which the plaintiffs rely (see [57] below).

24. The defendants other than the developers have filed submitting appearances or have not appeared or have taken no active part in the proceedings.

THE COMMUNITY ASSOCIATION AND ITS MEMBERS

25. The community association for Deep Creek Marina is Community Association DP 270076 which, under s 25 of the Development

Act, was incorporated in January 1995 upon registration of community plan DP 270076. The land in this community plan has been subdivided and re-subdivided over the years. The current subdivision is indicated in the registered sheet of the community plan copied at annexure G to this judgment.

26. Currently, the community association has seven members. Three are neighbourhood associations of mooring berths (Lots 2, 3 and 6 — Lot 6 was originally Lot 4). One is a neighbourhood association whose property is under development for holiday cabins and related facilities (Lot 12, the Honeyman Lot). One is the owner of the hotel/restaurant (Lot 14). One is the owner of the supermarket (Lot 15). Finally, one is a residual development lot (Lot 16) owned by the current developers, which includes the foreshores and waters of Deep Creek, a public wharf and much more. Further details are as follows:

Lot	Member	Unit Entitlement
2	Neighbourhood Association NP DP 285249 (Central Neighbourhood). Registered 19 January 1995. 45 mooring berths. Neighbourhood property: 2 metre wide walkway adjoining the berths.	3,060
6	Neighbourhood Association NP DP 285433 (Western Neighbourhood). Registered 30 September 1997. 11 mooring berths. Neighbourhood property: 2 metre wide walkway adjoining the berths.	1,300
3	Neighbourhood Association NP DP 285486 (Eastern Neighbourhood). Registered 25 March 1998. 30 mooring berths. Neighbourhood property: 2 metre wide walkway adjoining the berths.	3,300
12	Neighbourhood Association NP DP 285882known as “Murray River's Edge” (Honeyman Lot). Registered 11 November 2004. Neighbourhood property: under development mainly for holiday cabins and related facilities. This neighbourhood scheme was developed by Construct Co Developments Pty Ltd (directors: Thomas Honeyman and Fiona Honeyman).	602
14	Terry Cunnington. Property: hotel/restaurant.	28
15	Terry Cunnington. Property: supermarket.	19
16	Anthony Watson, Hillington and Perricoota Company. This residual lot includes the foreshores and waters of Deep Creek, the public wharf and much more.	1,691
	TOTAL:	10,000

[140668]

The three marina berth neighbourhoods (Lots 2, 6 and 3) have been described above as the "Central", "Western" and "Eastern" in order to indicate their locations relative to each other along the northern side of Deep Creek. This can be seen in the plan on annexure G to this judgment. The Central Neighbourhood is divided by the public wharf (part of Lot 16), the hotel/restaurant (Lot 14) and supermarket (Lot 15). At the trial it was said on behalf of the plaintiff owner of Lot 15 that he submitted to the waterfront strip on that land becoming community property.

THE DEVELOPERS

27. It is convenient hereafter to generally refer to the owners from time to time of what is now Lot 16 as "the developers". Lot 16 has had a number of changes in nomenclature over the years. Originally, most of it was called Lot 5.

28. In 1990 Anthony Watson and Sammy One were the registered proprietors of the subject land. Sammy One was a company owned and controlled by Mr Watson and his wife. On registration of the community plan in 1995, those original proprietors owned the largest lot in the community scheme, which was then Lot 5 (but is now mostly Lot 16). In June 2003 they transferred part of their interest in that Lot so that it was owned in equal one third shares by Mr Watson, Hillington owned by Gary and Jayne Bares, and Ozzie Erections Pty Ltd (Ozzie) owned by Mr Steven "Ozzie" Robertson. By transfer dated 9 October 2006 Ozzie sold its share to Perricoota Company owned by Mr Paul Jarman. Thus, the current developers and proprietors of Lot 16 are Mr Watson, Hillington and Perricoota Company.

29. Mr and Mrs Bares have been associated with Deep Creek Marina since 1997 when Accredited Aged Care Services Pty Ltd, the sole director of which was Mrs Bares, became the first buyer of seven mooring lots in the Western Neighbourhood. That company was the trustee for Mr Bares' superannuation fund. It was he who made the decision to purchase the moorings. The trustee leased out six of the moorings and Mr Bares used the seventh. Commencing in May 2002, it sold its moorings at a substantial gross profit. Throughout the five years of its ownership one could drive a car to the moorings and access them via stairs. It was only after they commenced to be sold that Mr Bares took the position that mooring owners were not entitled to use the access roads and, later, with the other developers, closed the access roads.

30. Mr Jarman has been associated with Deep Creek Marina since 2000–2001 when he worked for Mr and Mrs Watson as the manager of their hotel/restaurant on what is now Lot 14. After a break he then worked for Mr and Mrs O'Brien, the new owners of the restaurant/bar and supermarket on, respectively, Lots 14 and 15, from October 2004 to January 2005. From 2005 he has been employed by the developers as their site manager and to represent them at community association meetings.

31. In 2002 the developers began to use a company which has had several names. At one time it was called DC Marina Pty Ltd. In 2004 its name was changed to Deep Creek Marina Pty Ltd. From December 2002 its directors and secretaries were Messrs Watson, Robertson and Bares and its shareholders were Hillington, Ozzie and Perricoota Investments Pty Ltd. Currently, it appears, its directors are Mr Watson and Mr Bares and its shareholders are Mr Watson and Hillington. The name of this company was sometimes erroneously used in communications as if it were the owner of Lot 16. In fact it was a service company for the developers.

32. By a transfer stamped in April 2002, Mr and Mrs Watson transferred to Hillington a one half share in land known as Lot 23 immediately to the east on Deep Creek. It has been developed as a houseboat marina development called Perricoota Boat Club: see [129]–[130] below. The moorings at Lot 23 have good pedestrian and vehicle access. There is a one metre wide concrete path adjacent to them. Then there is approximately two metres of grass. Then there is a sealed vehicular access road approximately 2.4 metres wide. Houseboats moored at the Lot 23 marina have to cross the waters at the Deep Creek Marina in order to reach the Murray River. Lot 23 enjoys the benefit of easements of access of variable width over those waters as well as over Lot 16 land just to the north of the upper access track to the eastern moorings.

33. The developers wish to develop Lots 16 and 23 into a very large residential and tourist development and are seeking to have the land rezoned for residential purposes.

THE COMMUNITY TITLES LEGISLATION

34. The Deep Creek Marina may have been the first houseboat marina in New South Wales to come under the community titles legislation, which essentially comprises the Development Act and the Management Act. This legislation commenced on 1 August 1990, a little over two months after DA 18/90 for development of Deep Creek Marina was lodged with the local council. Following council consent to that application in 1991, in 1992 DA 66/92 was made to the council for subdivision to bring the land under the community titles legislation. The council approved this application in 1992: see [79]–[93] below.

35. The concept of community title, its historical context and potential use, as well as the general scheme of the community titles legislation, were described in the Second Reading Speech by the Minister for Natural Resources, as follows:

> …Generally known as the community titles legislation, the bills will introduce a new form of land subdivision in New South Wales and will permit greater innovation in subdivision design and greater flexibility in residential, commercial and industrial development. So that honourable members will appreciate the significance of the legislation I should remind them of some of the milestones preceding the bills. In 1961 the Parliament of New South Wales approved legislation permitting titles to be issued evidencing ownership of flats by enabling land to be subdivided into strata lots.
>
> Prior to 1961 the only way of subdividing land was the conventional method, creating blocks used mainly for freestanding cottages for separate occupation. The concept of strata title gained widespread acceptance and encouraged the development of less traditional options for residential accommodation. The 1961 legislation had a number of deficiencies and in 1973 it was replaced by the Strata Titles Act, which continues to function as the operative legislation for all strata-based developments. The original intention of the strata legislation was to permit the strata subdivision of completed buildings of at least two storeys. Despite this intention, since the introduction of the legislation developers have been looking for ways to use it to accommodate types of development it was never designed to permit.
>
> An ever-growing shortage of land available for residential occupation has discouraged developers from employing the traditional method of subdividing land into a grid pattern of rectangular blocks fronting a public road. There has been also a demonstrated demand for developments designed around a theme, such as retirement villages, tourist resorts, industrial parks and sporting complexes. As a consequence there was a clear need to devise an additional means of subdividing land which would combine elements of both conventional and strata subdivision and introduce the context of shared communal property into a land subdivision. The aim of the four bills to be considered today is, therefore, to introduce that much needed alternative system of land subdivision, which will be as innovative today as the strata title legislation was in 1961. The system proposed will enable a subdivision of land incorporating common property which may be developed in stages in accordance with a pre-determined theme.
>
> …[T]he model proposed by this legislation offers sufficient flexibility to allow it to be used for low or medium density residential projects; large, mixed-use developments; small urban schemes; rural communes; and theme development specially designed to accommodate the specific needs of special interest groups. The legislation has been divided into two principal bills — the Community Land Development Bill, covering the procedure for establishing a scheme, and the Community Land Management Bill, governing the day-to-day management of schemes and the resolution > of disputes. The remaining two bills make associated amendments to the Strata Titles Act and a number of other Acts.
>
> [140670]
>
> The Community Land Development Bill will permit the creation in subdivisions of shared land known as association property. Individuals purchasing into a scheme will receive a separate title to their lots, which may or may not contain improvements, and will acquire an interest in the association property. Because amenities can be shared, residents will be able to acquire the use of facilities such as sporting and recreational complexes which would have been prohibitively expensive for an individual homeowner. The common elements and communal facilities within a scheme will be shared and managed by the participants themselves. Management will be controlled by a body corporate, referred to in the legislation as an association, which will be constituted on registration of a plan and will be made up of the individual lot owners. The legislation has been designed to enable a development to be completed as a staged or non-staged scheme. Allowing developments to proceed in stages will make it possible for savings in initial development costs, as one stage can be used to finance the construction of later stages. With a reduction in initial development costs, purchase prices should be correspondingly reduced.

The Community Land Management Bill will complement this development flexibility by providing a range of options for the management structure which may operate within the scheme. When a staged scheme is embarked upon, the community will have two tiers of management. However, where the community is sufficiently large or complex, the developer may elect to interpose a further tier and thereby create three levels of management. Where it is not proposed to develop the land in stages, only one level of management — known as a neighbourhood association — will be created. An important feature of the legislation is the opportunity it will provide for a development or organizational theme to be introduced throughout a scheme. For example, a theme may simply be used to establish a uniform architectural or landscaped design or a development may be designed around a sporting theme, offering facilities such as a golf course or equestrian activities. Safeguards have been built into the legislation to ensure that a theme does not impose restrictions based on race or creed or on ethnic or socioeconomic groupings.

To ensure that purchasers are made aware of any matters that will affect the day-to-day maintenance of a community, a developer will be required to prepare a management statement to accompany each stage of the scheme. This statement will bind the developer and the individual owners buying into a scheme and will be available for public inspection. The statement will set out the rules governing the use of association property including any access ways, and the use of any facilities which may be erected on the communal land. It will provide details of how services such as water and electricity are to be maintained and the insurance cover taken out by the association.

It is envisaged that large developments may be constructed over many years, and with changes in economic and social conditions likely during the period, it would not be appropriate to compel detailed disclosures to be made at the time the community plan initiating the project is registered. However, to balance the need to safeguard the interests of people buying into such a scheme against the danger of shackling developers to a static project indefinitely, at each stage of a community scheme the developer will be obliged to make binding promises about the facilities to be provided within that stage. This document will be known as a development contract and will be lodged with each neighbourhood plan to place on public record a description of the development, any theme proposed and details of amenities to be provided. The role of local councils in approving and overseeing development will be preserved by this legislation. Both the management statement and development contract will be submitted to the local council for approval with the relevant plans. Where people are living closely in a community, conflicts will inevitably arise.

The Community Land Management Bill will establish procedures designed to simplify the running of an association and to avoid disputes by regulating the calling and holding of meetings and the keeping of records and accounts. A community schemes board is to be constituted to hear disputes and a community schemes commissioner will be established. The role and powers of the commissioner and board will be similar to those of the Strata Titles Commissioner and Strata Titles Board. Some amendment to the Strata Titles Act is required to ensure that strata schemes forming part of a community scheme are subject to the by-laws of the community association and the provisions of the community titles legislation. This is done in the Strata Titles (Community Land) Amendment Bill. In addition, the Miscellaneous Acts (Community Land) Amendment Bill will amend various Acts to ensure that, where appropriate, reference is made to the proposed community titles legislation.

The legislation proposed marks a significant advance in land development. By offering a further means of subdivision, traditional concepts of land development can give way to more imaginative and sympathetic approaches to land use. The legislation will promote higher-density housing without loss of amenity and will encourage cheaper accommodation by reducing initial development costs. Commercial development will also be advantaged by providing an appropriate legislative base for projects such as tourist complexes and industrial parks.

(emphasis added)

36. One of the passages emphasised above refers to the developer, at each stage of a community scheme, being "obliged to make binding promises about the facilities to be provided within that stage" in a neighbourhood development contract. There is also provision in the legislation for the developer, if it wishes to do so, to register at the outset a community development contract to which statutory covenants will attach about developing the land in accordance with the development contract and development consent: Development Act s 26 and Schedule 2 to the Management Act: see [47] and [57] below. Such a community development contract was registered in the present case. It and the development consents are at the heart of these proceedings.

Community Land Development Act 1989 (NSW)

37. The preamble to the Development Act states that it is an Act "to facilitate the subdivision and development of land with shared property; and for other purposes". The object of the Development Act is stated in s 4(1) as follows:

Subject to subsection (2), the object of this Act is to facilitate the subdivision of land into parcels for separate development or disposition:

(a) with an interest in associated land in the nature of common or shared property, and
(b) with or without further subdivision (including a subdivision under the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1973) in conjunction with the development of another such parcel or other such parcels.

38. Section 3(2) provides:

This Act is to be interpreted as part of the Real Property Act 1900 but, if there is an inconsistency between them, this Act prevails.

39. "Community scheme" is defined in s 3(1) of the Development Act as follows:

(a) the manner of subdivision of land by a community plan, and
(b) if land in the community plan is subdivided by a precinct plan — the manner of subdivision of the land by the precinct plan, and
(c) the manner of subdivision of land in the community plan, or of land in such a precinct plan, by a neighbourhood plan or a strata plan, and
(d) the proposals in any related development contract, and
(e) the rights conferred, and the obligations imposed, by or under this Act, the Community Land Management Act 1989 and the Strata Schemes (Freehold

[140672]

Development) Act 1973 in relation to the community association, its community property, the subsidiary schemes and persons having interests in, or occupying, development lots and lots in the subsidiary schemes.

40. In the present case, there was a registered community plan and three registered subsidiary neighbourhood plans, but no precinct plan.

41. "Community plan", "neighbourhood plan" and "development contract" are key concepts and are defined in s 3(1) of the Development Act as follows:

community plan means a plan for the subdivision of land into 2 or more community development lots and 1 other lot that is community property, whether or not the plan includes land that, on registration of the plan, would be dedicated as a public road, a public reserve or a drainage reserve.

neighbourhood plan means a plan (other than a community plan, a precinct plan or a strata plan) for the subdivision of land into 2 or more lots for separate occupation or disposition and 1 other lot that is neighbourhood property, whether or not the plan includes land that, on registration of the plan, would be dedicated as a public road, a public reserve or a drainage reserve.

development contract means instruments, plans and drawings that are registered with a community plan, precinct plan or neighbourhood plan and describe the manner in which it is proposed to develop the land in the community plan, precinct plan or neighbourhood plan to which they relate.

42. Other relevant definitions in s 3(1) of the Development Act include the following:

community association means the corporation that:

(a) is constituted by section 25 on the registration of a community plan, and
(b) is established as a community association by section 5 of the Community Land Management Act 1989.

community development lot means a lot in a community plan that is not community property, a public reserve or a drainage reserve and is not land that has become subject to a subsidiary scheme or a lot that has been severed from the community scheme.

community management statement means a statement that is registered with a community plan as a statement of the by-laws and other particulars governing participation in the community scheme.

community parcel means land the subject of a community scheme.

community property means the lot shown in a community plan as community property.

developer means:

(a) in relation to a community scheme — the person who, for the time being, is the registered proprietor of a community development lot in the community plan, or
(b) in relation to a precinct scheme — the person who, for the time being, is the registered proprietor of a precinct development lot in the precinct plan, or
(c) in relation to a neighbourhood scheme — the original proprietor of the neighbourhood parcel.

development, in relation to land, means:

(a) the erection of a building on the land, or
(b) the carrying out of a work in, on, under or over the land, or
(c) the use of the land or of a building or work on the land, or
(d) the subdivision of the land, not excluded by regulations under the Environmental Planning and Assessment Act 1979 from the definition of development in that Act.

development application means an application under Division 1 of Part 4 of the Environmental Planning and Assessment Act 1979 for consent to carry out development.

development consent means consent under Division 1 of Part 4 of the Environmental Planning and Assessment Act 1979 to carry out development.

development lot means a community development lot or a precinct development lot that has not been severed under section 15 from the applicable scheme.

[140673]

neighbourhood association means the corporation that:

(a) is constituted by section 25 on the registration of a neighbourhood plan, and
(b) is established as a neighbourhood association by section 7 of the Community Land Management Act 1989.

neighbourhood lot means land that is a lot in a neighbourhood plan but is not neighbourhood property, a public reserve or a drainage reserve.

neighbourhood property means the lot shown in a neighbourhood plan as neighbourhood property.

neighbourhood scheme means:

(a) the manner of subdivision of land by a neighbourhood plan, and

(b) the proposals in any related development contract, and
(c) the rights conferred, and the obligations imposed, by or under this Act and the Community Land Management Act 1989 in relation to the neighbourhood association, its neighbourhood property and the proprietors and other persons having interests in, or occupying, the neighbourhood lots.

original proprietor, in relation to land, means the registered proprietor in fee simple of the land at the time of registration of a community plan, precinct plan or neighbourhood plan subdividing the land.

scheme means a community scheme, a precinct scheme, a neighbourhood scheme or a strata scheme.

staged scheme means a community scheme or precinct scheme developed in stages.

subsidiary scheme means

(a) in relation to a community scheme — a precinct scheme, neighbourhood scheme or strata scheme that is part of the community scheme, or
(b) in relation to a precinct scheme — a neighbourhood scheme or strata scheme that is part of the precinct scheme.

43. Section 3(4) of the Development Act provides:

A reference in this Act to a development consent, development contract, community management statement, precinct management statement or neighbourhood management statement includes a reference to the consent, contract or statement as from time to time modified or amended in accordance with this Act.

44. Section 5 of the Development Act provides for subdivision of land by the registration of a community plan as a deposited plan and permits registration of a development contract for the community scheme, as follows:

5 Community plan

(1) Land that is not part of a community parcel, precinct parcel, neighbourhood parcel or strata parcel may be subdivided by the registration of a community plan as a deposited plan.

(5) There may be lodged for registration with a community plan a development contract for the community scheme that complies with Schedule 2 and that, on registration, will become binding in accordance with section 15 of the Community Land Management Act 1989.

45. In the present case, development lots were subdivided by neighbourhood plans. This is provided for in s 13(1)(a) of the Development Act:

13 Subdivision of a development lot by a neighbourhood plan or strata plan

(1) A development lot may be subdivided:

(a) by a neighbourhood plan registered as a deposited plan…

46. Section 25 provides for incorporation of a community or neighbourhood association upon registration of a related community or neighbourhood plan:

25 Incorporation of associations

(1) The registration of a community plan operates to constitute a corporation with the corporate name Community Association D.P. No, the number to be inserted being that of the deposited plan registered as the community plan.

[140674]

(3) The registration of a neighbourhood plan operates to constitute a corporation with the corporate name Neighbourhood Association D.P. No, the number to be inserted being that of the deposited plan registered as the neighbourhood plan.
(4) The membership and functions of the corporations are as stated in the Community Land Management Act 1989.

47. A community development contract is optional but a neighbourhood development contract is mandatory. In that regard, section 26 provides as follows:

26 Development contract

(1) If an application for development consent to development in accordance with a proposed community scheme or precinct scheme is accompanied by a proposed development contract, the consent authority may not grant the development consent unless the proposed development contract complies with Schedule 2 and is approved by the consent authority in the approved form.
(2) The consent authority may not grant consent to the subdivision to be effected by a neighbourhood plan unless it also gives approval in the approved form to a proposed development contract for the neighbourhood scheme that complies with Schedule 2 and is lodged with the application for consent.

(5) If development consent approving a development contract is required and is granted, the consent authority must certify on the development contract:

(a) that consent has been granted to the development proposed by the instruments, plans and drawings that comprise the development contract, and
(b) that the instruments, plans and drawings are not inconsistent with the development consent, and must provide the applicant for consent with a copy of the development contract bearing the certificate.

48. Schedule 2 to the Development Act, prescribes matters to be included in a development contract. It relevantly provides:

Schedule 2 Development contracts

(Sections 5, 9, 13, 18, 26)

1 Matters to be included

Unless clause 3 applies, a development contract that relates to a neighbourhood scheme (whether or not it is part of a community scheme) must consist of instruments, plans and drawings that are prepared in the approved form and include, but need not be limited to:

(a) a description of the land to be developed under the scheme, and
(b) a description of the amenities proposed to be provided, and
(c) a description of the basic architectural design and landscaping under the scheme and any theme on which the scheme is based, and
(d) a simple pictorial representation of the anticipated appearance of the completed development, and
(e) any other matter prescribed by the regulations.

2 Inconvenience and damage

Unless clause 3 applies, a development contract for any scheme (whether or not it is a neighbourhood scheme) must include:

(a) details of access and construction zones, working hours and any related rights over association property, and

(b) an undertaking by the developer not to cause unreasonable inconvenience to proprietors of lots in the scheme and to repair without delay any damage caused to association property or common property by development activities, and
(c) such other matters as may be prescribed.

[140675]

4 Warning to be displayed

A development contract (whether or not it relates to a neighbourhood scheme) must prominently display a warning in the prescribed form that draws attention to:

(a) the possibility that the scheme to which it relates may be varied or may not be completed, and
(b) the necessity for prospective purchasers to examine the applicable management statement for details of their rights and obligations under the scheme….

49. It can be seen that cl 1(d) of Schedule 2 requires a "simple pictorial representation of the anticipated appearance of the completed development" to be included in a neighbourhood development contract. Plan 4 in DA 18/90 or the Stage 2 plan in DA 66/92 (annexures A and E to this judgment) would satisfy that requirement. However, in the present case no pictorial representation was included in the neighbourhood development contracts. There is no statutory requirement for a pictorial representation to be included in a community development contract.

50. Clause 39(2) of the Community Land Development Regulation 1990 (NSW) (now repealed and replaced by cl 30 of the Community Land Development Regulation 2007 (NSW)) prescribed that, in addition to containing the matters referred to in Schedule 2 to the Development Act, all development contracts must prominently display on the first page a warning in a prescribed form as follows:

WARNING

(1) This contract contains details of a *neighbourhood/*precinct/*community scheme which is proposed to be developed on the land described in it. Interested persons are advised that the proposed scheme may be varied, but only in accordance with section 16 of the Community Land Management Act 1989.

*If the scheme forms part of a staged development, interested persons are advised of the possibility that the scheme may not be completed and may be terminated by Order of the Supreme Court.

NOTE:

Delete if not applicable.

(2) This contract should not be considered alone, but in conjunction with the results of the searches and inquiries normally made in respect of a lot in the scheme concerned. Attention is drawn in particular to the management statement registered at the Land Titles Office with this contract, which statement sets out the management rules governing the scheme and provides details of the rights and obligations of lot owners under the scheme.
(3) Further particulars about the details of the scheme are available in:

*..... local environmental plan No. .....
*development control plan ..... of ..... Council *development consent dated ..... granted by .....

(4) The terms of this contract are binding on the original proprietor and any purchaser, lessee or occupier of a lot in the scheme. In addition, the original proprietor covenants with the association concerned and with the subsequent proprietors jointly and with each of them severally to develop the land the subject of the scheme in accordance with the development consent as modified or amended with the consent authority's approval from time to time.

51. Section 31 of the Development Act provides for vesting of association property in an association upon registration of a relevant association plan:

31 Vesting of association property

(1) On registration of the plan or dealing by which it is created, association property vests in the relevant association.
(2) Land vests under this section for the estate or interest evidenced by the folio for the land.
(3) On vesting, the land is freed from any mortgage, charge, covenant charge, writ or caveat that affected it immediately before it became association property.
(4) The estate or interest of an association in its association property is held by it:

[140676]

(a) if it has only 1 member — as agent for the member, or
(b) if it has more than 1 member — as agent for all the members as tenants in common in the shares prescribed by section 32.

52. Section 35 provides for easements:

35 Creation, release and variation of easements or restrictions

(1) If authorised by a unanimous resolution, a community association may:

(a) execute a dealing creating an easement which burdens its community property or a restriction on the use of land or a positive covenant which burdens its community property or the whole of the community parcel…

53. Section 70 of the Development Act empowers the Supreme Court to vary a development contract or terminate a staged scheme where completion of a staged scheme has become impracticable, and to vary (or terminate) a scheme where its continuation has become impracticable:

70 Variation or termination of scheme by Supreme Court

(1) If the Supreme Court is satisfied:

(a) that completion of a staged scheme has become impracticable — the Court may vary any applicable development contract or terminate the scheme, or
(b) that continuation of a scheme (whether or not a staged scheme) has become impracticable — the Court may vary or terminate the scheme, or
(c) that the association of a community scheme, each proprietor of a lot within the community scheme and each registered mortgagee, chargee and covenant chargee of a lot within the community scheme have made an application to the Court to terminate the scheme — the Court may vary or terminate the community scheme and any scheme within the community scheme.

(2) An order of the Supreme Court varying a development contract may provide for:

(a) the conversion of a development lot or former development lot to community property or precinct property, or
(b) the conversion of a neighbourhood lot to neighbourhood property, or
(c) the severance from the scheme of a development lot or a neighbourhood lot, or
(d) any other matter the Court considers to be appropriate, just and equitable in the circumstances.

(3) An order of the Supreme Court varying or terminating a scheme may provide for all or any of the following:

(a) the adjustment, exercise and discharge of rights and liabilities under the scheme of an association and its members,

(b) disposal of the assets of an association or of a strata corporation that is a member of an association,
(c) the vesting of estates or interests in land within the staged scheme,
(d) the winding up of an association or of a strata corporation that is a member of an association,
(e) a variation of unit entitlements in accordance with a new valuation,
(f) the registration of a new plan or reversion to a former plan,
(g) any other matter that the Court considers to be appropriate, just and equitable in the circumstances.

(4) If the Supreme Court orders termination of a scheme, the parcel that was subdivided to constitute the scheme is, for the purposes of section 23F of the Conveyancing Act 1919, reinstated as a lot in a current plan.

(5) Subsection (4) does not apply if the Supreme Court orders the lodgment for registration of a current plan for the parcel.

54. It can be seen the Court's discretionary power under s 70 is enlivened if the Court is satisfied that completion of a staged scheme or continuation of a scheme has become impracticable. Continuation of a scheme may have become impracticable because a problem, inherent in the terms of the scheme itself, is eventually seen as inevitably producing impracticability during the life of the scheme. In Community Association DP 270212 v Registrar General for the State of New South Wales (2004) 62 NSWLR 25 at [19]–[22] and [28] Palmer J held:

> In my opinion, s 70(1) does not require the applicant for termination of a scheme to prove that continuation of the scheme is impracticable in the sense of being totally impossible; rather, the applicant must show that in the particular circumstances of the case the scheme cannot continue as a matter of practicality. There is well established authority for construing impracticable in this way.
>
> In Re El Sombrero Ltd [1958] 1 Ch 900, the applicant sought an order convening a meeting of a company under a provision of the Companies Act 1948 (UK) which enabled the court to make such an order if for any reason it is impracticable to call a meeting of the company in any manner in which meetings of that company may be called.
>
> Wynn-Parry J said (at 904):
>
> > …The question then arises, what is the scope of the word impracticable? It is conceded that the word impracticable is not synonymous with the word impossible; and it appears to me that the question necessarily raised by the introduction of that word impracticable is merely this: examine the circumstances of the particular case and answer the question whether, as a practical matter, the desired meeting of the company can be conducted….
>
> In Thornley v Heffernan (McLelland J, 12 September 1995, unreported) McLelland J had to consider the meaning of a clause in the constitution of the Liberal Party of Australia which provided for what could be done if … time or circumstance … make it impracticable to hold a meeting. His Honour, referring to Re El Sombrero Ltd, said (at 8): The expression impracticable in [the relevant clause] does not mean impossible. It directs attention to considerations of a practical rather than a theoretical nature arising out of the particular circumstances … . > I do not think that s 70(1) of the Act always requires the court to find that the continuation of a community scheme has become impracticable because a particular unexpected problem has arisen and has proved to be insoluble. No doubt that situation would be the most common one in which the section would be applied. But in some cases, the court may find that continuation of a scheme has become impracticable because a problem, inherent in the terms of the scheme itself and previously unrecognised, is now seen as inevitably producing impracticability at some time in the future during the life of the scheme. In my opinion, that is the case with the present Community Scheme.

Community Land Management Act 1989 (NSW)

55. The preamble to the Management Act states that it is an Act "to provide for the management of community schemes, precinct schemes and neighbourhood schemes established by the subdivision of land under the Community Land Development Act 1989; and for other purposes". The relevant definitions in s 3(1) are to the same effect as those in the Development Act, and s 3(2) likewise provides:

> This Act is to be interpreted as part of the Real Property Act 1900, but, if there is an inconsistency between them, this Act prevails.

56. Sections 15 and 16 of the Management Act relevantly provide:

> 15 Binding effect of development contract
>
> (1) If a development contract is registered with a community plan, it has effect as if it included an agreement under seal with covenants to the effect of those set out in Part 1 of Schedule 2.
> (3) The development contract registered with a neighbourhood plan has effect as if it included an agreement under seal with covenants to the effect of those set out in Part 3 of Schedule 2.
> [140678]
> (4) Any attempt to exclude, modify or restrict the operation of the covenants is void.
>
>
> 16 Amendment of development contract with approval of association
>
>
> (2) A proposed amendment that involves a change in the basic architectural or landscaping design of the development, or in its essence or theme, may not be made unless it is approved:
>
> (a) by the consent authority, and
> (b) unless the developer is the only member of the association — by unanimous resolution of each association and strata corporation that is a party to the development contract…

57. The plaintiffs rely on Part 1 of Schedule 2 to the Management Act which prescribes the following important covenants in a community development contract lodged with a community plan:

> Part 1 Community schemes
>
> 1 Covenant by original proprietor — community scheme
>
> Under the agreement included by section 15 in a development contract lodged with a community plan, the original proprietor of the land the subject of the community scheme
>
> covenants:
>
> (a) with the subsidiary bodies jointly and with each of them severally, and
> (b) with the subsequent proprietors jointly and with each of them severally, > that the land will be developed in accordance with the development contract and the development consent.
>
>
> 2 Covenants by subsidiary bodies and subsequent proprietors — community scheme
>
> The:
>
> (a) subsidiary bodies, and
> (b) subsequent proprietors, under a community scheme covenant jointly, and each of them covenants severally, with the original proprietor of the land the subject of the community scheme that the original proprietor will be permitted to develop the land in accordance with the development contract and the development consent.

(emphasis added)

58. Mr Jarman in cross-examination indicated that his solicitor who acted on the conveyance of the interest in Lot 16 to Perricoota Company "sort of" made him aware, during the conveyance, of the covenant in cl 2 of Part 1.

59. Although it is not mandatory to lodge a community development contract, in the present case one was lodged with the community plan. It was executed by the original proprietors, Mr Watson and Sammy One. Under s 15 that contract contains the covenants in Part 1 of Schedule 2 to the Management Act. Therefore, the original proprietors, Mr Watson and Sammy One, covenanted that the land would be developed in accordance with the development contract and "the development consent", and the subsequent proprietors — relevantly, Hillington and Perricoota Company — covenanted that they will permit the original proprietors to do so.

60. In the present case, there is a question as to what is the "development consent" referred to in cl 1 of Schedule 2 Part 1 to the Management Act. Generally, it may be anticipated that there will only be one development consent which brings land under the community titles legislation, providing both for subdivision and proposed facilities for the community scheme. In the present case, the community titles legislation commenced about two months after the original DA 18/90 was lodged. Plan 4 accompanying that DA showed proposed facilities. In 1992, DA 66/92 was lodged to effect a subdivision which would bring the land under the community titles legislation. The Stage 2 subdivision plan showed essentially the same facilities as had been shown on Plan 4 accompanying DA 18/90. Hence, in the present case there are two relevant development consents.

61. The plaintiffs submit that under their statutory covenant the original proprietors covenanted to develop the land in accordance with both consents — or at least consent 66/92 — including the plans in the development applications to which the consents related (annexures A to E to this judgment).

62. The mandatory neighbourhood development contract was registered with each of the mooring berth neighbourhood plans. Under s 15(3), each of those contracts contain the covenants found in Part 3 of Schedule 2 to the Management Act. These statutory covenants in a neighbourhood development contract are as follows:

Part 3 Neighbourhood schemes

4 Covenant by original proprietor — neighbourhood scheme

Under the agreement included by section 15 in the development contract lodged with a neighbourhood plan, the original proprietor of the land the subject of the neighbourhood scheme covenants:

(a) with the neighbourhood association, and
(b) with the subsequent proprietors jointly and with each of them severally, that the land will be developed in accordance with the development contract and the development consent.

5 Covenants by neighbourhood associations and subsequent proprietors

The:

(a) neighbourhood association, and
(b) subsequent proprietors, under a neighbourhood scheme covenant jointly, and each of them covenants severally, with the original proprietor of the land the subject of the neighbourhood scheme that the original proprietor will be permitted to develop the land in accordance with the development contract and the development consent.

DEVELOPMENT CONSENT 18/90

The development application

63. On 23 May 1990, upon the instructions of Mr Watson and Sammy One, Mr B Mitsch of Veitch and Mitsch, consulting town planners, lodged DA 18/90 with Murray Shire Council. The application was for a 100 berth marina as Stage 1 and a tourist complex as Stage 2. It described the development for which development consent was sought as follows:

> Marina — initially for 30 river craft with extension to 100 craft Tourist development complex as stage 2.

64. The application stated that the development involved the erection of buildings and that, when erected, their proposed use would be "managers residence — boat storage — tourist accommodation".

65. An environmental impact statement (EIS) accompanied the development application. The EIS included a concept drawing, which showed the proposed development, including houseboat moorings along the northern side of Deep Creek, a speed boat ramp, houseboat ramp, supply jetty, motel, restaurant, units, tennis court, swimming pool, houseboat service centre, manager's residence, office and other facilities. The significance of the manager's residence was emphasised in paragraph 2.5.2 of the EIS, which stated:

> A manager's residence will be incorporated into the project to ensure that day to day activities on the site are carried out in an orderly and environmentally safe manner.

66. In June 1991 a supplementary environmental impact statement (SEIS) was lodged with the council. It included a location map and four plans:

> (a) Plan 1 entitled "Existing Conditions Plan";
> (b) Plan 2 entitled "Landscape Masterplan". It included the notation "Refer to Detailed Landscape Masterplan for enlargement of the central area". This was a reference to Plan 4;
> (c) Plan 3 entitled "Stage One Development Plan"; and > (d) Plan 4 entitled "Detailed Landscape Masterplan".

67. Plan 4 (annexure A to this judgment) shows, among other things, mooring berths, a public wharf, a boat ramp, a manager's residence and a central carpark with (it seems) some 60 car parking spaces. It shows an "access track" roughly parallel with, and some distance to the north of, the eastern moorings with three paths leading from it to those moorings. The position of this "access track" appears to be slightly different from the existing upper vehicular access track to the eastern moorings. There also exists a lower vehicular access track to the eastern moorings, close to and roughly parallel with them, but this lower access track is not shown on Plan 4.

68. The SEIS indicated as follows that Plans 2 and 3 were the "masterplan" for the marina development and that Plan 4 showed Stage 1 of the development:

> …[The developers] propose a carefully staged development, to include a 100 houseboat marina with full service facilities, cabin style family accommodation, motel and restaurant facilities.
>
> The existing conditions of the proposed development site are illustrated on Plan 1.
>
> The Masterplan for the marina development is shown on Plans 2 and 3. Plan 2 shows the whole development site including the marina's relationship to the lagoon and Murray River, the proposed road access, fencing of the island and recycled-water woodlot. Plan 3 illustrates the detailed masterplan for the development, showing mooring sites, boat ramp and jetty, kiosk, cabin and motel accommodation, sewage pump out treatment facilities, fuel supply location, restaurant, carparks, tracks and roads.
> Stage One of the development will see the construction of the marina facilities. This includes 100 houseboat moorings, kiosk, sewage pump out and fuel supply facilities, manager's residence, carpark, dry storage area and associated storage and maintenance structures. Stage One of the marina development is shown on Plan 4. Stage One will be implemented over a 12 month period to be completed by December 1992 and can be divided into 4 phases. The first phase will commence in September and will include excavation of the creek, entrance, construction of 30 moorings and associated earthworks, establishing gravel entrance roads and sewage system, power and water supply, fencing, stormwater retention wetland and site planting.

During Phase 2, all of the buildings associated with Stage One, a further 30 moorings and houseboat hardstand area will be constructed and the fuel supply installed.

During Phase 3, the winter months, there will be no construction.

In the final phase of Stage One, the remaining 40 moorings will be constructed, all roads will be surfaced and further site planting will occur.

69. Paragraph 4.2 of the SEIS stated that the Landscape Masterplan (Plan 2) showed the main features of the proposed marina and associated facilities:

4.2 THE MARINA DEVELOPMENT

The Landscape Masterplan which is reproduced in the Introduction to this Supplementary EIS shows the main features of the proposed marina and associated facilities. The Masterplan shows sufficient detail for the purposes of EIS assessment. Further details of site development and construction will be provided once approval for the project had been obtained

70. Also enclosed with the SEIS was a large scale map entitled "Map 1: Location Map". It showed a large area on both sides of the Murray River with a relatively small shaded part marked "Deep Creek Proposed Marina".

71. The SEIS addressed the public components of the proposal, including the public wharf, in paragraph 4.1.6:

4.1.6 The Department of Conservation and Environment raises the issue of the provision of a public component in the development of such facilities as the proposed marina.

While the main objective of the marina proposal (as encapsulated in the Stage 1 Development Plan) is the provision of mooring and associated facilities for houseboats, there is also provision for public components in the proposal. It is envisaged that the general public will have access to the restaurant, motel and cabin components of the development, the kiosk, wharf area, picnic facilities and public conveniences and to the area to the east of the creek which is to be established as a native flora and fauna area with access provided by canoes or rowing boats.

The pump out and re-fuelling facilities would also be available to other river users.

72.

Paragraph 4.2.20 addressed the sealing of the main access road and the surfaces of other roads and carparks as follows:

The main access road into the site will be sealed with asphalt and 6.2 metres in width. Access roads to the restaurant and public wharf will also be asphalt sealed. It is proposed that all other roads, and the carparks and houseboat storage area be surfaced with gravel. It is envisaged that these gravel surfaces will fit more comfortably into the rural landscape character of the development while proving satisfactory for access and storage purposes.

73. Paragraph 4.4 noted that the NSW State Pollution Control Commission's main area of concern related to the "marina's likely impact on water quality of the Murray River and a proper effluent management plan for the treatment and disposal of all … effluent from the complex".

74. On 10 September 1991, the council's Health and Building Surveyor submitted a Special Report to the ordinary meeting of Murray Shire Council. It described the application as being for the following development:

Stage 1 is proposed to include excavation of the creek entrance, construction of 30 moorings and associated earthworks, gravel entrance road, sewerage system, power and water supply, fencing, stormwater retention wetland and site planting.

Stage 2 a further 30 mooring sites and houseboat hardstand area and fuel supply installed.

Stage 3 the remaining 40 mooring sites will be constructed, roads will be surfaced and site planting.

To support the Marina development also proposed is a boat ramp and jetty, kiosk, cabin and motel accommodation, sewage pump out facility, fuel supply, restaurant, carpark, managers residence, storage sheds, workshop and houseboat storage area.

Development consent

75. At a meeting on 10 September 2001, Murray Shire Council conditionally approved DA 18/90. The notice of determination was signed by the Shire Clerk on 12 September 1991. The notice stated that the conditions of consent were "as per attached letter". The attached letter was dated 12 September 1991. In the letter the council notified Mr Mitsch that it had granted development consent and set out the conditions of approval.

76. It is necessary to pay close attention to the terms of the notice and the letter because there is an issue of construction about whether the consent incorporated the terms of the development application, particularly the enclosed plans, as the plaintiffs contend. The notice, after identifying Mr Mitsch as the applicant in respect of DA 18/90, stated:

PURSUANT TO SECTION 92 OF THE ACT NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN OF THE DETERMINATION BY CONSENT AUTHORITY OF THE DEVELOPMENT APPLICATION

NO: 18/90 RELATING TO THE LAND DESCRIBED AS FOLLOWS:

PART PORTION 19, PARISH OF BENARCA

THE DEVELOPMENT APPLICATION HAS BEEN DETERMINED BY:

*~~(a) GRANTING OF CONSENT UNCONDITIONALLY;~~

*(b) GRANTING OF CONSENT SUBJECT TO THE CONDITIONS SPECIFIED IN THIS NOTICE;

*~~(c) REFUSING OF CONSENT.~~

THE CONDITIONS OF THE CONSENT ARE SET OUT AS FOLLOWS:

AS PER ATTACHED LETTER

THE REASONS FOR THE *IMPOSITION OF THE CONDITIONS/THE REFUSAL ARE SET OUT AS FOLLOWS:

AS PER ATTACHED LETTER.

77. The terms of the attached letter dated 12 September 1991 from the council to Mr Mitsch bear on the issue of whether the development application, particularly the enclosed plans, forms part of the development consent. The letter stated:

Development Consent 18/90

Deep Creek Marina and Tourist Development

Part Portion 19, Parish of Benarca

[140682]

Council resolved at the meeting of 10th September, 1991 to grant development consent for the abovementioned Marina and tourist development subject to the following conditions: —

Stage 1

1. That a concrete regulator be constructed across the entrance of Deep Creek to the River. This regulator shall be constructed so that at low river an acceptable level of water is retained in Deep Creek.

The regulator shall be constructed to a design and finished to a level approved by the Shire Engineer.
2. The sewerage system shall be installed to the requirements of the State Pollution Control Commission.
3. Gravel roads shall be constructed to a design and standard approved by the Shire Engineer.

Stage 2

4. The houseboat storage area shall be surfaced with crushed rock and be screened from the main road by the planting of suitable screens of advanced trees.
5. The fuel supplies shall be installed to the requirements of the Dangerous Goods Branch of the Department of Labour and Industry. Bund walls shall be provided around fuel storage areas.
6. The access road shall be surfaced with bitumen and the intersection with the main road shall be constructed to a standard required by the Traffic Committee.

General

7. Water testing as specified by Council's Health Surveyor shall be carried out in Deep creek on a monthly basis and on the sewage treatment plant on a half yearly basis. The results of these tests shall be forwarded to Council.
8. Water quality within the Marina shall be maintained to a base standard which will be a standard set by water sampling before work on the Marina commences.
9. Approval under Section 21D of the Soil Conservation Act shall be obtained for removal or pruning of any tree within 20 metres of the bank of the river.
10. Approval shall be obtained from the Department of Water Resources for any excavation works proposed to the River bank and the boat ramp.
11. A potable water supply shall be provided for the motel, cabins, restaurant and kiosk.
12. Buildings shall not be constructed nearer than 60 metres from the bank of the River or Deep Creek.
13. Internal roads and parking areas shall be sealed with bitumen when restaurant, motel and cabins are developed.
14. Houseboats shall not be occupied for more than three consecutive days while moored within the Marina.
15. The destruction of any tree not being permitted in the proposed wild life refuge area.
16. All buildings to be finished in a colour that blends into the surrounding landscape.
17. One sign only of an approved size being permitted on the entrance to the development.
18. Moorings within the Marina shall be restricted to the area shown on the map in the supplementary Environmental Impact Statement.
19. Access to the sewage treatment works shall be from within the property and a separate entrance to this facility shall not be permitted from the main road.
20. Stock shall be fenced off from Deep Creek.

The reasons for the imposition of the conditions are sit [sic] out as follows:—

1. To retain an acceptable level of water within Deep Creek at all times.
2. To prevent pollution.
3. To provide safe access.
4. To provide all weather access to vessels and for aesthetic reasons.
5. To comply with legislation and prevent pollution.
6. To provide all weather access and for traffic safety reasons.
7. To check on possible pollution.
8. To provide a base sample for comparison.
9. As required by legislation.

[140683]

10. As required by legislation.
11. For health reasons.
12. To comply with legislation and Councils code.
13. To provide all weather access.
14. To comply with legislation.
15. For conservation reasons.
16. For aesthetic reasons.
17. For aesthetic reasons.
18. To comply with the Environmental Impact Statement.
19. For traffic safety.
20. To reduce pollution.

78. In cross-examination Mr Watson agreed that this development consent included consent to Plan 4. I do not consider that his view is relevant to the construction issue although it may be relevant to discretionary relief if the case reaches that stage.

DEVELOPMENT CONSENT 66/92

Development application

79. On 7 October 1992, Mr Mitsch lodged DA 66/92 which described the development for which consent was sought as: "Community title subdivision to create 1 community scheme and 2 two neighbourhood schemes". The consent of the owners, Mr Watson and Sammy One, appeared on the application.

80. Accompanying DA 66/92 was a letter from Mr Mitsch dated 7 October 1992. The letter explained that consent was sought to a subdivision in two stages, to be effected under the terms of the new community title legislation, involving a community association and neighbourhood associations.

81. The first stage was described in Mr Mitsch's letter as follows:

Lot 1 — Association Property

This association property includes:

1. access way
2. central carpark
3. foreshore area
4. sewerage pump station
5. effluent disposal site
6. that part of the lagoon area not included in the individual berths

Lot 2–11 — Development Lots.

These future development Lots are designed to be further subdivided in a neighbourhood lots and each of the development lots will provide for approximately 10 individual lots of one berth each.

Neighbourhood Development Contracts and Neighbourhood Management Statements will be prepared for each of these subdivisions and will be approved by Council prior to lodgement at the Titles Office.

82. The second stage was described in Mr Mitsch's letter as follows:

Development of Lot 12 —

This is the residue parcel and is designed to be further subdivided into neighbourhood lots to comprise the following:

Neighbourhood Lot 1 will comprised [sic] the open space consisting of the wildlife refuge on the island and the Murray River Foreshore setback Area.
Neighbourhood Lot 2 will incorporate the Motel Unit and the Restaurant area.
Neighbourhood Lot 3 will incorporate:

1. Managers Residence

2. Houseboat Storage Area
3. Houseboat Maintenance Area
4. Wharf and Fuel Supply Area
5. General Store
6. Small Storage Shed

Neighbourhood Lot 4 will incorporate the holiday cabins, tennis court and swimming pools.

Neighbourhood Lot 5 will comprise the residue farming land area and will be utilised for small scale farming activities which will be compatible with the overall development. These will form part of an agriculture based tourist park.

83. Mr Mitsch's letter explained that:

> Each stage of the development involves the incorporation of a association, i.e community association for the overall development and neighbourhood associations for the further subdivisions. These associations are controlled by the > appropriate Development Contract and a Management Statement. The Development Contracts and Management Statements form part of the title to the individual Lots and are lodged at the Land Titles Office with the subdivision plan. They are binding on not only the proprietors of the land but also successors in title. Both Development Contract and Management Statement are approved by Council. The Development Contract cannot be varied except with Councils consent.

84. His letter referred to access as follows:

> The access way to the site will be part of the community association property and will be established as a private access way. This remains vested in the community association which is responsible for the maintenance and upkeep of that facility. A private access way allows the community association to control and limit its use to those members of the association and their guests.

85. The letter enclosed drafts of a community management statement, community development contract, neighbourhood management statement and neighbourhood development contract.

86. A "Subdivision Outline", which formed part of DA 66/92, included the following description:

1. COMMUNITY SUBDIVISION

3 LOTS;

LOT 1:	Association Property Managed by Community Association in accordance with the Development Contract and the Management statement.
LOTS 2–11	Development lots; To be subdivided into individual berths by neighbourhood plans.
LOT 12:	Development lot; Further development for Marina Complex in accordance with Development Contract.

2. NEIGHBOURHOOD SUBDIVISIONS

LOT 1:	Association Property Managed by Precinct Association in accordance with Development Contract and Management Statement.
LOT 2–12 inclusive:
LOT 2	Motel Units and Restaurant
LOT 3	Managers Residence Houseboat Storage Houseboat Maintenance Wharf Fuel Supplies General Store Storage Shed
LOT 4	Holiday Cabins Tennis Court Swimming Pool
LOT 5	Residue Farm Agriculture

Subdivision plans accompanying DA 66/92

87. Among the documents accompanying DA 66/92 were three Stage 1 subdivision plans described as "Community Plan of Subdivision 3 Sheets" (copies are annexures B, C and D to this judgment). These plans indicated in green that the community property would include a substantial part of the foreshores and the whole of the waters of Deep Creek, a carpark, a boat ramp, and an access road from the Moama-Barham Road (called Perricoota Road). On the third of those plans (annexure D to this judgment) under "carpark" appear the words "see EIS for details". On the second of those plans (annexure C to this judgment) in relation to the general store and storage shed shown on

Lot 12 also appear the words "see EIS for details". A "public wharf" is shown as part of Lot 12 on those two plans.

88. The "Lots 2–11 Development Lots" in Stage 1 referred to in Mr Mitsch's letter were the proposed neighbourhood development lots for marina berths on the northern bank of the lagoon. Because of the demand for marina berths they were truncated to three neighbourhood mooring lots — Lots 2, 3 and 4 — by the time the community plan came to be registered (one sheet is annexure F to this judgment). I have called them the Central, Western and Eastern Neighbourhoods (see [26] above). Later, Lot 4 came to be re-numbered as Lot 6.

89. Also accompanying DA 66/92 was a Stage 2 subdivision plan (annexure E to this judgment). As noted above, Mr Mitsch's letter designated Stage 2 as the development of residual Lot 12 by subdivision into five neighbourhood lots. The Stage 2 subdivision plan is described on its face "Stage 2 Subdivision Lot 12 Proposed Community Title Subdivision". It shows essentially the same facilities and the same upper eastern "access track" as is shown on Plan 4 in DA 18/90 (annexure A to this judgment). The Stage 2 plan shows the Stage 1 subdivision area in white and the Stage 2 subdivision of Lot 12 in various colours. Within the Stage 2 subdivision of Lot 12 it shows the Stage 2 neighbourhood subdivision Lots 1 to 5 described in the Subdivision Outline (accompanying DA 66/92) and in Mr Mitsch's letter. (The Stage 2 Lots 1 to 5 should not be confused with the Stage 1 Lots 1 to 11). Lot 3 within Stage 2 is shown as including a general store and a storage shed in areas which are respectively now Lots 14 and 15; the public wharf; and part of what is now Lot 16 on which appear a manager's residence and houseboat storage area. The Stage 2 plan also shows a 100 metre setback from the Murray River adjoining the mooring neighbourhood Lots 2 and 4. Lot 5 within Stage 2 (most of which is now Lot 16) in fact extends all the way up to Perricoota Road. Ultimately,

> (a) Stage 2 Lot 4, most of Lot 2 and part of Lot 1 comprising part of the setback area to the Murray River north of Deep Creek shown on the Stage 2 subdivision plan became the Honeyman Lot (also known as "Murray Rivers Edge"), which has been approved by the council for development as holiday accommodation, part of which has been completed;
> (b) part of Stage 2 Lot 3, where the general store and storage shed are shown, was first developed and used by the original developers as a restaurant/bar and store. It was later sold and eventually became Lots 14 and 15 on which there now are, respectively, a hotel/ restaurant and supermarket;
> (c) the remainder of Stage 2 Lot 3 stayed in the ownership of the developers and is now part of Lot 16, which includes the original Lot 5.

Mr Watson's evidence

90. In cross-examination Mr Watson agreed that:

> (a) the reference to "central carpark" in Mr Mitsch's letter was a reference to the central carpark shown on Plan 3 accompanying DA 18/90;
> (b) the reference to "foreshore area" in Mr Mitsch's letter could have been a reference to the land on the northern side of Deep Creek between Murray River and the 100 metre setback from the River shown on Plan 4;
> (c) the "effluent disposal site" referred to in Mr Mitsch's letter was a parcel of land adjoining the Moama-Barham Road (i.e. Perricoota Road), which Mr Mitsch later deleted from the community plan before it was registered;

(d) at that time "that part of the lagoon area not included in the individual berths" was owned by the Lands Department. Mr Watson had told the Lands Department he wanted to acquire it to incorporate it into a community title development. The community title development which he then proposed was to transfer it into community association property; and
(e) when DA 66/92 was made he intended the public wharf to be freely available to the general public.

[140686]

Council report

91. The council's Health and Building Surveyor's Report dated 14 October 1992 commented on DA 66/92 that:

> The proposal appears to be in accordance with Council Consent 18/90 with the exception that individual phases of the development will be subdivided into neighbourhood lots.

Development consent

92. The notice of determination of conditional consent to DA 66/92 signed by the shire clerk was dated 26 October 1992. It is necessary to set out its contents because (as with the notice of determination of DA 18/90) the plaintiffs submit that on its proper construction it incorporated the development application and, in particular, the accompanying plans (annexures B — E to this judgment). The notice is in the same standard form as was used for development consent 18/90. It was addressed to Veitch and Mitsch and described them as "the applicant in respect of development application 66/92". The notice then stated:

> PURSUANT TO SECTION 92 OF THE ACT NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN OF THE DETERMINATION BY CONSENT AUTHORITY OF THE DEVELOPMENT APPLICATION NO: 66/92 RELATING TO THE LAND DESCRIBED AS FOLLOWS:
>
> Lot 1, DP 16892 Parish of Benarca
>
> THE DEVELOPMENT APPLICATION HAS BEEN DETERMINED BY:
>
> * ~~(a) GRANTING OF CONSENT UNCONDITIONALLY;~~
> * (b) GRANTING OF CONSENT SUBJECT TO THE CONDITIONS SPECIFIED IN THIS NOTICE;
> * ~~(c) REFUSING OF CONSENT.~~
>
> THE CONDITIONS OF THE CONSENT ARE SET OUT AS FOLLOWS:
>
> As per attached letter.
>
> THE REASONS FOR THE * IMPOSITION OF THE CONDITIONS/THE REFUSAL ARE SET OUT AS FOLLOWS:
> As per attached letter.

93. The "attached letter" referred to in the notice was a letter dated 26 October 1992 from the council to Veitch and Mitsch. The letter was entitled: "Community Titles Subdivision — Consent 66/92 Lot 1, DP 16892, Parish of Benarca Owner: Anthony Rupert Watson and Sammy One Pty Ltd Your reference : 6616/89–90". That reference appeared on Mr Mitsch's subdivision plans (annexures B to E to this judgment) and on Mr Mitsch's letter of 7 October 1992 which accompanied the development application, referred to at [80] above. The council's letter of 26 October 1992 then stated:

> Council resolved at the meeting on 20th October, 1992 to grant consent for the proposed subdivision subject to:—
> a) The submission of formal subdivision plans, community development contracts, community management statements, neighbourhood development contracts and neighbourhood management statements.
> b) Conditions 1, 2, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19 and 20 of consent 18/90 being complied with.

c) That no buildings being permit [sic] on Neighbourhood Development Lots 2–11 (moorings or berths).
d) That the neighbourhood management statement require all vessels moored at the Development lots to be able to move under their own power and be a vessel registered with the Maritime Services Board.

The reasons for the imposition of the conditions are as follows.

a) To comply with legislation
b) To comply with conditions of a previous consent.
c) For aesthetic reasons.
d) For aesthetic reasons.

SUBMISSION OF FORMAL SUBDIVISION DOCUMENTATION TO COUNCIL: OCTOBER 1994

94. The council granted subdivision development consent 66/92 subject to submission of formal subdivision plans and other documents. On 12 October 1994 Mr Mitsch, on Mr Watson's instructions, wrote to the council "Re: Community Title Subdivision —

[140687]

Consent 66/92…". The letter concluded by requesting the council to certify and return for lodgement at the Land Titles Office the original and two copies of the following documents, which were enclosed:

(1) a community plan in six sheets;
(2) a neighbourhood plan in five sheets;
(3) a community development contract;
(4) a community management statement;
(5) a neighbourhood development contract;
(6) a neighbourhood management statement.

95. The letter also stated:

> We refer to your letter of the 26th October 1992 in which you advised that a community title subdivision of the above described land had been approved by your Council subject to the conditions imposed therein.
>
> We have now been instructed to proceed with the subdivision survey and enclose herewith the formal plans together with Community Development Contract, Community Management Statement, Neighbourhood Development Contract and Neighbourhood Management Statement.
>
> The original proposal as approved was to create the neighbourhood or marina berth lots in ten separate stages i.e. as shown as lots 2 to 11 inclusive on the plans which accompanied the original application. Enquiry for these lots has been such that it is now intended to create these neighbourhood lots in three stages only.
>
> Stage 1 of the development will now comprise the creation of 45 separate marina berth lots together with two future development lots for marina berths with the balance of the land being held in one lot. This balance of the land will be developed for future use as per the approval to the marina proper and associated works. These are shown more specifically on the Environmental Impact Statements and supplementary Environmental Impact Statement which accompanied that application.
>
> It should be noted that the island, which is to form a wildlife sanctuary, is now to be created as community property at Stage 1 of the development. It was originally proposed that this would be part of the community development lot and created as common property at a future stage. Again because of the demand for marina berth lots it is felt expedient to create this as community property at day 1.
>
> Apart from minor variations in the position of the boundaries due to physical features found on survey the layout generally conforms with that approved in Council's approval referred to above.
> (emphasis added)

96. The last sentence of this letter was, in my opinion, deceptive. The layout "approved in Council's approval" was the layout in Mr Mitsch's subdivision plans enclosed with DA 66/92 (annexures B to E to this judgment). As discussed above, those plans showed the waters and much of the foreshores of Deep Creek as community property. In the community plan enclosed with the letter, the waters and foreshores were no longer shown as community property but as part of a development lot owned by the developers (now Lot 16). The community plan was later registered in that form, except for an amendment deleting the effluent disposal block on Perricoota Road (annexure F to this judgment). Mr Watson in cross-examination agreed that there were no "physical features" found on survey which might have justified the land behind the Eastern Neighbourhood berths up to and including the access road shown on Plan 4 becoming the developers' land.

97. This gross disappearance of community property may be viewed as the seminal cause of many of the plaintiffs' grievances as they emerged more than a decade later when the developers closed vehicular access to the mooring berths and closed the public wharf.

98. There was limited reference, in the cross-examination or re-examination of Mr Watson and Mr Bird, to the reason for the disappearance of the lagoon as community property in the registered community plan. In cross-examination Mr Watson said he thought it was a result of discussions between Mr Mitsch and council planning people. In re-examination he said that Mr Mitsch had regular discussions with council officers to check how they wanted certain matters treated. He said Mr Mitsch told him that they wanted Mr Watson to be responsible for the water quality because this was the first inland marina in New South Wales, no-one knew what sort of effect it would have on water quality, and they wanted Mr Watson to keep a very close eye on it. Because of that, he understood the council wanted him to retain ownership of the lagoon and the registered plans were altered to reflect that.

99. Mr Bird, a planning consultant to the current developers, said in re-examination that Mr Mitsch had explained to him that the developer was responsible for water quality, sediment and soil erosion control during the development and that that was not practical if the developer did not control the land. He said Mr Mitsch indicated there was significant snagging in the narrower part of the most eastern part of the creek and the sediment control required the land to the north to be the developers' land, as well as the water. This evidence was given unclearly and I am left in doubt as to whether this was said to be a requirement of the council or a requirement of the developers.

100. This evidence from Mr Watson and Mr Bird was an unsatisfactory form of proof of something which goes to a central issue in the case. It is double hearsay. Mr Mitsch appears to have been available to be called as a witness but was not called. No explanation for his non-appearance has been provided. I draw the inference that he could have said nothing which would have assisted the developers' case.

101. Even if I were not to draw that inference, I would regard this evidence of council officers' wishes as unreliable. If the explanation for the transfer of so much community property, shown in the DA 66/92 plans, to the developers lay in a wish of some council officers that the developers should control water quality, one would expect that to have been stated as a condition of development consent or in the council report in evidence or at least in a written communication from the council, and to have been referred to in Mr Mitsch's letter. I am unable to see why the expression of a wish by some council officers that the developers be responsible for water quality should have been interpreted by the developers as a council requirement that the developers had to own the lagoon and foreshores which had been designated as community property in development consent 66/92. It could have been achieved in some other way, such as by a provision in the community management statement. A wish of these unidentified council officers at some unidentified time could not negate council's development consent 66/92 for a subdivision in which the lagoon and foreshores were in the ownership of the community association.

102. In any event, even if this evidence were to be accepted, I see no reason why the lagoon and foreshores should not now become an accretion to the community property as claimed by the plaintiffs and provided for in the subdivision plans accompanying DA 66/92, if the plaintiffs' claim is otherwise made out.

THE COMMUNITY PLAN

103. On 5 December 1994 the six sheets of the community plan submitted by Mr Mitsch to the council on 12 October 1994 were endorsed with the council clerk's signature, indicating council's approval.

104. On 3 January 1995, Mr Mitsch made amendments to the community plan, by deleting part of Lot 5 on Perricoota Road (a detached block) and an easement for effluent disposal connecting the subject land to that lot.

105. On 17 January 1995 the community plan was registered as DP 270076. One of the sheets is annexure F to this judgment. Registered with the community plan were a community management statement and community development contract executed by the original developers, Mr Watson and Sammy One.

106. The registered community plan showed Lot 1 as community property, including the access road from Perricoota Road with a "claw" at the end of it around most of what is now Lot 14 (the hotel/restaurant) and Lot 15 (the supermarket), which were then part of the developers' Lot 5 (now Lot 16). As noted above at [96], Lot 5 (now Lot 16) was shown as including most of the subject land including the waterway and foreshores. Lots 2, 3 and 4 (Lot 4 is now Lot 6) were the mooring berth areas and later came to be the Central, Western and Eastern Neighbourhood Association lots.

The registered community plan burdened Lot 5 (now Lot 16) with an easement for access of variable width over the lagoon and benefited Lot 1 (the community association lot) and Lots 2, 3 and 4 (the three mooring neighbourhood association lots). The terms of this easement were as follows:

> Full and free right for every person who is at any time entitled to an estate or interest in possession in the land herein indicated as the dominant tenement or any part thereof with which the right shall be capable of enjoyment, and every person authorised by him, to go, pass and repass at all times and for all purposes with or without boats to and from the said dominant tenement or any such part thereof.

108. The registered community plan also showed that an easement was granted to the council for effluent disposal adjoining the Murray River (on the northern side of Deep Creek) five metres wide together with an associated right-of-carriageway over land designated as part of Lot 5 but which the DA 66/92 plans had proposed would be community property.

THE COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT CONTRACT

109. The community development contract registered with the community plan on 17 January 1995 was executed by Mr Watson and Sammy One. Under s 15(1) of the Management Act, it had effect as if it included an agreement under seal with covenants to the effect of those set out in Part 1 of Schedule 2 to that Act: see [56]–[57] above. It contained the council's certificate which certified:

> (a) that the consent authority has approved of the development described in the Development Application No. 18/90; and > (b) that the terms and conditions of this development contract are not inconsistent with the Development as approved.

110. The "proposals" in the registered community development contract form part of the "community scheme" as defined in s 3 of the Development Act: see [39] above. The plaintiffs rely on proposals in that contract.

111. The preliminary part of the contract is entitled "Warning". Paragraphs 1 to 4 of the "Warning" are in the form prescribed by the cl 4 of Schedule 2 to the Development Act and cl 39 of the Community Land Development Regulation 1990, referred to at [48] and [50] above (now cl 30 of the Community Land Development Regulation 2007). The provisions of Parts 1 and 2 of the contract were prescribed in Schedule 2 to the Development Act.

112. The community development contract includes the following provisions:

> 1. This contract contains details of a community scheme which is proposed to be developed on the land described in it. Interested persons are advised that the proposed scheme may be varied, but only in accordance with Section 16 of the Community Land Management Act 1989.

The scheme forms part of a staged development, interested persons are advised of the possibility that the scheme may not be completed and may be terminated by order of the Supreme Court.
2. The development contract should not be considered alone, but in conjunction with the results of the searches and enquiries normally made in respect of a lot in a scheme. Attention is drawn in particular to the management statement registered at the Land Titles Office with this contract, which statement sets out the management rules governing the scheme and provides details of the rights and obligations of lot owners under the scheme.
3. Further particulars about the scheme are available in the:

Development Consent No. 18/90

granted by the Council of the Shire of Murray

dated the 12th September, 1991
4. The terms of this contract are binding on the original proprietor and any purchaser, lessee or occupier of a lot in the scheme. In addition, the original proprietor covenants with the association concerned and with the subsequent proprietors jointly and with each of them severally to develop the land subject of the scheme in accordance with the development consent as modified or amended with the consent authority's approval from time to time.

5. Any reference to Development Consent is a reference to that part of the Development consent that relates to the neighbourhood scheme only.
6. For the purposes of this Contract the particulars in the Development Consent referred to above relate to the Neighbourhood Scheme.

PART 1

DESCRIPTION OF DEVELOPMENT

1.1. DESCRIPTION OF LAND

The land to be developed is Lot 12 in Deposited Plan No. 846348 in the Local Government Area of Murray, Parish of Benarca, County of Cadell and State of New South Wales.

The land is to be developed for the purposes of a marina (known as the Deep Creek Marina) and associated works as detailed in Development Application to the Council of the Shire of Murray dated 23rd May 1990.

1.2. AMENITIES

1.2.1. All electricity services are to be provided by the developer.

1.2.2. The developer is to provide a sealed access way in accordance with the Development Consent.

1.3. FURTHER DEVELOPMENT

1.3.1. All driveways are to be sealed in accordance with the Development Consent No 18/90 issued by the Council of the Shire of Murray on the 12th September 1991.

1.3.2. Community Development Lots 2, 3 and 4 are to be further subdivided into neighbourhood lots for the purpose of houseboat berths.

1.3.3. Community Development Lot 5 is to be developed in a further subdivision to provide facilities incorporated in the Development Consent in accordance with plans approved by the Council of the Shire of Murray. (Refer Development Consent No 18/90 dated 12th September 1991.)

PART 2

ORIGINAL PROPRIETOR'S RIGHTS AND UNDERTAKING

2.1. ACCESS AND CONSTRUCTION AREAS

Working hours 7.00 a.m. to 5.30 p.m. Monday to Friday inclusive.

Access will be via Public Roads adjoining the Parcel.

During the construction period access is limited to community property only and roads within the Community Parcel.

2.2. UNDERTAKING BY THE ORIGINAL PROPRIETOR TO REPAIR

The developer undertakes not to cause unreasonable inconvenience to proprietors of lots in the scheme during the course of construction and should any damage occur, to repair without delay, damage caused to community property by development activities.

113. There were some differences between the provisions of the registered community development contract and the provisions of the draft community development contract which had been enclosed with DA 66/92. Among the differences were that paragraphs 5 and 6 of the former were not in the latter. Mr Watson agreed in cross-examination that at the time of the draft community development contract in October 1992, his intention was: (a) to develop the land as shown in the Stage 2 plan accompanying DA 66/92 (annexure E to this judgment); (b) to provide motor vehicle access along the access track shown on that plan so that people could get near their berths when they wanted to use their boats; (c) for the boat ramp shown thereon to be open for people to launch and retrieve boats; (d) for there to be motor vehicle access to and from the public wharf as shown on that plan; and (e) to provide all sewerage, water and electricity services.

114. In relation to cl 3 of the "Warning" section of the community development contract, Mr Watson agreed that his understanding was that the proposal in the development contract was to develop the land in accordance with Plan 4 (annexure A to this judgment).

115. I do not think that Mr Watson's subjective intention or understanding is relevant to the interpretation of the contract. It may be relevant to the exercise of the statutory discretion to vary the community scheme or contract if that point in the case is reached.

THE COMMUNITY MANAGEMENT STATEMENT

116. The community management statement registered with the community plan on 17 January 1995 contained the following reference to Plan 4 enclosed with DA 18/90:

> Landscaping to individual parcels and association property is to be carried out in accordance with Plan No. 4 submitted with the supplementary Environment Impact Statement lodged with the Council (Development Consent No 18/90).

117. The community management statement contained the following by-law 4.21 concerning boat traffic and usage:

> BOAT TRAFFIC AND USAGE
>
> 4.21.1 The Community Association shall have control of all aspects of boat traffic and boat usage within the Community Parcel
>
> 4.21.2 The Community Association may empower any person or persons to control all aspects of boat traffic and usage with the Community Parcel in accordance with its powers under By-law 4.21.1 hereof.
>
> 4.21.3 Any person in charge of a boat within the Community Parcel shall comply with all directions given pursuant to By-laws 4.21.1 and 4.21.2.

118. This by-law, in my view, naturally belongs with ownership of the waters of Deep Creek by the community association, which was what had been indicated in the plans accompanying DA 66/92

(annexures B — E to this judgment). It sits most uncomfortably with the developers' ownership of the waters of Deep Creek under the registered community plan, the developers' exercise of control when granting an easement of access over the waters in favour of the adjacent marina to the east on Lot 23, and the developers' closure for a time in 2005 of the boat ramp to all boat traffic and boat usage. Given that ownership of the lagoon and foreshores is vested in the developers, I am unable to agree with the developers' submission that it is unsurprising that the community association should be the boat traffic policeman under the by-law.

THE MOORING NEIGHBOURHOOD PLANS

119. In 1995, 1997 and 1998, the developers registered three neighbourhood plans for mooring berths, which had been approved by the council, together with neighbourhood development contracts and management statements. Under each registered neighbourhood plan, neighbourhood property was limited to a two metre wide strip adjacent to the mooring berths. Another two metre wide strip of community land was adjacent to the Central Neighbourhood Association's two metre wide strip and extended for a metre or two further, so as to just overlap with the beginning of the Western and Eastern Neighbourhoods. These strips provide the only registered legal land access to the marina berths. Much of this access is uneven and in places impeded, including by large trees.

Central Neighbourhood

120. On 19 January 1995 the neighbourhood plan (in five sheets), neighbourhood development contract and neighbourhood management statement for DP 285249 (Central Neighbourhood) were registered. This first neighbourhood plan created 45 mooring berths. These mooring berths are rectangular parcels of land lying below Deep Creek and including up to a few inches of dry land abutting the edge of Deep Creek, and so, in most cases, including some or all of the red-gum retaining wall installed by the developers. The plan shows a two metre wide strip of neighbourhood property running along the foreshore next to the houseboat mooring berths. Another two metre wide strip of community land was adjacent to the neighbourhood strip and extended for a metre or two further so as to just overlap with the beginning of the Western and Eastern Neighbourhoods. The plaintiffs claim specific performance and/or damages for breach of clause 1.2.1 of the neighbourhood development contract which provides: "All telecom and electricity services are to be provided to each lot by the developer".

Western Neighbourhood

121. On 30 September 1997 the neighbourhood plan (in four sheets), neighbourhood development contract and neighbourhood management statement for DP

[140692]

285433 were registered (Western Neighbourhood). This second neighbourhood plan created 11 mooring berth lots. The plan shows a two metre wide strip of neighbourhood property adjoining the mooring berths. The plaintiffs claim specific performance and/or damages for breach of cl 1.2.1 of the neighbourhood development contract which provides: "All telephone and electricity services are to be provided to each lot by the developer".

Eastern Neighbourhood

122. On 25 March 1998 the neighbourhood plan (in four sheets with two additional sheets), neighbourhood development contract and neighbourhood management statement for DP 285486 were registered (Eastern Neighbourhood). This third neighbourhood plan created 30 mooring berth lots. The plan shows a two metre wide strip of neighbourhood property adjoining the mooring berths. The plaintiffs claim specific performance and/or damages for breach of cl 1.2.1 of the neighbourhood development contract which provides: "All telephone and electricity services are to be provided to each lot by the developer".

AMENDMENT OF DEVELOPMENT CONSENT 18/90 BY DEVELOPMENT CONSENT 176/00

123. In 2000 the council received DA 176/00 to amend development consent 18/90. Subsequently, the council considered a report by its Director of Environmental Services which noted that the application was to "amend the original consent for a 100 berth marina at Deep Creek. The applicant advises that the average size of houseboats within the Marina is somewhat larger than originally anticipated and as a result the number of houseboats able to be moored in the Marina has been reduced to 85. It is now proposed that the Marina be expanded to the eastern end of the lagoon to make provision for a further 21 berths (total 106)"

124. At the time the council had a moratorium on increasing the number of moorings pending a study on the effects of boating in this area of the river. Consequently, on 20 August 2002 development consent 176/00 was issued granting conditional consent for "adding additional area to the marina approved under Consent 18/90 without increasing mooring numbers". This approved eastward extension of the marina was onto the adjoining Lot 23.

THE HONEYMAN LOT

125. On 1 July 2003 the council granted development consent 169/03 for a 53 unit holiday resort on the Honeyman Lot. A council report of 12 December 2002 in relation to this development application stated:

> In the original development application for Deep Creek Marina a proposed holiday resort was included as a later stage of the overall development in this area.
>
> The concept plans before Council are more intensive with approximately double the number of units proposed on this plan.
> There are a number of advantages of locating such accommodation in this location…

126. On 11 November 2004 a neighbourhood plan in 10 sheets was registered for DP 285882 (the Honeyman Lot). The land is known as "Murray River's Edge". The neighbourhood lots within the Honeyman Lot are owned by a company of which Mr and Mrs Honeyman are the directors. The registered neighbourhood plan shows some of the development lots close to the northern side of the western access road, which was used until 2006 by mooring berth owners in the Western Neighbourhood to gain vehicular access to their mooring berths. Development consent has been granted for many holiday cabins and related facilities, some of which have now been constructed.

CONSTRUCTION AND CONSTRUCTION CONSENT FOR RESTAURANT

127. On 8 January 1996 the council granted consent under s 68 of the Local Government Act 1993 (NSW) to building application 138/95 on behalf of Mr Watson to construct a restaurant and shop in the location shown for a general store in Plan 4 accompanying DA 18/90 and the Stage 2 subdivision plan accompanying DA 66/92 (respectively, annexures A and E to this judgment). They were then constructed.

128. The developers constructed the junction with Perricoota Road and the access road in 1994, a sewerage pump out station and treatment plant in 1996, a hardstand area by 1996 and the marina berths from 1994 to 1996. They constructed the restaurant/bar in 1996, the carpark in 1996 and landscaping was completed by 1998. They provided electrical services in relation to facilities. The developers landscaped the carpark and planted trees and shrubs in the carpark and along the access road. They maintained the carpark until 2002. Thereafter the trees and shrubs were not watered and died.

LOT 23

129. In June 2002 Mr and Mrs Watson transferred to Hillington a half share in some 77 hectares of land immediately adjoining and to the east of the Deep Creek Marina known as Lot 23 DP 1019398. It extends from Perricoota Road to Deep Creek. In May 2003 the registered proprietors of Lot 23 were Mr Watson and Hillington as tenants in common in equal shares. As at September 2006 the registered proprietors were Mr Watson, Hillington and Ozzie as tenants in common in equal shares. The evidence does not appear to disclose whether or not that position has changed.

130. In May 2003 the council granted development consent 311/02 for construction of an additional 15 houseboat berths on Lot 23 on conditions. In November 2003 the council granted a further development consent to add a further 20 houseboat berths on Lot 23. One of the conditions was that "Internal Roads are to be sealed with bitumen as per Development consent 18/90". By July 2004 the 35 marinas on Lot 23 were under construction. This development is known as the Perricoota Boat Club.

131. Lot 16 is burdened by easements in favour of Lot 23. They include an easement for access of variable width over the waters of Deep Creek and an easement for access of variable width a little to the north of the existing upper eastern access track.

132. In 2003 Mr and Mrs Watson transferred to Hillington an interest in land comprising 143 hectares immediately to the east of Lot 23 known as Lot 222 DP 1022480, which extends from Perricoota Road to Deep Creek. The evidence does not appear to disclose whether or not that ownership position has changed.

133. At trial, Lots 23 and 222 were generally referred to compendiously as Lot 23. I shall also do so in this judgment unless it is necessary to distinguish between them.

134. It is proposed to develop Lot 23 as a 1600 lot residential subdivision and housing estate to be called Perricoota Marina Village.

PROPOSED DEVELOPMENT OF LOT 16

135. The Deep Creek area is zoned 1(a) — General Rural. Residential development is not permitted in that zone. In 2005 the developers made a submission to the council that the land be rezoned to permit the proposed extensive residential development of Lot 16. The proposal was described as including "water based residential development through the extension of the existing marina waterway. The residential component of the development will aim to provide a range of lot sizes and has the potential to create up to 500–600 allotments in total. The development will also cater for additional water based facilities, recreational areas, community facilities and similar".

136. One the plans which came to be included in the rezoning submission shows over 20 lots apparently for residences or tourist accommodation on the land between the eastern upper and lower access roads as well as above the eastern upper access road. The plan shows green areas between some of the lots, apparently permitting pedestrian access.

137. There was hazy oral evidence from Mr Watson and Mr Jarman that in 2006 Hillington and either Perricoota Company or Mr Jarman entered into an agreement of some sort with Mr Watson either to purchase (or to acquire an option to purchase) Mr Watson's interest in part of the land referred to in the preceding paragraph and proximate land. Mr Watson indicated that the agreement could not be finalised until the area was subdivided and titles issued. The evidence does not disclose whether or not any such agreement was written. It appears also that Mr Jarman mentioned at the general meeting of the community association on 16 April 2005 that there are "about 20 apartments being built along here, and at the moment what they're going to be overlooking is just not acceptable".

138. In August 2006 the council granted development consent 019/07 for a five lot subdivision of Lot 16. One of the conditions was that a three metre right of vehicular access carriageway be granted in favour of mooring lots. The developers obtained a letter of legal advice that the condition was unlawful.

139. On 19 November 2007 the developers wrote to the council enclosing that letter; asserting that the condition was invalid; enclosing a new development application for the subdivision of Lot 16 into six community title subdivision lots; and stating that if development consent was granted to the new application on terms satisfactory to the owners, they were willing to surrender development consent 019/07 as a condition of approval of the new development consent. This new application stated that it was intended to make further development applications seeking consent to use those lots (insofar in that they had not already been developed) for tourist accommodation, dwellings and associated works. The land proposed to be developed in that way included the extensive foreshore area behind the eastern mooring berths which the subdivision plans accompanying DA 66/92 had proposed should be community property (annexures B to D to this judgment).

140. In cross-examination, Mr Watson agreed that:

(a) he has no intention of building the cabins in the configuration shown on Plan 4, although he said that the cabins are going ahead;
(b) he has no intention of building a motel complex comprising three buildings each containing six accommodations as shown on Plan 4, although a motel might be built in a slightly different form on Lot 16 at some unknown time in the future;
(c) he has no present intention of sealing the carpark and internal roads in any fixed time frame; and
(d) his current intention is to pursue the rezoning and development proposal for the adjoining land to the east involving parts of Deep Creek Marina.

141. Thus, it appears that the developers have no intention of the Deep Creek Marina being developed and subdivided in the way specifically contemplated by the plans in DA 18/90 and 66/92 (annexures A and E to this judgment).

ACCESS ISSUES

Introduction

142. As discussed in more detail below, since 2005 the developers have closed the access roads to the mooring berths, closed the public wharf and, for a time, closed the boat ramp. Indeed, in July 2006 they applied to the council for consent to demolish the boat ramp. The plaintiffs point to serious consequential access difficulties as one of the reasons why continuation or completion of the scheme is impracticable.

143. For the better part of a decade prior to those events, the developers repeatedly made oral and written representations that the mooring owners were entitled to use the access roads for vehicular access to their moorings and that there was no issue about access to the public wharf and boat ramp. When people came to inquire about purchase into the Deep Creek Marina, the marina presented as if it had a vehicular access road to the western moorings, and two roughly parallel vehicular access roads to the eastern moorings.

144. Mr Watson agreed in cross-examination that he permitted vehicular access along tracks to the moorings. He agreed that he told people that there would be car access to the berths. For example, he told people who had their houseboats at another marina at Eildon Dam that, unlike that marina, they would have car access to their berths if they purchased into the Deep Creek Marina.

145. Mr Watson later began objecting to parking other than for drop off and pick up. He attributed this to concerns about damage to landscaping, including sprinklers being run over and vehicles being bogged in landscaped areas requiring removal and causing damage. His reference to landscaping and sprinklers appears to be a reference to landscaping and installation of sprinklers on the eastern side of the marina carried out by the Neighbourhoods on that side with the consent of the developers.

Sales off the plan in 1994

146. In September 1994, prior to registration of the community plan in January 1995, the developers entered into two contracts for sale of

[140695]

12 mooring berth lots "off the plan" to two companies owned by Mr Graham Smith. The 12 lots were within the first proposed mooring neighbourhood development (the Central Neighbourhood, to be known as DP 285249)

147. The first contract was for the sale of six moorings to Downer Investments Pty Ltd. This contract annexed a plan which showed extensive community property, including the lagoon and the foreshore areas behind the proposed moorings. The community property shown on this plan appears to correspond with that shown in the subdivision plans enclosed with DA 66/92 (annexures B, C and D to this judgment). Condition A9.2 of the contract provided that completion was not required until the vendor had "provided a sealed access road from Perricoota Road and wharf roadway, providing contiguous sealed access from the land to Perricoota Road". In evidence, Mr Smith said he construed "contiguous" as "continuous" — rightly, I think, having regard to the context.

148. The second contract was for the sale of a further six moorings to Bilyan Pty Ltd. It annexed a sketch of a "Sale Plan" which showed the "public wharf" and boat ramp. Special condition A9 provided that the purchaser was not required to complete until the vendor had (inter alia) provided a sealed or formed gravel all-weather access road from Perricoota Road to the wharf area, and a completed boat ramp and houseboat removal service.

Marketing representations

149. Having registered the community plan in January 1995, Mr Watson started a campaign of advertising the attributes of the new development. The advertising material contained a number of representations about access.

150. An information brochure produced in 1995 included a copy of a plan showing the proposed completed development. This plan appears to be a copy of Plan 4 which accompanied DA 18/90 (annexure A hereto). The brochure said that Stage 1 of the development had been completed and Stage 2 had commenced. Stage 1 was described as including "Construction of: opening to river, public wharf, marina wharfing (first 45 berths), slipway and boat ramp, access road (sealed), internal roads, sewage treatment system, main building foundations". Stage 2 was described as including "Construction of manager's residence plus balance of internal roads, marina access pathways, landscaping, lawn planting and tree planting. Installation of fuel station, sprinkler reticulation system, houseboat sewage pumping station,…sewerage network, water supply (including state of the art purification system), power and other services to the commercial sites". The brochure included the following access representation:

> Each berth has vehicle access and mains power available with adjacent car parking and easy access to all facilities.

151. Other facilities described in the brochure included a general store "scheduled for completion in time for the coming summer", a restaurant adjoining the general store, a motel and holiday cottages. Mr Watson agreed in cross-examination that the references to these facilities were references to the particulars shown in Plan 4 accompanying DA 18/90.

152. Under the heading "Stage two — (commenced)" the brochure contained the statement: "The detailed landscape master plan shown in the middle pages details the finished project. Some minor variations have been introduced to enhance function of the complex". As noted above, that plan was a copy of Plan 4 which accompanied DA 18/90 (annexure A to this judgment).

153. In cross-examination, Mr Watson agreed that (a) he published the brochure to encourage people to invest in the development for his financial profit, and (b) the landscape plan that he had on display in his office for some or all of the time between 1997 and 2002 (see below at [156]) was consistent with the statement in the brochure that each berth has vehicle access with adjacent carparking.

154. Another marketing brochure for Deep Creek Marina, which directed all enquiries to Mr Watson, was received by (inter alia), Mr Muschinski in 1995 and Mr and Mrs Hannay in 1996. They later purchased moorings. This brochure included the following access representations:

> [C]ar access right to the boat…Berth owners have guaranteed access by road and
> [140696]
> by water to their moorings…[I]nternal roads topped with crushed rock to provide all weather access.

155. In August 2001, solicitors acting for the developers offered for sale the freehold going concern of the Deep Creek Marina and associated businesses. A marketing brochure described the businesses as including a restaurant/bar, a general store and fuel depot (on what later became Lots 14 and 15), marina berths and two houseboats. It showed the carpark landscaped in two sections, the existing eastern upper and lower access tracks connected at several points along their length, and the western access track. This would reasonably be understood, in my opinion, as a representation that the houseboat berth owners were entitled to use those access tracks.

156. For some or all of the time between 1997 and 2002, Mr Watson had on public display at his office a coloured site plan entitled "Landscape Concept." It showed the Central Neighbourhood with access tracks to the moorings and on the western side an access track including a layback for kerbside parking. The eastern and western access tracks were shown as connected by a road running behind the public wharf.

157. An article in the Sunday Herald Sun of 2 January 2000 featured an interview with Mr Watson and noted that the marina included (inter alia) "riverside parking" and a boat ramp.

Works on Lot 16

158. In 2001, after discussion between members of the Eastern Neighbourhood Association, an irrigation system was installed on land owned by Lot 16 proximate to the eastern mooring berths. It was hoped that the irrigation system would allow for grass cover to be maintained and might provide for other landscaping in the future. As members of the Eastern Neighbourhood, Mr and Mrs Watson contributed to the cost of the irrigation installation. Two working bees were conducted to carry out the necessary work. The Watsons' participation in the installation of the irrigation system would, I think, have been reasonably understood as indicating that mooring owners were entitled to use this part of Lot 16's land in this way.

Developers close the boat ramp, access roads and public wharf and threaten legal action for trespass: 2005–2006

159. In 2005 the developers closed the access roads (and access to adjoining parts of Lot 16) and, for a time, the boat ramp. In 2006 the developers closed the public wharf. In 2005 the developers' lawyers wrote to mooring owners alleging trespass in relation to the boat ramp, parking and mooring and threatening legal action.

Boat ramp closed

160. In April 2005, the developers installed a boom gate across the boat ramp to prevent access to it. The evidence is unclear as to how long the boom gate remained shut, but it appears to have been until about the middle of that year when it was opened after protest and confrontation. The boom gate remains as a reminder of this episode, the boom pointed skyward for the time being. The developers also used large men to police access to the boat ramp and demand money for its use from anyone who did not rent a storage shed from Deep Creek Marina Pty Ltd. At Christmas 2006, a concrete bollard was placed across the boat ramp but lot owners removed it with a crane soon afterwards.

161. Mr Bares acknowledged in evidence that lot owners, their invitees and guests were entitled to use the boat ramp. When the developers closed the boat ramp, they offered the mooring berth owners use of the boat ramp next door on Lot 23 instead.

162. Mr Bares' evidence was that the developers closed the boat ramp because members of the public who were not invited guests were using it, and this had created insurance issues for, and insurance claims on, the developers. The only specific example he gave of the insurance problem concerned a jet boat that sucked up geo-mesh into its motor while fuelling at Mr O'Brien's facility. However, he said that the boat had come off the Murray River. That example therefore hardly seems relevant to the boat ramp since, as the developers acknowledged at the hearing, the wharf was a public wharf and necessarily carried with it the prospect, indeed the invitation, that members of the public from the Murray River would use it if using the marina facilities.

163. According to Mr Bares, the insurance problem seems to have been resolved because his insurance broker told him that, provided they made an effort to stop the public using the boat ramp, if it was reopened by the community association then the developers would have insured cover because they had done what they could to prevent public use.

Access roads closed

164. In about April 2005, the developers blocked the access roads to the moorings by constructing pine log fencing and gates. Just before Christmas 2006, they arranged, and Mr Watson and Mr Jarman personally undertook, the installation of concrete bollards across the access ways and along the fence lines. Later, the concrete bollard across the western access road was replaced by a locked gate.

165. Mr Bares suggested in evidence that insurance problems contributed to the closure of the access roads, although he did not give specific details except to mention "illegal" works being carried out from Lot 16 to adjoining areas which, he said, could cause insurance problems. By "adjoining" areas, he appears to have been speaking of foreshore land in the ownership of Lot 16 between the access roads and the mooring berths.

Public wharf closed

166. In about September 2006, the developers fenced off the public wharf so that it could no longer be used by boats or passed over on foot. The fencing remains. The boating public and the mooring owners can no longer use the wharf to access the hotel on Lot 14 (behind the wharf) and the supermarket on the adjoining Lot 15. At the trial, the developers acknowledged that it is a "public" wharf — notwithstanding that the word "public" does not appear on the registered community plan — and claimed that they intend to re-open it in due course but that their intentions have been stayed pending the outcome of these proceedings.

167. Mr Watson agreed in evidence that he specifically designed the DA 18/90 proposal for a public wharf facility to enable the boating public from the Murray River to pull up there to partake of the proposed services and amenities. He later put a ski-park facility at the public wharf so that speedboats could be moored while their occupants used the facilities.

Developers allege trespass in using the boat ramp, parking and mooring: May 2005

168. In May 2005 the developers instructed Mr Jarman to send letters to mooring owners concerning breaches of by-laws by alleged trespassing by cars, trailers and houseboats on Lot 16 land.

169. On 26 May 2005 Andreones Lawyers on behalf of Ozzie wrote a letter to houseboat owners, including Mr Taylor and Mr Fry, alleging that members of the community association had no legal right to use the lower part of the boat ramp because it was in Lot 16 (in the water) which they had no right to enter. The letter threatened legal action if they did not stop trespassing by using the boat ramp. The letter also said that Ozzie would consider providing its consent for the recipient to use the boat ramp on certain terms (which were not spelt out).

170. At about the time that he received this letter, Mr Taylor tried to use the boat ramp one day but was stopped by Mr Jarman who demanded that he pay him for permission to use the boat ramp. He paid Mr Jarman $20 or $25 cash for a single day's permission.

171. On 26 May 2005 Andreones Lawyers on behalf of Ozzie wrote a letter to houseboat owners, including Mr Taylor, Mr Fry and Mrs Clinch, alleging trespass on what is now Lot 16. The letter alleged that the recipient was trespassing on Ozzie's land by regularly parking a motor vehicle and/or trailer there opposite or near the recipient's houseboat berth. This letter threatened legal action if the recipient did not stop trespassing.

172. Mr Fry received a letter from Andreones in May 2005, acting on behalf of the developers. The letter said that Mr Fry's boat was too long for his mooring and simply by having his boat on the mooring he was trespassing onto Lot 16 (meaning the water in the marina behind his boat).

Developers' access representations to mooring owners and difficulties when developers blocked access

173. For about a decade the developers repeatedly made representations to mooring owners that they were entitled to use the access roads and that access would be formalised. Serious problems arose when the developers blocked off the access roads, public wharf and, for a time, the boat ramp. The mooring owners' evidence, which I accept, is summarised below.

Mr Collins

174. Mr John Collins was a mooring berth owner in the Eastern Neighbourhood between June 1998 and March 2004. From early 1998, he leased a mooring berth from Mr Watson, whom he knew to be the developer of the Deep Creek Marina. He then became interested in purchasing a mooring berth.

175. In March 1998, before purchasing the mooring, Mr Collins reviewed the plans attached to the contract of sale. He was surprised to see that the access roads appeared to be on private property as he had formed the impression that the access ways were common property because:

> (a) there were well-made gravel roads wide enough for vehicles adjacent to the mooring berths;
> (b) there was no fencing or signage to indicate these roads were for any type of private use;
> (c) he had observed many mooring berth owners using these roads to access mooring berths and parking their cars next to these roads while using their houseboats;
> (d) he had used these roads on many occasions and had parked next to these roads on many occasions;
> (e) he had seen staircases from the western access road to the moorings for the purpose of accessing the western mooring berths from the road;
> (f) he had never heard any objection raised by any person in relation to the use of these roads; and
> (g) he personally knew Mr Watson and had never had any discussion with him prior to this time in which he mentioned there being any problem with the use of these roads.

176. That impression was, in my view, well founded.

177. Mr Collins received advice from his solicitors that the roads were not included in community property and were still part of the development lots. In June 1998, Mr Collins informed Mr Watson of that advice and said "before I sign a contract I need to know what the deal is". Mr Watson replied:

> Those roads are not community property but I've always intended that everyone will have road access to the boats. I intend to formalise this down the track.

178. Mr Watson did not go into further detail, and Mr Collins took it on face value that it was a matter that was going to be rectified and that mooring owners would have road access to their boats. His assumption at the time was that the land would be included later in community property.

179. If Mr Watson had said that the roads were going to remain his property, Mr Collins would not have purchased a mooring berth. In entering the contract, Mr Collins relied on what Mr Watson said about intending to formalise vehicle access.

180. Between 1998 and 2004, Mr Collins drove over the access roads unimpeded hundreds of times.

181. Mr Collins raised the question of formalising access with Mr Watson on a number of occasions. On each occasion he was assured that the access situation would be formalised. In February 2002 Mr Watson said to him words to the effect:

> I have always intended that mooring owners would have road access, and it is still my intention to have it formalised.

182. Mr Collins was aware from discussions with mooring owners in the Central Neighbourhood that their neighbourhood had also taken up the issue of access with Mr Watson.

183. Through these conversations, Mr Collins understood that Mr Watson had agreed to formalise access rights but was concerned that some means of controlling the vehicle parking adjacent to boat moorings needed to be introduced. To achieve this, it was agreed that a low level treated pine post and rail fence would be constructed bordering the lower eastern access track at the expense of boat owners.

184. In 2001 Mr and Mrs Watson attended general meetings of the Central, Western and Eastern Neighbourhood Associations and Mr

Bares attended general meetings of the Central and Western Neighbourhoods. In my view, by their conduct at these meetings, as detailed below, the Watsons and Mr Bares represented that mooring owners were entitled to use the access roads.

185. Mr and Mrs Watson and Mr Bares attended the annual general meeting of the Western Neighbourhood Association held on 26 January 2001. At that time the members of the Western Neighbourhood Association were Mr Watson and Sammy One (they were the proprietors of mooring Lots 2 to 6 in that neighbourhood) and Accredited Aged Care Services Pty Ltd (the proprietor of mooring Lots 7 to 12), the sole director of which was Jayne Bares, the wife of Mr Bares. The latter company had acquired its seven mooring lots from the original developers in 1997. It leased out six of them and Mr Bares used the seventh. The resolutions at that annual general meeting included the following:

> (1) it was agreed that a one-off contribution of $1,000 per berth be made to the Neighbourhood Association to pay for landscaping and an automatic watering system and pump;
> (2) it was agreed that the Neighbourhood Association would pay a maintenance contractor eight dollars per berth per week to cover the cost of mowing lawns, checking boat ropes and power leads, and ensuring Neighbourhood Association rules such as parking were being adhered to; and
> (3) it was agreed that no speedboat parking be allowed on Neighbourhood Association access roads and no unauthorised signage be allowed.

186. In my view, the third resolution, at least, indicated that Mr and Mrs Watson considered and represented that the Western Neighbourhood was entitled to use and control their access road for vehicular access.

187. Mr and Mrs Watson and Mr Bares, among others, attended the annual general meeting of the Central Neighbourhood Association on 17 February 2001. The meeting agreed to adopt the resolutions passed by the Western Neighbourhood at their meeting on 26 January 2001 (set out above). Again this indicated, in my view, that Mr and Mrs Watson and Mr Bares considered and represented that the Central Neighbourhood was entitled to use and control their access roads for vehicular access.

188. Mr and Mrs Watson, Mr Collins and Mrs Hannay (among others) attended the annual general meeting of the Eastern Neighbourhood Association held on 17 February 2001. The meeting agreed to adopt (inter alia) the third resolution made by the Western Neighbourhood Association at its annual general meeting on 26 January 2001 viz "that no speedboat parking be allowed on Neighbourhood Association access roads and no unauthorised signage be allowed". Again this indicated, in my view, that Mr and Mrs Watson considered and represented that the Eastern Neighbourhood was entitled to use and control their access roads.

189. On 26 February 2002, in anticipation of the Eastern Neighbourhood's annual general meeting to be held on 11 March 2002, Mr Collins wrote to all mooring berth owners in his neighbourhood recounting access discussions and proposals. I accept that the letter is accurate. It stated inter alia:

> I raised the issue with the Developer at the time [of purchase of Mr Collins' berth] and have done so several times since. On each occasion I have been advised that it was always intended that we would have access rights in terms of the existing roads and that the situation would be examined to determine the best way of formalising these rights.
>
> Some berth owners in Neighbourhood 2 who are in a similar situation also recently took up the issue. The Developer again agreed to formalise the access rights in question but was concerned that it should be done in conjunction with suitable landscaping by the berth owners to ensure the appropriate use and maintenance of the area. Particular concern was apparently expressed at the failure of many boat owners to adhere to reasonable vehicle access and parking arrangements to the detriment of the landscaping within the area. It was proposed that the berth owners be given control of the whole area between the northern boundary of our Neighbourhood and the northern side > of the bottom access road and including those sections of the existing roadway extending from the bottom access road to the top access road. In conjunction with this formalisation of access arrangements, we would construct a low level treated pine post and rail fence on either side of the roadways with 1.2m gaps between each 2.4m section of fence to allow easy to pedestrian access but eliminate vehicle access. The fenced roadway would be of such width as to allow adequate vehicle access but not parking…

> The Developer would provide us with access rights over the top road and provide parking areas on the north side of the top road.
> I strongly support the proposal for the following reasons…
>
> While the details of how the control of the area can be handed over to us are still being considered, it is important that we consider our views on the proposal before the Annual General Meeting on 11 March 2002, for which I have asked it be placed on the agenda.
> Attached is a list of berth owners who have already indicated their support and would be happy to discuss the proposal with any interested party.

190. Mr Collins sent a copy of his letter to Mr Watson because, at the time, Mr and Mrs Watson were owners of a number of individual mooring berths at the far eastern end of the Eastern Neighbourhood. Before sending the letters out, Mr Collins he had shown a copy to Mr Watson and told him that he intended to move a motion at their forthcoming neighbourhood association annual general meeting expressing the support of all members for whatever action was necessary to finalise the formalisation. He told Mr Watson that before sending it out he would like to get Mr Watson's agreement to what he had written insofar as it involved Mr Watson. Mr Watson replied:

> The letter is right. I don't have any problem with it.

191. After sending the letter and before the Eastern Neighbourhood Association annual general meeting on 11 March 2002, Mr Collins attended a meeting on the boat of Mr John Hodson, who was on the executive committee of the Western Neighbourhood. Mr Mitsch and Mr and Mrs Watson were also in attendance. The purpose of the meeting was to discuss specific details as to how access would be formalised so that the access routes would become common property, and the terms upon which this would occur. Mr Mitsch proposed as follows that it be done by a series of easements:

> What you want to avoid having is a designated road that the council will make you seal. I think a series of easements will be the most effective and efficient way to deal with this. You're still going to have to deal with the problems of whether you get it sealed or not and the costs associated with that, but I think that doing it by easements is the best way forward.

192. Everyone agreed and Mr Watson told Mr Mitsch to sort out the details.

193. On 5 March 2002 Mr Collins wrote a letter to mooring owners in his neighbourhood which recorded his discussions with the developers and Mr Mitsch in relation to the eastern access roads, as follows:

> Further discussions have been held with the Developers and with Mr. Brian Mitsch…It is agreed that the most effective and efficient means of formalising the access situation and management of the area immediately adjoining our Neighbourhood is by means of easements. It is proposed therefore that the following easements be created —
>
> > A. An easement in favour of our Neighbourhood between our neighbourhood property and the southern boundary of the bottom access road. Such easement would allow us unrestricted access over the area as well as the right to perform such landscaping including the installation of sprinklers as we consider necessary to protect and beautify the area.
> > A similar easement would be created in favour of Neighbourhood 2 in respect of the corresponding area adjoining the eastern section of their neighbourhood.
> > B. An easement in favour of the Community Association over the top and bottom access roads as well as the joining roads at the eastern end of our Neighbourhood and in > between our Neighbourhood and Neighbourhood 2. It is proposed the other two roads joining the top and bottom access roads be eliminated. These are the two joining roads located approximately in the middle of each neighbourhood…
>
> [140701]
> > C. An easement in favour of the Community Association for vehicle parking purposes over an area roughly between the northern side of the top access road and the existing dry dock area.

It would not be necessary for the Neighbourhoods to formally agree to the easements but as mentioned in my previous letter they will only be granted if we are prepared to fence the road areas below the top access road. In addition the creation of the easements would involve considerable survey and legal costs to which we would be required to contribute…

I will accordingly be moving a motion at the Annual General Meeting on 11 March 2002 that we endorse the proposed creation of easements and agree that we will in exchange contribute to the fencing of the bottom access road and connecting roads at the maximum cost of $190 per berth and to contribute to survey and legal costs at the rate of $50 per berth.

194. I accept the accuracy of the contents of this letter, notwithstanding the testimony of Mr Bares, who participated in those discussions, that the discussions proposed vehicle access for loading and unloading but not parking. It appears that Mr Collins in fact may not have sent this letter to mooring owners because later Mr Mitsch or Mr Watson told him that there might be a legal problem with easements being imposed.

195. On 11 March 2002, the annual general meeting of the Central Neighbourhood Association resolved to endorse action to formalise road access rights to berths, to provide unrestricted access and landscaping rights over the area between their neighbourhood/community land and the bottom access road, and to provide vehicle parking rights over areas north of the top access road. Mr and Mrs Watson were present at the meeting and supported the resolution.

196. On 11 March 2002 about 20 people, including Mr and Mrs Watson and Mr Collins, attended the Eastern Neighbourhood Association's annual general meeting. Mr Collins was elected the representative of that neighbourhood association on the community association. The following resolution proposed by Mr Collins, in virtually the same terms as that carried by the Central Neighbourhood Association, was carried unanimously:

Moved J. Collins that we endorse action to—

1. Formalise road access rights to berths.
2. Provide unrestricted access and landscaping rights over the area between our Neighbourhood property and the bottom access road.
3. Provide vehicle parking rights over areas north of the top access road.

And we authorise the Executive Committee to finalise the necessary arrangements on the understanding that in exchange we agree to—

a. Contribute to the cost of fencing the access road below the top access road at a maximum rate of $190.00 per berth and
b. Contribute to survey and legal costs at the rate of $50.00 per berth.

197. During discussion of the motion Mr Watson was asked by one of those present at the meeting whether he was happy with the proposal. He answered in the affirmative.

198. Mr Collins anticipated that the annual general meeting of the community association to be held on 29 March 2002 would endorse the action resolved at the Eastern Neighbourhood Association's meeting earlier that month. He was mistaken.

199. Present at this meeting of the community association were Mr and Mrs Watson, Mr Gary Bares, Mr Hodson and Mr Collins. Mr Collins initially thought Mr Bares was there as a representative of the Western Neighbourhood. He was unaware that Mr Bares had agreed to purchase from the developers an interest in Lot 23 adjoining the Deep Creek Marina.

200. At the meeting, Mr Watson said that he and his mortgagor were concerned that the council would impose additional requirements on him if the Neighbourhoods' rights were formalised. He said he didn't want to be responsible for sealing the roads or doing any other major works.

201. Mr Bares informed the meeting that he had bought into the development site next door (Lot 23), that the top eastern access road provided access to this site and that he had an easement for access over that road. Mr Bares said words to the following effect:

> You'll need my consent for any of these proposals you're discussing…
>
> I haven't decided whether or not to seal the top road, but if anything like you propose is going to go ahead, then the [community] association will have to contribute to the costs of the improvement and upkeep of the road, and I will decide on the standard and design of it and the same with the parking areas between the top [eastern] access road and the storage sheds. I don't want mud and dirt from the bottom [eastern] road to get all over the top [eastern] road when you bring your cars and trailers up to the top…
> But I'm not going to agree to anything until there's a masterplan prepared for the total future development of the marina.

202. Mr Collins replied that he didn't have a problem with preparation of a masterplan but he didn't want this to interfere with getting the access problems sorted out straight away. He said that he and Mr Hodson would get their neighbourhood associations to prepare a written request for formalisation of the access and landscaping rights, providing that the neighbourhoods would meet any additional associated costs if the council imposed any additional requirement to carry out works on these roads.

203. Mr Collins wrote a letter on 4 April 2002 to each of the lot owners in his neighbourhood association reporting on the community association annual general meeting in relation to the formalisation of road access.

204. On 8 April 2002 Mr Collins met with Mr and Mrs Watson. He was informed that Mr Bares "would come around" and that the two obstacles to formalisation of the access routes were the requirements from the Watsons' mortgagor to have an indemnity against any future costs associated with the formalisation; and that there was shortage of cash on the Watsons' part to meet any commitments imposed on them by the proposed formalisation.

205. In April 2002 Mr Collins drafted a formal written proposal concerning formalisation of access and management rights over the access roads by a series of easements. It appears that it was delivered to Mr Watson and Sammy One Pty Ltd.

206. Mr Hodson continued to negotiate with Mr Watson and Mr Bares about formalisation of the access routes. Mr Collins saw a letter from Mr Bares to Mr Hodson of 5 September 2002 which set out a proposal for discussion "Re: Extension of community association land to include access roads to moorings". Part of the proposal was that the developers extend the land owned by the community association to include the lower roads adjacent to the Central, Western and Eastern Neighbourhoods (at their cost) and that the community association be given a right of carriageway to the upper eastern access road with linked access to the lower eastern access road in two locations (again at the cost of those Neighbourhood Associations).

207. That letter was tabled at a meeting of the executive committee of the Eastern Neighbourhood Association on 7 September 2002 attended by (inter alia) Mr Collins. The executive agreed to the proposals contained in the letter in principle subject to some clarifications and further provisions.

208. On 8 September 2002 Mr Collins attended a general meeting of the community association. Also in attendance were Mr Watson, Mr Hodson and a Mr Borg. The issue of the formalisation of road access was mentioned. It was noted that Mr Hodson was to continue negotiations.

209. Thereafter further works proceeded on and around the lower eastern access road. Treated pine posts were erected bordering the bottom eastern access road in September 2002.

210. Negotiations for formalisation continued sporadically thereafter. By early 2003, Mr Collins was concerned that there appeared to be no further movement on the negotiations with Mr Bares. On 22 February 2003, the annual general meeting of the Eastern Neighbourhood adopted a resolution that the executive urgently pursue formalisation of access.

211. On 5 April 2003, a general meeting of the community association resolved that Mr Mitsch be authorised to draw up a plan to re-align the boundaries, that a suitable landscaper prepare an overall landscaping plan, and that a management plan should be prepared. Mr Collins does not recall ever seeing a plan of the type described in the resolution.

212. Mr Collins compiled notes in September 2003 on the history of the marina. He noted that there was a meeting on 20 August 2003 between Mr Bares, Mr Hodson and Mr Honeywell, among others. The proposal from this meeting was that the access ways were going to be given to the community association, on condition that the community association pay the cost of sealing the roads and the landscaping.

213. On 29 August 2003, a meeting of Mr Bares and Mr Robertson and their consultants was held. They set about undoing the work that the neighbourhoods had done in anticipation of Mr Watson transferring ownership of the vehicle access ways, particularly the removal of pine barriers running alongside the access roads in the neighbourhood areas, which the neighbourhoods had installed.

214. On 4 October 2003 Mr Collins attended a meeting with Mr Bares and some members of the executive committee of the Eastern Neighbourhood. The principal topic of discussion was the proposal for formalisation of access. Mr Bares proposed that the community association would purchase from the developers for the sum of $1 certain land which included the lower eastern access road, the western access road, the lagoon from the river mouth to Lot 23 and an area for additional parking; and that the community association would agree to certain works valued between $500,000 to $1,000,000. Mr Bares agreed to put forward a firm proposal before Christmas that year. Mr Collins recorded Mr Bares' proposal as follows:

> 1. The Developer would hand over to the Community for $1 the following areas —
> > a) On the eastern side of the central Marina building, the area commonly known as the bottom access road being the road extending from the boat ramp along the front of our Neighbourhood. The area would include some 3–4 metres on the north side of the existing road and provide for turning circles in approx the middle and at the eastern end of the road. It would also include the area between the road and our Neighbourhood property.
> > b) On the western side of the central Marina building, the formed roadway including the total area between the residential unit development and existing Community/ Neighbourhood property as well as the vacant area at western end of the Marina adjacent to the Marina river entrance.
> > c) The lagoon extending from the river entrance to eastern end of our Neighbourhood and including any currently non-Community land between the lagoon and the island Community property.
> > d) An area for additional car parking of approximately 1.2 hectares (3 acres) across the road on the eastern side from the existing car park area.
>
> 2. In exchange the Community would be required to undertake and meet the cost of the following — > > a) The sealing of all roads and parking areas not currently sealed. This would include that part of the existing Community road not already sealed and the existing car park behind the central Marina building as well as the newly created Community roads entering east and west from the central Marina building. It is uncertain if the new 1.2 hectare carpark is to require sealing but regardless the Community would be responsible for the cost of whatever treatment was required.
> > b) The installation of security boom gates on both sides of the central Marina building.
> > c) Landscaping of the Community property to a standard to be determined.
>
> [140704]
>
> > d) Dredging and widening the Marina river entrance.
>

Gary Bares estimates the cost of works at between $500k and $1m.

215. On 31 March 2005 Mr Briffa, then manager of the Eastern Neighbourhood Association, wrote to its members concerning parking of vehicles and trailers "on the grassed areas and access roadway" for prolonged periods. The letter stated that "these areas are designated for drop off and pick up only, vehicles should only gain access to these areas for approximately 15 minutes at any given point in time. The above rules are designed to provide easy uninterrupted access to boats 24 hours a day".

Mr Doyle

216. Mr Rodney Doyle leased moorings from Mr Watson for four years from 1996 after arranging to have his boat transported from Lake Eildon for that purpose. Before leasing, Mr Doyle told Mr Watson that one of the problems at Lake Eildon was that you could not get your car to the houseboat. Mr Watson said words to the effect:

> Here you can drive your car to your houseboat. That's the good thing about the mooring. You've got access to it at all times.

217. That response was an important factor in Mr Doyle's decision to move his houseboat from Lake Eildon. During the time of his lease Mr Doyle was always able to drive to his mooring.

218. Recently Mr Doyle sold his houseboat (but kept his mooring) with a view to building a new houseboat. However, he has delayed the production of this houseboat because, without vehicle access to the mooring, he sees little point in having a boat there. He regards that as a shame as his children and grandchildren love the houseboat.

219. On a normal trip on the houseboat, Mr Doyle takes, among other things, food, slabs of beer and soft drink, clothes, 3 × 20 litre containers of water and ski gear. The ski gear includes three slalom skis, two wakeboards, two kneeboards, inflatable tubes, life-vests and wetsuits.

220. Until the access tracks to the moorings were blocked, Mr Doyle transported these things to his houseboat by driving his car down to the moorings. After access to the moorings was blocked, Mr Doyle used the boat ramp to put his ski boat in the water, and then tethered up his ski boat. He then unloaded gear from his car into the ski boat, drove the ski boat to the houseboat, unloaded the gear, drove the ski boat back the boat ramp and repeated the process. He then drove his car to the carpark and parked it, walked back to the ski boat, drove to his houseboat, tethered his ski boat to the back of the houseboat, and sailed the houseboat onto the river. The process was difficult and dangerous, because there were other people using the boat ramp. Mr Doyle considers himself lucky to have the ski boat to cart his gear, which most people do not have. Most people have to carry all their gear from the carpark to the boat.

221. Mr Doyle's wife has ongoing knee problems and has had four operations on her knee. Whenever his wife has to walk the 400 metres from the boat ramp to the houseboat, she has struggled. At night, it is almost impossible for her to do this walk. The Doyles have relatives in the area and often have night-time functions to attend. On occasions, after attending functions at their relatives' houses, they have paid for accommodation in the area, rather than staying on the houseboat, because it was impossible for Mrs Doyle to access the houseboat at night.

Mr and Mrs Hannay

222. Mr and Mrs Hannay first became aware of Deep Creek Marina in 1996 when they were handed a marketing brochure by the vendors of a houseboat they were purchasing, referred to at [154] above. This brochure stated "Berth owners have guaranteed access by road and by water to their mooring", and directed all enquiries to Mr Watson. In 1997 the Hannays moved their houseboat to Deep Creek. At first they rented a mooring in the Eastern Neighbourhood, which at that time comprised only 11 moorings. Before this move, Mrs Hannay sought and received confirmation from Mr and Mrs Watson that there would be accessible road access to the Hannays' mooring. Mrs Hannay also asked whether they would be able to park right next to their boat and Mr Watson replied:

> The access is available at any time but I don't like cars parking right next to the boats. I want that area to be a picnic area; so, after you've unloaded, you can park on the gravel road up the top near the sheds.

223. The Hannays enjoyed vehicle access to this mooring for the years that they held the lease. There was never an issue about their right to vehicle access during that time.

224. In 2000, the Hannays purchased a berth in the Eastern Neighbourhood from the developers. Prior to contract the vendors' solicitors wrote to the purchasers' solicitors, stating:

> We advise that in relation to your request for the sealing of the road to the site to be completed prior to settlement, we advise the Development Consent 18/90 from the Shire of Murray General Condition 13 sets out that the internal roads and parking areas are to be sealed with bitumen when the restaurant, motel and cabins are developed. We confirm that our client is prepared to place crushed rock on this road prior to the construction of the bitumen road.

225. Special condition 13 of the executed contract provided that, prior to settlement, the vendors would at their own expense and in a proper and workmanlike manner place crushed rock on the access road to the mooring berth. In my opinion, this conduct by the developers would be reasonably interpreted as a representation that the Hannays were entitled to use that access road. That is how Mrs Hannay understood it.

226. Prior to settlement of the contract, Mr Watson extended the lower eastern access road adjacent to the eastern end and there turned it up to join the upper eastern access road. There was also a road connecting the lower and upper access roads about half way along.

227. On an average trip to their houseboat, Mr and Mrs Hannay take 40 litres of water in 2 × 20 litre containers, two bags of wood for their heater, three bags of groceries, a slab of beer, clothes and other things. Since the developers blocked the access roads with concrete bollards in 2006, they have had to be selective and not take things they otherwise would have taken. On a recent trip they had to make six trips between their car and boat, in the rain, to transfer the things they needed. On that trip they ran out of gas, so Mr Hannay had to walk to the supermarket, pick up a gas bottle weighing about 18 kilograms and bring it back on a trolley over muddy, uneven and sloping grounds. Prior to the barricades going up, the supermarket owner would drive down, pick up gas bottles and replace them. Mrs Hannay considers this to be much safer.

228. To access their mooring, the Hannays still walk on the road they previously drove over, even though vehicle access has been blocked. This is because the community and neighbourhood access strips are partly blocked by several trees, become very boggy in the rain, are unlit, and there are holes in the ground.

229. When the Hannays required a mechanic to repair their houseboat motor, the mechanic had to walk in from the carpark three times, carrying his tools. This time was factored into his invoice.

230. Mrs Hannay's parents are in their early 70s. When they come to the houseboat, there is now a considerable amount of stress involved for them in getting to it. On one occasion, Mrs Hannay's father insisted on helping her bring gear from the car to the boat, causing him to take an angina pill at the outset to help deal with the stress.

Mr Fry

231. Mr David Fry became aware of Deep Creek in about 1995 when he had a houseboat moored at the nearby Merool Caravan Park on the Murray River. He and other houseboat owners at Merool received a letter from Mr Watson inviting them to shift their houseboats to Deep Creek for six months.

232. On his first inspection of the Deep Creek Marina Mr Fry observed, and liked, the vehicle access to the boats. He rented a mooring from Mr Watson for six months and, before the end of that period, purchased a mooring from Mr Watson in the Central Neighbourhood. He subsequently bought two more moorings and leased them out. He has since sold those two moorings but has retained his first mooring which is only four moorings from the boat ramp. His mooring is located just prior to the concrete barricade. Mr Doyle's mooring, together with moorings 27, 28 and 29 in his neighbourhood, are the only moorings that have vehicle access now that the access road has been barricaded.

233. On a houseboat trip, Mr Fry would normally take two car fridges, a 20 litre container of fresh water and one bag of clothes per person. He has observed the inconvenience caused by the loss of vehicle access for mooring berth owners on his side of the marina. They now drive their cars to the front of his mooring, park there temporarily while they make trips back and forth from their car to their boat, carrying everything they need for their weekend or holiday. He has also watched people loading things into their speedboats and using their speedboats to cart things backwards and forwards — including gas bottles — which he does not think is safe. He has observed people with elderly parents who have difficulty getting down to the moorings.

234. As noted above, in May 2005 Mr Fry received a letter from Andreones Lawyers in Sydney acting on behalf of Mr Bares, Mr Robertson and Mr Watson, stating that his boat was too long for his mooring and was trespassing into Lot 16. This upset him because Mr Watson had originally invited him to bring his boat to Deep Creek, he had rented from Mr Watson for six months before buying three moorings from him, and now Mr Watson was a party to an allegation that he was trespassing. At about the same time he received another letter from Andreones, alleging that he was trespassing by parking his car near the mooring. He had his solicitors respond to these allegations of trespass.

Mr Sidebottom

235. In 1999 Kelvin Sidebottom acquired an option to purchase a mooring from the developers in the Eastern Neighbourhood when the mooring was complete. It was about 12 months before that mooring was complete. In the interim the developers allowed him to keep a houseboat that he had acquired at their mooring in the Western Neighbourhood. Throughout this 12 month waiting period, Mr Sidebottom had road access to the mooring in the Western Neighbourhood.

236. In March 2000, when construction of the mooring in the Eastern Neighbourhood was complete, Mr Sidebottom's wife signed a contract to purchase that mooring from the developers on trust for herself and Mr Sidebottom. Mr Sidebottom had no doubt that vehicle access would always be allowed to the new mooring.

237. Since buying the mooring in the Eastern Neighbourhood Mr Sidebottom has driven his car to it at least 200 times. He considers that it is just too far to carry everything needed for a houseboat holiday without vehicle access. His wife and he would not have bought the mooring without vehicle access.

238. When Mr Sidebottom required a plumber on his boat, he and the plumber had to carry the plumber's equipment to the boat. As the width of the strip on which they were legally allowed to walk was only two metres wide, and had obstacles along it, it was nearly impossible to walk along it, let alone carry tools. For this reason, they were forced to walk on land outside the two metre strip (on Lot 16) in order to get to the boat.

239. Mr Sidebottom has a friend who has multiple sclerosis. The friend rarely gets to go on holiday so Mr Sidebottom had his boat professionally renovated to make it wheelchair friendly. However, since the developers put up concrete bollards preventing road access, Mr Sidebottom has not been able to get his friend to the boat.

240. Mr Sidebottom also used to invite guests from Rotary (of which he is a member) to his houseboat. He is 72 years old and most of his Rotary friends are of a similar age. When access was blocked, it became embarrassing to tell his friends that they had to park behind the restaurant and carry their things all the way to his boat. For this reason he has not had Rotary friends to the boat since access was blocked.

241. On a regular trip to his boat Mr Sidebottom takes 4 × 20 litre drums of fuel, food, bedding and gas, among other things. He used to buy gas from the restaurant, load it into his utility and drive it down to his boat. Since access was blocked, he has not been able to get gas to his boat.

Mr Sidebottom's mooring has electricity running to it. More than once, in heavy rain, the switch box at the top of his pole has had water in it — blowing the overload switch. When an electrician came to fix the problem, the electrician first turned the power off at the main switch box, which is located on the high ground owned by Lot 16 behind Mr Sidebottom's mooring. This means that to work on the electricity supply, the electrician first had to trespass on Lot 16 to turn off the power.

Mr Armstrong

243. Peter and Christine Armstrong leased a mooring in the Eastern Neighbourhood for about 12 months until February 2003. During this time, they were always able to drive their car to their mooring: they would drive to the boat, unload and park on the left hand side of the road next to the mooring.

244. The Armstrongs enjoyed their leasing experience. So, in 2003, they decided to purchase a mooring in the Eastern Neighbourhood from Anthony Watson and Sammy One Pty Ltd. Their mooring is one of the furthest from the carpark.

245. On an average short trip to their boat, the Armstrongs take 40 litres of fuel in jerry cans, 2 × 20 litre containers of water, three grocery bags of food, a dog bed and a bag of clothes. On longer trips these amounts increase. Since the access tracks to the moorings have been blocked, Mrs Armstrong normally needs to make one trip from the carpark to the boat carrying provisions, and Mr Armstrong two or three. The Armstrongs usually walk on the track on which they had previously driven, because it is flat and away from the water. As there is no lighting in the area, these trips are particularly difficult at night.

246. From the commencement of their lease in 2002, Mr Armstrong went to his neighbourhood association meetings. In mid 2002 his neighbourhood association agreed with Mr Watson to install an irrigation system on Lot 16 behind the eastern moorings on either side of the access track. The neighbourhood association put poles along the access track to stop cars parking on the new irrigation system and damaging it, although they allowed an area to park on the left hand side of the lower track. This work was done by the mooring owners at working bees and some thousands of dollars from neighbourhood association funds was spent on the fence and irrigation system. In late 2003 the developers removed the poles.

247. In 2004 the developers, who were developing their adjoining land (Lot 23) as an "extension" of Deep Creek Marina, built a temporary dam across the end of the Deep Creek Marina. This dam ran across to the "island", allowing the developers to drive machinery down from the upper access road behind the eastern moorings, across the dam and onto the island. The developers did not seek and were not granted permission from the neighbourhood association to build the dam. In building the dam, the developers shifted boats from the moorings that they built across, including the Armstrongs' boat without their permission, several times during the construction of the dam and once or twice after construction of the dam was complete. The dam was removed many months later.

248. If the Armstrongs had known that they would not have vehicle access to their mooring, they would not have bought it.

Mr and Mrs Hickman

249. From early 2004 to November 2005 Mr and Mrs Hickman leased a mooring in the Central Neighbourhood on its eastern limb. In 2005 Mrs Hickman purchased the mooring. Their mooring is eight moorings east of the hotel and supermarket, about four moorings along from where the developers blocked the lower eastern access road with a concrete bollard in 2006.

250. Between 1998 and 2003, before leasing their mooring, they visited the marina a couple of times and saw the houseboats moorings there with convenient vehicle access. During the period of their lease they always had vehicle access to their mooring.

251. Even though their houseboat is closer to the concrete bollard than most, the Hickmans have been badly affected by the closing of the access way. Vehicle access is necessary in order to get many large things on the houseboat from time to time: for example, televisions, barbecues, lounge suites, fridges, beds and mechanical gear.

252. The Hickmans also have three young children. When they go on the houseboat, they need to take food, drink, clothes, ski gear and fuel. Mrs Hickman has recently had a knee reconstruction and has therefore found it more difficult to walk to the mooring than otherwise.

253. Since the developers fenced off the wharf in 2006, to get to the hotel for dinner the Hickmans now need to climb the many timber stairs at the front of the supermarket. This is particularly hard at night and quite slippery when wet. They used to walk across the wharf and up the few steps at the rear of the wharf to the hotel, which was of a much gentler gradient. The new route has been particularly difficult for Mrs Hickman because of her knee problem.

254. Mr Hickman is very concerned about the difficulty any emergency service would have in getting to the mooring if needed. His greatest concern is his 77 year old father-in-law, who visits their mooring regularly, and who has a plastic knee and recently had heart by-pass surgery. He cannot walk very far without becoming short of breath. Mr Hickman is also concerned that if there was a fire at the marina, it would spread quickly because of the gas and fuel stored on houseboats. It would be critical to get fire services to the marina quickly.

255. Just as Mr Hickman would not buy a house without vehicle access, he would not have bought their houseboat mooring if it did not have vehicle access.

256. In 2007, Mr Hickman was kicking a football with his children next to his mooring when a man well known in the area as a former boxer told him to get off the property as it was private property. It appeared to Mr Hickman that this man was being paid by the developers to patrol its boundaries. The Hickmans would not have purchased their mooring if they thought they would not be able to play with their children on the bank.

Mr Leorke

257. In 2005 Mr Andrew Leorke bought a mooring in the Western Neighbourhood. It is five moorings away from where the marina meets the river. Before buying the mooring, Mr Leorke saw that there was a road to his mooring, and that mooring owners in the area would drive to their moorings and either park at the side of the road or drive back to the carpark. He also saw that there was a timber staircase coming down from the access road to his mooring.

258. In making his decision to purchase a mooring, Mr Leorke assumed that he would have legal access to his mooring along the roadway. He would not have purchased his mooring if he had thought otherwise. After he bought his mooring, and until the road was blocked, he used the road to access his mooring by car.

259. On an average trip to his houseboat his partner and he take food and five or six bags of clothes for themselves and their three children. Recently, he has had to carry all this in relays from the carpark. Mr Leorke walks along the access road, because the neighbourhood property along the waterfront does not have good accessibility. Mr Leorke now finds it particularly difficult to get rubbish off his houseboat. The easiest way to get a gas bottle to the houseboat is to transfer it on a small boat — which he thinks is dangerous.

260. Before the developers fenced off the wharf in front of the hotel, Mr Leorke used to walk through that area to get to the supermarket. It was pleasant to walk around the marina along the waterfront.

261. Mr Leorke's building company has been asked by the manager of the Central and Western Neighbourhood Associations to repair sections of the boardwalk on their neighbourhood property. However, now that the developers will not allow access along the road, there is no way of getting the necessary equipment along the strips of neighbourhood and community property.

Mr Muschinski

262. In mid 1995 Mr Thomas Muschinski received advertising from Mr Watson encouraging him to move his houseboat to Deep Creek. That material, (discussed above at [154]) included the statement:

> Berth owners have guaranteed access by road and by water to their mooring.

263. He then received more advertising material in relation to Deep Creek which included the prominent statement:

> All facilities can be accessed by road or from the river by houseboat or speed boat with public docking facilities available to visitors.

264. Mr Muschinski relied on that advertising material when, in September 1995, he decided to buy a mooring in the Central Neighbourhood. He would not have bought a mooring if he had thought he would not have access to it by road, and the advertising material reinforced his belief that he would have such access.

265. Mr Muschinski's father is 84 years old and requires a wheelchair or walker to move around. Prior to Christmas 2006, when the access ways were blocked, he was able to take his father to the houseboat by driving him right to the houseboat. He would very much like to be able to take his father on his houseboat again but, with the access roads blocked, he cannot. His father would not be able to walk the 200 or so metres to Mr Muschinski's mooring over the rough ground.

Mr Taylor

266. Mr Michael Taylor's company purchased a mooring in the Central Neighbourhood in October 2000. After receiving the trespass allegation letter from Andreones Lawyers in May 2005 (discussed above at [171]), Mr Taylor felt intimidated into accessing his mooring by driving along the access track to the stairs, unloading people, food, bags and other provisions down the stairs, then driving back to the carpark and walking back to the mooring. He considered this situation inconvenient and aggravating, because he felt robbed of what he felt was his right to park next to his mooring.

267. Since late 2006 when the developers blocked the access track altogether, his family and he have been put to great trouble and inconvenience. Among the guests they regularly have on their houseboat is his father, who turned 87 in September 2007, their five adult children and three grandchildren. This means that a lot of people, food and clothes need to be taken from the carpark to the houseboat mooring for each trip.

Mr Paine

268. In about March 2003 Mr Leon Paine rented a mooring in the Western Neighbourhood from Mr Watson for five months. During that period he was always able to drive his vehicle to the mooring, unload supplies and park at the mooring. In 2003 he purchased the easternmost mooring in the Eastern Neighbourhood. Until the developers denied access in 2006, he would drive his car right down to his mooring. Mr Paine's mooring is over 300 metres from the concrete bollard placed on the lower eastern access road in 2006. The carpark behind the hotel is a further 180 metres away.

Mr Smith

269. As discussed above at [146]–[148], in 1994 the original developers sold 12 mooring berths to companies owned by Mr Smith. Mr Smith has since sold six of these moorings. From the day his companies purchased the moorings until the time when the developers blocked access, there was vehicular access to the moorings.

270. Mr Smith also said that it used to be possible for visitors to the moorings to arrive from the Murray River in speedboats and moor at the public wharf. In his view, having the wharf closed to the public is unworkable. He testified and I accept that: "the big thing that was talked about from early on in the piece was the idea of putting up a hotel and a shop there and attracting people in from the river". He always saw the scheme as a tourist development.

271. Mr Smith is of the opinion that the barricading of the vehicle access tracks and the fencing off of the wharf have significantly devalued his companies' moorings. Had the scheme been presented at the outset on the basis that there was no vehicular access to the moorings, he would "not have touched the moorings with a bargepole".

Mr Williams

272. In October 2005 Mr Norm Williams bought a mooring in the Eastern Neighbourhood. Before doing so, he made four trips to the Deep Creek Marina. On each trip he had been able to access all areas of the marina in his car. Prior to purchase Mr Williams had seen the vendor parked next to the mooring and he simply assumed that access to his mooring would not be restricted.

273. Since vehicle access has been cut off, access is a big problem. All his family's clothes, food and water, among other things, have to be carried from the carpark to the mooring. Mr Williams says that if he were to try to do that and stay within the two metre community and neighbourhood property strips, which he understands he is legally restricted to in accessing his mooring, he would probably fall in the water. The two metre strip is too narrow and impractical, and there are big trees in the way. This means that he still gets to his mooring by walking on the access roads.

274. In April 2007 Mr Williams was at his houseboat with his two sons aged 7 and 8 when the younger son had an accident, resulting in his clothes catching fire. In order to take his injured son to hospital, he first had to walk to his car carrying his injured son while his other son used a bottle to pour water over his younger son's back. His mooring is one of the furthest from the carpark. He drove his younger son to Echuca Hospital from where he was airlifted to Melbourne with full thickness burns to 10 percent of his body. Mr Williams feels that the extent of his son's injury may have been reduced if he had been able to get him into a vehicle and therefore to medical assistance more quickly. With the access roads blocked, Mr Williams can see no way that emergency vehicles can now access the moorings.

Mr Buchanan

275. In June 2004 Mr Gary Buchanan's company purchased a mooring in the Central Neighbourhood. The mooring is five west of the hotel. In addition to a houseboat that Mr Buchanan and his family keep on the mooring, they have a speedboat that they often take on houseboat trips. They launch this speedboat at the boat ramp.

276. When they originally bought the mooring, the Buchanans would walk directly along the waterfront between their mooring and the boat ramp. That is, they walked along their neighbourhood property, through an area of community property, across what they thought was the public wharf, across the walkway to the front of the supermarket and down onto the boat ramp.

277. Since the developers fenced off the wharf, it is more difficult to get between their mooring and the boat ramp. This is because they now need to go around the wharf by climbing up the retaining wall onto Lots 14 and 15 (the hotel and supermarket), up and across past the fuel bowsers next to the supermarket, down a wooden staircase to the walkway at the front of the supermarket, along the walkway and down onto the boat ramp.

Mr and Mrs Clinch

278. Lindsay and Rita Clinch own a mooring berth in the Eastern Neighbourhood. When they initially purchased into the scheme, Mr Clinch assumed that the gravel access roads and the concrete boat ramp provided free and unfettered access to the water and houseboat moorings. Thereafter Mr and Mrs Clinch used the road on the eastern side of the marina to access their houseboat mooring and to park their car during the time they spent on the houseboat. Mr Clinch observed other houseboat mooring owners doing the same thing.

279. As noted above, Mrs Clinch received a letter on 26 May 2005 from the solicitors for the developers to the effect that parking adjacent to the mooring constituted a trespass. In late April 2005 the developers installed a boom gate to deny access to the boat ramp unless a fee was paid. Mr Clinch corresponded with the community association manager, Mr Haydon, regarding access rights in a letter of 13 June 2005.

Disability access

280. Mr Martin, an architect specialising in disability access, expressed the following conclusions which I accept:

(a) it is not practical to provide disability access that complies with the Building Code of Australia 2007 and the Disability Discrimination Act 1992 (Cth) along the neighbourhood property edge to service the Central and Western Neighbourhoods;
(b) it is not practical to provide complying disability access from the carpark to the eastern side of the Central Neighbourhood or along the neighbourhood property to service the Central and Eastern Neighbourhood;
(c) the only way to provide complying disability access to the three mooring neighbourhoods is to obtain Lot 16 land behind the community property and the neighbourhood property. This should include sufficient space for vehicle access and parking, which is best created where vehicle access currently exists. On the western side this would need to be not less than the available land of Lot 16. On the eastern side this would need to be at least about 20 metres expanding to the existing carpark.

[140711]

Access for repairs and maintenance

281. Mr Neil Giffin, the managing agent of the three mooring neighbourhood associations, gave evidence which I accept. Since early October 2006 he has endeavoured to facilitate necessary repairs to mooring walls and timber decking in the Central Neighbourhood on the western side. It has been extremely difficult to do so. Mr Jarman objected to "dead man's anchor" holes (supporting the mooring walls) being dug on Lot 16 and to a development application for the works. Mr Giffin described the physical and logistical difficulties in doing the work without being able to utilise Lot 16 land:

37. It is physically and logistically very difficult to have the work conducted without being able to utilise or pass over the land in Lot 16. I have attached a coloured plan of the community scheme with hand marking to indicate the difficulty to which I refer. The plan is annexed and marked NG-J. To access the area requiring repair, the tradesman is required to:

(a) Park his vehicle in the area behind the pub which I have marked A on the plan;
(b) Walk down the grass embankment adjacent to the pub, with his equipment and any plant and machinery, along the line marked B;
(c) Walk along the neighbourhood property 2 metre strip coloured blue and marked C (the additional 2 metre-wide lime coloured community property in this area is impassable); and
(d) Conduct the work within the area where the works are required marked D.

38. This is not only a real problem in this instance, but will be more of a problem for the other two neighbourhood associations I manage when repair works are required there. The other two neighbourhoods I manage are even more difficult to get to. This is because their strips of common property are only 2 metres wide and there are obstacles such as large red gums and steep grassy terrain that are also problematic to having tradesman access.
39. In fact it is not possible to access property in Neighbourhood Association DP 285433 without trespassing onto the neighbourhood property of Neighbourhood Association DP 285249 or Lot 16, with or without tools and equipment. This is because the connecting 2-metre wide strip of community property adjacent to the western half of Neighbourhood Association DP 285249 is too steep and is obstructed by trees.
40. I note further that these other two neighbourhoods will have another serious problem in that the dead man's anchors are longer than 2 metres and without the benefit of the adjacent community property in those neighbourhoods the anchors would need to be buried back into Lot 16.
41. There is in effect no vehicle access for tradespeople to conduct repairs despite the traditional gravel access roads still being in existence (although weeds are starting to grow on them). These access roads have been blocked off by very large concrete bollards making any vehicle passage impossible.

42. The problems with access are not only that the mooring walls and timber decking require repairs, but the lot owners need access to get their families and supplies to their boats and to conduct internal repairs and renovations to their boats as well.
43. I hold a major concern about access to the boats in case of an emergency, such as accident or illness. This has already been a problem when Norm William's son was injured, the details of which are set out in his letter to me dated 14 May 2007 and is annexed and marked NG-K.
44. In my opinion it is also only a matter of time before Lot 16's concrete bollards prevent a fire truck from attending a fire on a houseboat laden with gas and fuel and moored only 30 centimetres from houseboats on either side.

45. I also have serious concerns about the ability of the community to access the electrical boxes that supply all of the power to the individual houseboat mooring berths as these are wholly contained within the private development lot being Lot 16. I have formed the view that this is a clear indication of the developer's intention that the land directly to the north of the mooring berths, where the roads and meter boxes are, was intended to form part of community property. Indeed this is the only practical way to have vehicle access to moorings and the moorings themselves are only practical and worthwhile if the owners have vehicle access to them. In my view, many, many persons would not have bought into the community scheme if they knew they would not have vehicle access.

282. In cross-examination Mr Giffin agreed that the work could be done from a barge, but added that that would be totally unsatisfactory. I agree. He agreed that since obtaining development consent he had not approached the developers to use Lot 16. In my view, there was little, if any, point in attempting to obtain such an approval. The attitude of the developers was clear.

Access for emergency vehicles

283. There is a serious problem of access by emergency vehicles due to the placement of the concrete bollards by the developers. This is illustrated by the evidence of Mr Williams above. On 3 December 2007 the council served on the developers two notices of intention to serve an order under s 121H of the Environmental Planning and Assessment Act 1979 (NSW) (EPA Act). One notice required the following:

Order 6, Section 121B of the Act

To remove as many of the concrete barriers located along the eastern boundary of the Property (as identified in the attached photograph marked annexure A), as is necessary to enable access to emergency vehicles and to refrain from blocking access to emergency services to ensure or promote adequate fire safety or fire safety awareness.

Reason for Proposing to Issue the Order (Section 121L)

The reason for the proposed Order is that the concrete barriers may restrict access to emergency services that require access to ensure or promote adequate fire safety including the ability to prevent fire, suppress fire or prevent the spread of fire.

Period for Compliance (Section 121M)

The period allowed for the removal of the concrete barriers will be seven (7) days from the date of service of the Order.

284. The other order required the following:

Order 15, Section 121B of the Act

To comply with Development Approval 48/93 and remove concrete barrier(s) located along the eastern boundary of the Property (as identified in the attached photograph marked annexure A), in order to enable Council to have unrestricted access along the nominated right of carriageway required to service the houseboat pump station (Lot 11, DP 839320).

Reason for Proposing to Issue the Order (Section 121L)

The reason for the proposed Order is that the concrete barrier(s) restrict access to Council along the approved right of carriageway to enable required works to be undertaken on the houseboat pump station. Development Approval 48/93 is not being complied with by those persons entitled to act under the Development Approval.

Period for Compliance (Section 121M)

The period allowed for the removal of the concrete barriers will be seven (7) days form the date of service of the Order.

285. The developers have failed to comply with the notices.

Access and other problems for Lots 14 and 15: Mr O'Brien

Lease of mooring at Deep Creek

286. For three months from about June 2003 Mr David O'Brien leased a mooring in the Eastern Neighbourhood from Mr Watson. During that period he accessed his mooring by driving his car along the access track closest to the eastern moorings, unloading his family and gear, parking the car next to the access track on the upper access track, then walking down to his houseboat. During this period he was not aware of any mooring owner on the eastern side of the marina who did not access their houseboat in this way. He was never told by Mr Watson or anyone else that he did not have the right to access his mooring in this way.

287. During this period Mr O'Brien would sometimes patronise the general store at the marina contained in "Watson's Bar and Restaurant" located on the then Lot 9 (now Lot 14). He observed that many patrons of the general store accessed the business by bringing ski boats in from the Murray River and tying the boats up at a custom built ski boat parking pontoon tied to the wharf located directly in front of the business. This ski-park accommodated about ten ski boats. There were steps in the waterline of the wharf so that people could easily step out of their ski boats, onto the pontoon, up the steps onto the wharf and then continue over the wharf to the business. The ski boat parking pontoon was marked "Watson's Bar and Restaurant".

Purchase of restaurant

288. During the first half of 2003 Mr O'Brien became aware from a newspaper advertisement that the Watson's Bar and Restaurant land and business were being sold by tender. He contacted the selling agents and they forwarded him an advertisement. The first two photos on the first page of the advertisement showed the view of the lagoon from near the business. The main photo on that page showed open access from the wharf to the business. The plan on the second page did not indicate any obstructions between the business and the water and the wharf. He considered the access to the wharf and lagoon to be a real feature of the business and the land.

289. Mr O'Brien contacted the agents again and obtained the information memorandum and tender documents referred to in the advertisement. This documentation identified the vendors as Mr Watson, D C Marina Pty Ltd, Hillington Valley Pty Ltd and Ozzie Pty Ltd. D C Marina Pty Ltd was not in fact an owner. It was an agent for the developers and owners of Lot 16. D C Marina Pty Ltd later changed its name to Deep Creek Marina Pty Ltd.

290. The information memorandum sent to Mr O'Brien included the statements:

The land has frontage to Deep Creek Lagoon, which provides direct access to the Murray River…

The marina restaurant development forms an integral part of the Deep Creek Marina complex

291. The information memorandum also included a photo which showed unobstructed access from the wharf to the land and business, including steps built into the retaining wall to make that easier. The photo was accompanied by the statement:

The area fronting the restaurant and lagoon is planted to lawn and the large native river red gums provide a most pleasant outlook.

292. Mr O'Brien relied on all that he had seen and experienced in his time at the marina and on what he had read in these documents when his wife and he, together with their partners, the Harrisons (who left the partnership shortly thereafter), decided to tender for the "Watson's Restaurant and Bar" land and business using the tender documentation provided. They were successful. Mr Jarman was an unsuccessful tenderer.

293. The contract of sale included a plan which showed the public wharf and adjacent to it a ski park facility comprising berthing spaces with adjacent fingers so there were two ski boats within the confines of each finger. The practice at that time (when Mr Watson owned the restaurant and store) was for people to come in their boats to the ski park, tie up their boats, walk across the public wharf, across the lawns in front of the restaurant and partake of the amenities. Mr Watson would sell them things with the intention of making a profit.

294. Before the necessary land subdivision was complete, Mr O'Brien settled on the purchase and went into occupation under a lease arrangement. The council granted consent No 282/03 to subdivision on 2 September 2003. It was a condition of consent that the adjacent carpark and access roads must be sealed or a bank guarantee in the equivalent cost submitted. The O'Briens and their partners then took a transfer dated 17 February 2004 of the new Lot 10.

Extensions to the premises

295. During the early period that he operated the restaurant and bar, Mr O'Brien agreed with Mr Watson, Mr Bares and Mr Robertson that if he could get a general hotel licence for the premises he would lodge a development application to extend the hotel premises and build a separate supermarket. Subsequently, he purchased a general hotel licence and accordingly lodged development application 049/04, which the council approved on 15 June 2004. The proposed development was described as "extension to existing restaurant/bar and new retail store". A report considered by the council before granting consent noted that 80 car spaces were to be provided adjacent to the new supermarket, on Lot 16. A condition of consent required the car parking area to be sealed and landscaped.

296. On 21 October 2004 Mr O'Brien entered into a contract with the developers to acquire from them a small further piece of adjacent land on which the supermarket would be built. The price was low, $5,000, because it was Mr O'Brien's responsibility to build the supermarket and extend the hotel and the vendors told him that they believed his work would improve the value of their land for residential development within the scheme. As a result they agreed that this second contract for sale would be effected by a re-subdivision of Lot 10 (which had been transferred to the O'Briens, and Lot 13 (the remainder of Lot 9 belonging to the developers) to create Lot 14 (the land that the hotel is now on), Lot 15 (the land that the supermarket is now on) and Lot 16 (the developers' remaining land in the scheme).

297. On 7 December 2004 the council granted development consent 131/05 for extension to the supermarket to include a manager's residence in accordance with specified plans. One of those plans showed some 80 car parking spaces adjacent to the supermarket, on Lot 16. One of the conditions of development consent 131/05 was that the conditions of development consent 049/04 still applied. Those car parking spaces have never been provided on Lot 16.

298. On the creation of Lot 15 (the supermarket land), Mr O'Brien agreed to an easement benefiting Lot 16 across the waterfront of Lot 15. This easement allows the owners of Lot 16 a permanent right of access across the waterfront of the supermarket. Mr O'Brien directed his solicitors to include that land in the area the plaintiffs seek to be included in community land by these proceedings.

299. Construction of the supermarket was complete by Christmas 2004. Later Mr O'Brien obtained development consent 131/05 for a caretaker residence above the supermarket.

Access problems

300. At Easter 2005 two large men stood on the road outside the supermarket. When Mr O'Brien asked who they worked for and what they were doing, one replied that they worked for Deep Creek Marina Pty Ltd and had been told to collect $20 per day or $50 per week from anybody who wanted to use the boat ramp but who didn't rent a storage shed from Deep Creek Marina Pty Ltd.

301. This situation upset many boat owners. It also upset Mr O'Brien because it was reducing his patronage. Several of his customers accused him of being affiliated with these men and he had to explain that he certainly was not.

302. These two men were there for a week or two. Finally Mr O'Brien observed a confrontation between the two men and one of the mooring owners in the scheme, Mr Peter Armstrong. Following this, the two men came into his supermarket and said to him "We are bouncers from OPT Nightclub. We have had a much harder time working out here than we've ever had there. We are out of here". Mr Jarman owned the freehold of OPT Nightclub in Echuca at that time. The men then stopped demanding money from users of the boat ramp. None of the money collected by these men was handed over to the community association by Mr Jarman or his then employer, Deep Creek Marina Pty Ltd.

303. In mid 2005 Mr O'Brien's workmen were installing the concrete access way across the front of the supermarket land. He had a conversation with Mr Jarman:

Mr O'Brien:	"Can I get my workmen to upgrade the steps in the wharf down to the ski-park?"
Mr Jarman:	"No — not unless Neil Giffin retracts the statement that he made" (Mr O'Brien cannot recall what statement Mr Giffin had made that Mr Jarman was talking about). "In fact you can't use the wharf to access the ski-park any more because it's our land".
Mr O'Brien:	"Ok, I'll move the ski-park away from 'your' wharf and put it in front of the supermarket".

304. In cross-examination Mr Watson agreed that statement of Mr Jarman might have been reported to him and said he agreed with it because there were "insurance issues to address". He said he didn't allow Mr O'Brien at his own expense to repair the steps to the public wharf because it wasn't his final decision to make because (in effect) he was now a minority owner of Lot 16. When asked whether he was well aware that fencing off the public wharf and failing to repair the steps would have a definite impact on and hurt Mr O'Brien's business, Mr Watson replied that he didn't think it would be fenced off for as long as it has been and he supposed no-one would rush in to do anything while these proceedings were on foot.

305. At this time, Deep Creek Marina Pty Ltd was operating a houseboat hire business from the wharf alongside the ski boat parking pontoon. It was about this time, mid 2005, that two poles were installed on the wharf to provide a power outlet at the top to service those houseboats — which Mr O'Brien later discovered had been connected to his electricity supply.

306. After his discussion with Mr Jarman, referred to at [303] above, Mr O'Brien shifted the ski-park to the front of the supermarket — abutting the easement which he had granted in favour of Lot 16. His workmen built a concrete walkway to improve the walkway area affected by the easement. At that time one of the houseboats offered for hire by Deep Creek Marina Pty Ltd used the public wharf.

307. In or about September 2006 Mr O'Brien's wife told him that Mr Robertson had towed the ski-park away. He subsequently asked Mr Jarman for its return in the following conversation:

Mr O'Brien:	"I want my ski-park back".
Mr Jarman:	"It's not your ski-park — it belongs to Deep Creek Marina Pty Ltd. And anyway you weren't permitted to put a ski-park in front of the supermarket — the water in the Marina belongs to us".

308. After Mr O'Brien bought the Watson's Bar and Restaurant business from Mr Bares, Mr Bares called him and told him he needed to insure the ski-park. Mr O'Brien did this. He also maintained the ski-park by painting it. In cross-examination it was suggested to him that when the ski-park was removed it was the property of Deep Creek Marina Pty Ltd or some other entity not associated with Mr O'Brien or his wife. However, Mr O'Brien responded that he always believed it belonged to the Watson's Restaurant and Bar business as it was labelled with that name when he purchased the business. It is unnecessary to resolve that issue.

309. At about the time that Mr Robertson towed the ski-park away in September 2006, the developers fenced off the wharf in front of the hotel.

310. Mr O'Brien recognised immediately that the removal of the ski-park and the closing of the wharf would have a serious impact on his business turnover and goodwill. He had previously estimated that 90 percent of his business during peak times came from visitors to the marina from the river. He therefore engaged a third party to build two new ski boat parks for him at a cost of $30,000 so that each could fit on a privately owned mooring in the scheme.

311. When his new ski-parks were completed in October 2006, Mr O'Brien was unable to use the boat ramp to launch them because manoeuvring them into position was made impossible by the wooden post fencing that by that stage the developers had largely completed around Lot 16. Rather than pay the $2,200 that Mr Jarman demanded to allow him to use the boat ramp in the new marina that had been developed further along Deep Creek on Lot 23 by Messrs Watson, Bares and Robertson, Mr O'Brien paid $300 to have a crane come and launch them.

312. The owners of the moorings immediately on either side of the hotel and supermarket allowed Mr O'Brien to use their moorings to place his new ski boat parking pontoons. They moved their houseboats to other moorings which were not otherwise being used. This situation continues today.

313. Shortly afterwards, Mr O'Brien was contacted by the council and instructed to move his ski boat parking from those moorings because, the council stated, it was an unauthorised use. He was amazed at this because Deep Creek Marina Pty Ltd had operated their houseboat businesses from the wharf for a long time without any development approval that he was aware of. Nevertheless, he made a development application for permission to continue to use the ski-parks on those moorings.

314. Notwithstanding the new ski boat parks, more than one group of customers arrived from the river quite agitated and annoyed with him and asked him aggressively "Why did you fence off the wharf? What good is it now?" He had to explain to these people that he did not fence off the wharf and that in order to access his business now they should park at his new ski boat parking and make their way up.

315. Mr O'Brien advised his patrons to take one the following routes:

> (a) the eastern route requires patrons to tie up at his ski-park, make their way over the boat ramp area (which can be quite busy and dangerous with vehicles reversing at peak times), along the walkway in front of the supermarket, up the wooden stairs in the supermarket lot, past the fuel bowsers on the supermarket lot and across to the hotel;
> (b) the western of these routes requires patrons to tie up at his ski-park, make their way over the neighbourhood and community land, up the retaining wall in the edge of the community property without the assistance of adequate steps, and over to the hotel.

316. Mr O'Brien has observed many ski-boats arriving at the fenced-off wharf and turning around and heading out of the marina again — apparently unaware that they are welcome to use these new ski-parks.

317. This problem was made worse by signs that the developers put up at the mouth of the marina which stated:

> Private Property — No Entry
>
> Perricoota Boat Club — Private Property — No Unauthorised Mooring — Trespassers Prosecuted

318. Mr O'Brien has been told many times by patrons that other potential patrons have not come into the marina from the river due to these signs. The signs have since been removed.

319. In late 2006, Mr O'Brien was told by the head of the Echuca — Moama Houseboat Hire Association that Mr Jarman had made a presentation to them and instructed them to tell all their renters not to moor anywhere near or in Deep Creek Marina because it belonged to him.

320. The developers concreted in a sign on the river frontage of the Honeyman Lot which points upstream (past the mouth of the marina) and states "Perricoota Boat Club — 6.5 km — No unauthorised mooring — Trespassers Prosecuted". They also erected a further sign, upstream, on the river frontage of Mr Bares' property pointing downstream past the marina mouth which states "Private Property — 6.5 km — Perricoota Boat Club — No unauthorised mooring — No trespassing". The two signs, which point 6.5 km up and downstream respectively, each point across the mouth of the marina and across land belonging to the community association.

321. The developers have not maintained the wharf since they fenced it off. This was upsetting to Mr O'Brien because he bought the goodwill of the business from those same people. He believes that their actions have damaged this goodwill significantly.

322. Just before Christmas 2006 the developers arranged, and Mr Watson and Mr Jarman personally undertook, the installation of concrete barricades around Lot 16 preventing any vehicle access to the moorings. They engaged a former boxer and other men to patrol their new concrete boundary. They also placed a concrete bollard over the boat ramp. Mr Giffin and Mr O'Brien immediately arranged the removal of this particular bollard by crane to Lot 16 on legal advice that it was placed on community land or was obstructing access over the easement over the lagoon. The developers subsequently shifted that bollard back by crane. Mr Giffin and Mr O'Brien again immediately arranged its removal by crane to Lot 16 where it has remained since. Their moving of that bollard was made particularly difficult by the physical intervention of the former boxer.

323. After the installation of the barricades there were far fewer people using the marina and patronising Mr O'Brien's businesses. It was also no longer possible for people to get older or younger members of their family to and from their moorings by car. Mr O'Brien was no longer able to offer the services previously offered to houseboat owners whereby they would let him know when they needed their gas bottles for their houseboats replaced and he would attend to that using his utility.

324. He has observed that at night-time people are now staying in their houseboats rather than walking up to his hotel. There is little or no lighting throughout the marina, making it very difficult to walk around at night. When people were able to get their cars to their moorings they would drive their family up the restaurant, have dinner at night and then drive them back to the mooring afterwards. That is no longer possible. He estimates that it is about 500 metres from the furthest mooring to the door of his hotel.

325. If Lots 14 and 15 were to be fenced off, it would be impossible for people to get from the eastern side of the marina to the western side and vice versa without going around that property and through the carpark at the back of the hotel — except for the owners of Lot 16 because they have the benefit of the easement referred to earlier.

326. Mr O'Brien and his family lived in the manager's quarters built into the supermarket premises. All of the actions of the developers have, in his view, made Deep Creek Marina a very unpleasant place to live and not the environment that he bought into at all.

327. Mr O'Brien testified, and I accept, that the wharf was not in an unsafe condition until the developers fenced it off. Until then he used to keep it clean and safe. The erosion that can now be seen in parts of the wharf occurred subsequently due to rainwater from Lot 16 which flowed over Lots 14 and 15.

328. During the course of the hearing Mr and Mrs O'Brien were made bankrupt.

EVENTS AFFECTING THE COMMUNITY ASSOCIATION IN 2005–2006

Early 2005

329. In 2005, negotiations for the transfer of land from the developers to the community association continued but were confounded to some extent by the developers' application in March 2005 to the Consumer, Trader and Tenancy Tribunal (CTTT) for an order under s 85 of the Management Act appointing a managing agent to perform all the functions of the community association for 12 months.

330. From February 2005 Mr Jarman was employed full time by the developers as their site manager. In early 2005 Mr Neil Giffin, then the manager of the Central and Western Neighbourhood Associations (and now also the manager of the Eastern Neighbourhood Association) was concerned that the community association did not appear to be functioning. Mr Jarman informed him that the community association records were with Andreones Lawyers (the developers' lawyers) in Sydney. Despite Mr Giffin requesting these records from those lawyers in order to get the community association operating, the lawyers did not provide him with the records for, it seems, at least six months.

331. According to Mr Jarman, by early 2005 Deep Creek Marina gave the impression of being neglected, run down and in need of repair to the point of replacement in some areas of the community parcel, and of something needing to be done to enable it to function property. He considered that the problems included the community association not holding properly constituted meetings and not taking action to prevent parking on community property, no full time caretaker to look after community property, no maintenance program and the electrical system appeared to need upgrade or serious maintenance due to usage increases and lack of maintenance. Mr Jarman also considered that the problems included that the potable water supply was failing, there were unsafe areas of neighbourhood and community property and capital works were needed to upgrade infrastructure that had run down. Also, he testified, there was a potential public liability exposure which had become of major concern to developers. Consequently, he said, the developers decided to take two courses of action. One was to apply to the CTTT in March 2005 for the appointment of a managing agent under s 85 of the Management Act. The other was to give the community association an opportunity resolve the problems referred to above. He was approached by Mr Michael Gannon, the president of the Central Neighbourhood Association, with a view to reactivating the community association.

332. In the first half of 2005 the developers were also looking to advance their development of Lot 16. According to Mr Jarman, to do this they were anxious to resolve their perceived issues with the community association. My impression is that it was their interest in developing Lot 16 that drove their actions in relation to the community association.

CTTT proceedings commenced: March 2005

333. On 7 March 2005 Andreones Lawyers, acting on behalf of the developers, applied to the CTTT for the order to which I have referred appointing a managing agent to perform all the functions of the community association for 12 months. The annexed reasons alleged that the management structure was not functioning or not functioning satisfactorily because of: (a) failures to act in accordance with the Management Act, to repair and maintain the community property, to enforce the association's by-laws, and to conduct meetings in accordance with the Management Act and the by-laws; (b) financial and accounting malpractice; and (c) failure to properly deal with other issues. The CTTT listed the matter for consideration and hearing on 13 December 2005.

334. At a general meeting of the Eastern Neighbourhood Association on 12 March 2005 it was resolved to obtain quotes for an independent body corporate manager to manage the community association.

335. On 16 April 2005, the community association resolved to appoint Mr Haydon as its manager. Mr Giffin considered that this resolved the issue. However, despite the appointment of Mr Haydon, the developers pushed ahead with their application to the CTTT. A letter from Andreones Lawyers to Mr Haydon of 22 September 2005 indicated that the developers did not accept Mr Haydon's appointment as satisfactory.

336. On 9 May 2005 Mr Gannon wrote the CTTT a letter which included the following:

> The Marina was first developed in 1994 by Mr Anthony Watson and ran smoothly until Mr Watson sold the majority of his interest to Mr Gary Barr [sic] (Hillington Valley P/L). A short time after that Ozzie Erections also became financially involved with Mr Gary Barr.
>
> …As part of Lot 13 [now Lot 16], the land between the boundary of neighbourhood lots excluding community property, contain access roads to the houseboat moorings. What has happened over the last few months, is that these roads have been fenced and blocked off. Also a boat ramp which is on community property has also been blocked off with the erection of a boom gate. This was done at Easter this year. There has also been considerable intimidation to anyone who voices any objections to the behaviour of the developer… We are now of the opinion that the main reason for the appointment of the manager over the Community Association is for the benefit of the parties who have lodged this application…

Annual general meeting of community association — 16 April 2005

337. In consultation with the owners of Lots 14 and 15 (the hotel and supermarket), Mr Jarman and Mr Briffa, the then managing agent of the Eastern Neighbourhood, Mr Giffin sent a notice to all owners within the community association, calling a meeting to reactivate it. This meeting was held on 16 April 2005. At the meeting Mr Giffin said that its main purpose was to try to re-constitute the community association which had been inactive for the past three years or so and then to move to where it was going in the future and to appoint a manager. The meeting resolved to appoint Mr John Haydon of Albury Strata Services Pty Ltd as the community association manager. Mr Jarman had earlier told the meeting that the developers would prefer that company to be the manager.

338. The minutes record:

> Members requested Deep Creek Marina Pty Ltd open the boat ramp boom gate. Mr Paul Jarman tabled the boom gate will remain locked.
>
> Members requested correspondence be forwarded to the developer to unlock the boom gate and permit access to lot owners

In cross-examination Mr Jarman indicated that at that time he held the keys to the boom gate.

339. The minutes record that Mr Jarman tabled issues affecting the community association. Mr Jarman appears to have indicated to the meeting that about 20 apartments were going to be built above the eastern moorings and that what they would be going to overlook was just not acceptable.

340. Subsequently Mr Jarman obtained from the developers' project manager Mr Paul Bird, fee proposals for a proposed upgrade from GMR Engineering Services Pty (GMR) and ERM Consultants (ERM) referred to below. They totalled about $118,000.

GMR fee proposal for civil and structural engineering assistance — March 2005

341. On 21 March 2005 Mr Glen Ryan of GMR provided Mr Chris Bell of ERM, who were acting for the developers, with a fee proposal for civil and structural engineering assistance. It included the following:

> Re: Deep Creek Marina — Civil & Structural Works
>
> CAPABILITY STATEMENT & FEE PROPOSAL
>
> …We understand that you require general civil and structural engineering assistance with the advancement of the above project. From our site visit on Thursday (17/3/05) and discussions with yourself, Paul Bird and Ozzie we understand the client's requirements to incorporate the following key elements:
>
> Preparation and development of design solutions and documentation necessary for the construction of the following assets;
>
> a) Main Access Road:
>
> The existing bitumen surfaced, two lane access road from Perricoota Road to the car park at the rear of the hotel (about 600m long), to be redeveloped as an asphalt surface with a formal drainage solution, which may discharge to ornamental lakes to be developed adjacent to the roundabout. This work will also incorporate a roundabout at the Perricoota end and a divided road connection to Perricoota Road.
>
> b) Internal Access Road:
>
> The existing part bitumen and gravel surfaced extension of the two lane access road from the hotel to a the intersection at the rear of the supermarket and adjacent to the boat ramp (about 150m long) to be redeveloped with an asphalt surface with a formal drainage solution, discharging via an interceptor to Deep Creek.
> c) Western Moorings Access Track:

The existing western house boat moorings gravel surfaced access track (single lane) from the car park through to the turn around at the sewage pump station (about 300m long) to be redeveloped as a reinforced concrete surface with a formal drainage solution, discharging via an interceptor to Deep Creek. The Council operates a sewage pump out point at the end of this track and requires unhindered access for a light truck/service vehicle.

d) Eastern Moorings Access Track:

The existing eastern house boat moorings gravel surfaced access track (single lane) from the boat ramp through to the turn around at the boundary with the new marina (about 350m long). There is also another turn around situated mid way along its length, to be redeveloped as a reinforced concrete surface with a formal drainage solution, discharging via an interceptor to Deep Creek.

[140720]

e) Hotel Access Ramp & Bench:

The access ramp/track to the mooring level bench in front of the hotel site and adjacent to the boat ramp (about 60m long) to be redeveloped as a reinforced concrete surface with a formal drainage solution, discharging via an interceptor to Deep Creek.

f) Hotel Car Park:

The existing 2 bay gravel surfaced car park will be paved and surfaced in asphalt, with formal drainage discharging to Deep Creek via the internal access road drainage solution. The existing car park will be divided into two distinct parking areas preventing drive through and discouraging the parking of cars and boat trailers. The car park closest to the Hotel will be the only car park from which access can be gained to the western moorings.

g) Redevelopment of House Boat Moorings:

The existing red gum timber retaining and wall and deck structures shall be replaced with a precast concrete and steel pile solution. The moorings shall incorporate a retaining wall structure and be designed to minimise impacts upon the trees.

THE MOORINGS;

The moorings will also incorporate free standing driven piles at the end of the vessels (one pile per two vessels). The client advises that they have worked successfully with Murray Valley Piling in the past. Also the client proposes the replacement of the existing service arrangements with all-in-one bollards which include a light, GPO's, metered treated water outlets and provision of data/com's. These bollards have been already sourced, evaluated and used in the recently developed marina.

The reconstructed moorings will include provision for designated tie up points, also consideration of the landscape solution, removal of the existing stairways and facilitate the replacement of the existing stairways and facilitate the replacement of the existing raw water irrigation system. The client prefers the house boat owners provide their own on-board vessel bumper protection.

TRAFFIC MANAGEMENT;

We also note the client's concern that the mooring access tracks will be for set-down, drop-off and pick-up only. Boat owners will be discouraged from parking adjacent to the moorings. Parking on the lawn areas adjacent to the mooring access tracks will actively discouraged by the client and closely supervised. A boom gate will control access to the moorings. The boom gate and controls will sourced and provided by the client.

342. The letter included a fee proposal in the sum of $38,093 for the design of these works. This amount was increased to $44,022 in Mr Ryan's email of 22 March 2005 to Mr Bell, which noted some "omissions or areas requiring clarification".

Brolec assessment of electrical requirements — 13 May 2005

343. On 13 May 2005 Mr Jarman obtained from Mr Rick Brockwell of Brolec Electrical Contractors an assessment of electrical requirements for the Deep Creek Marina, which was expressed as follows:

> Please find for your information points that need consideration for the Electrical installation for the Marina extension stage 2 as discussed with yourself and Chris Bell from E.R.M.
>
> 1. Substation is now at peak load and needs urgent upgrade.
> 2. Substation needs to be relocated to a ground mount type kiosk and new main switchboard/metering board constructed to house all individual meters.
> 3. Existing mains power to old Marina is non compliant and needs attention we have already encountered dangerous situations on 3 moorings, cabling is single type insulation and is not recommended. In some cases conduit is barely 150mm underground and crosses other boundaries.
> 4. Safety RCDs must be fitted to all new bollards to comply with Standard to protect moorings and all lighting must be upgraded to comply.
> [140721]
>
> 5 New mains cable is recommended to all moorings so they can be individually metered and give mooring owners more capacity to feed their houseboats ie. Air Conditioning, pumps and equipment new houseboats, as you would know require more capacity.
> 6. Communication system via PABX can also be introduced
> 7. Country Energy require meters to be clustered to be read individually in common area, not the current check metering system being read through one main meter.
> 8. We have spoken with Chris Bell E.R.M. in regards to the above and also in reference to water and irrigation system. Any information needed re water speak with Rob Knight [telephone number].
> 9. All existing check meter boards will be made redundant and would probably be an idea to move the pumping station board to a more suitable location.

Extraordinary general meeting of community association — 14 May 2005

344. An extraordinary general meeting of the community association was held on 14 May 2005. Among those in attendance were Mr Jarman, Mr Haydon (the community association manager) and Mr Giffin (neighbourhood associations' manager). Many lot proprietors were in attendance as observers.

345. Mr Jarman tabled preliminary concept plans indicating, he testified, the works which the developers considered needed to be considered for the site. The plans in evidence do not appear to be nearly as comprehensive as that; but do show (among other things) realignment and extension of the western access road with a turning circle at the end and vehicle turnoff areas, a two metre wide concrete boardwalk around the whole marina (apparently over the neighbourhood strip), and the lower eastern access road apparently with vehicle turnoff areas. The total cost of all the planning works and the plans was identified by Mr Jarman at $118,000.

346. The minutes record the following:

> COMMUNITY ASSOCIATION RECORDS
>
> RESOLVED that:
> 1. Paul Jarman arrange for the transfer of all documents held by Andreones to John Haydon of Albury Strata Services Pty Ltd;
> 2. Paul Jarman also be requested contact the Consumer Trader & Tenancy Tribunal to formally withdraw an application for the appointment of a compulsory manager;
> 3. John Haydon, on receipt of the records presently held by Andreones (Solicitors), be authorised to re-establish, reconstruct the records of the Community Association to comply with statutory requirements…
>
> OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH & SAFETY (O H & S)
>
> RESOLVED that a quote be obtained from a professionally qualified person to carry out an OH & S report on the Community Association Property.

FUTURE DEVELOPMENT OF THE DEEP CREEK COMPLEX

Mr Paul Jarman was provided with an opportunity to table a development proposal to those present on future developments within the Deep Creek Marina site.

Mr Jarman advised that the up-grade would need to include a new sub-station for the supply of electricity to the site, as there was concern that the current supply would not [sic] be insufficient to supply future demand especially when the complex was full of owners, guests and visitors, the ball park figure suggested was $200,000.00.

The future plans also included, roads, car parking, retaining walls and the marinas, Paul Jarman tabled a set of drawings of the future project and provided an overview to those present at the meeting.

As part of the project there would be a need for the Community Association (including the neighbourhood schemes) to contribute to the costs.

Deep Creek development would contribute some funds and provide a parcel of land, 1 meter wide × 200 meters in length that would be used as a future car park, however would require sealing at the cost of the Community Association.

[140722]

Paul Jarman then vacated the meeting to allow representatives present to discuss the proposal.

Peter Gray suggested that the Community Association could not meet its share of the total cost of the project, which was expected to cost in excess of two million dollars, ($2.000.000.00), however he would be comfortable to make a non-binding recommendation that each marina berth lot proprietor contribute fifteen thousand dollars, $15,000.000 towards the project.

The members present then RESOLVED to put forward a proposal for Paul Jarman to take to his company, as follows:

> a detailed proposal be prepared and provided to the manager of the Community Association to be distributed to the representatives of each community association lot to in turn be distributed by the manager of the neighbourhood associations to the appropriate neighbourhood association lots;
> the proposal to contain specific details on each part of the development that funding is expected to be contributed by the Community Association, each section to be accompanied by a site plan identifying where the works will be carried out…

Mr Jarman agreed in cross-examination that the word "not" before "be insufficient" under the heading "FUTURE DEVELOPMENT OF THE DEEP CREEK COMPLEX" was a typographical error.

347. Mr Jarman's note in relation to that meeting on 14 May 2005 included the following:

> Paul Jarman presented
> • A concept layout of the site
> • Guestimations of price for works based on previous works carried out on site (this was clearly explained as not accurately costed)
> • Approximant [sic] works totalled $2,000,000.00 plus
> • Almost all works tabled were for OH & S reasons (that we have had preliminary advice on to say there is significant risk)
> • Deep Creek Marina P/L conceded significant land concessions to the community and neighbourhood association to help resolve this matter once and for all.
> • As a result of the presentation to the executive committee came back and offered $15000.00 per boat ($1,275,000.00 total) but are not in a legal position for 14 days to vote and ratify the decision because of the Comm. Assoc Act I believe.
> • This is a first offer I believe we will get more but have to now present a case with more pressure for them to work a bit harder.

ERM proposal for landscape architectural services — 2 June 2005

348. On 2 June 2005 Mr Bell and Mr Allan Wyatt of ERM wrote to DC Marina Pty Ltd care of Mr Paul Bird, providing a proposal in the sum of about $70,000 for landscape architectural services in relation to the entry road, a roundabout and entry signage; and a landscape concept plan associated with (inter alia) the marina frontage, associated access roads and river entry.

Special general meeting of community association — 18 June 2005

349. A special general meeting of the community association was held on 18 June 2005. The agenda items included:

> 6. That the Community Association determine if a formal occupational health and safety report on the condition of Association Property should be arranged.
>
> 9. That a draft development proposal by Deep Creek Marina Pty Ltd be tabled and approved.
> 12. That a draft budget estimate be tabled for approval by the Community Association including raising funds to contribute to the preparation of specifications for the development of Association Property (civil engineering and environmental engineering) totalling $118,000 and that levies be determined pursuant to the Act.

350. All lots in the community association were represented at the meeting. Mr Jarman represented the developers' lot. The manager of the community association (Mr Haydon) and the managers of the Central, Western and Eastern Neighbourhood Associations (Mr Briffa and Mr Giffin) were in attendance. The community association resolved to obtain an occupational health and safety report from Solutions IE to (inter alia) enable any action to be taken in relation to maintaining the community property in a state of good repair and when used as a place of work. The community association discussed: (a) a recent letter from Deep Creek Marina Pty Ltd to boat owners concerning the proposed issuing of notices against owners for "oversized houseboats" (b) letters from solicitors of behalf of the developers concerning parking on Lot 16; and (c) a draft development proposal from Deep Creek Marina Pty Ltd, which was tabled. Mr O'Brien spoke in relation to the speedboat mooring facility and why it was needed by the hotel.

351. The meeting also discussed "The proposal for the Community Association to obtain a transfer of ownership of the access roads, such land currently being part of [blank in minutes] would ensure that houseboat owners have vehicular access to their boats but with provisos eg parking, rubbish etc so that the Community Association Executive Committee would be able to enforce rules". There was a question about whether this land would become community association property. Mr Jarman spoke in relation to proposed development of the marina. The minutes record in that context (apparently as a statement by him) that:

> In relation to the roads on Lot 13, currently the houseboat owners have access through this area and the developer has noted the title of that land will be given to the Community Association on the proviso that the work that has to be done to the roadway to bring it to the required level (concrete roads and edging), will need to be at the cost of the Community Association on the basis that access controls are put on the road, loading/unloading zones, only 15 minute limits, no vehicular access between 12 midnight and 6 am and that the cost to the developer to be cost neutral (developer pays by the contribution of the land). This would be the same with second section of land and that the only cost to the lot owners will be only the cost of the upgrade. The benefit to the developer is that the site will be clean.

352. The minutes also record that:

> Paul Jarman noted that for the Community Association to move forward, the Community Association would need to approve the $118,000 budget and approve the levies today so that the Community Association is in a position to move forward and that no legal transfers would occur until the resulting information is available for the Community Association to make a positive decision to move forward with the works.

353. It was resolved that a budget be approved by the community association which included raising funds to contribute to the preparation of specifications for development of association property (civil engineering and environmental engineering) totalling some $118,000 and that this special levy be payable on 1 July 2005.

Planned subdivision of Lot 16 — 16 June 2005

354. On 16 June 2005 the developers' consultant ERM (Mr Bell) provided another consultant GMR (Mr Ryan) with a plan showing over 30 lots, apparently for residential or holiday accommodation, in the area immediately above the eastern moorings; the upper eastern access road apparently connected to Lot 23; and no lower eastern access road. Notes by Mr Bird, the developers' project manager, appear on the document. The plan reflected the developers' intentions which had been communicated to Mr Bird earlier than 16 June 2005 and possibly as early as February or March.

GMR fee proposal to community association — July 2005

355. On 17 July 2005 GMR sent Mr Haydon a fee proposal which was almost identical with its fee proposal of 21 March 2005 (set out above), stating that Mr Bell and Mr Bird had instructed them to do so. Mr Haydon replied two days later that all instructions should come through his office; GMR should not accept any instructions from the developers that placed financial obligation on owners; and he anticipated the executive of the community association would meet to review the matter.

Developers' proposed heads of agreement — 12 August 2005

356. On 12 August 2005 Mr Haydon (as managing agent of the community association) received a letter from Mr Jarman entitled "Re: — Heads of Agreement for Deep Creek Marina P/L (Lot 13) to Transfer Land to Community Association No. 270026 in Exchange for Improvement Works Carried Out by the Community Association". The heads of agreement referred erroneously to Deep Creek Marina Pty Ltd as if it were the owner of the developers' land (then Lot 13, now renumbered Lot 16). Clauses 1–13 provided:

> 1. No Agreement is reached until contracts are signed.
> 2. Deep Creek Marina P/L has full right of refusal if planning and design is not considered to be acceptable by Deep Creek Marina P/L.
> 3. Deep Creek Marina P/L (lot 13) to pay 50% of Cost towards upgrade works & Planning for the following areas:—
>
> > a) The Entrance to the marina from Perricoota Road > > b) The Entrance to the marina from the Murray River
> 4. The Cost of all other works on community property that Lot 13 must contribute to is to be the exact value of the land to be transferred to the community association based on our Neighbourhoods share of the unit entitlements.
> 5. Community Association and individual Neighbourhood associations to pay for all remaining Planning & Upgrade works on land being transferred to it in this agreement as follows and not limited too [sic]:—
> > a) Road seal, Kerbing, Drainage & landscaping on all Community & Neighbourhood association property as is stated and or shown on scope of works provided by ERM & GMR at stated specifications in those documents.
> > b) Power Up grades to be payed [sic] entirely by each neighbourhood associations depending on usage required.
> > c) Water Up grades to be payed [sic] entirely by each neighbourhood associations depending on usage required.
> > d) Retaining wall upgrade to be payed [sic] for by each neighbourhood association depending on what upgrade required.

6. The Community Association will agree to take complete and full responsibility for maintenance of all lands and the up grades transferred to the community association property in this agreement.
7. All access roads have access control systems manage [sic] by (DCM P/L). Management Agreement must be struck between Comm. Assoc and DCM P/L prior to signing.
8. Access control System to be installed at Community Associations Cost.
9. Conditions of usage are to be added to the Lands transferred to the community Association from Deep Creek Marina P/L (lot 13) (legal advice will be required for what form these conditions will take.)

a) All roads are access roads only and have a 15 minute loading and unloading limitation placed on them
b) All access roads and parking area's [sic] are no access for trailers
c) All access roads have hours of usage limitations 6.30am to 12 midnight
d) All penalty and warning notices are to be payable to Community Association
e) Penalties to be determined by Comm. Assoc Exec committee and DCM P/L before agreement signed off on

10. All legal and establishment costs are payable by Community association.
11. The Land will only transfer when the works have been completed to project management and Council specifications and signed off on.
12. The land to be transferred can not be confirmed exactly as we have only got to a concept stage because the community association has not engaged the contract, so indicative lands can only be given as on the concept drawings at this stage

a) But we do agree Deep Creek Marina P/L will transfer lands that are required for the proposed up graded roads, parking and upgrades that meet Deep Creek Marina Pty Ltd approval as a result of the planning and design of ERM & GMR

[140725]

b)This transfer will be in the form of a complete title change over to the community associations ownership

13. A Interim agreement must be reached to address public liability exposure to lot 13. Due to delays in start of planning and the whole project because of time frame issues the Community Association 270076 has at present:—

a) Community association Must commission and act immediately on an O H & S and Public liability report for the entire Community Parcel.
b) If this cannot be achieved we have no option but to lock all access to our lot 13 properties to reduce our exposure to any liability.

(emphasis added)

357. In cross-examination Mr Jarman said that the reference in paragraph 12 of this document to the*"indicative lands…on the concept drawings*" was a reference to the drawings behind tab 5 of his affidavit, which were draft refurbishment concept plans outlining what works needed to be considered on the site. Those concept plans showed, inter alia, the western access road with vehicle turnouts and extended to include a turning circle; the eastern lower access road with vehicle turnouts; and parking bays on Lot 16 opposite the carpark and Lots 14 and 15.

September to December 2005

358. On 28 September 2005 a meeting of the executive committee of the community association was held and attended by (inter alia) Mr Haydon, Mr Giffin and Mr Jarman. The minutes record inter alia that:

(a) works were required on the Lot 13 (now Lot 16) steps at the edge of the lagoon and Mr Jarman stated "It is our responsibility however we will not be fixing this until we know that you are going to fund the upgrade, we will fence it off". The meeting then resolved that those steps be repaired;
(b) Mr Jarman representing the owners of Lot 13 advised that upgrading of community and neighbourhood properties had to be carried out as per the specifications of EMR and GMR;
(c) the executive committee determined that the community association would not enter into negotiations to purchase part of Lot 13 at the present time, and that a large number of lot owners were agreeable to enter into a purchase agreement but a detailed, formal proposal would be needed.

359. At this meeting, the initial safety report of Solutions IE was tabled. Each community and neighbourhood association undertook to carry out the necessary work on their property. As at that date less than 50 percent of the levy of $118,000, struck three months earlier, had been collected. Mr Jarman pressed for the developers' proposed upgrade to be carried out as per the specifications of EMR and GMR.

360. Mr Haydon responded in detail on 27 October 2005 to Mr Jarman's letter of 12 August 2005. He stated inter alia that once a draft agreement became available he would recommend to the community association executive committee that an intention to sign a contract be authorised. Negotiations halted on receipt of a letter dated 16 November 2005 from Andreones, lawyers acting on behalf of the developers, stating that until the CTTT proceedings were decided, no further negotiations would occur.

361. On 5 October 2005 Mr Haydon wrote a letter to Mr O'Brien (as secretary of the community association) in which he stated that during a discussion with Mr Bares, Mr Haydon asked Mr Bares "what would make the CTTT hearing for a compulsory manager go away", primarily as it was financially expensive and time consuming for himself and for the community and neighbourhood schemes as well as Mr Bares as the developer. The letter recorded that Mr Bares said that they would have to commit to the development as per Mr Bares' specifications, and that they "should not muck around with other engineering consultants but use the GMR and EMR groups". Mr Bares went on to discuss the slow pace that the money was coming in. Mr Haydon told him that it was the fault of the Neighbourhood Managers, but that most of the money had now been received from the schemes managed by Mr Giffin. The letter stated that it was Mr Haydon's understanding that the developers wished to move very quickly with the project.

362. By the time of the meeting of the community association executive committee on 2 December 2005 some $66,000 had been collected of the levy of $118,000.

CTTT hearing: 13–14 December 2005

363. At the CTTT hearing on 13 December 2005, the developers were represented by their solicitors and a barrister. Mr Haydon spoke on behalf of the community association. Although the three Neighbourhood Associations were not parties to the hearing, some neighbourhood members and managers attended, namely, Mr and Mrs Hannay, Mrs Briffa, Mr Gannon and Mr Giffin.

364. After the introduction by the representative for Lot 16, the tribunal member said:

> It will take a lot to convince me that I should take the draconian step of replacing Mr Haydon, who has been democratically appointment by the community, with a compulsorily appointed manager. I want both sides to go and negotiate.

365. Just before 3 pm, the developers' barrister presented Mr Haydon and the neighbourhood members and managers with a lengthy proposal. They let the barrister know that the timeframes proposed for certain works the subject of proposed orders were "ridiculous": for example, the developers proposed some works to be done within 14 days and it was only two weeks before Christmas. Also, the view of the developers as to what work was required was different to that of the neighbourhood members in attendance.

366. The matter was adjourned until the following day. When Mrs Hannay arrived at her motel that evening, she was told that the barrister wanted to speak to her. She went to his room and found the barrister, the solicitors, Mr Bares, Mr Jarman and Mr Honeyman there. Mr Bares said:

Things aren't happening fast enough for me. I need things to be fixed by September.

367. Mrs Hannay understood this to mean that he needed work to be done by September 2006 because of his development ambitions for the adjoining land. Mr Bares also said:

I want to get rid of John Haydon and replace him with Dynamic Property Services. They are a big organisation and know what they're doing.

368. Mrs Hannay had her own concerns about Mr Haydon, in particular, that he was not standing up sufficiently to what she considered to be the "bully-boy" tactics of Mr Jarman at community association meetings.

369. At breakfast the following morning, Mr Haydon said to Mr Giffin, Mrs Briffa and Mr and Mrs Hannay:

I would like to make an announcement. I am resigning as community manager. There is too much pressure on me and these disputes are taking up too much of my time. My other work is suffering and will suffer more if I continue to take this on.

They discussed this at the breakfast table and formed the conclusion that the community association had no alternative but to accept the appointment of Dynamic Property Services (Dynamic).

370. When the hearing resumed that morning, Mr Haydon informed the CTTT of his decision. After an adjournment so that the parties could discuss the matter, the barrister for Lot 16 presented a proposal that the community association agree to orders appointing Dynamic and other orders that seemed to the members of the neighbourhood associations to basically be orders that the community association obtain reports in relation to what work was required to address occupational health and safety issues and that they then undertake that work. The developers withdrew their earlier demand to include deadlines for carrying out the work.

371. Mrs Hannay said that the feeling among the group was that these proposed orders were "okay". The work to be done by the community association was only to be that recommended by professional reports. They trusted that Dynamic would be competent in managing the process.

372. When the CTTT reconvened, the barrister handed up the proposed orders. The tribunal member asked if the orders were consented to, and nobody objected. The orders were made.

373. In evidence, Mr Jarman had a recollection of the events of 13 and 14 December 2005 which differed somewhat from that set out above based on other evidence. I prefer the latter, taking into account my assessment of the witnesses.

Works commissioned by Dynamic — 2006

374. Dynamic commissioned a risk assessment report from Matrix Risk Pty Limited. Matrix produced the report in January 2006.

375. Dynamic commissioned Brolec Express Services Pty Limited to conduct various electrical works at the community scheme. This work included supply of a new 500kVA pole mount sub-substation, a new mains supply from substation to new main switchboard and new metering facility in the carpark at the rear of the hotel, and supply of all street and public lighting as required around the site. This was at a cost of $774,302. On 7 March 2006, Brolec advised that there were further works to add to its previous quotation, costing $21,341.76.

376. Dynamic also commissioned or embarked on commissioning civil works, indicated by the following documents:

(a) report entitled "Engineer's Review of Existing Timber Structures" by GMR dated March 2006;
(b) "Tender Specifications for Moorings Refurbishment & Modification Works" by GMR dated May 2006. The document recorded that it was the intention of the developers to close the existing access road to the moorings, reinstate that land with top soil and sow it with grass cover. The proposed works included removal of the access stairs to moorings and to close the boat ramp;

(c) development application 035/07 dated 28 July 2006 submitted by GMR for "refurbishment of the western (timber) moorings and abutments, replacement of the eastern moorings (concrete), removal of the access stairs, the development of the pedestrian (Community/Neighbourhood) access paths and associated landscape works" and

(d) advertisement in the Riverina Herald on 4 August 2006 by GMR for a civil works tender, stating "Dynamic…invites Tenders for the supply of necessary material for Construction of Access Roads, Car Parks and Associated Stormwater Drainage Works at the Deep Creek Marina".

377. In order to finance the works, Dynamic caused the community association to enter into a loan agreement on a drawdown basis for the sum of $2,000,000.

378. The carpark work that was carried out in 2006 included demolishing the existing carpark (apparently with about 60 car spaces) including the trees and landscaping and constructing a much larger carpark which provided for 125 car spaces. Drainage was installed which connected to a special detention system. Tonnes of crushed gravel was then brought in. By about November 2006 the work appears to have been completed except for sealing. No work has been done since that time.

379. The plaintiffs suggested in cross-examination that the reason that this larger carpark had capacity for 125 cars was to provide for the 80 car spaces for the supermarket which a condition of consent to Mr O'Brien's development applications 131/05 and 049/04 required to be put on the adjacent Lot 16: see [295]–[297] above. It is not clear to me whether or not this is so.

380. During 2006, Dynamic did not consult with any of the Neighbourhood Associations. Mr Giffin was very concerned by this lack of consultation. He was also concerned when he became aware that Dynamic was receiving its legal advice from the developers' solicitors, Andreones.

381. Mr Clinch was concerned that significant work was being commissioned in early 2006 by Dynamic, as compulsory manager, that the community association was going to have to pay for. His concern was twofold:

(a) that members of the community association had no say over decisions being made by Dynamic to spend the community association's money; and

[140728]

(b) the works being commissioned mirrored the works he believed Mr Watson and Sammy One were obliged to do pursuant to the terms of the community and neighbourhood development contracts, and had previously sought to have done and paid for with a contribution by the community association.

382. Mr Clinch and Mr Giffin expressed their concerns to Dynamic.

383. In June 2006 GMR produced a sketch marked "for tender 21/06/06" apparently, it seems, as a result of discussions between Mr Ryan of GMR and Mr Jarman, showing an enlargement and reconfiguration of the community carpark.

384. On 4 August 2006, solicitors for Mr Giffin as managing agent of the Central and Western Neighbourhoods applied to the CTTT for orders revoking its previous orders appointing Dynamic as managing agent.

385. On 17 November 2006, the proceedings in the CTTT were settled and consent orders made which terminated the appointment of Dynamic from 6 December 2006.

Mr Bares' letter — 19 December 2006

386. On 19 December 2006 Mr Bares wrote a letter addressed to "Houseboat Lot Owner" which he sent to the managing agents for the Neighbourhood Associations with a request that they distribute it to each of the houseboat lot owners. The purpose of the letter was said to be so that the recipients could better understand his position in relation to a number of "areas of dispute" including the following:

(i) as regards access roads to houseboat lots, Mr Bares wrote that the roads in front of the moorings were construction roads used primarily as temporary access to facilitate construction; over the years the developers had continuously and unsuccessfully tried to come to some form of more permanent access arrangement; that there was no planning approval for any access roads to houseboat lots; it was therefore illegal for the developers to continue to allow houseboat lot owners to use the construction roads to access their houseboats; and if an accident occurred the developers would be uninsured.

(ii) it was illegal to park in the "flood plain" because the developers had no planning permit which would permit it.
(iii) oversized houseboats were encroaching on Lot 16. The developers would not agree to this as it would encroach on other lot owners' right of carriageway.
(iv) the boat ramp had no planning approval to be used as a boat ramp. Mr Bares wrote that as the developers had been unsuccessful in controlling use of the ramp by the public, they would therefore close it. Lot owners would be given the opportunity to use the new boat ramp (on Lot 23). Casual permits for visitors and guests of lot owners would be issued at a nominal cost.
(v) there were security issues in respect of property damage including damage to the developers' boom gates.
(vi) there was a trespass issue. Cars parked illegally on Lot 16 and parking in the flood plain would be towed away.

387. That completes my analysis of the history of the marina development and the statutory framework. I now propose to address the issues which arise for determination.

WHAT WAS INCORPORATED IN THE DEVELOPMENT CONSENTS?

388. The development contracts and the statutory covenants in the Development Act refer to development consents. There is an issue as to what is incorporated in the development consents. In particular, does development consent 66/92 incorporate the subdivision plans in DA 66/92 (annexures B to E to this judgment) and does development consent 18/90 incorporate Plan 4 in DA 18/90 (annexure A to this judgment)? It is important to the plaintiffs' case that the question be answered yes. The developers submit that it should be answered no. In my opinion, the question should be answered yes for the following reasons.

389. In construing a development consent, the development application and plans or other documents accompanying a development application can only be looked at if they are incorporated in the consent expressly or by necessary implication and only where this is necessary for the purpose of interpreting the consent. This principle has been repeatedly affirmed in the authorities. A seminal statement appears in Auburn Municipal Council v Szabo (1971) 67 LGRA 427 (NSWSC) at 433–434 where Hope J held:

> …in determining what a council has approved, one primarily looks at the document constituting the approval, and construes it… The terms of another document may be incorporated in a development approval either expressly or by necessary implication, but I do not think that it is possible otherwise to go to documents outside the formal approval in order to determine what has been approved. In particular, it is not possible to go to the form of application for approval unless in some way that document has in whole or in part, expressly or by necessary implication, been incorporated in the consent. On some occasions no doubt there is such an incorporation. Thus, if an application were made and a council did no more than approve the application, it seems to me that by necessary implication the terms of the application must be incorporated.

390. In Shell Company of Australia Ltd v Parramatta City Council [No 2] (1972) 27 LGRA 102 (NSWCA) Hope JA (Jacobs and Manning JA agreeing) held at 107:

> … it is not permissible, in order to determine what development has been approved, to construe the document constituting the approval in the same way as if it evidenced some inter partes transaction, for development approvals operate, as it were, in rem and may be availed of by subsequent owners and other occupiers of the land. The nature and extent of the approved development must be determined by construing the document of approval, including any plans or other documents which it incorporates, aided only by that evidence admissible in relation to construction which establishes, or helps to establish, the true meaning of the document as the unilateral act of the relevant authority, not the result of a bilateral transaction between the applicant and the council.

391. In Stebbins* v Lismore City Council (1988) 64 LGRA 132 the NSW Court of Appeal found that the notice of determination of a development application should have been read together with a plan accompanying the application, as the application was meaningless without the plan. In a joint judgment, Mahoney, Priestley and Clarke JJA held at 135–136:

> The notice of determination of the development application should, we think, be read together with the plan. The written form of application is meaningless unless the plans accompanying it are considered as part of the application. Similarly when the notice of consent refers to the determination of the development application it must be referring to the application including the plans without which that application would not be an application at all. The consent as granted was to an application incorporating a plan on which, at the time of consent, a marking had been placed showing that the development being approved did not include the new entrance. Read together the documents returned to the appellants informed them that the works shown on the plan were the subject of the development consent except insofar as an amendment was required in relation to the new entrance to the Bruxner Highway. The consent could not, in view of the stamp, be regarded as allowing for development in that area in the precise terms shown by the plan.
> If the written notice of consent alone is to be regarded as the consent so that it alone would appear on the public register the fact inescapably remains that it could not be understood by a searcher without recourse to the application itself, including the accompanying plans. The searcher wishing to gain a full appreciation of the terms of the consent would then see a plan showing that no approval had been given to the new entrance. The point is that consent was not in fact given to the new entrance nor can the notice of consent accompanied by the stamped plan be regarded as an unqualified approval of the application to develop the new entrance as originally but no longer shown on the plan.

392. These and other authorities were reviewed in Hubertus Schuetzenverein Liverpool Rifle Club Ltd v Commonwealth of Australia (1994) 85 LGERA 37 (FCA) by Wilcox J, who concluded at 46:

> The authorities clearly establish that it is legitimate, in construing a development consent, to look at the plans that accompanied the application. However, this may be done only where the consent document expressly or inferentially incorporates the terms of the application and only where this is necessary for the purpose of interpreting the consent. For example, where the council simply approves an application without describing the development, it is permissible to look at the application to determine what it was that the applicant sought to have approved (as in Szabo and Shell Co). It is not legitimate to look at the documents that accompanied the application, or even the application itself, to contradict (whether by way of extension or contraction) the scope of a consent stated in clear terms. Stebbins is consistent with the last-stated proposition. On the view of the case taken by the Court of Appeal, in order to learn the terms of the council's consent it was necessary for a person to read the notification of consent in conjunction with the copy plan endorsed by the council. When the documents were read together, it became apparent that the unrestricted consent suggested by the letter of notification was in fact given subject to the elimination of the new entrance.
>
> Applying these principles to the present case, it seems to me that, if a question ever arose as to what Liverpool City Council intended by its reference, in the letter of 10 October 1973 or the subsequent formal consent, to club building, beer garden or children's playground, it would be legitimate to look at the plan dated January 1973 in which each of these facilities was graphically described. To look at the plan for that purpose would be to use it to interpret the consent. But it is not legitimate, in my opinion, to look at the plan for the purpose of extending the consent; for the purpose of adding a facility that was not mentioned in the consent document to those listed as approved. This would be to use the plan to contradict the document, not to interpret it.

393. In Woolworths Ltd v Campbells Cash and Carry Pty Ltd (1996) 92 LGERA 244 (NSWCA) at 249, Sheller JA held:

> Development approvals operate for the benefit of subsequent owners and other occupiers of land and denote the consent authority's unilateral act, not a bilateral agreement between the parties. Generally, if the terms of the approval are clear, it is not permissible to look to the application or to other documents which accompany the application to qualify or contradict its terms. But if the approval incorporates the application, the two must be read together…

Beazley JA agreed with Sheller JA (I note that the LGERA report erroneously omits Beazley JA's reasons for judgment).

394. In Winn v Director-General of National Parks and Wildlife (2001) 130 LGERA 508 (NSWCA) at [2] and [3] Spigelman CJ accepted, and cited many authorities in support of, the proposition that "documents accompanying an application for consent are not taken as incorporated in the consent, unless incorporated expressly or by necessary implication". Stein JA held at [199]:

> As Hope J observed in Auburn Municipal Council v Szabo (1971) 67 LGRA 427, in determining what development a consent authorises, one looks primarily at the approval and construes it. The reason for this is that a consent is issued in rem and it would be inconvenient, to say the least, if one had to have regard to a series of documents to know what the consent authority intended to approve. The consent may incorporate another document if it does so expressly (not here relevant) or by necessary implication. In Szabo, Hope J gave the example (at 434) of a council merely approving an application and no more. In such a case, the terms of the application would be incorporated by necessary implication. Szabo was applied by the Court of Appeal in Sydney Serviced Apartments Pty Ltd v North Sydney Municipal Council [No 2] (1993) 78 LGERA 404 at 407-408.

In Weston Aluminium Pty Ltd v Alcoa Australia Rolled Products Pty Limited [2004] NSWLEC 551 Lloyd J held at [13]:

> In accordance with settled principles in interpreting what is the subject of this consent it is not permissible to look at any other document other than a document either expressly or impliedly referred to in it. In this case it is permissible to look at the plan referred to in condition 20 as forming part of that consent.

396. In Loreto Normanhurst Association Inc v Hornsby Shire Council (2001) 122 LGERA 347 (NSWLEC) one of the two notices of determination which fell to be construed was in substantially the same form as the notices of determination of DA 18/90 and 66/92. The form was prescribed by the regulations. Bignold J held that each development consent expressly incorporated each development application: at [20]. His Honour went further and held that the comprehensive and detailed statutory regime "necessarily" meant that the development application (and its supporting materials) was incorporated in the development consent: at [30]. Loreto was cited with apparent approval in Council of the City of Sydney v Pink Star Entertainments Pty Ltd [2008] NSWLEC 176 at [86]; Tip Fast Pty Limited v South Sydney City Council (2002) 120 LGERA 292 at [22], [24]; and Kindimindi Investments Pty Ltd v Lane Cove Council [2005] NSWLEC 398 at [52].

397. In Weston Aluminium Pty Ltd v Environment Protection Authority (2007) 156 LGERA 283 at [17] the High Court found it unnecessary to examine these principles:

> Whether, as Alcoa submitted, reference may not be made when construing a consent to anything but the consent itself and any documents incorporated expressly or by necessary implication need not be examined. In particular, it is not necessary in this case to consider what reference may be made to the development application to which the consent responds.

398. In my opinion, DA 66/92 and its accompanying subdivision plans (annexures B — E to this judgment) were incorporated expressly or impliedly in development consent 66/92. The notice of determination is set out at [92] above. It is unnecessary to consider the "necessary" incorporation proposition (arising from the statutory regime) advanced in Loreto. The notice of determination stated that DA 66/92 "has been determined by…granting of consent subject to the conditions specified in this notice". The notice stated that the conditions were set out "as per attached letter". That letter from the council is set out at [93] above. It is impossible to understand what DA 66/92 was without looking at it. It is impossible to understand what were the "Community Titles Subdivision" and "the proposed subdivision", to which the council's letter referred, without looking at the development application and the enclosed subdivision plans. It is impossible to know what the council intended in condition (a) in its letter by the submission of "formal" subdivision plans, community development contracts, community management statements, neighbourhood development contracts and neighbourhood management statements unless one knows what the subdivision plans and other documents enclosed with DA 66/92 were that had to be the subject of formalisation. Condition (c) of development consent 66/92 referred to "Neighbourhood Development Lots 2 — 11 (moorings or berths)". That cannot be understood without looking at the plans which accompanied DA 66/92. Condition (b) of development consent 66/92 required compliance with a host of conditions in development consent 18/90. That condition cannot be understood without referring to development consent 18/90, which in turn cannot be understood without referring to DA 18/90 and its accompanying plans. Condition (d) referred to "Development lots". It is necessary to refer to the Stage 2 plan to understand this reference.

399. In my opinion, DA 18/90, including Plan 4, was incorporated expressly or impliedly in development consent 18/90 (set out at [76] above). That consent cannot be understood unless the application and the plans accompanying it are looked at. The council's letter (set out at [77] above), which was incorporated by express reference in the notice of determination, granted consent to "the abovementioned Marina and tourist development subject to the following conditions". The conditions are pervasive in their references to matters which can only be understood by reference to the development application and plans. They include references to "the entrance of Deep Creek to the River", "gravel roads", "the houseboat storage area", "the access road", "the intersection with the main road", "the boat ramp", "the motel, cabins, restaurant and kiosk", "internal roads and parking areas", "moorings within the Marina", "the map in the supplementary Environmental Impact Statement" and "the Environmental Impact Statement".

400. The developers submit that even if Plan 4 were incorporated in development consent 18/90, it is merely a proposal for landscaping on community property. I do not accept the submission. The narrative in the SEIS stated that Plans 2 and 3 were the "masterplan" for the marina development and that Plan 4 showed Stage 1 of the development: see [68] above. Plan 2 included the notation "Refer to Detailed Landscape Masterplan for enlargement of the central area". This was a reference to Plan 4.

401. The developers also submit that the mere incorporation of Plan 4 in development consent 18/90 does not thereby permit the development of anything which happens to be on the plan, for example, potentially three 60 storey motels, 20 holiday cabins and a manager's residence all of the same height. The plaintiffs submit that it does permit this, subject to obtaining a building consent as was required at that time under s 311 of the Local Government Act 1919 (NSW). In 1996 such a consent was obtained by Mr Watson to construct the restaurant: see [127] above. Under the statutory regime at that time, when a development consent was granted a subsequent building application to approve construction had to be made pursuant to s 311 of the Local Government Act 1919, which provided: "A building shall not be erected unless the approval of the council is obtained…beforehand". The later changes to this legislative regime were summarised in Over Our Dead Body Society Inc v Byron Bay Community Association Inc (2001) 116 LGERA 158 by Bignold J at [29]:

> There is one further preliminary matter that I must refer to, namely the purpose of the statutory requirement for the obtaining of a construction certificate in respect of an approved development (that is, a development which is the subject of the grant of development consent). The concept of certification of development as is now provided in the EP&A Act, Pt 4A was not introduced into the statutory regime until 1 July 1998 when the Environmental Planning and Assessment Amendment Act came into force. As I have earlier mentioned, one of the significant legislative changes introduced by that amending Act was the abandonment of the necessity for obtaining a separate approval under the Local Government Act for the erection of a building and approval for other allied matters, for example, the demolition of a building. Instead of the complementary or supplementary approval processes concurrently operating under the Local Government Act in addition to the requirement of the EP&A Act for the obtaining of development consent for the carrying out of development, the Environmental Planning and Assessment Amendment Act introduced a system of certification of development as contained in Pt 4A together with the subsidiary or ancillary provisions contained in Pts 4B and 4C. The various types of certificate referred to in s 109C(1) had counterparts under the Local Government Act but they were repealed by the Environmental Planning and Assessment Amendment Act.

402. As discussed at [416] below, in my view Plan 4 was a concept plan for use of the land by putting certain facilities on it at specified locations. The consent was to that use. I construe it as requiring a further consent for the construction of the facilities and carrying out of works consistently with the approved use. Thus, for example, the height of buildings would be controlled by the further consent.

403. Mr Watson acknowledged in evidence that he understood he had development consent for what was depicted in Plan 4 and was then required to get building approval for the restaurant, which he did in 1996. This may be relevant to discretionary relief if the case reaches that stage.

[140733]

Condition 12 of development consent 18/90 provided: "Buildings shall not be constructed nearer than 60 metres from the bank of the River or Deep Creek". The developers contrast that with Plan 4 which shows two motels within 60 metres of Deep Creek. They submit that there is an irreconcilable difference and therefore Plan 4 cannot be incorporated. I disagree. The development application, which included Plan 4, was modified by the conditions of the consent.

UNREGISTERED PLANS

405. The plans which I have held were incorporated in the development consents were not registered by the Registrar General. The developers submit that a plan, even if it is incorporated in a development consent referred to in a community plan or the statutory covenants, cannot form part of a community development contract unless it is registered by the Registrar General with the community plan. In my opinion, a plan incorporated in a development consent which is expressly or impliedly incorporated in the development contracts or in the statutory covenants forms part of the development contracts or statutory covenants even if it is not registered. My reasons are as follows.

406. The developers submit that registration of plans is required by the following definition of "development contract" in s 3 of the Development Act and s 3 of the Management Act:

> development contract means instruments, plans and drawings that are registered with a community plan, precinct plan or neighbourhood plan and describe the manner in which it is proposed to develop the land in the community plan, precinct plan or neighbourhood plan to which they relate.

407. The relevant plans, in my view, describe the manner in which it is proposed to develop the land in the community plan. However, since the definition refers (inter alia) to "plans…that are registered", the developers submit that a development contract cannot include a plan that is not registered. They say this is consistent with the general principle of the Torrens system that people seeking to understand how or what "instruments, plans or drawings" affect their land need only look at the register: Westfield Management Ltd v Perpetual Trustee Co Ltd (2007) 239 ALR 75, [2007] HCA 45.

408. In Westfield at [4]–[5] the High Court succinctly described the scheme of the Torrens system to provide third parties with information concerning the registered title, as follows:

> [4] Section 31B of the RP Act [Real Property Act 1900 (NSW)] requires the Registrar-General to maintain the register. The register comprises, among other instruments and records, both folios and dealings registered therein under the RP Act: s 31B(2). A dealing includes any instrument registrable under the provisions of the RP Act: s 3(1). Section 96B classifies the register as a public record and provides for its inspection.
> [5] Together with the information appearing on the relevant folio, the registration of dealings manifests the scheme of the Torrens system to provide third parties with the information necessary to comprehend the extent or state of the registered title to the land in question. This important element in the Torrens system is discussed by Barwick CJ in Bursill Enterprises Pty Ltd v Berger Bros Trading Co Pty Ltd. It will be necessary later in these reasons to refer further to the significance of this for the present appeal.

(footnotes omitted)

409. The principle expressed in Westfield is referable to ascertaining the state of an existing title under the Real Property Act 1900 (NSW). That is because the Torrens system is one of title by registration.

410. Several distinguishing observations may be made about the community titles legislation. First, it introduces an additional concept of future proposed development described in an optional registered community development contract related to a registered community plan or described in a development consent. Secondly, s 3(2) of the Development Act and s 3(2) of the Management Act each provides that "This Act is to be interpreted as part of the Real Property Act 1900 but, if there is any inconsistency between them, this Act prevails". Thirdly, at common law a contract may incorporate another document by reference.

411. Fourthly, the statutory covenants in Part 1 of Schedule 2 to the Management Act expressly incorporate the development consent, which may include plans, into every community development contract without any requirement that the development consent be registered. Thus, at least the development consent, including any plans which may be incorporated in it, may be looked at for the purpose of construing the statutory covenants, regardless of whether the development consent or its incorporated plans are not registered.

412. Fifthly, the regulations under the Development Act required certain provisions to be inserted in all development contracts, including a reference to particulars about details of the scheme in an identified development consent and a covenant by the original proprietor to develop the land in accordance with the development consent as modified or amended with the consent authority's approval from time to time: see [50] above. Again, there was no legislative requirement that the development consent, which may incorporate plans, had to be registered. In the present case, the development contracts included the provisions required by the regulations in relation to (at least) development consent 18/90. Consequently, for the purpose of construing these provisions, development consent 18/90 (at least) can be looked at, including any plans incorporated in it, even though that consent and any plans incorporated in it are not registered.

413. The references to "development consent" in these statutory covenants can be taken to include development consents in the plural because s 8(b) of the Interpretation Act 1987 (NSW) provides that: "A reference to a word or expression in the singular form includes a reference to the word or expression in the plural form".

414. The "development consent" to which the statutory covenants refer must, in my opinion, be the development consent or consents that bring land under the community titles legislation. That legislation contemplates subdivision of land incorporating common property which may be developed in stages in accordance with a pre-determined theme and development contracts that describe the proposed amenities — which ordinarily require development consent. Therefore, in the present case, in my opinion, the "development consent" referred to in the statutory covenants at least includes development consent 66/92 which was for a community title subdivision. The Stage 2 plan accompanying DA 66/92 also described the proposed facilities.

415. It is less clear whether the "development consent" to which the statutory covenants refer also includes development consent 18/90 relating to proposed amenities because that development application was lodged two months before the community titles legislation commenced in 1990. I am inclined to think that it does. However, I do not think that it matters whether or not it does. That is because preliminary cl 4 of the community development contract contains an express covenant to develop the land in accordance with development consent 18/90 and the statutory covenants require the land to be developed in accordance with the community development contract. Further, the Stage 2 subdivision plan accompanying DA 66/92 showed essentially the same proposed facilities as are shown in Plan 4 of DA 18/90. If the Stage 2 subdivision plan was incorporated in development consent 66/92, then the statutory covenants apply to it.

416. I construe DA 18/90 as a staged development application that, in its accompanying Plan 4, set out concept proposals for development of facilities on the site, for which detailed proposals were to be the subject of subsequent construction applications. I construe DA 66/92 in the same way so far as concerns the same facilities shown on the Stage 2 subdivision plan. Plan 4 and the Stage 2 plan both showed only rudimentary marks depicting facilities in various locations. They could not have been any more than concept plans. The concept proposals were of a type now provided for in s 83B of the EPA Act, although that section was not in force at the relevant time. Given the conceptual nature of the proposals, the consent to DA 18/90 and the consent to DA 66/92 (insofar as the latter showed the proposed facilities) were consents to the use of the land for such facilities. "Development", as defined in the legislation, may be limited to the use of land and does not necessarily extend to construction of buildings authorised by that use (the definition is set out at [42] above). In the present case, in my view, neither development consent authorises the construction of buildings or the carrying out of work for those facilities shown on the plans. A further council consent would be required before those facilities could be constructed and no doubt the council would require detailed plans and specifications before granting consent. If that were not so, the developers would be permitted, for example, to construct an enormously high motel in any design in the location indicated in those plans accompanying DA 18/90 and 66/92 without any need for a further development consent.

417. In my opinion, for the reasons I have expressed, a development consent (including a plan or other document incorporated therein) contemplated by the statutory covenants in the Development Act may be looked at for the purposes of construing those covenants and the development contract, without the development consent having to be registered. It is unnecessary in the present case to consider the wider question whether other documents (including plans), which are unrelated to a development consent, have to be registered in order to form part of a community scheme development contract or management statement.

VARIATION OF THE COMMUNITY SCHEME: IMPRACTICABILITY

418. The plaintiffs claim that continuation and completion of the community scheme have become impracticable and, consequently, that the community scheme should be varied pursuant to s 70 of the Development Act. The claim requires close attention to the definition of "community scheme" in the Development Act, the terms of s 70 of the Development Act and the terms of the statutory covenants in Schedule 2 to the Management Act. They are set out above at, respectively, [39], [53] and [57]. The claim also requires close attention to the provisions of the community development contract, which are set out at [111]–[112] above.

419. First, the plaintiffs submit that completion of the community scheme has become impracticable because:

> (a) fundamental proposals contained within the "Warning" cl 4 and cll 1.1, 1.3.2 and 1.3.3 of the community development contract cannot now be delivered by the original proprietors, Mr Watson and Sammy One;
> (b) the original proprietors have breached the developers' statutory covenant by failing to develop the land:
>
> - in accordance with the development contract; and
> - in accordance with development consents 18/90 and 66/92,
> to the extent that compliance can no longer practicably be achieved.

420. The plaintiffs submit that as the proposals within the community development contract and the terms of the statutory covenants are elements of the "community scheme", as defined, it has become impracticable for the original proprietors to complete the community scheme, which should therefore be varied.

421. Secondly, the plaintiffs submit that continuation of the community scheme has become impracticable for the following reasons:

> (a) Practical physical reasons: The breaches of the original proprietors' obligations pursuant to their statutory covenant contained within cl 1 of Schedule 2 to the Management Act, primarily the failure to develop the land in accordance with development consent 66/92 — especially the failure to subdivide in accordance with the accompanying subdivision plans for Stages 1 and 2 (annexure B — E to this judgment) — have manifested in a "manner of subdivision of land by a community plan" that is impracticable for practical physical reasons. As the "manner of subdivision" is also an element of the "community scheme", the continuation of the community scheme has become impracticable for practical physical reasons and should accordingly be varied.

(b) Continual breach: An effect of the fact that the scheme can no longer be practicably completed is that the original proprietors continue in breach of their obligations, for each day that passes, and then for each time a person purchases a lot within the scheme — whether from the original developer or another transferee.

422. Although it seems to me that matters relevant to the so-called "completion" impracticability are also relevant to "continuation" impracticability, and vice versa, it is convenient to stay with the plaintiffs' dichotomy.

First limb of completion impracticability

Proposal: clause 1.1 community development contract

423. Clause 1.1 of the community development contract relevantly provides:

1.1. Description of land

The land is to be developed for the purposes of a marina (known as the Deep Creek Marina) and associated works as shown in Development Application to the Council of the Shire of Murray dated 23 May 1990.

424. This is a reference to DA 18/90. The developers submit that the relevant part of cl 1.1 is not a proposal but merely part of the description of the land because cl 1.1 is headed "Description of Land" and the relevant part was not placed under the heading "1.3. Further Development". I do not accept the submission. Part 3 of the community development contract relevantly provides that "In this contract unless the contrary intention appears…(g) headings are inserted for convenience and do not affect the interpretation of this Management Statement". The reference to "Management Statement" is an obvious drafting error. The obvious intention was to refer to "this" community development contract. This point of construction should not to be resolved merely by looking at the heading. The first paragraph of cl 1.1 states: "The land to be developed is Lot 12 in Deposited Plan No. 846348 in the Local Government Area of Murray, Parish of Benarca, County of Cadell and State of New South Wales". That is a complete description of the land to be developed. The remainder of cl 1.1, on which the plaintiffs rely, is superfluous if not interpreted as a proposal. Its language is that of a proposal.

425. Clause 1.1 does not expressly refer to any plans. However, DA 18/90 comprised documents including plans and cannot be understood except by a reference to the plans. DA 18/90 included an EIS and SEIS (discussed at [65]–[66] above). The former included a concept drawing. The latter included "landscape plans" including Plan 4 (annexure A to this judgment) which are different to the concept drawing although, in my view, they are also conceptual. The plans in the SEIS, in my view, superseded the concept drawing in the EIS because the SEIS was later in time. Also, the SEIS stated that the "Masterplan for the Marina Development" was shown on Plans 2 and 3 and that:

> Stage One of the marina development is shown on Plan 4. Stage One will be implemented over a 12 month period to be completed by December 1992 and can be divided into 4 phases. The first phase will commence in September and will include excavation of the creek entrance, construction of 30 moorings and associated earthworks, establishing gravel entrance roads and sewage system, power and water supply, fencing, stormwater retention wetland and site planting.
>
> During Phase 2, all the buildings associated with Stage One, a further 30 moorings and houseboat hardstand area will be constructed and the fuel supply installed.
>
> During Phase 3, the winter months, there will be no construction. In the final phase of Stage One, the remaining 40 moorings will be constructed, all roads will be surfaced and further site planting will occur.

Proposal: clauses 1.3.2 and 1.3.3 community development contract

426. Clause 1.3 of the community development contract is entitled "Further Development". Clauses 1.3.2 and 1.3.3 concern subdivision and are in the following terms:

> 1.3.2 Community Development Lots 2, 3 and 4 are to be further subdivided into neighbourhood lots for the purpose of houseboat berths.
>
> 1.3.3 Community Development Lot 5 is to be developed in a further subdivision to provide facilities incorporated in the Development Consent in accordance with plans approved by the Council of the Shire
>
> [140737]
> of Murray. (Refer Development Consent No 18/90 dated 12th September 1991).

427. The community plan registered with the community development contract subdivided the land into five lots. Lot 1 was community property. Lots 2 to 5 were development lots. Lot 5 was the Lot 12 earlier referred to in Mr Mitsch's letter of 7 October 1992 (the renumbering occurred because the number of mooring neighbourhood lots became reduced to three — Lots 2, 3 and 4).

428. In my opinion, cll 1.3.2 and 1.3.3 contained proposals for subdivision and for provision of facilities. Therefore the proposals were part of the "community scheme" as defined in the legislation.

429. Under cl 1.3.2 the developers proposed to create three houseboat mooring neighbourhoods on Lots 2, 3 and 4.

430. Under cl 1.3.3 the developers proposed that the residual Lot 5 would be developed in a "further" subdivision to provide the facilities incorporated in development consent 18/90 in accordance with plans approved by the council. Clause 1.3.3 was concerned not with the present subdivision affected by the registered community plan but with a "further" subdivision. Such a "further" subdivision had been approved in development consent 66/92 and was shown in the subdivision plans accompanying that development application. The Stage 2 subdivision plan accompanying that development application had shown the same facilities as appear on Plan 4 in DA 18/90. As for the "facilities incorporated in the Development Consent" to be provided by the "further subdivision", cl 1.3.3 refers to development consent 18/90 and plans approved by the council. Such facilities are shown on Plan 4 accompanying DA 18/90. Clause 1.3.3 as I construe it, treats Plan 4 as having been approved by the council in development consent 18/90. That accords with my earlier finding that it was.

431. The developers submit that the statement in cl 1.3.3 "Refer Development Consent No 18/90" merely means "Refer to the conditions in Development Consent 18/90 for a description of the sewerage facilities which are to be provided in a further subdivision of Lot 5". They submit that the facilities referred to in the statement "Lot 5 is to be developed in a further subdivision to provide facilities" means "the sewerage facilities referred to in conditions 2 and 19 of Development Consent 18/90". Conditions 2 and 19 respectively provide that the "sewerage system shall be installed to the requirements of the State Pollution Control Commission" and "Access to the sewage treatment works shall be from within the property and a separate entrance to this facility shall not be permitted from the main road'". The developers submit that the sewage facilities were indicated to be on the community property on the Moama — Barham Road (i.e. Perricoota Road) shown in the first of Mr Mitsch's subdivision plans in DA 66/92 (annexure B to this judgment) and shown as part of Lot 5 in the registered community plan (annexure F to this judgment). The submission overlooks that, prior to registration of the community plan in January 1995, that area had been excluded from the community scheme and from Lot 5. In any case, I can see no reason for reading down cl 1.3.3 in the way submitted by the developers.

Proposal: preliminary clause 4 community development contract

432. Preliminary cl 4 (under "Warning") of the community development contract provides:

> 4. The terms of this contract are binding on the original proprietor and any purchaser, lessee or occupier of a lot in the scheme. In addition, the original proprietor covenants with the association concerned and with the subsequent proprietors jointly and with each of them severally to develop the land subject of the scheme in accordance with the development consent as modified or amended with the consent authority's approval from time to time.

433. In my opinion, this is a proposal to develop the land in accordance with the development consent. Therefore, the proposal is an element of the community scheme. The plaintiff submits that the "development consent" here means both 18/90 and 66/92. That is not the way the contract appears to be drafted because preliminary cl 3 refers only to development consent 18/90. It is to that consent which cl 4 appears to refer. However, I do not think that this is of consequence because (as discussed at [414] above) a statutory covenant in cl 1 of Schedule 2 Part 1 to the Management Act provided for the land to be developed in accordance with (at least) development consent 66/92. Indeed, I am inclined to think that the regulations under the Development Act required preliminary cl 4 to have referred to development consent 66/92: see [50] above.

Second limb of completion impracticability: scheme not developed in accordance with what had been proposed

434. The plaintiffs submit that completion has become impracticable because the scheme has not been developed in accordance with what had been proposed.

435. I accept the submission. The community plan that was registered represented a major departure from what was approved by the council in development consent 66/92. The facilities that have been developed on the land depart significantly from that which was the subject of development consents 18/90 and 66/92. Development consent for the Honeyman Lot and the carrying out of development thereon precludes the provision of facilities the subject of development consents 18/90 and 66/92 in that location. A plan in evidence (Exhibit N) illustrates that to develop the land in accordance with the facilities shown on Plan 4 and the Stage 2 subdivision plan (annexures A and E to this judgment) is now impossible without demolishing development that has since occurred on the Honeyman Lot and Lots 14, 15 and 16. The Honeyman Lot, where a significant number of the facilities are shown on those plans, has been developed in the form of luxury holiday cabins, a swimming pool, a lake and tennis court. A hotel/restaurant and supermarket have been built on what are now Lots 14 and 15 in the areas marked for other uses on those plans.

Continuation impracticability

436. In this component of the claim for variation of the community scheme, the plaintiffs submit that continuation of the scheme has become impracticable for two reasons. First, continuation has become impracticable because of physical access difficulties on the site arising from "the manner of subdivision of land by the community plan". This is an element of the statutory definition of "community scheme", set out at [39] above. Secondly, construing the proposals in the development contract in the way that I have earlier accepted, then the original developers are and, will nearly always be in the future, in breach of their obligations in the development contract to deliver the scheme in accordance with those proposals.

437. I think that the second reason (breach) is correct. The original developers covenanted under the statutory covenants in the Management Act that the land will be developed in accordance with the development consent. That at least included development consent 66/92. Many of the facilities shown on the Stage 2 subdivision plan, which I have held was incorporated in development consent 66/92, cannot be developed as shown on that plan because of other superseding development.

438. I turn to consider the first reason advanced by the plaintiffs, physical impracticability. The plaintiffs submit, and I accept, that a major consequence of denying the plaintiffs the benefit of the community property, originally proposed in DA 66/92, is that the access to most of the private lots within the scheme is dysfunctional. This did not necessarily manifest until about 2005 as, until then, the developers allowed access across their land.

439. In my opinion, physical impracticability arises largely, albeit not entirely, because of three access problems:

(a) there is no registered vehicular access road to the moorings and the developers have denied vehicular access to the moorings;
(b) the developers have closed the public wharf since 2006 (and removed the ski boat parking facility), there is no access to and across the public wharf;
(c) for a time in 2005 the developers denied access to the public boat ramp. The threat is still there because the boom gate remains in place, although open.

440. The evidence suggests that the marina ran reasonably smoothly until these three access problems manifested in 2005 and 2006.

441. The parties' competing submissions as to physical impracticability are set out below.

The plaintiffs submit that there is inadequate legal and physical access to private lots for members, guests and emergency services via common property to and from the houseboat moorings for the reasons set out below. These reasons are generally supported by evidence that I have earlier reviewed and accepted; by the evidence as to impracticability (which I generally accept) of Mr Peter O'Dwyer, a planning consultant; and by my own observations on my site inspection with the parties. The reasons, the developers' submissions, and my conclusions are as follows:

(a) there is no vehicular access to any houseboat berths within the scheme, which prevents the loading and unloading of luggage, food provisions, fuel, houseboat furniture and other required equipment for the ordinary use and enjoyment of houseboats.

The developers submit that no vehicular access is required to the houseboat berths. The public wharf, which Mr Bares says has been temporarily closed as a result of required maintenance, is available for loading and unloading, as is the boat ramp and the strip of land in front of the supermarket. There is no evidence that the developers have denied access to this strip of land, and the owner of the supermarket has expressed a desire to make it available to the community association. In addition there is 11.035 metres of community property which adjoins Deep Creek to the west of the public wharf which can be utilised for the purpose of loading and unloading of houseboats.

I accept the plaintiffs' submissions. They are amply supported by the access evidence set out at length above. It would be impractical and, at peak times, chaotic for houseboats to attempt to load and unload at the public wharf (assuming it were open), the boat ramp (assuming the boom gate remains open), or the strip of land in front of the supermarket (assuming the houseboats could dock there at all, which they cannot). They would be competing not only with each other but with the public for the use of those facilities. Houseboats, as such, cannot practicably access the boat ramp. If a houseboat happened to have a ski boat it could access the ramp but it would be highly inconvenient to have to do so for the purpose of substantial loading and unloading people and things. Moreover, as things stand at the moment, there can be little confidence in the availability of the wharf because the developers have closed it for years. As to the 11.035 metres of community property to the west of the wharf, houseboats could not dock square to it because they would be impeded by the first mooring berth next to that location.
(b) there is no emergency service vehicle access directly to the houseboat berths for the evacuation of persons in need and no emergency vehicle access is available to the neighbouring Lot 16 land, it having being sealed off by concrete barriers on or about 22 December 2006.

The developers refer to two notices of intention to issue an order issued by Murray Shire Council. One of these notices indicated that the council intended to serve an order upon the developers requiring them to remove the concrete barriers to enable access to emergency vehicles. The developers submit that these notices address the issue of emergency access, and that there is no evidence that the council has proceeded with these orders, nor that the emergency services are concerned regarding the access to the community parcel.

I accept the plaintiffs' submissions, which are supported by the evidence concerning emergency vehicle access set out earlier, including the evidence of Mr Williams. The developers have not responded to the council notices by removing the barriers. In any case, the matter should be resolved in these proceedings rather than leaving it to the possibility of resolution by the exercise of a council process.
(c) there is no access, or limited foot access only, to each of the houseboat berths.

The developers submit that the registered community plan delineates the land available to the houseboat owners to access their houseboat berths.

[140740]

Both submissions are correct. However the plaintiffs' submission identifies the physical access difficulty while the developers' submission does not meet that point.
(d) foot access for the eastern marina berths is restricted by uneven sloping land with poor drainage and obstructed by large red gumtrees.

The developers submit that the land to the east of the supermarket did not present on the site inspection as unduly uneven or sloping. This Neighbourhood has undertaken landscaping works. If the Neighbourhood is concerned regarding trees on neighbourhood property, it is within the capacity of the neighbourhood association to make any necessary application to the council regarding the removal or trimming of these trees.

The plaintiffs reply that by-law 4.9.1 in the community management statement prohibits cutting down or lopping of trees except where necessary to erect a residence or for the safety of residents.

I agree that the relevant land is not "unduly" sloping; otherwise I accept the plaintiffs' submissions. Subject to somehow overcoming the by-law, no doubt an application could be made to council as suggested by the developers. However, the removal or lopping of trees is unlikely to be possible without trespassing on Lot 16.
(e) in the Central Neighbourhood, foot access is restricted in that it is obstructed and/or interrupted between the east and the west by Lot 15 and part of Lot 16, which has been fenced off by the developers.

The developers submit that at no time has there been unfettered access between the eastern and western sections of the Central Neighbourhood. At registration of the community plan, the Central Neighbourhood was separated with no connection and no direct line of access between the two sections. Further, Mr Bares indicated that the public wharf area has been fenced off for maintenance.

Both parties' submissions are correct. However the developers' submission does not meet the access difficulty problem except by suggesting that the public wharf will at some undefined time be reopened by the developers.
(f) in the Central Neighbourhood, foot access to its eastern side is restricted by uneven sloping land with poor drainage.

The developers submit that the landscaping works undertaken by the neighbourhood associations may have impacted on the drainage and sloping land. Also, the neighbourhoods have the ability to manage and maintain their own property. If the neighbourhood is of the opinion that works should be undertaken to repair, this may be done. The types of works the neighbourhood associations may undertake include removal of fences, barricades and excavation works.

The plaintiffs' submission is correct. Substantial work on neighbourhood property is likely to be impractical without trespassing on Lot 16. I do not think that the evidence establishes the first sentence of the developers' submission.
(g) foot access to the western side of the Central Neighbourhood is obstructed by large red gums and a timber retaining wall with no steps to abutting community property to the east.

The developers submit that no retaining wall as described was put in place by the developers prior to handover. The neighbourhoods have the ability to manage and maintain the neighbourhood property.

The plaintiffs' submission is correct. However, the plaintiffs' identification of the access difficulty is not met by the developers' submission. It is likely to be impracticable to carry out substantial work on neighbourhood property without trespassing on Lot 16.
(h) the Western Neighbourhood is not physically accessible in that there is no pathway of any type on the community property linking the central part of the marina to it.

The developers submit that the access ways to the neighbourhood associations are defined in the registered community plan and in registered plan for the Western Neighbourhood. The developers submit that the neighbourhood associations have the ability to maintain and repair their neighbourhood property.

Both parties' submissions are correct. However, the developers' submission does not meet the access difficulty. Maintenance and repair are likely to be impracticable without trespassing on Lot 16.
(i) the Western Neighbourhood is not physically accessible without trespass onto the Central Neighbourhood or Lot 16.

The developers submit that this alleged physical inaccessibility is as a result of the physical features on the subject land, such as trees and landscaping. The neighbourhood associations have the ability to take steps to remove or alter these physical features and to maintain and repair their neighbourhood property.

I accept the plaintiffs' submission; I have commented earlier on a similar submission by the developers.
(j) the restricted foot access to the houseboat moorings in the scheme is not suitable for persons with mobility disabilities, particularly having regard to the facts and matters described above.

The developers submit that there is no evidence that a claim has been made against the developers or any other party under the Disability Discrimination Act 1992 (Cth). Houseboat owners may make use of the public wharf area, and the area directly to the west of the public wharf. The evidence of Mr Martin, an architect specialising in disability access, demonstrates that the plaintiffs' land, and the land of the community association, is sufficient to enable them to develop it so as to provide disabled access if they chose.

I accept the plaintiffs' submission, which is supported by the evidence set out earlier, including that of Mr Martin, and which corresponds with my own observations on the site inspection. It would be highly inconvenient and impractical for houseboats to have to use the public wharf to pick up and put down people with mobility disabilities (assuming it is opened). The community association area just to the west of the wharf cannot be used by houseboats for reasons which I have explained.
(k) development consent 18/90 requires the sealing of internal roads and car parking areas, which is impracticable while the neighbourhood associations do not have access across the informal gravel roads formerly providing access to the houseboat moorings.

The developers note that condition 13 of DA 18/90 requires that "Internal roads and parking areas shall be sealed with bitumen when restaurant, motel and cabins are developed." The developers submit that this "trigger" has not occurred and therefore there is no requirement to complete this work at this time. The developers also submit that this does not in itself make the scheme impracticable as claimed; and that no evidence has been provided that the unsealed internal roads and car parking areas are impracticable while the neighbourhood associations do not have access across the informal gravel roads formerly providing access to the houseboat moorings.

I deal with this sealing issue below at [487]–[490] below.

443. The plaintiffs submit that there is inadequate access to common property to service the houseboat moorings for repairs and maintenance, and that there is no room for plant and equipment to access neighbourhood and community property improvements for essential maintenance and repair, for the following reasons:

(a) there is no vehicle access for service trades for the conducting of repairs and maintenance to houseboats, houseboat berths, neighbourhood property or community property abutting the houseboat moorings, which require the movement of heavy tools, plant, equipment and materials to and from the relevant repair or maintenance site.

The developers submit that the neighbourhoods and community associations may, if considered necessary, make use of s 7 of the Access to Neighbouring Land Act 2000 (NSW). There is no evidence before the Court that this avenue has been attempted. There is evidence from Mr Giffin that he did not approach the developers for their consent to use Lot 16 for the purpose of access for works, and that specific work to which he referred may be undertaken without the need to access the land of Lot 16. Also, there is no evidence from tradespeople as to the alleged impracticability of access.

I accept the plaintiffs' submission. The proposition that mooring owners should apply to a court for access for such purposes under the Access to Neighbouring Land Act 2000 is unreasonable. It is not apparent why they should do so if a remedy lies in these proceedings. Although there was no evidence from tradespeople about impracticability there was evidence from Mr Leorke directly on the point, which I accept. In any case, the impracticability was apparent from the site inspection. The developers closed the access roads and have not agreed to access for repairs and maintenance.
(b) Certain repair works, the subject of the CTTT proceedings, to the timber decking in property of the Central Neighbourhood have been prevented by the inability for plant and equipment to be allowed to be situated on the access roads, which the developers have closed.

The developers submit that in cross-examination Mr Giffin admitted to not seeking the consent of the developers to access Lot 16 for the purpose of undertaking these repairs; and accepted the reasonableness of Mr Jarman's actions in preventing the unlawful work. Further, the developers submit there was no evidence from Mr Giffin that an application under s 7 of the Access to Neighbouring Land Act 2000 was made seeking the required access; and there is no evidence from the tradespeople as to the alleged impracticability of access.

I accept the plaintiffs' submission, which is supported by Mr Giffins' evidence to which I have earlier referred.

(c) the metal staircases that provide foot access from the informal gravel roads formerly providing access to the houseboat moorings cannot be repaired and maintained for the benefit of the houseboat owners in the neighbourhood schemes.

The developers submit that the metal staircases are on Lot 16; there is no evidence to suggest that the neighbourhoods or the community association placed the staircases in their current location; therefore their claim for repair and maintenance needs to be questioned, especially when the foot access is defined by the registered community plan and does not include the area where the staircases are located.

The plaintiffs' submission is correct. It is true that the metal staircases are on Lot 16 and they were placed there apparently by the developers, but they were used by mooring owners for years to access their moorings.

(d) the timber walls constituting the entrance of the marina are wholly within Lot 16 land on both the north and south and cannot be repaired for the benefit of the houseboat owners in the neighbourhood schemes. These are the subject of the CTTT proceedings referred to in [333] above.

The developers submit that Lot 16 has an obligation to repair the walls at its own cost under cll 1.2.2 and/or 1.4.1 and 4.12.1 of the community management statement. If it has not done the repairs, the community association can compel compliance (see s 60(1)(b) of the Management Act). No evidence was led regarding the attempts or otherwise of the neighbourhoods or community association to repair the entrance walls, nor any request for access to Lot 16 to undertake this work. Again, if required, the neighbourhoods or community association may make an application under s 7 of the Access to Neighbouring Land Act 2000.

I accept the developers' submission.

444. The plaintiffs submit that there is inadequate access between the community and neighbourhood property, the boat ramp and the waterway in Deep Creek. In particular there is inadequate and interrupted access between community and neighbourhood property and the boat ramp.

The developers submit that the boat ramp is located partly on community property and partly on Lot 16. There is thus adequate and uninterrupted access between the community property and the boat ramp. No neighbourhood property is contiguous with the boat ramp. If it is suggested that this inadequacy is as a result of the closure of the public wharf, this has been closed for maintenance and repair and will be reopened when the maintenance and repair is complete.

As I understand it, the plaintiffs' submission is directed to inadequacy arising from closure of the public wharf. I do not accept that the developers' closure of the public wharf for years has genuinely been in order for maintenance and repairs. The conduct of the developers in this respect does not engender confidence that they will promptly repair and maintain it now or in the future.

445. The plaintiffs submit that there is inadequate and interrupted access between the eastern and western side of the marina.

The developers submit that from the registration of the community plan there was a part of what is now Lot 16 between the western and eastern limbs of the marina. At no time has there been uninterrupted access between the western and eastern limbs. In any event, access is available via community property behind the restaurant. To the extent the issue is about the closure of the public wharf, this is to be reopened after the repairs are completed.

I understand that the issue is about closure of the public wharf. In that context, the plaintiffs' submission is correct.

446. The plaintiffs submit that there is inadequate or no community speed boat parking for hotel and supermarket patrons or member visitors as there is no public wharf or no wharf accessible to the public. In particular:

(a) there is inadequate or no community speed boat parking for hotel and supermarket patrons or member visitors.

The developers submit that the hotel and supermarket should be responsible for speed boat parking if this is desired. Speed boats of member visitors may make use of the public wharf and the community property to the immediate west of the public wharf. Visitors and invited guests to the supermarket, which is located on Lot 15, may use the wharf area directly connected to Lot 15. The developers note that Mr O'Brien gave evidence that the council requested him to remove his ski park as it did not have development consent. He made a development application, but there is no evidence whether development consent has been granted.

I accept the plaintiffs' submission. Adequate speed boat parking depends on the availability of a ski park. The ski park which used to service the hotel and supermarket was removed by the developers. The ski park now servicing the hotel and supermarket has had to be relocated to private moorings, an unsatisfactory situation (see the evidence of Mr O'Brien set out earlier). Assuming the public wharf were to be opened, it is impracticable for speed boats to use the public wharf, particularly in numbers.

(b) there is no public wharf, in that it has been retained wholly by the developer (rather than partially as part of the hotel lot as per 66/92), has been fenced off and access is completely denied to scheme members and members of the public.

The developers submit that the area noted as the public wharf remains part of Lot 16, in accordance with the registered community plan. Mr Bares said that the public wharf was fenced off as a result of concerns about maintenance. Mr Jarman in cross-examination referred to holes in the public wharf.

I accept the plaintiffs' submission. As stated earlier, the developers could and should have repaired and reopened the public wharf years ago.

447. The plaintiffs submit that there is inadequate access for houseboat refuelling facilities.

The developers submit that houseboats can refuel directly from Lot 15 by tying up on the wharf section of Lot 15 adjacent to the fuel facilities.

I accept the developers' submission.

The plaintiffs submit that electrical installations for the neighbourhoods and for community property are constructed on private lots. In particular:

(a) there is no or limited access for the repair and maintenance of the electrical meter boxes servicing the neighbourhood associations.

The developers submit that the registered community management statement contains a diagram at sheet 28A of 29 of the statutory easements in relation to power and telephone services. "Statutory easement" is defined in s 36 of the Development Act:

statutory easement means an easement conferring rights:

> (a) to provide a service line within a scheme and a service by means of the service line, and > (b) to maintain and repair the service line, and > (c) to enter:
>
> > (i) land within the scheme that would include, or includes, the service line, or > > (ii) land within the scheme that is contiguous to the land referred to in subparagraph (i),
> > and do all such things as may be reasonably necessary to exercise the rights referred to in paragraphs (a) and (b).

The developers also submit that the neighbourhoods and community association, as a consequence of the statutory easement, have the right to access Lot 16 for the purpose of repair and maintenance of the electrical service line. This includes access to Lot 16 for the purpose of repair and maintenance of the meter boxes because the neighbourhoods and community association have rights to *"do all such things as may be reasonably necessary to exercise the rights referred to in [the easement]"*as explained above. To the extent the Court finds that the easement does not provide those rights in relation to the meter boxes, the developers undertake to the Court to cause an easement to provide those rights to mirror the terms of the statutory easement.

The developers note that the diagram at sheet 28A of 29 of the community management statement does not include the electrical meter box at the eastern end of the marina. They submit that the obligation is on the community association to submit a diagram showing this meter box to be registered, according to clauses 3.5.5 and 3.5.6 of the community management statement. To the extent the owners of Lot 16 are required to cooperate with the community association in this regard, the owners of Lot 16 hereby undertake to the Court to do so.

I note the developers' undertakings and accept their submissions.
(b) the proprietors of Lot 16 have taken steps or caused steps to be taken for the removal of the electrical meter boxes.

The developers submit that there is no evidence to support this allegation. The proposition that Mr Bares was seeking to have steps taken by others was put squarely to Mr Bares in cross examination, and was denied by him. Mr Jarman denied in cross-examination that it was he who suggested to the CTTT in 2005 that Mr Brockwell be the electrical engineer. A series of questions were put to Mr Jarman regarding the work of Brolec. In cross-examination, a direct proposition was put to Mr Jarman that it was his clients' intention to have the work he commissioned in 2005 done through the appointment of the compulsory manager in 2006. This was denied.

I accept the developers' submission.

449. The plaintiffs submit that dead man anchors to anchor sea walls for the marina are situated in Lot 16 with no concomitant legal right.

The developers submit that there is no evidence that the dead man anchors are located in or partly in Lot 16. Peter O'Dwyer in cross-examination was unsure of their location. In any event, there is no evidence to suggest there is any impediment to the dead man anchors being constructed on neighbourhood land.

I accept the developers' submission.

[140745]

The plaintiffs submit that the design of the neighbouring marina to the east, also controlled by the developers, has a significantly different layout that avoids many of the problems of impracticable design referred to in the preceding paragraphs.

The developers submit that this says nothing as to the alleged physical impracticability of the registered community plan.

I accept the developers' submission.

451. The plaintiffs submit that pursuant to the management statement, the community association has responsibility for maintaining control of the water. It is clear that this is not the case, having regard to the granting by Lot 16 of easements over it, and the restriction of access to it, via the boat ramp, and the enforcement of strict rights in relation to oversized houseboats. As a practical measure, by-law 4.21 of the management statement has become meaningless as the water is not community property.

The developers submit that by-law 4.21 of the community management statement has not become meaningless. There is nothing contradictory in the title of the water being held by the developers and the community association having the control of all aspects of boat traffic and boat usage. The developers say that the by-laws by their very nature control what actions may be taken on both community property and individual lots. For example, by-law 4.7.1 purports to control all aspects of pedestrian and vehicular traffic within the community parcel. "Community parcel" is defined in the s 3 of the Management Act as "land the subject of a community scheme". The developers submit that all land within the registered community plan is subject to the community scheme. The contents of the community management statement are regulated by Schedule 3 to the Development Act. Clause 2 states what matters must be included in the statement. Clause 3 refers to optional matters which may be included in the community management statement, and states at (2): "This clause does not limit the matters that may be included in a management statement". The developers say this supports their position that there is authority for making the by-law and that the by-law is not meaningless.

I considered this issue at [118] above. The position seems to me to be paradoxical. The provision of the management statement naturally belongs with ownership of the waters by the community association, as indeed was contemplated by DA 66/92.

452. The plaintiffs submit, and I accept, that these practical physical difficulties are manifest from two sources:

> (a) directly as a consequence of the manner of subdivision of land by the community plan, that is, by what has been registered; and
> (b) as a consequence of the failure to register plans in accordance with what was approved in DA 66/92 (that is, either at the time of the first registrations on 17 January 1995, or by further subdivision as promised in cl 1.3 of the community development contract), the common property in the scheme is insufficient to service the proper function of the development. Further, the failure by Mr Watson (and subsequent owners of Lot 16) to comply with development consents 18/90 and 66/92, to comply with the development contracts, and to amend the scheme to provide further community property (which was the subject of long negotiation from 2001 to 2005) has caused the continuation of the scheme to become impracticable.

453. The developers submit that the suggested physical impracticability is not something that has become impracticable within the meaning of s 70 of the Development Act but, rather, something that was always a characteristic of the registered scheme. The developers submit that the words in s 70 "has become impracticable" demonstrate the purpose of the section is to provide a power to vary or terminate a scheme where something has changed since the scheme was registered.

454. The developers' submissions refer to a "registered" scheme. A community scheme, as defined, is not registered. Rather, it is defined to comprise a number of elements. The elements include the manner of subdivision of land by a (registered) community plan, the proposals in any related (registered) development contract, and the rights conferred, and obligations imposed, by or under the Development Act and the Management Act. Those obligations include the statutory covenants in Schedule 2 to the Management Act whereby the original proprietors covenant that the land will be developed in accordance with the development consent and the development contract and subsequent proprietors covenant that they will permit the original proprietors to develop the land in that way.

455. "Impracticable" in the context of s 70 means that in the particular circumstances of the case the scheme cannot continue as a matter of practicality. This may be because a problem, inherent in the terms of the scheme itself and previously unrecognised, comes to be seen as inevitably producing impracticability even at some time in the future during the life of the scheme: Community Association DP 270212 v Registrar General for the State of New South Wales (2004) 62 NSWLR 25 at [19]–[22], [28] (quoted at [54] above).

456. The "development consent" referred to in the statutory covenants included 66/92 which required subdivision in accordance with the plans accompanying that development application. The subsequently registered community plan did not reflect that development consent. The disparity between the registered community plan and this "obligation" element of the community scheme gave rise to the physical impracticability which appeared in 2005 and 2006 when the developers denied access to the access tracks, public wharf and, for a time, the boat ramp. From that time at least, it can be said, in the words of s 70, that construction or completion of the community scheme "has become impracticable".

457. The developers submit that the alleged physical impracticability is not impracticability but inconvenience. They say that no vehicular access is "required" to the houseboat berths because the public wharf has been only temporarily closed for repairs and is available for loading and unloading — as is the boat ramp, the strip of land in front of the supermarket, and the 11.035 metres of community property which adjoins Deep Creek to the west of the public wharf.

458. I reject the developers' submission. I do not accept that the public wharf has been temporarily closed for repairs. Mr O'Brien's evidence, which I have accepted, is that the wharf was not in an unsafe condition until the developers fenced it off: see [327] above. In any event, the repairs could have been done in short order years ago. I have the impression that the public wharf has not been repaired in order to put pressure on the plaintiffs. Be that as it may, I can see no reasonable excuse for closing the public wharf for so long. Assuming that the public wharf were repaired and reopened, I do not accept that it provides a reasonably practicable alternative to vehicular access. Persons would have to walk to their houseboat, then drive their houseboat to the public wharf to load and unload persons and things. This would not merely be an inconvenience, but would create chaos if numerous houseboat owners wished to carry out this manoeuvre at a similar time — as they would at the beginning and end of weekends. The alternative, perhaps, under the developers' proposal would be for a houseboat owner to use a ski boat — if a houseboat owner owned one — to come to the wharf for loading and unloading. It is also impracticable for ski boats to use the wharf, especially in numbers, unless there is a ski boat park tied to the wharf — which the developers have removed. Further, it is impracticable for the infirm, the unwell and the disabled to have to manoeuvre in and out of small boats.

459. Houseboats cannot dock at the 11.035 metre strip of community property to the west of the public wharf because of its oblique angle adjacent to the mooring berth. Even if they could, it would be impracticable to do so for the same reasons as the public wharf.

460. There is a great body of evidence, which I have accepted and set out earlier, concerning the very serious access problems caused by the closure of the access roads, public wharf and (for a time) the boat ramp. In my opinion, continuation of the community scheme has become impracticable because of the physical access problems.

RELIEF UNDER S 70 DEVELOPMENT ACT

461. In all the circumstances of the case, it is appropriate in my opinion to grant relief pursuant to s 70 of the Development Act. The plaintiffs propose orders to the following effect pursuant to s 70.

462. First, an order that the community scheme be varied by amending the community development contract, community management statement and the neighbourhood development contracts in accordance with appendices 1 and 2 to the Second Further Amended Statement of Claim. Appendix 2 is a plan and was substituted at trial (a copy is annexure J to this judgment). It is a modified version of Plan 4 in DA 18/90 and the Stage 2 plan in DA 66/92, both of which show the proposed facilities. This modified plan deletes the facilities shown on those DA plans that can no longer be constructed due to the supervening facilities (the Honeyman Lot development and the other buildings on what are now Lots 14, 15 and 16), which are all shown. I agree in principle with that deletion. Appendix 2 shows the existing access tracks (possibly extended) in lieu of the access track shown on those DA plans.

463. In my opinion, this modified plan should be modified further as follows:

> (a) the facilities that were not shown on Plan 4 in DA 18/90 and the Stage 2 plan in DA 66/92 should be deleted. They are the Honeyman development, the restaurant/hotel, the supermarket and the existing access tracks. To include those facilities would be to subject them to the statutory regime, with potentially harsh results. For example, under the statutory covenants in the Development Act the original developers would thereby become subject (it would seem) to an obligation to develop the Honeyman Lot as shown on the proposed plan. That development is at the moment only partly complete.
> (b) the access tracks should not be shown. The first reason is that, as discussed below, I have decided that the land where those tracks appear should be converted to community property in accordance with the subdivision plans accompanying DA 66/92. Secondly, these access tracks did not appear on the relevant plans accompanying DA 18/90 or DA 66/92. The single access tracks shown on the development application plans appears to have been in a slightly higher location than the existing upper eastern access track.
> (c) the proposed road shown to the south of Lot 14 and bisecting Lots 14 and 15 (with a battleaxe next to the supermarket and adjoining paths) should be deleted. I consider that it has been superseded by the creation and development of Lots 14 and 15 in a way which is both substantially different to that shown in the DA plans and inconsistent with the existence of that road. The construction of a restaurant/hotel and supermarket on Lots 14 and 15 seem more beneficial to the community association and lot owners than the general store and storage shed that were originally proposed. In the circumstances, I do not think it appropriate to exercise my discretion to include the beneficial changes that have occurred in these locations in the community scheme while at the same time providing for this road.
> (d) the facilities shown on Lot 14 — public toilets, underground fuel tanks and sewer pump — should be deleted. Again, I consider that they have been superseded by the restaurant/hotel on Lot 14.
> (e) the green, tree fringed rectangular area immediately north of the carpark should be deleted and shown as part of the carpark. That is because it became part of the carpark in 2006 and, as discussed below, I propose to require the extended carpark to be sealed.

464. There should be related amendments to the text of the development contracts and the community management statement to reflect my decision.

465. Secondly, the plaintiffs propose orders that the community scheme be varied by converting into community property:

(a) that part of Lot 16 described as community property in sheets 1, 2 and 3 of the Stage 1 subdivision plans accompanying DA 66/92 (annexures B — D to this judgment); and
(b) the public wharf shown in those plans (shown in annexure J to this judgment);
(c) extinguishment of easements for access in favour of Lot 23 over the lagoon and a right of way over Lot 16 land above the eastern moorings.

[140748]

466. In my opinion, it is appropriate to grant relief to the effect of the proposed order (a) to the extent shown in the plan which is annexure H to this judgment. The DA 66/92 plans (annexures B to E to this judgment) were part of development consent 66/92. The statutory covenants in cl 1 of Schedule 2 Part 1 to the Development Act bound the original developers to develop the land in accordance with the development consent. To order the conversion of land and waters shown as community property on those plans into community property, to the extent I have indicated, is to give effect to the statutory covenant. The relief could take the form of an order that that land be vested in the community association and an order for registration of a new community plan to reflect the vesting. The Court is empowered to make such orders under s 70(3) (c), (f) and (g) of the Development Act.

467. Unless the developers consent or do not object, I am not minded to make proposed order (b) — conversion of the public wharf into community property — if there is another reasonable means of ensuring that it will be promptly and properly repaired and thereafter kept in good repair and open to the public. My reluctance is because the public wharf was never shown as community property in any development application plan. Although it might reasonably have been anticipated that title to the public wharf would run with the title to Lot 14, that did not happen. On the other hand, it is implicit in the concept of a public wharf in this context that the owner would take all reasonable steps to keep it in good repair and open to the public.

468. If the public wharf were to be converted to community property the developers would be relieved of any further obligation to repair or maintain it. Presumably, this would also alleviate their insurance burden. Having regard to those considerations and in the context of the overall relief that I propose to grant in this case, the developers may prefer to consent or not object to an order converting it to community property. The alternative is to order them to repair and open it to the public within, say, 60 days and thereafter to take all reasonable steps to keep it in good repair and open to the public. It may be appropriate for the community development contract or the community management statements, or both, to be amended to impose an obligation on the public wharf owners to take all reasonable steps to keep it in good repair and open to the public.

469. I am not inclined to make proposed order (c) extinguishing the easements for access and right-of-way in favour of Lot 23. I consider that would be disproportionate, harsh and detrimental to third parties such as mooring berth owners on Lot 23.

470. Without descending into detail, I note that two of the three easements specifically identified in the plaintiffs' submissions as the subject of the proposed extinguishment order appear to have been erroneously identified because they were extinguished and replaced by other easements in favour of Lot 23 by an instrument registered in April 2008 (Exhibit 7). In particular, the easement for access (and other purposes) over Lot 16 is now somewhat further away from the Deep Creek lagoon than before. Formerly, that easement appeared to be over the upper eastern access track. I am unsure whether that easement is now wholly or partly within the land which is to be converted into community property. If it is, I am minded to modify the conversion order to the intent that the northern boundary of the land to be vested would be to the south of that easement.

471. I will hear the parties as to the final form of relief under s 70. I note that the owner of Lot 15 has submitted to an order that his waterfront strip be converted to community property. A consent order to that effect may be made.

472. In expressing these views I have taken into account the undertaking to the Court given by the developers at the end of the trial which they submit is relevant to discretionary relief. The developers submit that under this undertaking the plaintiffs would eventually have much of the access relief they seek. The developers say that they intend to give berth owners improved rights of access to their mooring berths pursuant to a new local environmental plan which they have proposed to the council to permit proposed development on Lot 16. In that context they have given the following undertaking to the Court:

> The owners of Lot 16 undertake to the Court to amend their plans for the development of Lot 16 so as:
>
> > i. To give effect to the intention stated in the last sentence of the defendants' submission in paragraph 129 r and Ex 6(9) LES 7 drawing but in respect of access below the upper access road limited to use by pedestrians, bicycles, electric golf carts, wheel chairs and emergency vehicles, and > > ii. To create access for the berths to the west of the public wharf in a manner generally consistent with that shown in the plans behind Tab 5 to Mr Jarman's affidavit sworn 13 March 2008, but limited to use by pedestrians, bicycles, golf carts, wheel chairs and emergency vehicles.
>
> And to create easements for such use.

473. In order to glean some understanding of this undertaking it is necessary to look at the documents incorporated by reference therein:

(a) paragraph 129r of the defendants' submissions stated:

> 129. The Applicants' submission that the Defendants should be required, in effect, to specifically perform Plan 4 (B409) can also be met by the answer that the features in Plan 4 have been provided or are in the process of being provided. This is established by an analysis of the matters that have been alleged, in the Second Further Amended Statement of Claim paragraph 89A(iv), not to have been provided. This analysis is set out below.
>
>
> r. Access tracks
> "Access tracks" are not currently available beyond the roads to the car park and boat ramp. The "access tracks" currently on site were used as construction tracks during the construction of the marina. These tracks do not have council approval and are not designated as roads. There was no requirement to provide access tracks in accordance with DA 18/90 or DA 66/92. It is, however, intended to provide vehicular access along an area near the top road on the eastern side of the marina, and foot, golf cart and emergency vehicle access right to the eastern berths on that side, see Ex 6(9), LES 7; T822 ln.6–T626 ln.6).

(b) the Exhibit 6(9) LES 7 drawing shows a sealed upper eastern access road and a gravel lower eastern access road, with residential lots between the roads. The latter road appears to correspond with the location of the existing lower eastern access track. The former road appears to be higher than the existing upper eastern access track and to correspond with the location of an easement for access of variable width, and other easements such as drainage and sewage, created in April 2008 in favour of Lot 23 (Exhibit 7). It replaced an easement for access of variable width which was somewhat lower over (it seems) the existing upper eastern access track;

(c) the plans behind Tab 5 to Mr Jarman's affidavit sworn on 13 March 2008 shows roads in the locations of the western access track and the lower eastern access track, but extended and with laybacks and, in the case of the western road, sealed and with a turning circle at the end. These appear to be the "concept drawings" referred to in cl 12 of the draft heads of agreement proposed by the developers in August 2005: see [356] above.

474. In my view, the undertaking is couched so unclearly that it raises doubt as to whether it could be enforced through the contempt of court coercive sanction. Further, I think it is of little weight as a discretionary consideration given the strength of the plaintiffs' case for relief, the uncertainty as to whether the proposed development will eventuate, and the fact that it could only give the plaintiffs a modified version of the relief to which I think they are entitled.

475. In light of my conclusions in relation to the s 70 claim, it is unnecessary to consider the plaintiffs' alternative claim for a right of vehicular access to the moorings under s 88K of the Conveyancing Act 1919 (NSW).

CLAIM IN RELATION TO CARPARK, ROAD WORKS AND SEALING

476. The plaintiffs claim that the original developers, Mr Watson and Sammy One, are in breach of cll 1.2.2 and 1.3.1 of the community development contract and cl 4 of the "Warning" section of the community and neighbourhood development contracts — incorporating conditions 6 and 13 of development consent 18/90 — in that they have failed to seal the access road, carpark and internal roads.

The contractual obligations

477. Those contractual provisions are in the following terms:

> 1.2.2 The developer is to provide a sealed access way in accordance with the Development Consent.
>
> 1.3.1 All driveways are to be sealed in accordance with the Development Consent No 18/90 issued by the Council of the Shire of Murray on the 12th September 1991.
>
> 4 …the original proprietor covenants with the association concerned and with the subsequent proprietors jointly and with each of them severally to develop the land subject of the scheme in accordance with the development consent as modified or amended with the consent authority's approval from time to time.

478. In my view, 1.3.1 of the community development contract is irrelevant for present purposes. It is limited to "driveways".

479. Condition 6 and 13 of development consent 18/90 are in the following terms:

> 6 The access road shall be surfaced with bitumen and the intersection with the main road shall be constructed to a standard required by the Traffic Committee.
>
> 13 Internal roads and parking areas shall be sealed with bitumen when restaurant, motel and cabins are developed.

480. The reason stated by the council for imposing conditions 6 and 13 were "to "provide all weather access" and also, in the case of condition 6, "for traffic safety reasons".

481. Clause 1 of Schedule 2 Part 1 to the Management Act provides that the original proprietor (here, the developers) covenants that the scheme will be developed in accordance with the development contract and the development consent. This is the source of the contractual obligation in cl 4.

482. Section 41(1) of the Development Act provides:

> All or part of the land comprising the community property in a community scheme may be set apart as a means of open access connecting part of the community parcel and a public place.

483. In my opinion, the "access way" referred to in cl 1.2.2 is the "access road" referred to in condition 6. It is also the "access way" referred to in by-law 3.1.1 of the community management statement which is shown in the access way plan forming part of the community plan registered in January 1995. By-law 3.1.1 provides:

> A private access way is to be constructed by the developer according to plans and specifications supplied to the Council of the Shire of Murray, and more particularly as shown on the access way plan forming part of this statement, and will be open for use by members of the scheme or their guests only.

484. The access plan registered in January 1995 (sheet 29 of the community plan) states that "it illustrates private access ways which are community property". This access plan shows an access way from Perricoota Road with a "claw" encircling the carpark area and the area that is now Lots 14 and 15, except for the waterfront strip. This access plan was replaced in 2004 by another registered access way plan which states that it "illustrates an open access way which is community property". The latter plan shows a similar access way to the former plan although the "claw" may be larger on the western side.

485. In my opinion, under cll 1.2.2 and 4, read with condition 6, the obligation of the original developers is to surface the access way with bitumen. That does not include the carpark area.

486. Under cl 4, read with condition 13, the obligation of the original developers was to seal the carpark and internal roads with bitumen when the restaurant, motel and cabins are developed. The reference to "internal roads" in condition 13 does not, in my view, include the existing access tracks to the moorings. First, I do not construe "internal roads" as including an access track. I think that there is a distinction between a road and an access track in this context. Secondly, if an access track is a road (contrary to my opinion), condition 13 would still not apply to at least two of the existing access tracks because they were not shown on DA 18/90 Plan 4 and the DA 66/92 Stage 2 plan. I do not think it was contemplated that the sealing obligation would apply to something which was not shown on the DA plans and was created later. Only one "access track" is shown on those plans, on the eastern side, although it appears to be in a slightly different location to, and is longer than, the existing upper eastern access track.

487. Condition 13 is a contingent condition. That is, performance of its sealing obligation is subject to the condition precedent or trigger "when restaurant, motel and cabins are developed". The developers submit that the obligation has not yet arisen because the motel and cabins (and perhaps the restaurant) have not yet been developed. I do not accept the submission for the following reasons.

488. A restaurant has been developed on Lot 14. Development of a motel and cabins can no longer occur as indicated in the locations shown on Plan 4 and the Stage 2 subdivision plan (annexures A and E hereto). That is because they have been superseded by the consent for development of the Honeyman Lot in a different way. However, the Honeyman Lot development, which has been partly constructed, includes cabins. In that regard, the Environmental Service's Department Report to the Planning and Development Committee Meeting of the council on 1 October 2002 noted that an application to subdivide Lot 7 (the Honeyman Lot) had been made and stated:

> This development lot was included in the original development proposal for Deep Creek Marina. In particular this land was designated for holiday cabins or similar resort style development. The current owner does not wish to pursue this proposal any further.

489. In my opinion, if fulfilment of a condition precedent to a contractual obligation is within one party's control and that party prevents its fulfilment, that party cannot rely upon the non-fulfilment (or, as it sometimes put, the condition precedent is taken to be fulfilled or is excused): Mackay v Dick (1881) 6 App Cas 251 at 263, 270; Secured Income Real Estate (Australia) Limited v St Martins Investments Proprietary Limited (1979) 144 CLR 596 at 607-608; Newmont Pty Ltd v Laverton Nickel NL (1982) 44 ALR 598 at 606 (PC); Amber Holdings (Aust) Pty Ltd v Polona Pty Ltd [1982] 2 NSWLR 470 at 475; Sanctuary Investments Pty Ltd v St Gregory's Armenian School Inc [1999] ANZ Conv R 454 (Young J); Quinn Villages Pty Ltd v Mulherin [2006] QCA 433 at [19]–[24].

490. That principle, in my view, applies in the present case. The developers were under a contractual obligation to develop the land in accordance with the development consent, including condition 13. Development of the motel, cabins and restaurant in accordance with the DA plans was within the control of the developers. They allowed the land to be developed in a different way such that those facilities cannot be developed as contemplated by those plans. Therefore, to the extent that the condition precedent is unfulfilled, they cannot rely on its non-fulfilment. Accordingly, in terms of condition 13, they are obliged to seal the carpark with bitumen.

Breach

491. The next question is whether the original developers are in breach of their contractual obligations in relation to sealing of the access way and carpark with bitumen. The following history informs the answer.

492. In 1994, the developer commenced construction of the access way from Perricoota Road. The sealing of this access way stops about 50 metres short of the carparking area shown on Plan 4 and the Stage 2 subdivision plan. No other part of the access way, internal roads or carpark has been sealed. In 1996, Mr Watson commenced landscaping the carpark.

493. In September 2003, the developers were granted conditional development consent for the subdivision of what was then Lot 9 in the community scheme (DA 282/03). Condition 3 provided that:

> The adjacent car park and access roads must be sealed to the satisfaction of Council's Director of Engineering Services, or a bank guarantee in the equivalent cost of the work must be submitted prior to the certified plans being released.

The bank guarantee was lodged, and it remains with the council.

494. In November 2003, the developers were granted conditional development consent for a boat storage area on Lot 16 (DA 370/03). Conditions (k) and (l) provided that:

> (k) Within 18 months the owner is to seal the main access road from the property boundary to the entrance of the storage yards. Such sealed road is to be a minimum of 7m wide with 300 mm crushed rock base and double coat seal. The design is to be approved by Council prior to work commencing on site.
> (l) The intersection with Perricoota Road is to be upgraded as deemed necessary by Council's Director of Engineering Services.

495. In March 2005, the developers commissioned Chris Bell of ERM and Glen Ryan of GMR to do works in the community scheme and also on Lot 23. On 21 March 2005, Mr Ryan prepared a proposal for, inter alia, works on the main access roads and community carpark, internal roads and access tracks.

496. The developers accepted the proposal. The developers then endeavoured to have the fee proposal redirected to the community association, which rejected the endeavour. During this period, the developers were negotiating with the community association to have it agree to pay for works, including road sealing, in exchange for the title to the access roads on the creek foreshore. Ultimately, on 12 August 2005, Mr Jarman put forward heads of agreement, as discussed at [356] above.

497. On 6 October 2005, the developers met with the council. During the meeting, the council outlined issues of compliance with certain development consents and their conditions as follows:

> (a) condition 13 of DA 18/90;
> (b) condition 3 of DA 282/03; and > (c) condition (k) of DA 370/03.

498. After the meeting, the council wrote letters to the developers, stating that it considered certain conditions of consent to be outstanding, as follows:

> (a) to Ozzie on 15 November 2005, in relation to (inter alia) condition 3 of DA 282/03;
> (b) to Mr Watson on 15 November 2005, in relation to (inter alia) condition 13 of DA 18/90 and condition 3 of DA 282/03; and > (c) to Hillington on 15 November 2005, in relation to (inter alia) condition 3 of DA 282/03.

499. On 20 March 2006, the council issued to the community association a Notice of Intention to Serve an Order. It required compliance with all outstanding conditions of development consents 18/90 and 282/03, including conditions 6 and 13 of development consent 18/90 and condition 3 of development consent 282/03.

500. By letter dated 16 November 2005, the developers' solicitors in the CTTT proceedings wrote to the community manager withdrawing any offer to negotiate pending the outcome of the CTTT hearing. This meant that the heads of agreement put forward by Mr Jarman in August 2005 were no longer the subject of negotiations.

501. The compulsory manager engaged GMR to prepare designs for carparking. Mr Jarman had considerable input into the designs. GMR prepared the final specifications in September 2006. Works were done in anticipation of sealing the carpark and roadways.

502. When the compulsory manager was removed, the works were stopped. At this stage, the landscaping had been removed, and preparatory and drainage work had been done in anticipation of sealing and construction of a carpark, access way and internal roads in accordance with the final specifications prepared by GMR.

503. In my opinion, the above history establishes that the original proprietors are in breach of, first, their obligation to seal the carpark with bitumen and, secondly, their obligation to seal the access way with bitumen to a standard required by the council's Traffic Committee in that the access way has only been sealed to a point about 50 metres short of the carpark.

[140753]

Limitation Act defence

504. The developers submit that any claim for breach of cl 1.2.2 is not maintainable having regard to s 14 of the Limitation Act 1969 (NSW). Section 14 relevantly provides that a cause of action founded on a contract, not being a cause of action founded on a deed, is not maintainable if brought after the expiration of a limitation period of six years running from the date on which the cause of action first accrues.

505. The plaintiffs' submit: (a) there was ongoing daily breach: Sheldon v McBeath (1993) Aust Torts Reports 81- 209 (NSWCA) and other cases; (b) there are new causes of action for the plaintiff Mr Cunnington who only recently purchased into the scheme; and (c) the registered development contracts are deeds.

506. The parties' cryptic submissions on this limitation issue appear to proceed on the assumption that (subject to the deed point) s 14 of the Limitation Act 1969 applies to a development contract and statutory covenants under the community titles legislation. It is unnecessary to decide whether that assumption is well founded. Assuming that it is, in my opinion s 14 of the Limitation Act 1969 has no application because the development contracts are deeds. Section 15 of the Management Act provides that such a registered development contract "has effect as if it included an agreement under seal". Although an agreement under seal is not necessarily synonymous with a deed, in the present case I consider that it is. Section 36(11) of the Real Property Act 1900 (NSW) provides that "Upon registration, a dealing shall have the effect of a deed duly executed by the parties who signed it". A "dealing" is defined to include any instrument which is registrable under the provisions of the Real Property Act 1900. That includes a community development contract. Consequently, in my opinion, s 14 of the Limitation Act 1969 is inapplicable. It is unnecessary to address the plaintiffs' other points.

Relief

507. The plaintiffs seek an order for specific performance of the contractual obligation to seal the access road, internal roads and carpark. I address and grant that proposed relief, so far as it concerns the access road and carpark, after considering specific performance generally below.

CLAIM IN RELATION TO ELECTRICITY SERVICES

508. The plaintiffs claim that the original developers have breached:

> (a) clause 1.2.1 of the community development contract by "failing to provide all electricity services"; and
> (b) clause 1.2.1 of the neighbourhood development contracts by failing "to provide all telephone and electricity services".

509. Clause 1.2.1 of the community development contract provides:

> All electricity services are to be provided by the developer.

Clause 1.2.1 of the neighbourhood development contract for the Central Neighbourhood provides:

All telecom and electricity services are to be provided to each lot by the developer.

Clause 1.2.1 of the neighbourhood development contracts for the Western and Eastern Neighbourhoods provides:

All telephone and electricity services are to be provided to each lot by the developer.

510. The plaintiffs submit that the original developers breached these provisions of the development contracts in three ways:

(a) the development on Lots 14 and 15 of a larger shop and a hotel created a maximum demand for electricity that exceeded supply;
(b) the electrical services provided in 1994 did not conform with the relevant Australian standard and the Electricity Supply Act 1995 (NSW) in respect of on-selling power and individual metering; and
(c) the cables were not laid at an adequate depth.

511. The developers deny the alleged breaches. They submit that by 1996 they had performed their electricity obligations by providing all electrical services in relation to the marina berths and the associated marina facilities.

[140754]

Background

512. The first stage of the Deep Creek Marina development included the creation of 45 houseboat berths. Mr Watson intended each berth to have an electrical connection. The electrical connection was to be carried out progressively as berths were constructed.

513. In about 1991, Mr Watson contacted Murray River Electricity (MRE) (now Country Energy) regarding the process and capacity requirements for electrical connections to the Deep Creek Marina development and the houseboat berths.

514. In about October 1994, MRE connected power to the development site and installed a 25kVA transformer near where the restaurant is now located, on what is now Lot 15 near its boundary with what is now Lot 14.

515. Mr Watson engaged Moama Electrical Services (MES) to carry out electrical work not completed by MRE. MES devised a system to make electricity available to each berth. This involved laying of cables from the transformer to the five switchboards, two of which are located to the west of the boat ramp, and the other three to the east of the boat ramp. All are located on Lot 16 so as to be above flood level.

516. Further cables were laid from the switchboards to the power pole connection points for each berth. The connections on the poles at the berths had to be above flood level.

517. Mr Watson assisted MES with digging the required trenches for cables and conduits, laying cables and installing the berth connection poles. Mr Watson testified that the depth of the conduits was at least 600mm.

518. The 18 berths to the east of the boat ramp were the first to have electricity connected. Mr Watson arranged for the payment of costs involved in the design and installation of electricity to the berths.

519. In 1996, Mr Watson decided to upgrade the transformer, as he wanted to develop a further 67 houseboat berths, and power was required for the new restaurant and the sewerage treatment works built in accordance with DA 18/90. Also, the Public Works Department wanted to install a sewerage pump out station, which would draw power from the Deep Creek Marina development.

520. In accordance with this upgrade, a 200 kVA transformer was mounted on a pole on what is now Lot 15 and a meter was located at the base of the pole. MES again carried out the electrical connection works, and Mr Watson again arranged for the installation work, including trench digging, conduit laying, and construction and installation of connection poles at the berths. All costs were paid by Mr Watson with a contribution from the Public Works Department.

521. As a result of the installation of the 200 kVA transformer, electricity was connected to:

(a) a total of 85 houseboat berths;
(b) the Public Works Department's sewerage pump out station;
(c) the restaurant/bar and shop;
(d) the sewerage treatment works; and
(e) the hardstand area.

522. At no time was Mr Watson approached by any houseboat berth owner regarding complaints about the electricity supply to berths, with the exception of individual overload switch issues.

523. Factors of which Mr Watson was aware that he thought had impacted upon the capacity of electrical service, included:

(a) the development of Lots 14 and 15 (previously Lot 10) into a hotel and larger shop which resulted in additional power being required;
(b) in about mid 2001, the Central Neighbourhood engaged a landscape gardener to install wooden retaining walls. During construction, the gardener used a hole digger which cut power lines and broke the stays for berth retaining walls, causing them to fail, and also removed the tie-on point for houseboats prior to the installation of proper bollards;
(c) houseboat owners tied boats to power poles, resulting in an estimated 5 to 10 power poles in the Central Neighbourhood being bent, which damaged the conduits connecting the power cables to the poles.

[140755]

(d) numerous poles had unauthorised works, including holes cut in the structure, removal of top caps and apparent addition of wiring;
