What's New — Queensland Community Schemes Law & Practice Cases

See also the "What's New" for Commentary.

This What's New section lists decisions added to Queensland Community Schemes Law & Practice Cases over the previous twelve months (the most recent addition is at the top of the list). Each decision has a reference date that reflects the date on which the case was added.

• Pulse (2016) LQCS ¶90-208; Court citation: [2016] QBCCMCmr 43, a decision from the Office of the Commissioner for Body Corporate and Community Management concerned with whether a body corporate had unreasonably withheld their consent to the assignment of a management rights business in order to recover a debt. [August 2016]
• Williahra Tower (2016) LQCS ¶90-207; Court citation: [2016] QBCCMCmr 177 a decision from the Office of the Commissioner for Body Corporate and Community Management that confirms that the use of powers of attorney in voting at an annual general meeting in Queensland, is a valid method of lot owners exercising their vote, and there is no limit on the number of powers of attorney that may be used for a meeting. This stands in contrast to the restrictions placed on the use of proxies at general meetings. [July 2016]
• 18 Kingsford Street (2016) LQCS ¶90-206; [2016] QBCCMCmr 78, a decision from the Office of the Commissioner for Body Corporate and Community Management which provides a perfect example of how a body corporate can deal with complaints about noisy lot owners. [July 2016]
• Albrecht v Ainsworth & Ors (2015) LQCS ¶90-205; Court citation: [2015] QCA 220, a decision from the Queensland Supreme Court of Appeal which is important for its exploration of when a body corporate will be found to have fulfilled its obligation to act reasonably when carrying out its general functions under s 94 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997. [November 2015]
• Vie Management Pty Ltd (Receivers and Managers Appointed) (In Liquidation) v Body Corporate for Gallery Vie (2015) LQCS ¶90-204 [2015] QCAT 164. A decision from the Queensland Civil and Administrative Tribunal which illustrates that the protection afforded under s 126 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 to a financier of management rights for a community scheme, are limited. This section provides some protection for financiers by permitting them to act in place of the contractor or to appoint receivers without the prospect of the contract being terminated by the body corporate by reason of those acts. [September 2015]
• Peterson Management Services Pty Ltd v Body Corporate for The Rocks Resort (2015) LQCS ¶90-203 [2015] QCAT 255. A decision from the Queensland Civil and Administrative Tribunal which should serve as a warning to body corporates to pay close attention when drafting Remedial Action Notices. [September 2015]
• Lambert Property Group Pty Ltd v Body Corporate for Castlebar Cove Community Title Scheme 37148 (2015) LQCS ¶90-202 [2015] QSC 179. This decision concerned an application by a developer for an easement over an adjacent apartment complex's basement carpark. The application failed on a number of grounds including that there were no details of the practical aspects of how the use of the easement would be regulated. [September 2015]

Queensland Body Corporate and Community Management Commissioner — Adjudicators Orders

Decision delivered on 23 February 2016

Conveyancing — Body corporate — Nuisance — Where lot owner replaced carpet and underlay with floor tiles — Where tiles were laid without acoustic underlay — Where downstairs neighbour complained to the body corporate about the noise from the tiles — Whether tiles caused a nuisance for the purposes of s 167 of the Body Corporate and Community Act 1997 — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, s 167.

The owner of a unit replaced the existing carpet and underlay in living areas and the bedrooms of their unit with porcelain tiles. The downstairs neighbour complained to the body corporate that this resulted in frequent and disruptive noise transference and a serious loss of amenity for him.

The by-laws for the scheme included the following:

> A proprietor or occupier of a lot shall not upon a parcel create any noise likely to interfere with the peaceful enjoyment of the proprietor or occupier of another lot or of any person lawfully using common property.

In addition to the by-law, s 167 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 provides as follows:

> 167 Nuisances
> The occupier of a lot included in a community titles scheme must not use, or permit the use of, the lot or the common property in a way that —
> (a) causes a nuisance or hazard; or
> (b) interferes unreasonably with the use or enjoyment of another lot included in the scheme; or
> (c) interferes unreasonably with the use or enjoyment of the common property by a person who is lawfully on the common property.

The body corporate issued the owner with a breach notice — informing them that they were contravening the relevant by-law because of the tiles.

When the owner failed to remedy the breach, the body corporate sought an order that the lot owner replace the tiles with carpet and underlay, so that the flooring was restored to its original “as built” construction.

Evidence before the adjudicator included a report from acoustic engineers who were engaged to assess the acoustic impact resulting from the installation of the new floor on the downstairs neighbour. They found that the impact insulation rating of the new floor did not meet the lowest rating of the AAAC’s floor rating system of 2 stars. The acoustic engineers were of the opinion that the new tile floor had no acoustic underlay between the tiles and concrete slab.

The downstairs neighbour also provided audio recordings taken from his unit of the noise. He claimed that he suffered disturbed sleep as a result of the noise and was forced to leave his unit.

The owner countered that the entire building was badly insulated and as a result, all sounds in other units such as doors being opened and closed, toilets flushing and water taps turning on and off, could be heard in other units.

The owner also argued that halfway through the construction of the new flooring, they consulted with the body corporate. They then engaged a licensed tiler who laid a rubber-based adhesive and installed bond breaker joints at the junctions between the walls and tiles.

Further, in the absence of specific by-laws relating to installation of hard flooring in the unit, they believed it was only necessary to comply with the original building approval or development decision notice which dated back to 16 April 1995. Additionally they sought to minimise any noise transference in a number of ways, including putting floor protectors under furniture, walking barefoot and putting away baby toys that were likely to cause noise.

Held: for the body corporate.

1. Applying the test for nuisance under s 167 of the Act developed by President Wilson in Norbury v Hogan [2010] QCAT (Unreported, Application Number KA007-09, 13 May 2010), it needed to be demonstrated that the noise:

1. existed
2. emanated from the relevant unit, and
3. was of such volume and frequency that it would interfere unreasonably with a resident of ordinary sensitivity.

2. In determining whether a nuisance existed, apartment owners are entitled to use their property in an ordinary manner and the level of noise that is reasonable in a community living environment, may well be higher than would be expected in a detached house, for example. Further, what is relevant is not just what a complainant has experienced, but rather an objective standard of what might be considered unreasonable by an ordinary person in the same circumstances.

3. Having regard to submissions of the parties and the acoustic engineers' report, the owner has breached s 167 of the Act. They are required to install carpet and underlay over the tiles, or replace the tiles with carpet and underlay. Alternatively, the tiles could be replaced with new tiles laid over an appropriate acoustic membrane.

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

Before: R Miskinis, Adjudicator

Editorial comment: This decision demonstrates the effectiveness of providing detailed evidence in support of a body corporate's application before an adjudicator. It was difficult for the lot owner to dispute the acoustic engineers' report and the audio recordings of the noise provided by the downstairs owner. The body corporate also provided copies of the breach notice sent to the lot owner, letters sent to the lot owners by the body corporate, detailed diary entries of when the noise occurred.

The decision also illustrates the powers of the adjudicator — the lot owner was ordered to put back the carpet and underlay or replace the tiles.

R Miskinis, Adjudicator:

ORDERS MADE:

I hereby order that within three months of the date of this order, the owners of lot 3 are to take appropriate action to attenuate the transference of noise through the floor of lot 3, and in particular, those areas where porcelain tiles were laid in September 2014.

I further order that this may be achieved by installation of carpet and underlay over the tiles, or replacement of the tiles with carpet and underlay. Alternatively, the tiles could be replaced with new tiles laid over an appropriate acoustic membrane.

R Miskinis, Adjudicator:

Introduction

[1] This is an application by the body corporate for 18 Kingsford Street, seeking the following outcome:

> To have the tiles in unit 3 replaced with carpet and underlay such that the flooring is restored to its original "as built" construction of carpet with underlay in bedrooms and living areas in line with discussion in Palmer Acoustic Field Impact Insulation Test report.

Jurisdiction

[2] 18 Kingsford Street consists of 5 lots in a residential building. It was created under a building unit plan of subdivision and is governed by the Act and the Standard Module.

[3] This is a dispute between a lot owner and the body corporate and therefore falls within the legislative dispute resolution provisions.[1] Section 276(1) of the Act provides that an adjudicator may make an order that is just and equitable in the circumstances to resolve a dispute in the context of a community titles scheme about a claimed or anticipated contravention of the Act.

Overview of Dispute

[4] The applicant body corporate says that in September 2014, the owner of lot 3 arranged to replace carpet and underlay in living areas and bedrooms with porcelain tiles. The applicant further states that this has resulted in frequent and disruptive noise transference to lot 2 and a serious loss of amenity for the occupiers of lot 2.

[5] Palmer Acoustics, Acoustic Engineers, were engaged to assess the acoustic impact resulting from the replacement of carpet with tiles in lot 3. Palmer Acoustics found that the impact insulation rating of the new floor does not meet the lowest rating of the AAAC's floor rating system of 2 stars. Three stars is considered by the acoustic industry to be the bare minimum level of floor impact insulation. The Acoustic engineers have stated that if carpet and underlay were installed, they would expect that the floor would have a 5 to 6 star floor impact insulation rating.

> A proprietor or occupier of a lot shall not upon a parcel create any noise likely to interfere with the peaceful enjoyment of the proprietor or occupier of another lot or of any person lawfully using common property.

[7] The applicant says the significant decline in flooring acoustic properties brought about by this work creates noise that disturbs the peaceful enjoyment of lot 2, in contravention of the by-law. The applicant seeks an order that the owners of lot 3 replace the recently laid porcelain tiles with carpet and underlay, so that the flooring is restored to its original "as built" construction of carpet with underlay in bedrooms and living areas.

[8] In support of the application, the body corporate has provided a copy of a Form 10 — "Notice of Continuing Contravention of a Body Corporate By-law" dated 23 April 2015, which states:

Take notice that the complainant has reasonable grounds to believe that you are contravening the following by-law:

> By-Law 1. Noise — a proprietor or occupier of a lot shall not upon the parcel create any noise likely to interfere with the peaceful enjoyment of the proprietor or occupier of another lot or any person lawfully using the common property.

[9] Also attached to the application were the following:

- letters to the owners of lot 3 dated 9 October 2014, 5 February 2015, 27 February 2015, 25 August 2015 and 26 October 2015;
- comprehensive diary entries containing details of noise emanating from lot 3 during the period 16 August 2014 to 3 April 2015; and
- Test Report by Palmer Acoustics dated 25 August 2015.

[10] The Test Report states that Palmer Acoustics performed field impact isolation tests at Unit 3 on the newly laid tile floor in the living room and two bedrooms. Palmer Acoustics is of the view that the new tile floor has no acoustic underlay between the tiles and concrete slab. The unit 2 living and bedroom areas are identical to, and directly beneath, the unit 3 living and bedroom areas. The tile floor in the living room and bedrooms 1 and 2 of unit 3 were tapped in two different orientations with the receiving spaces sound measurements averaged over a 1 minute period per test orientation.

[11] Results of testing were as follows:

Test System	LnTw	CI	LnTw + CI
Test 1 — Tile Floor (Living area)	75	−12	63
Test 2 — Original kitchen Tile Floor	78	−13	65
Test 3 — Tile Floor (Bedrooom 1)	79	−12	67
Test 4 — Tile Floor (Master bedroom)	80	−13	67

LnTw and CI are terms used in the Building Code of Australia (BCA). LnTw is a weighted room noise level and a lower number represents better performance.

[12] The report states:

> The original floor covering in the living area and two bedroom areas was carpet with underlay. The owner of unit 3 has recently changed the carpeted areas to tiled floor. The newly laid tile floor has an impact rating of LnTw of 75–80 with a CI of −12 to −13. Under the Association of Australian Acoustical Consultants, "AAAC Guidelines for Apartment and Townhouse Acoustic Rating 2010", this represents less than a 2 star level of performance. As such, impact noises from Unit 3 will be very clearly audible and can be considered to be intrusive and disruptive to the acoustic amenity of unit 2.
> We note that the current BCA at this time allows an impact rating of up to LnTw + CI of 62. This is a very low level of amenity and never recommended by our office or any members of the Association of Australian Acoustical Consultants (AAAC). The usually recommended minimum rating (3 star) is an LnTw of not more than 55. Our tests show levels 20–25 dB over the AAAC 3 Star limit. The levels measured exceed the BCA limit by 1 to 5 dB.

The tests show performance close to the level of performance that we would expect from a bare slab and indicates that no impact insulation layer has been installed under the tiles.

From our experience the performance of soft flooring carpet with underlay is expected to be LnTw <35. A worn carpet is still expected to achieve LnTw<45. When changing from a soft floor to hard floor without a high quality acoustic underlay, the floor impact insulation rating will be significantly degraded.

This is a body corporate matter in which, by virtue of poor acoustic isolation of the floor system the owner of the upper level apartment is allowing a construction that affects the peaceful enjoyment of the occupants in the lower unit 2. The by-law requires that an occupier must not create any noise likely to interfere with the peaceful enjoyment of a person lawfully on another lot or common property.

Submissions

[13] In accordance with section 243(2)(a) of the Act, submissions were invited from all lot owners including the owners of lot 3 and the owner of lot 2.

[14] A submission was made on behalf of the owners of lot 3, by their daughter who resides in the lot. She states that the entire building is badly insulated and as a result, all sounds in other units such as doors being opened and closed, toilets flushing and water taps turning on and off, can be heard in other units. As proof of this, the occupier of lot 3 has recorded all noises that occurred during a 2 week period in May 2015. She also states that the common area above lot 3 is tiled with terracotta tiles and it is possible to hear people using that area.

[15] The occupier of lot 3 also states that the owner of lot 2 had been complaining about noise since he moved into the scheme in 2013. Further, the original tiles in the kitchen, bathrooms and part of the dining room complied with the requirements of the Building Code of Australia (BCA) when the building was first constructed.

[16] The occupants of lot 3 also state that the noises complained about are the type of noises that are to be expected when living in a unit block. They also believe that they are being discriminated against because they have a baby and the owner of lot 2 has previously requested that lot 3 not be rented to a family. In August 2014 they moved back into lot 3 and the occupant of lot 2 began complaining about noise from lot 3, particularly the noise of the crying baby. They have met with the Brisbane City Council and Auchenflower Police and have been advised that there has never been a formal noise complaint raised for this address.

[17] They state that half of the living area had already been tiled during construction and before tiling the other half of the floor, they consulted with the body corporate and the body corporate manager. They then engaged a licensed tiler who laid a rubber-based adhesive and installed bond breaker joints at the junctions between the walls and tiles. In the absence of specific by-laws relating to installation of hard flooring in the unit, they believe it was only necessary to comply with the original building approval or development decision notice which dates back to 16 April 1995. Further, they state that they have sought to minimise any noise transference in a number of ways, including putting floor protectors under furniture, walking barefoot and putting away baby toys that are likely to cause noise.

[18] The owner of lot 2 made submissions in response. He says that the issue first arose in August 2014 when the owners' daughter and son in law contacted the body corporate manager, advising of their intention to tile the remainder of their unit (living area and both bedrooms). The body corporate manager advised that there were potential issues associated with noise transference and that "a qualified contractor should be able to supply you with certification that they have applied a sound barrier to comply with these standards".

[19] The tiling work went ahead soon afterwards but after completion, it became obvious that a noise insulating membrane had not been laid below the tiles. Since that time the amenity of unit 2 has been compromised with impact noise such a footsteps, items being dropped, vacuum cleaners and brooms being audible in lot 2. He further states that after the tiles were laid, his sleep would be disturbed on average 5 out of 7 nights, whereas previously, there were no occurrences of interrupted sleep. Testing by Acoustic Engineers shows that the newly laid tile floor has an impact rating of LnTw of 75–80, when a level of 55 is considered the absolute recommended maximum noise level. Where floors are covered with carpet and underlay, the sound impact rating would be in the vicinity of 35.

[20] The owner of lot 2 also disputes that the building is badly insulated and says the noise nuisance is wholly attributable to the tiles that have been laid without an acoustic membrane. He does not have an issue with airborne noise transference e.g. a baby crying as most of the noise transferred from unit 3 to unit 2 is impact noise through the floor. The occupants did consult with the body corporate manager prior to tiling and were told that "A qualified contractor should be able to supply you with certification that they have applied a sound barrier to comply these standards". However this advice was ignored and as a result, the floor does not meet AAAC or even the much lower BCA standards, resulting in the contravention of the body corporate's noise by-law. Further, this dispute concerns noise nuisance and not whether the tiler has complied with building regulations or QBCC requirements. Rubber based adhesives are not considered to provide an effective noise barrier and there is no evidence that porcelain tiles transfer less noise than terracotta or ceramic tiles. The new tiles in the bedrooms yield worse results than the original tiles in the kitchen. He eventually moved out of his unit after multiple nights of interrupted sleep.

Analysis

[21] The issues for consideration in this application are (i) the level of noise transference occurring between Lots 3 and 2; (ii) whether this noise amounts to a nuisance or unreasonable interference under section 167 of the Act; and (iii) if there is a nuisance, what is required to rectify that nuisance.

[22] The by-laws for the scheme include the following by-law:

> A proprietor or occupier of a lot shall not upon a parcel create any noise likely to interfere with the peaceful enjoyment of the proprietor or occupier of another lot or of any person lawfully using common property.

[23] In addition to the by-law section 167 of the Act provides as follows:

>
> The occupier of a lot included in a community titles scheme must not use, or permit the use of, the lot or the common property in a way that—
> > (a) causes a nuisance or hazard; or
> > (b) interferes unreasonably with the use or enjoyment of another lot included in the scheme; or
> > (c) interferes unreasonably with the use or enjoyment of the common property by a person who is lawfully on the common property.

Test for nuisance

[24] The Queensland Civil and Administrative Tribunal (QCAT) has considered the test for nuisance under section 167 of the Act. In his decision,[2] President Wilson said [at paragraphs 13 to 15]:

> "In the absence of a statutory definition it is useful to consider how the common law has construed the phrase 'interferes unreasonably'. Under the common law, a private nuisance is an unlawful and unreasonable interference with an occupier's use and enjoyment of land or of some right over, or in connection with it…
> What is considered unreasonable depends on the prevailing circumstances in each case but the nuisance, these decisions show, needs to be an inconvenience that materially interferes with the ordinary notions of a 'plain and sober' person, and not merely the 'elegant or dainty' habits of the complainant….
>
> The nuisance must result in a substantial degree of interference according to what are considered reasonable standards for the enjoyment of those premises…"

[25] President Wilson went on to say [at paragraphs 17]:

> "In residential areas, the cases show, the principle of 'give and take, live and let live' is customarily applied so that the 'ordinary and accustomed' use of premises will not be considered a nuisance, even if some inconvenience to a neighbour is caused."

[26] In determining whether a nuisance existed, President Wilson referred [paragraph 28] to the need to establish whether the activity complained of was "… of such volume or frequency that it would interfere unreasonably with the life of another lot owner of ordinary sensitivity." Applying this test to the circumstances of this case, I need to determine the following: that the noise complained of exists; that the noise emanates from Lot 3; and is of such volume and frequency that it would interfere unreasonably with a resident of ordinary sensitivity.

[27] Occupants in a community titles scheme are entitled to use their property in an ordinary manner and the level of noise that is reasonable in a community living environment, particularly an apartment, may well be higher than would be expected in a detached house, for example. What is relevant is not just what a complainant has experienced, but rather an objective standard of what might be considered unreasonable by an ordinary person in the same circumstances.

[28] Having regard to submissions of the parties and the acoustic engineer's report, I am satisfied that the owner of lot 2 has experienced levels of noise transference from the lot above which has interfered with the enjoyment of his lot. In particular, I note that testing by the acoustic engineer revealed that the newly laid tile floor in lot 3 above, has an impact rating of LnTw of 75–80 with a CI of −12 to −13. As such, impact noises from Unit 3 would be very clearly audible and can be considered to be intrusive and disruptive to the acoustic amenity of unit 2.

[29] I also note that testing in the unit 3 bedrooms produced readings of LnTw 79 & LnTw 80, with a LnTw + CI of 67. The Building Code of Australia (BCA) requires that impact sound insulation requirements for floors separating dwellings should be not more than LnTw + CI 62. The lower the rating, the better the performance of the floor in terms of impact sound insulation. The BCA criteria are very much a minimum standard and that even when the standard is met, there will be poor levels of sound insulation. I have also had regard to the AAAC's Acoustical Star Rating for Apartment and Townhouses[3] which can be seen as complementing the minimum BCA requirements with the acoustic standards that may be expected by occupiers of different standards of accommodation. In regard to the impact isolation of floors between tenancies, the guide refers to minimum ratings of equal to or less than LnTw 65 in a 2 star building, and with a sliding scale up to 40 in a 6 star building.

[30] It is evident from the testing conducted by Palmer Acoustics that the noise transference between Lots 3 and 2 fails to meet the BCA minimum standard and also exceeds the maximum level for a 2-star building. The Acoustic engineer states at page 3 of his report, that "The usually recommended minimum rating (3 star) is an LnTw of not more than 55. Our tests show levels 20–25dB over the AAAC 3 Star limit. The levels measured exceed the BCA limit by 1 to 5 dB."

[31] In a previous adjudication an L'n,w result of 70 was found by the adjudicator to be "an extremely poor result"[4] . That finding was noted as comparison in a subsequent decision in which the adjudicator found that the L'n,w rating of 71 demonstrated in their case was an even poorer result[5] .

[32] It is not disputed that the owners of lot 3 replaced existing carpet with tiles. The evidence indicates that there was no proper acoustic insulation installed below the tiles, and as a result, this has created the noise nuisance experienced by the owner of lot 2. All occupiers have an obligation not to use, or allow the use of, their lot in a manner that would unreasonably interfere with their neighbours. On the basis of objective evidence, I am of the view that there is noise transference occurring between Lots 3 and 2. I further find that the level of noise transference is above industry acceptable levels. I further find that this noise transference amounts to an unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of lot 2. Finally, I accept that this interference has arisen because the respondents replaced existing carpet with uninsulated, or inadequately insulated hard flooring.

[33] It follows then, that I consider the respondents have, albeit not necessarily intentionally, breached section 167 of the Act. The question is what action should be taken to rectify this. The outcome sought by the applicant is to have the tiles in unit 3 replaced with carpet and underlay such that the flooring is restored to its original "as built" construction of carpet with underlay in bedrooms and living areas

[34] I am of the view that the owners of lot 3 should, within three months of the date of this order, take appropriate action to attenuate the noise transference through the floor from lot 3 to lot 2. This could be achieved by installation of carpet and underlay over the tiles, or replacement of the tiles with carpet and underlay. Alternatively, the tiles could be replaced with new tiles laid over an appropriate acoustic membrane.

Queensland Body Corporate and Community Management Commissioner — Adjudicators Orders

Decision delivered on 21 April 2016

Conveyancing — Body corporate — Powers of attorney — Where body corporate manager brought an application for an interim order against the body corporate challenging the validity of a motion which was purportedly passed at the annual general meeting — Where motion approved the engagement of an alternative body corporate manager — Where the alternative body corporate manager was elected due to the votes exercised by an individual pursuant to powers of attorney — Whether votes exercised were invalid because individual was not entered on the body corporate's roll as being the representative of the 27 lots he purported to vote for — Whether the appointment of a power of attorney and a proxy are analogous — Whether individual had circumvented the proxy farming restrictions — Accommodation Module: s 81, 105 and 107(3)(f)(i).

The body corporate managers (SSKB) of a 108 lot strata scheme brought an application for an interim order against the body corporate challenging the validity of a motion which was purportedly passed at the annual general meeting.

The motion was concerned with the election of a body corporate manager for the scheme. Three alternative body corporate managers were presented, including the re-election of SSKB.

Prior to the AGM, Mr Nagy was appointed power of attorney by owners of 27 of the lots. Mr Nagy gave the secretary a copy of the powers of attorney prior to the meeting. The powers of attorney were in identical terms and appointed Mr Nagy to, on behalf of each principal, do anything the principal may lawfully authorise an attorney to do for the lot in relation to the AGM, including but not limited to obtaining all relevant information relating to the AGM, executing and delivering the documents for the AGM, and voting on behalf of the principal.

One of the alternative body corporate managers was elected due to the votes exercised by Mr Nagy pursuant to the powers of attorney.

SSKB argued that the votes exercised by Mr Nagy were invalid for the following reasons:

Non-compliance with s 81 of the Accommodation Module

Mr Nagy was not entered on the body corporate's roll of lot owners as being the representative of the 27 lots he purported to vote for. SSKB argued that he therefore did not comply with the requirements of s 81 of the Accommodation Module. SSKB submitted that it is clear as per s81(1)(a), that in order for an individual to be considered a voter, that individual must have had its name entered on the body corporate's roll.

SSKB also submitted that Mr Nagy failed to give the secretary a copy of the powers of attorney prior to the AGM with sufficient time for the secretary to alter the roll to enter Mr Nagy's name as representative for all the lots over which he held a power of attorney. It was further argued that while s 81(3)(a) does not provide a time for provision of any instrument of appointment, when it is read in conjunction with s 81(1)(a), the only possible conclusion that may be reached is that the relevant information must be given prior to a meeting.

Circumvention of proxy provisions

Alternatively SSKB argued, that on the basis of the decision in Q1 [2011] QBCCMCmr 323, despite a representative ostensibly satisfying the requirements of s 81 of the Accommodation Module, that representative's votes could be invalidated on the basis that the representative had acted in circumvention of other legislative voting requirements.

SSKB submitted that the powers of attorney were obtained solely to exercise votes on the lot owners' behalf at the meeting and therefore the limitations imposed on the right to vote by proxy should be imposed as follows:

a) s 105 of the Accommodation Module limits the maximum amount of votes by proxy that one person may exercise to 10% of the number of lots in scheme, and
b) s 107(3)(f)(i) prohibits voting by proxy on a motion approving the engagement of a body corporate manager.

Held: for the body corporate. SSKB's application for interim orders dismissed.

Whether there has been non-compliance with s 81 of the Accommodation Module

1. There is no requirement under the Accommodation Module that the powers of attorney be provided by a certain time, and no such requirement can be inferred from the wording of the Module when read as a whole.

2. The purpose of requiring a representative to give the document purporting to give them authority to vote is so that the chairperson can ascertain whether the person has genuinely been appointed by the owner and so that the body corporate knows where to send notices to (on the authority of the Q1 decision).

Whether Mr Nagy had circumvented the proxy provisions

3. The powers of attorney the subject of this application were not limited to voting. The powers of attorney had the effect of Mr Nagy standing in the shoes of the owner for body corporate matters for a period of time. This falls squarely within the definition of a representative, rather than a proxy (on the authority of the Q1 decision).

4. . The interpretation sought by SSKB suggested that the appointment of a power of attorney and a proxy are analogous. They are not; the two relationships are entirely different and are intended to be treated differently, as is evident by the fact that they are dealt with by the Accommodation Module separately.

Before: M A Schmidt, Adjudicator

Editorial comment: This decision confirms that the use of powers of attorney in voting at an annual general meeting in Queensland, is a valid method of lot owners exercising their vote, and there is no limit on the number of powers of attorney that may be used for a meeting. This stands in contrast to the restrictions placed on the use of proxies at general meetings.

M A Schmidt, Adjudicator:

INTERIM ORDERS MADE:

1. I hereby order that the application for interim orders is dismissed.

M A Schmidt, Adjudicator:

Introduction

[1] This application is brought by Stewart Silver King and Burns (Brisbane) Pty Ltd (SSKB), the current body corporate managers, against the body corporate, challenging the validity of Motion 9 which was purportedly passed at the annual general meeting (AGM) on 16 March 2016. SSKB argue that the votes cast by Mr Mario Nagy at the AGM are invalid. As a result, SSKB argue that Alternative A of Motion 9 considered at the AGM should be deemed to have passed.

[2] SSKB seek an interim order restraining the body corporate from implementing or in any way acting upon the resolution purportedly passed pursuant to Motion 9 until the application for final orders is determined.

[3] In deciding whether or not to grant an interim order it is appropriate for me to consider:

a. Whether the applicant has raised any serious legal questions for me to determine.
b. Whether inconvenience likely to result from an interim order is outweighed by the potential detriment if the order is not granted.

Overview

The lead up to the dispute

[4] “Willahra Tower” CTS 30990 is a community titles scheme governed by the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (the Act) and the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 2008 (Accommodation Module). There are 108 lots in the scheme, which is situated in Brisbane City.

[5] SSKB states that it was engaged by the body corporate as its body corporate manager at the AGM on 24 April 2015. The management agreement subsequently entered into was to run until 23 April 2016.

[6] A motion with alternatives to appoint a body corporate manager was included in the Notice of Meeting for the March 2016 AGM in the following terms:

> THAT the Body Corporate enters into a three year administration agreement with one of the following alternatives and that two members of the Committee execute the agreement under the common seal on behalf of the Body Corporate….
> Alternative A — SSKB
> SSKB administration agreement as circulated with the meeting material, which includes:
> i. Commencing on 24 April 2016

ii. With a secretarial fee of $110.00 per lot per annum (excluding GST) and a disbursement fee of $60.—per lot per annum (excluding GST).

Alternative B — Archers

Archers administration agreement as circulated with the meeting material which includes:

i. Commencing on 24 April 2016
ii. With a secretarial fee of $130.00 per lot per annum (excluding GST) and disbursements are to be paid for per item (excluding GST).

Alternative C — Body Corporate Services

i. With a secretarial fee of $105.00 per lot per annum (excluding GST) and a disbursement fee of $60.00 per lot per annum (excluding GST),

[7] In the evening prior to the March 2016 AGM, SSKB states Mr Nagy presented 27 documents to SSKB (on behalf of the secretary) entitled “Power of Attorney”. Each of these documents had been signed by a lot owner. As a result, Mr Nagy purported to be the Attorney for each lot owner that had signed such a document, being Lots 8, 11, 12, 13, 15, 20, 21, 26, 27, 29, 31, 34, 36, 37, 39, 40, 41, 47, 50, 51, 54, 63, 66, 83, 85, 88, and 104. In addition to these lots, Nagy held a power of attorney document signed by an unfinancial lot owner.

[8] The committee submits that around 7 March 2016, Mr Nagy was appointed power of attorney by owners of some 27 Lots. The powers of attorney were in identical terms and appointed Mr Nagy to, on behalf of each principal, do anything the principal may lawfully authorise an attorney to do for the lot in relation to the AGM, including but not limited to obtaining all relevant information relating to the AGM, executing and delivering the documents for the AGM, and voting on behalf of the principal.

[9] The committee further submits that around 8 March 2016, 22 of the 27 powers of attorney were provided to SSKB (on behalf of the secretary). The remaining 5 powers of attorney were provided to SSKB at 12 noon on 16 March 2016.

[10] At the AGM, the committee submits that some lot owners stated that the quotes were not comparable because the proposals made by SSKB and Archers were for three years and the proposal by Body Corporate Services (BCS) was one year. In response, SSKB sought to amend its proposal to instead be engaged for a one-year agreement (compared to the three-year agreement contained in Motion 9). The lot owners present agreed to amend Motion 9 accordingly.

[11] Subsequently, the caretaking service contractor, Wenmain Zhong (also known as Will Zong) advised those present that he had contacted Archers The Strata Professionals (Archers) and confirmed that their proposal was to be amended to a one year agreement as well. The lot owners present agreed to amend Motion 9 accordingly.

[12] Motion 9 was therefore considered with the following alternatives:

a) SSKB to be engaged for one year beginning on 24 April 2016 at a cost of $110.00 per lot per annum plus disbursements of $60.00 per lot per annum;
b) Archers to be engaged for one year beginning on 24 April 2016 at a cost of $130.00 per lot per annum plus disbursements paid per item; and
c) BCS to be engaged for one year beginning on 24 April 2016 at a cost of $105.00 per lot per annum plus disbursements of $60.00 per annum.

[13] Motion 9, in its amended form, was then considered by the body corporate. The motion passed by 43 votes in favour and four votes against.[1] Alternative B (the appointment of Archers) was carried with 33 votes, alternative A (the appointment of SSKB) had 10 votes in favour and Alternative C (the appointment of BCS) had no votes in favour.

[14] SSKB states that all of Mr Nagy’s votes (including the 26 votes purportedly made pursuant to the powers of attorney) were in favour of the motion and in favour of alternative B. SSKB argues that if the votes exercised by Mr Nagy pursuant to powers of attorney are invalid, the motion would have passed as follows:

a) Motion 9 as a whole would have been carried with 16 votes in favour and 4 against;

b) Alternative A would have been carried with 10 votes in favour (Alternative B received 6 votes in favour and Alternative C no votes).

Procedure and jurisdiction

[15] This is a dispute about alleged contraventions of the legislation that falls within the dispute resolution provisions of the legislation[2] .

[16] An adjudicator may make an order that is just and equitable in the circumstances to resolve a dispute about a claimed or anticipated contravention of the Act or the CMS, or the exercise of rights or powers or performance of duties under the Act or the CMS.[3] An order may require a person to act, or prohibit a person from acting, in a way stated. An order may contain ancillary and consequential provisions the adjudicator considers necessary or appropriate.[4]

[17] In particular, an adjudicator may make an interim order if satisfied, on reasonable grounds, that one is necessary because of the nature or urgency of the circumstances.[5]

[18] At this time, I am concerned only with the application for an interim order and the threshold issue of whether interim orders are warranted. An interim order will not be granted unless it is necessary due to the nature or urgency of the circumstances to which the application relates.[6] Any order granted must be just and equitable in the circumstances.[7]

[19] It is not appropriate to consider the substantive issues in the application in detail at this time. To determine whether it is just and equitable to grant interim relief, however, it is relevant to briefly consider the issues raised in the application. An adjudicator must be satisfied that the application raises serious questions and that the balance of convenience between the parties justifies injunctive relief.

[20] I provided Mario Nagy, Archers (the alternate body corporate manager engaged pursuant to the resolution purportedly passed on Motion 9), and the committee with an opportunity to make a written submission in response to the application for an interim order. A submission was made by the committee.

[21] I have decided the interim application based on the written material provided.

Analysis

Urgency?

[22] In order to make an interim order, an adjudicator must be satisfied that one is necessary because of the nature or urgency of the circumstances to which the application relates.

[23] SSKB states that its engagement as body corporate manager expires on 23 April 2016. Given the impending date for the expiry of SSKB's management agreement, SSKB submits that urgent circumstances exist. The committee submits that it appreciates the purported urgency of the application but says that the urgency only arises from SSKB's conduct in misconceiving the potential outcome of the application. The committee argues SSKB simply cannot obtain an order that it be appointed body corporate manager. The committee argues that Mr Nagy was a voter and his votes are valid and there is no basis for invalidating them. However, even if the committee is unsuccessful on that point and Mr Nagy's votes are invalidated, then there is no quorum formed and the meeting held on 16 March 2015 is a nullity and none of the motions can be passed or deemed to have been passed.

[24] The committee concludes that the urgency of the application is solely due to SSKB's misconception of the application and accordingly, should not be a consideration for granting an interim order.

[25] Given that the current engagement of SSKB expires on 23 April 2016 and there is a dispute as to whether Archers was validly appointed at the AGM, I am satisfied that urgent circumstances exist for the purpose of considering whether an interim order is warranted.

Serious Issue?

[26] SSKB argues that Nagy did not comply with the requirements of section 81 of the Accommodation Module to be validly appointed as the representative of lot owners for which he purported to exercise votes pursuant to powers of attorney. Alternatively, and in accordance with the decision of Q1[8] , Mr Nagy circumvented the requirements of the legislation by exercising votes via powers of attorney in circumstances where he would otherwise have been prohibited from exercising those same votes by a properly obtained proxy. As a result, it is argued any votes exercised pursuant to various powers of attorney by Mr Nagy at the March 2016 AGM should be invalidated.

[27] The committee submits that there is no genuine legal question to be decided because the votes made by Mr Nagy were valid votes because the use of powers of attorney in voting is a valid method of lot owners exercising their vote and there is no limit on the number of powers of attorney that may be used for a meeting. In the alternative, the committee submits that even if the votes of Mr Nagy are invalid, the orders sought cannot be made, because if the votes of Mr Nagy are invalid, then only 20 voters were present at the March 2016 AGM which, for the 105 lot Scheme, is not at least 25% of the voters, which is required to make a quorum and as a result, the meeting is a nullity.

[28] The committee further submits that the application is frivolous, vexatious, misconceived and otherwise constitutes an abuse of process. Further, that the application is otiose in circumstances where the relief sought cannot be granted.

Non-compliance with section 81

[29] By virtue of section 81(1)(a) of the Accommodation Module, SSKB argue it is clear, that in order for an individual to be considered a voter, that individual must have had its name entered on the body corporate's roll of lot owners.

[30] In the present case, Mr Nagy was not entered on the body corporate's roll as being the representative of the 27 lots he purported to vote for. As a result, SSKB claims he cannot be considered a 'voter' for 26 of the votes that he cast and those votes cast by Nagy as a representative pursuant to the powers of attorney must be declared invalid.

[31] SSKB also submit that Mr Nagy failed to give the secretary a copy of the powers of attorney prior to the March 2016 AGM with sufficient time for the secretary to alter the roll to enter Mr Nagy's name as representative for all the lots over which he held a power of attorney. Whilst section 81(3)(a) does not provide a time for provision of any instrument of appointment, when it is read in conjunction with section 81(1)(a), the only possible conclusion that may be reached is that the relevant information must be given prior to a meeting. Otherwise, a person may be able to be entered on the roll of lot owners as a representative without authority and vote on motions without any proper authority being given to the body corporate. In the present case, Mr Nagy did not present the powers of attorney to the secretary with sufficient time to enter the information into the body corporate's roll prior to the March 2016 AGM. As a result, it follows that Mr Nagy did not provide the powers of attorney to the secretary in accordance with section 81(3)(a) of the Accommodation Module.

[32] The committee submits that Mr Nagy held a power of attorney for each of the lots. Section 81(2)(b)(i) of the Accommodation Module specifically contemplates powers of attorneys and provides that a person acting under a power of attorney is a representative. There are limited exclusions, none of which apply in the present case. Accordingly, Mr Nagy is a representative of the owners of the Lots. Mr Nagy has given the secretary a copy of the instrument under which he derives the representative capacity, in compliance with section 81(3)(a) of the Accommodation Module.

[33] The committee acknowledges Mr Nagy's name was not entered on the body corporate roll as representative for each of the owners of the Lots. The committee submits that this does not negate Mr Nagy's status as a voter because the failure for Mr Nagy's name to be entered on the roll as representative for each of the owners of the Lots is entirely due to the delay or inaction of SSKB. 22 of the 27 powers of attorney were provided to SSKB around 8 March 2016 (not the evening before the meeting, as suggested by SSKB). The provision of the powers of attorney eight days prior to the meeting provided more than sufficient time for the applicant to enter Mr Nagy's name on the roll as representative. Despite this, SSKB failed to do so and cannot now rely on its own delay or inaction to invalidate votes that were cast under the powers of attorney. The remaining 5 powers of attorney were provided to SSKB at 12 noon on 16 March 2016, 4 hours prior to the meeting. In circumstances where the roll is maintained electronically, the committee submits that even this period of time is sufficient to enable SSKB to update the roll to include Mr Nagy's name. Further, or in the alternative, strict compliance with the Accommodation Module is not necessary and technical irregularities are permitted, as demonstrated in the decision of Crown Towers[9] , Admiralty Towers II[10] and Q1[11] . Mr Nagy's name not being listed on the roll as representative for each of the Lot owners should not invalidate the votes in circumstances where:

> i. Substantial compliance with the process was followed whereby Mr Nagy provided the powers of attorney to SSKB (on behalf of the secretary);
> ii. Non-compliance was due to the actions of SSKB and outside the control of Mr Nagy;
> iii. There is no suggestion that Mr Nagy was not the authorised representative of the owners of the Lots;
> iv. Public inconvenience would be the result of the invalidation of the votes because it would require an EGM to be called; and > v. The outcome of appointing SSKB as body corporate manager would be unjust in circumstances where the relationship between SSKB and the body corporate has broken down irrevocably and SSKB is effectively attempting to force a contractual relationship with the body corporate.

[34] There is no requirement under the Accommodation Module to provide the powers of attorney by a certain time, and no such requirement can be inferred from the wording of the Module when read as a whole. The purpose of requiring a representative to give the document purporting to give them authority to vote is so that the chairperson can ascertain whether the person has genuinely been appointed by the owner and so that the body corporate knows where to send notices to.[12]

[35] I find the submission from the committee quite persuasive on the issue of alleged non-compliance with section 81 of the Accommodation Module. I do not consider that a serious issue has been raised in this regard.

Circumvention of proxy provisions

[36] On the basis of the decision in Q1, SSKB argues, despite a representative ostensibly satisfying the requirements of section 81 of the Accommodation Module, that representative's votes could be invalidated on the basis that the representative had acted in circumvention of other legislative voting requirements.

[37] It does not make sense, states SSKB, that Mr Nagy could gain the right to vote for 26 different lot owners via a power of attorney, without the limitations imposed on the right to vote by proxy, in circumstances where:

> a) Section 105 of the Accommodation Module limits the maximum amount of votes by proxy that one person may exercise to 10% of the number of lots in scheme; and > b) In any event, section 107(3)(f)(i) prohibits voting by proxy on a motion approving the engagement of a body corporate manager.

Therefore, Nagy would have been prevented from exercising any votes by proxy on Motion 9 at the March 2016 AGM.

[38] SSKB submits it is clear that the powers of attorney were obtained for the sole purpose of Mr Nagy exercising votes on lot owner's behalf at the March 2016 AGM as the powers of attorney relevantly provide:

> The Principal appoints Mario Nagy of 61/540 Queens Street, Brisbane QLD 4000 to be the Attorney of the Principal from the date of this deed up to and including 30 April 2016 to do in the name of the Principal and on its behalf anything the Principal may lawfully authorise an Attorney to do for Lot _ of Wilahra Tower in relation to the Annual General Meeting ("AGM") of Wilahra Tower CTS 30990, which is to be held on 16 March 2016 or a later date as required, including but not limited to, obtaining all relevant information of the AGM, executing and delivering the documents for the AGM and voting on behalf of the Principal."

[39] Accordingly, SSKB submits that the practical effect of the powers of attorney is that they circumvent the requirements for the appointment and use of proxies in voting at general meetings in accordance with the Accommodation Module.

[40] The committee submits that the Q1 decision and the present case are distinguishable, specifically, the documents appointing Mr Jones were not powers of attorney and were limited to authorising Mr Jones to vote at the AGM.

[41] The powers of attorney the subject of this application are not limited to voting. The powers of attorney have the effect of Mr Nagy standing in the shoes of the owner for body corporate matters for a period of time, which is evident in Mr Nagy having the ability to obtain relevant information on behalf of the principal and to do anything in relation to the AGM, which reasonably includes liaising with the body corporate and asking questions in relation to the proposed motions. By being able to liaise with the body corporate regarding the AGM, the body corporate was entitled to treat Mr Nagy as if he was in the shoes of the real owner until 30 April 2016. By the reasoning of the very decision referred to by SSKB, that falls squarely within the definition of a representative, rather than a proxy.[13] Further, at [66] of Q1, Adjudicator Toohey specifically contemplates people being appointed as power of attorney and indicates that this is an acceptable appointment of representative.

[42] The committee submits that SSKB seeks to read the Accommodation Module in a manner that limits the number of powers of attorney that may be used to vote, as if a power of attorney is the same appointment as a proxy. The interpretation sought by SSKB suggests that the appointment of a power of attorney and a proxy are analogous. They are not; the two relationships are entirely different and are intended to be treated differently, as is evident by the fact that they are dealt with by the Accommodation Module separately.

[43] Nothing in the Accommodation Module or the Act suggest that the Accommodation Module should be interpreted in the manner suggested by SSKB, argues the committee. In fact, in circumstances where the Accommodation Module specifically contemplates powers of attorney and does not place a limit on them; compared to also specifically contemplating proxies and placing a limit on their use, it can be inferred that the purpose of the legislature is to not place any limit on the number of powers of attorney that may be exercised.

[44] Further, to suggest that there be a limit placed on powers of attorney voting at a meeting, submits the committee, is entirely inconsistent with the main objective of the relevant provisions, which is to allow for each owner to vote as part of the democratic body corporate decision making process.

[45] Again, in this regard, I find the committee submission quite persuasive. SSKB does not allege a breach of legislation, but rather suggests that a limitation which it does not contain, be read into it. I consider it a long shot in terms of seeking to establish a serious issue.

Balance of Convenience

[46] An adjudicator must balance the inconvenience of granting relief now if final orders are ultimately refused, against the inconvenience of refusing relief now if final orders are ultimately granted. Of particular relevance is evidence that an interim order is necessary to prevent serious or irreparable harm.

[47] SSKB argues that the inconvenience of refusing interim relief and granting final relief is that:

> a) The body corporate will be required to incur the cost and inconvenience of the engagement of an alternative body corporate manager before re-engaging SSKB should final orders be issued;
> b) SSKB will suffer the cost of having to transfer all of the body corporate's records to Archers before suffering the cost of receiving them back and including the same back into its systems; and > c) Lot owners may be confused as to whom to contact if it requires information or assistance from the body corporate and may contact the wrong party.

[48] In contrast, submits SSKB, the only inconvenience of granting interim relief and refusing final relief is that it will move the date by which SSKB will be required to transfer the body corporate's records to Archers to the date that final orders are made.

[49] SSKB argues the balance of convenience therefore favours the granting of the interim order sought.

[50] The committee submits that no serious or irreparable harm arises from the suggested inconveniences; the harm is purely financial or a minor inconvenience if a lot owner contacts the incorrect body corporate manager which, the committee submits, would occur in many cases where a body corporate manager has changed and is not so inconvenient to give rise to irreparable harm.

[51] Further, the committee submits that the circumstances suggested by SSKB as giving rise to the balance of inconvenience favouring SSKB are advanced on a misconceived premise. That is, that an order that SSKB be appointed body corporate manager simply cannot be made, as in the event Mr Nagy's votes are invalidated, a quorum was not formed and the meeting held on 16 March 2016 would be a nullity.

[52] Without exploring the issue of whether or not a quorum was present at the AGM, or would have been in the event that Mr Nagy's votes as attorney were invalid, I agree with the committee that no serious or irreparable harm arises from the inconveniences suggested by SSKB. I am not persuaded that the balance of convenience necessitates the making of an interim order, especially in circumstances where the committee has made it clear that it does not wish to retain SSKB as body corporate manager and suggests that the relationship between SSKB and the body corporate has broken down irretrievably.

Conclusion

[53] It is my preliminary view that Mr Nagy has complied with all of the elements of being a "voter" under the Accommodation Module, except for the fact that his name was not entered on the body corporate roll as representative for each of the Lot owners. In my preliminary view, this does not invalidate the votes cast by Mr Nagy. Further, Mr Nagy was not voting as a proxy and there is no limit on the number of powers of attorney that may be used to cast votes.

[54] I prefer the committee's submission over SSKB's in relation to urgency, whether a serious question has been raised and the balance of convenience. I am not persuaded that it is just and equitable to make an interim order in circumstances where arguably there is not any serious question raised, the balance of convenience does not necessitate it, the committee no longer desire the services of SSKB and that appears to be reflected in the vote at the AGM.

[55] I note the committee's submission that the application is frivolous, vexatious, misconceived and without substance and its request for costs against SSKB. I will deal with these issues in the context of a final order, should one be necessary. SSKB will be afforded some time to consider the committee's submission (which I note it has requested a copy of from this Office) and whether it wishes to proceed with the application for final orders, before the application for final order is progressed further.

Queensland Body Corporate and Community Management Commissioner — Adjudicators Orders

Decision delivered on 5 February 2016

Conveyancing — Body corporate — Transfer of management rights — Where body corporate withheld consent to transfer of management rights unless owner of management rights agreed to repay an alleged debt — Whether body corporate breached s 94 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 by failing to act reasonably in withholding consent to the transfer — Whether body corporate breached s 120(6)(b) of the Accommodation Module by requiring payment of the debt before it would consent to the transfer — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, s 94; Accommodation Module, s 120(6)(a)(b).

The applicant (BP Management) was the owner of the caretaking and letting rights for the respondent body corporate.

BP Management also undertook the reading of water and electricity meters for each lot in the scheme so that individual usage could be determined and the relevant lot owner charged pursuant to their usage.

The meter reading service was outside the scope of the caretaking and letting agreement and BP Management was paid on submitted invoices for the service. The body corporate later asserted that BP Management had never been authorised by the committee to undertake the meter reading duties and as such, BP Management had been paid for services that he was not entitled to receive.

BP Management subsequently entered into a contract of sale with Trending Management to sell the management rights business. He sought the body corporate's permission to do so. However, the buyer terminated the contract as a direct result of the body corporate unreasonably withholding consent to the assignment.

BP Management then entered into a contract of sale with Quan Realty to sell the management rights. However prior to settlement, the body corporate issued a formal demand to BP Management that alleged that BP Management was never duly authorised by the body corporate to provide the meter reading service and that payments to BP Management for the service in the sum of $17,246.90 were owed to the body corporate (plus approximately $2,000 that the committee had incurred in costs).

Despite BP Management denying liability for repayment of any debt, he identified that there was a legitimate risk that unless he agreed to pay the debt, the body corporate would withhold its consent to the assignment of the management rights, albeit unreasonably.

In light of the identified risk and the approaching settlement date, BP Management acting under duress to protect the sale contract, engaged in without prejudice settlement discussions with the body corporate to try and resolve the debt issue. The body corporate rejected all offers put forward by BP Management and BP Management ultimately accepted the body corporate's offer that it would grant its consent to the assignment on the condition that BP Management paid $12,000 plus GST to the body corporate, being in full and final satisfaction of the meter reading service debt.

However once the sale was completed, BP Management argued (inter alia) before the adjudicator that the body corporate:

1. breached s 94 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 and s 120(6)(a) of the Accommodation Module by failing to act reasonably in withholding consent to the assignment of the management rights
2. breached s 120(6)(b) of the Accommodation Module by requiring consideration for approving the assignment
3. breached the Code of Conduct by failing to act honestly and fairly
4. should reimburse the $12,000.

Held: for BP Management.

Whether the body corporate failed to act reasonably

1. The fact that the body corporate did not profess any reasonable explanation for the withholding of its consent to the assignment (other than the alleged debt) was indicative that it acted unreasonably for the purposes of s 94 of the Act.

Whether the body corporate breached s 120(6)(b) of the Accommodation Module

2. The body corporate clearly breached s 120(6)(b) of the Accommodation Module which expressly prohibits any payment or other consideration for approving the transfer of management rights.

Whether the body corporate breached the Code of Conduct

3. In light of the finding that the body corporate imposed a condition on the approval of the transfer of the management rights that was unreasonable, the body corporate breached the Code of Conduct and failed to act honestly and fairly.

Whether the body corporate should reimburse the $12,000

4. Although the body corporate may have a genuine and valid claim against BP Management for reimbursement of the funds paid to him, the matter was not appropriately addressed by the body corporate in the way that it was. In these circumstances, BP Management must be reimbursed the $12,000.

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

Before: C Trueman, Adjudicator

Editorial comment:

The adjudicator was unable to make a determination as to whether BP Management had been authorised to provide the meter reading service. The body corporate may have indeed had a legitimate claim against the caretaker. The adjudicator was only concerned with whether the body corporate had frustrated the transfer of the management rights business in an attempt to resolve their debt dispute with the caretaker.

While one can see the temptation for the body corporate to use their consent to the assignment as leverage to recover the debt, it was clearly impermissible for them to do so with the adjudicator finding that they had breached both the Act and the Accommodation Module. Indeed, the adjudicator noted:

> "A body corporate cannot use the power to withhold consent for the approval for the transfer as a tool to hold outgoing management rights owners over a barrel to agree to any demand or condition they seek fit to impose" (para 34).

C Trueman, Adjudicator:

ORDERS MADE:

1. I hereby order that the Body Corporate acted unreasonably in withholding its consent to the assignment and transfer of the management rights.
2. I further order that the Body Corporate is in breach of section 120(6)(b) of the Accommodation Module by receiving consideration for the approval of the transfer of the management rights.
3. I further order that the Body Corporate is in breach of the Code of Conduct by failing to act reasonably and fairly.
4. I further order that the Body Corporate must repay the sum of $12,000.00 plus GST to the Applicant within 30 days from the date of this order.
5. The application is otherwise dismissed.

C. Trueman, Adjudicator:

Introduction

[1] Pulse consists of 52 lots and common property. TDCCT Pty Ltd as Trustee for Banks Pulse Management, who hold Management Rights at the scheme ("the applicant") filed the application on 28 July 2015 against the Body Corporate for Pulse ("the respondent") regarding a dispute concerning the body corporate and whether the body corporate have breached the Code of Conduct. It is alleged that the body corporate demanded unreasonable terms and conditions prior to consenting to the assignment of management rights.

[2] The applicant submits that the body corporate passed a resolution at a committee meeting in June 2009 appointing them to provide a service to the body corporate and that they are entitled to be paid for such services. The body corporate's demand for the applicant to repay those funds is unjust and unreasonable, and the applicant is entitled to the payments.

[3] The applicant seeks the following Final Orders:

> (a) An order that the Body Corporate is in breach of section 94(2) of the BCCMA by failing to act reasonably by engaging in oppressive and unconscionable conduct.
> (b) An order that the Body Corporate is in breach of section 120(6)(a) of the Accommodation Module by failing to act reasonably by engaging in oppressive and unconscionable conduct and unreasonably withholding its consent to the assignment of management rights.
> (c) An order that the Body Corporate is in breach of section 120(6)(b) of the Accommodation Module by requiring BP Management to pay the amount of $12,000 plus GST to secure the Body Corporate consent to the assignment of management rights.

(d) An order that the Body Corporate is in breach of the Code of Conduct by failing to act honestly and fairly.
(e) An order that the resolution passed at the June 2009 Committee Meeting were at all times valid.
(f) An order that the Body Corporate repay the sum of $12,000 plus GST to the Applicants
(g) Such other orders the Adjudicator considers are just and reasonable in the circumstances.

[4] In determining this application, I will consider section 120 of the Accommodation Module ("the Module") which deals with the general provisions relating to transfer engagements of body corporate managers and service contractors.

JURISDICTION

[5] I am satisfied this matter falls within the legislative dispute resolution provisions.[1] It is a dispute between a lot owner and the body corporate about a claimed contravention of the Act. An adjudicator's order may require a person to act, or prohibit a person from acting, in a way stated in the order.[2] Further, an adjudicator's order may contain ancillary and consequential provisions the adjudicator considers necessary or appropriate.[3]

PROCEDURAL MATTERS

[6] Under section 243 of the Act, a copy of the application was provided to the body corporate, with an invitation to the Body Corporate Committee (the committee) and all owners to respond to the matters raised by the application. A submission was received from the committee and one lot owner. The applicants inspected the submissions received and made a written reply.[4]

[7] In this matter dispute resolution has been unsuccessful, and the matter[5] was referred to department adjudication and I then investigated the dispute[6] , which included reviewing the application and submissions, and obtaining further information including the community management statement and evidence and details of lot ownership.

[8] I have decided the application based on the written material provided. The most relevant material is referred to below.

Analysis

Submissions

[9] The applicant submits the following is relevant:

- At the time of lodging this application the applicant was the duly authorised owner of the caretaking and letting rights and the owner of lot 5 in the scheme.
- That if the management and caretaking rights are assigned prior to determination of this matter, while they no longer will be an owner they will nevertheless have a continuing interest in the matters in dispute.
- This is a dispute between a letting agent and caretaking service contractor and an owner and the Body Corporate.
- The background to the dispute is that on 12 June 2009 the Scheme was established in the Department of Natural Resources and the First Community Management Statement ("CMS") was recorded.
- On 12 June 2009 the First Extraordinary General Meeting ("EGM") of the Body Corporate, BP Management was appointed as the caretaking and letting agent for the Scheme and entered in a Letting and Caretaking Agreement with the Body Corporate.
- In relation to water and electricity utilities the Scheme was constructed in such a way that utility providers were provided with total power and water usage for the scheme as opposed to being provided with usage details for individual lots. Accordingly water and electricity meters were installed for each of the 52 units within the scheme to enable individual usage to be determined, and the relevant lot owner charged pursuant to their usage.

• In order for the Body Corporate to recover usage costs from each unit it was necessary for the Body Corporate to engage a contractor to read the meters. These meter readings were then provided by the Body Corporate to a company called Meter2Cash Solutions ("Meter2Cash") who issued invoices to lot owners and collected the utility monies from each lot.
• At the time the Scheme was established a number of units were already occupied, yet no arrangements had been made in relation to engaging a contractor to conduct the required meter readings.
• On 12 June 2009, as a matter of urgency, given residents were already using the utility services, the Body Corporate decided at a committee meeting to engage BP Management to undertake the meter reading duties. The minutes of the committee meeting on 9 June 2009 record the following:

> "An urgent issue is the utility services, electricity and water. To allow recovery of utilities used by tenants, it was agreed that the Caretaker on behalf of the body corporate, undertakes the following work:
>
> > • To further liaise with the Body Corporate Services, Utility Manager Graeme Jackson for the implementation of a utility billing system for all Pulse residents.
> > • Liaise with BCS Services for options to reduce the current electricity tariff to a lower more acceptable rate
> > • To take periodic readings of unit electricity and water meters on an on-going basis. This work will include forwarding readings maintaining a readings database and assistance in identifying possible meter problems. The committee in return agrees to pay to a maximum of $5+GST per periodic read and $15+GST for non-periodic eg. exit/entry reads. Invoices to be sent to the body corporate manager for payment." ("The Meter Reading Agreement")

• The meter reading service was outside the scope of BT Management duties pursuant to the Management Rights Agreements. The meter reading engagement was on a month to month basis, terminable at any time by either party. The terms of the engagement were clearly explained at the 12 June 2009 Committee Meeting and recorded in the minutes.
• From in or around June 2009 to in or around November 2009, pursuant to the terms of the Meter Reading Agreement, BP Management undertook quarterly meter readings and submitted the readings to the BC Manager, Body Corporate Services ("BCS"), who was the body corporate manager at the time. They sent quarterly invoices to BCS for the meter readings taken in the relevant period and were paid the amounts invoiced by BCS on behalf of the body corporate.
• On February 2010, at a Committee Meeting of the Body Corporate, the committee amended the terms of the Meter Reading Agreement by requesting that BP Management increase the frequency of the periodic meter reading from every three months, to a monthly basis. ("Amended Meter Reading Agreement")
• The terms and changes of the Amended Meter Reading Agreement was recorded in the Minutes of Meeting held on 19 February 2010 and note:

> "Utility Services Changeover to meter2Cash
> All records and services have now been transferred over to Meter2Cash. The first electricity readings have been carried out and invoices have been issued to the residents. The committee agreed that the preferred option of billing was monthly as apposed (sic) to three monthly billing."

• That from on or around February 2010 to on or around June 2012, pursuant to the terms of the Amended Meter Reading Agreement, BP Management undertook monthly meter readings and submitted the readings to the body corporate, sent monthly invoices to the BCS for the monthly readings and were paid the amounts by BCS on behalf of the body corporate.
• BP Management obtained a statement from Keith Croswell, who was the Chairman of the Body Corporate Committee from 26 November 2009 to 2 August 2011 to prove that the body corporate had knowledge of and approved the Meter readings and Amended Meter reading agreements. Mr Croswell states:

"I was elected Chairperson of Pulse Body Corporate from 26 Nov 2009 to 2nd August 2011. In that time in my capacity as Chairperson, I had numerous discussions with Tony Banks (TDDCT Pty Ltd) Caretaker of Pulse Villas CTA 40129 on various body corporate matters. One such matter was utility management at Pulse. I can confirm that in accordance with previous approvals, TDDCT conducted quarterly and monthly readings of electricity and water meters on behalf of the committee. In return TDDCT was paid on submitted invoices for this service. These readings were presented to the contracted utility company for invoicing and money collection on behalf of the Body Corporate. This necessary work was done with the full knowledge and approval of the committee during my time as chairperson."

• On or around July 2012 CJ Strata was appointed as the Body Corporate Manager ("BCM") for the scheme.
• That in or around July 2012 to around October 2012 and pursuant to the terms for the Amended Meter Reading Agreement, BP Management undertook monthly meter readings and submitted the reading to CJ Strata, with monthly invoices that were paid for the relevant periods.
• On or around 6 February 2013, at a committee meeting of the Body Corporate, it was confirmed that Strata Utility Management were to take over the utility billing services for the body corporate from Meter2Cash Solutions.
• On or around 6 February 2013, at a meeting with Mr Banks (BP Management), Ms Cauchi (CJ Strata), Steven Maller (Strata Utility Management) and Leone Allen (Chairperson of the Committee), BP Management were advised by Strata Utility Management that they were to take over the meter reading duties, moving forward, which in turn terminated the Amended Meter Reading Agreement. Mr Banks was advised at this meeting that BP Management had never been authorised by the committee to undertake the meter reading duties, which is denied.
• While BP Management denies it lacked the appropriate authorisation to undertake the works pursuant to the Meter Reading Agreement and Amended Meter Reading Agreement respectively, BP Management does not contest the termination of the Amended Meter Reading Agreement as BP Management's engagement was on a month-to-month basis, which could be terminated at any time.
• On 28 October 2014, BP Management entered into a Contract of Sale with Trending Management to sell its management rights business within the Scheme.
• On 4 March 2014, Trending Management terminated the Contract of Sale as a direct result of the Body Corporate, in breach of section 120(6) of the Module, unreasonably withholding consent to the assignment.
• Pursuant to clause 13.1 of the Caretaking Agreement and Clause 9.1 of the Letting Agreement BP Management has a right to assign its interest in each agreement pursuant to the terms of Clause 13 and Clause 9 respectively.
• Terms of Cluse 13 of the Caretaking Agreement and Clause 9 of the Letting Agreement, dealing with assignment, are identical and replicate the requirements under section 120 of Module.
• On 20 March 2015, BP Management entered into a Contract of Sale with Quan Realty to sell its management rights and settlement was due to take place at 2pm on 28 July 2015.
• On 25 March 2015, the Body Corporate, through HerdLaw issued a formal demand to BP Management that alleged the following (which is denied):

BP Management was never duly authorised by the Body Corporate to provide the meter reading service
Payments made to BP Management from BCS in relation to the meter reading agreement and the amended meter reading agreement were made without authority of the Body Corporate
The Committee completed an audit for the period between December 2009 and June 2012 and determined BP Management had been paid the sum of $17,246.90 for meter readings for which there was no authority.
The Committee had incurred the sum of $2,015.00 in auditing the records to ascertain the unauthorised payments made to BP Management; and BP Management owed the amount of $19,261.90 to the Body Corporate

• On 22 April 2015 Hynes Legal on behalf of BP Management wrote to HerdLaw advising that BP Management had authorisation from the Body Corporate to provide, invoice and undertake the meter reading service and that they had not breached the Caretaking Agreement or the Module in providing or invoicing for such services.
• On 1 May 2015 HerdLaw wrote to Hynes Legal asserting that BP Management must pay the debt to the Body Corporate and failing payment, indicated that the Body Corporate would issue a Remedial Action Notice pursuant to section 129 of the Module.
• Despite BP Management denying liability for repayment of any debt, they identified that there was a legitimate risk that unless it agreed to pay the debt the Body Corporate would withhold its consent to the assignment of the management rights, albeit unreasonably. As predicted, the Body Corporate did in fact unreasonably withhold its consent on this basis.
• In light of the identified risk and the approaching settlement scheduled for 1 June 2015, BP Management, acting under duress to protect the Contract of Sale, engaged in without prejudice settlement discussions with the Body Corporate to try and resolve the debt issue.
• The Body Corporate rejected all offers put forward by BP Management and BP Management ultimately accepted the Body Corporates offer that the Body Corporate would grant its consent to the assignment on the condition that BP Management paid $12,000.00 plus GST to the Body Corporate, being in full and final satisfaction of the debt.
• On 7 May 2015 Hynes Legal wrote to HerdLaw attaching all documentation relevant to the sale of the management rights business including a proposed Motion for Committee Meeting seeking the Body Corporate's consent. The proposed motion stated:

> "That subject to payment of the body corporate's reasonable legal and administrative costs by TDDCT Pty Ltd CAN 109 419 392 as trustee for Banks Pulse Management, the body corporate consent to the assignment of the Caretaking Agreement and Letting Agreement both dated on or about 12 June 2009 from TDDCT Pty Ltd CAN 109 419 392 as trustee for Banks Pulse Management to Quan Realty Pty Ltd CAN 600 065 530 as trustee for Quan Realty Family Trust and that the body corporate enter into and sign under deal the deed of assignment attached to this agenda."

• The Body Corporate did not agree to the terms of the motion proposed by BP Management and in a letter from HerdLaw set out the terms of its proposed draft Motion which relevantly stated:

> ".. the Committee are prepared to consent to the Assignment subject to the stated conditions, the most important of which is that… the outstanding utility and service charges regarding the electricity meter readings being paid by the Assignor… That the Body Corporate consents to the assignment of the Caretaking and Letting Agreement from TDDCT Pty Ltd 109 419 392 as trustee for Banks Pulse Management (hereinafter referred to as "the Assignor") to Quan Realty Pty Ltd CAN 254 168 434 as trustee for Quan Realty Family Trust "hereinafter referred to as the Assignee")subject to…
> …4 the outstanding utility service charges regarding the electricity and meter readings in the amount of $12,000 plus GST being paid by the Assignor"

• BP Management had earlier identified as a legitimate risk that the Body Corporate would withhold its consent if BP Management did not make the payment. Even though the Body Corporate was entirely satisfied with Quan Realty as the incoming Management Rights owner, the Body Corporate ransomed its consent to the assignment with the unreasonable condition that BP Management make the payment.
• BP Management was at all times under duress because it feared that if it did not make the payment the Contract of Sale would be jeopardised with significant cost consequences. As such, BP Management made the necessary arrangements to make the payment and ensure the sale of the management rights went through.

[10] The Respondent submits that the following is relevant:

• The dispute is about a claimed contractual matter about the Applicants Caretaking and Letting agreements.
• The Caretaking and Letting Agreements could only transfer with Body Corporate approval.
• The application should be dismissed.

• In the event that the application is not dismissed for want of jurisdiction the following submissions regarding such matters are provided and relied upon as relevant.
• The appointment by agreement on 12 June 2009 to read the meters as alleged by the applicant, and the Minutes to confirm the committee meeting are not valid, and most likely are a recent invention.
• The minutes of the EGM held on 12 June 2009 at the offices of the BCS note that BCS were appointed as the BCM for the scheme and that Jacques Mamet was declared the Chairperson, Secretary and Treasurer for the Body Corporate as nominee of the sole owner.
• The books and records of the Body Corporate were maintained by BCS from when they were appointed on 12 June 2009 until BCS were replaced by CJ Strata in or about 2012.
• The records handed over by BCS were complete and did not contain the purported minute of a 12 June 2009 committee meeting. The minute mysteriously materialised in April 2015 after the Body Corporate demanded payment for approximately $17,246.90 that was paid to the applicant for services without body corporate authority or approval.
• On 23 July 2009 the applicant sent an email to the BCM, Amber Keys, regarding the meter reading. The email is at total odds to the purported 12 June 2009 Minutes and in fact makes no reference to the purported agreement. The confirmation of the 23 July 2009 email was that Graham Jackson was to take over the account and that the Applicants agreement will be for general readings of meters at $2.
• If the 12 June 2009 email was to be believed as the "meter reading agreement" as asserted by the applicant, the 23 July 2009 email makes no reference to the purported 12 June 2009 agreement. The context of this email is evidence that there was no agreement involving the applicant and meter reading and no minutes or resolution to support this proposed arrangement.
• The first Annual General Meeting ("AGM") was held on 26 November 2009 at 4.30pm at the offices of BCS.
• On or around late 2009, Meter2Cash submitted a proposal to the body corporate to undertake certain services which included meter reading and billing lot owners for electricity consumption in the scheme, for this service the Body Corporate would pay $85 per lot per annum.
• The body corporate entered into the agreement with Meter2Cash on 15 January 2010 and continued to supply meter reading and billing services until their agreement was terminated on 9 November 2012 by the committee.
• On 15 January 2010 the applicant sent an email to Marty at Meter2Cash advising that the applicant had terminated the contract with the body corporate.
• On 28 January 2010 there was an exchange of emails between the applicant and Meter2Cash that clearly showed that the applicant was a subcontractor of Meter2Cash and was required to bill Meter2Cash for the meter reading and not the body corporate, as asserted by the applicant.
• The first committee meeting of the Body Corporate actually occurred on 19 February 2010 at the offices of BCS. The first committee meeting minutes record that "this is the first meeting of the body corporate committee and as such there are no previous committee meeting minutes to ratify" and that "all records and services have now been transferred to Meter2Cash" and that "the first electricity meter readings have been carried out."
• On or about September 2012, the applicant was challenged about his invoices for meter readings that he had rendered to the Body Corporate after the services of Meter2Cash were terminated. The Body Corporate demanded a refund of approximately $1,146.00.
• On 18 October 2012 Diane Job of CJ Strata wrote to the applicant and asked if the applicant had anything that would confirm the arrangement that the applicant was asserting with his charging the Body Corporate for meter reading, notwithstanding the body corporate were paying Meter2Cash for the meter reading under their agreement.
• On 18 October 2012, the applicant replied to Diane Job stating that he was told to invoice the BCS by Amber Keys, who was the BCS Manager. The applicant told Ms Job that he did not have any evidence to support this suggestion that he was to charge the body corporate for the meter reading service.
• On 3 December 2015 the new BCM advised the applicant that unless there was an authority for the payment to be made, the Body Corporate would not be making any future payments. The BCM advised the applicant that a resolution had never been passed by the committee to authorise any payments to the applicant.

• On 31 December 2012 the applicant sent an email to the BCM advising that he would withdraw the invoices and would refund the money paid to him and deposit funds into the Body Corporate's bank account.
• The applicant repaid the sum of $1,146.00 to the Body Corporate being the invoiced amounts for August and September 2012.
• At no time has the applicant asserted to the Body Corporate that he was entitled to such payments pursuant to any meeting allegedly held in June 2009. It would have been reasonable to assume that the applicant, on account of the fact that he was recorded as an attendee at the purported meeting, would have brought this to the attention of the BCM in December 2012 when he refunded the money for the meter readings.
• Subsequently the Body Corporate had undertaken an audit of its books and had ascertained that the applicant had invoiced the body corporate by way of petty cash claims for meter readings between December 2009 and June 2012 the sum of $17,246.90, which had been paid by the previous BCM on the direction of the Applicant.
• On or about 25 March 2015, the Body Corporate instructed HerdLaw to allege that the Body Corporate considered the Applicant was guilty of misconduct in taking money for which no authority existed and demand for repayment of the sum of $17,246.90. At no time had the Body Corporate passed a resolution authorising the payments.
• On 2 April 2015 the Applicant's lawyer advised that his client believed that there was an agreement for the Applicant to perform the services and to charge the Body Corporate.
• HerdLaw responded on 2 April 2015 that they had searched the records and minutes of the Body Corporate and there was no agreement recorded on the body corporate records.
• On 2 April 2015 the Applicants solicitors responded stating that their client would have a quantum meruit claim. HerdLaw responded to the applicant's lawyer advising that Meter2Cash were responsible for the administration of the electricity supply and were paid for that service. The Body Corporate understood that the Applicant read the meters for that company and not the Body Corporate. Accordingly, they considered that the applicant supplied a service to Meter2Cash and not to the body corporate and that the BCM made payments that were not sanctioned by any decision of the body corporate and there is no evidence of "an arrangement" with the body corporate.
• On 22 April 2015 the Applicant's solicitors sent a letter enclosing what purported to be Minutes of a Body Corporate meeting held on 12 June 2009. An examination of the purported Minutes of the 12 June 2009 meeting reveals:

    # The alleged meeting occurred approximately 4 hours after the first EGM at another place in Brisbane.
    # Mr Jacques Mamet who was the appointed sole committee member only 4 hours before at the first EGM, was not in attendance.
    # As an urgent issue the caretaker "take" periodic readings of unit electricity and water meters despite the fact that the General Meeting Minutes for 12 June 2009 record that all lots are in the ownership of the original owner.
    # The 12 June 2009 minutes are not on the BCS stationary, which was usual for all minutes subsequent to this
    # There were no committee members of the Body Corporate present at this purported 12 June 2009 committee meeting.

• Upon receipt of the purported Minutes, HerdLaw contacted Mr Jacques Mamet who confirmed that he did not recall attending any committee meeting on 12 June 2009 and that if he had, he certainly would not have agreed to appoint the Applicant to read the electricity meters.
• The compelling conclusion is that the 12 June 2009 meeting did not take place and the minutes are either a fabrication or are not valid minutes of the Body Corporate.
• The Minutes of the 19 February 2010 committee meeting do not support the applicants' assertion that an amended agreement with the applicant was made regarding the meter reading arrangement.

• An examination of the Minutes of the 19 February 2010 committee meeting supports the position of the Body Corporate that Meter2Cash were not responsible to the Body Corporate for the meter reading and billing. The minutes record that the records and services have been transferred to Meter2Cash, the applicant was not mentioned at all in the minutes and it is difficult how the applicant can assert that the Minutes support his position.
• The applicant has not provided any explanation as to why he would advise he had terminated the arrangement on 15 January 2010. There is no evidence that supports the applicants' assertion that the body corporate agreed to pay the applicant for meter reading after the Meter2Cash agreement was entered into on 15 January 2010.
• The applicants evidence is contradictory; particularly allegations made and the content of an email sent to the BCM on 31 December 2012.
• The evidence is that the applicant never had any authority to charge and receive the amount he claimed from the Body Corporate for reading meters and that the amount paid by the applicant was properly refunded.
• The Body Corporate did not at any time attempt to frustrate the sale of the applicants business and did not raise the issue of the misconduct of the applicant until after the 28 October 2014 Sale Contract had been terminated by the buyer under that contract.
• The matters in application 0673-2015 do not have any relevance to this application as there is no suggestion that the Body Corporate sought to withhold consent to the transfer of the management rights based upon the misconduct of the Applicant.
• On 1 May 2015 HerdLaw sent two letters to the applicant regarding the electricity issue and the failure to pay the costs, stating that it may result in a remedial action notice being issued.
• The Body Corporate made its position clear that if the meter reading charges and issues could not be resolved it would issue the remedial action notice based on the fact the applicant had engaged in misconduct and was in breach of the Code of Conduct which entitled it to terminate the caretaking agreement if the Applicant did not remedy the default.
• The Body Corporate considers the allegation that it used the resolution of this issue as a condition of withholding its consent as preposterous.

[11] The owners of Lot 1 and 2, Mr Leone and Desli Allen provided a submission, they state:

• That Leone Allen was the secretary of the body corporate committee from 26/11/2009 to 24/9/2015. Desli Allen was an ordinary committee member from 26/11/2009 to 24/9/2015.
• That at no time did the Committee approve TDCCT to incur any body corporate charges to read the electricity and water meters.
• The committee never approved for TDCCT to be paid at all and had no knowledge of payments made from petty cash vouchers by the body corporate manager.
• Their understanding was that the utilities company was responsible for conducting the work for all readings and collection of utility funds from the residents
• Any private arrangement between TDCCT and the utilities company was never discussed by the committee
• Mr Croswell gave personal approval for payment of body corporate funds without discussion with the rest of the committee and without approval. Such permission is invalid.
• The issue of the payments to the Caretaker only became known when the new body corporate manager took over and advised that the petty cash payments were not approved in the records.
• That the costs in the financial statements had been hidden as "utilities costs" so the committee were not aware what the costs were. As soon as the committee realised what the costs were they stopped payment and demanded the Caretaker reimburse those costs. The Caretaker reimbursed the costs to the body corporate
• Once the extent of the overpayment was realised the body corpate engaged the services of lawyers, HerdLaw. The amount of the claim for overpayment was $17,000.00. The committee accepted a settlement of $12,000.00
• The committee could never have approved the Caretaker to undertake the meter reading services and expenses as it was a sum that exceeded the amount of spending the committee is allowed to approve.

• They dispute the assertions of Mr Croswell as unbelievable and not credible given it is not supported by contemporaneous records of the body corporate and committee.

[12] The applicant provided a reply to the respondents submission and states:

• The management rights were sold and transferred to a new owner and the applicant is no longer an owner or the Caretaker at the scheme, however, he is an interested party and has a continuing interest in the matters in dispute.
• The Minutes of meeting for 12 June 2009 are not a recent invention and that on 12 February 2009 the Form 11 Certificate of Classification for the building was issued to Immo (the original owner of the scheme) meaning Immo could legally put tenants into completed units.
• At this time Immo was being charged for all water and electricity usage for the tenanted lots because there was no mechanism in place to calculate and pass on utility costs to tenants of the tenanted lots until the CMS for the scheme was registered
• On 12 June 2009 the Scheme was established by the registration of the first CMS
• At 10am on 12 June 2009 the first EGM of the Body Corporate was held, relevantly at the first EGM, the applicant was appointed as Caretaker and Letting Agent of the Scheme.
• At 2pm on 12 June 2009 the first committee meeting was urgently held by Immo at their offices in Springwood to address a number of operational issues, one of which, was the issue of Immo being charged for all water and electricity usage for the tenanted lots.
• Immo organised and chaired the June 2009 committee meeting and as sole owner approved all motions. The Meter Reading agreement came into existence at the June 2009 committee meeting. Amber Keys of BCS and the applicant were present at the June 2009 committee meeting.
• It is not a case of the June 2009 Committee meeting Minutes being a "recent invention" but rather it is a case that the Body Corporate record is incomplete.
• That the Body Corporate have never at any time contacted Amber Keys to question the issue of the validity of the June 2009 meeting and minutes, and as issues of fraud and fabrication have arisen, the applicant contacted Amber Keys. Amber Keys sent an email relevantly stating that "BCS was appointed the BCM to Pulse on 21 June 2009 until July 2012.. and confirms that the committee meeting of the owners of the body corporate took place on 12 June 2009 at 2pm" where she was present. She further states "that meeting was held by the original owners being Immo. The caretaker was present and Immo had full voting power..minutes of the meeting were held by Immo as they organised the meeting." At the meeting many operational issues were discussed but the key issue was utility services to Pulse. She claims "this I remember was crucial to Immo cash flow as they had no way of utility recovery from existing tenants up to that point. At this time Immo had not paid the first quarters levies causing significant cash flow issue for body corporate." Amber Keys further claims that "All invoices received in the office of BCS were approved by the boy corporate and that both BCS and the caretaker fully disclosed to the body corporate committee the invoices paid to the caretaker for the meter reading services."
• The respondents' evidence of the Meter2Cash agreement and the cost of $85 only refers to the provision of the services of: "billing services, receipting services, customer management, tariff management, performance reporting, and absorption of bank fees". The applicant submits that Meter2Cash did not provide for meter reading services in their agreement with the body corporate. The applicant refutes the respondent's contention that he was a subcontractor employed by Meter2Cash. He claims that the evidence suggests he was an Agent for the Body Corporate when dealing with Meter2Cash. Further, that Amber Keys confirms that he was engaged by the Body Corporate and was not a subcontractor for Meter2Cash.
• That the withdrawal of the two invoices for July and October 2012, for payment was not an admission that it was not entitled to the payment for the meter reading services but rather that the applicant identified that CJ Strata were refusing to acknowledge the existence of the agreement and withdrew the invoices as a matter of convenience to avoid the cost and time expense of disputing the matter with CJ Strata.
• That the evidence provided by the respondent relating to contact with Mr Jacques Mamet was wrongly stated and that the applicant contacted Mr Mamet on 11 August 2015 who provided a different version of events to what HerdLaw alleged. Mr Mamet stated, "he could not recall if he attended a meeting as it was too long ago and he could not remember that far back" and that "he was advised that the Caretaker was charging excessively for meter reading and would he have approved the resolution". He stated that "he did not remember" but replied "that if the charges were excessive and unfair no I would not have approved, However if the charges were fair and reasonable, then I would have approved of the resolution."

• That HerdLaw have attempted to misrepresent the content of the conversation with Mr Mamet and such evidence should not be taken into consideration.

• That various letters from Hynes Legal to HerdLaw are marked "without prejudice save as to costs" and was a genuine attempt by the Applicant to settle the dispute and accordingly is privileged and cannot be used as evidence against the Applicant as per the Evidence Act 1995 (Cth), and as entrenched in common law, is inadmissible and cannot be taken to be an admission of liability.

Relevant Legislation

[13] The jurisdiction conferred on an Adjudicator and orders they can make is provided for in the Act.[7] An Adjudicator cannot determine a dispute about a claimed or anticipated contractual matter about the engagement of a person as a body corporate manager or caretaking service contractor or the authorisation of a person as a letting agent for a community titles scheme.[8]

[14] If parties to a dispute about the transfer of management rights cannot resolve the matter they may apply under Chapter 6 for an order of a specialist adjudicator to resolve the dispute or under the QCAT Act for an order that QCAT exercise the tribunal's original jurisdiction to resolve to dispute.[9]

[15] The definition of contract for Chapter 3, part 2, division 4 means the contract or other arrangement under which a person is engaged as a service contractor, or authorised as a letting agent, for a community titles scheme.[10]

[16] A Body Corporate has a statutory obligation to act reasonably in undertaking its functions and that includes either making or refusing to make a decision.[11] The functions of the Body Corporate include administering the common property and assets, enforcing the community management statement (CMS) and carrying out other functions under the CMS and the Act.[12] The committee must also act reasonably in making decisions.[13]

[17] The Body Corporate has a general obligation to act reasonably and must not unreasonably withhold its consent to approve the transfer of management rights.[14] A body corporate must not require or receive a fee or other consideration for approving the transfer (other than reimbursement for expenses reasonably incurred by the body corporate in relation to the application for its approval.[15] Subsection 6 of section 120 of the Accommodation Module applies subject to division 2. Division 2 of the Accommodation Module relates to any payment of amounts on transfer.

[18] A body corporate committee and its voting members must have a commitment to acquiring an understanding of the Act and to abide by a Code of Conduct.[16] A body corporate committee must act honestly, fairly and exercise confidentiality[17] in performing the members' duties as a committee voting member and must act in the best interest of the body corporate.[18] The committee voting members must take reasonable steps to ensure they comply with the Act including the code, in performing the members' duties as a committee voting member.[19] A committee voting member must disclose to the committee any conflict of interest the member may have in a matter before the committee.[20]

[19] A body corporate manager and caretaking service contractor must have a good working knowledge and understating of the Act and comply with the code of conduct relevant to the person's functions.[21]

[20] The body corporate committee may engage a body corporate manager to carry out functions of the committee and executive members.[22]

Analysis

[21] The applicants claim that I must answer several questions, they are:

1. Is the dispute a contractual dispute and do I have jurisdiction to determine the matter?
2. Did the body corporate breach section 94 of the Act by failing to act reasonably in withholding consent to the assignment of management rights.
3. Did the body corporate breach section 120 of the Module by failing to act reasonably in withholding consent to the assignment of the management rights.
4. Has the body corporate engaged in oppressive and unconscionable conduct by requiring the applicant to pay an amount to secure the consent to the assignment of the management rights
5. Are the body corporate in breach of the Code of Conduct by failing to act honestly and fairly?
6. Was the resolution passed at the June 2009 committee meeting valid at all times?
7. Should the applicant be reimbursed the sum of money paid to the body corporate to secure the consent to the assignment of the management rights?

[22] The first question to answer, is whether this is a contractual dispute and whether I have jurisdiction.

[23] While I do not have jurisdiction to decide whether or not a service contractor is performing their duties under a caretaking or letting agreement or contract, this is not a dispute arising from caretaking or letting agreements. This was a dispute between a lot owner and service provider (at the time of lodging the application) and the body corporate and allegations that the body corporate have not acted reasonably in line with section 120 of the Module.

[24] It is not disputed that since the application was lodged the applicant has sold their lot and transferred the caretaking and letting agreements to another party. However, jurisdiction is conferred to an interested party who is no longer an owner, pursuant to section 238 of the Act. A person may make an application if the person is directly concerned with a dispute and that the continuation of the application remains and the party has standing despite the fact the standing of a party changes.[23] The legislation provides that unless someone else is substituted as the relevant person, the application continues subject to the party continuing as the relevant person for the application.[24]

[25] On this basis I am satisfied that the applicant has standing and that the application continues, despite the applicant no longer being an owner of a lot or the caretaker or letting agent at the scheme.

[26] I have the power to consider a dispute on matters which concern the Code of Conduct for Body Corporate Committee at Schedule 1A of the Act, and make decisions about whether the body corporate, through its committee, has breached the legislation.

[27] The second question to answer is whether the body corporate is in breach section 94 of the Act by failing to act reasonably in withholding consent to the assignment of management rights. Sections 94 of the Act requires the body corporate to act reasonably, what is deemed reasonable in the circumstances?

[28] The question of whether the body corporate has acted reasonably is not a simple one and there is no mechanical test or formula to be applied. The issue is not whether an action or decision (or absence of action or a decision) was ‘correct’ or ‘preferable’ but whether it is objectively reasonable.[25] What is reasonable is a question of fact, based upon all relevant matters in the circumstances of each case.

[29] A recent QCAT decision[26] explored the question of ‘reasonableness’ in detail. Tribunal Member Mr Roney QC reviewed the various approaches to, and applications of, the test of reasonableness in a number of different decisions before setting out what he considered is the proper approach.[27] He concluded that if any known reasons for a decision can be accepted as reasonable, even if there are a number which are unreasonable, the conduct of the body corporate will nevertheless be reasonable.

[30] The fact that the body corporate is required to act reasonably and did not profess any reasonable explanation, other that the demand to repay a debt, which they knew was disputed, as a reason for it withholding its consent to the transfer of the management rights, such an entrenched position of the body corporate, without adequate explanation, is unreasonable.

[31] The third question to answer is a consideration of whether the body corporate has breached section 120 of the Module by failing to act reasonably in withholding consent to the assignment of the management rights. The test of reasonableness has been examined and found to be that which is objectively reasonable. What was the reason the Body Corporate demanded the repayment of the debt when section 120(6)(b) of the Module expressly prohibits any payment or other consideration for approving the transfer? The body corporate certainly has engaged in conduct that is contrary to the legislation, either intentionally or inadvertently. The issue of intention is immaterial and what is clear is that the Body Corporate has breached the legislation.

[32] The fourth question to answer is whether the body corporate engaged in oppressive and unconscionable conduct by requiring the applicant to pay an amount to secure the consent to the assignment of the management rights.

[33] In various decisions by Adjudicators, regard is made to the provision in Schedule 1A and 2 of the Act relating to various Codes of Conduct that govern body corporate committee members, body corporate managers and caretaking service contractors. A requirement of the Code of Conduct is a mandatory requirement to not engage in fraudulent or misleading or unconscionable conduct. Examples of Unconscionable conduct is listed as:

> 1. Taking unfair advantage of the person's superior knowledge relative to the body corporate.
> 2. Requiring the body corporate to comply with conditions that are unlawful or not reasonably necessary.
> 3. Exerting undue influence on, or using unfair tactics against, the body corporate or the owner of a lot in the scheme.

[34] To determine what is unconscionable conduct, decisions have examined various types of conduct and deemed particular acts and omissions to be unconscionable. In the decision of Grosvenor Apartments - Brisbane[28] unconscionable conducthttp://www.austlii.edu.au/cgi-bin/sinodisp/au/cases/qld/QBCCMCmr/2006/58.html?stem=0&synonyms=0&query=unconscionable%20conduct - disp4 was found to "ordinarily import an element of acting in bad faith". To make a finding of unconscionable conduct I would be required to make a finding that a party was acting unreasonably, unfairly, maliciously and not in good faith, and unconscionably. There is evidence that the demand by the body corporate that they would not consent to the transfer of management rights unless the debt was paid was a decision to impede the process of the transfer of management rights. When it appears from all of the evidence that the proposed assignee met the criteria set out for consideration by the body corporate in section 120 of the Accommodation Module, the refusal to consent to the transfer and withhold consent was not a reasonable decision. A body corporate cannot use the power to withhold consent for the approval for the transfer as a tool to hold outgoing management rights owners over a barrel to agree to any demand or condition they seek fit to impose.

[35] In this case it was clear that the applicant was in dispute with the body corporate regarding the issue of the meter reading service costs since the termination of the meter reading agreement in approximately December 2012.

[36] The chronology of events indicates that since the meter reading costs dispute arose, the applicant and body corporate had been attempting to resolve the dispute, without success. The evidence suggests that for some time the Body Corporate did not take any action regarding the disputed payments to the applicant until the applicant was attempting to sell the management rights business. It was at this time, the body corporate issued the applicant with a formal demand, alleging it was owed a debt.

[37] The facts are that the applicant had attempted previously to transfer the management rights to another buyer, Trending Management, in or around October 2014, with that sale being frustrated by the body corporate allegedly imposing unreasonable pre-conditions on the potential assignee so that the contract with that purchaser was terminated. That dispute is the subject matter to a current application with this office being 0673-2015. The applicant alleges that the body corporate was again attempting to frustrate another sale opportunity, with the sale to Quan Realty, by the imposition of a condition on approving the transfer that a debt be paid by the applicant, prior to the body corporate consenting to the transfer.

[38] From the evidence is appears that the body corporate may have frustrated the transfer of the management right business in an attempted earlier sale and the applicant submits they were cornered that the body corporate was causing the potential loss of this purchaser. The applicant was concerned that the Body Corporate could jeopardise the Contract of Sale with Quan Realty and therefore, they agreed to pay the funds to ensure the sale could procced. When considering all the circumstances, and evidence, it is clear that the body corporate had frustrated a previous sale in 2014, and that the sale to Quan Realty and transfer of the management rights business was crucial to the applicant. The imposition of an unreasonable condition for the repayment of money, prior to providing consent to the transfer was unreasonable. The power the body corporate held, was in my view, abused by it by knowing that unless the applicant agreed to repay the debt, consent would not be provided to the transfer and that such action of the body corporate was unfair, and taking advantage of their superior position of power.

[39] I am satisfied from the evidence, that the demand that the assignment of the management rights would only occur if the applicant agreed to pay, amongst other costs, "the outstanding utility service charges regarding the electricity meter readings in the amount of $12,000 plus GST being paid by the Assignor"[29] , was, in all the circumstances, contrary to the legislation, unfair and unreasonable. In this case I do not believe it is necessary or relevant for a determination to be made that the body corporate engaged in unconscionable conduct.

[40] The fifth question to answer is whether the body corporate are in breach of the Code of Conduct and whether they failed to act honestly and fairly. In light of the finding that the body corporate imposed a condition on the approval of the transfer of the management rights that was unreasonable, I find that the body corporate breached the Code of Conduct and failed to act honestly and fairly. In light of the fact the body corporate were satisfied that the potential assignee met the criteria set out in the Accommodation Module, the imposition of a condition to repay a debt identified in 2012, knowingly held the applicant to ransom, as without the payment the consent would not be given to the transfer. The conduct and decision of the Body Corporate was unfair, and not acting honestly, and unreasonable in all the circumstances.

[41] The sixth question to consider is whether there was a valid resolution passed at the June 2009 committee meeting that authorised the applicant to undertake the meter reading services for a fee. In considering this point I have carefully considered all of the evidence and the evidence is conflicting. The difficulty is that there is disagreement as to whether there was a committee meeting held on 12 June 2009 and whether that meeting actually occurred. This point is crucial as to whether there was any committee decision to appoint the applicant to provide a service to the Body Corporate to provide meter reading services.

[42] Minutes of the June 2009 meeting note that both BCS had been appointed as body corporate manager and TDCCT Pty Ltd appointed Caretaker. Some operational issues were included in the items of agenda for the June 2009 meeting that required attention.

[43] The evidence is that the Minutes of the meeting of 12 June 2009 note "that the urgent issue is the utility services, electricity and water". The Minutes indicate that the body corporate committee passed a motion, amongst other things, that "the Caretaker on behalf of the body corporate will undertake works including. .further liase with the BCS Utility Manager for the implementation of a utility billing system..to take periodic readings of unit electricity and water meters on an oi-going basis. This work will include forwarding readings, maintaining a readings database and assistance in identifying possible meter problems. The committee in return agrees to pay to a maximum of $5+GST per periodic read and $15+GST for non-periodic. Invoices to be sent to the body corporate manager for payment."

[44] The evidence of the statement from the body corporate committees' previous Chairperson, Mr Keith Croswell, was, that he was the Chairperson from approximately November 2009 to August 2011 and during that time TDCCT was requested to conduct quarterly and then monthly readings of utility services at the scheme and that in return TDCCT was paid on submitted invoice for the service they provided.

[45] The evidence of the Secretary and other Committee members, Ms's Leone and Desli Allen was that at no time has the Committee ever approved such services be supplied by the Applicant to the Body Corporate. This evidence is in stark contrast to the evidence of Mr Croswell, although it appears that the submissions from all three lot owners note that they were only committee members after June 2009, when the alleged committee meeting occurred when the applicant states he was engaged to undertake the utility reading services.

[46] I find on the evidence that it is impossible to determine with any certainty that there was a committee meeting and valid Motions passed at a committee meeting held on 12 June 2009 authorising TDCCT to undertake periodic readings of the utility services supplied to the scheme, and approving payment for such services.

[47] The evidence on this point is conflicting. I am not able to determine whether the applicant was ever engaged to provide the utility reading services for an agreed fee. I find that the evidence of this matter cannot be dealt with in this forum, with a decision on the papers. This matter should be determined only where the veracity of evidence could be tested; in a forum where parties give oral evidence; where evidence in chief and the opportunity for cross examination of witnesses to determine issues of credibility and whether the meeting ever occurred and whether the minutes of the committee meeting in June 2009 are authentic. I cannot make a determination with any certainty, that the Minutes of the June 2009 meeting are genuine or fraudulent and what in fact was ever agreed. That matter can only be determined as a minor civil dispute and minor debt matter and in the appropriate jurisdiction. The issue of debt recovery from the applicant should not have formed part of a motion that related to the consent to the assignment of Caretaking and Letting agreements. It was unreasonable to require the applicant to repay those fees for services, as a condition to providing consent, to the transfer of the management rights. The debt issue was a separate matter and should have been dealt with separately by the body corporate against the applicant in the appropriate court of competent jurisdiction.

[48] The seventh question to be answered is whether the applicant be reimbursed the sum of money paid to the body corporate to secure the consent to the assignment of the management rights and whether it is entitled to retain the funds paid for the meter reading services.

[49] On the finding that I cannot determine with any certainty as to whether or how the applicant was engaged to undertake utility reading services and if or how he was to be paid for those works, the issue of entitlement to payment is not a decision I can make in this forum. I cannot make any finding of fact that there was a valid motion passed at the 2009 EGM to appoint the applicant to undertake meter reading services.

[50] What is a relevant consideration, however, is the application of section 120 of the Accommodation Module. As the body corporate demanded that the applicant reimbursed the sum of money paid to them for the utility meter reading services, it stands to reason they should now be reimbursed those same funds. I note that the amount paid by the applicant was a reduced sum and not the full amount of monies paid to the applicant during the alleged meter reading period. However the sum repaid to the body corporate was, from the evidence, a sum of $12,000.00 and I am satisfied that this sum should be reimbursed in full to the applicant.

Summary

[51] Section 120 of the Accommodation Module provides that a Body Corporate cannot receive a fee or other consideration for approving the transfer. The Body Corporate is in breach of section 210(6)(b) of the Accommodation Module and is not acting reasonably by requiring BT Management to pay the sum of $12,000 to it, as a condition on approving the transfer of the management rights.

[52] The conduct by the Body Corporate to leverage pressure on BP Management, to pay an alleged outstanding debt owed to the Body Corporate, which BP Management disputed, as a condition for approval of the transfer of management rights is unreasonable and less than desirable conduct by the Body Corporate. I understand the Body Corporates frustration, if it believed that the applicant had been paid for services that he was not entitled to receive and were not approved by the committee, however, its conduct and methodology to recoup those funds, was not appropriate.

[53] Whether BP Management did or did not owe a debt to the Body Corporate, any subsequent minor debt matter is a civil matter and one that should have been dealt with separately in a court of competent jurisdiction, and apart from the consideration of consent relating to a transfer of management rights.

[54] The conduct by the Body Corporate towards BP Management was unreasonable in the extreme and I have sympathy for the dire situation the applicant was placed in whereby the Body Corporate advised him that the approval for the transfer would not be granted unless the debt was paid. I accept he agreed to pay whatever funds were necessary to ensure the sale of the management rights business went to completion.

[55] It was the intention of the legislation that section 120(6) of the Accommodation Module is to enable Body Corporate to be able to undertake their own necessary investigations and due diligence on determining whether a potential incoming managements rights owner is suitable to conduct the roles and duties necessary for the position. Section 120(3) provides the matters for consideration by the Body Corporate including the character, competency, qualifications and financial standing of the proposed transferee, and all matters, once considered to compel the body corporate to not unnecessarily or unreasonably withhold consent to the transfer of the management rights. I find that the provision in section 120(6)(b) specifically prohibits any Body Corporate from demanding the requirement of being paid a fee, or any other payment of any kind, or any consideration whatsoever, of any kind, for approving the transfer of management rights (other than the specific fees and costs provided for in the legislation).

[56] I am satisfied that the various letters between Hynes Legal and HerdLaw marked "without prejudice save as to costs" have not been relied upon and I find that they are merely genuine attempts by the Applicant to settle the dispute and that they are not admissions of guilt or liability. I find that the "without prejudice" correspondences are privileged and cannot be used as evidence as contained in the Evidence Act 1995 (Cth), and common law, and I note that nothing contained in those correspondences, in any way, would be taken to be an admission of liability. I have not taken the content of those correspondences into account, and they do not assist me in any event in determining this matter.

CONCLUSION

[57] The Body Corporate refuted the allegation that it used the resolution of the issue of the utility reading debt and repayment of that money, as a condition of withholding its consent to the assignment of the management rights, yet the evidence supports a finding that this is exactly what it did.

[58] The content of the proposed motion drafted by the Body Corporates solicitors, to approve the transfer of the Management Rights, specifically provides that the applicant must pay the sum of $12,000 for outstanding utility service charges regarding the electricity meter readings. I find that the Body Corporate would only agree to consent to the assignment of the Caretaking and Letting Agreements from TDCCT Pty Ltd as trustee of Banks Pulse Management to Quan Realty Pty Ltd conditional on the payment being made.

[59] I make a finding that the Body corporate have failed to act reasonably by withholding consent to the assignment of management rights unless a payment of $12,000 was made to it.

[60] I cannot make a finding that the body corporate engaged in unconscionable conduct and that order is refused.

[61] I find and am satisfied that the body corporate did breach the Code of Conduct by failing to act honestly and fairly.

[62] The fact is the body corporate required the payment of $12,000 prior to consenting to the assignment of the management rights. I find that they were not permitted to receive any payment of any kind or any other consideration for approving the transfer and that the Body Corporate have breached section 120(6)(b) of the Accommodation Module. I find the Body Corporate's conduct to be unreasonable and in breach of their statutory obligation to act in compliance with their Code of Conduct.

[63] Although the Body Corporate may have a genuine and valid claim against the applicant for reimbursement of the funds paid to him for services that were allegedly not approved or fraudulently obtained, such matter was not appropriately addressed by the Body Corporate in the way that it was.

[64] In the circumstances the applicant must be reimbursed the sum of money paid to the body corporate to secure the consent to the assignment of the management rights in the sum of $12,000.00.

[65] This decision has not made any findings about whether the funds should or should not be reimbursed to the Body Corporate, this decision has determined that the way the Body Corporate handled the disputed debt issue and the method of receiving payment for the alleged debt owe, is in breach of the legislation, therefore unlawful and unreasonable in the circumstances.

[66] I will now make appropriate orders to give effect to the decision reached.

Queensland District Court

Decision delivered on 05 June 2015

Dispute resolution — Body corporate adjudication — Where lot owner's unit sustained significant and sustained water damage — Where order was made by an adjudicator requiring the body corporate to rectify defects — Where parties were in extensive dispute regarding the carrying out of the adjudicator's orders — Where lot owner was then successful in obtaining an order in the Magistrates Court for the appointment of an administrator pursuant to s 287(3) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 — Where body corporate appealed against order for the appointment of an administrator — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, s 287(3).

This decision concerned a six-lot scheme in which the family controlling the appellant body corporate owned four lots, the respondent owned one lot and an independent third party owned the other lot. The body corporate's chairperson was also the body corporate's solicitor.

The lot owner's unit suffered significant and sustained water damage over a number of years. An adjudicator required the body corporate to rectify the scheme defects.

After extensive dispute between the parties regarding the carrying out of the adjudicator's orders, the lot owner obtained an order in the Magistrates Court pursuant to s 287(3) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, for the appointment of an administrator of the body corporate to perform the body corporate's obligations.

The body corporate on appeal submitted that the Magistrates Court erred in exercising its discretion, arguing inter alia, that placing a body corporate into administration should be used sparingly in particular circumstances.

Held: body corporate's appeal dismissed.

1. An administrator should have been appointed. It was not necessary for the Magistrates Court to have made a finding as to the party ultimately at fault.

2. While s 287 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act ("Enforcement of other orders") provides no guidance as to how to exercise the court's discretion in the appointment of an administrator, the evidence clearly established that the parties were not going to agree as to whether the adjudicator's orders had been or would be complied with, without the intervention of an independent administrator.

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

Mr Hughes QC and Mr Sinclair (instructed by Stratum Legal Pty Ltd) for the respondent.

Ms Skennar (instructed by Noel Woodall and Associates) for the appellant.

Before: Robertson DCJ

Robertson DCJ:

ORDER:

1. Appeal dismissed
2. Appellant to pay Respondents' Costs of and incidental to the Appeal and the proceedings below on the standard basis or as agreed. Certify for 2 Counsel on hearing of the Appeal
3. Liberty to apply upon the giving of 3 days notice

Robertson DCJ:

[1] This is an appeal pursuant to s 45 of the Magistrates Courts Act 1921 against a decision made by Magistrate Madsen in the Maroochydore Magistrates Court on 27 March 2015 appointing an administrator of the Body Corporate for Donnelly House to perform the obligations of the Body Corporate under adjudicator's orders in dispute resolution 0846 of 2011 made 23 October 2012 and subsequently amended on 1, 12 and 16 November 2012.

[2] His Honour's order came after a hearing of two and a-half hours before him on 24 March 2015. It appears from the record of those proceedings that the application by Mrs Shaw was heard on the basis of sworn affidavits filed by both parties and no person was required for cross-examination. Written submissions were made by Mr Sinclair, who represented Mrs Shaw and still does as junior to Mr Hughes QC, and Ms Donnelly of Noel Woodall & Associates represented the Body Corporate. Ms Donnelly is also the chairperson of the committee of the Body Corporate for Donnelly House and her husband has been the chairperson of the committee in the past. On the appeal her firm has instructed Ms Skennar of counsel on the appeal. The written submissions filed in the court below were supplemented by oral submissions.

The relevant law

[3] Section 287 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 ("the Act") provides relevantly as follows:

"287 Enforcement of other orders

(1) This section applies if the following are filed with the registrar of a Magistrates Court—

(a) a copy of an adjudicator's order, other than an order for the payment of an amount, certified by the commissioner as a copy of the adjudicator's order;
(b) a sworn statement by a person in whose favour the order is made stating that an obligation imposed under the order has not been performed.

(2) The registrar may register the order in the court.
(3) The Magistrates Court may, by order, appoint an administrator, and authorise the administrator to perform obligations, under the adjudicator's order, of the body corporate, the committee for the body corporate, a member of the committee or the owner or occupier of a lot the subject of the order.
(4) If the Magistrates Court appoints an administrator to perform obligations of an entity mentioned in subsection (3), anything done by the administrator under the authority given under the order is taken to have been done by the entity."

[4] Pursuant to s 47 of the Magistrates Court Act 1921, on the hearing of an appeal, this court may do any of the acts set out in (a) to (f) of the section. Pursuant to s 113 of the District Court of Queensland Act 1967, this court has, for an appeal of this nature, the same powers as the Court of Appeal to hear an appeal. Those powers are derived from r 766 of the Uniform Civil Procedure Rules 1999. On 24 April 2015 the Body Corporate made an application that his Honour's order be stayed pending the appeal and an argument was advanced by Mr Sinclair on behalf of Mrs Shaw that the court did not have jurisdiction. I will deal with that later in the reasons.

[5] As Mr Sinclair said from the outset before his Honour, the issue in dispute between the parties relates to significant and serious water leaks in the building, and in particular leaks which affect Mr and Mrs Shaw's unit, lot 6. Ms Donnelly and her family have an interest in four lots, and the remaining lot is owned by an independent person. As I have noted, at all material times either she or her husband was the chair of the Body Corporate committee.

[6] The material filed before his Honour to consider was voluminous. Ms Donnelly's affidavit filed on 20 March 2015 extended over 425 pages. As he noted himself, he had "skim read" the material and it is clear, with respect to him, that at the hearing he was not fully cognisant with the history of the multilayered dispute between Mr and Mrs Shaw and the Body Corporate over performance by the Body Corporate of adjudicator's orders, the subject of the order his Honour made. That is not meant to be a criticism of his Honour.

He expressed concern at a very early stage about potential conflict of interest arising from the fact that Ms Donnelly was acting for the Body Corporate in all the circumstances. He returned to this theme on a number of occasions and also referred to it in his reasons despite being told by Mr Sinclair (at 1–14 line 4 of the transcript) that his client took no position in relation to Ms Donnelly's appearance.

[8] At the conclusion of the hearing, he adjourned to 20 April 2015, but indicated that he would try and do the decision quickly and if he did he would notify the parties. In fact this is what he did, and he delivered his decision on 27 March 2015. The sufficiency of his reasons are a ground of appeal. The orders he made are as follows:

"1. Forthwith that Archers is appointed as the Administrator under section 278 (sic) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 and is authorised to perform the obligations of the Body Corporate for Donnelly House CTS37465 and/or for Body Corporates Committee, under the Adjudicator's Orders in dispute resolution application 0846 of 2011 made on the 23rd of October 2012 and as subsequently amended on 1, 12 and 16 November 2012, which authorisation extends without limitation to include:

a. to prepare, with or without the assistance of a suitably qualified person, a specification for the rectification and other works required to be undertaken under the Adjudicator's Orders;
b. to obtain quotations from contractors for the performance of works detailed within the specification referred to;
c. to engage one or more of those contractors to perform the necessary works including by entering into the necessary contracts;
d. to administer and monitor, with or without the assistance of a suitably qualified person, the performance of the works under the contracts including so as to seek to ensure that the works are performed in compliance with the relevant contract, the specification and the Adjudicator's Orders;
e. to procure completion of the works within the contract/s with the contractor/s to the relevant standard required under the Adjudicator's Orders;
f. to procure confirmation of completion of the works from the contractor/s and provide that confirmation to the parties and to the Court;
g. to pay itself, the administrator, the contractor/s and any other person engaged by the administrator on behalf of the Respondent Body Corporate pursuant to these orders, including without limitation a licensed contractor, architect or consulting engineer pursuant to any special levy issued by the administrator for the purpose, or from the Body Corporate administrative fund or sinking fund as applicable;
h. if there are insufficient funds in the Body Corporate sinking fund or Body Corporate administrative fund (as the case may be) to raise the necessary contributions, whether by way of special levy or otherwise;
i. to amend the current budget of the Body Corporate, adopt a new budget or otherwise take such steps as are required on behalf of the Body Corporate to make the payments contemplated within these including the remuneration of the administrator but not restricted to that;
j. that the administrator has power to direct officers of the Body Corporate to cease conduct or action, or to take necessary action that the administrator believes necessary to secure compliance with the obligations referred to in the adjudicator's decision;
k. that the administrator has power to direct officers of the Body Corporate to take stated action to help perform the work of the administrator, which includes but is not restricted to the provision of any relevant documentation to the administrator promptly; and
l. that there be liberty given to the administrator to apply to the court in relation to its remunerations;

2. The administrator receive within seven days of this order, this decision, the affidavit of the applicant and exhibits filed 5 January

2015 and the adjudicator's decision registered 5 January 2015;

3. That there be liberty given to the administrator to apply to the court in relation to the terms of these orders, or in relation to the powers exercisable by it in respect of the adjudicator's order;

4. That the applicant file and serve such submissions in relation to costs of and in respect of these proceedings within 28 days; such submissions to address who is liable to pay those costs and how they should be paid and on what basis including but not restricted to the question of standard costs, indemnity costs, or costs payable out of a fund or by a particular person;

5. That the respondent file and serve submissions in relation to costs in respect of these proceedings within 56 days; and

6. Proceedings be listed before me again on 26 May 2015 at 2 pm in relation to costs."

[9] Prior to making those orders, his Honour wrote:

"My original intention was to deliver this decision on 11 May 2015.

Quite frankly I was horrified by what I have read since and I have sought to publish these reasons … as soon as I possibly could … without reference to a transcript of the proceedings."

[10] One of the complaints on appeal is that his Honour did not act on the evidence and instead acted on his own personal views and failed to give adequate reasons.

The appeal

[11] A notice of appeal was filed 16 April 2015. The grounds as articulated are as follows:

"1. The learned Magistrate erred in not accepting the submission of the respondent that the application was an abuse of process in circumstances where there were extant applications before an adjudicator in relation to the issues the subject of the application.

2. The decision of the learned Magistrate failed to have any regard to the proper legal principles for to (sic) the appointment of an administrator pursuant to s 287 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997.

3. Having regard to the proper legal principles as to the appointment of an administrator pursuant to s 287 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, the learned Magistrate ought to have refused the application.

4. The learned Magistrate erred in not accepting the uncontested evidence of the respondent that a binding contract for the rectification works had been entered into.

5. The learned Magistrate erred in making the orders in that the orders were incapable of implementation in circumstances where a contract for the rectification works had already been entered into.

6. The decision of the learned Magistrate was against the evidence and the weight of the evidence.

7. The learned Magistrate erred in finding that the Appellant was not ready, willing and able to complete the works when the uncontested evidence before him was that a contract had been entered into for such works and the works had been scheduled for completion.

8. The learned Magistrate failed to have any or any proper regard to the material filed by the appellant.

9. The learned Magistrate failed to hear and determine the application according to law, instead according to his own personal views about the matters the subject of the application.

10. The Learned Magistrate failed to give adequate or proper reasons for his decision."

On 24 April 2015 the Body Corporate sought a stay of his Honour's order pending the outcome of the appeal. At the outset Mr Sinclair argued that leave to appeal was necessary because the "amount" in dispute was less than the "minor civil dispute limit" i.e. $25,000 referred to in s 45(2) (a) of the Magistrates Courts Act 1921. He submitted correctly that if this submission was correct, the court could not exercise the power to stay until leave was given. Ms Skennar was taken somewhat by surprise by this point but was able to refer me to an authority: Winch v Ketchell [2002] 2 Qd. R. 560 (although she did not have a copy for me).

Essentially, Mr Sinclair's argument was predicated on acceptance of his submission that in the case of an appeal against a non-money order, reference should be had to whether the dispute involves, directly or indirectly, any claim in relation to any property right with an equal value to or more than the minor civil dispute limit. This is a reference to the analysis of his Honour Judge McGill SC's decision in Ramzy v Body Corporate for G32 & Anor [2012] QDC 397, to which I referred with approval in Baker v Arkman Pty Ltd [2014] QDC 16. His argument was that the claim here related to the adjudicator's fees, which were less than $25,000. Ms Skennar's argument was that the relevant value should be derived from the quantum of the contract entered into by the Body Corporate to, it says, comply with the adjudicator's orders and the amounts estimated by contractors who provided quotes to Mrs Shaw, all of which greatly exceed the minor civil dispute limit.

[12] It was conceded that there was no authority that could be located that deals with the exercise of the discretionary power under s 287(3) of the Act, and I indicated for that reason alone I was prepared to proceed on the basis that leave was not required as there was at least an argument that "some important principle of law or justice is involved". I granted the stay, and the parties agreed to a truncated process for the filing of outlines and other material if required leading to a full hearing on 15 May 2015, which took place. Mr Sinclair did not require me to give reasons for granting leave, on the basis that I indicated that I would expose my reasons in my final judgment. Given my conclusions as to the merits of the appeal, I do not intend to say anything more about the leave issue.

[13] The adjudicator's orders were made following a disputed adjudication before Adjudicator D Toohey in application number 0846-2011 and are cited as Donnelly House [2012] QBCCMCmr 474.

[14] The orders made by Mr Toohey were in the following terms:

> "1. I hereby order that, as soon as practicable, the body corporate must ensure the following work as referred to in the Saint report or Schwabe report respectively, is performed by Queensland Building Services Authority licensed contractors to relevant Building Code of Australia requirements:
> (a) Re-install the southern curved window.
> (b) Waterproof the southern wall by removing the relevant screens and waterproofing the wall (including sealing cracks in the wall and the holes used to attach the screens) before reattaching the screens. The detached skirting board within unit 6 should then be reattached.
> (c) Ensure the unit 6 balcony railings are in good condition by checking joints for depth and effectiveness, re-cutting joints as necessary, cleaning and resealing cracks and joints (using approved sealant with backing rod to manufacturer's specifications), and repainting as necessary.
> (d) Rectify the upper floor metal roof by having new flashing installed under the roof sheeting to protect the soffit lining, improving the flashing fixity, resealing the flashing, reinstalling the sump, and repairing the soffits.
> (e) Re-install the unit 6 upper deck waterproofing membrane, grout layer and tiles ensuring:
> a. the membrane extends to waterproof the sliding door (costs of removal and reinstallation of this door to be paid by the unit 6 owners);
> b. the membrane has an appropriate bond breaking system and an adequate upturn and, where necessary, the waterproofing membrane extends to the outer edge and down over the wall.
> c. spitters are installed and points of discharge increased in capacity where practicable with drainage collection points increased in capacity (cost of new drainage grates to be paid by the unit 6 owners);
> d. similar tiles are re-laid.
> (f) install spitters to allow drainage of the lower deck of unit 6 through or under the planter boxes.
> (g) repair damage to the ceiling of the lower floor of unit 6 and remove mould.
> [140744]
>
> (h) fix water damage to the unit 6 dining room window sill and surrounding areas (costs of removal and reinstallation of this window to be paid by the unit 6 owners).
>
> 2. I further declare that it would be unreasonable for the unit 6 owners to be liable to pay any insurance excess regarding any claims for insurance recovery for damage caused by failures of the body corporate to perform the above work within a reasonable time.
>
> 3. I further order that the body corporate must regularly clean common property drains, including the drain on the front awning.
> 4. I further order that the application is otherwise dismissed."

[15] Attached to that order was a 13-page set of reasons for decision. The adjudicator's order and his reasons are Exhibit JES1 to Mrs Shaw's affidavit filed on 5 January 2015.

The evidence below

[16] The Body Corporate filed two affidavits of Ms Donnelly which were in support of the stay application in this court. It is not suggested that the material the subject of these affidavits was not before his Honour. Neither party filed any new material with their outline. It follows that on appeal this court should review the impugned decision in the light of all the evidence before the lower court.

[17] The material before his Honour was as follows.

1. Affidavit of Mrs Shaw filed 5 January 2015 to which was annexed the relevant adjudicator's decision of Mr Toohey dated 23 October 2012.

[18] That order was appropriately certified to comply with the requirements of s 287(1)(a) and (b) of the Act. The decision was amended on three occasions, namely 1, 12 and 16 November 2012. The original decision dated 23 October 2012 is on the court file, but the three exhibits reflecting changes which Mrs Shaw notes were under the "slip rule" were not. However, all exhibits are provided in volume 2 of the material annexed to Mr Hughes QC and Mr Sinclair's submission in this court and clearly the adjudicator amended his reasons for his decision (as opposed to the orders) under the slip rule and his original decision is read accordingly.

[19] As I have noted the order was made after a contested hearing of a dispute referred under the Act to the Commissioner for Body Corporate and Community Management, which officer is appointed under Part 2 of Chapter 6. Chapter 6 of the Act deals with dispute resolution and provides for a multilayered system for resolutions of disputes between lot owners and body corporates in a timely and inexpensive manner. Section 277(4) provides authority for an adjudicator to order the appointment of an administrator but otherwise does not provide guidance as to the way in which that discretion is to be exercised. Part 10 of Chapter 6 deals with enforcements of adjudicators' orders, and s 287 is contained in that part.

[20] At the time the dispute was referred to the Commissioner for appointment of an adjudicator, the Donnelly interests owned all the lots in the scheme except for lot 6. As I have noted, an independent person has since purchased one of the lots but the Donnellys still control the voting in the Body Corporate committee.

[21] Mrs Shaw's affidavit and the other evidence before his Honour established that all parties had an opportunity to lodge submissions before Mr Toohey, which they did. Attempts at conciliation failed. As can be seen from Mr Toohey's detailed decision which is annexed to Mrs Shaw's affidavit, the parties to the dispute were given many opportunities to provide expert reports and responses and did so.

[22] The issue in dispute was (and remains) whether the actions taken by the Body Corporate since the orders were made comply with the orders. It is common ground that the orders were designed to rectify defects in the structure of Donnelly House which have led to significant water penetration predominantly affecting lot 6 owned by Mr and Mrs Shaw. To give some flavour to the extent to which the adjudicator went to inform himself of the nature of the problem, it is instructive to quote from paragraphs [10]–[17] of his decision:

> "[10] I reviewed the application, the registered plan and the community management statement. On 5 March 2012 I > informed the body corporate of a provisional view that the body corporate was responsible for maintaining balustrades, external windows, and the waterproofing membrane and requested reports and quotations for works to address cracking within the building and to address waterproofing issues. On 24 May I received a report from Roy Saint. On 29 May the applicant's solicitors made submissions claiming this draft report was inadequate and raising a number of questions about the report. On 1 June 2012 I granted an extension until 6 June 2012 for the finalisation of the report and 15 June 2012 for the provision of quotes.
> [11] On 12 June Roy Saint provided a report that included a response to the issues raised by the applicant's solicitor (Saint report).

[12] On 15 June 2012 I granted an extension of time until 29 June 2012 for provision of quotations to perform the necessary work. Both parties had difficulty obtaining quotations based on the Saint report with quotations variously stating some items were 'inconclusive for the purposes of a quotation', 'it is advisable that further investigation be undertaken', 'to be read in conjunction with the … report … based primarily on visual non evasive evaluation', or 'quotation amounts may need to be adjusted … once necessary invasive inspections have been carried out'. Subsequently, on 5 July 2012, I granted the applicant's request to allow time for a further engineering report referring to specific deficiencies or inadequacies in the Saint report.

[13] On 24 July 2012 the applicant provided a report from John Schwabe (Schwabe report). This report was based partly on moisture readings and investigations carried out by John Groom (Groom report). The Schwabe report disputed a number of recommendations made in the Saint report. Given these significant areas of dispute it was no longer feasible to expect the parties to provide full quotations for agreed works.

[14] On 30 July 2012 I provided the parties with some provisional views and proposed orders based on the expert reports and invited a response by the end of August. The parties provided further submissions and reports by letters of 27 August 2012 and 31 August 2012.

[15] On 3 September 2012 I held a teleconference between Ms Shaw and Ms Donnelly regarding the issues in dispute. At the request of Ms Donnelly I gave the body corporate until 17 September 2012 to provide a further expert report in response to the alleged defects with the waterproofing of the upper deck.

[16] On 5 September 2012 Ms Shaw and Ms Donnelly provided further correspondence evidencing some dispute over the body corporate's proposed course of action and whether access to unit 6 would be granted for this purpose. It also became apparent the body corporate for Donnelly House did not have a functioning committee. On 7 September 2012 I made a further order authorising BCP Strata Pty Ltd to act for the body corporate for Donnelly House to arrange an extraordinary general meeting and, in the meantime, obtain a further expert report. I extended the period for provision of this further expert report by further order of 17 September 2012.

[17] On 25 September 2012 the body corporate provided me with the further report from A.D.A Waterproofing (ADA report). In the meantime, Ms Donnelly had provided me with an affidavit containing some history of water ingress to Donnelly House. On 3 October 2012 the applicant and respondent made further submissions in response to this additional information."

[23] Paragraph 18 of his decision is also instructive of the attitude of Ms Donnelly and presumably the Body Corporate at that time:

"[18] I note that, on 7 September 2012, Ms Donnelly requested I disqualify myself from further involvement with this dispute if I was 'not going to allow the body corporate procedural fairness'. While it is difficult to respond to this request without any alleged bias or misconduct being particularised, I note that I do not have any financial or other relevant interest in the outcome of this dispute and I am not aware of any significant failings to afford procedural fairness to any party."

[24] In relation to each of the disputed areas, in his reasons, Mr Toohey refers at length to the expert reports before him, namely the Saint, Schwabe and Groom reports.

[25] Again, the attitude of the Body Corporate to one of the disputed issues is instructive. The position of Ms Donnelly on behalf of the Body Corporate was that the problems with the upper floor waterproofing membrane were insignificant and would involve minimal work to correct. Mr Toohey found otherwise by his analysis of the expert material before him. After he had expressed a provisional view that it would be unreasonable for the Body Corporate to patch the membrane, Ms Donnelly "strongly protested" and sought, and was given, leave for a further report to be obtained. This is a report referred to in [17] above at a time when BCP Strata was acting for the Body Corporate. At [53] of his reasons, Mr Toohey refers to the conclusions of that report which strongly supported his provisional view based on his analysis of the other expert evidence.

[26] Despite Ms Donnelly's apparently unjustified, unsupported and unsuccessful attempt to have Mr Toohey recuse himself, it is clear from his reasons that he did not find completely for Mrs Shaw. Relevantly to the present issues, it is instructive to set out his conclusions from paragraphs [79]–[84]:

> "[79] The legislation requires the body corporate to maintain certain parts of the building in good condition and requires owners to maintain other parts of the building in good condition. If a building has defects then this duty to maintain requires those defects to be rectified. In this instance there is evidence of a number of failures to comply with Building Code of Australia requirements. These failures have resulted in significant water and moisture ingress into unit 6 and these failures must be promptly rectified.
> [80] It is not possible for the body corporate or individual owners to simply avoid responsibility by arguing they are not responsible for pre-existing defects. Rather, if the relevant builder or tradesperson does not fix the defect within a reasonable time then the body corporate or the owner who is responsible for maintaining the relevant area in good condition must fix those defects.
> [81] The applicant has sought a number of orders against the body corporate. The application has been partially successful but I note that a number of the alleged defects are the responsibility of the applicant. I have not made orders binding the applicant in relation to these remaining defects because no orders were sought against the applicant. However, if the applicant does not rectify these defects in a timely manner then the body corporate or another owner should be able to relatively quickly obtain such orders based on the findings made in this application.
> [82] The most contentious issue in dispute was whether the waterproofing membranes should be replaced. There is evidence of a number of defects in the installation of the membrane on the upper deck. It is likely these defects are the primary cause of moisture and mould issues related to the ceiling of the lower floor of unit 6. I have ordered this entire upper deck membrane be replaced given the impossibility of inspecting the entire membrane for defects, the likelihood of parts of the membrane being too thin to bridge cracks in the concrete, and the likely difficulties in effectively just replacing parts of this membrane.
> [83] There is not the same evidence of defects in the installation of the lower deck membrane. However, there are still concerns with the tiling and drainage from the lower deck that have resulted in the recommendation of alternative solutions to water issues involving the installation of spitters and some additional works to waterproof the adjacent doorways. I am satisfied the body corporate is responsible for the installation of spitters as these will form part of the common property utility infrastructure allowing overflow of excess water from this area. Conversely, the owners of unit 6 are responsible for the > waterproofing of their own doorway as this work would be solely within their own lot boundaries.
> [140747]
>
> [84] The body corporate should act as soon as practicable to install a new waterproofing membrane on the upper deck. Acting quickly to address this problem is of special importance due to the likelihood failures in this membrane are contributing to significant mould growth within the ceiling void below. This has resulted in a recommendation the air conditioning system remain switched off until mould issues are addressed and the unit be vacated subject to occupiers gaining a medical clearance regarding possible respiratory issues that might result from these mould issues."

[27] In an affidavit filed 5 January 2015 in the lower court by reference to Mr Toohey's orders, Mrs Shaw swore that:

> "6. Order 1(a) has not been complied with in that the southern curved window has not yet been reinstalled.
> 7. Order 1(b) has not been complied with in that the southern wall, southern screen and lounge skirting board has not yet been rectified.

8. Order 1(b) has not been complied with in that the western wall, western screen and skirting board in the office have not yet been rectified.

9. As required by Order 1(c) the balcony railings have not yet been rectified.

10. As to Order 1(d) rectification work was done to the roof in October 2014. I do not know if that work resulted in the obligation of the Respondent Body Corporate under this part of the Order being discharged.

11. Order 1(e)a. & b. have not been complied with in that the upper deck waterproofing has not yet been rectified.

12. Order 1(e)c. has not been complied with in that the spitters in the upper deck have not yet been installed.

13. Order 1(e)d. has not been complied with in that similar tiles have not been installed.

14. Order 1(f) has not been complied with in that the spitters on the lower deck have not yet been installed.

15. Order 1(g) has not been complied with in that the ceiling of the lower floor of lot 6 has not yet been rectified.

16. Order 1(h) has not been complied with in that the dining room window sill and surrounding areas has not yet been rectified."

[28] She noted in her affidavits that order 1 was required to be performed in accordance with the terms of the order itself"as soon as practicable".

[29] As I have noted she was not required for cross-examination in the hearing before his Honour. Mr Toohey's decision was never challenged on appeal.

2. Affidavit of Mrs Shaw filed 11 March 2015

[30] In her second affidavit she refers to and exhibits a decision of Adjudicator M A Schmidt dated 30 July 2013.

[31] This decision was a result of an application to the Commissioner for Adjudication made by the Body Corporate alleging that the Shaws had failed to maintain lot 6 in good condition. The Body Corporate asserted by reference to paragraph [81] of Mr Toohey's reasons that the failure of the Shaws to keep their lot in good repair was preventing it from complying with the orders made by Mr Toohey. Again, after careful analysis, Mr Schmidt dismissed the Body Corporate's application as "misconceived and without substance". That decision was not appealed.

[32] In this affidavit, Mrs Shaw swore that the failure to carry out the orders of Mr Toohey remained and that as a result of severe rain in late February 2015, she removed 75 litres "of water that entered my unit through the areas to be repaired under the orders". Again, this statement of fact was not challenged.

[33] Annexed to her affidavit is an email to her and her husband dated 9 January 2015 from Ms Donnelly attaching a letter of the same date signed by her as chairperson of the Body Corporate. It refers to a number of as yet unresolved dispute applications filed by the Shaws with the Commissioner which, before his Honour and before me, are referred to in support of the Body Corporate's argument that the proceedings in the Magistrates Court by Mrs Shaw amounted to an abuse of process.

The letter can only be described as an extraordinary piece of correspondence. It acknowledges the Shaws' longstanding views that the Body Corporate should comply with the adjudicator's orders. It asserts however that it is impossible for the Body Corporate to comply with the orders because to do so would compromise its statutory obligations under the Act. It threatens to make an application to the Supreme Court "to seek Declarations regarding the impossibility of compliance with the adjudicator's orders". No Supreme Court application has been made. This letter was sent at a time when the Body Corporate had not been served (I infer) with the material filed on 5 January 2014. The application to appoint an administrator pursuant to s 287(3) of the Act was filed on 11 March 2015, along with the affidavit of Mrs Shaw filed that day. Also at that time, Mrs Shaw's lawyer, Mr Michael Kleinschmidt, filed an affidavit sworn by him on 11 March 2015. To that affidavit are exhibited letters from him to three professional Body Corporate Managers including Archers Body Corporate Management. The response from Archers includes their quote for undertaking the services described by Mr Kleinschmidt in his letter from points 1–9 as $5,000 with $220 per hour for additional services. There is no suggestion that there was a misdescription in the services required to give effect to the adjudicator's orders and no suggestion that the fees quoted are excessive. Mr Kleinschmidt was not required for cross-examination.

[35] Finally, Mrs Shaw relied on an affidavit of Frank George Groom filed 17 March 2015. One of the issues raised in Ms Donnelly's letter of 9 January 2015, and in the material filed on behalf of the Body Corporate, is the contention that the Body Corporate cannot comply with the adjudicator's orders unless hobs are installed to the upper level of lot 6. Mr Groom was one of the experts who provided a report to Mr Toohey. At paragraphs 4–5 of his affidavit he states:

> "4. In my opinion the order Donnelly House [2012] QBCCMCmr 474 (23rd October 2012) 'the order' can be reasonably complied with in its current form. This is on the basis that after the tiles were uplifted to the upper level deck of lot 6 the depth of the bed under the tiles was determined to be of sufficient depth to comply with AS 3958.1 and provided a sufficient threshold at the sliding door. This is detailed in my report annexed as Exhibit FJG-4.
> 5. Subject only to confirmation of the tile bed depth in paragraph 4 above, I confirm that the order can be complied with, without the need to install a hob nor the need to replace the existing sliding doors."

[36] Again, he was not cross-examined by Ms Donnelly on behalf of the Body Corporate in the hearing before his Honour.

[37] The following material was filed on behalf of the Body Corporate.

1. Affidavit of Jennifer Donnelly filed 20 March 2015.

[38] Ms Donnelly annexes to her affidavit, as Exhibit A, part of the adjudication application made by Mrs Shaw on 30 April 2013. It is said that the material filed ran to 938 pages. In summary, it seeks to restrain the Body Corporate from proceeding with motion 18 passed at the EGM conducted on 24 April 2013, which was to appoint a contractor "Megasealed" to perform the works in compliance with Mr Toohey's order. As Ms Donnelly notes, the Body Corporate through its then solicitors provided a response on 23 May 2013. Again, as a demonstration of the degree of animus between the parties, the respondent argues that the Shaws' application was "vexatious, misleading and an abuse of process", and should be dismissed with costs and "the maximum penalty under section 297(1) of the Act should be imposed against the applicant". This is a reference to an offence of stating "anything to the Commissioner or an Adjudicator the person knows to be false or misleading in a material way". Perhaps as a reflection of a lack of understanding of the law of the Body Corporate's then lawyers, obviously a penalty like that would only follow after due process. In fact, Mrs Shaw was partially successful as the adjudicator's order dated 28 May 2013 exhibited to Ms Donnelly's affidavit and marked C confirms, in that interim orders were made.

A further EGM was then called on 25 July 2013. Motions proposed included revocations of the motions effectively temporarily invalidated by the 28 May 2013 interim orders, but also proposed a motion to which was attached three quotes for "all the work necessary to fully comply with the orders (of Mr Toohey)". The quotes ranged from $104,250 (the Boss quote) to $258,981 (J Hutchinson Pty Ltd). Mrs Shaw then made another adjudicator application under the Act.

[40] An adjudicator was not prepared to make interim orders, and it is clear from the reasons (Exhibit D to Ms Donnelly's affidavit) that the adjudicator did not deal with the substance of Mrs Shaw's complaints at that point. Mrs Shaw proceeded with her application for final orders which included the appointment of an administrator of the Act. As can be seen from the adjudicator's reasons for refusing to appoint an administrator (Exhibit F), Mrs Shaw had sought appointment well beyond compliance with Mr Toohey's orders and included orders that sought to extend the administrators' powers to "records and financial affairs of the Body Corporate be brought into compliance with the Act".

[41] One of the issues raised before his Honour and on appeal is whether or not the Body Corporate has entered into a binding contract with Boss on 10 September 2013, and whether or not that contract does address the works required to comply with the adjudicator's orders.

[42] The issue of the hobs to the sliding glass doors to the upper level is raised by Ms Donnelly in her affidavit at [34]–[42]. She annexes a number of expert reports to her affidavit including a report of Mr Saint dated 6 June 2012 and a report of Mr Schwabe dated 20 July 2012.

[43] In her affidavit she describes this as the "main issue in dispute". Certainly, Mr Saint said hobs were necessary, but Ms Donnelly's sworn statement at [38] that "all engineers have either agreed with Roy Saint or dropped out of the equation", does not stand up under scrutiny even on the basis of her own material. At [40] she annexes a report of engineer Karl Aldridge dated 17 July 2014. It is clear from that report that as well as undertaking two inspections, Mr Aldridge had access to other reports At 7.3 he states:

> "7.3. INSTALLATION OF A HOB
>
> Previous reports have advised that the installation of a hob is the only way to prevent water entry occurring in this location in the future. We onsider this information as incorrect and based on extremely limited investigation by the parties involved.
>
> We are of the opinion that there is no requirement to install a hob to prevent water entry and in fact, the installation of a hob would create unnecessary expenses to be incurred due to the necessity to completely replace the existing doors to facilitate this. A hob would also create a potential, unnecessary tripping hazard to the door opening. Furthermore we consider it most likely that the waterproofing to the hobs would likely fail over time as the movement between the hob and slab (cold joint) would put stress on the water proofing.
> A sufficient step down is available to be incorporated into the retiling of the external deck area. We are strongly of the opinion that the installation of a hob would have no additional or beneficial effects on the waterproofing performance of this area if the step down mentioned above is incorporated."

[44] When considered with the sworn, unchallenged evidence on oath by Mr Groom and Mr Aldridge's report the statement made by Ms Donnelly in her affidavit at paragraph [41] affirmed before Mr Woodall is clearly incorrect.

[45] The rest of her affidavit establishes conclusively in my view, that the dispute over compliance with Mr Tooheys' orders will never be settled by discussion between the parties. Further adjudication applications have been made and are pending. The last adjudication application concerns the Body Corporate's decision (opposed by Mrs Shaw) to appoint yet another engineer Mr Steve Waite to review the "hob" solution. A motion was passed which had the effect of imposing on Mr and Mrs Shaw the responsibility for the cost of Mr Waite's report if it confirmed that the Body Corporate's preferred solution of hobs was confirmed by him. The Shaws were successful in having that part of the motion, transferring liability to them, restrained by an interim order made 18 December 2014. In the submission to the Body Corporate to the adjudicator in relation to final orders sought by the Shaws in relation to that application, inferentially drafted by Ms Donnelly, it still alleges a miscellany of alleged false and misleading statements by the Shaws. It demonstrates once again, from the Body Corporate's own material the extent of animus between the committee, which is controlled by the Donnellys, and the Shaws. Consistently with some of the statements made by Ms Donnelly in her affidavits filed in support of the stay application, it contains highly critical and inflammatory statements e.g. at page 368 of her affidavits.

[46] In her affidavit paragraphs [83]–[91] she raises once again the prospect of an application to the Supreme Court for declaratory relief, even exhibiting a draft application (p 424) seeking to set aside a number of Mr Tooheys' orders against which the Body Corporate did not choose to appeal under the Act.

[47] Ms Donnelly filed another affidavit sworn on 23 March 2015. Relevantly, and annexed to the affidavit was a draft affidavit of Mr Waite and his report in which he recommends hobs. She also refers to an EGM on 30 July 2014 in which motions to raise funds and strike a levy to pay for rectification works totalling $131,250 gross were proposed. The first was not passed, because all six lot owners were required to vote yes, but the second motion was passed but the Body Corporate has not yet acted on the motion "because of the risk to the lot owners that they would have committed funds … and would have been unable to be used because of the constant disputing by the Lot 6 owners".

[48] She also referred to a payment of an invoice from Boss dated 15 October 2014 for $13,274.80 for repairs to the roof and soffits. Mrs Shaw refers to this in her 5.1.15 affidavit and says she cannot say if these works complied with 1(d) of the adjudicator's orders. Given the uncontested evidence of Mrs Shaw about the amount of water that entered her unit in February it could hardly be contended that whatever work has been done has gone anywhere near satisfying Mr Toohey's orders.

The position of the parties below

[49] As I have noted, written submissions were handed to his Honour and these were supplemented by oral submissions. The first issue raised by the Body Corporate is the same issue raised in Ground 1 on appeal; that is, because there were two extant adjudications in train under the Act initiated by Mrs Shaw, the proceedings before his Honour were an abuse of process, as the applicant Mrs Shaw, was "maintaining several proceedings at the same time for an improper purpose". In her written submission, and consistently with many statements in her affidavit, Ms Donnelly submitted on behalf of the Body Corporate that "strict compliance with the adjudicator's orders is impossible in light of evidence now available: expert report of Steven Waite".

[50] Then there was an argument to the effect that his Honour lacked jurisdiction to make the orders, despite reference being made to s 287(3) of the Act. This argument is not advanced on appeal, but has morphed into a submission that the Magistrate did not have regard to "proper legal principles" for the appointment of an administrator pursuant to s 287(3). This argument extended to a challenge to some of the orders made as being beyond power. In this part of the submission, Ms Donnelly referred to the Boss contract; asserting that the contract complied with Mr Tooheys' orders. This issue is taken up in paragraphs 4 and 5 and 7 of the Grounds and was really the main focus of the Body Corporate's argument on appeal.

[51] In relation to the "legal principles" point, reference is made to a decision of the now disbanded Consumer Credit Tribunal at [60] of the written outline. Ms Donnelly made a submission to the effect that placing a Body Corporate into administration is used sparingly in particular circumstances: Surace v Commisso [2009] CCT KA002-09 at paragraph 44:

> "An applicant must therefore demonstrate to the required standard that such a step is appropriate. Typically, without attempting to be exhaustive, there will be evidence that the body corporate is so dysfunctional that it > cannot operate properly within the statutory framework that governs it, or that there is a well founded suspicion, on the part of an applicant for appointment of an administrator of financial malpractice within the body corporate, or that there is conduct that amounts to undue oppression in the conduct of its affairs. Without more, mere disagreements between the members, especially when the disputes are due to reasonably held differences of view and there are means available to resolve them by reference to external processes (will not usually support the exercise of the discretion)"(I have inserted these words as the quote in the submissions seemed to be missing the conclusion and I was not given the case by the appellant).

[52] Mrs Shaw's case below was that despite the passage of 883 days since Mr Toohey's order and 602 days since the failure of the Body Corporate to obtain orders that she and her husband keep their lot in good repair, the orders have not complied with, and Lot 6 was still leaking badly. Her submission made by Mr Sinclair pointed out that the main item in dispute and the most expensive is order 1(e). She referred to Ms Donnelly's affidavit filed on 23 March 2015 and Exhibit D to the affidavit, the minutes of the EGM on 30 July 2014. Motions 4 and 5 proposed by Mrs Shaw were to investigate the differences alleged by her between Mr Tooheys' orders and the Boss contract, and to request written confirmation from Boss "that all works quoted within the contract are completely in accordance with the adjudication order", were lost four against two in favour. Not surprisingly, her submission was that the Body Corporate was not willing and not ready to implement Mr Tooheys' orders. The submission referred to the adjudication order sought by the Body Corporate which was dealt with on 30 July 2013 — this was the adjudication to which the Body Corporate sought to have hobs installed described by the adjudicator as misconceived and without substance.

[53] Mr Sinclair and Ms Donnelly made further oral submissions. Her submission expanded on the written submission, asserting the application was an abuse of process, that the Body Corporate was acting reasonably and endeavouring to comply with the orders; and was being unreasonably prevented from doing so by the actions of Mr and Mrs Shaw. She referred in some detail to the Boss contract, but agreed with his Honour that the repair of the upper level deck of unit 6 had not been completed. I take that to be a reference to order 1(e).

The Magistrate's decision

[54] I have referred above to the circumstances in which his Honour gave his decision at a time earlier than he had anticipated. His reasons are brief, and it is alleged are inadequate. His Honour referred to the extensive material filed by the Body Corporate and he said he had considered it carefully.

> "As I indicated on the day this matter was argued my instinct was to appoint at (sic) administrator because relations between the lot owner and the respondent were so bad that it could not be expected that they could attend to the issues raised in the adjudicator's decision."

[55] He referred to the authority raised by Ms Donnelly without actually citing it and wrote:

> "An administrator is a person who directs or manages the affairs of another. An administration allows the management of a business or other organisation. The application before the Court is not to replace all of the obligations and duties of the Body Corporate. The application seeks orders directly related to the enforcement of the order of the adjudicator. The test that law in relation to Body Corporate administration needs to be considered in the light of the fact that this is an enforcement proceeding. Although extensive powers are sought to be given to the administrator it is intended that those powers are given to them to allow them to effectively discharge the terms of the order of the adjudicator, without interference and with an open mind to the topic.
> Much was written in affidavits about why things had not been done and why it was one party's fault and not another's.
> [140752]
>
> In terms of decision to appoint an administrator I don't think I need to reach a concluded view in relation to whose fault it is.
>
> It was submitted that I should consider whether or not the respondent was ready, willing and able to comply with the adjudicator's decision and that on a balanced consideration of that submission I should conclude that the respondent was not ready, not willing, and not able to comply with the decision.
>
> In reaching my decision I would like to clearly state that I have considered all of the matters raised in that respect. Although I have not referred to all the matters raised in this written decision, it is not because I have ignored those other matters. The matters to which I intend to refer are things which I think are relevant to the decision that I have reached in relation to the appointment of an administrator.
> 1. The applicant holds minority interest within the community title scheme;
> 2. The scheme is not managed by a professional Body Corporate manager;
> 3. The chairman of the Body Corporate committee holds and interest in four of the six total lots;
> 4. It would appear that the chairman also sold to the applicant the unit which it seems is perhaps been most effected by the water membrane problem;
> 5. There has been extensive correspondence sent and received by the parties in relation to the determination which readily allows the conclusion to be reached that the parties' positions are relatively entrenched;

6. There have been a number of meetings to try and resolve the apparent impasse without success;
7. It has been approximately two and a half years since the adjudicator's decision was made;
8. Other legal proceedings have been contemplated or threatened or taken without the position being advanced; the respondent it seems delivered an ultimatum which included an application to the Supreme Court to appoint an administrator yet has not advanced that in any way.
9. Although some work has been done it seems conceded that the most expensive and the most significant component of the work remains to be done;
10. The adjudicator's decision has not been challenged by an appeal—and it would appear to me at least that the decision was given careful consideration to the competing positions and the obligations under the Act. (sic)
11. An adjudicator in another decision considered the operations of the Body Corporate under the Act and found there was no need for an administrator. There was a cave (sic) used expressed (sic)

'However the Body Corporate needs to be aware that factionalism or hostility between owners may be grounds for appointing an administrator, particularly if circumstances create an atmosphere which leads to endemic disputation or it is established circumstances are not conducive to a balance (sic) consideration of issues and the result (sic) decisions are not in the best interest of owners.'"

[56] Later in his reasons he wrote:

"All of the material filed by both parties demonstrate (sic) palpably that there is little or no real prospect that the adjudicator's decision will be complied (sic) 'as soon as practicable' with without (sic) the appointment of administrator…

The attraction of an administrator being appointed is that the administrator is a professional administrator — has statutory obligations — and as I understand fiduciary obligations that it needs to discharge. It appears to be that an independent administrator charged with the responsibility of achieving compliance with the adjudicator's decision is the best alternative to a negotiated outcome which seems impossible. The professional administrator would certainly not have any problems with any suggestion of partiality in terms of the dispute and would hopefully look at what needs to be done with open eyes and with a clear objective, namely to ensure that the adjudicator's decision is complied with.

It has been 883 days since the adjudicator made his decision.

Clearly the problems need prompt attention…"

[57] He appeared to reject Mrs Shaw's contention of an issue of estoppel in relation to the hobs without referring to the extensive evidence about that issue, and he rejected without specific reasons that the application was an abuse of process. Apart from an oblique reference in 9. above, he did not refer to the Body Corporate's contention, advanced more forcibly on appeal that there is in existence a binding contract to perform the works the subject of the orders, and that is a factor that strongly militates against exercising the discretion to appoint an administrator.

The appeal

[58] I will deal with the grounds of appeal seriatim.

Ground 1—abuse of process

[59] This was a ground not forcibly advanced on appeal. Clearly Mrs Shaw was entitled to file the orders and seek the appointment of an administrator. The previous attempt to have an administrator appointed under the Act did not succeed, but in any event the orders sought by the Shaws were intended to invest much more power in the administrator on that occasion than is provided for in his Honour's orders. It could not be seriously argued that the dispute over the implementation of the orders, which has extended over years, had, by the end of 2014, reached a complete impasse. The attitude of the body corporate to the orders is demonstrated vividly by its threat to seek the vacation of many of the adjudicator's orders including 1(e) by way of equitable relief in the Supreme Court. In passing the delay in making such an application would in all the circumstances militate strongly against its success. It does however demonstrate the attitude of the Body Corporate to the adjudicator's orders.

[60] The two unresolved adjudicator's references referred to by Ms Donnelly in her written submission below made by Mrs Shaw clearly relate to the central issue in dispute i.e. the extent to which the Body Corporate has complied with the orders, and the extent to which the Boss contract addresses the orders. It is telling that when Mrs Shaw sought this information (effectively) at the EGM on 30 July 2014, her two motions were defeated four to two — I infer the Donnellys voted as a bloc and the other independent owner voted with Mrs Shaw. There is no merit in this ground.

Ground 2 — disregard for proper legal principles and failure to properly exercise the discretion

[61] As I have noted his Honour specifically referred to the case relied upon below by the Body Corporate without referring to its name. The same case is referred to in Ms Donnelly's submission below is referred to by the Body Corporate on appeal at paragraphs 26 to 28 of its written outline.

[62] Clearly the decision to appoint an administrator under s 287(3) of the Act involves the exercise of judicial discretion. Otherwise s 287 provides no guidance as to how that discretion is to be exercised, nor does the section in the Act dealing with an adjudicator's power to appoint an administrator. I agree with Mrs Shaw that because the order sought here was for the appointment of an administrator for a limited purpose, it is not necessary to find that the Body Corporate has become dysfunctional, or was engaging in financial malpractice. As I have noted on a number of occasions, it cannot be seriously argued that the impasse between the owners of Lot 6, the lot most significantly affected by significant and serious water leaks to the building, and the body corporate itself, is in a state of irretrievable stalemate. I agree that the financial implications for the Body Corporate, particularly in relation to the Boss contract, are a relevant factor; as is the uncontested evidence that despite the Body Corporate expending monies to (as it says) comply with the orders, as recently as February 2015, Lot 6 was severely inundated.

[63] I agree with the submission made by Mr Hughes QC and Mr Sinclair in their written outline on behalf of Mrs Shaw:

> "(1) First, the power is a discretionary power which ought to be exercised:
>
> (i) judicially; and
>
> [140754]
> (ii) having regard to available evidence and inferences able to be drawn from that evidence when the issues will no doubt vary with respect to the nature of the administration sought, and the particular facts of the case;
> (iii) with reference to the specific purpose of the appointment."

[64] The Body Corporate's written outline, as with its approach before his Honour, was to contend that it has acted reasonably at all times to comply with the orders and that Mrs Shaw has deliberately hindered it in carrying out its duties. The evidence of Ms Donnelly on its own, referred to above, does not support that contention but, in my opinion, it was not necessary for his Honour to determine ultimately who was at fault. I accept the submission made at paragraph 26 of Mrs Shaw's submission on appeal:

> "in this regard, particularly where the disagreement stretches over many months, even years; involves numerous applications by the parties with attendant legal costs and delays; burdens the courts and tribunals; involves constant inability to agree with respect to the manner of complying with an outstanding order; where the parties are clearly at odds, the appointment of an administrator is likely to be proper exercise of discretion."

[65] The evidence clearly establishes that the parties will not agree as to whether the adjudicator's orders have been or will be complied with without the intervention of an independent administrator. There is no merit in this ground.

Grounds 4, 5 and 7 — the BOSS contract issue

[66] It is the Body Corporate's contention that there exists a binding contract between it and BOSS to perform the works required by the adjudicator's orders. The contract was before his Honour as an annexure to one of Ms Donnelly's affidavits and he certainly referred to it in the hearing, but not in his reasons. The Body Corporate submits that this is a factor that is strongly against the exercise of a discretion pursuant to s 287(3) of the Act, and his Honour's failure to deal with it in his reasons constitutes appellable error.

[67] For convenience I will refer to the copy of the contract which is Exhibit JAD1 to Ms Donnelly's affidavit filed in these proceedings on 23 April 2015.

[68] The contract is in a standard form Master Builders Commercial Building Contract. Clause 1(a) refers to the "Works"; and the works are described ("a brief description") on p 3 of the contract thus:

> "As per BOSS Building Maintenance (Australia) Pty Ltd attached QUOTATION 1651/41594-1 $98,406 including GST dated 30 May 2013 including our General Terms and Conditions and as per Scope of Works requested in correspondence dated 11 February 2013 from Ray Donnelly and additional Scope of Works requested in correspondence dated 29 May 2013 from Jennifer Donnelly updated quotation with additional items raised after Adjudication Application. Excludes any works not stated in our quotation and excludes any works associated with removal, manufacture and installation of windows and doors. This is by others as per the scope of works requested in correspondence dated 11 February 2013 from Ray Donnelly. Excludes any building certification, council application or engineers fees."

[69] There is also a special condition at p 5 which may be relevant to the scope of the works covered by the contract:

> "As per BOSS Building Maintenance (Australia) Pty Ltd QUOTATION 1651/41594-1 $98,406 including GST dated 30 May 2013 including BOSS Building Maintenance General Terms and Conditions, Master Buildings General Conditions LS32-07/2013 and as per Scope of Works requested in correspondence dated 11 February 2013 from Ray Donnelly and additional Scope of Works requested in correspondence dated 29 May 2013 from Jennifer Donnelly updated quotation with additional items raised after Adjudication Application. All the above documents are attached and form part of this contract. Excludes any works not stated in our quotation and excludes any works associated with removal, manufacture and installation of windows and doors (sic) this is by others > as per the scope of works requested by correspondence dated 11 February 2014 from Ray Donnelly. Excludes any building certification, council application, Qleave or engineers fees or any other costs not included in our quotation. Access to unit 6 and Common Areas and any other part of the building where we need access to complete the works is the responsibility of the Body Corporate. Should we commence works and any areas of access is denied or delayed access (sic) and we have to leave site additional costs will be incurred by the Body Corporate for reestablishment of site work. BOSS will only take instructions from the Body Corporate representative, please advise us in writing of this representative."

[70] There is no date inserted for commencement of the contract or a date for practical completion. As indicated there purports to be attachments, the most significant of which is the quotation dated 30 May 2013 which is said to be valid for 45 days. The contract is dated 10 September 2013 and signed on behalf of the Body Corporate by Mr Donnelly.

[71] The adjudicator's orders are set out above. Apart from the reference above, there is no reference anywhere to the actual particulars of the adjudicator's orders in the Boss contract. The most comprehensive description of the works covered by the contract is that set out in the quotation dated 30 May 2013. The correspondence allegedly from Ray and Jennifer Donnelly referred to in the contract is not annexed to the contract.

[72] The Boss quotation and contract can be contrasted with the quote from Pandanus Constructions. This quotation dated February 2013 forms part of Exhibit JAD3 to the affidavit of Ms Donnelly filed on 23 April 2015 in these proceedings. In her affidavit Ms Donnelly states that Mrs Shaw organised two quotes from Pandanus and J Hutchinson Pty Ltd. These quotes were certainly considered by the Body Corporate but not accepted. The Pandanus Constructions quote dated 6 February 2013, (unlike the Boss quote attached to the contract) specifically refers to the adjudicator's orders and the items listed by reference to the orders and quotes amounts by reference to order numbers. For example, the Pandanus Constructions quote quotes an amount of $84,275.60 to comply with orders 1(e)a., b. and d. and $6,285 to comply with order 1(e)c., and refers to other matters set out in the adjudicator's orders.

[73] As I have noted, the quotation from Boss, which was for less than half of the other two quotations, does not in terms address the orders. The Body Corporate has not relied upon any affidavit from the principal of Boss or any correspondence from him to the effect that the quotation does address the orders. This has to be considered in light of the undoubted animus between the Shaws and the Donnellys, who control the committee, and the reality that it is the Shaw's unit that is most substantially affected by the water leaks. As indicated before, one of the significant issues now in dispute between the parties is whether or not hobs need to be installed. Certainly the Boss quote refers to it but quotes only for a modest sum. The orders do no mention hobs, and a fair reading of Mr Toohey's decision (particularly paragraphs [45]–[47]) suggests he did not agree with Mr Saint's opinion about construction of a hob inside the doors of unit 6. Without any evidence from the principal of Boss, it is difficult for me to undertake a meaningful comparison of the Boss quote with the orders to ascertain if in fact the works address adequately the adjudicator's orders. As I have noted, the Pandanus quote specifically refers to the orders.

[74] I do not accept Ms Skennar's submission that Mrs Shaw has either directly or inferentially accepted that the Boss contract addresses the adjudicator's orders. She referred me in argument to correspondence at pp 281 and 287 of Volume 2, but not to Mrs Shaw's letter to Ms Donnelly at p 279 dated 20 June 2014. The letter refers to the Boss contract. It seems to seek that information be obtained from Mr Kemp (apparently the principal of Boss) and proposes that he visit the site to "quote according to the adjudicator's orders 0846-2011. This order has all rectifications clearly stated that the Body Corporate is responsible for. This will invariably avoid his company's position (and the position of the Body Corporate) being compromised if there are indeed unforeseen variations in the works or further costs".

The letter in response from Ms Donnelly dated 21 June 2014 did not address that issue and in effect stated that the contract was in force.

[75] This is not the forum to decide if the Boss contract is binding. It has features (lack of a commencement and practical completion date, and the fact that a fundamental term, the costs of the works referred to in a quotation was valid for only 45 days) that tend to undermine the submission that it is a valid and binding contract.

[76] As I have noted, the hobs issue has become significant, so significant that Boss would not guarantee the works unless hobs were installed. As I have noted, Mr Groom was the only engineer who provided an affidavit in the proceedings below, and his opinion unchallenged by cross-examination was that hobs were not necessary to comply with the adjudicator's orders. Mr Waite's report which contains a contrary opinion was annexed only in draft form to one of Ms Donelly's affidavits, so necessarily he could not have been cross-examined. As I have noted, a fair reading of Mr Toohey's reasons suggests he did not agree with Mr Saint's opinion that problems with the upper level waterproofing membrane, to the effect that the membrane would be repaired in three places and a hob installed on the floor inside the doors of unit 6, was sufficient. Ms Donnelly's response is to engage another engineer, Mr Waite, whose, unsworn report was attached to one of her affidavits below.

[77] In relation to this issue of whether the Boss contract covers the work specified in the orders, it is clear, consistent with its attitude throughout, particularly from its response to one of the extant adjudication applications made by Mrs Shaw (p 405 of volume 2) that the Body Corporate was not prepared to provide correspondence between itself and Mr Kemp prior to the receipt of the quotation attached to the Boss contract. That correspondence, or as I noted a statement from Mr Kemp, might assist in deciding whether or not the works covered by the contract do cover the works contemplated by the orders. As I have noted earlier, when Mrs Shaw moved motions to compel this disclosure at the 30 July 2014 EGM the motions were defeated by the Donnellys voting as a bloc.

> "43. Two further things need to be said:
> (a) First, if it be the fact that the Body Corporate has entered into a contract in respect of works to ameliorate water penetration to Mrs Shaw's unit, but that contract does not provide for scope of works ordered by the adjudicator, Mr Toohey, then that is a problem for the Body Corporate (in terms of the contractual arrangements it has entered to the exclusion of Mrs Shaw). It involves conduct and consequences for which the Body Corporate is responsible irrelevant to satisfying its obligations under the adjudicator's orders;
> (b) Second, the appellant's submissions overlook the proposition that the administrator appointed may, in the independent discharge of his duties, choose to pursue Boss as the preferred contractor. The administrator will be in a position if so advised:
> (i) to review the terms of the contract;
> (ii) to ensure the contract addresses the order of the adjudicator and, if not, to seek the variations to ensure that it does;
> (iii) to otherwise negotiate a contemporary contract price; the commencement dates, and a date for practical completion and, if the administrator thinks appropriate;
> (iv) to engage Boss to complete the works."

[79] Both propositions appear to me to be self-evident. Ms Skennar on behalf of the Body Corporate was dismissive of both propositions, arguing that the administrators' obligations under the impugned orders are to, in effect, start the process again. I think the answer to this dispute is that the orders made appropriately do not constrain the administrator in how it undertakes its appointment. To suggest otherwise would be to speculate.

[80] In my view, the existence of the contract was a relevant issue for his Honour to consider in the exercise of his discretion. His failure to do so was an error. However, in undertaking the analysis above in relation to this discrete issue, I have concluded that, in conjunction with other factors, and in particular the animus between the parties; the uncertainty over the extent to which the Boss contract addresses the adjudicator's orders, the attitude of the Body Corporate in refusing to provide information that may assist Mrs Shaw to determine if the contract does address the orders; the fact that it is her unit that is most seriously threatened by admitted serious defects in the building (the rectification of which by the orders is the responsibility of the Body Corporate); and the fact that despite saying it is ready, willing and able to comply with the orders, the actions of the Body Corporate e.g. the threatened application to the Supreme Court, strongly suggest otherwise, in exercising the discretion afresh, taking into account this discrete issue, the same orders should be made.

Remaining appeal grounds

[81] It is submitted that his Honour's decision was coloured by his view of a possible conflict of interest in Ms Donnelly representing the Body Corporate. As I have noted, he was concerned about this issue and does refer to it in his reasons and referred to it frequently during the hearing, but I cannot detect any basis for inferring that he allowed his view on this discrete issue to affect the exercise of his judicial discretion. His expression that he was "horrified by what [he] read" is saying no more than it is alarming that despite the orders being made over two and a-half years ago, they have still not been complied with. I have dealt with the attribution of blame argument earlier. It is without merit to suggest that his Honour was referring only to the Body Corporate when he said this and for that reason he denied it procedural fairness.

[82] The substance of his Honour's reasons are set out above. In Ms Skennar's submission 41, she refers to Soulemezis v Dudley (Holdings) Pty Ltd (1987) 10 NSWLR 247 at 259 where Kirby J (as his Honour then was) said (in effect) that in order for reasons to be adequate they must "state generally and briefly the grounds which have led him or her to the conclusion reached concerning disputed factual questions and to list the findings on principal contested issues". In the same case McHugh JA (as his Honour then was) said:

> "If an obligation to give reasons for a decision exists its discharge does not require lengthy or elaborate reasons: Ex parte Powter; Re Powter (1945) 46 SR (NSW) 1 at 5; 63 WN 34 at 36. But it is necessary that the essential ground or grounds upon which the decision rests should be articulated."

[83] At 55 of their submission Mr Hughes QC and Mr Sinclair referred to a more comprehensive analysis of the law in respect of this topic for this jurisdiction in the decision of the Court of Appeal in Sunland Group Ltd v Townsville City Council & Ors [2012] QCA 30 wherein the Court adopted with approval what had been said earlier in Drew v Makita (Australia) Pty Ltd [2009] 2 Qd. R. 219 (see [36]). Of particular relevance in this case, emerging from the principles adopted by the Court of Appeal in this State are the following:

> (a) The extent to which a trial judge must expose his or her reasoning will depend on the nature of the issues for determination and for that reason, what is required has been expressed in a variety of ways;
> (b) What is required is a basic explanation of the fundamental reasons which led the judge to his (or her) conclusion — there is no requirement for an extended intellectual dissertation upon the chain of reasoning.

[84] I say in passing that this approach is not common, as demonstrated by the length of these reasons. Mark Twain famously said, "I didn't have time to write a short letter, so I wrote a long one instead."

[85] As I have noted, his Honour did not deal adequately in his reasons with the contract issue. He was clearly keen to give a decision, perhaps because of the urgency engendered by the unchallenged evidence of Mrs Shaw of very significant water inundation at the end of February 2015. It would have been preferable for his Honour to undertake a somewhat more extensive analysis of the evidence, but there can be no reason to doubt that he had read it and the submissions prior to making his decision. In my view, the reasons are sufficient. In any event, as I have indicated, for the reasons I have stated if I had exercised the discretion afresh, I would have reached the same conclusion as his Honour.

Unfortunately the Body Corporate's submission was not written in a form that addressed the grounds of appeal. It also argues that Mrs Shaw had consistently voted in favour of payments being made in furtherance of a contract. The evidence — indeed, the evidence of Ms Donnelly — did not support that proposition. In her affidavit filed 23 April 2015 in support of the stay application, she states (by reference to the Boss contract):

> "8. This contract has been commenced with some of the work undertaken. For example the roof has been repaired.
> 9. There was a written variation to the contract to repair the roof as the Body Corporate sought to completely rectify all defects in the roof not just those items that were initially identified in the initial contract in 2013. Delay in getting the work completed meant that the problem had become significantly worse."

[87] She then proceeds to exhibit a tax invoice from Boss dated 15 October 2014 for "repairs to roof and soffits" for $18,780. It is said to relate to quotation 10000232 — August 14, 2014. Mrs Shaw did vote for this sum to be paid. The quotation number dated 13 May 2013 annexed to and forming part of the contract is 1651/41594-1. The later works were described in a scope of works prepared on 10 September 2014 (i.e. a year after the contract was signed) by Plumbing Design and Drafting. The contract quote provides for only a sum of $2,650 for "repairs to roof soffit linings …". These are clearly works not covered by the contract quote, and a strong inference can be drawn that it was a separate scope of works and not a variation of the contract. Mr Hughes QC and Mr Sinclair describe Ms Donnelly's sworn statement that "the roof has been repaired" as "incredible". It is very loose language indeed, given what occurred to lot 6 in the heavy rain in February i.e. after these works were completed.

[88] In my reasons above, I have referred to some of the other points made on appeal which are not attributed to a specific ground. In my opinion the appeal should be dismissed, and I so order. Both parties were given an opportunity to make submissions about costs at the conclusion of the appeal hearing. I order the appellant to pay the respondent's costs of and incidental to the appeal on the standard basis, and I certify for two counsel. I am satisfied that the matter is of sufficient complexity to require two counsel, particularly given the importance of the matter to the respondent. The parties agree that I have power to deal with costs below, and the Body Corporate should pay those costs as well on the standard basis. It goes without saying that Mrs Shaw should not have to contribute to any levy struck in order to satisfy the costs orders.

[89] I will give the parties liberty to apply by the giving of three days' notice in writing.

Delivered on 06 March 2015

Misleading and deceptive conduct — Where parties entered into a sale contract to purchase an apartment "off-the-plan" — Where buyer refused to complete the contract due to obstructed views — Where buyer claimed that they were induced to enter into the contract by the seller's misleading representations regarding the views — Trade Practices Act 1974, s 52 (since replaced by the Competition and Consumer Act 2010).

The plaintiff seller entered into a sale contract with the defendant buyer in respect of an "off-the-plan" apartment to be built in Surfers Paradise. The apartment was to be built on the 52nd floor. The agreed price was $3,150,000.

The buyer refused to complete the contract as a result of the waters views being partially obscured by a new 77-floor apartment tower (called "Soul") having being built between the coastline and the apartment. The market value of the apartment on termination of the contract was $1,650,000.

The seller sought damages for the buyer's non-performance of the contract. The buyer countered that the conduct of the seller's agents by making various statements about the view which could be expected from the apartment, contravened the misleading and deceptive conduct provisions of s 52 of the then Trade Practices Act 1974 (Cth). In particular, it was alleged that the seller's agent made the following statements:

- that once the apartment was constructed, it would be unobstructed by any other building
- the apartment would be protected from being obstructed because the local council would not approve another building of such a height that it would obstruct the views.

The buyer also asserted he was given sales brochures which depicted unobstructed views.

Held: for the seller.

1. The overall outlook from the apartment would have been better without the Soul apartment building in front of it. Further, the apartment would probably have been more valuable with an entirely unobstructed view of the ocean.

2. However it would have been surprising if the buyer was not made aware of the Soul development at the time he made investigations about purchasing the apartment, especially given the obviousness of the Soul development which was under construction at this time. Further, given the obviousness of the development, it would have been unlikely for the seller's agents to have made the representations at all. Additionally, it was unlikely that the purchaser decided to purchase an apartment off-the-plan at a price of more than $3m without giving any consideration to what was otherwise available in the same market, especially given this was not his first investment in real estate.

3. Further even though the images in the brochure clearly represented unobstructed views, there was no text within the brochures which suggested that the locality would remain the same as depicted in those images or that there was some impediment to the development of that locality from the relevant planning laws.

4. Additionally, the fact that the buyer was an experienced property investor (or the seller's agent believed him to be so) made it even less likely that the seller's agent made the representations given there was such a small prospect that those assurances would be accepted as credible. "After all, the locality was central Surfers Paradise with very many high rise buildings. There is nothing suggested by the evidence which might have caused a buyer to think that there had been some recent change in the planning laws, such that a nearby building could not be constructed to the height of that which was to be constructed to include their apartment."

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

G Handran (instructed by Hickey Lawyers) for the plaintiff.

No appearance for the first or second defendants (first defendant appeared on his own behalf).

Before: McMurdo J

McMurdo J:

[1] The plaintiff's claim is for damages for the defendants' non-performance of a contract for their purchase of an apartment in Surfers Paradise. It was a contract for the sale of an apartment "off the plan" in a development described as Hilton Surfers Paradise Hotel and Residences. The contract was to be completed after registration of the relevant plan and the creation of a separate title for the apartment. The agreed price was $3,150,000.

[2] In August 2011, the plan was registered and a separate lot was created. Settlement became due on 8 September 2011. The defendants refused to complete the contract, having purported to terminate it on 12 July 2011.

There was also a contract between the parties for the sale of certain furniture for the apartment. It became due for completion also on 8 September 2011. The plaintiff claims nominal damages for the non-performance of that contract, suggesting that an award of $100 would be appropriate.

[4] The claim for damages for breach of the contract of sale of the apartment is quantified as follows:

Contract price	$3,150,000
Market value of the apartment on termination of the contract	$1,650,000
	$1,500,000
Less deposit	$315,000
	$1,185,000
Less commission saved	$67,650
Amount claimed	$1,117,350

[5] The defendants' pleaded case raised essentially two defences. The first was in reliance upon the then terms of s 25(1) of the Land Sales Act 1984 (Qld). That defence was not pursued at the trial. The second defence alleged that there was conduct which contravened the then provisions of s 52 of the Trade Practices Act 1974 (Cth) and by which the defendants were induced to enter into the contract. By their counterclaim, the defendants pleaded that they should have such relief under s 87 of that Act as would avoid their loss from having entered into the contract.

[6] When their case was pleaded, the defendants were legally represented. But at the trial they were without representation. Mr Hingston appeared at the trial, giving evidence and arguing his case. Mrs Hingston did not appear at the trial. The defendants have the same address for service. The only explanation for her absence came from Mr Hingston who said that Mrs Hingston "couldn't make it today".[1] At a time when the defendants were legally represented, the case was set down to be tried on 3 June 2014. Mr Hingston unsuccessfully applied for an adjournment on 30 May 2014. But on his application on 3 June 2014, I adjourned the trial to 16 September 2014. There was then no appearance by Mrs Hingston. On 16 September, the trial was adjourned to 23 September 2014. Again there was then no appearance by Mrs Hingston.

The plaintiff's case

[7] At a time when the defendants were legally represented, the plaintiff served a Notice to Admit Facts on 11 March 2013, asking them to admit that the market value of the apartment as at September 2011 was $1,650,000 and that its value as at August 2012 was $1,450,000. On 25 March 2013, the defendants' solicitor replied, enclosing a notice which disputed those facts. But later that day, the defendants' solicitor wrote again, withdrawing that notice disputing facts which he explained by saying that he was mistaken as to his instructions. The fact that the apartment was worth $1,650,000 as at September 2011 was thereby admitted.[2]

[8] The amount of the contract price and the deposit paid are not disputed. The deposit was paid by an initial payment of $31,500 with the balance being provided by a bank guarantee. The amount guaranteed was paid to the plaintiff's solicitors on 28 September 2011.[3]

[9] The defendants did not admit the component of the plaintiff's claim which was the reduction in their favour for agents' commission. There is in evidence an invoice from Elfbest Pty Ltd, the agent which introduced the defendants for this contract, dated 1 August 2011. When the contract was terminated in September 2011, the plaintiff had other agents, charging a lower rate of commission. The plaintiff's claim allows the defendants a reduction for the difference between the commission which was to be paid to Elfbest Pty Ltd and that which would have been payable to the other agents and on a sale price at the property's then value of $1,650,000.

There was no case pleaded by the defendants which was to the effect that some reduction should be made in this respect but in a greater amount. And at the trial Mr Hingston made no submission in that respect. The plaintiff has conceded this reduction from its claim although, according to its written submissions, Elfbest Pty Ltd was paid.[4]

One other matter should be considered about the quantum of the plaintiff's claim. The contract for the sale of the apartment provided, by special condition 5, that the plaintiff agreed to contribute $23,350 towards the total cost ($46,700) of the furniture to be supplied under the furniture contract between the parties. It was agreed that that sum would be paid by the plaintiff at settlement of the two contracts. Therefore had the two contracts been completed, the defendants would have paid effectively $23,350 for the furniture. That furniture was placed in the apartment before the contract was terminated. But because there was no valuation evidence, I do not know whether the furniture has affected the value of the apartment according to the valuation upon which the plaintiff's claim was formulated. I must assume that the amount of $1,650,000 was the value of the apartment without that furniture. Therefore, the comparison between the plaintiff's position under the subject contract (for the sale of the apartment) had that contract been performed and its position upon termination of the contract requires the plaintiff's claim to be reduced by $23,350, in order to represent the net value of the contract for the sale of the apartment.

[11] As I have noted, there is no claim for substantial damages for breach of the furniture contract. There is no evidence as to the value of the furniture.

[12] Therefore, the claimed amount of the plaintiff's damages is proved by a combination of admissions and evidence, except that there should be a reduction for that sum of $23,350.

Land Sales Act

[13] Before discussing the s 52 case for the defendants, something should be said of the defence which was pleaded in reliance upon the Land Sales Act. Section 21 of the Act required the plaintiff to give to the defendants, before entering upon their purchase of a proposed lot, a written statement which, amongst other things, clearly identified the lot to be purchased. Section 21(4) provided that where a prospective vendor was also required under s 49 of the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 (Qld) to give a statement in accordance with that section, it would be sufficient compliance with s 21(1) if the particulars were included in the s 49 statement. Prior to the defendants entering into the subject contract, the plaintiff gave them a statement for the purposes of those two provisions. It described the proposed lot by reference to a plan within the statement, which depicted the boundaries of the lots on the subject floor of the building. The plan represented that the subject apartment would have an internal area of 166 square metres and two balconies of 19 square metres and 7 square metres respectively.

[14] Section 22 of the Land Sales Act then provided that if a statement of particulars referred to in s 21(1) contained information that subsequently became inaccurate, it was the duty of the vendor to give a further statement as soon as was reasonably practicable after the proposed lot became a registered lot. Section 25 then provided that where such a statement was given under s 22, the purchaser could avoid the contract if "materially prejudiced" by the inaccuracy of the original statement.

[15] On 8 July 2011, the lot was registered. Four days later, the plaintiff through its solicitors gave a statement pursuant to s 22. It disclosed that the internal area had become 163 square metres, a reduction of three square metres, and that the area of the smaller balcony had been increased from seven square metres to eight square metres. The locations of the balconies and of the apartment itself within this floor of the building remain unchanged.

[16] The defendants pleaded that they were materially prejudiced by that suggested inaccuracy in the original disclosure statement. They alleged that the "amenity of the Property" was "less desirable" and that its value was less for these changes. They alleged that had the lot been described in the s 21 statement as it was in the s 22 statement, they would not have contracted to buy it. They therefore claimed to be entitled to avoid the contract under s 25(1) of the Land Sales Act. It is unsurprising that this defence was not pursued at the trial and that there was no evidence which was tendered in an attempt to prove that the defendants were materially prejudiced as they had alleged.

The misrepresentation case as pleaded

[17] The case pleaded by the defendants is that there were several representations made to them by the plaintiff's agents on the same day which they cannot identify but which was "on a weekend in early March 2008".[5] Their case is that there were representations made to them by Candice McGregor at the offices of Elfbest Pty Ltd on Orchid Avenue, Surfers Paradise. They were then escorted by Ms McGregor to a nearby sales office or display centre which was being operated by the developer where there were representations made by unidentified "sales staff of the plaintiff".[6] In each case, the alleged representation was about the view which they could expect from the subject apartment.

[18] The proposed building was to be known as "Orchid Tower". It was one of two buildings which were to be developed for the occupation, in part, of a Hilton Hotel. The other building was immediately to the west of the Orchid Tower. The proposed apartment was to be on the 52nd floor, where there would be three apartments. This apartment was on the eastern side of the building.

[19] The defendants pleaded that at the offices of Elfbest, they asked Ms McGregor about this proposed development, in the course of which she represented to them:

> "18.2 … that the views of the ocean from the Property facing East:
> (a) would, when the Property was constructed, be unobstructed by any other building (First Representation);
> (b) would be protected from being obstructed because the local council would not approve another building in front of the Project of such a height that it would obstruct the said views (Second Representation)."

[20] They pleaded that they were then shown a model of the project, "in which the views referred to in paragraph 18.2 above were not obstructed by any other building".[7] By that conduct, they pleaded, Ms McGregor represented to them "that the views of the ocean from the Property facing East would, when the Property was constructed, be unobstructed by any other building".[8]

[21] They pleaded that on the same day, they were taken by Ms Gregor to a nearby sales office operated by the plaintiff where sales staff of the plaintiff showed them another model of the project "in which the views referred to in paragraph 18.2 above were not obstructed by any other building".[9] They allege that those staff represented to them "that the views of the ocean from the Property facing East could not be 'built out' (Fourth Representation)" and that these staff gave to them "brochures and concept drawings which showed that the views referred to in paragraph 18.2 above would, when the Property was constructed, not be obstructed by any other building".[10]

[22] They alleged that by that conduct of the plaintiff's sales staff, the plaintiff represented to them "that the views of the ocean from the Property facing East would, when the Property was constructed, be unobstructed by any other building (Fifth Representation)".[11]

[23] They pleaded that they entered into the contract induced by those representations, which were misleading because they were representations as to future matters for which the plaintiff did not have reasonable grounds.[12] They allege that the conduct involved in each of the five representations was in contravention of s 52 and that each representation was a false and misleading representation concerning the characteristics of the property, contrary to s 53A(1) of the Trade Practices Act.

[24] They did not specifically allege that they suffered or were likely to suffer loss from those contraventions. But they sought relief under s 87(1) of the Act, by which the contract would be declared to be void and the deposit refunded to them. Having regard to the fall in the value of the apartment, which is proved by the plaintiff, it is clear that if the effect of the contract is not displaced, the defendants will suffer a loss to the extent of their liability to the plaintiff for damages for breach of that contract.

[25] Each of those representations is denied by the plaintiff. But as I will discuss, the plaintiff agrees that at least Mr Hingston had dealings with Ms McGregor about this contract and that Mr and Mrs Hingston also went to the plaintiff's sales office at some stage where they spoke to the plaintiff's representative, Ms Panagakos.

[26] The construction of the Orchid Tower was delayed by the appointment of administrators of the plaintiff in January 2009. Work resumed in May 2009 and was completed in mid 2011. The view from the subject apartment towards the east is obstructed by another apartment building, which is called "Soul". It is more than 70 floors in height and is about 100 metres to the east of the Orchid Tower with a frontage to The Esplanade. The defendants' case is that they would not have agreed to purchase this apartment had they thought that there would be such an obstruction to the view.

[27] In evidence, there are photographs of the current views to the north, east and south from this apartment. The views to the north and south are unobstructed. Undoubtedly, the Soul building obstructs the view to the east. I accept that the overall outlook from this apartment would be better without the Soul building and that probably the apartment would be more valuable with that entirely unobstructed view of the ocean.

[28] The only evidence in the defendants' case was from Mr Hingston. His evidence in chief was given by a three page statement. He was extensively cross-examined. The plaintiff's oral evidence was from Ms McGregor and Ms Panagakos. Subsequently, I permitted the plaintiff to reopen its case to lead further evidence from Ms Panagakos, this time by affidavit, as I will discuss.

[29] Mr Hingston's evidence in chief as to the alleged representations was substantially in accord with his pleading. He said that one weekend in March 2008, he said that the defendants entered the office where Ms McGregor worked and talked to her about the proposed Hilton development. He referred to a model at that office which was "not just of the building, but also of the surrounds to the east showing the ocean". He says that the model showed "no buildings shown as obstructing the view of the ocean from the building". There was some discussion with Ms McGregor about the prices for the units, in the course of which Mr Hingston decided that the penthouses and sub-penthouses were outside his price range. He then asked Ms McGregor:

> "What are the best units still available, facing east with unobstructed views."

adding:

> "There's not much use buying in this development if you lose your views."

According to this statement, Ms McGregor replied:

> "If you want unobstructed views, the best one remaining in unit 25202. It is on the level below the penthouses and sub-penthouses. If you get one that high in the building, your views will be safe. The Council won't approve another building in front of it at that height."

[30] The defendants were then taken by Ms McGregor to a nearby office of the developer. At that place, there were photographs as well as displays of rooms and, in particular, "photographs of the views which would be available from the rooms", none of which showed "any obstruction of the views". At this office, Mr Hingston talked to the staff about the apartment which Ms McGregor had suggested and he was shown by them its location on a model of the Orchid Tower. He said that this apartment "faced east and provided 180 degree views of the ocean". At that point, Mr Hingston says that he asked "[s]o is it correct that the views for this unit can't be built out?" to which one of the sales staff present responded "[y]es, the views from this level can't be built out".

[31] In his statement, he added that he was "given glossy brochures, concept drawings and links to internet sites to show what the views would be", none of which showed any obstruction of the views from the building.

[32] At that point, according to Mr Hingston's statement, the defendants signed a document which was "effectively an offer to purchase" and provided a cheque for $5,000 as a "holding deposit".

[33] Subsequently, contract documents were sent to the defendants' solicitor. The defendants signed the documents, paid the initial deposit and later provided the balance of the deposit by a bank guarantee. Mr Hingston said that had it not been for the representations in relation to the views from the unit, he would not have agreed to buy it.

He said that at the time the contract was signed, there was no large building in front of the proposed Hilton building.

[35] Again according to his statement, about a year or a year and a half later, the defendants were again at the Gold Coast and noticed that there was a building being constructed on what became the Soul site. Mr Hingston said in his statement that this building was "then about 10 stor[eys] high". This prompted them to go again to the plaintiff's display office where they asked one of the staff how high this other building was going to be and whether it would "impact on our views?" They were told that it would not do so and that "[y]ou will be able to see the beach and the ocean over the top of it".

[36] Subsequently, according to Mr Hingston, the defendants visited the Orchid Tower building when they were invited as purchasers to inspect their apartment. On that inspection, they found that the view of the ocean was "badly obstructed" by the Soul building and that they were looking into apartments within that building.

[37] Although Mr Hingston's statement referred to brochures and other material which he had received at the sales office, he did not tender such documents. As the plaintiff's case was conducted to the completion of addresses on the second day of the trial, no such brochure was tendered by the plaintiff. I was then informed that the plaintiff had been unable to locate an example of the brochures which were used in February and March 2008. However, subsequently the plaintiff applied to reopen its case to tender, by an affidavit of Ms Panagakos, examples of the brochures which had been used then. The plaintiff does not seek to draw any assistance from the content of those brochures. It emerged that the plaintiff was seeking to tender these brochures only to correct the record where it had been said that they were no longer available. The further evidence was admitted, there being no apparent prejudice to the defendants.

[38] There were two brochures which were then used. There was one of about 10 pages and a more extensive brochure containing about 50 pages. Both were available at the plaintiff's sales centre in 2008. Ms Panagakos said that it was her practice to give the shorter document to anyone who came to the display centre and to give the longer document only to people who were interested in apartments above the 49th floor or who had already purchased apartments. It is likely that the defendants were given both documents.

[39] Mr Hingston did not make any submission which was directed to the content of these two brochures. But they are consistent with his evidence that the brochures which were given to the defendants did not show any obstruction of views from the building, at least from the height at which the defendants' apartment would be situated. The brochures contained images of the proposed two towers in the development superimposed upon photographs of this part of Surfers Paradise. They showed no building between the Orchid Tower and the sea which would obstruct the views from the subject apartment. These images clearly represented that if the built environment between the Orchid tower and the ocean remained as it was in these photographs, there would be no obstruction of the view from the subject apartment. However, there was no text within these brochures which suggested that the locality would remain the same as depicted in those photographs and that, for example, there was some impediment to the development of that locality from the relevant planning laws. On the defendants' case, the representations to that effect were made orally, by Ms McGregor and by someone at the plaintiff's sales office.

[40] A number of documents which were tendered by the plaintiff showed that the relevant dealings with the defendants occurred over several days rather than upon the one day as Mr Hingston said in his evidence. The first of those documents is a form described as a "Client Registration Sheet" which was completed by Ms McGregor. It shows Mr Hingston (only) as the "client", consistently with Ms McGregor's recollection that it was Mr Hingston alone who came to her office and discussed with her the proposed development. On this document, Ms McGregor recorded Mr Hingston's contact details and that she had provided these details to "Michelle" (who was Ms Panagakos). She recorded that Ms Panagakos was "calling re: $5,000 deposit", meaning that it was Ms Panagakos who was to contact Mr Hingston about the deposit. Ms McGregor subsequently recorded that this $5,000 deposit had been paid on 11 March 2008. This was prior to the contract being signed. The so called deposit was to secure some priority over other prospective purchasers in the negotiations.

[41] On the same document, on 13 March 2008 Ms McGregor noted that she had spoken to Mr Hingston saying that she had sent to him the "E pack", which was some material about the development. On 19 March 2008, she made a further note on this form, recording her conversation with Ms Panagakos about Mr Hingston's proposed purchase.

[42] On 19 March 2008, Ms McGregor faxed to Mr Hingston a copy of the floor plan for the proposed apartment. That appears from the fax imprint on the copy of that plan.[13]

[43] A further document records that both defendants went to the plaintiff's display centre on 22 March 2008. Ms McGregor and Ms Panagakos recalled that Ms McGregor then introduced them to Ms Panagakos at the display centre.

[44] There is a further document, headed "Client Follow Up Procedure", on which Ms McGregor made a series of notes from 25 March 2008 to 4 June 2008. They are consistent with her evidence that she had a number of conversations with Mr Hingston prior to the contracts being signed of a kind to be expected between a vendor's agent and a purchaser. There is no reference in them to any discussion about views. The discussions after the contracts were signed, as there noted by Ms McGregor, were for the most part in relation to the payment of the deposit required by the contract.

[45] It therefore appears that Mr Hingston is mistaken in his recollection about his first meeting with Ms McGregor. He was alone when he first spoke to her at her office and that occasion was in February and some weeks prior to both defendants being in the display office. These inaccuracies are of some significance in the assessment of his evidence.

[46] Ms McGregor described the model which was at her office. She said that it was "pretty much the same" as that which was at the plaintiff's display centre (except that it was bigger than that in her office). There are photographs of the model at the centre.[14] Contrary to Mr Hingston's evidence, that model at the display centre did not depict the built environment between the Orchid Tower and the ocean. It was a model of the two towers of the development on effectively only its own site. There is no real likelihood that, contrary to Ms McGregor's evidence, the model at her office showed more of the surrounding locality than that at the display centre. Therefore, I find that the models at both offices did not suggest that the views would be unobstructed.

[47] When cross-examined, at one point Ms McGregor appeared to concede that she had been asked by Mr Hingston in her office to identify units which had unobstructed views. That was the answer she gave in the highlighted part of this passage:[15]

> "So if someone comes in and they want a unit with unobstructed views, which ones would you have suggested to them?---I wouldn't have. I would've taken them to the Raptis display centre.
> Did you know which ones had unobstructed views?---No.
>
> You didn't. So you hadn't been around the Soul building and looked at their display to see that that building was going to be 77 stories high and therefore anything built behind it wouldn't have obstructed views?---Sorry, what was the question?
> You said you didn't know whether the views would be obstructed or not. So — but you did know that there was a building going up in front of it?---I — I believe you asked me which units had unobstructed views so — and I didn't know that information. As for Soul, yes, I had been into their display centre.
> So you knew that any building — any apartment facing east to the water would have an obstructed view?---Well, Soul was going up in front of the Hilton.

That's right?---Yes.

So you knew it would have an obstructed view?---Well, Soul was going up in front of the Hilton, so, yeah.

Okay. Well, I put it to you that you - - -?---You'd be able to see Soul in front of the Hilton.

I put it to you that you did know that any units facing the ocean would have obstructed view because the Soul building was going up in front of it. Did you convey that message to any of your buyers or me?---I was never asked that question."

In context, particularly when read with the final answer in that passage, Ms McGregor was not conceding that she had been asked that question in her office. Rather, the highlighted answer was a reference to the question she had been asked a few lines earlier in that passage.

[48] Ms Panagakos recalled speaking to Mr Hingston by telephone and meeting Mr and Mrs Hingston at the display centre. She was asked whether on any of those occasions, she spoke about "uninterrupted views", to which she answered:

"No. He wanted to know that he could see the coastline, basically, the coastline of the — from east — sorry — from north to south. And that's exactly the case; this apartment faces direct east and you can look north to south."

She said that he did not ask at any stage whether the views of the coastline "could not be built out".[16]

[49] In cross-examination, Ms Panagakos described the views from the apartment today as "[a]bsolutely stunning" and that apart from the Soul building, "[i]t's all unobstructed".[17] Her evidence tended to confirm what would be expected, which is that she would not have been reluctant to promote the merits of this apartment by her descriptions of the likely views from it. Still the question is whether either she or Ms McGregor said something to the effect that nothing would be built which would obstruct those views to any extent.

[50] One circumstance which affected the likelihood of the alleged representations was that construction of the Soul building had begun by February/March 2008. In evidence are photographs of the Soul site as at 5 February 2008, some of which show signage on the boarding facing The Esplanade which informed passers-by that this was the site of a building, to be completed in 2010, and which would be "rising 77 levels above Cavill Avenue and The Esplanade".[18] The signage directed those interested to a display centre for this development in Cavill Avenue. Mr Hingston admitted that he saw that boarding.[19] He said that "[t]hey were demolishing the shops that had been there for years as far as I could see but it was all boarded off and I didn't take much notice of it because there's always things going on around the country. I just didn't take much notice of what was happening … You couldn't see into the site and you couldn't — it didn't tell you what it was. It was just construction work".[20]

[51] Mr Hingston denied that he read an article in The Australian, published 1 March 2008, which described the Soul development as having 77 storeys.

[52] It is not inherently probable that he read that newspaper article. But it is surprising that when he was attracted as a passer-by to the office of Ms McGregor and its promotion of the Hilton development, he apparently overlooked the Soul development. It would be remarkable if, as he appears to suggest, he decided to purchase an apartment off the plan at the price of more than $3 million without giving any consideration to what was otherwise available in the same market. According to his evidence, this was not his first investment in real estate, which again suggests the likelihood that he would have conducted some research of the market. But most importantly, he recalls walking past the boarding on the Soul construction site but offered no credible explanation for how he could have overlooked the potential impact of that development upon the apartment which he proposed to purchase.

[53] The obviousness of the Soul development with its proposed height is significant here in two ways. The first is that it affects the likelihood that the defendants were in truth misled by the representations which are alleged by them, if those representations were made. The second is that it affects the likelihood that the representations were made. Of course it is not unknown for representations to be made, in the promotion of real estate, which would be obviously false to an alert prospective purchaser. But the obviousness of the circumstances of the Soul development tend to make it less probable that either Ms McGregor or Ms Panagakos made the alleged representations.

[54] The absence of Mrs Hingston as a witness was not satisfactorily explained. Her absence is the more remarkable for the fact that she is a defendant and a counterclaimant. On the defendants' pleaded case, Mrs Hingston was a participant in each of the critical conversations. The evidence of Mr Hingston was always going to be strongly challenged. In these circumstances, it should be inferred that Mrs Hingston's evidence would not have assisted the defendants' case.[21]

[55] The brochures which must have been given to the defendants did not depict the Soul development. But it is another thing to say that they represented that there could not be a development in the locality which could affect the defendants' views.

[56] It is inherently likely that none of the three witnesses has a precise recollection of what was said in any of the relevant conversations. The imprecision of Mr Hingston's evidence is demonstrated by its inconsistency with the contemporaneous documents. And it would be unrealistic to expect either Ms McGregor or Ms Panagakos to precisely recall the words of their conversations in circumstances where this was one of many sales or potential sales within this development. Most probably each of the agents made statements which promoted the apartment by reference to its views. Ms McGregor suggested that her role was not that of a seller's agent acting in the normal way and that instead, her task was to simply direct interested persons to the display centre. That is difficult to accept. In her office there was material, including a model, which depicted and promoted this development. And importantly her employer was entitled to a commission of three per cent of the sale price under its agreement with the plaintiff.[22]

[57] But the defendants must go further than proving that the views were represented as something such as exceptional or "stunning". The essence of their case is that they were told that there could be no development in the locality which would obstruct the views of the ocean from their apartment. Ultimately, I am not satisfied that such a representation was made. In particular, I am not satisfied that it was represented that there was some legal impediment to the construction of a building which would have that effect.

[58] The agents knew or believed that Mr Hingston was an experienced property investor. This makes it even less likely that either of them would have provided the alleged assurances about views when there was such a small prospect that those assurances would be accepted as credible. After all, the locality was central Surfers Paradise with very many high rise buildings. There is nothing suggested by the evidence which might have caused a buyer to think that there had been some recent change in the planning laws, such that a nearby building could not be constructed to the height of that which was to be constructed to include their apartment. And as I have already noted, the obviousness of the Soul development makes it more unlikely that the alleged representations were made.

[59] A further circumstance which is adverse to the defendants' case is that no complaint was made by them until close to the due date for settlement of the contract, when the height or likely height of the Soul building, as it emerged from the ground, must have become obvious at least by 2010.

Conclusion

[60] The outcome is that the plaintiff's claim succeeds and the counterclaim fails. According to my reasoning above at paragraph 10, damages should be assessed in the amount of $1,094,000.

[61] Clause 15.6 of the contract provided that the defendants should pay interest at the rate of 15.6 per cent on "any money payable by [them] under the contract". The plaintiff claims interest at that rate on the amount which should have been paid at settlement (which the defendants do not dispute was $3,146,095.90[23]) from the date of settlement until the contract was terminated by the plaintiff on 22 September 2008 (a total of 14 days). That interest amounts to $18,100.83. The plaintiff claims interest from 23 September 2011 until the date of judgment at the prescribed rates for default judgments, on the amount of the assessed damages. I am persuaded to award interest on that basis from the termination of the contract (as well as the interest under the contract in the sum of $18,100.83). The interest at the prescribed rates on that sum of $1,094,000 from 23 September 2011 to the date of this judgment amounts to $308,058.40.

[62] Therefore, the defendants will be ordered to pay to the plaintiff the sum of $1,420,159.23. The counterclaim will be dismissed.

LAMBERT PROPERTY GROUP PTY LTD v BODY CORPORATE FOR CASTLEBAR COVE COMMUNITY TITLE SCHEME 37148

(2015) LQCS ¶90-202; Court citation: [2015] QSC 179

Decision delivered on 29 July 2015

Conveyancing — Easements — Where developer owned a vacant lot and an adjacent apartment complex — Where developer irregularly procured (through the developer's improper use of powers of attorney), a resolution which approved entry into a form of easement over the apartment complex for the benefit of the vacant lot — Where the easement was never granted — Where the development did not proceed — Where the developer later sold the vacant lot — Where the new owner applied for a statutory right of user under s 180 of the Property Law Act 1974 in terms of the easement document (even though it had no legal rights as a result of the document) — Where the body corporate of the apartment complex opposed the application — Property Law Act 1974, s 180.

In 2008 a developer owned a vacant parcel of land (Lot 1) situated in Queensland and an adjacent apartment complex called Castlebar Cove. At the time, the developer intended to develop Lot 1 to become part of Castlebar Cove. At this time the developer controlled Castlebar Cove's body corporate.

At an extraordinary general meeting of Castlebar Cove's body corporate in 2008, the developer irregularly procured (through the developer's improper use of powers of attorney), a resolution which approved entry into a form of easement. The easement would have enabled the construction and development of Lot 1 to form part of Castlebar Cove for a consideration of $1 (however presumably the residents of Lot 1 would have made contributions to Castlebar Cove's body corporate). Despite the passing of the resolution, the easement was never granted.

Specifically the easement would have allowed Lot 1's residents to access their car parking via Castlebar Cove's secured carparking basement. This would have required a hole to be constructed in an existing wall of the Castlebar Cove carpark.

Later purchasers of apartments in the Castlebar Cove complex were not made aware of the resolution to allow the easement.

The developer did not proceed with developing Lot 1. Instead in 2011, after obtaining development approval for the development (which was granted on the condition that vehicle access to Lot 1 would be via the easement through Castlebar Cove's land), it sold the land to the applicant in these proceedings. The applicant wanted to develop the land into an apartment complex which would have been separate to the Castlebar Cove complex and also on a larger scale than was approved under the development approval. To facilitate access to the development, it applied for a statutory right of user under s 180 of the Property Law Act 1974 over the common property of Castlebar Cove in terms of the easement document which the body corporate resolved to grant in 2008 (even though it had no legal rights as a result of the document).

Castlebar Cove's body corporate (being the respondent in these proceedings) resisted the application arguing that if the easement was granted, the security and privacy of Castlebar Cove's residents would have been reduced for a "woefully inadequate and unreasonable" $1 consideration. It also identified an alternative means of access for Lot 1's residents.

The substantial issues to be determined (as per s 180) were:

- was it reasonably necessary in the interests of the effective use in a reasonable manner of Lot 1 to have access via the Castlebar Cove car park in the manner proposed?
- had the applicant satisfied the court that use of Lot 1 in the manner proposed was consistent with the public interest?
- could the owners of the Castlebar Cove land be adequately recompensed in money for any loss or disadvantage which they may suffer from the imposition of the easement over their common property?
- was the body corporate's refusal to accept the imposition of the easement on the terms contained in the 2008 document unreasonable in all the circumstances?

Held: for the body corporate. The developer's application failed.

Reasonable necessity

1. The applicant failed to establish that it could not undertake the development it intended without access via Castlebar's carpark. The body corporate's alternative that it put forward (ie access through an existing driveway over which Lot 1 enjoyed legal rights) was a preferable method for the proposed development that avoided interference with the proprietary rights of the Castlebar Cove's owners and also personal inconvenience to them.

Section 180(3) matters

2. The applicant failed to satisfy the court that it was in the public interest that Lot 1 be used in the manner proposed. The 2008 document contained no details of the practical aspects to regulate the use of the easement and matters which would be a potential source of conflict between the parties who sought to make use of the easement and residents of Castlebar Cove. For example, the 2008 document does not address matters such as the speed at which vehicles may travel, security arrangements, how any door or firewall between the two properties would be operated, how rules about security and speed would be enforced, the movement of refuse from Lot 1 along the easement and its storage on Castlebar Cove prior to collection, the roles of on-site managers and the cost of their services in managing access and maintaining security.

3. Further, the applicant failed to provide an appropriate amount of detail about the practical operation of the proposed access which made it hard to assess the financial cost to the body corporate in meeting the obligations which the easement would impose upon it. For example, what would be the cost of issuing security fobs to Lot 1's residents to allow them access to Castlebar Cove's car park but not its lifts? Further it was hard to assess in financial terms adequate compensation for the actual and perceived loss of privacy and reduction in security among the Castlebar Cove residents who presently felt secure when entering and leaving their cars in the secure basement car park.

4. Given that:

(a) the 2008 resolution was passed through the improper use of powers of attorney
(b) the 2008 resolution was not disclosed to individuals who later acquired apartments in Castlebar Cove
(c) neither the previous developer nor anyone else took steps to progress through the granting and registration of the easement
(d) the easement would impose significant obligations upon the body corporate for the benefit of Lot 1's owners where there was no intention of developing Lot 1 to form part of an amalgamated scheme, the body corporate's refusal to consent to the imposition of the easement was not unreasonable.

5. Additionally the 2008 resolution was passed in circumstances in which the previous developer then intended to develop Lot 1 as part of a larger Castlebar Cove development. The easement expressly provided that it would be extinguished if the development of Lot 1 in this manner did not proceed. The fact that Lot 1 will never be part of the Castle Cove complex was a good reason alone for the body corporate's change of position.

Before: Applegarth J

Applegarth J:

ORDERS:

1. The application is refused.
2. The applicant pay the respondent's costs of and incidental to the application to be assessed on the standard basis.

Applegarth J:

[1] The applicant, Lambert Property Group ("LPG"), owns vacant land at 108 Lambert Street, Kangaroo Point. Its land (Lot 1) is suitable for development.

[2] Castlebar Cove is a residential apartment development which borders Lot 1. It is situated at 39 Castlebar Street, Kangaroo Point, and comprises two, 12 storey towers, each with 19 units. Its residential towers sit above a podium level. Castlebar Cove's residents share a foyer, a waiting area and other facilities including a swimming pool and a gymnasium. They also share a common basement car park which abuts the southern boundary of Lot 1. The car park is accessible only by internal lifts and through a secure gate access at the front entrance. Access to the car park requires a security fob.

[3] Vehicular and pedestrian access to the land comprising the Castlebar Cove Community Title Scheme land is via Castlebar Street. It is a narrow, steep street which runs downhill off Lambert Street. There is also pedestrian access from Lambert Street to Castlebar Cove.

[4] LPG has no access rights over the Castlebar Cove land, let alone through Castlebar Cove's secure car park. It applies for a statutory right of user under s 180 of the Property Law Act 1974 ("PLA") over the common property of the Castlebar Cove's Community Title Scheme, in terms of an easement document which the body corporate resolved to grant for the benefit of Lot 1 at an extraordinary general meeting held on 4 August 2008.

[5] In August 2008 the body corporate of Castlebar Cove was under the effective control of its developer, Sincere Properties (Kangaroo Point) Pty Ltd, which also owned Lot 1. At the time, Sincere had plans to develop another stage of Castlebar Cove on what was described as the Stage 3 land, which comprised Lot 1. It had lodged a development application for a high rise on Lot 1. At an extraordinary general meeting of the body corporate on 4 August 2008, Sincere irregularly procured, through the use of Powers of Attorney which it held, a resolution which approved entry into a form of easement. The easement, if granted for a consideration of $1, would have enabled the construction and development of Stage 3 of Castlebar Cove. But despite the passing of the resolution, the easement was never granted. No easement was signed and registered, and the proposal to develop Stage 3 of Castlebar Cove fell away.

[6] Having obtained in November 2010 a development approval for the construction of a high rise apartment block on Lot 1, Sincere sold Lot 1 to LPG. LPG does not intend to facilitate the further development of the Castlebar Cove scheme. Instead it has plans to develop Lot 1 as a stand-alone development.

[7] Although LPG has no legal rights by virtue of the 4 August 2008 resolution, it asks the Court to grant it an easement over the common property of Castlebar Cove on the terms of the August 2008 resolution. It would thereby acquire valuable access rights and inconvenience the residents whose common property the respondent controls by paying a consideration of $1.

[8] Unsurprisingly in those circumstances, the respondent resists LPG's application to grant an easement on the terms of the 2008 easement document.

The issues

[9] The application is opposed on the grounds that LPG has failed to establish that access to Lot 1 via the Castlebar Cove car park is reasonably necessary for the effective use of Lot 1. It contests LPG's position that the construction of an opening in the concrete wall of Castlebar Cove's car park and the granting of an easement of indefinite duration is "reasonably necessary" for the effective use of Lot 1 as an apartment complex.

[10] The authorities on the meaning of "reasonably necessary" in the context of s 180(1) of the PLA establish the following principles:

> "(a) One should not interfere readily with the proprietary rights of an owner of land.
>
> (b) The requirement of 'reasonably necessary' does not mean absolute necessity.
>
> (c) What is 'reasonably necessary' is determined objectively.
>
> (d) Necessary means something more than mere desirability or preferability over the alternative means; it is a question of degree.
>
> (e) The greater the burden of the imposition that is sought the stronger the case needed to justify a finding of reasonable necessity.
>
> (f) For a right of user to be reasonably necessary for a development, the
> [140772]
>
> development with the right of user must be (at least) substantially preferable to development without the right of user.
> (g) Regard must be had to the implications or consequences on the other land of imposing a right of user."[1]

[11] The respondent identifies an alternative means of access by which vehicles might access Lot 1 via an existing driveway off Lambert Street. The current development approval requires this driveway to be improved and to be used as a means of access for cars and trucks to park on the ground level of Lot 1.

[12] Subject to a legal question to which I will return, the town planning experts called by both LPG and the respondent do not identify any planning impediment to changing the access into the development so that all traffic goes via the Lambert Street driveway, rather than having some traffic go through Castlebar Cove's secure car park to Lot 1's proposed basement car park.

[13] The respondent also contests that LPG has satisfied s 180(3). It requires the Court to be satisfied that:

> "(a) it is consistent with the public interest that the dominant land should be used in the manner proposed; and
> (b) the owner of the servient land can be adequately recompensed in money for any loss or disadvantage which the owner may suffer from the imposition of the obligation; and
> (c) … the owner of the servient land has refused to agree to accept the imposition of such obligation and the owner's refusal is in all the circumstances unreasonable …"

[14] The respondent submits that the easement proposed by LPG is completely lacking in detail about the regulation of access and that LPG's case is so lacking in detail in terms of evidence that it is impossible to reach any conclusion about the monetary compensation which would adequately recompense for loss or disadvantage.

[15] The respondent also submits that its refusal to agree to accept the imposition of an easement in terms of the August 2008 document, which would require it to accept $1 in return for granting the easement, could hardly be described as being unreasonable in all the circumstances. The $1 sum is said to be "woefully inadequate and unreasonable in all of the circumstances".

[16] LPG, on the other hand, points to the fact that the respondent in 2008 resolved to grant an easement for a consideration of $1 and had thereby valued its own recompense. It submits that the respondent's refusal to accept the imposition of an easement on the terms of the August 2008 document is unreasonable:

> (a) given the absence of any satisfactory explanation for the respondent's change of position;
> (b) the fact that the basement was designed and constructed to accommodate the access referred to in the condition of the development approval; and
> (c) the development approval applies to the land which was subject to the 2007 development application, which includes the common property on Castlebar Cove.

[17] The respondent replies that there has been a significant change in circumstances since the respondent, which was then controlled by Sincere, resolved to grant an easement for $1 to facilitate the future development of the scheme. That nominal sum was predicated on owners of the new building being part of Castlebar Cove and thereby making contributions to the respondent. There is no prospect of that now occurring, but if the easement is granted it will burden the respondent (and thereby the owners of apartments in Castlebar Cove) with obligations in relation to the easement.

[18] The substantial issues may be summarised as follows:

> • Is it reasonably necessary in the interests of the effective use in a reasonable manner of Lot 1 to have access via the Castlebar Cove car park in the manner proposed?
> • Has the applicant satisfied the Court that:
> > (a) use of Lot 1 in the manner proposed is consistent with the public interest;
> > (b) the owners of the Castlebar Cove land can be adequately recompensed in money for any loss or disadvantage which they may suffer from the > > imposition of the easement over their common property; and > > (c) the respondent's refusal to accept the imposition of an easement on the terms contained in the 2008 document is "in all the circumstances unreasonable"?
> [140773]

[19] If LPG satisfies the Court that an order for a statutory right of user in terms of the 2008 document should be made because the s 180(3) factors are satisfied, then it will be necessary to consider a provision for payment by way of compensation or consideration as in the circumstances appears to be just,[2] and such other terms and conditions as may be just.[3]

The centrality of the 2008 document to the applicant's case

[20] LPG hangs its hat on the 4 August 2008 resolution, whilst conceding that it enjoys no legal rights as a result of that resolution. It seeks an easement to be granted to it on the same terms as the sparse terms of the 2008 document, which contains no details about practical aspects to regulate the use of the easement and matters which would be a potential source of conflict between parties who sought to make use of the easement and residents of Castlebar Cove. The 2008 document does not address practical matters such as the speed at which vehicles may travel, security arrangements, how any door or firewall between the two properties would be operated, how rules about security and speed would be enforced, the movement of refuse from Lot 1 along the easement and its storage on Castlebar Cove prior to collection, the roles of on-site managers and the cost of their services in managing access and maintaining security. Many of these and other matters would have been regulated by by-laws if Lot 1 had become part of the scheme land and the common property of Lot 1 had become part of the common property of an expanded Castlebar Cove development.

[21] LPG's application to the Court does not seek the imposition of an easement on commercial terms that would require the owner of Lot 1 to pay a consideration of more than $1, and which contains detailed terms regulating the use of the easement and conditions which serve to preserve, as far as possible, the security of the Castlebar Cove car park. LPG's approach is that it should acquire the easement according to the terms of the 2008 document, which requires it to pay $1, and that compensation is something to be worked out pursuant to s 180(4)(a) by the Court doing its best to assess a just amount by way of compensation or consideration for an easement of an indefinite duration.

[22] Because LPG rests its case, particularly in terms of s 180(3) considerations, upon the resolution passed on 4 August 2008, it is necessary to give an account of certain historical matters, including the circumstances under which the resolution came to be passed.

Background

[23] Sincere owned a number of adjoining lots close to the river at Kangaroo Point. It proposed the development of its land in stages. Stage 1 involved the construction of two towers and other improvements which became what is now Castlebar Cove. Stage 2 was to be a volumetric subdivision of part of the common property of the scheme so as to provide, among other things, additional lots for visitor parking on the ground level of Castlebar Cove. It has occurred.

[24] Stage 3 was to be on Lot 1, and was intended to create up to 10 additional lots being residential apartments, together with common property including a swimming pool, health club and gymnasium and other recreational areas. Stage 3 was not developed, and now never will be.

[25] Lot 1 is situated at 108 Lambert Street, and is bounded to the south-east by the scheme land for Castlebar Cove Community Title Scheme 37148. Before the establishment of that scheme in late 2007, Sincere applied to the Brisbane City Council to develop Lot 1 for use as seven multi-unit dwellings. Its development application was lodged on 22 February 2007. Sincere owned the Castlebar Cove land at the time, as well as Lot 1. The application was made in respect of several parcels of land that it owned, situated at 108 and 110 Lambert Street and 39, 41 and 44 Castlebar Street. Some of those lots later became the Castlebar Cove scheme land.

[26] The development application was amended from time to time but, in its final form, provided for seven units (with five bedrooms each) over eight storeys, together with a basement car park. Residents of the new building would access the basement car park through the car park entrance to Castlebar Cove and drive through an opening which was to be made in the adjoining basement wall in Castlebar Cove. Other vehicles, including visitors' cars and removalist trucks, were to access the new building by the existing driveway to Lambert Street.

[27] Stage 1 of Castlebar Cove was completed in 2007. The common property and lots forming the scheme were created by registration of a survey plan on 13 July 2007. The Castlebar Cove scheme was established on 2 October 2007. The community management statement establishing the scheme explained that the development of Stage 1 on the Stage 1 land had been carried out. The "Scheme land" as described in the community management statement consisted of the community property and the lots on Stage 1. It did not include Lot 1. Instead, the statement explained that the land for Stage 3 (Lot 1) would not form part of the scheme "until registration of the building format plans creating the Lots and common property" in that stage. The community management statement for the Castlebar Cove CTS Scheme 37148 also stated: “The Original Owner may elect to not proceed with any one or more stages of the proposed development”.

[28] The statement made clear that Lot 1 did not then form part of the scheme. Lot 1 (the Stage 3 land) was described as being intended to be subdivided in order to give effect to Stage 3 of the development. Registration of the building format plan for Stage 3 and a new community management statement for that stage of the development was intended to occur. The community management statement for the existing Castlebar Cove scheme recorded: “the Stage 3 Land, as then subdivided, will then form part of the Scheme”. (emphasis added)

[29] Another part of the scheme document set out by-laws for the future development of Stages 2 and 3. Another schedule to the document contained the details for future development of the scheme, including establishing common property, utility infrastructure and utility services and connections.

The 4 August 2008 resolution

[30] At the time the common property and lots forming the Castlebar Cove scheme were created by registration in July 2007, and at the time the scheme was established on 2 October 2007, Sincere exercised control over the newly-created body corporate. It owned many lots and had been granted powers of attorney over lots which it no longer owned. On 4 August 2008 an extraordinary general meeting of the body corporate was held. It seems that the meeting was attended by three officeholders of the body corporate, the building manager, a representative of the manager of the scheme and a solicitor. The meeting resolved without dissent that a Form 9 Easement which had been tabled be approved and entered into by the body corporate and signed by one committee member and the chairman. Another resolution, which was also passed without dissent, approved amendments to remove certain clauses from the document and to insert a new clause 7. The meeting also resolved that after a survey plan of the easement was obtained the body corporate would execute the plan of easement.

[31] Mr O’Reilly, who was secretary of the body corporate at the time, has given evidence that the copy of the minutes in evidence is accurate. The minutes record that the new clause 7 was inserted into the document after Mr O’Reilly expressed his concerns about the encumbering easement over the common property of the scheme land. The minutes record that the meeting was advised that “the requirement for the easement was requested by the Brisbane City Council as a condition of the Development Permit for stages 2 and 3”. That matter provides an important context in which to consider the handwritten, new clause 7.3. It provides:

> “The parties agree that if this Easement is no longer required in order to facilitate the further development of the Scheme (stages 2, 3 and any other land to form part of the Scheme as contemplated in the CMS), and this Easement is not required in order to provide access to those further parts of the development, then this Easement, subject to obtaining the consent of the Brisbane City Council, will be extinguished to the extent it is no longer required. The parties agree to > sign any instruments or documents required to give effect to such surrender and registration of the instrument of surrender at the Queensland Land Registry.”
> [140775]

[32] For present purposes, it is sufficient to observe that the minutes of the 4 August 2008 meeting and the terms of clause 7.3 suggest that the easement was approved on the basis that the body corporate’s approval was necessary to meet a condition imposed by the Brisbane City Council for the development of Stages 2 and 3, and that if the easement was granted but was no longer required to facilitate the further development of the scheme, then it would be extinguished.

[33] The easement which the body corporate approved entry into on 4 August 2008 was never granted. It seems that in September 2008 surveyors were instructed to prepare a plan of easement, but no plan of easement is in evidence. No form of easement was executed by or on behalf of the body corporate and, as a result, no easement was in fact granted or registered. LPG does not contend that the 4 August 2008 resolution confers any legal rights upon it as the present owner of what was the proposed dominant tenement.

[34] There is no evidence that after September 2008 Sincere took any steps to progress the granting of an easement so as to carry into effect the 4 August 2008 resolution. This may be because of doubts about its validity.

[35] The respondent submits that the 4 August 2008 resolution was defective because of Sincere's improper use of powers of attorney. Briefly stated, the use or misuse by developers of a power of attorney of the kind Sincere purported to exercise on 4 August 2008 had been addressed by legislation. Section 219 of the Body Corporate Community Management Act 1997 (Qld), as it stood in 2008, limited the powers of a developer to use such a power of attorney. The respondent submits that the powers which Sincere purported to exercise on 4 August 2008 were not properly exercised, and LPG does not submit to the contrary.

[36] Many current residents of Castlebar Cove purchased their apartments after 4 August 2008. No mention was made of any easement or right of user over Castlebar Cove of the kind contemplated by the 4 August 2008 resolution. No proposal for an easement or right of user was disclosed in any disclosure documents to those purchasers.

The Development Approval

[37] The development application that was made by Sincere to the Brisbane City Council on 22 February 2007 to enable Sincere to develop Lot 1 as Stage 3 of Castlebar Cove had a protracted history. The application was approved, subject to conditions by the Council. Proceedings were commenced in the Planning and Environment Court and eventually on 19 November 2010 a changed development application was approved, subject to numerous conditions, by the Planning and Environment Court. An understanding of those conditions requires further reference to the configuration of Lot 1 and the easements which allow access to it and to neighbouring lots which are also a battle-axe shape.

[38] Lot 1 is a battle-axe shaped allotment, with the handle of the axe linking the major part of the lot to Lambert Street. The boundary forming the handle of the axe adjoins the northern boundary of Castlebar Cove. Members of the Daly family own three lots adjoining Lot 1. The Daly lots are also a battle-axe shape. Each has a townhouse situated on it.

[39] Lot 1 has the benefit of an easement over what might be described as the handle of the axe of the Daly lots. As a result, by a combination of its own land and the easement, Lot 1 has an existing access way 6.8 metres wide to Lambert Street. Similarly, by a combination of the handle of the axe that forms part of the Daly lots, combined with an easement granted over the Lot 1 handle, the Daly lots also enjoy right of access to Lambert Street.

[40] In other words, Lot 1 and the Daly lots each have rights of access to Lambert Street by a shared driveway. Road access, pursuant to ownership rights and existing easement rights, is a significant aspect for the development of Lot 1 and, for that matter, the future development of the Daly lots. Each reciprocal easement does not limit the intensity of use of it.

So far as Lot 1 is concerned, the development approval with its conditions that was granted on 19 November 2010 attached to the land the subject of the development application to which the approval relates, and binds the owner, the owner's successor in title and any occupier of the land even if the land is later reconfigured.[4]

[42] The approval granted on 19 November 2010 relates to a seven unit development on Lot 1. Condition 5 requires the material change of use to be carried out generally in accordance with the approved drawings and documents. Those approved drawings and documents include drawings depicting the Lambert Street driveway. In particular, a ground floor car park access plan contains a notation: "ENTRY DRIVEWAY (EXISTING EASEMENT ACCESS) FROM LAMBERT STREET TO 108 LAMBERT STREET VISITOR PARKING". Drawings of a lower basement floor plan include the notation: "CASTLE COVE BASEMENT WALL REMOVED TO PROVIDE ACCESS TO 108 LAMBERT STREET BASEMENT CARPARKING."In short, the approved drawings and documents contemplate vehicular access to the developed Lot 1 through two means of access:

(a) the existing driveway for above-ground access, including visitor parking and the loading and unloading of trucks; and
(b) access via Castlebar Street and the common property of Castlebar Cove, including the entry ramp to its basement and then through the Castlebar Cove basement car park and through what is currently a concrete wall to the proposed Lot 1 basement car park.

[43] Condition 14 requires the surface of the existing Lambert Street driveway to be treated and finished to match the existing driveway and for the construction of external car parking surfaces. Incidentally, the work required for conditions relating to the existing driveway were thought by LPG's expert architect to involve work on the top part of the driveway and otherwise improving the driveway to make it more attractive as well as wider.

[44] Condition 28 deals with access, grades, manoeuvring and other matters and requires the construction and delineation or signing of areas that would permit the manoeuvring on Lot 1 of a SRV (which would include a removalist van or a refuse truck) and for the loading and unloading of the vehicles. Another condition requires an appropriate area for the storage and collection of refuse, including recyclables, in a position which is accessible to service vehicles on the site. Another condition requires parking on the site for 16 (including two visitor) cars and for the loading and unloading of vehicles within the site.

[45] Condition 27 concerns easements and refers to, among other things, "Easements (through the basement of existing development" as shown on certain approved plans which were received on 24 August 2010 "for access purposes" over certain lots that constitute Castlebar Cove in favour of Lot 1.

[46] Having regard to the history of the proposed development of Stages 1, 2 and 3 of the land owned by Sincere, the terms of the 4 August 2008 minutes and the evidence in general concerning the timing and process by which development approval was sought and eventually granted, it is reasonably apparent that the Council's approval of the original development application proceeded on the basis that the owner of the relevant lots, Sincere, proposed to develop Stage 3 of Castlebar Cove, and the Council granted a development approval on the basis that an easement through the basement car park of Stage 1 was required for the development of Stage 3 on Lot 1. Given the history of the matter, it would not also be surprising if the eventual approval that was granted by the Planning and Environment Court was based upon a similar assumption. However, counsel for LPG is correct to submit that the terms of the approval did not require, as a condition, that the new development on Lot 1 form part of an expanded Castlebar Cove development, whether described as Stage 3 or otherwise.

[47] To the extent that the Planning and Environment Court, and before it the Brisbane City Council, granted approval in the expectation that Lot 1 would form part of a larger scheme, it might have assumed that the proposed easement would be negotiated between the owners of the relevant lots so as to facilitate construction of, and access to, the new basement car park on Lot 1 and that, at a later date, after Stage 3 was developed and a scheme established in respect of it, access rights would be governed by by-laws and the body corporate of the combined scheme. To the extent the approving authorities may have contemplated a different course, with the development of Lot 1 as a discrete development which was not intended to form part of an expanded Castlebar Cove scheme, the authorities might be taken to have assumed that it fell to a party seeking to satisfy the development conditions to obtain the required easement, either through negotiation with the owners of the proposed servient tenement or by the grant by a court of an easement under s 180 of the PLA.

[48] In any case, it is not suggested by LPG that Brisbane City Council or the Planning and Environment Court obliged the current owners of the common property at Castlebar Cove to grant an easement, let alone to grant an easement in accordance with the August 2008 document.

[49] In the circumstances which currently prevail, the development approval is subject to numerous conditions including a condition that an easement be obtained. The development approval should not be interpreted as amounting to a statement that the forms of access originally proposed by Sincere are the only, let alone the best, means of access to Lot 1. Expressed differently, the approval is a statement to the effect that you can develop Lot 1 according to the plans and drawings and conditions contained in the approval if you are able to obtain an easement through Castlebar Cove, including its secured underground car park.

If the parties whose property rights and interests were to be adversely affected by an easement were not prepared to grant the required easement by agreement, after negotiating suitable terms and a suitable price, then the approved development would depend upon an easement being granted by the Court.

More recent history

[50] Having obtained the development approval for Lot 1 in November 2010, Sincere did not proceed with its development, either as Stage 3 of Castlebar Cove or as a stand-alone development. Instead, soon after obtaining the development approval it sold Lot 1 to LPG.

[51] Sincere published an information memorandum to prospective purchasers in late 2010 and early 2011 which stated, among other things, that the development approval required the development to be "amalgamated into the Castlebar Cove Community Title Scheme". The information memorandum suggested that the benefits of amalgamation were that it would allow residents of the proposed development to access their basement parking via the secured basement of the Castlebar Cove residents' building. It incorrectly asserted that an access easement in favour of the 108 Lambert Street property had been granted by the respondent to facilitate the approved development of Lot 1. It also stated that amalgamation would allow residents of the proposed development to use the common facilities located within the Castlebar Cove residences, including a swimming pool, spa and an undercover visitor car park.

[52] LPG does not assert that it was misled by Sincere by these representations, and if it was, then its remedy would lie elsewhere.

[53] The sale to LPG seemingly was not made conditional upon a registered easement being granted over the common property of Castlebar Cove in favour of Lot 1. Any search by LPG in the course of its purchase of Lot 1 would have revealed that as owner of Lot 1 it would enjoy rights of access over its own land and the easement off Lambert Street. Any search would not have revealed a registered easement over the common property of Castlebar Cove in favour of Lot 1. The transfer of title to Lot 1 was registered on 4 February 2011.

[54] In October 2012, LPG sought a "pre-request" response from the Council in relation to proposed changes to the development on Lot 1. That request concerned increasing the number of units from seven to seventeen.

[55] By letter dated 14 May 2013, LPG, by Cardno HRP, requested the local authority to change the development approval by:

> (a) increasing the number of units to 16;
> (b) adding a level (i.e. to 9 nine levels);
> (c) increasing the footprint of the basement level;
> [140778]
> (d) more than doubling the number of car parking spaces in the basement from 14 to 32; and > (e) increasing the number of bedrooms to 50: i.e. accommodation for 100 people, > whilst still having vehicular access through Castlebar Cove's basement.

[56] On 31 July 2013, the local authority gave notice that it was unable to consider the request due to a resident objecting to the proposed changes.

[57] On 11 October 2013 LPG applied to the Planning and Environment Court for declarations and other relief. During the proceedings, LPG:

> (a) represented that it intended to construct a building in accordance with the "pre-request" application or an alternative multi-unit dwelling by obtaining a "new development approval";
> (b) subsequently represented that it intended to construct a building in accordance with revised plans;
> (c) submitted plans indicating further changes to the development, including:
>
> i. adding a further level (i.e. to 10 levels); > ii. increasing the number of units to 10; and

iii. increasing the number of bedrooms to 98 (i.e. accommodation for 200 people with an unknown number of car parks).

[58] LPG's proceedings in the Planning and Environment Court were dismissed for want of prosecution on 20 February 2015.

LPG's application to this Court

[59] The recent history of LPG's attempts to gain approval for a larger-scale development than currently approved is relevant to the application to this Court to grant an easement in terms of the 2008 document. The proposed easement contained in that document grants "an easement for a right of access, egress and regress (by pedestrian or Vehicles) for any and all purposes" over the common property of Castlebar Cove CTS 37148 in favour of Lot 1.

[60] The document does not limit the intensity of use, in terms of traffic and pedestrian numbers or the hours of day or night during which persons may exercise the right of access to the common property of Castlebar Cove, particularly by gaining entry to its secure underground car park. Clause 3 of the proposed easement obliges the body corporate for Castlebar Cove to not prevent or restrict "the Grantee or the Grantee's Associates in the exercise of the rights granted by this Easement". Those Associates include licensees and invitees who might be on Lot 1. Clause 3 goes on to oblige the body corporate to not obstruct access to the common property on Castlebar Cove to the Grantee and the Grantee's Associates and to ensure that any roadway or path is maintained and kept in good and trafficable condition. Whilst the Grantee must make good any damage caused to the body corporate's land and any improvement or structure on it, and cause as little inconvenience as practicable to the body corporate for Castlebar Cove and/or users of its land, the proposed easement gives extensive rights to the Grantee.

[61] The 2008 document, which contains the terms of the easement which the applicant applies to have imposed for the benefit of Lot 1, is remarkably lacking in detail about the regulation of vehicular and pedestrian access. It does not even make provision for the costs of construction (the original clause 6 having been struck out of the document) or indemnify the body corporate in respect of loss and damage which is suffered as a result of the construction work. Instead, clause 8.1 provides that each party indemnifies the other against any loss which occurs as a result of the other party's failure to strictly observe or perform the provisions of the easement.

[62] If granted in the terms sought, the easement would not limit use of the easement to the number of units currently approved for the development of Lot 1. However, counsel for LPG at the start of the case indicated that it would be prepared to accept a limitation to use of Lot 1 for no more than seven units and no more than 14 car parking spaces.

[63] The respondent and the residents whose properties and interests are affected by the proposed easement remain concerned about the consequence of granting vehicular and pedestrian access through its presently-secured basement car park by the creation of a hole in an existing wall. Once granted, there would be scope under s 180(4)(d) of the PLA for the owner of Lot 1 (not necessarily LPG) in the future to apply to modify the easement if "some material change in the circumstances has taken place since the order imposing the statutory right of user was made".

[64] LPG says that it intends to commence construction of the basement of the building on Lot 1 within the next six months, having obtained an extension of the currency period of the development approval to 19 November 2015. Its building contract (if any) for the basement or any other part of the proposed building is not in evidence, and the respondent raises a question about the financial capacity of LPG to undertake the development, despite it having unencumbered title to Lot 1. In any case, there is nothing to stop LPG from selling the property once it has obtained the grant of an easement pursuant to s 180. LPG might sell Lot 1 to a developer which, as LPG has done, seeks to increase the scale of development on Lot 1 and gain approval to do so. For example, if LPG, or more probably, a buyer from it, wished to increase the scale of development in order to make the project financially viable or more profitable, and obtained development approval to do so, it might make an application under s 180(4)(d) to modify the easement to reflect the modified development approval. It might argue, as LPG has done in this proceeding, that such an easement is reasonably necessary in the interests of effective use in a reasonable manner of Lot 1 by carrying out the approved development of the land.

[65] This may be characterised as a kind of floodgates argument in the light of LPG's offer to limit the easement to the currently-approved development of seven units and 14 underground car spaces. I am concerned with the presently-proposed easement in the light of the current development approval, not a possible future application to modify the easement in the light of a different scale of development. That said, when one is being asked to make an order which interferes with the proprietary rights of an owner of land and considering the implications or consequences of doing so, it is appropriate to have regard to the potential for a future modification of the easement which would then be a permanent feature of the land through the creation of an underground gap between basement car parks. If, for example, a future owner of Lot 1 was to reasonably conclude that the present scale of approved development did not make the project financially viable and that the effective use of Lot 1 required a taller tower or more units on each floor, and if the Council approved such a modified development, then that owner of Lot 1 would have grounds to apply for a modification of the easement which had been granted.

[66] Given the recent history of LPG's attempts to modify the approved development, the respondent's concern about the future and the consequences of granting an easement are not without justification. My focus, however, remains upon the current proposal and LPG's offer to limit any easement to the size and scale of the currently-approved development.

[67] A very substantial body of affidavit evidence is before the Court and many of the respondents were not required for cross-examination. LPG's accountant, Mr Latif, exhibited numerous documents to his affidavit as a matter of convenience, notwithstanding that he did not have personal knowledge of the truth of their contents. I treat his affidavit as a convenient repository of information.

[68] The chairperson of the body corporate committee of the respondent, Mr Walton, also swore an affidavit which exhibited numerous documents and which described the scheme land, the applicant's land, the Daly lots and relevant easements. Mr Walton, and a number of other residents, swore affidavits about the circumstances under which they came to acquire their lots in Castlebar Cove, and that there was no disclosure to them from the seller (Sincere) or its agent in relation to the proposed easement.

[69] Various residents gave evidence about their concern in relation to the granting of an easement. This included the inconvenience to them from noise and dust during the construction period, an ongoing loss of privacy and noise from additional traffic if the easement is granted. The residents value highly their privacy and the security offered by present access arrangements through their secured basement car park. They expressed concern about the presence of strangers on the Castlebar Cove site.

[70] Although not specifically addressed in the proposed easement, LPG's case is that the easement will allow persons on Lot 1 to move rubbish bins from the Lot 1 basement car park through the Castlebar Cove underground car park, up the ramp and to leave them for collection on Castlebar Cove's common property. This is said to be consistent with the development approval conditions which require an appropriate area for the storage and collection of refuse in a position which is accessible to service vehicle "on the site". The site referred to in the condition is said by LPG to extend to the Castlebar Cove land. Leaving aside the meaning of "the site" in that condition, the proposed easement does not clearly confer a right to store refuse bins on Castlebar Cove after they have been transported through the basement and left on the ground of the Castlebar Cove common property. If LPG wished the easement to extend to a right to store refuse on Castlebar Cove's land then this matter would need to be clearly stated in any easement and not left to become a matter of dispute between neighbouring body corporates, their managers and residents. This is only one matter which is not adequately addressed in the proposed easement document.

[71] If granted in the terms sought, the easement would require Castlebar Cove to facilitate access by residents, licensees and invitees of the Grantee and its successors. Castlebar Cove would be required to not prevent or restrict access and this would require it, through its manager, to maintain access for residents of a neighbouring property and others who they invited into their basement car park area. It would require the issue of security fobs to allow access to Castlebar Cove's secure basement car park, but not its lifts, and to address issues when those fobs did not work or were lost. Because the cost of establishing and managing those arrangements for an indefinite term were not estimated, it is impossible to guess at their cost on an annual basis. This might have implications in connection with s 180(3)(b). The present issue, however, is that the proposed easement requires Castlebar Cove to bear the cost of maintaining a right of access for members of an unrelated scheme.

[72] The proposed easement does not descend to any detail about the management of traffic movement or its speed or matters which might be addressed through by-laws and other mechanisms were Lot 1 to be absorbed into a common scheme.

[73] Specifics have not been addressed about how any doorway or firewall between the two properties would be operated, either through sensor pads or magic eyes, and whether such a barrier would be closed at all times of the day or night.

[74] In summary, the terms of the easement document which LPG's application asks the Court to impose on Lot 1 are remarkably deficient in detail, and LPG's evidence has not considered important details about matters that are not addressed by its terms. Its general approach was that these matters "can be sorted out in determining appropriate compensation". But the devil is in the detail. The present application proposes that the respondent be paid $1 as consideration for the granting of an easement of indefinite duration, which imposes substantial obligations upon the respondent and which is lacking in detail about practical arrangements to manage access rights and their cost.

Alternative access to allow the proposed development without access through Castlebar Cove [75] LPG sought changes to the development approval under revised drawings prepared by its architect, Mr Thompson, on the basis that the development of Lot 1 would be integrated with Castlebar Cove, with shared facilities. Mr Thompson was under the misapprehension that this was LPG's intention, when clearly it is not. This is not a criticism of Mr Thompson. It is simply to say that he proceeded on the basis that Lot 1 would form part of an integrated Castlebar Cove, and that the opinions that he expressed in his evidence were given on that false assumption. LPG has no such intention and the Castlebar Cove scheme no longer contemplates a Stage 3 expansion or any development on Lot 1.

LPG does not suggest that it has sought and been refused Council permission to modify Condition 27 so as to remove the easement via the Castlebar Cove car park, and to have vehicular access by the Lambert Street driveway. As noted, Conditions 14 and 28 require that driveway to be modified and to be used for vehicles, including those of visitors and removalist trucks. No proposal has been put by LPG to Council to develop Lot 1 without access through Castlebar Cove. Instead, LPG relies on the development approval that was granted to Sincere at a time when it appears that Sincere intended, or at least told others that it intended, that Lot 1 be an expansion of Castlebar Cove.

[77] The respondent's architect, Mr Peabody, who was called as an expert witness, advanced an alternative proposal which would allow for the approved building to be constructed on Lot 1 without access via Castlebar Cove, including provisions for refuse collection to occur within that site. Mr Peabody's proposal offers the same amenity in a slightly different configuration, whilst allowing the development to be self-contained. It provides for access by the Lambert Street driveway and includes some landscaping and the removal of vegetation in the form of weeds. According to Mr Peabody, whose evidence I accept, the alternative development provides similar amenity. In some respects the amenity is improved, in others, it is slightly reduced, but overall they are comparable.

[78] Mr Thompson expressed a preference for the approved development, but, as noted, any implied criticism of Mr Peabody's alternative was based upon the false assumption that the approved development was to form part of Castlebar Cove.

[79] The land in the general vicinity, including Castlebar Street outside Castlebar Cove, is characterised by steep roads and driveways. Two traffic engineers gave evidence. The substance of their evidence is that neither the approved development nor the alternative was ideal and that each required a relaxation of the desirable standards in the Transport, Access, Parking and Servicing Code. The development approval for Lot 1 required significant relaxations on both the width and gradient of the Lambert Street driveway. The implementation of the existing development approval would require some modification of the Lambert Street driveway close to Lambert Street. The respondent's traffic engineering expert, Mr Beard, has proposed a remodelled driveway which is said to be safer (in grade and width) than the design that was approved by Council on the basis of performance-based outcomes. The regrading does not impede the Daly lots.

[80] The rerouting of all access through Lambert Street would require minor modifications which appear achievable within existing gradients and which can be achieved without major cost or engineering difficulty. Mr Beard's evidence is that a re-design of the driveway is feasible and would contain desirable changes and that improvements to the approved design are possible.

[81] There is no significant conflict between the evidence of Mr Beard and Mr Gallagher with respect to access through Lambert Street. I accept Mr Beard's evidence, which was not the subject of any real challenge, that Lambert Street will, after development, have "marginally better" access and that the driveway to Lambert Street is "capable of being improved to the point where it would, in fact, be superior to the Castlebar Street access".

[82] Town planning experts gave evidence. Needless to say, there are no provisions in the Brisbane City Plan 2000 or the Brisbane City Plan 2014 that mandate access through an adjoining property. The planning scheme requires safe and functional vehicular access and parking to service a development of this scale. According to Mr Priddle, the town planning expert called by the respondent, the changes proposed by Mr Peabody and Mr Beard:

> "(a) ensure safe and functional access and parking to and from Lambert Street that accommodates all necessary vehicle types;
> (b) do not fundamentally change the outcomes provided for in the development approval — it is not a substantially different development;
>
> (c) are minor;
>
> [140782]
>
> (d) are generally complaint [sic] with the planning scheme provisions and, as such, if a development application was lodged for this type of development, Brisbane City Council would likely approve it;
> (e) demonstrate that there is no overriding necessity for any access easement through the basement of Castlebar Cove."

[83] It is acknowledged that the proposed changes in access arrangements would not be considered "generally in accordance with" the existing approval. They would require an application. The evidence did not reveal any significant issue concerning compliance with any relevant planning scheme which would operate as an impediment to approval being granted for the alternative design layout proposed by Mr Peabody and Mr Beard.

[84] LPG's town planning expert, Mr Reynolds, gave evidence that a right of user through the basement wall of Castlebar Cove "will be necessary if functional access cannot be provided [along the existing driveway on traffic engineering grounds] or procedurally a new development application [changing all access to the driveway] cannot be properly made" and, impliedly, thereafter approved. Mr Reynolds accepted, from a planning perspective, that redirecting all traffic via the driveway from Lambert Street does not "fundamentally change the development outcomes" for anyone other than the co-users of the existing driveway (being the Dalys) and the users of Lot 1.

[85] Both the existing development approval and any application to change access in accordance with the alternative proposed by Mr Peabody and Mr Beard will require the existing driveway to be improved for the benefit of all users, including the Dalys. There would be an issue concerning the intensification of use of the driveway brought about by all traffic in and out of the development using the Lambert Street driveway and, according to Mr Reynolds, this will result in a loss of amenity for adjoining premises and the users of the proposed development at 108 Lambert Street. That said, the grant of an easement through Castlebar Cove will also result in a loss of amenity for residents of adjoining premises.

[86] Subject to a legal issue about whether the Dalys' consent to an application to change access would be required, the evidence of the expert town planning witnesses is that both the proposed development with its approved access arrangement and a development with the modified access arrangements proposed by Mr Peabody and Mr Beard comply with relevant planning scheme provisions.

The legal issue

[87] The legal issue identified in the evidence of the planning experts is whether the consent of the Dalys would be required in order to make an application for a change in the approval or a new development application. Section 369 of the Sustainable Planning Act 2009 (Qld) governs the procedure if a person wants to make a permissible change to a development approval. Section 371 provides that if the person making the request is not the owner of the land to which the development approval attaches, the request must be accompanied by the owner's consent unless certain conditions are satisfied. Under s 371(c) the owner's consent is not required if it would not be required under s 263(1) if a development application were made for the requested change. Other exceptions exist including where the responsible entity is satisfied that, having regard to the nature of the proposed change, the owner has unreasonably withheld consent, and the requested change does not materially affect the owner's land. Insofar as s 371(c) directs attention to s 263(1), the consent required under s 263(1) for the making of an application for a material change of use of premises does not apply to the extent the land subject to the application has the benefit of an easement and the development is "not inconsistent with the terms of the easement".[5]

[88] LPG identifies the risk that an application of the kind identified by the town planning experts may require the consent of the Dalys to change access arrangements and that their consent will be refused. The town planning experts, quite rightly, did not seek to venture an opinion on what is essentially a legal issue. Moreover, LPG does not seek a ruling by me on the legal question of whether the Dalys' consent would be required or not. It rests its case on the fact that there is said to be a risk that their consent will be required to an application to modify access arrangements. The identified issue is whether the development "is not inconsistent with" the terms of the easement. The Dalys might argue that the modification involves an intensification of use which was not contemplated by the terms of the easement. An intensification of use may be relevant to their amenity, but the relevant issue is whether the proposal is inconsistent with the terms of the easement. In that regard, the easement does not limit access to a certain number of vehicles.

[89] The evidence, in particular Mr Walton's evidence, and the submissions refer to the reciprocal nature of the easements which constitute the Lambert Street driveway. The reciprocal easements are not limited in terms of the number of vehicles which may use them. Both the Dalys and the owner of Lot 1 have the benefit of their own land and a reciprocal easement for the purpose of future development of their land. If, for example, the Dalys wished to demolish the existing townhouses and build a high-rise, there seemingly would be nothing to prevent the occupiers of the new building from using the easement, provided planning permission was granted to the new development. Depending upon the intensity of the development, there may be town planning and traffic engineering issues. However, if they were resolved, there would be nothing preventing use of the easement. On this scenario, the Dalys could lodge a development application in respect of the easement land without LPG's consent because the proposed development would be "not inconsistent with" the terms of the easement, which is unlimited in terms of intensity of use. The same may be said of the mutual or reciprocal easement which benefits Lot 1.

[90] The proposed development, with all traffic access by the Lambert Street driveway, does not appear to be inconsistent with the terms of the easement.

[91] I recognise that there may be arguments to the contrary. However, neither easement is limited in terms of use, for example, to access low-rise dwelling houses. The terms of each would seem to permit the easement to be used for access to a high-rise development. The proposed development on the scale currently approved for seven units and 14 car spaces for residents would not appear to be inconsistent with the terms of the easement. On this basis, there would not seem to be a significant risk that the Dalys' consent would be required to make the necessary application for approval of the alternative access arrangement proposed by Mr Peabody and Mr Beard. It would then be a matter for the Council to consider the application. The evidence before me does not identify any significant town planning issue to approval being granted for the alternative access arrangement.

[92] Finally, I turn to the expert evidence in relation to engineering matters, which was given by structural engineers, Mr Neil and Mr Ainsworth. The structural engineering drawings for Castlebar Cove identified an opening of about eight metres, requiring the removal of two existing piers in the Castlebar Cove basement wall. However, the approved drawings for Lot 1 identified an opening of about 10.5 metres, requiring three piers to be removed. A more recent drawing made further modifications to revert to an opening of about eight metres.

[93] It is unnecessary to address the detail of the evidence of the structural engineers. Certain risks were identified associated with undertaking the work in question, but it appears that the work is feasible through the adoption of proper practices to use props when removing the structural support for the wall. The likely period of construction is eight weeks. Mr Ainsworth's evidence identifies a risk of leakage through a seal and problems with successfully waterproofing the proposed interface between the adjoining basements. He says that the risk should not be underestimated and that seals of this type have a poor track record and require frequent repair.

[94] LPG responds to the respondent's submission that the work carries not immaterial risks in circumstances in which LPG has not undertaken to adopt a "best practice" model. I accept LPG's responsive submissions that the risks identified by the structural engineers are manageable and capable of being reduced to an acceptable level. This might be done by the imposition of appropriate conditions in the terms of the easement itself to supplement whatever requirements are imposed by relevant standards and building approvals.

[95] The risk of seals failing should not be disregarded and the costs of any loss caused by that and their repair might also be addressed by a suitably-worded indemnity to be given by the owner of Lot 1 and by making the owner of Lot 1 legally responsible for the costs of inspection, maintenance and repair of the seals and the rectification of any damage. I should mention that none of these matters have been addressed in the easement that is proposed or in submissions. This is a further illustration of the fact that LPG's application is in terms of the 2008 document rather than a document which contains appropriate commercial and other terms.

[96] Whilst s 180(4)(b) contemplates that an order under s 180 will include "such other terms and conditions as may be just", the Court only turns to those matters if satisfied that an order of the kind referred to in s 180(1) should be made. In order to be satisfied that such an order should be made, the Court must be satisfied of the matters contained in s 180(3). The lack of detail in the terms of the easement proposed by LPG is a matter to which I will return in considering s 180(3) issues, including the issue of adequate compensation and whether the respondent's refusal to agree to the imposition of an easement in terms of the 2008 document was unreasonable in all the circumstances.

Is it reasonably necessary in the interests of the effective use of Lot 1 in a reasonable manner for it to have access via the Castlebar Cove car park in the manner proposed?

[97] This is the principal issue in the case. The respondent submits that LPG has not satisfied the test of reasonable necessity which, according to authority, means more than mere desirability or preferability over the alternative means.[6] The respondent contends that LPG has not proven its case because the means of access proposed by it, namely an easement through a secure basement car park, in the manner proposed, is not "reasonably necessary" in circumstances where the alternative proposed by the respondent will allow the effective use of Lot 1 for the kind of development proposed by LPG. In addition, the respondent submits that even if LPG's proposal was thought to be more desirable than the alternative proposed by it, s 180(1) is not concerned with the most preferable or desirable means of access. An order under s 180 interferes with proprietary rights and the greater the burden of the imposition that is sought, the stronger the case needs to be to justify a finding of reasonable necessity.[7] In that regard, for the right of user to be reasonably necessary for a development, the development with the right of user must be at least substantially preferable to development without the right of user.[8]

[98] LPG's case is that it has a development approval which is current and that the use of Lot 1 in accordance with the approval is an effective use in a reasonable manner of its land. The approved development contemplates access through the basement of Castlebar Cove, being land to which the development approval applies, and no other access is approved. LPG's written submissions criticised the respondent's approach as being to "hypothesise an alternative development with alternative access" which was said to be "uncertain and speculative". That written submission was not pressed in the light of the expert evidence. Instead, the alternative proposed by the respondent was said to have its own problems, including the legal risk that consent would be required for the necessary application to vary access arrangements. I found that risk not to be a significant one.

[99] The principles discussed by Douglas J in Lang Parade make alternative means relevant. An applicant for an order under s 180 need not demonstrate that there is no alternative way to access the land. It does, however, need to meet the statutory requirement of "reasonably necessary" in the context of alternative means of access.

[100] Importantly, both the approved development and the alternative require work to be undertaken on the Lambert Street driveway. The owner of Lot 1 has a legal right of access by virtue of ownership and an existing easement to Lambert Street.

The first principle identified by Douglas J in Lang Parade is that one should not interfere readily with the proprietary rights of an owner of land.[9] That principle and the other principles identified by his Honour have been followed in later cases. LPG's proposal involves an interference with proprietary rights. The respondent's alternative does not.

[102] Subject to the legal issue which I have addressed concerning consent of an owner to the making of an application to amend the access route to Lot 1's basement car park, there is no significant town planning impediment to approval of such an application so that vehicles travel along the existing Lambert Street driveway in accordance with existing rights of access. Although the existing approval does not require, in terms, widening and re-grading of the Lambert Street driveway, certain of those conditions which deal with access via the Lambert Street driveway will require improvements to that driveway. Implementation of the current development approval would, in practical terms, necessitate landscaping and other work to enhance the appearance and practical performance of the Lambert Street driveway.

[103] LPG has not established that Lot 1 cannot be developed with the kind of seven unit, 14 car space arrangement which it says it intends to construct, without access via the basement car park of Castlebar Cove.

[104] The alternative proposed by the respondent appears to be an effective use of Lot 1 to develop it, and to make effective use of the lot in a reasonable manner.

[105] Based upon the expert and other evidence, I regard the respondent's alternative as a preferable method for the proposed development than the approved means of access. The approved means of access may have been preferable if Lot 1 was to form part of a common scheme, but it is not.

[106] The fact that the previous owner of Lot 1 obtained the approval of the Planning and Environment Court to a modified application, which originated in an application which was made at a time when Lot 1 was intended to be developed and incorporated into Castlebar Cove, should be taken into account. It is evidence that the Planning and Environment Court concluded that, if the required easement was provided and other conditions were satisfied, the development might proceed. However, that approval should not be equated with an opinion that the approved development is preferable to other forms of development, including the alternative but essentially similar form of development proposed by the respondent. LPG has not sought the Council's response to such an amended form of development. The town planning evidence, particularly the evidence of Mr Priddle, and the other evidence, suggests that the proposed development, with the modifications to access proposed in the respondent's alternative, is an effective use of Lot 1, and that the Council would be unlikely to reject such a proposed development on town planning or other grounds.

[107] The fact that the approved development may constitute an effective use of Lot 1 (considered in isolation) is not sufficient to meet the statutory test of reasonable necessity. A viable alternative means of access has been identified in the respondent's proposal, being an alternative which avoids interference with the proprietary rights of the owners of land at Castlebar Cove and personal inconvenience to them. That alternative will allow the use of Lot 1 to construct essentially the same building which LPG has approval to build. In the circumstances, I am not satisfied it is reasonably necessary in the interests of the effective use in a reasonable manner of Lot 1 to have access via the Castlebar Cove car park in the manner proposed.

[108] I am not even satisfied that development of Lot 1 with the proposed right of user is more desirable or preferable to its development in accordance with the alternative proposed by the respondent, or some similar alternative which would allow access by the Lambert Street driveway to Lot 1's basement car park to allow up to 14 cars to be parked there. If, as LPG would have it, the comings and goings of residents from the basement car park would cause minimal inconvenience to the residents of Castlebar Cove, given the relatively low intensity of such vehicular traffic each day, then the passage of the same amount of traffic along the existing driveway would not be thought to impose unacceptable inconvenience to residents in the vicinity of the existing driveway. I am not satisfied that LPG's proposal is more desirable than the respondent's alternative, having regard to relative loss of amenity, the extent of interference with proprietary rights and other relevant factors.

[109] Even if I had been satisfied that LPG's proposal was more desirable or preferable to the alternative proposed by the respondent, I would not have concluded that it was substantially preferable to it. I conclude that development of Lot 1 with the proposed right of user is not substantially preferable to development without the right of user.

[110] The Court must be satisfied that it is consistent with the public interest that Lot 1 should be used in the manner proposed before an order of the kind referred to in s 180(1) shall be made. LPG submits that it is consistent with the public interest that land be developed in accordance with a development approval for the land. That proposition may be accepted at a level of generality.[10] However, that general principle requires consideration of the terms of the development approval, which specifically include a requirement to obtain an easement. Framed differently, it might be said to be in the public interest for the land to be developed if the relevant easement could be obtained and the other conditions of the approval satisfied.

[111] The words "in the manner proposed" in s 180(3)(a) direct attention to the applicant's particular proposal.[11] The particular proposal is for access to Lot 1's basement car park by a to-be-constructed hole in an existing wall pursuant to an easement which is lacking in detail concerning the regulation of access. The means of access proposed reduces the security and privacy of residents of Castlebar Cove. Leaving to one side the lack of adequate consideration or compensation (being matters best addressed in the context of s 180(3)(b) and (c)), and focusing upon other aspects of LPG's particular proposal, I am not satisfied that it is in the public interest that Lot 1 be used in the manner proposed in circumstances in which the proposal is for an easement which is lacking in detail so as to regulate relations and avoid conflicts between different owners and body corporates of different schemes. The position may have been otherwise if the easement had been a temporary one, pending the establishment of a new scheme on Lot 1 and the absorption of Lot 1 into a scheme which would regulate access and provide for the enforcement of rules.

[112] I turn to the question of adequate compensation for loss or disadvantage which the owners of the common property may suffer from the imposition of the proposed easement. Mr Latif's affidavit states that LPG is prepared to carry out at its expense any survey work and the preparation of a plan or plans in registrable form. It says nothing about other costs associated with the construction of the easement, or any payment to compensate the respondent for the cost of maintaining, at all hours of the day and night, access through its basement, whilst attempting to maintain the security of its own car park.

[113] Rather than address practical aspects of the day-to-day operation of the easement, and their cost and inconvenience, LPG tended to treat these matters as something to be worked out in the future in the course of determining appropriate compensation. It also tended to suggest in its submissions that there was no real risk to the privacy and security of owners of Castlebar Cove and that their security would be preserved by issuing fobs to residents of the Lot 1 development, so that security would remain essentially the same. If a plan along these lines was adopted it would come at a cost and there also would be a cost in managing the allocation and replacement of fobs.

[114] LPG's proposal seemingly is to allow for refuse bins to be transported through, and stored on, the common property of Castlebar Cove. But there was no detail about how and when the transit of rubbish would be arranged, by whom and at whose cost.

[115] The lack of appropriate detail about the practical operation of the proposed access, including the operation of any firewall and at whose cost it would be operated and maintained, makes it hard to assess the financial cost to the respondent in meeting the obligations which the 2008 easement document would impose upon it.

The concerns of residents about a reduction in their security and the presence of strangers on the Castlebar Cove site are not unfounded. It is hard to assess in financial terms adequate compensation for the actual and perceived loss of privacy and reduction in security among people who presently feel secure when entering and leaving their cars in the secure basement car park. I suspect that it would be possible to adequately compensate them for any justifiable concerns.

[117] It also might be possible to compensate the respondent for direct financial consequences of operating this novel means of access, which is distinctly different from a common easement in the suburbs or countryside associated with a battle-axe shape block of land or an easement where persons can have a common key to a padlock on a common gate. It might be possible, in theory, to fashion a term by which the costs to the respondent on an annual basis could be worked out. However, the lack of detail concerning the role which the respondent's manager would play, and how the time and resources required to maintain access for the benefit of Lot 1 would be worked out, would be something of a practical challenge. I am not satisfied that those costs can be worked out in a way that would allow them to be adequately assessed and compensated.

[118] Whatever the loss or disadvantage which will be suffered from the imposition of the easement may be in respect of an easement which is for an indefinite duration, and unlimited in terms of the hour of the day or night at which the respondent would be required to provide access, adequate compensation for that loss and disadvantage would vastly exceed $1.

[119] This brings me to the principal reason to refuse the application on s 180(3) grounds. As previously mentioned, LPG has no basis to demand the grant of an easement in terms of the 2008 document in return for the payment of a consideration of $1, being the consideration stated in that document.

[120] In these proceedings LPG did not propose the imposition of an obligation of user in the form of an easement according to commercial terms. It sought the imposition of an easement on the terms of the 2008 document. It did not advance a proposal to the respondent for the grant of an easement (whether on the sparse terms of the 2008 document or one which described respective obligations and arrangements in more detail) with the compensation or consideration to be agreed or, failing agreement, to be fixed by the Court in accordance with s 180(4)(a). Its proposal was to pay $1 in order to interfere with existing property rights and to impose an obligation on the respondent which conferred substantial benefits upon Lot 1, and therefore enhanced its value.

[121] This is not simply a case in which LPG did not offer to pay a reasonable consideration or reasonable compensation at the time the proceedings were commenced. It maintained the position at the hearing of the matter that the power under s 180 should be exercised in its favour in terms of an easement which provided only for a consideration of $1.

[122] The fact that the respondent's basement was designed to accommodate the removal of the wall in question and the development approval applies to the respondent's basement did not make it unreasonable for the respondent to refuse to agree to the imposition of an easement in terms of the 2008 document.

[123] LPG submits that the respondent's refusal to agree to accept the imposition of a statutory right of user in terms of the easement which the AGM resolved to grant on 4 August 2008 is unreasonable given, among other things, that no satisfactory explanation was given for the respondent's change of position. However, there is a satisfactory explanation for the respondent's refusal to agree to the imposition of an easement in terms of a resolution which:

(a) was passed through the improper use of powers of attorney;
(b) was not disclosed to individuals who later acquired apartments in Castlebar Cove; and
(c) neither Sincere nor anyone else took steps to progress through the granting and registration of an easement.

In any case, the August 2008 resolution was passed in circumstances in which Sincere then intended to progress Stage 3 as part of a larger Castlebar Cove development. The easement expressly provided that it would be extinguished if the development of Stages 2 and 3 did not proceed. Stage 3 will not proceed and that is a good reason alone for the respondent's change of position.

[125] The easement which LPG seeks to have imposed on the owners of Castlebar Cove is one which imposes significant obligations upon one body corporate for the benefit of the owner of an adjoining property which has no intention of developing its property to form part of an amalgamated scheme.

[126] If LPG or a successor in title develops Lot 1 in accordance with the development approval and establishes a new scheme to govern it, the respondent would be maintaining a right of access for members of an unrelated scheme, who were not required to make any financial contribution to the benefits they enjoyed. It was not unreasonable of the respondent to refuse to accept the imposition of the obligations contained in the 2008 document in circumstances in which the only consideration provided for was $1.

[127] The respondent's refusal to agree to accept the imposition of an easement in return for the payment of $1 was not unreasonable in all the circumstances. In the circumstances, LPG has failed to satisfy the matter stated in s 180(3)(c).

Conclusion

[128] LPG has not established that it is reasonably necessary in the interests of the effective use in a reasonable manner of Lot 1 to have access by the Castlebar Cove car park in the manner proposed by it. The respondent's alternative proposal allows the effective use of Lot 1 for the development which LPG currently proposes, namely a seven unit development with 14 basement car parks, through the use of an existing driveway over which Lot 1 enjoys legal rights.

[129] I am not satisfied that it is consistent with the public interest that the proprietary rights of owners of the common property of Castlebar Cove should be interfered with in those circumstances. This is notwithstanding the fact that Castlebar Cove's basement was designed and constructed to accommodate the creation of a gap in the wall to facilitate the expansion of the Castlebar Cove scheme and that the current development approval extends to the respondent's land and envisages the grant of an easement through its basement car park. The effective use in a reasonable manner of Lot 1 in the manner proposed, namely the development of the currently-proposed high-rise, is allowed by the alternative proposed by the respondent. LPG has not shown otherwise or that there is a significant risk that the alternative proposal will not be approved if submitted to the Council.

[130] The existence of that reasonable alternative means of access and the degree of interference with property rights and privacy associated with the easement proposed by LPG means that the easement proposed by LPG is not reasonably necessary. In addition, I am not satisfied that it is consistent with the public interest that Lot 1 should be used in the manner proposed by LPG. In any event, there is insufficient evidence concerning details of the practical arrangements proposed by LPG for the indefinite duration of the easement for me to be satisfied that any loss or disadvantage which may be suffered from the imposition of the easement can be adequately compensated in money.

[131] Most importantly, the application should be refused on s 180(3) grounds because LPG has not satisfied me that the respondent's refusal to agree to the imposition of an easement in terms of the 2008 document is in all the circumstances unreasonable. The proposed easement contains no provisions for adequate consideration on account of the obligations imposed upon Castlebar Cove by the proposed easement or any mechanism for the respondent to be compensated for the costs associated with meeting the obligation to provide access in the manner proposed for an indefinite period. The respondent is correct to submit that the $1 sum provided by way of compensation is woefully inadequate and unreasonable in all the circumstances.

LPG has failed to establish the conditions for the making of an order under s 180 of the PLA over the common property of Castlebar Cove CTS 37148 in terms of the easement document which was adopted on 4 August 2008. Because it has failed to establish the conditions for the making of an order under s 180, the occasion to include in any such order terms and conditions that are just, does not arise. If it had, there was insufficient evidence about the detail of the practical arrangements to allow such terms and conditions to be drafted and LPG did not advance the kind of terms and conditions which one would expect in an easement which regulated the conduct of such an unusual easement. Whilst the terms of the 2008 document may have been appropriate for a temporary easement pending the establishment of a scheme on Lot 1 as part of Stage 3 of Castlebar Cove, they are not the kind of commercial and comprehensive terms which would be expected to govern relations between the owners and residents of entirely different developments. In the circumstances, it is unnecessary to attempt to work out the comprehensive terms and conditions which would be required to be imposed under s 180(4) if an order had been made.

[133] The application will be refused.

[134] There is no reason why costs should not follow the event. The orders will be:

1. The application is refused.
2. The applicant pay the respondent's costs of and incidental to the application to be assessed on the standard basis.

Court Ready PDF

(2015) LQCS ¶90-203; [2015] QCAT 255

Decision delivered on 21 May 2015

Conveyancing — Community Schemes — Remedial Action Notices — Where body corporate alleged its caretaker was not fulfilling its obligations — Where body corporate issued Remedial Action Notices requiring caretaker to remedy the breaches — Whether Remedial Action Notices were valid for the purpose of s 129(4) of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulations 2008 — Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulations 2008, s 129(4).

The applicant was the caretaker appointed by the respondent body corporate in respect of a complex situated in Queensland.

The body corporate alleged that the caretaker was not fulfilling its duties and the caretaker was served with a number of Remedial Action Notices requiring the company to remedy the alleged breaches.

The caretaker made an application to the Queensland Civil and Administrative Tribunal for relief including (inter alia) declarations as to the validity of the Notices. Leave was granted for the caretaker to file a further amended application which incorporated the claims in respect of the validity of the Notices. The declarations it sought included that the Notices were invalid as they did not satisfy s 129(4) of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulations 2008.

Section 129 provides that a body corporate may terminate a caretaker's engagement for reasons including that the caretaker has failed to carry out its duties under the engagement. However the caretaker must first be given a Remedial Action Notice that complies with s 129(4). Section 129(4) provides that the Notice must state that the caretaker has "not less than 14 days after the Notice is given" (emphasis added) to carry out the duty or remedy the contraventions.

However the body corporate's Notices stated that the caretaker had to remedy the breaches "within 14 days of being served with a copy of this Notice".

Held: for the caretaker. Each of the Remedial Action Notices were invalid for the purposes of s 129 of the Accommodation Module and of no effect.

1. The phrase "within 14 days" as per the body corporate's Notices, is not the same as "not less than 14 days" as per s 129.

2. Under s 129(4) the trigger for the calculation of the minimum period for rectification is the giving of the notice and once the notice is given the person cannot be required to rectify until 14 days have expired. The words "not less than 14 days" refer to the "period stated in the notice". That period accordingly must be greater than 14 days.

3. To require rectification "within" 14 days is a requirement that requires rectification in a period "less than 14 days", that is, it requires rectification before 14 days have passed.

4. The body corporate submitted that the expression "within 14 days" means the same as "not less than 14 days". To express the issue in that manner ignores the words "after the notice is given". The correct meaning and effect of the words in the module is that there must not be a requirement to rectify until 14 days after the notice is given has expired.

Before: Member Favell

Editorial comment: This decision illustrates that a body corporate must comply strictly with the requirements of s 129 of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulations 2008 when drafting Remedial Action Notices.

The body corporate in this decision may have had legitimate reasons for wishing to terminate the caretaker's engagement. However the body corporate, despite presumably spending a considerable sum on legal fees, was no closer to getting the matter resolved as the Tribunal declared that the Remedial Action Notices were invalid.

ORDERS MADE:

[1] The Tribunal Declares:

1. The Remedial Action Notice (Number 1) issued to Peterson Management Services Pty Ltd on 18 June 2010 is invalid and of no effect.
2. The Remedial Action Notice (Number 2) issued to Peterson Management Services Pty Ltd on 29 July 2010 is invalid and of no effect.
3. The Remedial Action Notice (Number 3) issued to Peterson Management Services Pty Ltd on 29 July 2010 is invalid and of no effect.
4. The Remedial Action Notice (Number 4) issued to Peterson Management Services Pty Ltd on 24 August 2010 is invalid and of no effect.
5. The Remedial Action Notice (Number 5) issued to Peterson Management Services Pty Ltd on 17 September 2010 is invalid and of no effect.
6. The Remedial Action Notice (Number 6) issued to Peterson Management Services Pty Ltd on 17 September 2010 is invalid and of no effect.
7. The Remedial Action Notice (Number 7) issued to Peterson Management Services Pty Ltd on 6 October 2010 is invalid and of no effect.
8. The Remedial Action Notice (Number 8) issued to Peterson Management Services Pty Ltd on 7 October 2010 is invalid and of no effect.

[2] The parties may make written submissions as to any costs order sought after notice that a costs order is sought is filed in the Tribunal and served on the other party. In the event a costs order is sought the party seeking costs shall file in the Tribunal and serve on the other party written submissions within 7 days of filing and serving any notice a costs order is sought. The other party may file and serve any written submissions in response within 14 days of being served with the written costs submissions. The costs application will then be determined on the papers.

Favell_M:

[1] Peterson Management Services Pty Ltd was appointed the caretaking services contractor for the Rocks Resort Community Title Scheme 9435 pursuant to two contracts, the first titled “Caretaking Agreement” and the second “Maintenance Agreement”. Both contracts were entered into on 12 September 2003. The building complex that is the subject of the agreements is 33 years old.

[2] The relationship between the parties has been subject to dispute and in 2010 the Rocks Resort served Peterson Management with a number of Remedial Action Notices[1] (RAN) requiring the company to remedy the alleged breaches or carry out the duties, which were alleged to have not been carried out.[2]

[3] Peterson Management must fail to comply with a RAN before the Rocks resort may take action to terminate their services under the agreements[3] .[4]

[4] Peterson Management made an application to the Tribunal on 22 December 2010 for relief including declarations as to the validity of the notices and a declaration that the company had complied with them. It also sought damages for breaches of obligations which were alleged to be owed by the Rocks Resort to Peterson Management under the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld), the Accommodation Module and the agreement.

[5] It is noted that at the time of the Peterson Management application the Rocks Resort had taken no action to terminate either of the agreements in reliance on the notices. It is, however, clear from correspondence that Rocks Resort had reserved its rights to initiate the termination of the agreements.[5]

[6] The application filed by Peterson Management consisted of many hundreds of pages. The response and further material has now grown considerably. No complaint has been left unturned. Every point was agitated by the parties. Since 2010 the matter has had some considerable history. It has been the subject of numerous applications and directions.[6]

On 5 March 2013, the Tribunal dismissed the claims in respect of damages for breach of contract and breach of statutory duty. Leave was granted to Peterson Management Services Pty Ltd to file a further amended application which incorporated the claims in respect of:

> i) The validity of eight remedial action notices, > ii) Compliance with eight remedial action notices, and > iii) Reimbursement of the sum of $15,006.20 on or before 4.00pm on 30 October 2013.

[8] It seeks declarations in respect of each of the remedial action notices. The declarations sought are:

> a. the notice, to the extent it purports to be a remedial action notice for the purpose of section 129 of the Accommodation Module 2008, is invalid and of no effect: and, or alternatively > b. the applicant has complied with the notice; and, or alternatively > c. the respondent is not entitled to terminate the agreement (caretaking or maintenance) in reliance on the notice.

[9] The respondent body corporate denies there were any defects in the notices, the notices were complied with and says it is entitled to rely on each notice to terminate the agreements.

[10] The respondent also seeks declarations;

> a. that the remedial action notices were and are valid for the purposes of the agreements and for the purpose of section 129(4) of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulations 2008;
> b. that the breaches contained in the remedial action notices were not remedied within the time limited by the notices in which they were contained;
> c. that the applicant has been grossly negligent in its performance or non performance of the duties under the agreements or any of them;
> d. that the applicant has committed gross misconduct in its performance or non performance of the duties under the agreements or any of them.

[11] The term “gross misconduct” is not defined in the relevant legislation or the agreements.

[12] The term “gross negligence” is not defined in the relevant legislation or the agreements.

[13] The Body Corporate contended that the whenever there was a breach of the agreements there was misconduct and gross negligence.

[14] The Body Corporate also sought findings that in respect of “suspected” alleged breaches of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 (Qld) (PAMDA) the applicant breached the PAMDA; breached the Letting Agents Code of Conduct; breached the letting agreement; was grossly negligent in its performance of the duties under the letting agreement and had committed gross misconduct in its performance or non performance of the duties under the letting agreement. The relief sought amounts to declarations of gross negligence and gross misconduct.

[15] The applicant contends that the Tribunal should determine whether the various parties who purported to represent the Body Corporate had authority to represent the Body Corporate. It contends that if it is found they did not have the authority the tribunal need not descend into further consideration of the substantial matters in dispute. In my view that result does not follow. In any event it is a matter for the Body Corporate to raise that issue if it did not authorise the response and counter application.

[16] On or about June 18 2010 a Remedial Action Notice (the first RAN) issued complaining that Peterson Management breached clause 5.3(n) of the Caretaking Agreement and clause 5.3(d) of the Maintenance Agreement by failing to comply with two written instructions (the directions) to have its key personnel attend a meeting with persons from Trade Facilities Management Pty Ltd for the purpose of induction and consultation on a new operations manual the Body Corporate wished to implement at the Scheme.

The Body Corporate admitted[7] the allegation by Peterson Management Services that:

The directions do not constitute, on their proper construction:

i. A request to supervise the carrying out of the task;
ii. A request to carry out a reasonable task;
iii. A request to carry out an appropriate task; and, or alternatively;
iv. A request to carry out a reasonable and appropriate task.

[18] That being so, Peterson Management Services pleaded that as at the date of the first notice committee resolution, it was not in breach of clause 5.3(n) of the Caretaking Agreement and was not in breach of clause 5.3(d) of the Maintenance Agreement.

[19] The Body Corporate denies that allegation. It says that, notwithstanding the validity of the first Remedial Action Notice, the applicant was in breach of the Caretaking Agreement and the Maintenance Agreement generally and in particular, clause 5.3(n) of the Caretaking Agreement and clause 5.3(d) of the Maintenance Agreement.

[20] The Body Corporate admitted[8] that the first notice, to the extent it purports to be a Remedial Action Notice, is invalid and of no effect and that it had not given Peterson Management Services a Remedial Action Notice within the meaning of section 131 or otherwise of the Accommodation Module 2008.

[21] It also admitted that it is not lawfully entitled to act pursuant to section 131 of the Accommodation Module 2008 (or otherwise) in reliance on the first notice to terminate:

i. The Caretaking Agreement; and or alternatively,
ii. The Maintenance Agreement.

[22] In respect of the first notice, Peterson Management Services seeks a declaration that the first notice,

(a) to the extent it purports to be a Remedial Action Notice for the purpose of section 129 of the Accommodation Module 2008 is invalid and of no effect; and or alternatively
(b) it has complied with the first notice; and or alternatively
(c) the Body Corporate is not entitled to terminate the Caretaking Agreement in reliance on the first notice.

[23] The Body Corporate during the hearing sought to withdraw the admissions made. Those admissions had been made at a time when the Body Corporate had legal representation. In support of that application the Body Corporate filed an affidavit of their former solicitor. It did not however, provide any persuasive reason for the proposed change in pleading. The application was made very late and it does not appropriately address why the admission should be withdrawn or why it was inappropriately made. In my view the Body Corporate has not provided any valid reason for withdrawing the admission.

[24] In my view, because of the admissions made, Peterson Management Services is entitled to a declaration that the first notice is invalid and of no effect and the Body Corporate is not entitled to terminate the Caretaking agreement in reliance of it.

JURISDICTION

[25] This Tribunal has jurisdiction to deal with matters it is empowered to deal with under the Queensland Civil and Administrative Tribunal Act 2009 (Qld) or an enabling Act.[9]

[26] The Tribunal may make a declaration about a matter in a proceeding instead of making an order it could make about the matter or in addition to an order it could make about the matter.[10]

[27] It may make an order it considers necessary or desirable to give effect to a declaration under section 60(1) and the power under that subsection is, in addition to and does not limit, any power of the Tribunal under an enabling Act to make a declaration.

[28] The Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) in section 149B allows a party to a dispute about a claimed or anticipated contractual matter about the engagement of a person as a body corporate manager or caretaking service contractor for a community title scheme or the authorisation of a person as a letting agent for a community title scheme to apply as provided under the QCAT Act for an order of QCAT exercising the Tribunal's original jurisdiction to resolve the dispute.[11]

[140794]

Both the Body Corporate and Peterson Management Services contend that the matters pleaded in the amended application concern disputes about a claimed or anticipated contractual matter about the engagement of a person as a caretaking service contractor for a community title scheme within the meaning and operation of section 149B of the BCCM Act and hence QCAT has jurisdiction to determine this dispute.

Notice to remedy breach 1

[30] The respondent issued written instructions on 17 and 18 June 2010 to the applicant requiring the applicant's key personnel to attend a meeting at 10 am on 23 June 2010 with Trade Facilities Management Pty Ltd for a period of 2 hours at the complex for the purposes of assisting with a preliminary induction and consultation on a new operations manual.

[31] The applicant refused to attend.

[32] The body corporate alleged that the applicant had then breached clause 5.3(n) of the Caretaking Agreement and clause 5.3(d) of the Maintenance Agreement.

[33] Clause 5.3(n) of the Caretaking Agreement provides:

> The caretaker must supervise the carrying out of such other reasonable and appropriate tasks requested by the Body Corporate relevant to the caretaking of the common property.

[34] Clause 5.3(d) of the Maintenance Agreement provides:

> The contractor must —
> > (d) carry out such other reasonable and appropriate tasks requested by the Body Corporate or the manager relevant to the maintenance of the common property.

[35] For there to be a breach of Clause 5.3(n) of the Caretaking Agreement there must be a failure to supervise the carrying out of reasonable and appropriate tasks requested by the body corporate relevant to the caretaking of the common property which were tasks other than those required by clause 5.3 (a) —(m).

[36] For there to be a breach of Clause 5.3(d) of the Maintenance Agreement there must be a failure to carry out reasonable and appropriate tasks requested by the body corporate or the manager relevant to the maintenance of the common property which were tasks other than those required by Clause 5.3 (a)–(c).

[37] The requirement to attend at the meeting had to be relevant to the caretaking of the property and the maintenance of the common property.

[38] The applicant contends that the directions are not on, a proper construction, a request to supervise the carrying out of a task, a request to carry out a reasonable task, a request to carry out an appropriate task or a request to carry out a reasonable and appropriate task.

[39] The applicant also contends that there were defects in the first notice in that it was at the time the notice was issued a redundant complaint in that the alleged contraventions existed but had been re-mediated prior to the notice issuing or can only be remedied by an undertaking not to repeat the contravention or never existed.

[40] The applicant also contends that the notice suffered from a re-mediation defect in that the notice is so vague or lacking in particulars that it is unclear what action, duty was to be carried out.

Remedial Action Notice 2

[41] On or about 29 July 2010 the Body Corporate purported to issue to Peterson Management Services a Remedial Action Notice pursuant to section 129 of the Accommodation Module 2008 (the second notice). The second notice complained of 21 matters which can be described as follows:

1. The lock maintenance complaint;
2. The garden maintenance complaint;
3. The timber maintenance complaint;
4. The driveway cleaning complaint;
5. The lift cleaning complaint;
6. The information compilation complaint;
7. The pool and spa complaint;
8. The electrical testing quotation complaint;
9. The rubbish removal complaint;
10. The storm water drain complaint;
11. The building condition reporting complaint;
12. The pipe work complaint;
13. The electrical standards complaint;

[140795]

14. The stormwater pit complaint;
15. The pumps service history complaint;
16. The pool and spa service history complaint;
17. The hydrant room complaint;
18. The garbage room complaint;
19. The service cupboard complaint;
20. The entry steps and driveway complaint; and
21. The subcontractor complaint.

[42] Relying on those complaints, the Body Corporate contended that Peterson Management Services had breached clauses 5.1(b), (h), 5.3(b)(i) and (d) of the Maintenance Agreement and clause 5.3(b), (iii), 5.1(e), 5.1(c), 3(b)(i) and clause 6 of the Code of Conduct.

[43] Relevantly, clause 5.1 provides:

> In addition to the specific duties set out in the schedule to this agreement the Contractor must as reasonably required —
>
> (b) keep clean, tidy and maintain all parts of the common area;
> (c) maintain and clean any swimming pool, spa and/or sauna
> (e) clean any drains and gutters on common property;
> (h) effect minor repairs and maintenance to the common property where the services of a skilled tradesperson are not required.

[44] Relevantly, clause 5.3 provides

> The contractor must —
>
> (b) promptly report and account to the Body Corporate or the manager for —
>
> (i) matters requiring repair regarding a hazard or danger;
> (ii) use by the contractor of any Body Corporate funds; and > (iii) use by the contractor of any other property of the Body Corporate in carrying out the maintenance duties.
> (d) carry out such other reasonable and appropriate tasks requested by the Body Corporate or the manager relevant to the maintenance of the common property.

[45] Clause 6 of the Code of Conduct for Body Corporate managers and caretaking service contractors in schedule 2 to the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 provides:

> A Body Corporate manager or caretaking service contractor must take reasonable steps to ensure an employee of the person complies with this Act, including this Code, in performing the person's functions under the person's engagement.

Remedial action notice 3

[46] The third remedial action notice contained 33 complaints. If the RAN was valid it would be necessary to determine whether the applicant had acted in a way mentioned in section 129(1)(a), (b) or (c) of the Accommodation Module 2008, which amounted to misconduct or gross negligence, was a breach of clause 5, 5.1, 5.3, 7.2 or otherwise of the Care-taking Agreement or breached clause 2, 3, 4, 5 or 6 of the Code of Conduct.

[47] The complaints were:

1. The lock maintenance complaint
2. The garden maintenance complaint
3. The timber maintenance complaint
4. The Driveway cleaning complaint
5. The lift cleaning complaint
6. The balcony appearance complaint
7. The occupier statement complaint
8. The information compilation complaint
9. The pool and spa complaint
10. The electrical testing quotation complaint
11. The rubbish removal complaint
12. The storm water drain complaint
13. The key security complaint
14. The body corporate record maintenance complaint.
15. The supervision complaint
16. The building condition report complaint
17. The fire safety requirements notification complaint
18. The common property OH&S system complaint
19. The security reporting complaint
20. The common property complaint
21. The electrical standards compliance complaint
22. The fire regulations compliance complaint

23. The basement storm water pit and pollutant trap complaint
24. The pumps service history complaint
25. The pool and spa service history complaint
26. The hydrant room and maintenance service history complaint
27. The fire protection records and compliance testing complaint
28. The garbage room cleaning complaint
29. The service cupboard maintenance complaint
31. The entry steps and driveway complaint
32. The vending machine and infrastructure complaint
33. The sub-contractor material and labour costs complaint

Remedial Action Notice 4

[48] The Fourth RAN was, in part, concerned with an alleged failure to report to the body corporate in respect of matters in checklists contained in a building operations manual given to the caretaker by the committee.

[49] It was also concerned with an alleged failure to report a potential hazard. The potential hazard was identified as “risks that the doors may contain asbestos despite being aware of this risk from at least early 2009 upon receipt of the GK consulting report”.

[50] The notice then alleged, without further particulars, that the applicant failed to comply with the Workplace Health and Safety Act and regulations by failing to comply with the Asbestos Management Code 2005. It also alleged that applicant failed to advise the body corporate of a requirement to comply with such requirements.

Remedial Action Notice 5

[51] The fifth notice was concerned with five alleged breaches namely a failure to maintain the gardens, a failure to clean Garbage rooms and garage door, a failure to clean lifts, a failure to attend to minor repairs and a failure to maintain pool records.

Remedial Action Notice 6

[52] The sixth RAN notice asserted conduct said to be a breach of section 129(1)(a),(b) and (c) of the accommodation module. There were 11 alleged breaches:

1. Failure to attend Committee Meeting
2. Failure to advise the body corporate regarding compliance with laws
3. Failure to advise the body corporate of breach of laws and potential hazard
4. Failure to comply with Committee Directions regarding expenditure
5. Failure to maintain the gardens
6. Failure to clean Garbage Rooms and Garage door
7. Failure to clean lifts
8. Failure to attend to minor repairs
9. Failure to comply with reasonable request
10. Failure to report fire safety hazard
11. Failure to Maintain Pool Records

Remedial Action Notice 7

[53] The seventh RAN alleges that the making of statements about committee and committee representatives said to be defamatory amounts to conduct breaching section 129(1)(a), (b) and (c) of the Accommodation Module.

[54] It also alleged that a failure to properly supervise a contractor to the extent that the contractor has failed to attend to cleaning and maintenance duties under the maintenance agreement and the caretaker has without justification or authority of the body corporate engaged third party contractors to perform the duties required to be completed by the contractor and then caused the contractors to bill the body corporate and/or the caretaker has sought reimbursement from the body corporate for amounts incurred by the caretaker for duties that the contractor should have performed at no extra cost to the body corporate.

[55] The notice alleges that various documents published by the caretaker were defamatory of the committee and “the committee representative”. It refers to various documents namely:

a. the March 2010 Newsletter;
b. letter dated 4 June 2010 from the caretaker to the body corporate with the subject line “Misconduct of Ms Deborah Kelly”;
c. letter dated 8 June 2010 from the caretaker to the body corporate with the subject line “misconduct of Ms Deborah Kelly- broken window 3j”;

[140797]

d. Rocks Resort Newsletter Issue 2, August 2010;
e. Owners Circular September 2010.

[56] The notice sets out what could be construed as imputations said to arise from the words used. Other than Ms Kelly, no other person is identified. The notice does not purport to plead defamation as would usually be expected in a properly constructed pleading alleging defamation.

[57] No attempt has been made to prove the defamations alleged. The allegations of defamations have not sought to be defended as would be expected in a defamation action.

[58] If the statements were proved there would be a need to prove that the imputations were published to a third person, were of and concerning a particular person or exempted corporation under the Defamation Act 2005 and were defamatory of that person or corporation. Whether the defamation was justified or excused is a separate matter which has not been litigated here.

[59] In my view, in this Tribunal it is not within the jurisdiction to determine those matters. In any event the alleged defamations have in my view not been proved.

[60] Further, the alleged defamations do not amount to misconduct or gross negligence in the carrying out a function required under the engagement of the caretaker. No function required under the engagement has been identified as relevant to this notice.

[61] The alleged defamations do not amount to a failure to carry out a duty under the engagement.

[62] The alleged defamations do not amount to a contravention of the relevant code of conduct.

Remedial Action Notice 8

[63] The eighth notice alleged that Mr Frank Petersen acted in an abusive and aggressive manner to the committee and committee representatives.

[64] This matter has been long and protracted. The amended application was reduced to 127 pages. The response and counter-application was 89 paragraphs. The written submission of the applicant is 187 pages and the written submissions of the respondent are over 77 pages with annexures. All of the requirements of section 129 of the Accommodation Module have been raised and contested. The validity of the RANs is in issue.

[65] A commencing point to determine the validity of the RANs is to determine whether the RANs complied with the requirements of Section 129 for the necessary statements required to be given.

Validity of the RANs

[66] Section 129 of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 2008 provides:

> Termination for failure to comply with Remedial Action Notice
> (1) The Body Corporate may terminate a person's engagement as a Body Corporate caretaker or service contractor if the person (including, if the person is a corporation, a director of the corporation) —
> (a) engages in misconduct, or is grossly negligent in carrying out functions required under the engagement; or > (b) fails to carry out duties under the engagement; or > (c) contravenes —
> (i) for the Body Corporate caretaker — the Code of Conduct for Body Corporate caretakers and caretaking service contractors; or > (ii) for a service contractor who is a caretaking service contractor — the Code of Conduct for Body Corporate caretakers and caretaking service contractors, or the Code of Conduct for letting agents; or…
> (2) …
> (3) The Body Corporate may act under subsection (1) or (2) only if —
>
> (a) the Body Corporate has given the persona Remedial Action Notice in accordance with subsection (4); and > (b) the person fails to comply with the Remedial Action Notice within the period stated in the Notice; and
> (c) the termination is approved by ordinary resolution of the Body Corporate; and
> (d) for the termination of a person's engagement as a service contractor if the person is a caretaking service contractor, or the termination of a person's authorisation as a letting agent — the motion to approve the termination is decided by secret ballot.
> (4) For subsection (3), a Remedial Action Notice is a written notice stating each of the following:
>
> (a) that the Body Corporate believes the person has acted —
>
> (i) for a Body Corporate caretaker or a service contractor — in a way mentioned in subsection (1)(a), (2)(e); or

(ii) for a letting agent — in a way mentioned in subsection (2)(a), (2)(d).

(b) details of the action sufficient to identify —

(i) the misconduct or gross negligence the Body Corporate believes has happened; or
(ii) the duties the Body Corporate believes have not been carried out; or
(iii) the provision of the Code of Conduct or the Regulation the Body Corporate believes has been contravened

(c) that the person must, within the period stated in the Notice but not less than 14 days after the Notice is given to the person —

(i) remedy the misconduct or gross negligence; or
(ii) carry out the duties; or
(iii) remedy the contravention

(d) that if the person does not comply with the Notice in the stated period the Body Corporate may terminate the engagement or the authorisation.

[67] Each of the eight RANs follows the same format. Each of them has a definitions section and a Notice that the Body Corporate gives the caretaker Notice pursuant to section 129 of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 2008 and clause 9 of the Caretaking Agreement of the matters that are then set out in the Notices.

[68] There is a statement in each case that the Body Corporate believes that the caretaker has acted in a way mentioned in section 129(1)(a), (b) and (c) of the Accommodation Module. They then seek to set out various breaches that they rely on to found the notice such as to identify the misconduct or gross negligence the Body Corporate believes has happened or the duties the Body Corporate believes have not been carried out. They also seek to identify the provision of the Code of Conduct or the Regulation the Body Corporate believes has been contravened.

[69] In each RAN number 2 to 8, the statement is made that:

"The caretaker must within 14 days of being served with a copy of this Notice:

(a) remedy the misconduct or gross negligence;
(b) carry out the duties;
(c) remedy the contravention of the Code of Conduct; and/or
(d) remedy the breach of the Caretaking Agreement.

with respect to the matters complained of by the Body Corporate in this Notice."

[70] The Notice then goes on to state, "If the caretaker does not comply with the direction [insert paragraph number] within the period stated, then the Body Corporate may without further notice, put a motion to its members in general meeting to terminate the Caretaking Agreement."

[71] As identified earlier, it is a requirement that a RAN in accordance with section 129(4) be given if it is to enliven the power of the Body Corporate to terminate an engagement as a Body Corporate caretaker.

[72] I note that section 38 of the Acts Interpretation Act 1954 (Qld) provides that if a period beginning on a given day, act or event is provided or allowed for a purpose by an Act the period is to calculated by excluding the day or the day of the act or event and if the period is expressed to be a specified number of clear days or at least a specified number of days- by excluding the day on which the purpose is to be fulfilled.

In my view, a Remedial Action Notice as required by section 129(4) has not been given because each notice contains a statement which is not a statement "that the person must, within the period stated in the notice but not less than 14 days after the notice is given to the person" remedy the misconduct or gross negligence or carry out the duties or remedy the contravention.

[74] Under section 129(4) the trigger for the calculation of the minimum period for rectification is the giving of the notice and once the notice is given the person can not be required to rectify until 14 days have expired. The words “not less than 14 days” refer to the “period stated in the notice”. That period accordingly must be greater than 14 days. As an example, if the RAN was given on the first of a month then it is not until the 15th of the month that 14 days have expired. To require rectification “within” 14 days is a requirement that requires rectification in a period “less than 14 days”, that is, it requires rectification before 14 days have passed.

[75] A notice cannot require rectification within the 14 day period. It may allow rectification within that period but it cannot require rectification in the 14 day period.

[76] I accept that the “word “within” in relation to a period of time does not usually mean “during” or “throughout the whole of”: it is more frequently used to delimit a period “inside which” certain events may happen”….Ordinarily in the context in which it was used the word “within” would merely provide the limits of the period of time within which” something should occur.[12]

[77] A notice which requires a person to rectify by stating “must within 14 days of being served with a copy of this notice” requires that person to rectify before 14 days have expired.

[78] The Body Corporate submitted that the expression “within 14 days” means the same as “not less than 14 days”. To express the issue in that manner ignores the words “after the notice is given”. That phrase is qualified by the expression “but not less than 14 days”. The issue is whether the notice requires rectification before 14 days have expired.

[79] The correct meaning and effect of the words in the module is that there must not be a requirement to rectify until 14 days after the notice is given has expired.

[80] A requirement to rectify within 14 days offends that meaning.

[81] The notice that was given requires the caretaker to remedy the misconduct or gross negligence or carry out the duties or remedy the contravention in a period less than 14 days after the notice is given to the person. That is contrary to the requirement of section 129(4)(c) and accordingly the notices in each of the eight instances were not a Remedial Action Notice as required by section 129.

[82] Further, the statement “if the caretaker does not comply with the direction… within the period stated, then the Body Corporate may without further notice, put a motion to its members in general meeting to terminate the Caretaking Agreement” is not a statement “that if the person does not comply with the notice in the period stated, the Body Corporate may terminate the engagement or authorisation” as required by section 129(4)(d).

[83] For the reasons set out herein it is appropriate to declare each of the Remedial Action Notices invalid for the purposes of section 129 of the Accommodation Module and of no effect.

[84] Because the Remedial Action Notices are declared invalid it is not necessary or appropriate to determine the other issues raised which concern the Notices.

[85] The declarations sought by the Body Corporate are meant to address whether the Remedial Action Notices were appropriately given, in that, in so far as section 129 of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 2008 allows the notice to be based on misconduct, gross negligence in carrying out functions, a failure to carry out duties under the engagement or contravention of the Code of Conduct for the Body Corporate Manager.

[86] Given that the validity of the Remedial Action Notices had failed because they did not comply with the mandatory requirement of section 129(4)(c) of the Accommodation Module that the notice must amongst other things state “that the person must within the period stated in the notice but not less than 14 days after the notice is given to the person”, it is not necessary or appropriate to make the declarations sought by the Body Corporate.

[87] The declarations made are:

1. The Remedial Action Notice (Number 1) issued to Peterson Management Services Pty Ltd on 18 June 2010 is invalid and of no effect.
2. The Remedial Action Notice (Number 2) issued to Peterson Management Services Pty Ltd on 29 July 2010 is invalid and of no effect.
3. The Remedial Action Notice (Number 3) issued to Peterson Management Services Pty Ltd on 29 July 2010 is invalid and of no effect.
4. The Remedial Action Notice (Number 4) issued to Peterson Management Services Pty Ltd on 24 August 2010 is invalid and of no effect.
5. The Remedial Action Notice (Number 5) issued to Peterson Management Services Pty Ltd on 17 September 2010 is invalid and of no effect.
6. The Remedial Action Notice (Number 6) issued to Peterson Management Services Pty Ltd on 17 September 2010 is invalid and of no effect.
7. The Remedial Action Notice (Number 7) issued to Peterson Management Services Pty Ltd on 6 October 2010 is invalid and of no effect.
8. The Remedial Action Notice (Number 8) issued to Peterson Management Services Pty Ltd on 7 October 2010 is invalid and of no effect.

[88] The parties have sought costs.

[89] The parties may make written submissions as to costs order sought after notice that a costs order is sought is filed in the Tribunal and served on the other party. In the event a costs order is sought the party seeking costs shall file in the Tribunal and serve on the other party written submissions within 7 days of filing and serving any notice a costs order is sought. The other party may file and serve any written submissions in response within 14 days of being served with the written costs submissions. The costs application will then be determined on the papers.

(2015) LQCS ¶90-204; [2015] QCAT 164

Decision delivered on 13 May 2015

Conveyancing — Community Schemes — Termination of financed managed service contracts — Level of protection to be afforded to financiers under s 126(2) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 — Where body corporate entered into a caretaker agreement which was financed by a financier — Where the agreement provided that the body corporate could terminate the agreement if an insolvency event occurred — Where financier appointed receivers and managers for the agreement — Where court subsequently ordered that the caretaker be wound up on the grounds of insolvency — Where body corporate asserted a right to terminate the agreement, relying in s 126(7) of the Act — Where s 126 provides protection for financiers by permitting them to act in place of the contractor or to appoint receivers without the prospect of the contract being terminated by the body corporate by reason of those acts — Where s 126(7) provides an exception to this protection for something done or not done after the financier started to act under the subsection — Whether the making of the order to wind up the caretaker and the appointment of the liquidator by the court constituted "something done or not done" — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, s 126.

This decision concerned a caretaking agreement between a body corporate and caretaker. Suncorp were the financier for the agreement.

Clause 11 of the caretaking agreement provided that the body corporate could terminate the agreement if inter alia:

- an order was made by a court that the caretaker be wound up or
- a liquidator or a provisional liquidator of the caretaker was appointed, whether or not under an order of a court.

Suncorp advised the body corporate that they had appointed receivers and managers for the caretaking agreement.

The Supreme Court of Queensland subsequently ordered that the caretaker be wound up on the grounds of insolvency and that a liquidator be appointed.

The body corporate asserted that the court's orders triggered cl 11 of the caretaking agreement and that in reliance on s 126(7) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, it had acquired a contractual right to terminate the caretaking agreement (the body corporate also expressly reserved its rights under cl 11 of the agreement).

Section 126(1) provides that a body corporate under a financed contract may terminate the contract if circumstances exist that give it the right to terminate and appropriate notice is given to the financier.

However, s 126(2) provides that a body corporate cannot terminate the contract if, under arrangements between the financier and the contractor, the financier:

"(a) is acting under the contract in place of the contractor; or
(b) has appointed a person as a receiver or receiver and manager for the contract".

Section 126(7) goes on to provide that s 126(2) does not operate to stop the body corporate from terminating the contract for something done or not done after the financier started to act under the subsection.

Suncorp countered that:

1. the s 126(7) exception did not apply because that provision only applies where a financier is acting under the contract in place of the contractor as per s 126(2)(a). The exception does not apply to s 126(2)(b).
2. Alternatively, s 126(7) does not apply because the subsection requires something to have been done or not done by the caretaker or the financier which is in the nature of a breach of the caretaking agreement and the substance of which occurs after the financier started to act. It was argued that the making of the order to wind up the caretaker and the appointment of the liquidator by the Supreme Court did not satisfy those requirements. In other words, the making of the winding up order and appointment of the liquidator arose by the acts of a third party. They did not arise from the direct actions of the caretaker or Suncorp and could not have been readily avoided by either.
3. Further in the alternative, the body corporate was not entitled to terminate the agreement because it had not properly served the s 126 notice on Suncorp.

Held: body corporate not presently entitled to terminate the caretaker agreement because the s 126(1) notice was not properly served on Suncorp.

Whether the s 126(7) exception applies to both s 126(2)(a) and (b).

1. The exception provided by s 126(7) applies to both the circumstances in s 126(2)(a) and 2(b). This is because (inter alia):

> • There is no apparent reason why the legislative drafter would not have made express reference to s 126(2)(a) in s 126(7) if it was intended that the exception was only to apply to s 126(2)(a).
> • The effect of Suncorp's construction was that a body corporate would be precluded from terminating a financed contract after a receiver is appointed for the purposes of s 126(2)(b). This would be so even if the conduct of the contractor (by the receiver) constituted a repudiation of, or a breach of an essential term of, the contract occurring after the receiver was appointed.
> There is nothing in the language of s 126, the purpose of Division 4 (or of the Act generally), or in the Explanatory Notes which suggests that Parliament intended to permit a right of termination if a financier acts under the contract but not if a receiver (appointed by the financier) is acting pursuant to that appointment.

Whether the s 126(7) exception only applies to actions of the financier or the caretaker

2. The exception provided by s 126(7) can apply to the actions of other entities. To find otherwise would require the reading of s 126(7) as if it contained additional words and substantial recasting of the provision when there was no necessity to do so.

3. Further, Suncorp submitted that the liquidation was a "condition" brought about by an order of the court. The phrase "something done" in s 126(7) is expressed in very broad terms. The appointment of a liquidator pursuant to an order of the court is something done within the meaning of that phrase.

Additionally, the making of the winding up order was also "something done" within the meaning of s 126(7). It is difficult to see how a formal court order could not fall within the broad phrase "something done".

Whether the notice had been properly served on Suncorp

4. Despite the above findings, the notice was not properly served on Suncorp for the purpose of s 126(1). The Body Corporate was thus not entitled to terminate the caretaking agreement.

Editorial comment:

The management rights for a community titles scheme are a valuable asset. A financier who lends money to purchase such rights obviously has an interest in preserving them where the contractor has defaulted.

Section 126 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 provides some protection for financiers by permitting them to act in place of the contractor or to appoint receivers without the prospect of the contract being terminated by the body corporate by reason of those acts.

However as this decision demonstrates, financiers may have less protection than they realise under the Act. A body corporate may be able to terminate an agreement:

- for subsequent breaches that are outside the financier's control
- as a result of subsequent third party actions
- even where the body corporate suffers no detriment as a result of the subsequent breaches.

ORDERS MADE:

> 1. It is declared that the making of the order, by order of the Supreme Court of Queensland dated 19 December 2014 ('the order'), that the Applicant be wound up was something done, within the meaning of s 126(7) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, after Suncorp-Metway Ltd started to act under s 126(2) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997.
> 2. It is declared that the appointment of a liquidator by the order was something done, within the meaning of s 126(7) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, after Suncorp-Metway Ltd started to act under s 126(2) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997.

3. It is declared that the Respondent is not presently entitled to terminate the Caretaking Agreement between the Applicant and the Respondent dated 12 December 2007 ('the Caretaking Agreement') because of its failure to comply with the requirements of s 126(1) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997prior to 23 April 2015.
4. The Respondent, by its servant, agents or otherwise is, for a period of 21 days from the date of these orders, restrained from:

a. voting on any proposed motion to terminate the Caretaking Agreement at any general meeting; and
b. taking any other steps to terminate or purporting to terminate the Caretaking Agreement; on the basis that the Applicant is subject to a winding up order or has had a liquidator appointed to it.

5. The parties shall file and serve, within 14 days of the date of these orders, written submissions in relation to the question of costs.

Lumb_M:

[1] The central issue raised by the Applicant's Application filed on 23 February 2015 ('the Application') is whether the Respondent ('the Body Corporate') is precluded from terminating a contract entitled 'Caretaking Agreement' between the Body Corporate and the Applicant dated 12 December 2007 ('the Caretaking Agreement').

[2] By the Application, the Applicant sought against the Body Corporate the following relief:

1. An Interim Order, being an order restraining the [Body Corporate] from doing any of the following, pending determination of this proceeding:

[140804]

(a) Voting at its Annual General Meeting on 26 February 2015 to terminate the Caretaking Agreement; and/or
(b) Taking any other steps to terminate or purport to terminate the Caretaking Agreement on the basis that the Applicant is insolvent, is subject to a winding up order, has had a liquidator appointed to it, and/or has had a Receiver and Manager appointed to it.

2. A declaration that the [Body Corporate] is not entitled to terminate the Caretaking Agreement on the basis that the Applicant is insolvent, is subject to a winding up order, has had a liquidator appointed to it, and/or has had a Receiver and Manager appointed to it;
3. Costs, based on the principles espoused in Beachcomber Management Pty Ltd ATF Kafritas Family Trust v Body Corporate for the Surfers Beachcomber [2014] QCAT 453 (11 September 2014); and
4. Such further or other relief (including on the Interim Order) deemed appropriate.

[3] The facts material to this Application are not in dispute.

Background

[4] The original parties to the Caretaking Agreement were the Body Corporate and Gallery Vie Management Pty Ltd ('Gallery Vie'). Pursuant to the Caretaking Agreement, Gallery Vie agreed to undertake caretaking duties within the whole of the land comprising the 'Gallery Vie' Community Titles Scheme Number 37760 on the terms contained in the agreement.

[5] The Caretaking Agreement, as varied, was assigned by Gallery Vie to the Applicant (with the Body Corporate's consent) on 31 October 2011.

[6] The provision of the Caretaking Agreement which is material to the present case is Clause 11. That clause provides:

11. This agreement may be terminated by the Body Corporate by written notice to the Caretaker upon any of the following events occurring:

(a) the [Applicant] assigns its interest in this agreement in breach of clause 10;
(b) the [Applicant] fails or neglects to carry out any of the duties and the failure or neglect continues for a further period of seven days after the Body Corporate has given written notice to the [Applicant] specifying the duty or duties which the [Applicant] has failed or neglected to carry out and requiring the [Applicant] to perform the duty or duties;
(c) the [Applicant] is guilty of gross misconduct or gross negligence in the performance of any one or more of the duties;
(d) a receiver or receiver and Caretaker of the undertaking or property of the [Applicant] or any part thereof is appointed;
(e) an order is made by a court that the [Applicant] be wound up;
(f) a liquidator or a provisional liquidator of the [Applicant] is appointed, whether or not under an order of a court;
(g) the [Applicant] enters into, or resolves to enter into, a scheme of arrangement or composition with, or assignment for the benefit of, all or any class of its creditors, or it proposes a reorganisation, moratorium or other administration involving any of them;
(h) the [Applicant] or its members resolve that it be wound up, or otherwise dissolved, or gives notice of intention to do so, except to reconstruct or amalgamate while solvent, on terms approved by the Body Corporate;
(i) the [Applicant] is or states that it is unable to pay its debts when they fall due;
(j) the [Applicant] commits an act of bankruptcy or is declared bankrupt in accordance with the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act;
(k) the [Applicant] commits any indictable offence; or
(l) the [Applicant] becomes a person of unsound mind or a person whose person or estate is liable to be dealt with in any way under any law relating to mental health;

[140805]

(m) the registered owner from time to time of Lot 1 on SP 180452 terminates the service contract with the [Applicant] as a result of a breach by the [Applicant].

[7] Suncorp-Metway Ltd ('the Financier') holds registered security interests over all of the present and after acquired property of the Applicant with no exceptions.[1]

[8] On 24 September 2014, Mr Cronk caused to be served on the Body Corporate a notice entitled 'Notice to Body Corporate' dated 24 September 2014 ('the September Notice').[2] The September Notice was executed by of both the Financier and the Applicant. That notice stated:

> This notice is issued in accordance with the requirements of sections 123(1) and 124 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld).
> Take notice that the Financier identified in the Schedule below/over is a financer of the Contract specified in the schedule. The Financier's address for service is:
>
> Suncorp Metway Ltd ABN 66 010 831 722
>
> c/- Herbert Smith Freehills
>
> Attn: Peter Smith
> Level 38, 345 Queen Street
> BRISBANE QLD 4000
> By fax: (07) 3258 6444, marked to the attention of Peter Smith

[9] The contracts referred to in the Schedule to the September Notice included the Caretaking Agreement.

[10] On 15 December 2014, Mr Cronk caused a further notice dated 15 December 2014 to be served on the Body Corporate.[3] This notice stated that it was issued in accordance with the requirements of s 126(3) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) ('the BCCMA'). This notice stated that the Financier intended to appoint Shaun McKinnon and Graham Killer of Grant Thornton ('the Receivers') as joint and several Receivers and Managers of property including the Contract specified in the schedule (which schedule referred to, inter alia, the Caretaking Agreement).

[11] On 16 December 2014, the Receivers were appointed to be receivers and managers of the 'Charged Property' which was defined to mean all of the property, rights and undertaking charged or mortgaged by the 'Security' including the whole of the Applicant's rights in relation to the management of the Gallery Vie CTS.[4]

[12] On 19 December 2014, the Supreme Court of Queensland ordered, inter alia, that the Applicant be wound up on the grounds of insolvency[5] and that Jonathan Paul McLeod ('the Liquidator') be appointed as liquidator for the purposes of the winding up.[6]

[13] By letter dated 28 January 2015 from the Body Corporate's solicitors to the Financier's solicitors,[7] it was asserted that the Body Corporate was of the view that the court orders of 19 December 2014 brought into play clauses 11(e) and 11(f) of the Caretaking Agreement and that in reliance upon s 126(7) of the BCCMA the Body Corporate asserted it had acquired a contractual right to terminate the Caretaking Agreement (and expressly reserved its rights under clause 11).

[14] The Financier's solicitors responded by letter dated 2 February 2015[8] asserting that s 126(7) did not apply because that provision only applies where a financier is acting under the contract in place of the contractor under s 126(2)(a).

[15] The Application was filed on 23 February 2015.

[16] On 26 February 2015 the Tribunal handed down a decision that, inter alia:

> The Body Corporate whether by its servants, agents, employees or otherwise is restrained from voting on the proposed motion to terminate the Caretaking Agreement at the Annual General Meeting to be held on 26 February 2015 (or any adjournment of that general meeting).

[17] By directions made by the Tribunal, by consent, on 6 March 2015, the Tribunal directed, inter alia:

> 1. The Body Corporate whether by its servants, agents, employees or otherwise is until these proceedings are determined or upon the earlier order of the tribunal or agreement of the parties restrained from:
> a. Voting on the proposed motion to terminate the caretaking agreement dated 12 December 2007 (as subsequently varied and assigned) at the annual general meeting to be held on 26 February 2015 (or any adjournment of that general meeting); and > b. Taking any other steps to terminate or purporting to terminate the caretaking agreement on the basis that the Applicant is insolvent, is subject to a winding up order, has had a liquidator appointed to it, and/or had a receiver and manager appointed to it.

[18] The hearing of this matter took place on 24 April 2015.

[19] The Tribunal convened a directions hearing on 30 April 2015 and raised with the parties an issue concerning the jurisdiction of the Tribunal to deal with the matter, specifically the issue of whether the Applicant was a letting agent within the meaning of that phrase in the BCCMA. The Tribunal gave directions for the provision of any further evidence and supplementary written submissions.

[20] The Applicant filed a further affidavit from Graham Killer sworn on 30 April 2015 and a supplementary outline of submissions. The Body Corporate chose not file any affidavit material or submissions in reply.

[21] For completeness, I note that by letter dated 24 December 2014 from the Liquidator to the Financier's solicitors, the Liquidator consented to the Receivers continuing to trade the business of the Applicant pursuant to s 420C of the Corporations Act 2001 (Cth).[9] In my view, this fact is irrelevant to the determination of the issues in the present case. This case turns on the proper construction of s 126 of the BCCMA and that fact has no bearing on such construction. I also note that the Liquidator's consent was not given until five days after the winding up order was made. Any right of termination had arisen prior to that time.

Jurisdiction

[22] The Tribunal's original jurisdiction includes the jurisdiction conferred on the Tribunal under an enabling Act to decide a matter in the first instance.[10] The BCCMA is the enabling Act for the purposes of this Application. The Tribunal has jurisdiction to resolve a 'complex dispute' by an order of the Tribunal exercising the Tribunal's original jurisdiction under the QCAT Act.[11] The definition of 'complex dispute' in the BCCMA includes a dispute mentioned in s 149B of the BCCMA.

[23] Section 149B applies to a dispute about a claimed or anticipated 'contractual matter' about, inter alia, the engagement of a person as a body corporate manager or caretaking service contractor for a community titles scheme.[12] Having regard to the terms of the Caretaking Agreement, I consider that the Applicant is a service contractor within the meaning of the BCCMA.[13]

> caretaking service contractor, for a community titles scheme, means a service contractor for the scheme who is also —
>
> (a) a letting agent for the scheme; or > (b) an associate of the letting agent.

[25] The definition of 'letting agent' is found in s 16. That provision provides:

> (1) A person is a letting agent for a community titles scheme if the person is authorised by the body corporate to conduct a letting agent business for the scheme.
> (2) A person conducts a letting agent business for a community titles scheme if the person conducts, subject to the Property Occupations Act 2014, the business of acting as the agent of owners of lots included in the scheme who choose to use the person's services for securing, negotiating or enforcing (including collecting rents or tariffs for) leases or other occupancies of lots included in the scheme.

[26] I accept the Applicant's submissions that the Applicant is a 'letting agent' for the purposes of the BCCMA. In this regard I refer to [4] of the further affidavit of Mr Killer and exhibit 'GRK-2' (in particular clause 2(a) and the definition of 'letting service' in the Letting Agreement). I find that the Applicant is a 'caretaking service contractor' for the purposes of the BCCMA.

[140807]

The phrase 'contractual matter' is defined to mean:

> contractual matter, about an engagement or authorisation of a body corporate manager, service contractor or letting agent, means—
>
> (a) a contravention of the terms of the engagement or authorisation; or > (b) the termination of the engagement or authorisation; or > (c) the exercise of rights or powers under the terms of the engagement or authorisation; or > (d) the performance of duties under the terms of the engagement or authorisation.

[28] In my view, the present dispute is one about a claimed or anticipated termination of the engagement of the Applicant as caretaker (subsection (b)). It also involves the exercise of rights (by the Body Corporate) under the terms of such engagement (subsection (c)). I conclude that this is a complex dispute being a dispute about a claimed or anticipated "contractual matter" about, inter alia, the engagement of a person as a caretaking service contractor for a community titles scheme and that the Tribunal has jurisdiction to determine the dispute.

The Applicant's challenge to the Body Corporate's right to terminate [29] The Applicant contends that the Body Corporate is not entitled to terminate the Caretaking Agreement. The Applicant relies upon three principal grounds:

> a) s 126(2) of the BCCMA precludes the Body Corporate from terminating the Caretaking Agreement. The exception in s 126(7) does not apply to the facts of the present case because that subsection applies only where a financier has 'started to act' under s 126(2)(a) and, here, the Financier has appointed receivers and managers under s 126(2)(b);

b) in the alternative, s 126(7) does not apply because, upon its proper construction, the subsection requires something to have been done or not done by the Applicant or the Financier which is in the nature of a breach of the Caretaking Agreement and the substance of which occurs after the Financier started to act (and the making of the order to wind up the Applicant and appointment of a liquidator does not satisfy those requirements);
c) further in the alternative, the Body Corporate is not entitled to terminate the Caretaking Agreement because it has not served a notice on the Financier as required under s 126(1) and s 126(9) of the BCCMA.

[30] In order to address these arguments, I will first consider the history of s 126 and the operation of s 126(2).

The history of s 126

[31] Section 126 in its current form provides:

(1) The body corporate under a financed contract may terminate the contract if—

(a) the body corporate has given the financier for the contract written notice, addressed to the financier at the financier's address for service, that the body corporate has the right to terminate the contract; and
(b) when the notice was given, circumstances existed under which the body corporate had the right to terminate the contract; and
(c) at least 21 days have passed since the notice was given.

(2) However, the body corporate can not terminate the contract if, under arrangements between the financier and the contractor for the contract, the financier—

(a) is acting under the contract in place of the contractor; or
(b) has appointed a person as a receiver or receiver and manager for the contract.

(3) A financier may take the action mentioned in subsection (2)(a) or (b) only if the financier has previously given written notice to the body corporate of the financier's intention to take the action.
(4) The financier may authorise a person to act for the financier for subsection (2)(a) if—

(a) the person is not the contractor or an associate of the contractor; and
(b) the body corporate has first approved the person.

[140808]

(5) For deciding whether to approve a person under subsection (4), the body corporate—

(a) must act reasonably in the circumstances and as quickly as practicable; and (b) may have regard only to—

(i) the character of the person; and
(ii) the competence, qualifications and experience of the person.

(6) However, the body corporate must not—

(a) unreasonably withhold approval of the person; or
(b) require or receive a fee or other consideration for approving the person, other than reimbursement for legal or administrative expenses reasonably incurred by the body corporate for the application for its approval.

(7) Subsection (2) does not operate to stop the body corporate from terminating the contract for something done or not done after the financier started to act under the subsection.
(8) Nothing in this section stops the ending of a financed contract by the mutual agreement of the body corporate, the contractor and the financier.
(9) In this section—

address for service, for a financier, means the financier's address for service—

(a) for notices given by the body corporate under this division; and
(b) stated in a notice given to the body corporate under section 123 or 124.

[32] As originally enacted, the limitation on a body corporate terminating a financed contract was confined to circumstances in which the financier was acting under the contract in the place of the contractor for the contract.

[33] The Explanatory Notes for the Body Corporate and Community Management Bill 1997 provided that:

> clause 110 sets out the level of protection given to a financier of a contract of a person who is engaged as a service contractor or authorised as a letting agent when the body corporate terminates the contract.

[34] Section 126 was originally numbered as s 110. It was substituted in 2003.[14] Section 126(5) was subsequently amended but that amendment is not relevant for present purposes.

[35] When the subsection was substituted in 2003, among other amendments, s 126(2) was amended to include the reference to circumstances in which a financier has appointed a person as a receiver or receiver and manager for the contract.

[36] The Explanatory Notes for the Body Corporate and Community Management and Other Legislation Amendment Bill 2002 provide that:

> Section 110 has been substantially rewritten to clarify the rights and responsibilities of the financier of a finance contract and the body corporate. For instance the section now recognises the appointment of a receiver and manager for the financed contract. The section also places greater emphasis on the giving of appropriate notices between the financier and the body corporate.
> A new section 110A is included that, from the commencement of the section, will prohibit the financier requiring the body corporate to enter into a contract with the financier about the financier's rights under the financed contract. Such contracts have previously been used by the financiers to support and even extend the operation of section 110 and to prevent the body corporate from reaching an arrangement with a financed letting agent that the financier perceives may not be in the best interest of the financier. It is intended that the financier will rely on the expanded provisions of section 110.
> The new section does not act retrospectively. Rather it applies to contracts purportedly entered into after the section's commencement.

The operation of s 126(2)

[37] Section 126(2) provides that the body corporate cannot terminate a financed contract if (under arrangements between the financier and the contractor for the contract) the financier 'is acting under the contract' in place of the contractor or 'has appointed' a person as a receiver or receiver and manager for the contract. In these reasons, any reference to a 'receiver' should be taken as also referring to a 'receiver and manager'.

[38] Section 126(1) provides that the body corporate may terminate a financed contract if three conditions are satisfied. The second condition is that when the requisite notice was given 'circumstances existed under which body corporate had the right to terminate the contract'. In my view (assuming that a compliant notice is given pursuant to s 126(1)) s 126(2) operates (subject to s 126(7)) to preclude a right to terminate a financed contract whether pursuant to an express contractual provision or by reason of the common law doctrines applying to the termination of contracts (e.g. repudiation or breach of an essential term). I consider that the broad terms of s 126(1)(b), in particular the reference to 'circumstances existed' under which the body corporate had a right to terminate, support a conclusion that those circumstances encompass the grounds of termination identified above.

[40] First, the Body Corporate submits that s 126(2) operates as a statutory 'standstill' and that once the financier is no longer acting under the contract or the receiver has ceased to act in that capacity, any pre-existing right of termination is 'reactivated'. This raises the issue of whether the operation of s 126(2) merely suspends any right of termination or whether it extinguishes such right. It is unnecessary to decide that question in the present case because the Receivers continue to act pursuant to their appointment and I do not propose to decide the point. For this reason, I will refer to the operation of s 126(2) as effecting a 'limitation' on the right of termination (reflecting the language of the BCCMA).

[41] Secondly, s 126(2)(b) refers to the appointment of a person as a receiver 'for the contract'. There is no dispute between the parties that this subsection was engaged upon the appointment of the Receivers in the present case. In my view, it is inapt to refer to a receiver being appointed 'for the contract'. However, it seems clear that the legislature intended that the subsection is to encompass circumstances in which a receiver is appointed to the property of the contractor including the contractual rights enjoyed under a financed contract (otherwise the purpose of the provision would be defeated because a receiver could not, literally, be appointed 'to a contract').

[42] I will now address each of the grounds relied upon by the Applicant.

The first ground

[43] The Applicant's first contention is that s 126(2) gives a financier (of a financed contract) two alternative options, either to 'act' under s 126(2)(a) or to appoint receivers under s 126(2)(b); that these two alternative options are treated differently throughout the balance of s 126; and that s 126(7) expressly applies only where financier is 'acting' under s 126(2)(a).

[44] In my view, the phrase 'started to act' sits more comfortably (in a grammatical sense) with the language of s 126(2)(a) than with the language of s 126(2)(b). However, the phrase 'started to act' is expressly qualified by the words 'under the subsection'. The subsection referred to is s 126(2) being the subsection referred to in the opening words of s 126(7). The ordinary grammatical meaning of 'under the subsection' is a reference to both s 126(2)(a) and s 126(2)(b) in s 126(2).

[45] In my view, s 126(7), upon its proper construction, is not limited to the circumstances contemplated by s 126(2)(a); it applies to both scenarios in s 126(2). I consider that there are three factors that point to this construction being the proper construction of the subsection.

[46] First, as the Body Corporate submitted, the Parliamentary drafter has referred to the discrete subsections of s 126(2) in other provisions of s 126. Section 126(3) refers to s 126(2)(a) or s 126(2)(b) and s 126(4) refers to s 126(2)(a). There is no apparent reason why the drafter would not have made express reference to s 126(2)(a) in s 126(7) if it was intended that the exception provided by that subsection applied only to s 126(2)(a). Further, the words adopted in s 126(2)(a) refer to circumstances where the financier is acting 'under the contract'. In its current form, s 126(7) refers to the financier starting to act 'under the subsection'. I consider it unlikely that the Parliamentary drafter would have eschewed the use of the phrase 'under the contract' and adopted the phrase 'under the subsection' if it had been intended that s 126(7) was to apply only to s 126(2)(a).

[47] Secondly, s 126(3) provides that a financier may 'take the action' mentioned in s 126(2)(a) or s 126(2)(b) (if the financier has previously given the requisite written notice). The phrase 'take the action' necessarily contemplates that the appointment of a receiver constitutes the taking of action by a financier. 'Action' is defined in the Macquarie Dictionary (5th edition) to mean, inter alia: '1. The process or state of acting or of being active … 2. Something done: an act; deed …'. 'Act' is defined to mean, inter alia: '1. Anything done or performed; a doing: deed. 2. The process of doing; caught in the act …'.

[48] In my view, there is no warrant for construing the word 'act' in s 126(7) as bearing a meaning materially different to the term 'action' in s 126(3). In my view, the language adopted by the legislature supports a conclusion that the reference to a financier starting to 'act' within the meaning of s 126(7) contemplates the 'act' or 'action' comprising one or other of the circumstances set out in s 126(2)(a) and s 126(2)(b) respectively.

be so even if the conduct of the contractor (by the receiver) constituted a repudiation of, or a breach of an essential term of, the contract occurring after the receiver was appointed. I consider that there is nothing in the language of s 126, the purpose of Division 4 (or of the BCCMA generally), or in the Explanatory Notes which suggests that Parliament intended to permit a right of termination if a financier acts under the contract but not if a receiver (appointed by the financier) is acting pursuant to that appointment.

[50] In my view, the exception or carve out provided by s 126(7) applies to s 126(2) generally, that is, it applies to each of the circumstances in s 126(2)(a) and s 126(2)(b).

The second ground

[51] Based on the view that I have reached in relation to the first argument, I consider that a financier starts to act under s 126(2) either when the financier commences acting under the financed contract in place of the contractor[15] or when the financier appoints a person as a receiver 'for the contract'.[16]

[52] In the present case, there is no dispute that the winding up order (which also appointed the Liquidator to the Applicant) was made after the appointment of the Receivers.

[53] In my view:

> a) the making of the order by the Supreme Court of Queensland that the Applicant be wound up was an event contemplated by clause 11(e) of the Caretaking Agreement; and > b) the appointment of the Liquidator under that order was an event contemplated by clause 11(f) of the Caretaking Agreement.

[54] The Body Corporate contends that each of these events constituted 'something done or not done' within the meaning of s 126(7) and, having occurred after the appointment of the Receivers, fell within the exception to s 126(2) provided by s 126(7).

[55] The Applicant's case is set out in [22] and [23] of its outline of submissions:

> 22. … the Applicant submits that section 126(7) does not apply in this matter because, when properly construed in light of its purpose discussed above, it requires something to have been 'done or not done':
> > (a) by the Applicant or the Financier;
> > (b) which is in the nature of a breach of the Caretaking Agreement; and > > (c) the substance of which occurred after the Financier commenced enforcement action.
> 23. In this respect:
> > (a) liquidation is not a thing 'done or not done'. It is a condition brought about by an Order of the Court;
> > (b) the making of the winding up order and appointment of the Liquidator arose by the acts of third parties. They did not arise from the direct actions of the
> [140811]
> > Applicant or the Financier and could not have been readily avoided by either;
> > (c) In any event, neither the making of a winding up order or liquidation of the Applicant constitute 'breaches' of the Caretaking Agreement. They are simply termination events, and do not constitute any breaches of any obligations under the Caretaking Agreement;
> > (d) the winding up application against the Applicant was filed on 28 November 2014 and all substantive affidavits were filed in the proceeding by 9 December 2014. This predates any enforcement action taken by the Financier, with the Receivers being appointed some 7 days later on 16 December 2014; and > > (e) the liquidation of the Applicant has no impact on the conduct of the Applicant's business. The Receivers have priority and have the Liquidator's express statutory authorisation to continue to operate the Applicant's business as duly authorised agents of the Applicant.

[56] In her oral submissions, Ms Moody, who appeared for the Applicant, focused on three aspects (without abandoning reliance on the grounds contained in the written submissions):

a) that s 126(7), on its proper construction, contemplated something done or not done by the financier or by the contractor (in respect of whom receivers and managers had been appointed);
b) that the phrase 'something done or not done' was referable to the parties' contractual obligations; and
c) that the winding up order (and the appointment of the liquidator) was not something done (or not done) within the meaning of s 126(7).

[57] It was also submitted on behalf of the Applicant that the rights granted under an agreement such as the Caretaking Agreement can be very valuable and that the financier of such a contract has an obvious interest in preserving the value of that agreement. So much may be accepted.

[58] The appointment of a receiver is the event upon which s 126(2)(b) is predicated. I consider that the primary question is whether the protection provided by s 126(2) was intended to extend to prevent termination by the Body Corporate for terminating events which arose by reason of something done or not done by an entity other than the financier or the contractor.

[59] I consider that neither the Explanatory Notes in relation to s 126 as originally enacted (then numbered s 110) nor the Explanatory Notes in relation to that provision as inserted in 2003 provides assistance in determining which construction should be preferred.[17] Such Notes leave open the question of whether the exception provided for by s 126(7) should be limited in the manner contended for by the Applicant.

[60] The essence of the Body Corporate's written submissions was that the phrase 'done or not done' was 'perfectly general' and the only limitation on the 'amplitude' of the expression was the temporal limitation introduced by the words 'after the financier started to act …'; the expression was satisfied by acts or omissions on the part of a third party, the Body Corporate or the contractor.[18] In his oral submissions, Mr Wilson, who appeared for the Body Corporate, submitted that the making of the order was a 'juridical act' and was necessarily 'something done' within the meaning of the subsection. The Body Corporate submitted that the Applicant's construction requires reading words of limitation into s 126(7) and that the Applicant could not satisfy the three limb test applicable to the reading in of words in a statute (citing Bermingham v Corrective Services Commission of New South Wales[19] and R v Young).[20]

[61] That test was espoused by Lord Diplock in Jones v Wrotham Park Settled Estates (sub nom Wentworth Securities Ltd v Jones) and provides that:[21]

(1) the Court must know the mischief with which the Act was dealing;
(2) the Court must be satisfied that by inadvertence Parliament has overlooked an eventuality which must be dealt with if the purpose of the Act is to be achieved; and

(3) the Court must be able to state with certainty what words Parliament would have used to overcome the omission if its attention had been drawn to the defect.

[62] This test has been applied by the High Court of Australia,[22] the Queensland Court of Appeal[23] and at appellate level in other States.[24]

[63] In Taylor v Owners — Strata Plan No 11564,[25] a majority of the High Court considered the operation of Lord Diplock's test in the context of the modern purposive approach to statutory interpretation. It is worthwhile setting out the relevant observations of the majority in full:[26]

[35] In Young Spigelman CJ suggested that the authorities do not warrant the court supplying words in a statute that have been "omitted" by inadvertence per se. Construing the words actually used by the legislature in "their total context", Spigelman CJ suggested that the process of construction admits of reading down of general words or giving the words used an ambulatory operation. His Honour cited Cooper Brookes (Wollongong) Pty Ltd v Commissioner of Taxation as an instance of the former and Bermingham v Corrective Services Commission (NSW) as an instance of the latter. In PLV his Honour expanded on his analysis in Young, observing (at [88]):

> [88] The authorities which have expressed the process of construction in terms of "introducing" words to an Act or "adding" words have all, so far as I have been able to determine, been concerned to confine the sphere of operation of a statute more narrowly than the full scope of the dictionary definition of the words would suggest. I am unaware of any authority in which a court has "introduced" words to or "deleted" words from an Act, with the effect of expanding the sphere of operation that could be given to the words actually used. … There are many cases in which words have been read down. I know of no case in which words have been read up. [Emphasis in original.]

[36] In Leys the Victorian Court of Appeal was critical of Spigelman CJ's characterisation of purposive construction as a process of construing "the words actually used" (emphasis in original). Their Honours said that the process requires the court to determine whether the modified construction is reasonably open in light of the statutory scheme and against a background of the satisfaction of Lord Diplock's three conditions. Their Honours questioned the utility of the distinction between "reading up" and "reading down" and rejected the proposition that a purposive construction may not result in an expanded operation of a provision.

[37] Consistently with this court's rejection of the adoption of rigid rules in statutory construction, it should not be accepted that purposive construction may never allow of reading a provision as if it contained additional words (or omitted words) with the effect of expanding its field of operation. As the review of the authorities in Leys demonstrates, it is possible to point to decisions in which courts have adopted a purposive construction having that effect. And as their Honours observed by reference to the legislation considered in Carr v Western Australia, the question of whether a construction "reads up" a provision, giving it an extended operation, or "reads down" a provision, confining its operation, may be moot.

[38] The question whether the court is justified in reading a statutory provision as if it contained additional words or omitted words involves a judgment of matters of degree. That judgment is readily answered in favour of addition or omission in the case of simple, grammatical, drafting errors which if uncorrected would defeat the object of the provision. It is answered against a construction that fills "gaps disclosed in legislation" or makes an insertion which is "too big, or too much at variance with the language in fact used by the legislature".

[39] Lord Diplock's three conditions (as reformulated in Inco Europe) accord with the statements of principle in Cooper Brookes, and McColl JA was right to consider that satisfaction of each could be treated as a prerequisite to reading s 12(2) as if it contained additional words before her Honour required satisfaction of a fourth condition of consistency with the wording of the provision. However, it is unnecessary to decide whether Lord Diplock's three conditions are always, or even usually, necessary and sufficient. This is because the task remains the construction of the words the legislature has enacted. In this respect it may not be sufficient that 'the modified construction is reasonably open having regard to the statutory scheme' because any modified meaning must be consistent with the language in fact used by the legislature. Lord Diplock never suggested otherwise. Sometimes, as McHugh J observed in Newcastle City Council v GIO General Ltd, the language of a provision will not admit of a remedial construction. Relevant for present purposes was his Honour's further observation, '[i]f the legislature uses language which covers only one state of affairs, a court cannot legitimately construe the words of the section in a tortured and unrealistic manner to cover another set of circumstances'.

[40] Lord Diplock's speech in Wentworth Securities laid emphasis on the task as construction and not judicial legislation. In Inco Europe Lord Nicholls of Birkenhead observed that even when Lord Diplock's conditions are met, the court may be inhibited from interpreting a provision in accordance with what it is satisfied was the underlying intention of parliament: the alteration to the language of the provision in such a case may be 'too far-reaching'. In Australian law the inhibition on the adoption of a purposive construction that departs too far from the statutory text has an added dimension because too great a departure may violate the separation of powers in the Constitution. (citations omitted)

[64] The phrase 'something done or not done' is very broad. On the ordinary grammatical meaning of the language of s 126(7), s 126(2) does not operate to 'stop' a body corporate from terminating the contract for something done or not done at any time after the financier has started to act (as I have found, under either s 126(2)(a) or s 126(2)(b)). The Applicant seeks to read down the phrase by a process of construction which limits the exception to something done or not done by the contractor or the financier and is in the nature of a breach of the financed contract (and the substance of which occurred after the financier started to act). In my view, the Applicant's construction necessarily involves a modified construction, one requiring the reading of s 126(7) as if it contained additional words. The Applicant's modified construction requires substantial recasting of the provision to meet the construction placed upon it by the Applicant. Even if the construction proposed by the Applicant were limited in the manner set out in [22(a)] of the Applicant's written submissions (which it is not), I consider that the Applicant's case would involve a modified construction necessitating the reading in of words. In that event, the provision would be required to be read as '… something done or not done by the financier or the contractor …' or, perhaps, as '… something done or not done by the financier or the contractor (by the receiver or receiver and manager for the contract) …'.

[65] I consider that it is necessary to address whether the Applicant's construction satisfies the test espoused by Lord Diplock. In doing so, I note the unresolved issue of whether there is a fourth element requiring consistency with the wording of the provision.

What was the mischief with which the Act was dealing?

[66] The Applicant submitted that s 126 is intended to achieve a 'common sense and practical balance' between the interests of 'body corporates' (whose primary interest is in having their caretaking duties properly performed as agreed with the caretaker) and financiers of caretaking agreements (whose interest is in preserving the value of the security by avoiding termination of the caretaking agreement where the caretaker has defaulted, but the financier has taken appropriate action to ensure that the caretaking duties continue to be carried out).

[67] With respect to the amendment of what is now s 126 in 2003, the Body Corporate submitted that this involved a 'rebalancing' of the rights and obligations as between the body corporate and the financier. As I understood the thrust of the submissions, it is suggested that this involved the tilting of the balance back towards the body corporate.

[68] Section 126 forms part of Division 4 of Part 2 of Chapter 3 of the BCCMA. The heading to the Division states 'Protection for financier of contract'. The heading to s 126 states 'Limitation on termination of financed contract'. The original Explanatory Notes stated that the provision sets out the 'level of protection' given to a financier of a contract of a person who is engaged as a service contractor or authorised as a letting agent when the body corporate terminates the contract.

[69] In my view, the legislature intended to provide protection to financiers of financed contracts by permitting them to act (by an agent) in place of the contractor or to appoint receivers (to the contractor's property to the extent that it included the rights under a financed contract) without the prospect of the contract being terminated by reason of those acts. I am also of the view that additional protection was provided by precluding the body corporate from exercising any existing right of termination arising under an express contractual provision or by reason of common law doctrines applying to the termination of contracts (e.g. repudiation or breach of an essential term). This protection was maintained (at the least) while either of the circumstances in s 126(2) continued. This limitation assisted in preserving the value of the security comprising the bundle of rights bestowed upon the contractor under the relevant financed contract.

[70] In my view, the provision substituted in 2003 effected four main changes to the existing provision. First, the notice contemplated by (what is now) s 126(1)(a) was required to be addressed to the financier at the financier's address for service. Secondly, that if a financier elected to act under the contract it could not authorise the contractor or an associate of the contractor to do so. Thirdly, the limitation on a body corporate's right to terminate a financed contract extended to circumstances in which the financier appointed a person as a receiver (for the contract). Fourthly, for the reasons expressed above, I consider that the exception to the operation of s 126(2) was also extended to the circumstances in which the financier appointed a person as a receiver. That is, both the limitation on termination applied, and the existing exception was extended, to circumstances in which a receiver was appointed 'to the contract'. In my view, the substitution of the provision in 2003 did not affect the scope of the protection provided by s 126(2) other than by applying it to circumstances in which a receiver was appointed.

[71] However, in my respectful view, neither the language of s 126 (as originally enacted or in its subsequent form) or the BCCMA in general nor the Explanatory Notes sheds light on the precise scope of the 'level of protection' intended to be provided to a financier after the financier started to act under s 126(2). There appears to be no dispute that the provision in its current form is intended to achieve a balance between the rights of bodies corporate and the protection of financiers of financed contracts. What is unclear is how that balance was to be struck in circumstances where a contractual right of termination arose after a financier started to act under s 126(2).

[72] Despite this lack of clarity, it is my view that the Body Corporate's construction does not lead to an absurd, unreasonable or capricious result. A financier still enjoys a level of protection. First, a body corporate is denied the right to terminate a financed contract in the event that receivers are appointed 'to the contract' (in the present case, clause 11(d) of the Caretaking Agreement provided that the appointment of a receiver was an event of termination). Section 126(7) operates only 'after' a financier starts to act under s 126(2). Secondly, as noted above, there is a limitation on the body corporate terminating a financed contract on any applicable existing ground of termination (for, at least, the duration of the occurrences of either of the events identified in s 126(2)).

[73] I will turn to the second limb of Lord Diplock's test which provides that the Court must be satisfied that by inadvertence Parliament has overlooked an eventuality which must be dealt with if the purpose of the Act is to be achieved.

Parliamentary inadvertence?

[74] With respect to 'inadvertence' in this context, it was said by the New South Wales Court of Appeal in Tokyo Mart Pty Ltd v Campbell:[27]

> Legislative inadvertence may consist, inter alia, of either of two things. The draftsman may have failed to consider what should be provided in respect of a particular matter and so fail to provide for it. In such a case, though it may be possible to conjecture what, had he adverted to it, he would have provided, the court may not, in my opinion, supply the deficiency. In the other case, the legislative inadvertence consists, not in a failure to address the problem and determine what should be done, but in the failure to provide in the instrument express words appropriate to give effect to it. In the second case, it may be possible for the court, in the process of construction, to remedy the omission.

[75] These observations were cited with approval by the Queensland Court of Appeal in Sevmere Pty Ltd v Cairns Regional Council.[28] They have also been cited with approval by the Full Federal Court[29] and the South Australian Court of Criminal Appeal.[30]

[76] While greater protection would be afforded to financiers if the Applicant's construction were accepted, I cannot conclude that this was the intention of Parliament. I do not consider that a scenario in which a contractual right of termination may arise for something done or not done by an entity other than the financier or the contractor is an eventuality which must be dealt with if the purpose of s 126 is to be achieved. As noted above, financiers receive a level of protection in the event that the Body Corporate's construction is accepted. In my view, even if it were assumed that Parliament (if alerted to this issue) would have limited s 126(7) in the manner set out in [22(a)] of the Applicant's outline of submissions, this would be the result of the legislature's failure to consider the matter and to provide for it (and would fall within the first category identified in Tokyo Mart). In those circumstances, the Tribunal could not supply the deficiency.

[77] I am mindful that the Tribunal's task is one of construction and not legislation. I conclude that the Applicant's modified construction, even to the extent set out in [22(a)] of its outline of submission, would cross the boundary between construction and legislation.

[78] That the Applicant's construction crosses that boundary is plain in relation to the contentions in [22(b)] and [22(c)] of its outline of submissions.

[79] If, as I have found, s 126(2) operates to limit termination by the Body Corporate for breaches of essential terms, repudiation or pursuant to express contractual rights of termination, there is no indication in the language of the provision (or the Explanatory Notes) that the exception provided by s 126(7) is limited to breaches of contract only. The Applicant seeks to draw a distinction between the scope of events of termination limited by s 126(2) and the scope of the events of termination the subject of the s 126(7) exception. In my view, there is no warrant for adopting such a modified construction; it cannot be concluded that this was the result of Parliamentary inadvertence.

[80] I also reject the contention that the 'substance' of the breach (or event) must occur after the Financier started to act. In my view, the reference to 'something done or not done' is a reference to some occurrence, or a failure to do something, giving rise to a right to terminate the financed contract. The legislature has drawn a clear dividing line between events occurring before and after the time at which the financier starts to act. In my view, the concept of the 'substance' of something being done after that time would introduce a significant degree of uncertainty in the application of the provision and it is unlikely that the legislature could have intended such a concept to apply to the operation of the provision.

[81] For the above reasons, the Applicant's construction is rejected. I find that s 126(7), upon its proper construction, applies to the contractual events of termination under clauses 11(e) and (f) of the Caretaking Agreement (which occurred after the appointment of the Receivers) notwithstanding that the events arose by the act of an entity other than the Applicant or the Financier.

[82] For completeness, I will consider the third limb of Lord Diplock's test.

Certainty of the words Parliament would have used to overcome any omission?

[83] As discussed above, the construction contended for by the Applicant as set out in [22] of its outline of submissions requires considerable modification of the language of s 126(7). In my view, even if relevant Parliamentary inadvertence existed, there is no formula of words which could be adopted which would reflect, with certainty, a construction that would overcome any such omission. In this regard, I note that the Applicant did not attempt to frame the modified terms of s 126(7) to encapsulate its preferred construction set out in [22] of its outline of submissions (other than in the general manner set out in that paragraph).

Was the making of the winding up order and appointment of the Liquidator "something done or not done"?

[84] The Applicant submitted that the liquidation was a 'condition' brought about by an order of the court. No authority was cited for this proposition The Applicant did not, in my respectful view, make clear what is meant by the term 'condition'. The phrase 'something done' is expressed in very broad terms. I find that the appointment of a liquidator pursuant to an order of the Court is something done within the meaning of that phrase.

[85] In any event, I also find that the making of the winding up order was 'something done' with the meaning of s 126(7). It is difficult to see how a formal Court order could not fall within the broad phrase 'something done'. I reject the Applicant's argument that the grounds upon which the Body Corporate proposed to terminate the Caretaking Agreement did not fall within the phrase of 'something done or not done'.

[86] Subject to the third argument raised by the Applicant, I consider that the Body Corporate would be entitled to terminate the Caretaking Agreement pursuant to clauses 11(e) and 11(f) of the agreement.

The third ground

[87] Section 126(1) provides that the Body Corporate under a financed contract) may terminate the contract 'if' the matters specified are satisfied. In my view, compliance with the requirements of that subsection is necessary in order to terminate a financed contract.

[88] The purported notice was sent by email and was not addressed to the Financier. The Body Corporate conceded, in the course of oral submissions, that (prior to 23 April 2015) there was no notice compliant with s 126(1).

[89] On the basis of that concession, I am of the view that the Body Corporate is, presently, not entitled to terminate the Caretaking Agreement given the absence of the requisite notice under s 126(1) at any time prior to 23 April 2015. The relevance of that date is that the Body Corporate purported to serve a compliant notice on 23 April 2015. A copy of the purported notice is Exhibit 'MHB-1' to the affidavit of Mitchell Brown sworn on 24 April 2015. Despite objection by the Applicant, I admitted that affidavit only to the extent of [1]–[3] inclusive. The Body Corporate was concerned to avoid any argument that the grant of declaratory relief would be based on a hypothetical scenario. While it is not evident to me that evidence of the purported notice was necessary to demonstrate a proper basis for the grant of declaratory relief, I admitted the affidavit on that limited basis. The Applicant has not conceded that the purported notice is a compliant notice and the validity of same is not a matter that is the subject of determination in the present matter.

Conclusion

[90] For the reasons set out above, I consider that to resolve the dispute between the parties it is appropriate to declare, pursuant to s 60 of the QCAT Act, that:

> a) the making of the order by the Supreme Court of Queensland, on 19 December 2014, that the Applicant be wound up was something done, within the meaning of s 126(7) of the BCCMA, after the Financier started to act under s 126(2) of the BCCMA;
> b) the appointment of the Liquidator by that order was something done, within the meaning of s 126(7) of the BCCMA, after > the Financier started to act under s 126(2) of the BCCMA;

> c) the Body Corporate is not presently entitled to terminate the Caretaking Agreement because of its failure to comply with the requirements of s 126(1) of the BCCMA prior to 23 April 2015.

[91] The Applicant also seeks the continuation of the interim orders made on 6 March 2015 for a further period of 21 days. In my view, in light of the declaration in [90(c)] above, it is just and convenient to make an order restraining the Body Corporate from voting on or taking any steps to terminate or purport to terminate the Caretaking Agreement (pursuant to s 59 of the QCAT Act). I consider that the period of 21 days sought by the Applicant is a reasonable period given that the validly of the purported notice of 23 April 2015 is yet to be determined. However, I consider that this order should be made as a final order albeit for that limited period because this is a hearing to determine the final relief to be granted in the Application.

[92] As to the question of costs, I direct that the parties are to file any written submissions in relation to costs within 14 days of the date of this Decision.

Queensland Supreme Court of Appeal

Decision delivered on 6 November 2015

Conveyancing — Body Corporate — Whether a body corporate had acted reasonably for the purposes of s 94 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 in refusing to approve a proposal to allow a deck extension — Whether the test of reasonableness is objective — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997: s 94.

The applicant was the owner of a property in a multi dwelling complex situated in Noosa. The complex was comprised of apartments and villas.

The applicant's property had two decks which he wished to join together. Apparently the decks had been separated by the architect of the complex to avoid the decks being used to hold parties and to reduce external noise and activity.

In order to join the two decks together, the applicant needed the body corporate in an extraordinary general meeting to approve the proposal in his motion without dissent and amend its community management statement to grant him exclusive use of about 5 m^2 of the common property airspace between his existing deck spaces.

However only 7 of the 23 owners voted for the motion. The applicant then sought orders before an adjudicator that effect be given to his motion. Before the adjudicator, the applicant argued that the body corporate's refusal to pass the motion was unreasonable as the proposed deck alteration was objectively minor in scope and effect; utilised only a small volume of airspace which could never be of use to any other owner; would improve the safety and amenity of the decks; was consistent with the existing architectural design for the scheme; would not impede the view, aspect, privacy or use and enjoyment of any lot; and would comply with the conditions of approval for the scheme. The applicant also argued that the objections from the other owners that the deck amalgamation would set a precedent for other like alterations were without substance.

The adjudicator granted his application and made the orders sought. In reaching this decision, the adjudicator identified the issue for her determination as whether the opposition to the motion was unreasonable in the circumstances and whether the body corporate acted reasonably in refusing to give approval. The adjudicator noted that the test was objective, requiring a balancing of factors in all the circumstances according to the ordinary meaning of the term reasonable. In other words, the question was not whether the decision was "correct" but whether it was objectively reasonable.

The respondents, being other owners in the complex, appealed from those orders to the Queensland Civil and Administrative Tribunal Appeals ("QCATA"). QCATA allowed the appeal and set aside the adjudicator's orders finding that the adjudicator had erred in law in a number of material respects. On the material before the adjudicator and applying the test that should have been applied, QCATA determined that the adjudicator ought to have held that the applicant had not established that the body corporate acted unreasonably.

The applicant then applied for leave to appeal on a question of law to the Queensland Supreme Court of Appeal contending that the appeal to QCATA should have been dismissed. The applicant argued that questions of reasonableness and unreasonableness were questions of fact and it was not open to QCATA to review the correctness of the adjudicator's fact finding, except on orthodox administrative law grounds.

Held: for the applicant. Appeal allowed.

1. The adjudicator correctly identified that the issue was whether the opposition to the motion was unreasonable in the circumstances. Further, the adjudicator had correctly noted that the question of reasonableness is objective, requiring a consideration of all relevant circumstances and that the determination of whether opposition to the motion was unreasonable required a consideration in an objective and fair manner of all the relevant facts and circumstances.

2. The competing submissions and supporting material made the question of unreasonableness difficult to resolve. However the adjudicator's reasons made it clear that she conscientiously considered all the material and submissions relied upon by both parties, made findings of fact, all of which were open on that material, and was ultimately satisfied as a matter of fact that the applicant's motion was not passed because of the other owners' opposition to it that in the circumstances was unreasonable.

Editorial comment: This decision is important for its exploration of when a body corporate will be found to have fulfilled its obligation to act reasonably when carrying out its general functions for the purposes of s 94 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997. The Appeal Court confirmed that the test of reasonableness is objective (ie what the ordinary person would consider to be fair), requiring a balancing of factors in all the circumstances according to the ordinary meaning of the term reasonable.

The decision makes it clear that a body corporate must carefully and thoroughly consider all of the circumstances surrounding a proposal and hear submissions both for and against the proposal before making a decision. Merely deciding yes or no without being able to back up the reasons for the decision, will leave the decision open to review. The reasons for the decision should also be recorded in the minutes of the meeting.

Margaret McMurdo P:

[1] The applicant and the respondents, together with others, are owners of homes in an architectural award-winning multi dwelling complex, the Viridian Noosa Residences. The applicant wanted to extend the deck area of his home but could do so only if the body corporate in an extraordinary general meeting approved the proposal in his motion without dissent and amended its community management statement to grant him exclusive use of the common property airspace between his existing deck spaces.[1] At an extraordinary general meeting on 10 August 2012, seven of the 23 owners voted for the motion, seven voted against, one abstained and the remainder did not vote. The applicant applied for a referral to an adjudicator under s 276 Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) ("BCCM Act") and sought orders that effect be given to his motion. The adjudicator granted his application and made the orders sought.[2] The respondents appealed from those orders to the Queensland Civil and Administrative Tribunal Appeals ("QCATA") under s 290 BCCM Act. QCATA allowed the appeal and set aside the adjudicator's orders. The applicant applied for leave to appeal on a question of law to this Court under s 150 Queensland Civil and Administrative Tribunal Act 2009 (Qld) ("QCAT Act"), contending that the appeal to QCATA should have been dismissed.

[2] The reasons justifying the grant of leave, he submitted, are that there is a public interest in this Court making authoritative statements as to the correct approach, both in determining the test for unreasonableness under s 94 BCCM Act and as to the relationship between voting rights and the power of an adjudicator to make just and equitable orders under s 276 BCCM Act. He contended that he has reasonable prospects of success in the proposed appeal and a substantial injustice will result if leave is not granted.

[3] His proposed grounds of appeal, should leave be granted, are that QCATA erred in law:

(i) in reviewing the correctness of the adjudicator's decision, rather than its legal validity;
(ii) in concluding that the adjudicator had made any error of law;
(iii) in failing to apply s 289(2) BCCM Act;

(b)

(i) in failing to have regard to, or to correctly interpret, the terms of s 276 and Schedule 5 BCCM Act;
(ii) in deciding that the decision in Body Corporate for Palm Springs Residences CTS 29467 v J Patterson Holdings Pty Ltd[3] was relevant to this matter;
(iii) in deciding that the adjudicator had reversed the onus of proof;
(iv) in not applying the principles relating to reasonableness which had been applied by the adjudicator, and in developing new principles on the basis of distinguishable authority (namely, McKinnon v Secretary, Department of Treasury[4]);
(v) in carrying out a merits review of the adjudicator's decision; and
(vi) in receiving, without any power to do so, fresh factual material from the respondents at the hearing on 30 April 2014.

[4] With the support of the parties, this Court agreed to consider the merits of the proposed appeal in determining whether the application raised a matter of law and whether leave should be granted.

[5] I will set out the relevant statutory provisions and summarise the pertinent aspects of the decisions of the adjudicator and QCATA before discussing the competing contentions and stating my reasons for granting the application for leave to appeal, allowing the appeal, setting aside the QCATA orders and instead dismissing the appeal to QCATA.

The relevant aspects of the BCCM Act

[6] The primary object of the BCCM Act is to provide flexible and contemporary communally based arrangements for the use of freehold land, having regard to the secondary objects[5] which relevantly include balancing the rights of individuals with the responsibility for self management as an inherent aspect of community titles schemes;[6] ensuring that bodies corporate for community titles schemes have control of the common property and body corporate assets they are responsible for managing on behalf of owners of lots included in the schemes;[7] providing bodies corporate with the flexibility they need in their operations and dealings to accommodate changing circumstances within community titles schemes;[8] and providing an efficient and effective dispute resolution process.[9]

[7] Chapter 3 BCCM Act deals with management of community titles schemes. Part 1, Management structures and arrangements, Div 1, Body corporate's general functions and powers, relevantly includes:

> "94 Body corporate's general functions
>
> (1) The body corporate for a community titles scheme must—
>
> [140821]
> (a) administer the common property and body corporate assets for the benefit of the owners of the lots included in the scheme; and
> (b) enforce the community management statement …; and > (c) carry out the other functions given to the body corporate under this Act and the community management statement.
> (2) The body corporate must act reasonably in anything it does under subsection (1) including making, or not making, a decision for the subsection."

[8] Chapter 6 deals with dispute resolution and relevantly includes:

> "227 Meaning of *dispute
>
> (1) A dispute is a dispute between—
>
> (b) the body corporate for a community titles scheme and the owner or occupier of a lot included in the scheme;
>
> 228 Chapter's purpose
>
> (1) This chapter establishes arrangements for resolving, in the context of community titles schemes, disputes about—
> (b) the exercise of rights or powers, or the performance of duties, under this Act or community management statements;
>
> 229 Exclusivity of dispute resolution provisions
>
>
> (3) … the only remedy for a dispute that is not a complex dispute is—
>
> (a) the resolution of the dispute by a dispute resolution process; or > (b) an order of the appeal tribunal on appeal from an adjudicator on a question of law.

(5) Also, subsections (2) and (3) do not limit—

(b) the right of a party to make an appeal from QCAT to the Court of Appeal under the QCAT Act."

[9] Chapter 6, Dispute resolution, Pt 4, Applications, relevantly provides:

"238 Who may make an application

(1) A person … may make an application if the person—

(a) is a party to, and is directly concerned with, a dispute to which this chapter applies; and
(b) has made reasonable attempts to resolve the dispute by internal dispute resolution.

[10] Chapter 6, Pt 9, Adjudication generally, Div 2, Procedural matters about adjudication, relevantly includes:

"269 Investigation by adjudicator

(1) The adjudicator must investigate the application to decide whether it would be appropriate to make an order on the application.

(3) When investigating the application or agreement, the adjudicator—

(a) must observe natural justice; and
(b) must act as quickly, and with as little formality and technicality, as is consistent with a fair and proper consideration of the application or agreement; and
(c) is not bound by the rules of evidence.

271 Investigative powers of adjudicator

(1) When investigating the application, the adjudicator may do all or any of the following—

[140822]

(a) require a party to the application, an affected person, the body corporate or someone else the adjudicator considers may be able to help resolve issues raised by the application —

(i) to obtain, and give to the adjudicator, a report or other information; or
(ii) to be present to be interviewed, after reasonable notice is given of the time and place of interview; or
(iii) to give information in the form of a statutory declaration;

…"

[11] Chapter 6, Pt 9, Div 3, Adjudicators orders, relevantly includes:

"276 Orders of adjudicators

(1) An adjudicator to whom the application is referred may make an order that is just and equitable in the circumstances (including a declaratory order) to resolve a dispute, in the context of a community titles scheme, about—

(a) a claimed or anticipated contravention of this Act or the community management statement; or
(b) the exercise of rights or powers, or the performance of duties, under this Act or the community management statement;

(3) Without limiting subsections (1) and (2), the adjudicator may make an order mentioned in schedule 5.

[12] Schedule 5, Adjudicator's orders, relevantly includes:

"10 If satisfied a motion … considered by a general meeting of the body corporate and requiring a resolution without dissent was not passed because of opposition that in the circumstances is unreasonable—an order giving effect to the motion as proposed, or a variation of the motion as proposed."

[13] Chapter 6, Pt 11, Appeal from adjudicator on question of law, relevantly includes:

"289 Right to appeal to appeal tribunal

(1) This section applies if—

(b) an adjudicator makes an order for the application …; and
(c) a person (the aggrieved person) is aggrieved by the order; and
(d) the aggrieved person is—

(i)…

(A) an applicant;

(2) The aggrieved person may appeal to the appeal tribunal[10] , but only on a question of law."

294 Jurisdiction and powers of appeal tribunal on appeal

(1) In deciding an appeal, in addition to the jurisdiction and powers of the appeal tribunal under the QCAT Act, the tribunal may also exercise all the jurisdiction and powers of an adjudicator under this Act.

(2) The appeal tribunal may amend or substitute an order only if the adjudicator, who made the order being appealed, would have had jurisdiction to make the amended or substituted order or decision.

(3) Subsection (2) does not limit any power of the appeal tribunal to award costs for a proceeding under the QCAT Act."

The relevant aspects of the QCAT Act

[14] The QCAT Act Ch 2, Jurisdiction and procedure, Pt 8, Div 1, Appeals to appeal tribunal, relevantly provides:

"146 Deciding appeal on question of law only [140823]

In deciding an appeal against a decision on a question of law only, the appeal tribunal may—

(a) confirm or amend the decision; or
(b) set aside the decision and substitute its own decision; or
(c) set aside the decision and return the matter to the tribunal or other entity who made the decision for reconsideration—

(i) with or without the hearing of additional evidence as directed by the appeal tribunal; and
(ii) with the other directions the appeal tribunal considers appropriate; or

(d) make any other order it considers appropriate, whether or not in combination with an order made under paragraph (a), (b) or (c).”

[15] Division 2, Appeals to Court of Appeal, relevantly provides:

“150 Party may appeal—decisions of appeal tribunal

(2) A party to an appeal under division 1 may appeal to the Court of Appeal against the following decisions of the appeal tribunal in the appeal—

(b) the final decision.

(3) However, an appeal under subsection (1) or (2) may be made —

(a) only on a question of law; and
(b) only if the party has obtained the court’s leave to appeal.”

The proceedings before the adjudicator

[16] In determining the dispute the adjudicator considered extensive submissions from the applicant and respondents, together with submissions from other Viridian home owners.[11] Some submissions attached architects’ reports. The adjudicator requested and was supplied with the minutes of the extraordinary general meeting of August 10 2012, related explanatory material, and extensive landscaping and architectural information including plans, drawings, diagrams and a letter from the local Council stating the proposed deck extension did not contribute to site cover and was within the present planning approval.[12]

[17] In her reasons the adjudicator first set out the extraordinary general meeting’s consideration of the applicant’s motion to extend his decks, noting that it did not achieve the required resolution without dissent.[13]

[18] She then set out the applicant’s submissions. The motion was unreasonable as the proposed alteration was objectively minor in scope and effect; utilised only a small volume of airspace which could never be of use to any other owner; would improve the safety and amenity of the decks; was designed by Viridian’s original architect; was consistent with the existing architectural design for the scheme; would not impede the view, aspect, privacy or use and enjoyment of any lot; and would comply with the conditions of approval for the scheme. The objections that it compromised Viridian’s architectural integrity and would set a precedent for other like alterations were without substance.[14]

[19] The adjudicator identified the issue for her determination as “whether the opposition to [the] motion was unreasonable in the circumstances and whether the Body Corporate acted reasonably in refusing to give approval.”[15]

[20] The adjudicator noted that the matter was referred to her under s 248 BCCM Act.[16] She investigated the dispute by reviewing all submissions and seeking additional clarification and documentation from the applicant.[17] When the applicant’s submissions introduced new evidence, she distributed that material to the other owners so that they had an opportunity to comment. Five owners reviewed their submissions and the applicant responded with further submissions.[18] The adjudicator accurately summarised the history of the dispute;[19] the competing submissions;[20] and the architectural opinions both supporting (Noel Robinson of NRA Architects, Andrew Gutteridge of Arckhefield Architects, and Tom McKerrell of Tom McKerrell Architects) and opposing it, (the original Viridian architect, John Mainwaring of JMA Architects Qld Pty Ltd, Lindsay and Kerry Clare of ClareDesign, and Shane Thompson of Shane Thompson Architects).[21]

[21] She identified the sole issue as whether “there was something unreasonable in the decision not to pass the motion.”[22] After referring to BCCM Act s 276(1), Schedule 5, Item 10,[23] and s 94(2),[24] she noted that under

Schedule 5 the issue was "whether a body corporate has complied with its obligation to act reasonably,"[25] adding that in this application that question was whether the body corporate acted reasonably "in deciding not to approve the applicant's motion."[26]

[22] In determining the appropriate test for reasonableness, the adjudicator relying on Zenith[27] rejected the Wednesbury[28] test. Rather, the test was objective, requiring a balancing of factors in all the circumstances according to the ordinary meaning of the term reasonable.[29] QCATA had recently accepted this as the appropriate test in Luadaka v Body Corporate for The Cove Emerald Lakes.[30] The legislative objective to act reasonably was satisfied if the decision was objectively reasonable; this required a balancing of factors in all the circumstances according to the ordinary meaning of the term reasonable, a term which should be given a broad, common sense meaning. The question was not whether the decision was "correct" but whether it was objectively reasonable.[31] A logical and understandable basis for a decision was a relevant but not determinative factor in deciding reasonableness which was ultimately a question of a fact.[32] The subjective intention of the individual lot owners who opposed the motion was not the test; the opposition must be considered objectively, taking into account all relevant circumstances:[33] Points North[34] and Ocean Plaza Apartments.[35] What is a material fact will vary from case to case: Zenith.[36] Typically, this involved some balancing of the interests of the majority and minority and questions of fairness.[37] The adjudicator considered her role was to balance "the need to protect the genuine interests of owners and their voting entitlements, and upholding the justifiable position of proponents [in] the face of unfounded or vexatious opposition."[38]

[23] This was not a case where there was only a small minority opposing the motion.[39] The fact that around half of the voters opposed the proposal was not determinative, although it was relevant and significant. Adjudicators are reluctant to interfere with the views of owners expressed through a general meeting vote. But if the body corporate's decision was objectively unreasonable, the motion must be set aside.[40] The adjudicator then determined to consider the basis for the motion and the basis for the objections to it, so as to ascertain first, whether the opposition was unreasonable in the circumstances, and second, whether the decision not to approve it was unreasonable.[41]

[24] The primary purpose of the applicant's proposal, to improve the amenity of his decks which were intentionally designed with limited functionality, was a legitimate interest. But it was only one consideration and must be balanced against the impacts of the proposal on other lots and on the scheme as a whole.[42]

[25] The adjudicator determined that the safety issue relied on by the applicant was not a legitimate consideration for the body corporate in deciding whether to approve the proposal.[43]

[26] The proposal required granting the applicant the right to exclusive use of about 5m^2 of common property which was airspace only.[44] The right to use this airspace was of value to the applicant but of no material use to any other owner or occupier.[45] The proposed use of common property by the applicant was not a reasonable basis to oppose the motion.[46]

[27] The adjudicator identified but did not accept the submissions and architectural opinions that, if this motion were approved, it would be difficult to refuse other improvements to other lots and the appearance of the scheme would be changed.[47] The body corporate would have to consider any future motions on their merits. If it determined that another deck amalgamation would have no adverse impact on other owners or the scheme as a whole, then the cumulative effect of multiple identical improvements would not generate an adverse impact.[48] The body corporate would be entitled to reject a different proposed alteration on its merits if it had reasonable grounds to do so.[49] There was no evidence of any similar motions and the significant difficulties surrounding this proposal made it unlikely that other owners would consider they had an automatic right to have a future proposed alteration approved.[50] The adjudicator was unpersuaded that the "floodgates" argument was a reasonable basis to oppose the motion.[51]

[28] If the only issue was the impact of the proposal on the appearance of Viridian, the motion could be approved by an ordinary resolution. The requirement for approval of a motion without dissent arose only because the proposal interfered with the exclusive use rights over a portion of common property airspace.[52]

[29] The original architect, Mr Mainwaring, the adjudicator noted, did not consider the applicant's proposed deck extension was consistent with Mr Mainwaring's vision but the body corporate was not obliged to ensure compliance with the original architectural intent.[53] The adjudicator was "not satisfied that it [was] reasonable to seek to prevent any deviation from the original design intent, or indeed any alteration at all to the exterior of the scheme." The architectural design and landscaping code in schedule D of Viridian's community management statement contemplated the possibility of developments to individual lots such as additions and alterations to the exterior appearance.[54] The body corporate was obliged to ensure that any proposed alterations were sympathetic with the current visual and functional design "rather than any subjective intention underlying the design."[55] The architectural opinions objecting to the extension appeared to import "a subjective view of the impact of the alteration rather than an objective one" and did not assist.[56] It was understandable that owners would rely on Mr Mainwaring's view as to the impact of the proposal on Viridian. The adjudicator considered, however, that his opinion took into account considerations that were not relevant for the body corporate when acting reasonably in balancing the competing interests.[57] The adjudicator could not "understand how combining two decks in one lot could conceivably have the broad social and/or economic impacts claimed" by some submissions.[58]

[30] After assessing the material before her, including the competing architectural opinions, the adjudicator was "not satisfied that the opponents of the proposal [had] demonstrated that the proposed modification materially offends the integrity of the architectural design of the scheme. While the deck does not exactly accord with the original design intent … [no] submission has demonstrated that the extension would have any noticeable detrimental impact on the appearance, structure or functionality of the architecture of the scheme."[59] After viewing "before" and "after" images, the adjudicator found it very difficult to discern any "'visual disruption' or other appreciable change to the appearance, character or 'openness' of the scheme" resulting from the proposed deck alterations.[60] The opinions of the applicant's architects were more supportable.[61]

[31] It was not a relevant consideration that the motion would result in the applicant's lot having a larger useable external floor area if there were no consequential impacts as the applicant would be responsible for maintaining the decks. Nor was it a relevant consideration that allowing the motion would result in the applicant's lot having a higher standard of fittings when this did not affect other lot owners.[62]

[32] In discussing noise concerns, the adjudicator concluded that "[no] submitter has demonstrated that the expansion of the decks will inherently increase the disturbance to other occupiers or users of common property."[63] Whilst the proposed deck extension would result in greater use of the applicant's decks, it could not be assumed that this would lead to increased disturbance and there was no evidence that it would.[64] The current design is restrictive of the functionality of the decks, but improving their function and usability was not a reason to oppose their improvement.[65] Occupiers are entitled to use their lots as they wish provided they do not cause a nuisance.

[33] The owners of lot 10 contended that the deck extensions would adversely impact on their privacy, view and aspect, but the applicant contended that this could be ameliorated by the installation of an additional privacy "blade".[66] The adjudicator found that the level of vision between lot 10 and the applicant's lot may be increased by the deck extension,[67] but there was no common law or statutory right to a view and no general absolute right to privacy or to not be overseen.[68] It would be unreasonable to oppose the motion unless the proposed decks amounted to an unreasonable interference with the use of lot 10.[69] There was opposing evidence as to the impact of the proposal on others' privacy and views, but the adjudicator preferred that of Mr McKerrell as it was the most comprehensive and substantiated. From a practical point of view, he considered there would be no greater overlooking than currently; and the installation of an additional privacy blade would considerably moderate this.[70] After considering the relevant material, the adjudicator concluded that any impact on lot 10's privacy and views would be minimal and was "not satisfied that the comparably slight increase in vision between Lot 10 and [the applicant's lot] resulting from the proposal [would] unreasonably interfere with the amenity of Lot 10."[71] Any impact could be addressed by additional privacy screening. The privacy and view issues were not sufficient for the body corporate to refuse approval for the proposal.[72]

[34] On the material before her, the adjudicator was not satisfied that the structural elements required to support the extended decks presented sufficient concern to reasonably oppose the proposal.[73] There was no evidence that the roofline was to be altered. It followed that submissions about the roofline were not a reasonable basis for opposing the proposal.[74]

[35] The adjudicator was concerned that the body corporate may not have had regard to the fact that the proposed deck was a "permissible development" under the architectural and landscaping code.[75] Further town planning approvals were not required to extend the decks. The only relevant consideration for the body corporate was whether any approval it might give would need to be subject to some further approval by a relevant authority.[76]

[36] As to the submissions concerning detrimental financial obligations arising from the proposal, the applicant would remain responsible for maintaining the decks. Any documented effect on the body corporate's insurance premiums would be paid for by the applicant under ss 180 and 181 of the accommodation module. The proposed deck extension had no financial impact on the body corporate and was an irrelevant consideration.[77]

[37] The contention by one submitter that the application was frivolous, vexatious and without substance was not made out; the applicant presented an arguable and substantiated case.[78]

[38] The adjudicator concluded:

> "On balance I am not satisfied that the Body Corporate acted reasonably in deciding not to pass Motion 1 at the EGM on 10 August 2012. Individual owners may have voted against the motion in good faith, and in genuine reliance on architectural and other advice. However I consider they have relied on irrelevant and unsubstantiated considerations. The most substantive objection is the potential impact on Lot 10, but based on the evidence submitted, I consider that any impact will be so slight that it does not constitute a reasonable basis to refuse the proposal."[79]

[39] The adjudicator stated that she would order that the extraordinary general meeting motion be passed,[80] noting that if the owners of lot 10 remained concerned about privacy, the applicant was willing to install a further privacy screen, subject to any necessary body corporate approval, and she expected him to honour that commitment without an order.[81]

The proceedings before QCATA

[40] QCATA heard the respondents' appeal on 30 April and 15 May 2014 and inspected relevant aspects of Viridian on 13 and 14 June 2014. At the hearing, the second respondent was represented by her husband, Mr Martoo, who was not a lawyer but had qualifications in town planning, surveying and urban design. His submissions sometimes descended into unsworn evidence to which the applicant's counsel understandably objected. QCATA noted that the appeal was on the grounds of an error of law, adding that the evidence would assist to "understand the case" but that QCATA would not "be making findings on that evidence."[82] After a later objection, QCATA reminded Mr Martoo not to give evidence.[83] After still further objections, QCATA determined to let him say what he wanted because that was the "most efficient way to deal" with it.[84]

[41] The fifth respondent, Mr Mainwaring, the original architect of Viridian, also addressed QCATA without legal representation. His submissions also sometimes descended into unsworn evidence from the bar table but no objection was taken, apparently because that evidence in essence was before the adjudicator.

[42] In delivering its reasons, QCATA noted that this was an appeal from the adjudicator's decision, "overriding the will of a substantial majority of owners at Viridian"[85] and:

> "The appeal squarely throws up for consideration the question as to how to > resolve the tension between the provisions of the [BCCM Act] which give rights to owners to veto certain proposals by Bodies Corporate, and the duty of Bodies Corporate under s 94(2) of the BCCM Act to act reasonably. It also raises questions about the circumstances in which an Adjudicator can determine that opposition to a proposal which affects common property of all lot owners might be held to be unreasonable, and substitute a different decision, notwithstanding that to be effective at law, a resolution which permitted the relevant proposal to occur was required to be passed without dissent by lot owners in general meeting. It also squarely raises for consideration what is the relevant test for "unreasonableness" on the part of a Body Corporate, and how that conduct is to be assessed in particular circumstances where motions without dissent are a prerequisite to certain conduct by the Body Corporate affecting its common property."[86]

[43] QCATA noted the applicant had contended that opposition to the motion was unreasonable on a number of bases.[87] The adjudicator had heard the matter on the papers which made it difficult to resolve the many conflicting factual issues. After reviewing the evidence before her (which was also the material before QCATA together with some additional material in submissions) the adjudicator was not satisfied the body corporate had acted reasonably in deciding not to pass the motion.[88] QCATA set out the reasoning of the adjudicator,[89] her ultimate conclusion and orders[90] and the relevant statutory provisions.[91]

[44] QCATA next set out the lengthy, rambling and unfocussed grounds of appeal to it which were said to constitute errors of law,[92] before considering the relationship between s 94 and Schedule 5 BCCM Act[93] and the meaning of the duty to act reasonably.[94] QCATA identified that the adjudicator rightly rejected the Wednesbury test of unreasonableness.[95] After a lengthy review of cases concerning the meaning of reasonableness,[96] QCATA summarised over several pages the general principles it derived from the judgments of Gleeson CJ and Kirby and Hayne JJ in McKinnon v Secretary, Department of Treasury[97] insofar as they apply to the present case.[98]

[45] In applying those principles to the applicant's motion, QCATA identified the following matters as relevant in determining whether a body corporate in a general meeting was acting reasonably in rejecting a motion required to be without dissent:

> "a) The expression of corporate will ultimately is to be found only in the result of the motion having been put. That is, either it was passed or not passed.
> b) Notwithstanding that simple expression of will, it may in many cases, but not all, be possible to ascertain what the basis of individual lot holders was for their dissent.
> c) Where it is possible to ascertain what that reason or explanation was, one should examine insofar as it is known what it was, whether any of the expressed or known bases can be recognised as a reasonable basis.

d) If any of the known bases can be accepted as reasonable, even if there are a number, or even a majority of reasons which are unreasonable, the conduct of the Body Corporate reflected in that expression of will, will nevertheless be reasonable.
e) One does not need to examine all of the known reasons for dissent to decide whether a majority, or a large number or some other significant number are reasonable as against those which are unreasonable. In other words there is no balancing exercise to decide whether overall, the reasonable explanations outweighed the unreasonable ones.
f) In cases where all of the grounds of opposition are known and they are unreasonable, or perhaps even as one regularly encounters in Bodies Corporate, perverse or arising out of dysfunctional activity in Bodies Corporate, the conclusion in most cases would inevitably be to conclude that the Body Corporate had acted unreasonably.

[46] QCATA noted the legislature gave power of veto to any lot holder in respect of a motion to sell or otherwise dispose of any part of the common property under s 159(2) of the accommodation module. This recognised that all lot owners own the common property as tenants in common. That entitlement gave effect to the objects of the BCCM Act.[100] The question was whether, notwithstanding that entitlement, s 94 BCCM Act gave an overriding power to an adjudicator to decide whether the refusal to allow the proposal to dispose of the common property was unreasonable because, in refusing the proposal, the body corporate was not acting reasonably. As the adjudicator put it, s 94 vested in an adjudicator power "to determine the balance between the need to protect the genuine interests of owners and their voting entitlements and upholding the justifiable position of opponents in the face of unfounded or vexatious opposition."[101]

[47] First, QCATA dealt with the ground of appeal alleging reversal of onus. QCATA considered the adjudicator did not accurately identify that her function was to determine whether there had been a contravention of the BCCM Act under s 276(1)(a) and whether she should make an order which was just and equitable in the circumstances. Instead, she considered whether she had been persuaded or had become satisfied that the body corporate had acted reasonably. The burden of proof lay upon the applicant to satisfy her that the body corporate had not acted reasonably within s 94. It was not enough that she was not persuaded that it acted reasonably.[102] She reached her conclusion on the basis of an erroneous understanding of what she was required to be satisfied of and she compounded this error by finding that she was not satisfied the body corporate had acted reasonably by reversing the onus of proof.[103]

[48] QCATA then considered the relationship between lot holders' voting rights and the power under s 276 to make just and equitable orders. This power was discussed in Body Corporate for Palm Springs Residences CTS 29467 v J Patterson Holdings Pty Ltd.[104]

[49] The adjudicator, QCATA considered, in dealing with the balancing of interests, did not identify that the body corporate should recognise that, on the one hand, the applicant had an interest in improving his amenity by obtaining exclusive use over common property in circumstances where the decks were intentionally designed with limited functionality and on the other, that all owners had purchased knowing of the limited functionality.[105] The fact that lot owners may have an interest in improving their lots is not a matter on its face which supports the granting of the applicant's proposal. It may be relevant to deciding what is a just and equitable result if unreasonableness were proven.[106]

[50] Next, QCATA turned to the design integrity issue. The adjudicator considered Mr Mainwaring's opinion that the proposed extended decks were an impermissible alteration to the original design intent was "importing a subjective view of the impact of the alteration rather than an objective one." She dismissed owners' concerns to maintain the original design intent as irrelevant considerations for the body corporate, having regard to balancing the competing interests and acting reasonably.[107] In doing so, she failed to ask the correct question under s 94 and also formed her own view as to the issue of architectural integrity and original design intent, deeming it an irrelevant consideration.[108] The views of the owners who wished to maintain design integrity were objective in the sense that they motivated, justified or explained the decision of those who voted against the motion.[109] The adjudicator had put herself in the position of the body corporate and decided what was "just and equitable" under s 276(1)(b) before deciding whether the conduct was unreasonable.[110]

[51] In deciding whether a body corporate has acted unreasonably it is not necessary or ordinarily required to balance competing interests. Acting reasonably within s 94 does not imply even handedness, a conciliatory approach to a dispute or a recognition of the interests or wishes of others.[111] The adjudicator was not satisfied that the respondents had demonstrated that the proposed extensions materially offended the integrity of the architectural design of the scheme.[112] She then decided, by looking at photographs, that there was no discernable difference between the before and after images and preferred the applicant's architects, notwithstanding there were contrary opinions by other eminent architects. Her reasons do not explain how she resolved this conflict. She merely stated that she was not satisfied the respondents had demonstrated that the modification offended the integrity of the scheme.[113]

[52] QCATA then outlined Mr Mainwaring's design strategy for Viridian, doing away with large decks and instead employing six smaller balconies incorporating a stepping pattern tapered into landscaped breezeways and connectivity spaces with privacy screens. This was intended to avoid appeal to certain segments of the holiday market and to reduce external noise and activity. The proposed extensions could undermine these basic design principles. Viridian had won architectural awards. Since November 2005 Mr Mainwaring had informed the body corporate that an extended deck of this kind would change the verticality of Viridian's architectural elevation. In August 2011 he again contended it would compromise Viridian's architectural integrity and interfere with the privacy and amenity for all residences, particularly if expanded into other dwellings.[114] QCATA considered Mr Mainwaring's arguments were not inherently implausible or unreasonable and received support from other eminent architects including Mr Kerry Clare.[115] The applicant was supported by architects Mr Gutteridge and Mr Robinson, who considered the proposed extensions were sympathetic to the current architectural aesthetic.[116] In purchasing their homes for some millions of dollars, a number of lot owners placed a high priority on the architecture and design principles which they were afraid would be diminished if the proposal were allowed.[117]

[53] Next, QCATA addressed privacy and noise issues. It was difficult to say what effect the proposed extended decks would have but the adjudicator concluded that no submitter had demonstrated that the extension would inherently increase the disturbance to other occupiers or users of common property. She should have asked whether it was reasonable for any of those lot owners to have held those concerns; whether those concerns were reasonably held; and whether the applicant proved that there were no reasonable bases for any of these concerns.[118] The adjudicator accepted there would be some impact on privacy and views from lot 10 but considered them minimal; she was not satisfied that this would unreasonably interfere with the amenity of lot 10; it could be addressed by privacy screening. She did not consider that privacy and view issues amounted to sufficient basis for the body corporate to refuse approval for the proposal.[119] This invited the conclusion that the adjudicator was exercising her own judgment as to the appropriateness of allowing the improvements and engaging in the balancing act she described earlier.[120]

[54] The "floodgates" issue was next addressed. If the advantages the applicant saw in extending the decks were valid, they would be likely to appeal to other lot owners. QCATA's site inspections demonstrated that the development was well established, sympathetically blending into the forested Noosa Hill, with established gardens and backing onto the Noosa National Park. New construction activity would interfere with all this.[121]

The adjudicator rejected concerns about "floodgates"[122] as the applicant's difficulties in obtaining approval to extend the decks made a flood of similar applications unlikely.[123] She was naïve to think that if one owner was permitted to extend the decks, others would not seek to follow. Granting the applicant's motion could reasonably lead to a multiplicity of like applications to the body corporate.[124] This would be disturbing for, and likely to lead to division and conflict between, owners. It was a reasonable basis to refuse the motion.[125] The applicant's letter of 13 April 2012 to other owners stating his deep and abiding commitment to ensuring they would not be subjected to similar campaigns to prevent improvements to their residences, whilst not greatly significant, showed that he saw himself as paving the way for other owners to make similar alterations.[126] Stating that there was no evidence that a similar deck extension or other external alterations had been proposed and that she did not consider "floodgate" concerns to be a reasonable basis to oppose the proposal, again suggested that she had reversed the onus and failed to give proper consideration to the "floodgates" argument. QCATA considered that the applicant did not demonstrate that it was not reasonable to refuse the motion because of "floodgate" concerns.[127]

Finally, QCATA considered the absence of compensation for the acquisition of common property rights. The adjudicator identified that the proposal, if approved, would require granting the applicant the right to exclusive use of $5m^2$ of common property. This area would overhang the common property below and interfere with the airspace above it. To construct the decks would no doubt require access to the common property in the construction period.[128] The respondents submitted that the applicant's failure to offer compensation was a relevant basis to oppose the motion.[129] The adjudicator accepted that the airspace was of value to the applicant and might improve the value of his lot. Valuation evidence before the adjudicator was that the airspace was worth $10,000 and that its value was at least commensurate with the added value to the applicant of the proposed extensions, a sum in the range of $10,000 to $20,000.[130] A real estate agent without valuation qualifications gave evidence for the applicant that the airspace had no value whatsoever and would not diminish the value of the common property or increase the potential sale price of the applicant's lot.[131] The adjudicator did not reconcile this evidence. The better opinion was that of the qualified valuer.

[56] The adjudicator did not deal with whether the applicant's unwillingness to pay any compensation provided a reasonable basis for the body corporate to reject the applicant's motion.[132] In Boston on Belgrave[133] an adjudicator considered that an offer of only nominal compensation for the acquisition of common property in increasing a patio area provided a reasonable basis to oppose a motion as it was reasonable to expect that the body corporate should receive reasonable compensation for granting exclusive use of valuable property.[134] After reviewing One Park Road,[135] Katsikalis v Body Corporate for "The Centre",[136] and Zenith,[137] QCATA concluded that the adjudicator erred in her approach to the valuation evidence of the airspace and in failing to conclude that the absence of any offer from the applicant for compensation was a reasonable basis to oppose the approval of the motion.[138] Had that been the only basis upon which the decision was successfully challenged, QCATA would have ordered that it be a pre-condition to the validation of the adjudicator's orders that compensation of $15,000 be paid to the body corporate by way of compensation. But there were other bases upon which the appeal would be upheld.[139]

[57] In conclusion, QCATA noted that the adjudicator erred in law in a number of material respects. She conducted the adjudication on the papers and the same material "and more" was before QCATA. On the material before her and applying the test that should have been applied, she ought to have held that the applicant had not established that the body corporate acted unreasonably. QCATA allowed the appeal and set aside the orders of the adjudicator.[140]

The applicant's contentions

[58] The applicant emphasised that the appeal to QCATA was confined, under s 289(2) BCCM Act, to a question of law. QCATA did not clearly identify the errors of law allegedly made by the adjudicator. The issue for her to determine was whether the body corporate had complied with its obligation under s 94(2) BCCM

Act to act reasonably. The adjudicator was empowered under s 276 and Item 10 in Schedule 5 BCCM Act to make orders deeming the applicant's motion to have been passed and that the body corporate lodge with the registrar of titles a request to order a new community management statement incorporating the amendments authorised by that motion if the opposition to it was unreasonable. Questions of reasonableness and unreasonableness were questions of fact. It was not open to QCATA to review the correctness of the adjudicator's fact finding except on orthodox administrative law grounds: Buck v Bavone;[141] Ericson v Queensland Building and Construction Commission[142] and see s 146 QCAT Act. Instead QCATA, the applicant contended, improperly substituted its own fact finding for that of the adjudicator. It conducted an impermissible merits review. QCATA did not identify any error on the part of the adjudicator as to the applicable test for reasonableness and unreasonableness.[143]

[59] If any error of law on the part of the adjudicator was identified, it was not for QCATA to decide the question of reasonableness or unreasonableness. The matter should have been remitted to the same adjudicator for determination according to law: Ericson v Queensland Building and Construction Commission;[144] Flegg v Crime and Misconduct Commission[145] and B & L Linings Pty Ltd v Chief Commissioner of State Revenue.[146] In any case, QCATA did not demonstrate any such error of law. This was manifest in QCATA's conclusion.[147] It was not QCATA's function to gainsay the adjudicator's decision; QCATA was limited to determining whether the adjudicator's decision was affected by legal error.

[60] QCATA also erred, the applicant contended, in stating that the adjudicator overrode "the will of a substantial majority of owners in Viridian" and also in placing reliance on J Patterson Holdings. This case did not concern s 276(3) and Item 10 in Schedule 5 and QCATA did not indicate how it was relevant.

[61] QCATA further erred, the applicant contended, in considering that the appeal highlighted the tension between provisions of the BCCM Act giving a right to owners to veto certain proposals, and s 94(2) which required bodies corporate to act reasonably.[148] There is in fact no tension, as s 276 read together with Item 10 in Schedule 5 empowered the adjudicator to reject the veto power if satisfied that the opposition is, in the circumstances, unreasonable.

[62] When the decision of the adjudicator was considered as a whole, the applicant contended, it was clear that she appreciated the onus was on the applicant to prove the body corporate did not act reasonably in refusing the motion because under s 276(3) and Item 10 in Schedule 5 the opposition to the applicant's motion was unreasonable. She was an experienced adjudicator who could not have overlooked such a basic point. She found it very difficult to see any difference in the before and after photographs of the proposed extended decks and could not discern the claimed change to Viridian's architectural integrity. These factual findings supported her conclusion that opposition on this ground was unreasonable. Her choice of words in stating that she was not satisfied about various matters reflected the forensic considerations pressed by the respondents in their evidence and submissions, including expert evidence from architects. Once the adjudicator rejected the respondents' individual contentions, it was only a short step for her to conclude that the opposition was unreasonable. The ultimate question was not whether the respondents' views were rationally and reasonably held but whether the opposition was in the circumstances unreasonable.

[63] The adjudicator correctly stated that the legislative obligation under s 94 BCCM Act to act reasonably was satisfied if the body corporate's decision was objectively reasonable and that this objective test requires a balancing of factors in all the circumstances according to the ordinary meaning of the term "reasonable," a term which should be given a broad, common sense meaning. The question was not whether the decision was "correct" but whether it was objectively reasonable. These principles were well supported by authority see: Waters v Public Transport Corporation,[149] Secretary, Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade v Styles;[150] and Greiner v Independent Commission Against Corruption.[151] The adjudicator also correctly held that whether a decision is reasonable is a question of fact: Commonwealth Bank of Australia v Human Rights and Equal Opportunity Commission.[152] QCATA wrongly considered the application of these orthodox principles was capable of leading to error[153] and wrongly placed emphasis on McKinnon to develop its own set of principles.[154] McKinnon concerned a different legislative regime and did not justify any departure from the orthodox principles applied by the adjudicator.

[64] QCATA erred, the applicant contended, in criticising the adjudicator for not considering whether the body corporate ought to have recognised the applicant's interest in improving his lot in circumstances where the decks were intentionally designed with limited functionality and all owners purchased with that knowledge. There was no legal foundation for that criticism which was also factually unfair because the adjudicator was obviously aware of the competing interests.[155]

[65] The applicant further contended that QCATA wrongly criticised the adjudicator for not properly considering the original architectural vision submissions when she correctly addressed that question by finding it was not reasonable to seek to prevent any deviation from the original design intent.[156] QCATA criticised the adjudicator for her treatment of privacy and noise concerns as she did not ask whether it was reasonable for the respondents to hold concerns about increased disturbance. But the ultimate issue was not whether these concerns were reasonably held but whether the opposition itself was in the circumstances unreasonable. The adjudicator correctly addressed privacy and noise issues by concluding that they were groundless.[157]

[66] QCATA's discussion of the "floodgates" concern used the language of a merits review, the applicant contended, particularly as QCATA relied upon site inspections which could not have assisted with the identification or determination of any question of law. QCATA erred in unfairly finding that the adjudicator reversed the onus of proof on this question; she was merely stating that opposition based on the "floodgates" concern was unreasonable.[158]

[67] QCATA also undertook a merits review on the compensation issue, the applicant contended. The common property involved was a small area of airspace which was unable to be used by anyone other than the applicant. Its loss would cause no material damage to any other owner.[159] These considerations supported the adjudicator's conclusion that opposition on this ground was unreasonable. There was no error of law and QCATA could not substitute its own factual findings.

[68] The applicant further contended that QCATA erred in law in receiving fresh factual material from the second, third, fourth and fifth respondents in their submissions at the hearing. These submissions impermissibly contained personal views about the impact of the proposed extended decks and untested factual assertions and sought to re-visit the adjudicator's factual findings. The QCATA appeal was limited to a question of law; it was not an appeal by way of re-hearing but an appeal in the strict sense so that QCATA had to decide it on the material before the adjudicator and had no power to receive further evidence. QCATA placed considerable weight on the evidence of Mr Mainwaring which included new evidence as to the design integrity issue. Mr Martoo, who appeared on behalf of the second respondent, was a town planner with asserted expertise in urban design, noise assessment, surveying and body corporate management. He stated the adjudicator misunderstood various factual issues and encouraged a site inspection.[160] This inadmissible material was likely to have influenced QCATA's decision. Further, QCATA engaged in inspections of Viridian over two days.

[69] As to the adjudicator's alleged reversal of onus, the applicant contended that this was an evidentiary point of law: Chief Executive Officer of Customs v Labrador Liquor Wholesale Pty Ltd.[161] The adjudicator was not bound by the rules of evidence. In any case, when her reasons are read as a whole, it is apparent that she appreciated the applicant had to prove to her satisfaction that his motion failed because the opposition to it was unreasonable.

[70] In response to the respondents' reliance for the first time at the hearing of this application on McColl v Body Corporate for Lakeview Park CTS 20751,[162] the applicant submitted, in a note delivered by leave after the hearing, that McColl concerned s 87(2) BCCM Act. That provision is now repealed and did not contain the words in s 94(2), which replaced it, "including making, or not making, a decision for the sub-section." The ordinary meaning of the terms of s 94(2) is that s 94 applies to a resolution of the members of the body corporate such as the present motion. By way of s 14B(1)(c) Acts Interpretation Act 1954 (Qld), that construction is supported by the relevant explanatory notes. The adjudicator, QCATA and the parties correctly proceeded on the footing that s 94(2) applied to the applicant's motion. The dispute over the applicant's motion was within s 276 BCCM Act: see Independent Finance Group Pty Ltd v Mytan Pty Ltd[163] and Hablethwaite v Andrijevic[164] and s 94 applied.

[71] QCATA's errors of law which concern matters of general importance, the applicant contended, warrant the grant of leave to correct a substantial injustice. The appeal should be allowed and the adjudicator's orders restored.

The respondents' contentions

[72] The respondents' contentions were as follows. The adjudicator's task was to resolve the dispute arising from the proposal in the applicant's motion to extend his decks. If the opposition to it was unreasonable then the adjudicator could give effect to the motion. The question for the adjudicator was whether the opposition to the motion was unreasonable. In determining this issue the adjudicator erred in law in a number of ways. The first error was in reversing the onus of proof. She did this in her reasons at [46],[165] [51][166] and [66].[167] Most significantly, at [61] of her reasons she stated:

> "Having assessed the material submitted and the competing architectural opinions, I am not satisfied that the opponents of the proposal have demonstrated that the proposed modification materially offends the integrity of the architectural design of the scheme. While the deck does not exactly accord with the original design intent, I do not consider that any submission has demonstrated that the extension would have any noticeable detrimental impact on the appearance, structure or functionality of the architecture of the scheme."

[73] The onus was at all times on the applicant to demonstrate that the opposition to his application was unreasonable. The adjudicator's errors in reversing the onus of proof warranted QCATA allowing the appeal, setting aside the adjudicator's decision and substituting its own view.

[74] The adjudicator's second error was in not appreciating that she need only consider whether the opposition to the motion was unreasonable. She did not need to rehearse the evidence and make her own findings as to what was reasonable. She was required to determine whether the view of the owners opposing the applicant's motion was objectively unreasonable, that is, a view which could not be rationally and reasonably held. The respondents contended that she applied an incorrect test at [87] of her reasons.[168]

[75] The respondents contended that QCATA did not err in receiving new evidence or in participating in the inspections. In receiving the respondents' oral submissions, in so far as they included new factual contentions, QCATA was dealing with the unrepresented respondents' submissions in the most efficient way possible. QCATA in its judgment did not refer to the lay respondents' written submissions or new factual contentions. Allowing lay people to have their say at the hearing of a QCATA appeal does not amount to an error of law, especially as QCATA stated that the appeal was on a question of law only and that new factual submissions could not augment the evidence before the adjudicator.[169] The opinions of Mr Mainwaring upon which QCATA relied were all before the adjudicator. As to the respondents' written submissions, counsel for the applicant invited QCATA to act on them.[170] In any case, QCATA's reasons did not rely upon material which was not before the adjudicator.

[76] Next the respondents contended that QCATA correctly identified that the adjudicator erred in undertaking a balancing of competing interests in deciding the question of unreasonableness. QCATA identified this error in its reasons at [96] to [98],[171] [102],[172] [104],[173] [105],[174] and [130].[175] This ultimately resulted in the adjudicator applying the wrong test. She should have asked whether the opposition was unreasonable in the circumstances. Opposition will not be unreasonable if it might be reached by a reasonable person in the circumstances. Unfounded or vexatious opposition would be unreasonable but honestly held subjective views of opponents should not be discounted and can be considered in determining the reasonableness of their opposition. Although the adjudicator identified the correct principles, she failed to act on them.

[77] Further, the respondents contended, QCATA correctly identified at [124] of its reasons[176] that the adjudicator erred in forming her own views as to the issues of architectural integrity in preserving the original design content; privacy; and noise. As QCATA noted, at [107] of its reasons,[177] the adjudicator failed to identify the basis on which she preferred the views of the applicant's architects over the respondents' architects. The respondents also contended that QCATA rightly identified at [143] of its reasons[178] that the adjudicator inappropriately assessed the evidence as to the value of the airspace above the proposed deck extensions and erred in concluding that the fact that the applicant offered no compensation was not a reasonable basis to oppose its approval. QCATA's consideration of the balancing of interests; the design integrity issues; privacy and noise issues; the "floodgates" concern; and the absence of compensation for the acquisition of common property rights was not an impermissible reconsideration of the merits of the application before the adjudicator but an identification of her errors of law. On the compensation issue, QCATA correctly identified the adjudicator's errors of law in her failure to reconcile inconsistent evidence placed before her as to the value of the common property airspace and her failure to identify that the applicant's omission to offer compensation was a reasonable basis to oppose the motion. QCATA, the respondents submitted, rightly identified the errors of law made by the adjudicator and their impact on her decision.

[78] QCATA's reference to J Patterson Holdings was not an error. That case referred to principles relevant to the application of s 276. In any case, QCATA identified the correct test at [55],[179] [58],[180] [84],[181] [85],[182] [94][183] and [105][184] of its reasons. QCATA correctly identified at [91] of its reasons[185] that the adjudicator had erred in, as she put it, not determining the balance between the need to protect the genuine interests of owners and their voting entitlements and upholding the justifiable position of opponents in the face of unfounded or vexatious opposition. Nor did QCATA err in its reference to McKinnon, a relevant authority dealing with the meaning of reasonableness.

[79] The respondents contended that the applicant had not identified that QCATA made any error of law so that the application for leave to appeal should be refused. In any case, this was not an appropriate case in which to grant leave to appeal as it involved common property airspace of a value of no more than $20,000. The application for leave to appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Conclusion

[80] The role of the adjudicator in this case was to investigate the applicant's application and to decide whether it was appropriate to give effect to his motion before Viridian's body corporate to allow him to extend his decks.[186] She was not bound by the rules of evidence;[187] must act as quickly, and with as little formality and technicality, as is consistent with a fair and proper consideration of the application;[188] and must observe natural justice.[189] She had wide investigative powers to obtain information.[190] If satisfied the opposition to the motion is in all the circumstances unreasonable, she could give effect to the motion[191] and could make an order that is just and equitable in the circumstances (including a declaratory order) to resolve the dispute.[192]

[81] This application to have an adjudicator determine the dispute seems to have been made in September 2012. It is not clear when it was referred to the adjudicator but she gave her decision on 2 September 2013. She had before her the many submissions and supporting material of the applicant and respondents and used her investigative powers to obtain further information.[193] She determined the dispute on the papers, that is, without a hearing, and without undertaking an inspection of Viridian. The material before this Court does not suggest that any party requested either an oral hearing or an inspection.

[82] Her role under s 276 and Item 10 in Schedule 5 BCCM Act,[194] consistent with the objects of the BCCM Act[195] and the obligation on bodies corporate in carrying out their general functions to act reasonably under s 94 BCCM Act,[196] was to determine whether she was satisfied the body corporate did not pass the applicant's motion because of opposition from the respondents that was in the circumstances unreasonable. This was a question of fact to be determined by objectively considering all relevant circumstances: Commonwealth Bank v Human Rights and Equal Opportunity Commission.[197] What is relevant in determining reasonableness (or unreasonableness) will vary from case to case, depending on the issues raised and the relevant material: Waters v Public Transport Corporation.[198] Contrary to the respondents' contentions, the adjudicator was not limited to determining whether the respondents' opposition to the motion could have been reasonably held. She was required to reach her own conclusion after considering all relevant matters. This view as to the functions of a specialist adjudicator is consistent with the relevant provisions of the BCCM Act and with the ordinary meaning of "adjudicator" subject to the text and context of that Act.[199]

[83] In determining the ultimate question of fact (whether the respondents' opposition to the applicant's motion is in the circumstances unreasonable), the adjudicator appreciated that the body corporate could pass the applicant's motion to purchase common property only if there was no dissent.[200] She also appreciated that the BCCM Act allowed the applicant to apply to have the dispute referred to an adjudicator for resolution and empowered her to give effect to the motion if the opposition to it is unreasonable and it is just and equitable to give effect to it. It was also relevant, as she identified, that seven of the 23 Viridian home owners opposed the motion; that the applicant had a legitimate interest in improving his lot; and that the common property airspace required to give effect to the motion was of no use to anyone but the applicant.

[84] The competing submissions and supporting material in this case, particularly the architectural reports, made the question of unreasonableness difficult to resolve. As the reasons of both the adjudicator and QCATA demonstrate, views as to what was reasonable or unreasonable involved value judgments on which there was room for reasonable differences of opinion, with no opinion being uniquely right.[201] Had QCATA's views as to unreasonableness been the views of the adjudicator, and had the adjudicator made no errors of law, that finding would have been unassailable on a QCATA appeal which was limited to a question of law: see s 289 BBCM Act.[202]

[85] The respondents contended before the adjudicator that their opposition to the applicant's motion was not unreasonable and that the body corporate acted reasonably in refusing it because of a number of matters. Most relevantly for present purposes these included architectural integrity; "floodgates"; the absence of any offer of proper compensation to the body corporate; noise issues; and privacy issues especially concerning lot 10.

[86] The fifth respondent, Mr Mainwaring, the highly respected architect of Viridian, purposefully designed the decks so that they were discrete and did not interlink. He and other eminent architects opined before the adjudicator that the proposed deck extension would be harmful to the architectural integrity of Viridian, an architectural award winning development. Seven Viridian owners, having purchased their homes on the basis of Viridian's architectural merit, objected to the applicant's motion for reasons including those based on these architectural opinions. On the other hand, the same number of equally respected architects opined that extending the applicant's decks in the manner proposed would not have any detrimental impact on Viridian's architectural integrity and any appreciable change to its external appearance would be minimal. The applicant's proposed extended decks, the respondents argued, could result in increased use and noise generally and would have some detrimental privacy impacts on lot 10. The body corporate and other owners may be inconvenienced and the attractive Viridian landscaping disrupted whilst the proposed work was undertaken. Other owners would be likely to follow suit and extend their decks (the "floodgates" issue), so that the inconvenience and disruption would be compounded.

[87] According to the applicant's material before the adjudicator, any increased use would not significantly either increase noise or detrimentally impact on the privacy of lot 10; and disruption to other owners and the body corporate during the building period would be managed and kept to a minimum. Any concern about a "floodgates" issue was unwarranted. And no one other than the applicant had any use for the common property airspace required for the deck extension so that it was of no value to anyone else.

[88] I have discussed the adjudicator's reasoning in some detail earlier.[203] After considering the competing architectural opinions and relevant photographs, diagrams and drawings, the adjudicator preferred the opinions of the applicant's architects. She found that the proposed extensions would have no noticeable detrimental impact on Viridian's architectural integrity. She considered that she should balance the applicant's interest in improving his lot against the impacts of the proposal on the other owners and on Viridian as a whole.[204] She found that no other owner or the body corporate would have any material use for the $5m^2$ of common property airspace required by the applicant to extend his decks and it was of value only to him.[205] As to the "floodgates" argument, she noted that there was no evidence of any similar pending applications by other owners to extend their decks. The history of the applicant's proposal showed that no one had an automatic right to have such a proposal approved.[206] Any future application would have to be determined on its merits. If the present application was found not to adversely impact on other owners or Viridian as a whole, it was difficult to see how the cumulative effect of multiple identical improvements would generate an adverse impact. The "floodgates" argument, the adjudicator found, was not a reasonable basis for opposing the proposal.[207]

[89] The adjudicator was unpersuaded on the evidence that the proposed deck expansion would increase the use of the applicant's decks and noise in a way which would disturb other occupiers or users of the common property and that the unsubstantiated risk of a potential nuisance was not a reasonable basis to refuse the proposal.[208] She accepted the evidence from the applicant's architect, Mr McKerrell, and concluded that there would be no greater overlooking of and from lot 10 than at present and that any slight increase in vision between the lots would not interfere with the amenity of lot 10. Any arising privacy issues could be ameliorated by a privacy blade and would not unreasonably interfere with the amenity of lot 10. This was not a sufficient basis to warrant the refusal of the motion.[209] The adjudicator also considered other issues placed before her to provide support for the respondents' contentions[210] but as these are not relevant to the application before this Court they need not be considered further. The adjudicator therefore was not satisfied that the body corporate acted reasonably in not passing the applicant's motion, and that individual owners in opposing it, whilst perhaps acting in good faith and with genuine concern about architectural and other issues, relied on irrelevant and unsubstantiated considerations.[211]

[90] The respondents contended the adjudicator applied an incorrect test, as identified by QCATA at [94] of its reasons,[212] and reversed the onus of proof in stating that she was not satisfied the body corporate had acted reasonably in deciding not to pass the motion.[213] That contention is not made out when the adjudicator's reasons are considered as a whole. Early in her reasons,[214] she referred to s 276(1) and set out the relevant portion of Item 10 in Schedule 5, correctly identifying that the issue was whether the opposition to the motion was unreasonable in the circumstances and noting that the applicant argued that the opposition to his motion was unreasonable.[215] She rightly rejected the Wednesbury test for unreasonableness;[216] accepted that the question of reasonableness was objective, requiring a consideration of all relevant circumstances; and that the determination of whether opposition to the motion was unreasonable required a consideration in an objective and fair manner of all the relevant facts and circumstances.[217]

[91] The adjudicator's reasons make clear that she conscientiously considered all the material and submissions relied upon by the applicant and the respondents, made findings of fact, all of which were open on that material, and was ultimately satisfied as a matter of fact that the applicant's motion was not passed because of the respondents' opposition to it that in the circumstances was unreasonable.

[92] It is true, as the respondents contended, that from time to time[218] she stated that she was not satisfied that one or other of the respondents' objections was made out. It was, of course, for the applicant to demonstrate that the opposition to his motion was unreasonable. It is also true, as the applicant contended, that there is little practical difference between being satisfied that all the respondents' concerns about the motion were not reasonable and being satisfied that the respondents' opposition to the motion was in all the circumstances unreasonable. In any case, when the adjudicator's reasons are read in their entirety, it is clear that she fully appreciated it was for the applicant to demonstrate the unreasonableness of the respondents' opposition to his motion. She made primary findings of fact, after considering the competing material and submissions, that she was not satisfied the specific objections raised by the respondents were made out. But she did not reverse the onus on the ultimate question. Only after a careful and thorough analysis of all material considerations raised by the respondents and the applicant, was she ultimately persuaded by the applicant that the opposition was unreasonable. Her ultimate finding that she was "not satisfied that the Body Corporate acted reasonably" in not passing the applicant's motion was, in context, a finding by her that the respondents' opposition was based on "irrelevant and unsubstantiated considerations" and so was unreasonable in terms of s 176 and Item 10 in Schedule 5.[219] There can be no doubt from her reasons read as a whole that the applicant satisfied her that the opposition to the motion was unreasonable. She did not apply the wrong test or reverse the onus of proof. QCATA erred in finding that the adjudicator applied the wrong test and reversed the onus of proof.

[93] QCATA also erred in finding the adjudicator erred in law in making primary findings of fact about architectural integrity, "floodgates", the limited value of the common property airspace to anyone other than the applicant, and privacy and noise issues. These findings of fact were open on the material before the adjudicator. As the adjudicator found as a fact that the airspace was of no value to anyone other than the applicant, she did not err in failing to identify the applicant's omission to offer compensation as a reasonable basis to oppose the motion. Nor did she apply the wrong test in balancing the need to protect the genuine interests of the owners and their voting entitlements against the applicant's interest in improving his lot and the impacts of the proposal on other lots and Viridian as a whole.[220] In referring to these matters, she was rightly taking into account material considerations in determining the ultimate question: whether the respondents' opposition to the motion was in the circumstances unreasonable. QCATA erred in law in wrongly identifying that the adjudicator erred in these ways.

[94] The appeal to QCATA was limited to a question of law. It was an appeal in the strict sense, not an appeal by way of re-hearing. It had to be determined on the material before the adjudicator. But had QCATA correctly identified an error of law, I do not accept the applicant's contention that its only course was to remit the matter to the same adjudicator for determination according to law. Once an error of law affecting the adjudicator's decision was correctly identified, QCATA could exercise the adjudicator's powers and substitute its own decision based on the material before the adjudicator, consistent with the adjudicator's undisturbed factual findings. So much is clear from the terms of s 294 BCCM Act[221] and s 146 QCAT Act.[222]

[95] I do not consider QCATA's reliance on McKinnon in discussing the requirements of reasonableness and unreasonableness was an error of law. Although the case did not directly concern s 94 or s 276, Item 10 in Schedule 5, the general discussion of the meaning of "reasonableness" and "unreasonableness" was relevant. Similarly, while J Patterson Holdings may have had no direct relevance to Item 10 in Schedule 5, to refer to authority of only marginal relevance does not usually amount to an error of law and did not in this case.

[96] QCATA allowed material to be placed before it which was not before the adjudicator. QCATA's approach in not restricting references to facts by unrepresented respondents to those before the adjudicator, for reasons of expediency and practicality, was understandable. QCATA did not unequivocally state at the hearing that it would not consider any material which was not before the adjudicator in determining the appeal. On the contrary, it stated, somewhat confusingly, that the new material would assist it to understand the appeal, although it would not make findings on it.[223] QCATA then referred to the additional material early in its reasons[224] and noted its inspections of Viridian on the judgment coversheet. In the penultimate paragraph of its judgment, however, QCATA stated that, "on the material before the adjudicator", she ought not have found the applicant established that the body corporate acted unreasonably. This suggests QCATA did limit itself to determining the matter on the material before the adjudicator. Unfortunately, it is not unequivocally clear from QCATA's reasons that the material which was before it but not before the adjudicator did not influence QCATA's decision. But in light of my conclusions as to QCATA's other established errors of law it is not necessary to reach a concluded view on this aspect of the applicant's contentions. I note, however, that while an inspection is not usually considered part of the evidence but merely an aid to understanding the evidence,[225] it will often be imprudent in an appeal of this kind for QCATA to undertake inspections, especially when, as here, none were undertaken by the adjudicator.

[97] In their oral submissions, the respondents relied on McColl v Body Corporate for Lakeview Park CTS 20751.[226] There the court considered the terms of s 87 BCCM Act (now repealed) and the body corporate's statutory responsibility to act reasonably in carrying out its general functions, including enforcing the community management statement. The court stated that this provision did not apply to regulate decisions made at meetings of the body corporate.[227] As the applicant pointed out, however, s 87 has been repealed since and replaced by s 94[228] which, unlike the repealed s 87, now contains the words, "including making, or not making, a decision for the sub-section." It seems likely these changes were enacted to overcome the construction of s 87 taken in McColl. From the ordinary meaning of the terms of s 94; from the s 94 heading, "Body corporate's general functions"; and from the explanatory notes for the relevant amendments to the BCCM Act,[229] it is clear that a body corporate is required to act reasonably in refusing motions such as the applicant's. McColl is of no assistance to the respondents.

Summary

[98] QCATA erred in identifying errors of law in the adjudicator's reasons. There were none. It followed that QCATA was not entitled to set aside the adjudicator's decision and to exercise the jurisdiction and powers of the adjudicator and to substitute its own decision. It is true that the value of the common property airspace involved in this dispute is, at its highest on the evidence, no more than $20,000 and is of no value to anyone other than the applicant. The low monetary value of the subject matter of the proposed appeal is not a factor in favour of the applicant's grant of leave. But the issues raised are of considerable importance to many of the owners of valuable homes in Viridian. The applicant would suffer a miscarriage of justice if the QCATA errors were uncorrected. More significantly, the application raises matters of general importance concerning the conduct of adjudications under the BCCM Act and of appeals from those adjudications to QCATA. For those reasons the application for leave to appeal should be granted and the appeal allowed with costs. The decision of QCATA should be set aside and the appeal to it dismissed. I would make the following orders:

Orders

1. Application for leave to appeal granted and appeal allowed with costs.

2. The decision of QCATA is set aside and instead it is ordered that the appeal to QCATA is dismissed.

Morrison JA:

[99] I agree with the orders proposed by the President and with the reasons given by her Honour.

Decision delivered on 11 April 2014

Management and control — Body corporate powers, duties and liabilities, where the owners of a lot within the scheme had mortgaged their lot to the bank, failed to pay body corporate levies as and when due, failed to pay the mortgage as and when due to the bank, the body corporate took steps to recover unpaid contributions together with the recovery costs of seeking those contributions be paid, where the lot owners became bankrupt and the bank entered into possession of the lot after the body corporate had incurred significant legal fees , the body corporate claimed the bank should pay the recovery costs, including legal fees, the bank did not agree, where the primary judge found in favour of the body corporate in that the bank were liable for the recovery costs, whether a mortgagee in possession can be liable for recovery costs incurred prior to the mortgagee taking possession of the lot under s 143(3) of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 2008 (Qld). Other sections of the Act considered: 94, 96, 150, 151 and 202.

Dr. and Mrs. Prins became owners of the lot in 2007 with the mortgage to St. George bank registered on the title. By April 2011 the owners were in arrears with their contributions. The body corporate claimed a debt of $5,514 and costs of $1,139.58 in the statement of claim filed in April 2011. Dr. and Mrs. Prins disputed the debt and there were issues with disclosure and unsuccessful negotiations between the body corporate and the lot owners. The body corporate continued to pursue the debt, applied for summary judgment, and had the issue regarding their recovery costs set down for a trial.

Meanwhile in December 2011, Dr. and Mrs. Prins lodged a complaint with the financial ombudsman service against Westpac which precluded Westpac from taking any steps to recover the mortgage debt between them and Dr. and Mrs. Prins.

Eventually, the body corporate obtained summary judgment regarding the unpaid levies and obtained an enforcement warrant for the seizure and sale of the lot and sent a copy of this to Westpac. Dr. and Mrs. Prins continued to fail to pay levies. The failure to pay body corporate levies was of course a default under their loan with Westpac.

After a trial lasting 5 days, on 19 October 2012 the body corporate obtained judgment against Dr. and Mrs. Prins for its recovery costs in the amount of $150,000.00. The warrant in respect of the judgment debt of $150,000.00 plus the enforcement costs of $531 was sent to Westpac.

Between 7 November 2012 and 10 August 2013, Westpac was permitted by the FOS terms of reference to take possession of the lot for the purposes of preserving it but was prohibited from taking any action against Dr. & Mrs. Prins to recover the debt between those owners and Westpac.

Dr. and Mrs. Prins filed an appeal in the District Court against the body corporate's judgment for legal fees. The appeal was dismissed on 25 March 2013 and applied for leave to the Court of Appeal but that did not proceed.

Dr. & Mrs. Prins became bankrupt on 12 April 2013. Westpac entered into possession on 5 July 2013 and on 23 July 2013 Westpac advised the Body Corporate it had taken steps to enforce the mortgage over the lot.

Wesptac paid levies in the amount of $10,711.52 which was the original levies for which the body corporate obtained judgment in 2012. No amount for recovery costs was paid.

The Body Corporate claimed its recovery costs were recoverable. As at 20 August 2013 $347,533.17 made up of $12,475.83, $150,000.00 in recovery costs up to 19 October 2012 and the sum of $185,057.34 for recovery costs after 19 October 2012. On 27 August 2013 Westpac paid a further $12,475.83 for contributions. Nothing further was paid.

Held:

Holmes JA and Fraser JA agreeing with the orders proposed by Mullins J:

1. The definition of "body corporate debt" under section 143(1)(c) includes "recovery costs" and recovery costs are associated with the ownership of the relevant lot — support for that conclusion can also be found in section 143(5) of the Regulation which sets out the priority for payments made by an owner; and

2. The mortgagee in possession is liable to pay the recovery costs notwithstanding that those have been incurred by the Body Corporate prior to the bank taking possession of the property.

Holmes and Fraser JJA and Mullins J:

ORDERS:

1. Appeal dismissed.
2. The appellant must pay the respondent's costs of the appeal to be assessed.

HOLMES JA:

[1] I have had the advantage of reading the draft judgments of both Mullins J and Fraser JA. I agree with what their Honours have said, and with the orders Mullins J proposes.

FRASER JA:

[2] The comprehensive reasons for judgment of Mullins J, which I have had the advantage of reading in draft, enable me to state my reasons in brief terms.

[3] The critical question of statutory construction is whether paragraph (c) of the definition of "body corporate debt" in the schedule to the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 2008 (Qld) as that defined term is used in s 143(3)(b) of that Regulation comprehends the "recovery costs" described in s 143(1)(c) of the same Regulation.[1] I would accept, as the appellant argued, that the examples given in paragraph (c) of the definition are more obviously "associated with the ownership of a lot" than are recovery costs, but in the present context that does not suggest a negative answer to the construction question. As Mullins J points out,[2] s 14D of the Acts Interpretation Act 1954 (Qld) provides that an example of the operation of a provision does not limit the meaning of the provision. Accordingly, the reach of the expression "associated with the ownership of a lot" must depend upon other aspects of the statutory context in which that expression is used. Here there are strong contextual indications that the expression does comprehend recovery costs.

[4] The word "another" in paragraph (c) of the definition of "body corporate debt" as "another amount associated with the ownership of a lot" conveys that the amounts identified in (a) and (b) ("a contribution or instalment of a contribution" and "a penalty for not paying a contribution or instalment of a contribution by the date for payment") are themselves "associated with the ownership of a lot". In the context that s 143(1) provides that both those amounts and the "recovery costs" reasonably incurred in recovering those amounts are recoverable by the body corporate as a debt, the conclusion seems all but inevitable that recovery costs are themselves to be regarded as being associated with the ownership of a lot for the purposes of the definition. It seems a most unlikely construction that a debt which one subsection of section 143 expressly makes recoverable by the body corporate without any qualification is not a "body corporate debt" for the purposes of another subsection of the same section dealing with a closely related topic.

[5] Subject to these reasons, I respectfully agree with all that Mullins J has written. I also agree with the orders proposed by her Honour.

MULLINS J:

[6] The learned primary judge made the following declaration:

> "Upon the proper construction of regulations 143(1) and 143(3) of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 2008 (Qld) a liability to the respondent for recovery costs (as that term is defined in regulation 143(1)(c)) with respect to Lot 2503 on SP173160, County of Ward, Parish of Gilston, Title Reference 50640122 (the Lot) is enforceable as a body corporate debt pursuant to regulation 143(3)(b) against:
>
> (a) the applicant as mortgagee in possession of the Lot; and > (b) any purchaser from the applicant exercising power of sale under mortgage number 710242327 registered over the Lot."

[7] The appellant Westpac Banking Corporation (Westpac) appeals against the order on the basis that the primary judge erred in the construction of s 143(3) of the Body Corporate and Community Management

(Accommodation Module) Regulation 2008 (Qld) (the Regulation). In respect of the body corporate debt that was payable before it entered possession of the relevant lot, Westpac contends that its liability under s 143(3) of the Regulation for the body corporate debt as mortgagee in possession does not extend to "recovery costs" referred to in s 143(1)(c) of the Regulation.

Background

[8] In January 2007 Dr and Mrs Prins became the registered owners as joint tenants of Lot 2503 on SP173160 County of Ward Parish of Gilston, being a unit in the building known as "The Wave". The respondent is the body corporate for the building. Dr and Mrs Prins granted a mortgage over the lot to St George Bank Limited (now Westpac) which was also registered in January 2007.

[9] In 2011 the respondent engaged solicitors to recover unpaid body corporate debts from Dr and Mrs Prins. A claim and statement of claim was filed on 27 April 2011 claiming an outstanding debt of $5,514.42 and costs of $1,139.58. There were difficulties serving Dr and Mrs Prins; a defence was filed; there were disputes over disclosure; and unsuccessful negotiations between the respondent and Dr and Mrs Prins ensued.

[10] Around 5 December 2011 Dr and Mrs Prins lodged a complaint with the Financial Ombudsman Service (FOS) against Westpac. Between the lodgement of the complaint until or around 7 November 2012, Westpac was prohibited by the FOS terms of reference from taking any action against Dr and Mrs Prins to recover the debt the subject of the dispute between Dr and Mrs Prins and Westpac or to protect the lot.

[11] Eventually the respondent applied for summary judgment. On 2 May 2012 the respondent was granted leave to file an amended claim and obtained summary judgment against Dr and Mrs Prins for the outstanding contributions of $10,711.52 and penalty interest of $2,135.56 which made a total judgment sum of $12,847.08. Recovery costs were to be determined at a trial set down for July 2012. An enforcement warrant for the judgment of $12,847.08 and costs of the enforcement warrant of $532.10 was issued by the respondent against Dr and Mrs Prins on 9 May 2012.

[12] On 9 May 2012 the respondent's solicitors forwarded a copy of the summary judgment and the enforcement warrant for seizure and sale of the lot to Westpac and advised of the setting down of the trial on the issue of costs. The respondent's solicitors advised that costs currently were $46,068.26 and that if matters progressed to trial costs were estimated in the range of $70,000 to $100,000. The failure by Dr and Mrs Prins to pay levies was an event of default under the mortgage.

[13] Dr and Mrs Prins failed to pay levies to the respondent for the period 1 August to 30 November 2012 that were due on 1 August 2012. On 17 August 2012 the respondent's solicitors advised Westpac that the total debt claimed by the respondent in respect of Dr and Mrs Prins' lot was $133,638.97.

[14] After a trial lasting five days, the respondent obtained judgment against Dr and Mrs Prins on 19 October 2012 for its reasonable recovery costs in the amount of $150,000.

[15] An enforcement warrant for seizure and sale of the lot in respect of the judgment debt of $150,000 and costs of the enforcement of $531 was issued on 22 October 2012 in favour of the body corporate which forwarded a copy to Westpac.

[16] Between 7 November 2012 and 10 August 2013 Westpac was permitted by the FOS terms of reference to take steps to recover possession of the lot for the purpose of preserving the lot, but otherwise remained prohibited from taking any action against Dr and Mrs Prins to recover the debt the subject of the dispute between Westpac and them or to protect the lot.

[17] Dr and Mrs Prins filed an appeal to the District Court from the Magistrate's decision given on 19 October 2012. The appeal was dismissed on 25 March 2013. Dr and Mrs Prins applied for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal, but that did not proceed.

[18] Dr and Mrs Prins became bankrupt on their own petition on 12 April 2013. Westpac entered into possession of the lot on 5 July 2013 by changing the locks on the property. On 23 July 2013 Westpac gave written notice to the body corporate that it had taken steps on 5 July 2013 to enforce the mortgage over the lot.

[19] On 8 August 2013 Westpac paid the respondent the sum of $10,711.52 on account of the amount of contributions for which judgment had been obtained by the respondent against Dr and Mrs Prins on 2 May 2012.

[20] As of 20 August 2013 the respondent claimed from Westpac the sum of $347,533.17 comprising the sum of $12,475.83 for contributions, the sum of $150,000 for recovery of costs up to 19 October 2012 and the sum of $185,057.34 for recovery costs after 19 October 2012. On 27 August 2013 Westpac paid the respondent the outstanding amount of $12,475.83 for contributions.

Relevant legislative provisions

[21] The functions of the body corporate for a community title scheme are set out in s 94(1) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (the Act). These functions are to administer the common property and body corporate assets for the benefit of the owners of the lots included in the scheme; enforce the community management statement (including enforcing any by-laws for the scheme in the way provided under the Act); and carry out the other functions given to the body corporate under the Act and the community management statement. There is an express prohibition in s 96(1) of the Act on a body corporate carrying on a business, subject to s 96(2) which permits the body corporate to engage in business activities to the extent necessary for properly carrying out its functions and invest amounts not immediately required for its purposes in the way a trustee may invest trust funds. Section 150(1) of the Act provides that, subject to s 151 of the Act, the financial management arrangements applying to a community title scheme are those stated in the regulation module applying to the scheme. Section 150(2) of the Act lists the subject matter for the regulation module, without limiting s 151(1). The topics covered include levying lot owners for contributions, discounts and penalties relating to the payment of contributions, and recovery of unpaid contributions.

[23] Part 3 of ch 7 of the Regulation (s 139 to s 142) deals with contributions levied by the body corporate on owners.

[24] Under s 139 of the Regulation the body corporate by ordinary resolution on the basis of its budget for a financial year fixes the contributions to be levied on the owner of each lot for the financial year, the number of instalments and the date on or before which payment of each instalment of the contributions is required. The body corporate is required under s 140 of the Regulation to give the owner of each lot notice at the specified time of the total amount of the contribution levied on the owner, the amount of the contribution or instalment of contribution whose payment is currently required, the due date for payment, any discount to which the owner is entitled for payment made by the due date for payment, any penalty to which the owner is liable for each month payment in arrears and the amount of any arrears applying to the owner.

[25] The body corporate is empowered under s 141 of the Regulation to fix by ordinary resolution the discount to be given to owners, if an instalment of a contribution is received by the body corporate by the date for payment, provided the discount is not more than 20 per cent of the amount to be paid. Section 142 of the Regulation also permits the body corporate by ordinary resolution to fix a penalty to be paid by owners, if an instalment of contribution is not received by the date for payment, provided the penalty is not more than 2.5 per cent for each month the instalment is in arrears.

[26] Section 143 of the Regulation is the sole provision in pt 4 of ch 7 of the Regulation which is headed "Payment and enforcement of body corporate debts".

[27] Section 143 of the Regulation provides:

> "143 Payment and recovery of body corporate debts [SM, s 145]
> (1) If a contribution or contribution instalment is not paid by the date for payment, the body corporate may recover each of the following amounts as a debt—

(a) the amount of the contribution or instalment;
(b) any penalty for not paying the contribution or instalment;
(c) any costs (recovery costs) reasonably incurred by the body corporate in recovering the amount.

(2) If the amount of a contribution or contribution instalment has been outstanding for 2 years, the body corporate must, within 2 months from the end of the 2-year period, start proceedings to recover the amount.

(3) A liability to pay a body corporate debt in relation to a lot is enforceable jointly and severally against each of the following persons —

(a) a person who was the owner of the lot when the debt became payable;
(b) a person (including a mortgagee in possession) who becomes an owner of the lot before the debt is paid.

(4) If there are 2 or more co-owners of a lot, the co-owners are jointly and severally liable to pay a body corporate debt in relation to the lot.

(5) If an owner is liable for a contribution or a contribution instalment, and a penalty, an amount paid by the owner must be paid —

(a) first, towards the penalty; and
(b) second, in reduction of the outstanding contribution or instalment; and
(c) third, towards any recovery costs for the debt.

(6) If the body corporate is satisfied there are special reasons for allowing a discount of a contribution, or waiving a penalty or liability for recovery costs, the body corporate may allow the discount, or waive the penalty or costs in whole or part."

[28] There is a definition of "body corporate debt" in the schedule to the Regulation:

"body corporate debt means a following amount owed by a lot owner to the body corporate —

(a) a contribution or instalment of a contribution;
(b) a penalty for not paying a contribution or instalment of a contribution by the date for payment;
(c) another amount associated with the ownership of a lot.

Examples of another amount—

• an annual payment for parking under an exclusive use by-law
• an amount owing to the body corporate for lawnmowing services arranged by the body corporate on behalf of the lot owner"

[29] The definition of "owner" in schedule 6 to the Act is:

"owner, of a lot (other than a lot that is a community titles scheme) included in a community titles scheme, means —

[140654]

(a) the person who is, or is entitled to be, the registered owner of the lot, and includes —

(i) a mortgagee in possession of the lot; and
(ii) if, under the Land Title Act, 2 or more persons are the registered owners, or are entitled to be the registered owners, of the lot—each of the persons; and

(b) for chapter 6, see section 226."

[30] There is also a definition of "mortgagee in possession" in schedule 6 to the Act:

"mortgagee in possession, of a lot included in a community titles scheme, means a mortgagee who has taken steps to enforce a mortgage of the lot and has notified the body corporate of the intention to enforce the mortgage (whether or not the mortgagee has actually gone into possession of the lot), but does not include a mortgagee who has notified the body corporate of a decision not to proceed with enforcement of the mortgage."

[31] Under s 191 of the Regulation notice must relevantly be given by the mortgagee to the body corporate of the mortgagee entering into possession of the lot that is the subject of the registered mortgage. It appears that the reference to a mortgagee entering into possession takes it meaning from the definition of "mortgagee in possession" in schedule 6 to the Act. Under s 202(1) of the Act, a mortgagee in possession of a lot included in a community title scheme must immediately give written notice of any decision not to enforce the mortgage. Section 202(2) provides that on the giving of such written notice, the mortgagee ceases to be a mortgagee in possession of the lot and is not the owner of the lot under the Act.

[32] The term "body corporate debt" first appeared in the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 1997 (the 1997 Regulation), as a result of the amendment made by the Body Corporate and Community Management Legislation Amendment Regulation (No 1) 2003 to replace s 97.

[33] Before the 2003 amendment, s 97 of the 1997 Regulation provided:

"Payment and recovery of contributions [SM, s 99]

> 97.(1) If a contribution, or instalment, is not paid by the date for payment, the body corporate may recover the amount of the contribution or instalment, together with any penalty, as a debt.
> (2) A liability to pay a contribution, instalment, penalty or other amount payable to the body corporate in relation to a lot is enforceable jointly and severally against the person who was the owner of the lot when the contribution, instalment or other amount became payable and a person (including a mortgagee in possession) who becomes an owner of the lot before the contribution, instalment, penalty or other amount is paid.
> (3) If there are 2 or more owners of a lot, they are jointly and severally liable to pay a contribution, instalment or penalty under the Act or this regulation, or another amount payable to the body corporate in relation to the lot.
> (4) If an owner is liable for a contribution, or an instalment of a contribution, and a penalty, an amount paid by the owner must be paid first towards the penalty and then in reduction of the outstanding contribution or instalment.
> (5) If the body corporate is satisfied there are special reasons for allowing a discount of contributions, or waiving a penalty, the body corporate may allow the discount, or waive the penalty in whole or part."

[34] Section 97 after the 2003 amendment was entitled "Payment and recovery of body corporate debts" and was in identical terms to s 143 of the Regulation. The Explanatory Note for this amendment regulation dealt with the replacement of s 97 in these terms:

> "The recovery of contributions owed to the body corporate by lot owners is a significant issue for some bodies corporate, to the extent that in some instances contributions can be in arrears for a number of years. The problem of arrears can be such that it can > cause severe financial hardship for the body corporate.
> [140655]
>
>
> The amendment is intended to give clear direction to the body corporate that it must take steps to recover arrears, including any applicable penalty and any costs reasonably incurred in the recovery. The arrears cannot be allowed to remain outstanding for more than 2 years.
> Whilst the body corporate must recover the contribution, it may waive the penalty or the costs if it considers the circumstances warrant this. This provision is necessary to allow some discretion, particularly where some special reason such as financial hardship exists."

[35] The 2003 amendment introduced the right of the body corporate to recover as a debt "recovery costs," being any costs reasonably incurred by the body corporate in recovering the amount of an outstanding contribution of instalment and any penalty for not paying that contribution or instalment. The 2003 amendment also mandated that the body corporate take proceedings to recover the amount of a contribution or contribution instalment that was outstanding for two years.

Decision of the primary judge

[36] The primary judge found it unnecessary to determine the proper construction of the definition of "body corporate debt." The primary judge observed:

> "It seems to me that the provisions have been drafted to establish a particular sequence. The first is the fixing of the contribution by resolution in section 139. The second is the giving of notice of the amount payable as well as the date for payment under section 140.
> Sections 141 and 142 deal with whether payments are made early or late. Section 143 it seems to me is important because it is the section which creates a legal liability in the event amounts are not paid."

[37] The primary judge decided that on the basis of the way the provisions are presented in sequence, s 143(3) identifies those who are liable in respect of the amounts referred to in s 143(1). The primary judge concluded that s 143(3) imposes a liability on the owner at the time when the amounts become payable and a subsequent owner or a mortgagee who goes into possession and that s 143(1)(c) would have no effect, unless s 143(3) identified the person or entity who was liable for those recovery costs. The primary judge noted that would have the consequence that the expression "body corporate debt" is used in s 143(3) in a way which includes recovery costs, whether or not that is the correct construction of the definition. The primary judge found support for the conclusion about s 143(3) in the terms of s 143(5), as otherwise it would be a strange result that s 143(5) specified an order of priority for payments made by an owner to whom notice is given under s 140, but not in respect of payments made by a mortgagee in possession (as had been contended by Westpac).

Issues

[38] Westpac's argument is that s 143(1) allows the body corporate to take advantage in recovering proceedings of the statutory deeming of any of the unpaid amounts described in s 143(1) as a debt: Builders' Licensing Board v Inglis (1985) 1 NSWLR 592, 597–598. It argues that the actual liability to pay the contributions arises by reason of the resolution of the body corporate fixing the contribution amount and the time for payment and the issuing of written notice to the owner of the lot. Westpac argues then, in contrast, s 143(3) of the Regulation imposes a liability to pay a "body corporate debt" upon a person who was not the owner of the lot at the time the debt became payable, but who becomes an owner of the lot before that body corporate debt is paid, including a mortgagee in possession, and that the defined expression "body corporate debt" is used deliberately for the purpose of limiting the liability of a person who is a stranger to the body corporate/registered owner relationship at the time the debt was incurred, but who becomes liable for amounts covered by the expression "body corporate debt" relating to the ownership of the lot. Westpac argues that the liability of the mortgagee in possession is limited, because the recovery costs under s 143(1)(c) do not align with the third limb of the definition of "body corporate debt."

The issues identified by Westpac on the appeal as relevant to the interpretation of s 143 of the Regulation are therefore:

> (a) whether the definition of "body corporate debt" in the schedule to the Regulation applies to that expression used in s 143(3)(b) of the Regulation;
> (b) whether the definition of "body corporate debt" includes "recovery costs," as that term is defined in s 143(1)(c); and
> (c) whether the persons identified in s 143(3)(b) of the Regulation are liable for "recovery costs," as that term is defined in s 143(1)(c) of the Regulation.

[40] The respondent supports the conclusion of the primary judge, although also seeks to maintain the primary judge's decision by applying the definition of "body corporate debt" to that expression used in s 143 of the Regulation and submitting that recovery costs are covered by paragraph (c) of the definition of "body corporate debt".

Construction of s 143 of the Regulation

[41] In order to deal with each of the interpretation issues identified by Westpac, s 143 of the Regulation must be construed in context. It was common ground between the parties that the proper approach to construing s 143 was a consideration of the text of the provision in conjunction with the context and purpose of the provision, relying on the authorities extracted in Meridien AB Pty Ltd v Jackson [2014] 1 Qd R 142 at 158.

[42] Under s 137 of the Regulation a body corporate must adopt for each financial year the administrative fund budget and the sinking fund budget. The administrative fund budget must contain estimates for the financial year of spending to cover the cost of maintaining common property and body corporate assets, the cost of insurance and other expenditure of a recurrent nature, and fix the amount to be raised by a way of contribution to cover the estimated recurrent expenditure. The sinking fund budget must allow for raising a reasonable capital amount to provide for spending from the sinking fund for the financial year and to reserve an appropriate proportional share of amounts necessary to be accumulated to meet anticipated major expenditure over at least the next nine years after the financial year, and fix the amount to be raised by way of contribution to cover the capital amount.

[43] By a combination of s 139 and s 140 of the Regulation the body corporate fixes the contribution to be levied on the owner of each lot for the relevant financial year on the basis of the budgets and gives the owner of each lot the written notice of the due date for payment of the instalment of contribution, whose payment is currently required and the other matters specified in s 140. The address for service for each owner to which the written notice about payment of contributions is sent is determined by the notice required to be given to the body corporate in relation to change of ownership under s 191 of the Regulation and reflected in the roll of lots and entitlements maintained by the body corporate under s 194 of the Regulation.

[44] Whereas pt 3 of ch 7 of the Regulation fixes the amount of the contribution to be levied on the owner of each lot and the mechanics for seeking the payment of the relevant instalment of contribution, pt 4 of ch 7 (which comprises s 143) covers the next stage where payment of a contribution instalment is not made by the due date. It also facilitates by s 143(3) the payment and recovery of amounts that are covered by the expression “body corporate debt,” apart from a contribution or contribution instalment. An example of such a debt is found in s 169(2) of the Regulation where the body corporate carries out work the owner or occupier has an obligation to carry out under statute, the community management statement or an order made by an adjudicator, court or tribunal, and the body corporate may then recover the reasonable cost of carrying out that work from the owner of the lot as a debt. Another example is found in s 173(1) where a monetary liability imposed under an exclusive use by-law on the owner of a lot may be recovered by the body corporate as a debt.

[45] By itself, s 143(1) is an unusual provision in that it specifies that the body corporate may recover each of the amounts specified in paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) as a debt, but does not specify the party against whom the body corporate may seek such recovery. There is force in Westpac’s submission that s 143(1) of the Regulation assists the body corporate in recovering the amounts that are specified in that provision by deeming the unpaid amount to be a debt with the procedural advantages that may give in litigation, as was acknowledged in Inglis.

[46] Section 143(1) is not such an unusual provision when it is construed in the context of s 143 and the purpose of s 143, taking into account the surrounding provisions of the Regulation. It is not unreasonable to presume that most lot owners pay the instalment of contribution on receiving the written notice from the body corporate which specifies the date for payment. The recovery of all payments due from lot owners for contributions is essential for the body corporate to carry out its functions. Section 143 of the Regulation focuses on that part of the process of collection where the lot owner has not made payment of the contribution in the usual course in accordance with the written notice issued by the body corporate. That suggests that the primary liability for payment of the contributions is imposed in a provision other than s 143.

[47] Although the term “liability” is not used in pt 3 of ch 7 of the Regulation to describe the obligation of the lot owner to pay the contribution or the instalment of contribution, equivalent terminology is used by the reference to “the contribution levied on the owner”.

[48] It is logical to conclude that the liability of the owner of each lot to pay the contributions determined as a result of the budgets adopted by the body corporate for the relevant financial year is created under pt 3 of ch 7 of the Regulation in the provisions dealing with the contributions levied by the body corporate on the owners and the requirement for notice to be given of the payment due by the owner of the instalment of contribution and any arrears.

[49] On this construction, s 143(3) extends the liability of the persons liable for a body corporate debt in relation to a lot and deals with the liability among those who are liable for the same debt by specifying that the liability is enforceable jointly and severally against each of them. Although the lot owner who received the written notice requiring the payment of the instalment of contribution was made liable for that amount by the operation of s 139 and s 140 of the Regulation, s 143(3) refers again to that liability in the context of dealing with the relationship of the liability of that owner with the liability that is imposed under s 143(3) on the parties to whom liability is extended. Section 143(3) of the Regulation reflects the deliberate policy choice of the Legislature to confer advantage on the body corporate by extending the parties who are liable with the owner of the lot when a body corporate debt became payable.

[50] The advantages given to the body corporate by the provisions in s 143 of the Regulation that assist the body corporate in recovering outstanding contributions are balanced by the obligation imposed on the body corporate under s 143(2) of the Regulation to take steps to recover arrears in contributions no later than two months from the end of the period of two years for which the contributions have been outstanding.

[51] Section 143(4) covers the liability of and between co-owners of a lot for a body corporate debt in relation to the lot.

[52] Section 143(5) of the Regulation sets out the priority in which a body corporate must apply any payment made by any owner for a contribution or contribution instalment and a penalty and specifies that, after applying the payment first towards the penalty, second in reduction of the outstanding contribution or instalment, any balance of the payment is applied towards any recovery costs for the debt.

[53] Section 143(6) gives the body corporate discretion in waiving a penalty or liability for recovery costs.

Whether the definition of "body corporate debt" applies to that expression used in s 143(3)(b) of the Regulation

[54] The expression "body corporate debt" is found in very few provisions in the Regulation. Apart from s 143, it is found in provisions that deal with the disqualification of an owner who owes a body corporate debt to be nominated for, or elected to, the committee or to vote at a general meeting: s 11, s 17, s 18, s 39, s 40, s 82, s 217 and s 218 of the Regulation. The subject matter of s 143 is concerned with the payment and enforcement of liabilities owed to the body corporate and the definition "body corporate debt" sets out categories of liabilities owed by the lot owner to the body corporate.

[55] Both parties ultimately contended that the definition of "body corporate debt" in the schedule to the Regulation applies to that expression used in s 143(3)(b) of the Regulation. That should be adopted as the correct interpretation of the expression "body corporate debt" in the context of s 143. As the definition of "body corporate debt" was introduced into the 1997 Regulation at the same time that s 97 was replaced by a provision in identical terms to what is now s 143 of the Regulation, and was given a new heading that referred to "body corporate debt," it would be an odd result to conclude the use of the expression "body corporate debt" in s 97 did not reflect the meaning of that newly introduced defined expression. Even allowing for the flexibility in the application of a definition that is provided for by s 32A of the Acts Interpretation Act 1954 (Qld) (as discussed in Conde v Gilfoyle & Anor [2010] QCA 109 at [20]–[21]), the context and subject matter of s 143 support giving the expression "body corporate debt" its defined meaning.

Whether the definition of "body corporate debt" includes "recovery costs," as that term is defined in s 143(1)(c)

[56] The issue is whether paragraph (c) of the definition of "body corporate debt" which specifies that, in addition to a contribution or instalment of a contribution and a penalty for not paying a contribution or instalment of a contribution by the date for payment, “another amount associated with the ownership of a lot” includes “recovery costs” which are referred to in s 143(1)(c). Two examples are then given of such other amount associated with the ownership of a lot. They are an annual payment for parking under an exclusive use by-law (which suggests that the exclusive use by-law is for the benefit of the owner of the specified lot) and an amount owing to the body corporate for lawn mowing services arranged by the body corporate on behalf of a lot owner (which suggests that the body corporate organised for the lawn mowing to be undertaken on that part of the property that belonged to the relevant lot owner). Under s 14D of the Acts Interpretation Act 1954 (Qld), an example of the operation of a provision is not exhaustive and the example does not limit, but may extend, the meaning of the provision. Section 14D also provides that the example and the provision are to be read in the context of each other and the other provisions of the relevant legislation.

[57] Paragraphs (a) and (b) of s 143(1) are mirrored by paragraphs (a) and (b) of the definition of “body corporate debt.” Paragraph (c) of the definition of “body corporate debt” covers other debts that are not the subject of s 143(1)(c). Putting to one side the issue of whether recovery costs provided for in s 143(1)(c) fall within paragraph (c) of the definition of “body corporate debt,” that definition has wider application than what is specified in s 143(1).

[58] Westpac emphasised its lack of control in being able to prevent the escalation of recovery costs as a stranger to the relationship between Dr and Mrs Prins with the respondent, in circumstances where it can be inferred that the relationship had broken down. Westpac argued that any interpretation of s 143(3) which made Westpac liable for what it claimed was exorbitant recovery costs that devalued the security interest of Westpac as mortgagee in possession could not have been the intention of the Legislature.

[59] The policy that prevailed when s 97 was introduced to the 1997 Regulation by the 2003 amendment is evident from the Explanatory Note. The severe financial hardship for the body corporate caused by arrears in contributions was intended to be addressed by the amendment. The body corporate depends on each lot owner making its payment of the contributions reflecting the proportionate share of the body corporate’s projected expenditures, so that the body corporate meets those expenditures. Ultimately, it is the other lot owners who are meeting their share of the expenditures who will be disadvantaged by the non-payment by one lot owner of that lot owner’s contributions.

[60] The advantage given to the body corporate under s 143(1)(c) of being able to recover recovery costs as a debt is qualified by the express statement that it applies only to costs reasonably incurred by the body corporate in recovering the amount of the unpaid contributions and any penalty.

[61] Recovery costs are incurred by the body corporate in taking steps to recover from the lot owner the outstanding contributions and penalty in respect of the relevant lot. On the plain and ordinary meaning of paragraph (c) of the definition of “body corporate debt”, recovery costs are associated with the ownership of the relevant lot. In addition, they are of a similar nature to the expenditures that are illustrated by the two examples as payments made by the body corporate associated with the ownership of a lot.

[62] As the primary judge observed, support for that conclusion is also found in s 143(5) of the Regulation which specifies the priority for payments made by an owner. There is no basis for applying s 143(5) in a different manner when the outstanding amounts are paid by the mortgagee in possession.

Whether the mortgagee in possession is liable for recovery costs

[63] By the express terms of s 143(3) of the Regulation, the Legislature has resolved the different interests between a mortgagee in possession and the body corporate where there are contributions and penalty outstanding in respect of the relevant lot in favour of the body corporate (and consequentially the owners of the other lots in the community title scheme.) Under s 143(3) of the Regulation, Westpac as mortgagee in possession is therefore liable for recovery costs (as that term is defined in s 143(1)(c) of the Regulation), notwithstanding that those recovery costs have been incurred by the body corporate before Westpac became the mortgagee in possession for the purpose of the Regulation. The complication for Westpac in endeavouring to observe the FOS terms of reference can have no bearing on the interpretation of s 143 of the Regulation.

[64] There remains an issue between the parties as to the reasonableness of the total amount claimed by the respondent for recovery costs, but that is for another hearing.

Orders

[65] The above analysis of s 143 of the Regulation reaches the same conclusion as the primary judge, although with some variations in the reasoning. The orders which should be made therefore are:

1. Appeal dismissed.
2. The appellant must pay the respondent's costs of the appeal to be assessed.

Queensland Body Corporate and Community Management Commissioner — Adjudicators Orders

Decision delivered on 10 July 2014

Pet by-law, the body corporate's refusal to grant approval to the keeping of a cat within a lot, reasonableness of the body corporate's decision, whether an alternative by-law should be recorded for the scheme — Sections of the Act considered include s 169, 180, 94(2) and 100(5).

[140660]

The applicant owned a lot in a scheme which had originally been a resort. Most of the lots within the resort were either small studio apartments or one bedroom units designed for holiday rental. The complex included a large lagoon pool, spa, play area and landscaped tropical gardens. A number of the lots were used for holiday and tourist rentals.

The applicant occupied her lot with her cat. The applicant sought the body corporate's approval for her to keep her cat within her lot and the Committee refused her application noting by-law 11 prohibited the keeping of animals within lots on the scheme.

The applicant brought her application and argued that the by-law was oppressive and unreasonable in contravention of s 180(7) of the Act.

In response, the other owners argued that the scheme was a holiday resort, animals were not conducive to high density living, they were concerned for the cat's welfare if it was locked inside a unit, other occupiers might be scared or allergic to the animal, the animal may create noise and smell, the agreement to allow one animal into the scheme might mean more were introduced, rental demand may suffer which would lead to a drop in the vales of the other units.

Held:

1. The by-law prohibited, rather than regulated, a normal use of lots within the scheme.

2. There was no particular characteristic or design which would support the retention of the by-law.

3. No evidence was produced to suggest that the keeping of an animal would pose a letting, marketing or valuation risk.

4. By-law 11 was beyond the power of the body corporate to make under s 169 of the Act and contrary to s 180(7) of the Act.

5. The body corporate did not act reasonably in failing to pass the motion which would replace by-law 11.

6. Ultimately the motion was deemed to have passed and the body corporate had three months to record a new community management statement which recorded the amendments to by-law 11.

Before: P Dowling, adjudicator

P Dowling, Adjudicator:

ORDERS MADE:

1. I hereby order that By-law 11 recorded in the community management statement for the body corporate for Alexandra Beach Resort Apartments CTS 30867 is void.
2. I further order that Motion 7 at the annual general meeting dated 15 February 2014 is deemed passed by special resolution.
3. I further order that, within three months of the date of this order, the body corporate for Alexandra Beach Resort Apartments CTS 30867 must lodge a request to record a new community management statement giving effect to the resolution on Motion 7.
4. I further order that Janice Burton, the owner of Lot 31, is deemed to have body corporate approval to keep, on the lot, the cat identified in her letter to the body corporate dated 3 July 2013 subject to the conditions detailed in Motion 7.
5. I further order that in all other respects the outcomes sought are dismissed.

P Dowling, Adjudicator:

Introduction

[1] On 18 April 2013, the applicant asked the body corporate for approval to keep her cat on Lot 31. On 18 June 2013, the body corporate informed the applicant the committee did not approve her request as the scheme “is essentially a holiday resort with high density living and the living areas are generally not large…it is not considered suitable for a cat to live in a unit, even a cat which lives indoors”.

[2] The committee made the above decision on 17 June 2013. At this time, the community management statement [1] included By-law 11 prohibiting the keeping of animals on lots except where section 181 of the Act is applicable. At its annual general meeting dated 15 February 2014 (AGM), the body corporate did not pass Motion 7 that proposed amending by—law 11 and having a new community management statement recorded.

[3] The applicant seeks the following outcomes:

1. That the body corporate call an extraordinary general meeting to overturn the decision on Motion 7.
2. That the body corporate amend By-law 11 to provide that subject to section 181 of the Act, an occupier must not, and must not permit an invitee to, bring or keep an animal on a lot or the common property except with prior written consent of the committee.

[140661]

3. That a new community management statement be recorded to insert the amended by-law.
4. That the body corporate consents to the applicant keeping her cat.

Procedural matters

[4] The commissioner has invited the committee and the other lot owners to make submissions about the matters raised (s 243, Act). Submissions were made by the committee and the owners of 15 lots. After the applicant replied to submissions, the commissioner referred the application to departmental adjudication (s 248, Act).

Jurisdiction

[5] I am satisfied this dispute falls within the dispute resolution provisions of the legislation (ss 227, 228, 276, Act). I may make an order that is just and equitable in the circumstances to resolve the dispute.

Analysis

Applicable law regarding animal by-laws

[6] Section 169 of the Act empowers a body corporate to make by-laws for the administration, management and control of common property and body corporate assets, and the regulation of the use and enjoyment of lots, common property, body corporate assets, and services and amenities supplied by the body corporate. Section 180 of the Act sets out various by-law limitations, including that a by-law must not be oppressive and unreasonable having regard to the interests of all owners and occupiers and the use of the common property (s 180(7), Act).

[7] These sections have been the subject of disputation in recent years, including in the Queensland Civil and Administrative Tribunal (QCAT). McKenzie v Body Corporate for Kings Row Centre CTS 11632 [2010] QCATA 57 and Body Corporate for River City Apartments CTS 31622 v McGarvey [2012] QCATA 47 have been adopted as authority in adjudications dealing with by-law disputes, particularly disputes about by-laws of the nature of by—law 11 and the keeping of animals on lots.

[8] In McKenzie, the Tribunal said a by-law regulating the keeping of animals in lots seeks to regulate the use and enjoyment of lots and falls within the power given by section 169(1)(b)(i) [2] . The Tribunal indicated that “Prohibition of an activity in part, in a particular case, or in a particular way, may however in some circumstances be needed in order to achieve effective regulation”[3] .

[9] Later in McGarvey, the Tribunal decided a by-law prohibiting keeping pets in lots was invalid because the by-law did more than just regulate the use and enjoyment of lots. It was found that such a by-law prohibited (rather than regulated) a particular use and enjoyment of a lot and was therefore beyond the power to regulate provided in section 169. The Tribunal said:

1. "…the power to regulate an activity implies that the activity will, despite such regulation, be capable of continuing, which it would not do if it were completely prohibited. Prohibition of an activity in part, in a particular case, or in a particular way, may in some cases be needed to achieve effective regulation" [4] .
2. "…the blanket prohibition of an activity that an owner or occupier of a lot would normally, according to the ordinary rights of a land owner or occupier, be entitled to carry on in using and enjoying the lot is prima facie invalid"[5] .
3. "…a by-law that prohibits the keeping of animals except with the prior written consent of the body corporate, and without setting out any objective criteria by which such consent may be given or refused, would be a valid by-law" provided the body corporate acts reasonably. [6]
4. "…a by-law that prohibits altogether the keeping of pets in lots is not a by-law regulating the use or enjoyment of lots, but purports to prohibit a particular use and type of enjoyment altogether. It therefore goes beyond the scope of a valid by-law permitted by s169 and is invalid" [7] .

[10] With respect to section 180 of the Act, in McKenzie the Tribunal found that a by-law providing an absolute ban on the keeping of dogs and cats was unreasonable as there were circumstances in which dogs and cats could be kept in community titles schemes without causing an inconvenience to other residents[8] . In McGarvey, the Tribunal said section 180(7) requires consideration of the by-law in the context of the particular scheme for which it operates [9] . At paragraph 62, the Tribunal stated:

> "Although, in many cases, a by-law which did not provide for the body corporate to consider individual circumstances in determining whether or not to allow a particular lot owner to keep a certain type of pet would be unreasonable or oppressive, it is necessary for that question to be considered in each case having regard to the facts before the adjudicator and, in the context of those facts, the interests of all owners and occupiers in the scheme and the use of the common property."

By-law 11

[12] Owners opposing the application submit:

1. The resort contains over 200 units and is unique. Most units are small studio and one bedroom that are designed for holiday rentals. There is a large lagoon pool, other pool and spa areas, a playground and recreational facilities located in tropical surroundings.
2. Animals are not conducive to high density living in a tourist resort. Tourists do not expect or want animals. Any animal is inappropriate for the scheme.
3. An animal in a confined space can be a potential health hazard: with the development of unsanitary conditions; as the disposal of kitty litter in the garbage chutes and large waste bins will emit offensive odours; or if it scratches or bites a resort guest.
4. Concern for an animal's welfare if locked inside a unit.
5. An occupier of a lot: may be allergic to animals; maybe scared of animals; and should not have to put up with animal noise, faeces or spraying. The owner of Lot 9 submits if an animal is allowed, it could result in many animals being in the complex and members of his family are allergic to animals particularly cats. The owner fears they could not use the unit if animals are allowed, family members would suffer physical distress and he would suffer financial distress if the by-law is changed as they could not longer use the unit as intended.
6. Property devaluations may occur as the presence of animals would make the resort less attractive to buyers. Rental income may be at risk.
7. Once one animal is allowed, it would be difficult to control the number of animals kept on lots.

[13] The committee supports overturning the decision on Motion 7. When it submitted the motion, the committee provided an explanation to voters to the effect: that a by-law prohibiting keeping animals has been determined by adjudicators and courts as unreasonable, invalid and unenforceable; the body corporate must consider a request on its merits; and the proposed amendment to By-law 11 ensures the body corporate has authority to control a request and impose conditions to minimise any inconvenience or nuisance to occupiers.

[14] In reply to submissions, the applicant says:

1. A blanket ban of the nature of By-law 11 is unreasonable.
2. An owner retains control over allowing a pet in his or her unit even if the by-law is changed. The body corporate would administer the by-law. If approval conditions are not met, then a by-law breach would be enforced.
3. There is noise from occupiers of units in the resort living their lives. The applicant cannot see how noise from a pet could have a further impact.
4. Conditions of approval of the proposed by-law set out requirements for disposal of litter. She has to put up with smells produced by guests.
5. As pets could not roam on common property, there should not be health problems including allergy issues.
6. There is no evidence there would be a detrimental effect on property values.

[15] By-law 11 prohibits animals in lots or on common property. Prima facie, the provision prohibits, rather than regulates, a normal use of lots. Owners have made submissions about the by-law being appropriate for the scheme given its resort nature and features.

However, these claims are not substantiated. It has not explained how the resort configuration or accommodation arrangement distinguishes the scheme from other schemes in the vicinity or in other parts of Queensland, including schemes that contain lots available for short-term occupation or that contain facilities comparable to a ‘resort lifestyle'. The relevance of the views of tourists (either generally or with respect to this scheme) is not established. The claim about the by-law being appropriate given the size of “most” lots is not substantiated. There is no evidence of an independent assessment of any of these factors by a person with appropriate qualification or expertise that supports the retention of the by-law.

[16] I am not satisfied there is any particular characteristic or design factor that provides a basis for retaining By-law 11. It is not established the size or location of lots, or the configuration of common property are relevant considerations. Neither do I consider the availability of lots for short term residential purposes is relevant. There has not been any authoritative analysis submitted establishing that keeping an animal on this scheme or a scheme of a similar nature poses a letting, marketing or valuation risk. It is not established that a health issue justifies general prohibition.

[17] In my view, By-law 11 is beyond the power of the body corporate to make under section 169 of the Act.

[18] Further, taking into consideration the abovementioned authorities and submissions, I am satisfied By-law 11 is contrary to section 180(7) of the Act. This is because automatically prohibiting the keeping of an animal within the confines of a lot, without any consideration whether the keeping of that animal in a particular lot is likely to unreasonably interfere with any other users of the scheme, is failing to have regard for the interests of all owners and occupiers. I am not satisfied from submissions there is any particular characteristic, design factor or circumstance establishing that By-law 11 is not contrary to section 180(7) of the Act.

[19] For the above reasons, I consider By-law 11 is invalid. I have made an order to this effect (items 20 and 21, schedule 5, Act).

Alternative animal by-law

[20] It is generally accepted that a more appropriate approach to regulating animals is to permit them subject to body corporate approval. This would seem to have been the basis for the committee's Motion 7. A by-law of the nature proposed in Motion 7 allows the body corporate to consider each request to keep an animal on its merits. The question raised in outcome 1 is whether the body corporate acted reasonably deciding Motion 7 (s 94(2), Act). The test of whether the decision is reasonable is not whether the decision was ‘correct', but whether it was dictated by reason and rationality [10] .

[21] The motion has the applicant's support. In my view, reasons of the nature outlined above at paragraph 12 do not establish the body corporate acted reasonably deciding Motion 7. It is not established the proposed by-law is not reasonable for the scheme or having regard to the interests of all owners and occupiers of lots. The concerns held by the owner of Lot 9 do not prevent the body corporate regulating the keeping of animals on a lot in a way contemplated by the proposed by-law. It is not established it was reasonable for the body corporate to oppose any condition in the proposed by-law.

[22] In these circumstances, I consider the opposition to Motion 7 was unreasonable. If I am satisfied a decision to not pass a motion at a general meeting was unreasonable, I may make an order giving effect to the motion as proposed (item 24, schedule 5, Act). In my view, it is appropriate that such an order is made (s 284(1) and (4), Act). It is therefore not necessary that the body corporate hold another general meeting to consider the motion or to impose a by—law limited in terms to those specified in outcome 2. As I have deemed Motion 7 passed, the body corporate must now take steps to have a new community management statement recorded by the registrar of titles. I have made provision for the body corporate taking these steps.

The applicant's cat

[23] The last outcome sought is that the body corporate consents to the applicant keeping her cat.

applicant wrote to the body corporate saying: the cat had lived with her in a body corporate unit for three years; that unit was only a fraction bigger than Lot 31; the cat is a totally indoors cat; and she bases the care of the cat on the RSPCA's Five Freedoms model. The applicant asked that the committee reconsider her request. On 8 July 2013, the committee informed the applicant its decision "was made in consideration of the expectations and rights of owners, not in relation to the welfare of the cat" and that it confirms its decision.

[25] On 9 September 2013, the committee informed the applicant that following a conciliation session [11] the committee agreed not to give her a by-law contravention notice if she brought the cat onto Lot 31 if: the cat remained indoors at all times; the cat is transported in a suitable carrier; and the cat's waste is disposed of in a way that does not create noxious odours or otherwise contaminate the complex. The committee said if a written complaint is made, a contravention notice may be necessary. Later on the same date, the applicant agreed with all conditions other than one about balcony use. On 17 September 2013, the applicant informed the committee she was happy to comply with the condition that the cat remain indoors and is permitted on the balcony only under the control and supervision of the owner. She added it would not be appropriate for a cat to be roaming on common property.

[26] The applicant says the cat, which has lived in Lot 31 since on or about September 2013, does not cause a nuisance. She says: she disposes of kitty litter and excrement away from the resort; she changes the cat litter regularly; and the cat is vaccinated and treated regularly for fleas and worms. The applicant provided a letter dated 9 August 2013 from Greg Isaac of the Tamara Gardens body corporate committee saying the cat is quiet, did not disturb anyone and did not roam around that scheme.

[27] The applicant submits there have not been any complaints about the cat being kept on Lot 31. While the committee does not make submissions supporting outcome 4, it has not identified any problems. Nor have any problems been mentioned in owners' submissions, including from the owner of Lot 9. I find no evidence that the cat is likely to adversely impact on any other owner or occupier if it is kept in compliance with the conditions that will apply when the new community management statement is recorded (s 179, Act). The applicant welcomes these conditions being imposed.

[28] For these reasons, I consider it just and equitable to make an order of the nature of the terms sought.

Queensland Body Corporate And Community Management Commissioner — Adjudicator's Orders

Decision delivered on 21 July 2014

Pet by-law, the body corporate's refusal to grant approval to the keeping of a dog within a lot, reasonableness of the body corporate's decision. — Sections of the Act considered include s 94(2) and 100(5).

The applicant owned a lot in the scheme which was tenanted. The by-laws of the scheme provided that animals could not be kept on a lot or common property with the prior written approval of the body corporate. That approval could be rescinded on the receipt of three separate written substantial complaints. The applicant sought approval for his daughter and her husband to keep a dog within the lot and the committee resolved to refuse to provide its consent.

No reason for the refusal of consent was given. The applicant made a further request and the applicant was advised that unless the dog was a trained hearing dog it would be considered to be a pet and refused by the committee.

The applicant made a third request which was also refused after his tenants purchased a dog, brought it onto the scheme and were handed a contravention notice within three days of the dog's arrival.

The applicant's daughter was profoundly deaf and could not hear without hearing aid which she could not wear whilst asleep or whilst showering. The dog was trained to alert her to alarms, provide support, let her know when someone was knocking at the door and when the baby cried.

After conciliation was unsuccessful, the adjudicator determined that the main issue was whether the body corporate's refusal to grant permission for the dog was reasonable and whether or not approval for the dog ought to have been given.

The committee opposed the application and argued that the dog was a Staffordshire which was associated with aggression and provided a petition signed by 17 lot owners who supported the committee's refusal of the body corporate's consent. Other owners argued that the complex was a "no dog" complex, that the dog barked and howled when its owners were not at home, that the courtyard was not big enough for the dog and that if one dog was allowed more applications for dogs would disturb the quiet within the scheme.

Held:

1. The by-law allowed the committee the discretion to allow pets within the scheme.

2. In considering this particular dog, the committee ought to have considered whether there was a genuine likelihood of the animal causing an adverse impact on common property or any other owner or occupier and what reasonable conditions would alleviate those concerns to make the decision more reasonable than an outright refusal.

3. No evidence was provided to suggest the dog was aggressive or dangerous or to suggest that the dog's breeding would predispose it to being aggressive or dangerous.

4. The petition signed by 17 other lot owners and two proxies was not, in and of itself, sufficient reason to make an unreasonable decision.

5. The concern that a precedent would be created was not a reasonable consideration for the body corporate in refusing consent.

6. The "no dogs" policy was not a reasonable consideration for denying the applicant's pet application.

7. The size of the unit and courtyard were not inappropriate for keeping a dog merely because it was a "unit" as opposed to a house. No evidence was presented to suggest the dog was too large.

The complaint about the dog barking was unsubstantiated. Evidence produced by the body corporate was unable to be linked to the applicant's dog and other dogs of the scheme did bark in the vicinity of the applicant's unit. In any event, the applicant's tenants purchased a barking collar. If the dog did cause a disturbance, that nuisance could be pursued under the Act whilst the noise could also form the basis for subsequently withdrawing permission for the dog.

9. Permission (on conditions) was granted for the dog to be kept on the lot given the body corporate's decision had been unreasonable.

10. The adjudicator stressed that the decision was made on the specific facts of the case and the dog and that the decision should not in any way be taken as a general precedent allowing owners or occupiers to bring or keep an animal in their lot without the body corporate's approval.

ORDERS MADE:

1. I hereby order that Robert Hoey (owner of lot 27) and his tenants, Daniel and Anna—Claire Rodgers (occupiers of Lot 27) shall be permitted to keep 'Bailey' a Maltese x Toy Poodle x American Staffordshire terrier dog in Lot 27 subject to the following conditions:

a. The dog must be kept within the lot while it is present on the scheme;
b. The dog must traverse common property only for the purpose of being brought onto or taken off scheme land, at which time the dog must be appropriately restrained;
c. The dog is not permitted to cause a nuisance or interfere unreasonably with any person's use or enjoyment of another lot or common property;
d. Reasonable steps must be taken to minimise the transmission of airborne allergens from the dog to other lots or common property, for example, by vacuuming the lot and grooming the dog;
e. Reasonable steps must be taken to keep the dog in good health and free from fleas and parasites;
f. Any animal waste must be disposed of in such a way that it does not create noxious odours or otherwise contaminate the scheme;
g. The committee shall be entitled to rescind permission for the dog if it reasonably considers the applicant has not complied with these conditions and that the applicant has failed to respond appropriately to warnings about their concerns;
h. Any approval granted only applies to one dog and does not authorise the keeping of any additional, replacement, or substitute animals on the lot.

S Zeidler:

Introduction

[1] This application relates to the applicant's request for approval to keep a dog within Lot 27.

[2] Harbour Lights has an animal by-law (by-law 9) which provides that animals cannot be kept on a lot or common property without the prior written approval of the body corporate. In May 2013 the applicant sought approval for his tenants, who are his daughter and her husband, to be permitted to have a dog in lot 27. The committee resolved, by a vote outside a committee meeting, to refuse the request. No reason was given. A further request in June 2013 was refused. The applicant was advised that unless the dog was a trained hearing dog it would 'simply be a pet' and would be refused by the committee.

[3] The tenants purchased a Maltese x Toy Poodle x American Staffordshire terrier puppy (named 'Bailey') in August 2013 and brought it onto the lot without approval. Three days later they were issued with a by-law contravention notice and subsequently removed the dog from the scheme. In September 2013, the applicant made a third request to the committee for approval to keep the dog. It was again refused.

[4] The applicant's daughter and tenant, Anna Rogers, is profoundly deaf and cannot hear without hearing aids, which she cannot wear while sleeping or in water. One of the reasons for the tenants seeking the dog is to provide her with extra support when her husband is away. It is indicated that the dog will be trained to alert her to alarms, door knocks, a crying baby and similar noises which she would not otherwise hear when she is not wearing her hearing aids. Her doctor has stated that the dog would be of benefit to her mental and physical health. The dog is also vaccinated and has completed puppy training.

[5] The applicant seeks an order for approval to keep the dog in lot 27. The key issue to determine is whether the decision of the body corporate to refuse permission for the dog was reasonable, and whether or not approval for the dog should be given.

Jurisdiction

[6] I am satisfied that this matter falls within the legislative dispute resolution provisions.[1]

[7] An adjudicator may make an order that is just and equitable in the circumstances to resolve a dispute, in the context of a community titles scheme, about a claimed or anticipated contravention of the Act or the CMS, or the exercise of rights or powers or performance of duties under the Act or the CMS.[2] An order may require a person to act, or prohibit a person from acting, in a way stated. An order may contain ancillary and consequential provisions the adjudicator considers necessary or appropriate.[3]

Procedural matters

[8] Initially the applicant applied for conciliation.[4] Conciliation was conducted in October 2013 but the conciliation certificate states no agreement was reached. This application was then lodged.

[9] The Commissioner invited submissions on the application from the committee and all owners.[5] Submissions were received from the committee and the owners of 14 lots. The applicant inspected and responded to the submissions received.[6] A dispute resolution recommendation[7] was made referring the file to department adjudication.

Submissions

[10] The Committee submission opposes the application. Its comments include:

a. The dog was initially refused permission because it was identified as being an American Staffordshire terrier. The committee had concerns regarding the level of aggression often associated with this breed.
b. At no time did the committee indicate that the application would be refused if the dog was a correctly trained assistance dog from a suitable training organisation. The committee accepts that a trained hearing dog would pose little or no threat.
c. The submission is accompanied by a petition signed by 17 lot owners and apparent proxies for a further two lot owners supporting the committee's refusal of approval.
d. The dog was returned to lot 27, without approval, on 4 December 2013.

[11] Submissions from the owners of 13 lots oppose the application.

a. Several submissions refer to the dog as potentially aggressive or dangerous, and express concern for the safety of children and elderly residents if they were to come into contact with the dog.
b. Several submissions say this scheme is known as a ‘no dog’ complex.
c. Two submissions claim the by-laws do not allow for the keeping of dogs.
d. The owner of lot 28 (next to the applicant's lot) says the dog howls and barks when the tenants are not home. The owner says this is stressful for her and annoying when she is trying to sleep.
e. One submitter raises concern about defecation in the complex.
f. Some submissions argue that the courtyard area is not sufficient room for a dog to be exercised, and it is not fair to confine a dog to such an area.
g. Some submissions claim that if one dog is allowed, there will be more applications for dogs which will disturb the currently quiet scheme.

[12] One submission received supports the application. The submitter argues that the refusal of approval was unreasonable. He queries the conduct of the committee, including the failure to give reasons for their decision; approval of other dogs in the past; and false information about the breed of dog with a petition to current occupiers.

In responding to the submission the applicant makes the following comments:

a. All or most of the submissions are based on the premise that the breed of dog sought is a pure bred American Staffordshire terrier. Originally approval was sought for such a dog but the request was refused (without reason). Subsequently approval was sought for a Maltese x Toy Poodle x American Staffordshire terrier.

b. Incorrect information has been given to owners about the potential danger of the dog. There is an element of fear about the dog.
c. Concerns about noise and behaviour are dealt with by the by-laws. Approval can be rescinded if there are substantiated complaints.
d. The applicant purchased in the scheme on the basis that allowance was made in the by-laws for occupiers to keep a pet.
e. The applicant applied for a companion dog, not a hearing dog as claimed. It takes at least two years to obtain a trained hearing dog but Mrs Rogers (one of the tenants) would benefit from the dog now.
f. The tenants complied with the contravention notice. The dog was returned to the scheme after the failed conciliation application while awaiting the adjudicator's decision.
g. The dog has been kept on the scheme in compliance with the by-laws. She is walked regularly, does not bark, is well behaved and has been desexed. She is not expected to be a big dog.

Analysis

[14] The issue in this matter is whether the body corporate has validly refused to give approval for the dog in question. In determining this application, I will consider the animal by-law in this scheme, the applicant's request, and the objections to the dog.

Does the by-law allow the keeping of pets?

[15] by-law 9 governs the keeping of animals. This by-law states:

> By-law 9 — Keeping of animals
>
> Subject to Section 30(12) a proprietor or occupier may keep an animal on site with prior written approval of the Committee of the Body Corporate subject to the following rules:
>
> 1. Noise and behaviour from the animal must not interfere with other proprietors or occupiers.
> 2. No animal is to be permitted to roam free on common property.
> 3. Any approval WILL be rescinded by the Committee on the receipt of three separate written substantial complaints.

[16] Although several submissions appear to believe that the current by—law prohibits the keeping of animals in the scheme, that is not correct. by-law 9 is a permissive by—law. This means it allows occupiers to keep animals if they have the prior written permission of the committee. This gives the committee and/or body corporate discretion to allow pets.

Did the committee act reasonably when considering the applicant's pet application?

[17] In determining any pet application, the committee and/or body corporate must act reasonably[8] and consider each case on its individual merits. That is, the committee and/or body corporate must consider whether there is any genuine likelihood of the animal causing an adverse impact on common property or any owner or occupier. Where there are genuine concerns, it is then necessary to consider whether the imposition of conditions on the keeping of the pet would alleviate any such concerns and in turn be more reasonable than the outright refusal of the pet.

[18] Whether a decision is ‘reasonable’ is a question of fact. It is an objective test which requires a balancing of factors in all the circumstances according to the ordinary meaning of the term ‘reasonable’. The question is not whether the decision was the “correct” one but whether it is objectively reasonable.[9]

[19] In the remainder of the application, I will consider the committee and individual owners’ reasons for denying the applicant's pet application and consider whether the decision is objectively reasonable having regard to any conditions which may be imposed.

Breed of the Dog and Aggression

[20] The committee says it initially refused permission for the dog because it was identified as being an American Staffordshire terrier. The committee had concerns regarding the level of aggression allegedly associated with this breed. While the committee acknowledge that the applicant has subsequently been applying for a 'cross breed' dog (as opposed to a pure bred American Staffordshire terrier) the committee and opposing submissions hold concerns regarding the 'American Staffordshire terrier' element of the dog's breeding and the alleged potential for aggression within this breed.

[21] The applicant disputes these concerns and says that the dog's temperament is friendly. The applicant says that the dog has no dangerous or aggressive behaviours and that the initial misunderstanding regarding the breed of the dog (i.e. that the dog is not a pure bred American Staffordshire terrier) has created an element of fear about the dog.

[22] On 18 February 2014 our Office wrote to the committee and asked:[10] > a. Whether the committee had any evidence to support its concern that the dog, with the stated breed combination (i.e. Maltese x Toy Poodle x American Staffordshire terrier) will demonstrate dangerous, aggressive or otherwise inappropriate behaviour (as distinct from the genetic potential for aggression in one of the dog's component breeds); and > b. Whether the dog has displayed any dangerous, aggressive or otherwise inappropriate behaviour while it has been present on the scheme;

[23] The committee declined to provide any information with respect to these issues.

[24] The onus is on the body corporate to provide sufficient evidence to substantiate its claims. An Adjudicator has no jurisdiction to make orders with respect to hypothetical or potential concerns. In this instance, no evidence has been provided to suggest that the dog in question is aggressive or dangerous or has ever displayed any aggressive or dangerous qualities. Further, no evidence has been presented to suggest that the dog, with its particular breeding (i.e. Maltese x Toy Poodle x American Staffordshire terrier) has any predisposition towards aggressive or dangerous behaviour. Accordingly, I am not satisfied the pet request should be denied on the basis of these concerns.

Petition

[25] The committee argues that the majority of owners do not want the dog in question to remain on the scheme. In this regard, the committee makes reference to a petition (circulated in September 2013) signed by 17 lot owners and 2 apparent proxies supporting the committee's decision to refuse the dog.

[26] While the views of owners are relevant, and there may be a general preference against animals in the scheme, the body corporate and the committee have a legal obligation to act reasonably in making a decision. A decision that is objectively unreasonable will still be unreasonable even if a majority agree with it. Accordingly, I am not satisfied that the presence of the petition, in and of itself, is a sufficient basis to deny the applicant's pet request. Rather, it is necessary to examine owners' individual views for objecting to the pet request as identified through the submissions process.

Precedent

[27] Several owners oppose the applicant's pet request on the basis that any approval granted for this dog would set a precedent leading to other owners or occupiers believing they can also bring animals onto the complex.

[28] The issue of creating a precedent is a concern for many bodies corporate. However, any decision to approve a pet is made on the specific circumstances of a matter (including the situation of the applicant and the type of pet) and does not entitle others in different circumstances to assume they can also have a pet. Accordingly, I am not satisfied any issues regarding the creation of a precedent are a reasonable consideration in the circumstances. Further, I note that there are already several animals in the scheme (with and without body corporate approval) including a dog in lot 7 and cats in lots 5, 12, 19, 22, 25 and 29.

'No dogs' policy

[29] Several owners oppose the application arguing that the scheme has a ‘no dogs’ policy (these owners may be unaware of the existence of the dog in lot 7). However, irrespective of this issue, by—law 9 does not prohibit the keeping of animals, including dogs. Rather, the by-law allows occupiers to keep animals if they have the written permission of the committee. Accordingly, I am not satisfied any such policy (if in fact stringently enforced) is valid or forms a reasonable basis to deny the applicant's pet application.

Suitability of the Scheme

[30] Many owners object to the pet request saying the applicant's unit and courtyard is too small for the keeping of a dog.

[31] In McKenzie v Body Corporate for Kings Row Centre[11] the scheme in question was a high rise building. Despite this, the Tribunal found the scheme could prima facie be suitable for the keeping of pets. Following this decision, I am not satisfied the unit in question is inappropriate for the keeping of this dog merely because it is a ‘unit’ (as opposed to a house or other dwelling type) or contained in a high density housing area. Further, I note that no evidence whatsoever has been presented to suggest that the dog in question is too large or otherwise inappropriate to be housed in the applicant's unit. Accordingly, I am not satisfied these arguments form a reasonable basis to deny the applicant's pet request.

Dog on Common Property

[32] The committee disputes the applicant's pet application arguing that the dog, on one occasion, has been outside the unit on common property and near the pool area without restraints. In support of their arguments, the committee has provided one photograph showing the dog outside the front of lot 27, near the unit's garage.

[33] In response, the applicant's tenants (the owners of the dog) note that the photo shows the gate to the backyard is open. The tenants say they do not know why or how the gate was opened. However, in order to ensure the incident does not happen again, they have purchased and installed a lock for the gate. The tenants say this is the only time the dog has been unrestrained on common property.

[34] Whether or not this incident forms a reasonable basis to reject to applicant's pet application is a difficult question. While it is reasonable to expect that a pet would remain on the lot unless appropriately restrained, on balance, I am not satisfied this one incident alone forms a sufficient basis to reject the applicant's pet request. In this regard, I note that no information has been received to suggest that any detriment was caused from this event. Further, no information has been received to suggest that the dog has since escaped or otherwise interfered with common property.

[35] However, I wish to caution the applicant and his tenants, that should permission be granted for the dog, they must take all necessary steps to ensure that such incidents do not occur in the future.

Defecation

[36] One owner opposes the applicant's pet request raising a concern about defecation in the complex.

[37] An Adjudicator has no jurisdiction to make orders with respect to hypothetical or potential concerns. An Adjudicator can only make an order where there is actual (as opposed to hypothetical) evidence of a dispute. While I note this concern, no evidence has been presented to suggest that the applicant's dog has caused any defecation problems in the scheme. Accordingly, I am not satisfied the pet request should be denied on the basis of this concern.

[38] However, in order to alleviate this concern, I consider any permission (if granted) could be subject to a condition requiring any animal waste to be disposed of in such a way that it does not create noxious odours or otherwise contaminate the scheme.

Barking

[39] The committee and one lot owner dispute the applicant's pet application on the basis that the dog barks and howls when the tenants are not home. In support of these assertions, the committee provided our Office with two videos of the alleged barking. In these videos you can hear a dog barking and howling. However, it is not clear from the videos where the barking/howling is coming from or which dog (or dogs) is causing, or contributing to, the barking. Rather, all the videos show is the floor, screen door and outside area of a dwelling.

[140671]

The committee has also provided several emails from the owner of lot 28 detailing the dates of the alleged barking as follows:

a. Email dated 16 March 2014 stating that the dog is barking, howling and crying;
b. Email dated 14 March 2014 stating that the dog is barking and howling;
c. Email dated 23 March 2014 stating, "I've just had Karen from unit 26 at my door about the dog. She's just called the tenants to complain and they're adamant its not their dog barking even though they're [sic] not home to even hear it!".
d. Two emails dated 23 March 2014 stating that this is the third night in a row the tenants have left the dog at home alone and allowed it to continuously bark.

[41] In response, the applicant and his tenants state:

a. One of the tenants (the applicant's daughter) is on a disability pension and works only two days per week. The dog does not bark or howl while the tenants are home. The dog is always left with friends or family if the tenants are away overnight.
b. The tenants have crept outside and listened at the door when they have returned home (and the dog is unaware of their return). The tenants say they have heard no barking or howling on these occasions.
c. The tenants have had numerous friends and family visit the unit and although the dog gets excited it does not bark or howl.
d. Some months ago a dog became resident in the neighbouring complex which does bark quite a lot. However, the tenants' dog does not join in with the barking. The committee and opposing owners may be confused as to the source of the barking. This is particularly the case given that the rear boundary of lots 26, 27 (the applicant's lot) and 28 are common to the other complex.
e. The committee's videos do record a dog barking but do not identify the dog or the property in which the dog is located. As previously stated, there is a dog which is at the rear of lots 26, 27 and 28 which often barks/howls.
f. The only person who has provided a written complaint of the dog allegedly barking is the owner of lot 28. No other occupier or owner has complained in writing.
g. In relation to the email dated 23 March 2014 which alleges that the dog has been left on its own for 3 nights and allowed to bark, the tenants say that although they were out on the date of the email (Sunday 23 March 2014) they were home all night on the previous night (Saturday 22 March 2014). On Saturday 22 March 2014, the dog did not bark or howl as alleged.
h. After receiving a call from the owner of lot 26 on Sunday 23 March 2014 the tenants came straight home. When the tenants arrived home they heard no barking or howling from their dog.
i. The tenants have bought a barking collar and will place it on the dog.

[42] The applicant has also provided three videos to support his assertion that the tenants' dog is not the source of the barking. The first video is taken from inside the applicant's unit. In this video, you can hear a dog (or dogs) barking from an unknown location, however you can see that the source of the barking is not the tenants' dog as the tenants' dog is standing silently in the applicant's unit at the time. The second video is taken from outside the front of the applicant's unit. In this video, you can also hear a dog (or dogs) barking from an unknown location, however you can see that the source of the barking is not the tenants' dog as the tenants' dog is standing silently at the time. The third video is taken from inside the applicant's unit. In this video you can again hear a dog (or dogs) barking from an unknown location, however you can see that the source of the barking is not the tenants' dog as the tenants' dog is sleeping inside the unit at the time.

[43] On 26 June 2014, I sent these videos to the committee for comment. In their response (dated 28 June 2014) the committee notes that the dog is calm and quiet when the owners are home.

[44] Based on the evidence presented, I am satisfied there is a regular occurrence of barking in or around the scheme. However, whether or not this barking is coming from the applicant's tenants' dog (as opposed to another dog/s) is a very difficult question of fact.

[45] While the committee has provided video evidence in which you can hear a dog (or dogs) barking, it is not clear from the evidence presented where the barking/howling is coming from and/or which dog (or dogs) is causing, or contributing to, the barking. The applicant on the other hand, has provided video evidence in which you can hear a dog (or dogs) barking, but see that the source of the barking is not the tenants' dog as the tenants' dog is silent in the video frame at the time.

[46] Further, while the committee has provided emails from the owner of lot 28 detailing three occasions (namely 14 March 2014, 16 March 2014 and 23 March 2014) on which she alleges the dog was barking, these emails do not provide any specific details or other information to indicate that it was the applicant's dog (as opposed to another dog/s) that was barking. The applicants however, refer to one of the nights that the dog allegedly barked (namely Saturday 22 March 2014 per the email dated Sunday 23 March 2014) and say that they were home the whole night and their dog did not bark.

[47] On balance, while I note the committee's and opposing owners' emails and video evidence, I am not satisfied sufficient evidence has been provided to demonstrate that the barking in question is coming from this particular dog (as opposed to another dog in or around the scheme). Accordingly, I am not satisfied that the allegations of barking form a reasonable basis for the committee to reject the applicant's pet application.

[48] However, I wish to caution the applicant and his tenants, that should permission be granted for the dog, they must ensure that the dog does not bark in a manner that unreasonably interferes with others' use and enjoyment of their lot. If the dog does cause a disturbance in the future, that issue could be pursued through the nuisance provision of the Act in the same way as any noise.[12] Alternatively, it could be a basis for subsequently withdrawing permission for the dog.

Tenant's Circumstances

[49] In deciding whether to approve a pet, the committee must consider all of the circumstances of the request. The application includes a letter from Dr Wyld, dated 30 August 2013, stating that the presence of a companion dog would be beneficial for one of the tenant's (Anna Rogers) physical and mental health.

[50] In the preceding paragraphs, I have considered the committee's arguments as to why it denied the applicant's pet application. In the absence of sufficient evidence as to why this dog, with conditions, should not be allowed in the scheme, I do not consider it necessary to address the applicant's purported ‘special circumstances’ in this matter. Rather, such considerations are only necessary where the committee and/or opposing owners have presented objectively reasonable opposition to the particular animal.

Summary

[51] Based on the material presented, I am not satisfied the committee's decision to deny the applicant's pet request was reasonable in the circumstances. Accordingly, I consider the applicant and his tenants should be granted permission to keep the dog in lot 27 pursuant to by-law 9. However, in order to alleviate some owners' concerns, I consider it reasonable to make this permission subject to certain conditions.

[52] Firstly, I consider a condition should be imposed stipulating that the dog must be kept within the lot while it is present on the scheme.

[53] Secondly, I am stipulating that the dog must traverse common property only for the purpose of being brought onto or taken off scheme land, at which time the dog must be appropriately restrained. This would ensure the animal is never ‘loose’ or unrestrained on common property and therefore unable to come into direct contact with other owners.

[54] Thirdly, I have stipulated that the dog is not permitted to cause a nuisance or interfere unreasonably with any person's use or enjoyment of another lot or common property. This does not mean that the dog cannot make any sound or bark, but rather the dog must not create unreasonable levels of noise (or other impacts).

Fourthly, I consider it appropriate for the applicant and his tenants to take reasonable steps to minimise the transmission of airborne allergens. As the dog is not to have any direct contact with owners or common property, I would not anticipate it would trigger allergic reactions. Nevertheless, I am ordering that the applicant and his tenants take reasonable steps to minimise the transmission of airborne allergens from the dog to other lots, for example, by vacuuming the lot and grooming the dog. I do not envisage onerous obligations in this regard and normal levels of vacuuming the lot and grooming the dog should be adequate for this purpose.

[56] Fifthly, I consider there would be benefit for all occupiers in requiring that the dog be kept in good health and free from fleas and parasites. Although there is little risk of impact from an indoor pet on other owners in this regard, I consider this condition is a general requirement of responsible pet ownership and should not be onerous.

[57] Sixthly, I consider it appropriate to place some parameters around the disposal of the dog's waste. On this basis, I am ordering that any animal waste must be disposed of in such a way that it does not create noxious odours or otherwise contaminate the scheme.

[58] Seventhly, I am ordering that the committee may rescind permission for the dog to remain on the scheme if the specified conditions are not complied with. However, the committee must act reasonably in doing so, which would include giving the applicant and his tenants the opportunity to respond to any complaints.

[59] Finally, I am ordering that the approval granted only applies to this dog and does not authorise the keeping of any additional, replacement, or substitute animals on the lot.

Conclusion

[60] I have made an order allowing the dog to remain in the applicant's lot, subject to certain conditions aimed at ensuring the dog does not create a nuisance or interfere unreasonably with the use and enjoyment of lots and common property.

[61] I wish to stress that my decision to allow this dog is based on the specific facts of this case, and should in no way be taken as a general precedent allowing owners or occupiers to bring or keep an animal in their lot without the approval of the body corporate.

Decision delivered on 5 June 2014

Contribution schedule lot entitlements, basis for adjustment, powers of the tribunal to order an adjustment, no basis for application and no motion or material change, costs — Whether to award costs where the legislation is novel and untested — Legislation considered s 32 of the Queensland Civil and Administrative Tribunal Act 2009 (Qld) (QCAT Act).

The applicant owned a lot within the scheme and brought an application seeking that the tribunal adjust the contribution schedule lot entitlements for the scheme given the different sizes and positions of the units within the scheme. The respondent body corporate wanted the application to be dismissed for want of jurisdiction and merit.

In this case, there was no body corporate resolution to change the contribution entitlements — the applicant simply sought an order.

The member discussed each of the circumstances upon which the tribunal could adjust the contribution schedule lot entitlements.

Held:

1. As there was no evidence of a motion before the body corporate to change the contribution schedule lot entitlements, the passing of a motion to change the contribution schedule lot entitlements provided the basis for the application — without that motion there was no basis.

2. Was the scheme affected by a material change since the last time the entitlements were decided? The tribunal was not provided with any evidence to suggest a material change had taken place — in fact, there was no evidence to a change from the original CMS lodged to commence the scheme.

3. Was the scheme established after s 47B of the Act commenced? No, the scheme was established in 2005, well prior to the commencement of the section.

4. Had a formal acquisition taken place to affect the scheme? There was no evidence to suggest a formal acquisition had taken place and the CMS remained unchanged from the original lodged.

5. Were there grounds for the change to bring back the pre-adjustment order following a motion proposing adjustment? There was no evidence of a motion and so there were no grounds.

6. Had the body corporate committee made a decision about the adjustment? There was no evidence of a decision and so there were no grounds.

7. Had a subdivision taken place within the scheme? There was no evidence of a subdivision and therefore there were no grounds.

8. Had an amalgamation of lots taken place within the scheme? There was no evidence of an amalgamation and therefore there were no grounds.

9. Had a lot boundary changed? There was no evidence of a lot boundary change and therefore there were no grounds.

10. Did the tribunal have jurisdiction? As there was no evidence of any compliance with the above grounds, it was outside of the tribunal's limited jurisdiction. The application was premature.

11. The application was dismissed.

12. Costs: the tribunal elected not to award costs given that this aspect of the legislation was untested and relatively novel.

Member Hughes:

What is this Application about?

[1] Warren Douglas Pitt wants the Tribunal to adjust the contribution schedule lot entitlements for Aqueous on Port CTS 33821 to reflect the different sizes of the units and their position within the complex, consistent with the interest schedule.

[2] The Body Corporate for Aqueous on Port CTS 33821 wants the Tribunal to dismiss Mr Pitt's application. Aqueous claims that Mr Pitt's application is wanting, both in jurisdiction and merit.

What is the basis for the Application?

[3] As the Tribunal has noted in prior decisions, its power to order an adjustment is limited.[1]

[4] Mr Pitt owns Lot 26. He can apply under the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) for the Tribunal to adjust the contribution schedule lot entitlements in the below circumstances.

The Body Corporate passes a motion without dissent to change the entitlements[2]

[5] Aqueous states there has been no resolution to change contribution entitlements. Certainly, the Tribunal has no evidence of any resolution.

[6] It is the passing of the motion to change entitlements that provides the basis for an application. There is no evidence of any motion even being put to the body corporate and therefore no change to the entitlements.

[7] Accordingly, the absence of any motion and consequential change means that this does not provide a basis for Mr Pitt's application.

The scheme is affected by a material change since the last time entitlements were decided[3]

[8] A "material change" means a physical change such as the building of units or the partial demolition of the scheme.[4] Although this was previously considered in the context of section 384 of the Act, the reasoning applies pari passu to this ground because of the comparable wording.

[9] The Tribunal has no evidence of any material change. Indeed, the evidence is of no change to the community management statement since establishing the scheme.[5]

[10] Accordingly, this does not provide a basis for Mr Pitt's application.

The scheme is established after the commencement of section 47B(2) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 and there has been no prescribed change to contribution entitlements[6]

[11] Section 47B commenced on 14 April 2011. The scheme was established in 2005, well before then.

A change to contribution entitlements because of a formal acquisition affecting the scheme[7]

[13] The Tribunal has no evidence of any acquisition affecting the scheme. Again, the evidence is of no change to the community management statement since establishing the scheme.[8]

[14] Accordingly, this does not provide a basis for Mr Pitt's application.

To reflect pre-Adjustment Order entitlements following a motion proposing adjustment[9] ; a decision of the Body Corporate or committee about the adjustment[10] ; and a subdivision[11] , amalgamation[12] , lot boundary change[13] or material change[14] since the Adjustment Order

[15] The Tribunal has no evidence of any of these. Again, the evidence is of no change to the community management statement since establishing the scheme.[15]

Does the Tribunal have jurisdiction?

[16] Because Mr Pitt has failed to provide evidence of compliance with any of the above grounds, his application falls outside the Tribunal's limited jurisdiction. His application is at the very least premature.

[17] The Tribunal therefore does not have jurisdiction to determine Mr Pitt's application and it must therefore fail.

What are the appropriate Orders?

[18] The appropriate Orders are that the application is dismissed.

[19] Costs in the Tribunal are not awarded as a matter of course. Each party must bear their own costs[16] , unless the interests of justice require the Tribunal to order a party to pay the costs of another party.[17]

There is therefore a strong indicator against awarding costs:

> Under the QCAT Act the question that will usually arise in each case in which costs are sought is whether the circumstances relevant to the discretion inherent in the phrase 'the interests of justice' point so compellingly to a costs award that they overcome the strong contra-indication against costs orders in s.100.[18]

[21] Aqueous did not seek its costs and there is no compelling reason to depart from the strong indicator against costs. As the Tribunal has previously noted, this aspect of the legislation is relatively novel and untested.[19]

Decision delivered on 24 February 2014

Where the applicants had failed to substantiate their claim, putting the body corporate to the expense of retaining lawyers to represent them and responding on the basis of natural justice having been denied to the lot owners. The tribunal dismissed their application as it did not articulate a cause of action and it lacked substance. The body corporate argued that the applicant was frivolous and vexatious. The applicants argued QCAT was a low cost jurisdiction, that as a group they did not have the funds to retain lawyers — Costs — Whether the interests of justice provided costs should be awarded.

Held:

1. The tribunal has the jurisdiction to award costs.

2. Did the interests of justice point compellingly to a costs award? The applicants failed to properly present their case in such a way as to allow for the strengths of the claims to be assessed. The tribunal found that the material provided by the applicants was vague, lacked detail and was based solely on their own opinions. This unnecessarily disadvantaged the body corporate.

3. The tribunal found that the applicants failed to refer to any relevant provisions of the BCCM Act so no evidence to support the relief sought was provided.

The tribunal was satisfied that it was in the interests of justice for the applicants to pay at least part of the body corporate's costs.

5. Indemnity costs were not appropriate as the tribunal was not satisfied that the application was vexatious.

6. That the Applicants pay the body corporate $1,000.00 within 28 days of the date of the order.

Before: Member Quinlivan

Member Quinlivan:

What is this application about?

[1] The Body Corporate for 2nd Avenue CTS 5755 wants Mrs Helen Maree Forster and Mr Robin James Forster to pay its costs arising from it having to respond to the application brought by Mr and Mrs Forster. In their application Mr and Mrs Forster sought the following:

> 1. … a legal injunction… be put in place against the Body Corporate Committee for 2nd Avenue Apartments preventing them from proceeding with the reversion process motion of 9.5.13 on the grounds of NATURAL JUSTICE DENIED to 50 other unit owners.
> 2. … a determination from QCAT that in view of the procedural irregularities and denial of NATURAL JUSTICE apparent throughout the approval process, the Body Corporate committee for 2nd Ave Apartments be directed to have the Leary Report of 2009 reviewed and made compliant with the current legislation by the inclusion of the RELATIVITY PRINCIPLE (Market Value) in the revised report.

[2] The Tribunal dismissed Mr and Mrs Forster's application on 3 January 2014 basically because it did not articulate a cause of action and it lacked substance.

Does the Tribunal have jurisdiction to award costs?

[3] Mr and Mrs Forster are aggrieved by a decision of the Body Corporate to implement the recent amendments of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997(Qld). They sought relief from the Tribunal as outlined above. The Body Corporate had to respond to their claims and were required to incur costs, having been granted leave by the Tribunal to obtain legal representation.

[4] Section 100 of the Queensland Civil and Administrative Act 2009 (Qld) provides that each party to a proceeding must bear their own costs except as provided for in the Act. The considerations that the Tribunal must undertake when determining whether to award costs “in the interests of justice” are set out in section 102 of the Act.

[5] The issue of costs has been addressed by the Tribunal President in his decision in Ralacom Pty Ltd v Body Corporate for Paradise Island Apartments (No 2) [2010] QCAT 412 at paragraph 29 where he says:

> “Under the QCAT Act the question that will usually arise in each case in which costs are sought is whether the circumstances relevant to the discretion inherent in the phrase ‘the interests of justice’ point so compellingly to a costs award that they overcome the strong contra—indication against costs orders in s 100”.

What are the relevant considerations?

[6] The first issue to consider is whether any party has acted in a way that unnecessarily disadvantaged another party. The Body Corporate contend that Mr and Mrs Forster's application was frivolous and vexatious because it raised issues that were completely obscure and erroneous.

[7] Mr and Mrs Forster argue that QCAT offers a low cost Tribunal to the community and from their point of view it was an obvious platform to have their case heard. They say that the “appeal” was submitted in good faith as their only logical course of redress. They state that any assumption that their “appeal” was in any way vexatious, frivolous or an abuse of process is strongly denied.

[8] The Body Corporate next submits that the proceedings brought by the Mr and Mrs Forster were an abuse of process. They claim that the Mr and Mrs Forster attempted to invoke the Tribunal's powers for an illegitimate claim They argued that “the use of the Tribunal's processes is unjustifiably oppressive to the respondent and the use of the Tribunal's processes in such blatant disregard for truth and justice, make a mockery of the Tribunal and bring the administration of justice into disrepute”.

[9] Further the Body Corporate claims that Mr and Mrs Forster's actions have been burdensome, harsh and wrongful. They say that they had to meet the claim despite no cause of action existing. This has resulted in the respondent incurring costs. The Tribunal notes that the respondents were granted leave to be represented on 31 July 2013.

[10] Mr and Mrs Forster sought to assure the Tribunal that their “appeal” was genuine and “was submitted with the intent to secure a just and fair outcome for unit holders”. They say that the unsubstantiated and emotional statements contained in the Body Corporate's submissions are incorrect and inconsistent with the majority of unit holders.

[11] Mr and Mrs Forster continued to assert that the current legislation is flawed and subject to further review by the Attorney General. As a result they decided that there had been a denial of Natural Justice and they based their claim on that principle. The Tribunal noted that they continued to seek to revisit the decisions and actions of the Body Corporate in their submissions regarding the costs application.

[12] The Tribunal also noted that they attached two documents to their submissions, which appear to be an account from a firm of solicitors regarding a Lot entitlement Reversion Dispute in 2011-2012. Mr and Mrs Forster did not address the relevance of these documents in their submissions.

[13] Finally Mr and Mrs Forster claim that in the interests of justice they believed they had a case to be heard by an independent authority and that they had a responsibility to explore all avenues of redress. They said that they now accept that they must await any new legislation. They request the Tribunal to reject the claim by the Body Corporate for costs.

[14] The failure of Mr and Mrs Forster to properly present their case made it next to impossible to determine the actual nature and complexity of the dispute. Consequently the relative strengths of the claims could not be assessed.

[15] The failure to adequately articulate their claim ultimately resulted in its dismissal. In Kehl v. Board of Professional Engineers of Queensland [2010] QCATA 77 at paragraph 10, Deputy President Kingham pointed out:

> The factors listed in s 102 are a guide to the considerations the Tribunal may take into account in deciding whether this is an appropriate case in which to award costs. In any given case, the relative importance of each criterion will vary. Further, their significance may relate to what stage the proceedings have reached. For example, questions about the relative strengths of the parties' cases may assume less significance upon an initial hearing, yet loom large when it comes to the costs of an application for leave to appeal.

[16] In this instance the matter proceeded to a hearing on the papers. No attempt appears to have been made by the respondents to have the matter dismissed at an earlier stage. This is often an option when it is apparent that there is no substance to a claim.

[17] The Tribunal was conscious of the submission by the Body Corporate that the Mr and Mrs Forster have consistently alleged that up until the determination of this matter every decision maker has acted unfairly, with bias and without detachment. The Body Corporate asserts that this was not the case and that at all times they, in particular, have complied with their legal obligations under the legislation.

What is the outcome?

[18] The Body Corporate sought an order for costs. In order to ensure procedural fairness to Mr and Mrs Forster, both parties were allowed 28 days to make further submissions regarding costs. This matter was also heard on the papers

[19] In the substantive decision, the Tribunal found that the material provided by Mr and Mrs Forster was based solely on their own opinions about the issues that they claimed were in dispute. The Tribunal found that their material was vague, contained unsupported statements and lacked specific detail and context. The attachments to their application were largely irrelevant, dated, repetitious and self-serving.

[20] The Tribunal accepted that they had not made any reference to the relevant provisions of the BCCM Act. As a result Mr and Mrs Forster had not provided any evidence to convince the Tribunal to grant the relief that they sought.

Mr and Mrs Forster continued to argue that "… (a)s a group we do not have the funds to engage legal representation". There is no evidence to demonstrate that they represented a group. They refer to funds raised previously to fight a earlier action. They claim that the members of the Body Corporate have unlimited funds to meet their legal costs. They submit that if they had access to similar funds then they could provide " a more professional submission with reference to BCCM Act".

[22] In the circumstances the Tribunal is satisfied that it is in the interests of justice that Mr and Mrs Forster pay at least part of the Body Corporate's costs.

[23] Section 107 of the QCAT Act states that if the Tribunal makes a costs order under the Act then it must fix costs if possible. This is not a situation where indemnity costs would be appropriate. The conduct of Mr and Mrs Forster does not justify such an outcome. The Tribunal is not satisfied that the application was vexatious.

[24] However the Tribunal is satisfied that it was necessary for the respondents to incur a reasonable amount of costs to answer the application. This would have included obtaining initial advice, preparing a response and preparing submissions. Neither party has attempted to quantify the costs involved. The Tribunal has therefore have therefore determined that in order to finalise these matters it is appropriate to fix costs in the amount of $1,000.

Order

[25] Helen Maree Forster and Robin James Forster are to pay The Body Corporate for 2nd Avenue CTS 5755, $1,000 within 28 days of the date of this order.

O'KEEFE v BODY CORPORATE FOR BREAKWATER VILLAS II CTS 25808

(2014) LQCS ¶90-196; Court citation: [2014] QCAT 266

Decision delivered on 11 June 2014

Contribution schedule lot entitlements — Basis for adjustment — Powers of the tribunal to order an adjustment — Where there was a change to part of the scheme developed progressively — Whether the equity principle provides a test to be applied — Whether a report is necessary evidence — Where the focus of the report is on differing maintenance requirements of the scheme — Costs — Whether to award costs — Interests of justice — Legislation considered: Queensland Civil and Administrative Tribunal Act 2009 (Qld) (QCAT Act), s 32.

The applicants were owners of two lots within the scheme and brought an application seeking that the tribunal adjust the contribution schedule lot entitlements for the scheme, which comprised of 18 lots. The application was little more than a covering page and a quantity surveyor's report was commissioned by the applicants leaving the tribunal to deduce the basis for the application.

In this case, the applicants had moved a motion to adjust the contribution schedule lot entitlements and that motion was defeated. Had the motion been successful, the applicants could have applied to overturn it, however, that would not have been to their advantage. Accordingly, there was no body corporate resolution to change the contribution entitlements.

The member discussed each of the circumstances upon which the tribunal could adjust the contribution schedule lot entitlements.

Held: application dismissed.

1. Was the scheme affected by a material change since the last time the entitlements were decided? The tribunal was presented with the quantity surveyor's report which contained scant evidence to support there being a change in the plan format.

[140680]

Whilst the scheme was intended to be developed progressively, the definition of material change excluded the change arising from a progressively staged development.

2. Was the scheme established after s 47B of the Act commenced (14 April 2011)? No, the scheme was established in 2000, well prior to the commencement of the section.

3. Had a formal acquisition taken place to affect the scheme? There was no evidence to suggest a formal acquisition had taken place. There were no changes to any entitlements since the registration of the scheme.

4. Were there grounds for the change to bring back the pre-adjustment order following a motion proposing adjustment? There was no evidence of an earlier adjustment order therefore no grounds.

5. Had the body corporate committee made a decision about the adjustment? There was no evidence of a decision and so therefore no grounds.

6. Had a subdivision taken place within the scheme? There was no evidence of a subdivision and therefore no grounds.

7. Had an amalgamation of lots taken place within the scheme? There was no evidence of an amalgamation and therefore no grounds.

8. Had a lot boundary changed? There was no evidence of a lot boundary change and therefore no grounds.

9. What was the relevance of the report? The report referred to the "equity principle". The equity principle contained within the Act did not in and of itself provide a basis to apply to adjust contribution entitlements. It was not a requisite "trigger" for the application and was therefore not a proper basis upon which to bring or base the application. The report was very detailed but not of much assistance to the tribunal.

10. Does the tribunal have jurisdiction? As there was no evidence of any compliance with the prescribed grounds, it was outside of the tribunal's limited jurisdiction.

11. The application was dismissed.

12. Costs: the tribunal elected not to award costs given the body corporate did not seek its costs and there were no "interests of justice" grounds to suggest a departure from the provision that parties bear their own costs.

Before: Member Hughes

Member Hughes:

What is this Application about?

[1] Kevin John O'Keefe and Joanne Marie O'Keefe as the owners of Lot 5 and Janice Isabel Leonard Short as the owner of Lot 6 wants the Tribunal to adjust the contribution schedule lot entitlements for Breakwater Villas II CTS 25808 — an 18 lot residential complex.

[2] Breakwater opposes the proposed adjustment.[1]

What is the purported basis for the Application?

[3] The application itself does not refer to any basis. Instead, the application attaches a covering letter and many attachments from which the Tribunal was to deduce a basis for the application.

[4] These attachments include a Quantity Surveyor report commissioned by Mr and Mrs O'Keefe and Ms Short "to assess the justice and equity"[2] of the contribution schedule lot entitlements. The report avers that:

> • The scheme has two Standard Format Plan townhouses and 16 Building Format Plan units constructed as two separate double level buildings;[3]
> • The original development was intended to comprise four townhouses in a first stage and 11 townhouses in a second stage. The authors of the report claim to have been informed by an unidentified source that instead, the developer constructed only two townhouses in the second stage due to financial difficulties.[4] Another developer then completed 16 Building Format Plan lots and registered these in December 2000;[5] and
> • It is not possible to "establish authoritatively" the basis for setting the contribution entitlements, although it "appears likely" that the entitlements for Lots 5 and 6 were those that would have
> [140681]
> applied if the development had been completed in its original form.[6]

Is there a basis in law for the Application?

[5] As the Tribunal has noted in prior decisions, its power to order an adjustment to contribution entitlements is limited to prescribed circumstances.[7] I will address each.

The Body Corporate passes a motion without dissent to change the entitlements[8]

[6] On 4 November 2013, Mr and Mrs O'Keefe and Ms Short moved a motion at an Extraordinary General Meeting of the Body Corporate. That motion was to adjust the contribution lot entitlements as recommended by the Quantity Surveyor report.

[7] The motion was defeated by a vote of nine against and two in favour. Had the motion passed without dissent, a lot owner could have applied for an Order that the changed entitlements are not consistent with the relevant principle.[9] Clearly, this would not form the basis for the current application as it would have been contrary to the interests of Mr and Mrs O'Keefe and Ms Short to have applied for an Order to override their own motion.

[8] In any event, there is no evidence of any motion passed without dissent to change the entitlements.

[9] Accordingly, this does not provide a basis for the application.

The scheme is affected by a material change since the last time entitlements were decided[10]

[10] The report asserts:

> The change in the plan format used to register the lots… has significant implications for the justice and equity of the contribution entitlement schedule. The body corporate' maintenance responsibility for BFP lots is far more extensive than it is for SFP lots. This in turn creates a substantial difference between the BFP and SFP lot' (sic) cost impact on the body corporate budget. The contribution entitlements were not set in a manner that reflects this difference…[11]

[11] There is scant evidence to support there being a “change in the plan format”. Any change in the plan format appears to have arisen due to the development progressing in stages. If a scheme is intended to be developed progressively, a change arising from development is specifically excluded from being a ‘material change’[12] :

> It seems based on the limited evidence before the Tribunal that the development was intended to be developed progressively. The definition of material change expressly excludes a change arising from such a development, which would include the subdivisions and re—subdivisions sought to be relied upon.[13]

[12] The definition therefore excludes a change arising from a progressively staged development, including any change to the plan.

[13] Accordingly, there is no material change to provide a basis for the application.

The scheme is established after the commencement of section 47B(2) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 and there has been no prescribed change to contribution entitlements[14]

[14] Section 47B commenced on 14 April 2011. It appears that the scheme was established in 2000[15] , well before then.

[15] Accordingly, this does not provide a basis for the application.

A change to contribution entitlements because of a formal acquisition affecting the scheme[16]

[16] A formal acquisition means an acquisition made of a lot included in, or common property for, the scheme.[17]

[17] There is no evidence of this. Moreover, there is no change to any entitlements because the entitlements have remained the same since registration of the scheme.

[18] Accordingly, this does not provide a basis for the application.

To reflect pre—Adjustment Order entitlements following a motion proposing adjustment[18] ; a decision of the Body Corporate or committee about the adjustment[19] ; and a subdivision[20] , amalgamation[21] , lot boundary change[22] or material change[23] since the Adjustment Order

[19] The Tribunal has no evidence of any Adjustment Order.

[20] Consequently, there can be no pre—Adjustment Order entitlements.

[21] Accordingly, this does not provide a basis for the application.

[140682]

What is the relevance of the report and other material?

[22] The report commissioned by Mr and Mrs O’Keefe and Ms Short refers extensively to the ‘equity principle’:

> In our analysis of expense items we have used the equity method’ default position of ‘all costs shared equally’ unless compelling evidence is present to prove that for a specific cost item a more just and equitable allocation can be calculated and should be applied. This requires both proof that a significant variation in cost impact exists and that there is an appropriate method to establish its monetary value over a reasonable future time period.
> Having analysed each of the expense items, we will recommend the equity method’ default of ‘all contribution entitlements equal’ unless, in our opinion, the total cost allocated to each lot varies sufficiently for justice and equity to demand a non—equal entitlement schedule.[24]

[23] However, the equity principle enshrined in the Act[25] does not of itself provide a basis to apply to the Tribunal to adjust contribution entitlements:

> [Section] 46A is not in itself a ground of application, but a test to be applied if, and only if, one of the two grounds in s47B is established. (Similarly, if an adjustment of an interest schedule lot entitlement were sought, the test in s46B could only be applied if the ground in s48 were first shown to exist.) In other words, s47B must provide a "trigger" before s46A can come to the aid of the Applicants.[26]

[24] Thus, the equity principle does not provide the requisite "trigger" for the application and therefore cannot provide a proper basis for the application.

[25] The report also includes an "Administrative Budget Expense Inclusions"[27] , "Allocation Methodology for Administrative Fund Expense Items"[28] , "Allocation Methodology for Sinking Fund Expense Items"[29] , "Additional Apportionment Calculations"[30] and a "Cost Impact Assessment & Recommended Entitlement Schedule"[31] .

[26] Mr and Mrs O'Keefe and Ms Short also attached further material to their application including a "Sinking Fund Forecast Report" containing a "Sinking Fund Forecast Movement", "Itemised Expenditure By Year", "Proposed Annual Budgets", "Detailed Income and Expenditure Statements", "Balance Sheets" and "Topics 2, 3 and 4 from the Office of the Commissioner for Body Corporate and Community Management' online training course notes"[32] .

[27] The Tribunal has previously admonished parties and those who prepare reports about unnecessarily incurring expenditure in these types of applications:

> Unfortunately, the process of detailed analysis of the expenses and budget of the body corporate, that has been undertaken by each of the experts, is not ultimately of much assistance to the Tribunal.
>
> This process seems to be common to many applications of this nature, particularly those involving high rise community title schemes. It seems to me that it is also likely to be of little assistance to the Tribunal in many other cases. That should be of concern to parties and the Tribunal, as it simply adds to the expense and delay of proceedings, contrary to the philosophy of the Queensland Civil and Administrative Tribunal Act 2009.
> The BCCM Act prescribes that the starting point for contributions is that they be equal between all lots. Having regard to that starting point, there seems little point in expending considerable sums of money, quite possibly once every several years, to try to make minimal adjustments to annual contribution levies. Indeed, this exercise disregards the proper construction of the BCCM Act, which requires equality except to the extent that any lots give rise disproportionately to expenses or disproportionately consume the body corporate' services. A minute analysis of expenses and the use of services to which they relate ignores the requirement of disproportionate expense or consumption.[33]

[28]

And further:

> I urge parties who are in a position to influence the conduct of such matters – body corporate managers and those engaged in writing such reports – to exercise judgment and restraint. It seems to me that the continuation of the practice of obtaining separate, minutely detailed reports may, in future applications, give rise to a successful application for costs.[34]

[29] Even if the Application had a proper basis, the focus of any adjustment was the differing maintenance requirements for standard format plan townhouses and building format plan units. This is adumbrated as:

> All maintenance of the townhouse lots is the private responsibility of the townhouse lot owners. By contrast, the body corporate is responsible for maintaining the exterior of the BFP unit buildings, the common areas such as the stairs within the BFP unit buildings and certain sections of utility service infrastructure within the unit buildings.[35]

[30] This does not warrant the volume and minutiae of the Applicant' report and other material.

Does the Tribunal have jurisdiction?

[31] Because the Application fails to establish any of the prescribed grounds, the application falls outside the Tribunal' limited jurisdiction.

[32] The Tribunal therefore does not have jurisdiction to determine the application and it must therefore fail.

What are the appropriate Orders?

[33] Because there is no basis in law for the Application, it is appropriate to dismiss the Application.

[34] Costs in the Tribunal are not awarded as a matter of course. Each party must bear their own costs[36] , unless the interests of justice require the Tribunal to order a party to pay the costs of another party.[37]

[35] There is therefore a strong indicator against awarding costs:

> Under the QCAT Act the question that will usually arise in each case in which costs are sought is whether the circumstances relevant to the discretion inherent in the phrase 'the interests of justice' point so compellingly to a costs award that they overcome the strong contra—indication against costs orders in s.100.[38]

[36] Despite the dismissal of the Application and much unnecessary supporting material, Breakwater did not seek its costs and from its submissions, it appears they would have been minimal.

[37] Therefore, the interests of justice do not dictate a departure from the indicator against awarding costs.

[38] The appropriate Orders are therefore:

1. The Application is dismissed; and
2. Each party bears its own costs of the Application.

Footnotes

1 Submissions dated 8 April 2014. The applicants claimed not to accept these as an objection as they were submitted three weeks after the date required by Directions dated 27 February 2014 and not copied to the Applicants. However, it is clear from the Applicants' response to those submissions that they have had an opportunity to consider the submissions and were able to file their own submissions later. The Applicants have therefore failed to demonstrate any prejudice from the short delay. It is also clear that the submissions do not accept the proposed adjustment.

Decision delivered on 24 September 2014

By-law — Whether an owner must obtain body corporate approval to keep an animal on a lot — Whether the owner has sought body corporate approval — Whether it is just and equitable in the circumstances to make an order to impose conditions on keeping an animal on a lot — Where the respondents kept a dog in their lot and sought approval to under by-law 14 — The applicant body corporate committee did not approve the keeping of the dog and sought an order that the respondents obtained proper approval and accept the committee's conditions for keeping the dog within their lot — Where the conciliation was unsuccessful and the matter proceeded to adjudication — The respondents did not go back and seek further approval and their responses during the conciliation tended to suggest that they did not intend to seek any further approval — Given that lack of approval, the body corporate had an obligation to enforce its by-laws — Act, s 94, 182, 276.

Held:

1. The respondents were required to obtain body corporate approval to keep their pet in the lot.

2. If the respondents make a decision to keep the dog then the body corporate can assess that application and arrive at conditions under which the pet can be kept.

3. In all other requests the outcomes sought were dismissed.

Parties:

The body corporate for The Shore CTS 14539 (applicant).

Daniel Suter (respondent).

All owners (affected persons).

Before: P Dowling, Adjudicator

P Dowling, Adjudicator:

ORDERS MADE:

1. I hereby order that Sonya McDermott and Daniel Suter, the owners of Lot 7 must in writing and within 14 days of the date of this order inform the body corporate whether they intend to keep the Chihuahua cross dog on Lot 7 and if they do intend to keep the dog they must seek body corporate consent under By-law 14.
2. I further order that in all other respects the outcomes sought are dismissed.

P Dowling, Adjudicator:

Introduction

[1] The respondent is a co-owner of Lot 7. In April last year, the owners of Lot 7 sought committee approval to keep a dog on the lot. Body corporate approval is required because of scheme By-law 14. The committee did not approve the request. Subsequently, the owners of Lot 7 obtained a Chihuahua cross dog and continue the keep this dog on the lot.

[2] The body corporate seeks orders that the respondent obtains proper approval in accordance with By-law 14.1 and 14.2, and accepts and signs the "Conditions for Approval for the Keeping of a Dog in Lot 7".

[3] The commissioner has invited the respondent and the other lot owners to make submissions about the matters raised (s 243, Act). Submissions were made by the owners of Lot 7 and the owners of twelve lots. After the committee replied to submissions, the commissioner referred the application to departmental adjudication (s 248, Act).

[4] I am satisfied this is a dispute that falls within the dispute resolution provisions of the legislation (ss 227 to 229 and 276, Act). I note that the body corporate has sought an order against only one co-owner of Lot 7. Both owners made submissions to the commissioner. There is nothing to suggest the outcomes sought relate particularly to the respondent and not to both co-owners. I have determined the application on the basis that it relates to the owners of Lot 7.

Analysis

By-law 14

[5] By-law 14 included in the scheme's community management statement[1] regulates keeping animals. The by-law provides:

> 14.1 Subject to section 143 of the Act, an occupier must not, except with the consent in writing of the body corporate committee:
> (a) bring or keep an animal or bird on the lot or the common property; or > (b) permit an invitee to bring or keep an animal or bird on the lot or the common property.
>
> 14.2 Any consent of the body corporate committee may be:
>
> (a) given on conditions; and
> (b) withdrawn at any time.

[6] No question has been raised about the validity of the by-law. It is a by-law that provides for the regulation of , including conditions applying to, the use and enjoyment of lots included in the scheme and common property (s 169(1)(b)(i) and (ii), Act)[2] . There is nothing to suggest the by-law breaches section 180 of the Act which prescribes limitations for by-laws. The by-law is binding on the owners of Lot 7 as they occupy the lot (s 59(2), Act).

Do the owners of Lot 7 have to obtain approval under By-law 14?

[7] This means the owners of Lot 7 must have body corporate committee approval before they can bring or keep an animal on the lot or common property.

[8] It is undisputed that the owners sought body corporate approval on 15 April 2013 to keep a "Pug, Chihuahua or a Cross of one of these breeds with a small dog breed" and that on 19 April 2013 the committee did not approve the request. The respondent then made a conciliation application under the Act seeking approval to keep a dog[3] . An agreement was reached as a consequence of a conciliation process.

[9] While the terms of the agreement are relied on in submissions, these terms are irrelevant to the determination of this application. It is relevant that the owners of Lot 7 admit they have kept the Chihuahua cross dog on the lot since on or about 27 November 2013; the owners have not sought body corporate approval to keep this dog on Lot 7; and the body corporate has not approved the keeping of the dog on the lot.

[10] The owners of Lot 7 submit they complied with By-law 14 when they sought approval to keep a dog and they have acted in good faith. They say as the committee do not want animals in the building and would not negotiate the conditions for keeping a dog, they believed they were legally entitled to have a dog and as the process had taken over seven months and the committee had ceased acting in good faith they obtained the dog.

[11] The fact the owners of Lot 7 sought approval on one occasion to keep a dog is not enough to comply with By-law 14. Circumstances have changed since April 2013. For example, the April 2013 request sought general approval when the owners were not keeping a dog on the lot. The owners are now keeping a dog on the lot. In addition, in April 2013 the owners sought body corporate approval on conditions that are different to those which, given submissions, the owners would now agree to.

[12] By-law 14 requires body corporate committee approval before a dog is brought or kept on a lot or common property. The owners of Lot 7 have not sought and do not have body corporate approval. None of the circumstances outlined above at paragraph 10 excuses the owners from seeking approval. The body corporate is obliged to enforce By-law 14 (s 94(1)(b), Act). Now that the owners of Lot 7 are keeping a dog on the lot without consent, the body corporate could enforce By-law 14 by giving the owners a contravention notice (s 182, Act). If the notice is not complied with, the body corporate could seek a dispute resolution outcome that the dog ceases being kept on the lot or commence proceedings in the Magistrates Court.

[13] In deciding to make this application, the committee has not chosen this path. There is nothing to prevent the body corporate from seeking outcome 1 in this application. This is because submissions suggest the owners of Lot 7 want to continue keeping the Chihuahua cross dog on Lot 7 and they do not intend to seek body corporate approval under By-law 14. In these circumstances, I consider it is reasonable that the committee seek an order that the owners of Lot 7 obtain body corporate committee approval under By-law 14.1. I have made an order to this effect (ss 276(1) and 284(1), Act).

[14] Therefore, if the owners of Lot 7 want to continue keeping a dog on Lot 7 they have 14 days to make a request to the body corporate. If the owners do not make the request and continue keeping the dog, the body corporate may decide to commence proceedings to enforce the order (ss 286 to 288, Act). The body corporate may, alternatively or in conjunction, decide to commence by-law enforcement proceedings (ss 182, 183 and 184 to 188, Act)

The body corporate's consideration of a request?

[15] If they make a request, it will be a matter for the owners of Lot 7 when submitting the request to propose conditions of approval for keeping the dog. It will then be a matter for the body corporate to decide whether consent would be given and whether that consent would only be given on specific conditions (limited to those proposed by the owners or other conditions).

[16] In outcome 2, the body corporate seeks an order to impose the ten "Conditions for Approval for the Keeping of a Dog" attached to the 7 January 2014 body corporate letter to the owners of Lot 7. The owners of Lot 7 do not agree with four of the ten conditions.

[17] A dispute may arise with respect to conditions for approving the keeping of an animal on a lot where for example, the body corporate has made a decision to refuse approval unless certain conditions are imposed and the relevant occupier considers the imposition of one or more of those conditions are unreasonable. A dispute of this nature can arise because the body corporate has an obligation to act reasonably when making a decision (ss 94(2) and 100(5), Act).

[18] The committee has to "consider each case upon its facts and, in making a decision whether or not to approve the keeping of a particular animal in a particular lot, the committee would have to act reasonably"[4] . In decisions such as Tahlia Court [2012] QBCCMCmr 209, Tarcoola [2012] QBCCMCmr 235 and Spinnaker Blue [2012] QBCCMCmr 255, adjudicators indicated it was reasonable to impose conditions to a specific request to avoid genuine problems arising. The adjudicators cautioned that it was not reasonable to refuse permission based on hypothetical concerns or potential problems without any evidence that the animal in question would actually cause those problems or the occupier would not comply with reasonable conditions.

[19] As discussed above with respect to outcome 1, the owners of Lot 7 have yet to make a request to the body corporate to keep the Chihuahua cross dog on the lot. Therefore, this application cannot be about a request made to the body corporate by the owners of Lot 7 to keep the Chihuahua cross dog on the lot. Nor can it be about a hypothetical body corporate decision made on a hypothetical request. Even though the committee has a point of view on what its response would be to a request from the owners of Lot 7 and even though the committee and the owners of Lot 7 have discussed the conditions in submissions, a dispute can only arise if the body corporate has been asked to give approval under By-law 14 and that request has been denied[5] . In my view, there is not yet a dispute to be determined about the conditions. For this reason, I have dismissed the outcome sought.

[20] If the owners of Lot 7 make a request to keep the Chihuahua cross dog on the lot and if the body corporate, after considering that request, refuses permission the owners have the choice of removing the dog or disputing the body corporate decision. I have outlined the options available to the body corporate if the owners do nothing.

[21] As I have dismissed the outcome, I do not intend to comment on the "Conditions for Approval for the Keeping of a Dog". However, with respect to general issues raised in submissions, it should be noted:

> 1. When it has a discretionary by-law of the nature of By-law 14, it would not be reasonable for the body corporate to oppose a request to keep an animal on a lot because of a "no pets or dog policy" or because of a concern about precedent or because of a concern about how another dog may have been kept on another lot.
> 2. Submissions do not establish that an owner cannot occupy a lot in this scheme or that an owner's right to use and enjoy the lot by for example keeping an animal is affected because of: how the building was constructed; the size of lots; or a motel type accommodation arrangement for some lots. It has not proven these factors distinguish the scheme from the multitude of other schemes in Queensland that contain lots that are available for short-term occupation. Nor is it established these factors justify opposition to keeping any type of animal on a lot.
> 3. There has not been any authoritative analysis submitted establishing that keeping a dog on this scheme poses a letting, marketing or valuation risk. In the absence of substantiation, it is merely speculative to claim there would for example be rental issues if a dog is kept on a lot.
> 4. It is reasonable to consider the interests of all owners and occupiers in the scheme and the use of the common property (s 94(1)(a), Act). Therefore, it may be reasonable to consider the age of residents, the use and size of the main entrance to the building or the use of building lifts when considering a > request to keep a particular animal. However, a condition cannot be imposed to prevent the exercise of body corporate approval. The compulsory aspect of a condition should have regard to the individual circumstances of the request and should relate to it being rationally established that the animal would cause a difficulty to another owner or occupier in the circumstances of this scheme in the absence of the condition. In other words, the condition should not be arbitrary.

> 5. Approving the keeping of an animal under By-law 14 does not affect the body corporate's or an individual's right to take an action if it is believed the animal causes nuisance. Neither does it limit the body corporate's power to withdraw approval if a condition is not complied with. Section 167 of the Act prohibits an occupier from using or permitting the use of a lot in a way that causes a nuisance or interferes unreasonably with the use or enjoyment of another lot or common property. An owner or occupier of a lot in the scheme can take action under the Act by making a complaint to the body corporate and if the body corporate reasonably believes (including if it rescinds approval) there has been a contravention of a by-law, the body corporate may give the relevant owner or occupier a by-law contravention notice seeking rectification of the complaint. Further, section 167 of the Act may be applied under the dispute resolution provisions of the Act. If there is adequate evidence of nuisance, an order can be made by an adjudicator requiring a person to remove a dog[6]. In addition, a person may be able to ask the local authority to investigate a nuisance complaint.

High Court of Australia

Decision delivered on 8 October 2014

Contracts — Torts — Negligence — Duty of care — Pure economic loss — Strata-titled serviced apartments — Commercial property — Latent defects in the building — Contracts between builder, developer and purchasers of the apartment units — Detailed terms dealing with and limiting defects liability — Owners corporation sued builder — Builder did not owe a duty of care to the owners corporation for latent defects — Detailed contracts meant builder did not owe duty of care.

This was an appeal from the court in NSW and although a NSW case, it has implications for bodies corporate in Queensland. When it comes to building defect cases brought by a body corporate against a builder, recourse will have to be had to the building contract between the parties. Aside from that, the contractual sophistication between the parties will be taken into account, including whether the contract was at arms' length or whether the parties were on equal footing. Importantly in this case there was no damage alleged to a person or property.

The key issue was whether a builder owed the owners corporation of strata-titled serviced apartments a duty of care to avoid causing the owners corporation to suffer reasonably foreseeable pure economic loss resulting from having to repair latent defects in the building. This duty was alleged by the owners corporation.

Facts

The apartments were built under a design and construct contract between the appellant, Brookfield Multiplex Ltd (the builder), and the respondent, Chelsea Apartments Pty Ltd (the developer), who was the owner of the land. The developer had agreed with the Stockland Trust Group that certain apartments in the building would be leased and used as serviced apartments. Individual apartments would be sold by the developer to investors, subject to the leases. In other words, the purchasers of the apartments were investors in the serviced apartment hotel business. The design and construct contract annexed a standard form contract of sale of the apartments to investors.

After the apartments were completed, a strata plan for the serviced apartments was registered, which had the effect of creating the first respondent (the owners corporation) and making it the legal owner of the common property. The owners corporation had no contractual relationship with the builder or the developer. The owners corporation held the common property as agent for the developer, and later the owners of the individual apartments. The owners corporation was controlled by the developer and the Stockland subsidiary that held the leases.

The design and construct contract between the builder and developer included the following terms:

- detailed terms relating to the quality of the builder's work, requiring due skill, care and diligence, fitness for the stated purpose, compliance with all contractual and legislative requirements, suitable new materials and proper and tradesmanlike workmanship
- a Defects Liability Period, meaning that the builder would be liable to rectify construction defects for 52 weeks commencing upon practical completion
- testing of any material or work by the Superintendent at any time before the end of the Defects Liability Period, and a power for the Superintendent to direct the builder to fix defects
- a Final Certificate, issued by the Superintendent at the end of the Defects Liability Period, evidencing that the works had been completed in accordance with the contract, with an exception protecting the developer in relation to the cost of repairing latent defects in the building after the Defects Liability Period had ended: [85]
- a requirement that the builder maintain professional indemnity insurance with a run-off period of four years after the Final Certificate was issued.

The builder and developer were experienced and sophisticated companies negotiating on an equal footing, at arms' length.

The standard form contract for sale by the developer to purchasers of the apartments included the following terms:

- a requirement for the developer to ensure the property and common property were finished as specified, in a proper and workmanlike manner
- a requirement for the developer to pay for repairs of any defects in the property due to faulty materials or workmanship notified by the purchaser within six months after completion (cl 32.6)
- a requirement for the developer to pay for repairs of any defects in the common property due to faulty materials or workmanship notified by the owners corporation within seven months after the registration of the strata plan (cl 32.7).

[140690]

Primary judge and Court of Appeal

The owners corporation commenced proceedings against the builder to recover the cost of rectifying defects in the construction of the common property of the serviced apartments.

The primary judge (McDougall J) held that the builder did not owe the owners corporation a duty of care to avoid an economic loss to the owners corporation in having to repair latent defects.

In contrast, the NSW Court of Appeal held that the builder owed a duty of care to the owners corporation to avoid causing it to suffer loss resulting from latent defects in the common property that were structural, constituted a danger to persons or property in, or in the vicinity of, the serviced apartments or made the apartments uninhabitable. The Court of Appeal held the builder owed the developer a tortious duty of care, concurrently with its contractual duties. The developer was "vulnerable" to the builder in the sense that it was reliant on the builder's expertise, care and honesty in performing its obligations under the design and construct contract. The Court of Appeal ultimately held that the builder owed an equivalent duty to the owners corporation, as the developer's successor in title and that the owners corporation was at least as vulnerable to the risk of economic loss from latent defects as the developer.

Parties' submissions

The builder appealed to the High Court, submitting that its obligations to the developer regarding the quality of the work were comprehensively set out in the design and construct contract, leaving no room for a concurrent tortious duty of care. The builder also argued that the contracts of sale protected the purchasers of the apartments, and the owners corporation as their agent, from the risk of economic loss due to construction defects, meaning that they were not "vulnerable" to the builder.

There were two key cases that formed the background to this case. The first was the High Court case of Bryan v Maloney (1995) 182 CLR 609; [1995] HCA 17, where it was held that the builder of a dwelling house owed a duty of care to a subsequent purchaser of the house, which could be breached by careless construction leading to latent defects, supporting an action in negligence for economic loss.

The other key case was Woolcock Street Investments Pty Ltd v CDG Pty Ltd (2004) 216 CLR 515; [2004] HCA 16, where the High Court held that an engineering company, which had designed inadequate foundations for a warehouse and office complex resulting in structural damage, did not owe a duty of care in relation to economic loss suffered by a subsequent purchaser.

Held: appeal allowed; cross-appeal dismissed (unanimously).

Per Crennan, Bell and Keane JJ

1. Contract law has primacy when protecting against unintended harm to economic interests consisting of disappointed expectations under a contract. The common law is not designed to alter the allocation of economic risks between contractual parties by supplementing or supplanting contractual terms with duties in tort. [133]

2. The builder's liability to the developer was governed by a complex contractual matrix that detailed terms relating to the risk of latent defects in the builder's work. To supplement these terms with an obligation to take reasonable care to avoid a reasonably foreseeable economic loss to the developer in having to repair latent defects caused by the builder's defective work would alter the allocation of risks set by the parties' contract. [145]

3. Bryan v Maloney should be distinguished. However, a distinction based on whether the building is a dwelling house or a commercial investment was an unstable distinction, because liability would change depending on the intended use of the building. The material distinctions were:

> (a) the detailed terms of the design and construct contract between the builder and the developer, in contrast to the simple obligation in Bryan v Maloney between the builder and the original owner to exercise reasonable skill and diligence in constructing the dwelling, and
> (b) the developer's express promises (cl 32.6 and 32.7) in its sale contracts with the purchasers of the apartment units which protected the purchasers and the owners corporation from economic loss due to defects, in contrast to Bryan v Maloney, where there was no promise as to quality given to Mrs Maloney when she acquired the dwelling.

In this case, there was no substantial equivalence between the obligations of the builder to the developer and the alleged duty, unlike Bryan v Maloney. Such a conclusion would impose a more onerous obligation on a builder in favour of a subsequent purchaser than was owed by the builder to the person for whom it agreed to complete the building work and was paid. [136], [137], [138], [140]

4. The developer was expressly obliged to repair defects brought to its attention within a specified period (cl 32.7). The purchasers had a contractual right against the developer which could have protected them against the risk of which the owners corporation now complained, if those rights had been pursued in accordance with their terms. The existence of cl 32.7 showed that the purchasers were aware of the risk, and the term was a means of dealing with the risk. It was true that the developer's promises did not protect the purchasers of apartments or the owners corporation if the developer was not financially able to meet the claim or if the defects were not discovered in time to make a claim. However, this merely emphasised the point that the individual purchasers' contractual rights were expressly limited in their scope and duration, in a way that was inconsistent with the open-ended liability alleged by the owners corporation. The builder had nothing to do with the purchaser's decisions to accept the developer's promise, and to not investigate for defects. If a purchaser was not satisfied that its investment was adequately protected, it could have avoided the risk of loss by investing elsewhere. [141], [156]–[157]

5. There was no evidence that the purchasers were deprived by the builder's conduct of the option of bargaining with the developer for a more extensive promise as to quality, or of investing elsewhere. There was no encouragement given by the builder or suggestion that the builder assumed responsibility to them for their decision. [149]

6. The Court of Appeal held that the developer was vulnerable to the builder. But the terms in the design and construct contract provided for supervision and assessment of the builder's performance by the Superintendent, which was linked to the builder's payment, and this placed the risk of deficient work squarely on the builder. [142]–[143]

7. The fact that the owners corporation did not exist when the defective work was carried out pointed against, rather than for, the alleged duty of care because it could not have relied on the builder in any way. There was no evidence that the builder assumed responsibility for the owners corporation, or that there was known reliance on the builder by the owners corporation, in relation to the quality of the common property. [151] (However, see [47] per Hayne and Kiefel JJ, which assumed that nothing turned on the fact that the owners corporation did not exist.)

8. The expansive view of the builder's duties to the owners corporation which was taken by the Court of Appeal was not supported by Bryan v Maloney, and it did not accord with Woolcock. Bryan v Maloney does not mean that a builder who breaches its contractual obligations to the first owner of a building should be held responsible for the consequences of what is really a bad bargain made by subsequent purchasers of the building. It would reduce the common law to incoherence if the court imposed on a builder a greater liability to a disappointed purchaser than to the builder's original customer. It would be inconsistent with Woolcock for the court to hold that a subsequent purchaser of a building is vulnerable to a builder so far as the risk of making an unfavourable bargain is concerned. [70]

9. It was critically important that the owners corporation's loss was economic loss, ie the expense it was required to incur due to the emergence of latent defects. The loss was not the damage to its property, nor physical injury. There is a crucial distinction between physical injury and economic loss. The builder may have been liable for physical injuries to third parties due to defective work under its contract with the developer. However, physical injury is protected by the law even when, in similar circumstances, economic loss is not. The owners corporation's claim was based on the failure of the purchasers of the apartments to get value for money from the developer, instead of the builder causing damage to the owners corporation's property. [68], [124]–[125] (See [48] per Hayne and Kiefel JJ at Held #25.)

10. One difficulty with the owners corporation's claim was that it paid nothing for the common property. Therefore, it suffered no "loss" by acquiring the common property, assuming that the common property was worth more than the cost of repairing latent defects (and there was no suggestion that it was worth less). Saying that the common property, for which it paid nothing, was less valuable to it by the cost needed to repair it did not show that any of the builder's acts or omissions caused the owners corporation's assets to be diminished. Therefore, if the owners corporation was considered independently of the individual apartment owners, it had not suffered any loss due to the quality of the common property vested in it. [68], [151]

11. The statutory description in s 20 of the Strata Schemes Management Act of an owners corporation being an agent of lot owners confirms that the detriment to the economic and financial interests of the owners corporation is, in substance, suffered by the owners of lots. There is nothing in the Strata Schemes Freehold Development Act that suggests that the cost incurred by the owners corporation in complying with its obligation to repair and maintain the common property is not a loss truly incurred on individual lot owners. The lot owners are levied in accordance with their unit entitlements under s 75 and 76 of the Strata Schemes Management Act to meet that obligation. [152]

12. If the owners corporation was viewed as the alter ego of the purchasers of the apartment (which might be the better view), its position was no stronger, for the reasons given above (at Held #4; [156]–[157]). [152] (See [46] where Hayne and Kiefel JJ agreed with this "better view".)

13. Statutory warranties under the Home Building Act 1989 (NSW) protected consumers who acquired buildings as dwellings. This Act did not cover claims by purchasers of serviced apartments. This did not mean that the Act implicitly denied the alleged duty of care. However, the legislature made a policy choice to favour consumers over investors. [134], [135]

14. There were cases supporting concurrent duties in contract and tort. However, in those cases, the content of the duty was the same in contract and tort. That was not true in this case. [144]

15. Unintentionally inflicted economic loss became compensable in negligence only after Hedley Byrne & Co Ltd v Heller & Partners Ltd [1964] AC 465. Even then, liability depended on proof of assumption of responsibility and reliance. [122]

16. The fact that economic loss was a foreseeable consequence of a lack of reasonable care by the builder was not, by itself, sufficient to make the loss compensable in negligence, even where acceptance of the claim would not create indeterminate liability. [69]

17. Cases for recovery of economic loss were exceptions to a general rule that damages for economic loss which is not consequential upon damage to person or property are not recoverable in negligence even if the loss is foreseeable: Woolcock per Gleeson CJ, Gummow, Hayne and Heydon JJ. [128]

18. In Canada, a builder owes a duty of care in tort to a subsequent purchaser of the building in relation to substantially dangerous defects. This approach is difficult in practice because the existence of the duty will not be known until after the defects occur and can be confidently categorised as dangerous. More importantly, the Canadian approach assumes that the cost of repair or diminution in the building's market value is a reflex of the liability for physical damage which may occur if the defect is not repaired. This incorrectly detaches the duty not to inflict harm from the harm which is the gist of the cause of action. [158], [162] (See also [54] per Hayne and Kiefel JJ at Held #26.)

Per Hayne and Kiefel JJ

19. The outcome of this appeal had to be decided according to the question of vulnerability. Vulnerability meant a plaintiff's inability to protect itself from the defendant's want of reasonable care, either entirely or at least in a way that would cast the consequences of loss on the defendant. [52] There may be a lively debate about whether the owners corporation itself suffered any loss as a result of defects in the common property and the better view may be that and such loss was suffered by the lot owners for whom the owners corporation held the common property as "agent". [45]

20. The fact that the parties made contracts for the construction of the building and for the sale of parts of the building which included express terms regulating the quality of the promised work was enough to demonstrate the parties' ability to protect against, and denied their vulnerability to, any lack of care by the builder in performing its contractual obligations. [56], [59]

21. Both the developer and the original purchasers made contracts which gave rights to have remedied defects in the common property vested in the owners corporation. There was no suggestion that the parties could not protect their own interests. The builder did not owe the owners corporation a duty of care. [59]

22. This conclusion did not depend on any a priori assumption about the proper provinces of contract and tort law. There are previous cases that make it difficult to argue that negligence claims for pure economic loss should be excluded merely because they might outflank or undermine contract law. [60] (French CJ agreeing at [36], see [176] per Gageler J at Held #40.)

23. The conclusion about absence of vulnerability did not depend on detailed analysis of the particular contracts in this case. [61]

24. It was unnecessary to decide whether disconformity between the duties owed to the original owner and the alleged duty to the subsequent owner would necessarily deny the existence of that duty. The absence of disconformity was an essential step in Bryan v Maloney. That step was not available in this case. [61] (However, see [28] per French CJ, at Held #33.)

25. It could be assumed, without deciding, that the developer and the purchaser of an apartment relied on the builder to do its work properly. The purchaser of an apartment and the owners corporation could not check the quality of the builder's work as it was being done. Depending on the meaning of the superintendence terms of the contract, the developer might not have been able to check either. Therefore, it could be said that these parties relied on the builder to do its work properly. This reliance might be necessary to demonstrate vulnerability, but it was not sufficient. [57]–[58]

26. The nature of the damage suffered was important. The defects were not alleged to have caused any damage to person or property. If the owners corporation suffered damage, it was pure economic loss. [48] (See [68], [124]–[125] per Crennan, Bell and Keane JJ at Held #9.)

It was not useful to examine decisions of other jurisdictions about builders' tortious liability for economic loss occasioned by negligent building construction without recognising that the decisions necessarily reflect the particular ways that those jurisdictions have developed and applied principles about recovery for negligently caused pure economic loss. [54] (See [158], [162] per Crennan, Bell and Keane JJ at Held #17.)

Per French CJ

28. The nature and content of the contractual arrangements, including detailed provisions for dealing with and limiting defects liability, the sophistication of the parties and the relationship of the developer to the owners corporation were all factors contributing to the finding that there was no duty of care owed to either the developer or the owners corporation. [3]

29. The owners corporation held the common property as an agent for the proprietor or proprietors of the lots. The interest of lot owners has been characterised as an equitable interest as a tenant in common with other lot owners and accordingly, the owners corporation has been described as holding the common property as trustee for all the lot owners in accordance with their unit entitlements. [10]

30. The builder did not owe a duty of care to the owners corporation independently of the existence of a duty of care owed to the developer. The builder did not owe a duty of care to the developer (and therefore it could not be argued that it owed a similar duty of care to the owners corporation). [8], [36]

31. The owners corporation's statutory relationship (under strata legislation) to the developer and subsequent purchasers of the apartments was a factor which, taken with the contractual arrangements, counted against a finding of vulnerability which would have supported the existence of a duty of care. [12], [8], cf [23], [34]

32. An extended concept of proximity was previously adopted in this court until approximately the beginning of the century. That concept was used to identify certain types of cases in which a duty of care in negligence arose rather than as a test for determining whether the circumstances of a specific case brought it within such a category. The concept of proximity was invoked in Bryan v Maloney but since then has been sidelined. This did not mean that previous cases such as Bryan v Maloney were not correct in stating that the factors that were indicative of "proximity" gave rise to a duty of care. The factors were correctly included in the concept of proximity as part of the consideration of the existence of a duty of care and these factors continue to remain relevant. [21]

33. Bryan v Maloney referred to factors counting against the recognition of a duty of care for pure economic loss other than in special cases. Special cases would generally, but not necessarily, involve known reliance or dependence by the plaintiff and/or the assumption of responsibility by the defendant. Bryan v Maloney included these factors: lack of detail in the contract between the prior owner and the builder, no exclusion or limitation of liability in that contract, and probable lack of skill and experience in the subsequent owner who would probably assume that the building had been competently built. These factors were elements of

"vulnerability", which is an important factor in deciding the existence of a duty of care for pure economic loss. Vulnerability refers to the plaintiff's incapacity or limited capacity to protect itself from economic loss arising out of the defendant's conduct. There was a sharp distinction between Bryan v Maloney and this case in relation to vulnerability. The distinction being analogous to that made in Woolcock. [22]–[23]

34. The High Court has avoided formulating a general test for deciding the existence or non-existence of a duty of care in negligence. Often, with novel cases, the court can reason using analogy. None of the earlier cases were precisely applicable in this case. To decide this case, the court must consider the salient features of the relationship between the owners corporation and the builder, including whether the builder owed the developer a duty of care and whether the owners corporation was vulnerable. [24]–[25], [30]

35. The existence of an anterior duty of care to the prior owners assisted the finding that a duty of care was owed in Bryan v Maloney. In that case, there was no disconformity between the duty owed by the builder to the first owner and the alleged duty to the subsequent purchaser. There is no reason to treat the existence, or non-existence, of an earlier duty of care to a prior owner as anything more than an important factor relevant to the existence of a duty of care in relation to pure economic loss to a subsequent purchaser. [28] (However, see [61] per Hayne and Kiefel JJ at Held #23.)

36. The responsibility assumed by the builder in relation to the developer, as the initial owner of the apartments, was defined in detail by the contractual matrix that governed the construction of the building. The developer could not be taken to have relied on any responsibility by the builder, and the builder assumed no responsibility, in relation to pure economic loss flowing from latent defects extending beyond the contractual responsibility. The statutory relationship between the owners corporation and the developer as first owner meant that there was no duty of care owed to the owners corporation as a proxy for the developer. [33]

37. The purchasers of apartments were effectively investors in a serviced apartment hotel venture under standard form contracts which were an integral part of the overall contractual arrangements. The standard form contract contained specific terms about the building construction and the developer's obligations to undertake repairs. The subsequent owners could not be treated as vulnerable. Nor, therefore, could the owners corporation as their statutory "agent". [34]

38. The relationship between the builder and the owners corporation was not analogous to the relationship in Bryan v Maloney between the builder and the downstream, arms' length purchaser of the dwelling house, who suffered economic loss due to latent defects. It was analogous, although not identical, to the position of the purchaser of the building in Woolcock. [35]

Per Gageler J

39. An owners corporation is a creature of statute and does not choose to become the legal owner of common property and to bear the ongoing responsibility for keeping it in good repair. This obligation is imposed upon an owners corporation on its creation. However, the existence and the scope of a duty of care cannot turn on this peculiar circumstance. It is not the function of the common law to create a principle of tortious liability which would give a right to compensation exclusively to a unique product of legislation. [172]

40. If a builder of a strata development is to be recognised as having a putative duty of care, it is due to the fact that the owners corporation acts as a proxy for the lot owners. The beneficial interest in the common property is vested as tenants in common and the owners corporation is the agent of the lot owners. [173]

41. Whether or not a duty of care can be recognised in a particular circumstance must be determined by applying general principles to determine the existence and scope of the duty. The duty being the obligation that a builder has to avoid a subsequent owner incurring the cost of repairing latent defects in the building. [174]

42. A common law duty of care can coexist with a duty in contract. A duty of care can be to avoid economic loss. Therefore, legal taxonomy alone cannot be used to say that any liability of a builder to a subsequent owner of a building belongs solely to the province of contract law, to the exclusion of tort law. [175] (See also [60] per Hayne and Kiefel J and [36] per French CJ at Held #21.)

Bryan v Maloney would not be decided differently today. The continuing authority of Bryan v Maloney should be limited to cases where the building is a dwelling house (but see [136] per Crennan, Bell and Keane JJ at Held #3) and where the subsequent owner is incapable of protecting themselves from the consequences of the builder's lack of reasonable care. Apart from such cases, a builder has no duty in tort to exercise reasonable care to avoid a subsequent owner incurring the cost of repairing latent defects in the building. This is because subsequent owners can ordinarily protect themselves against this kind of economic loss because they have liberty to determine what contractual terms they agree to. [185]–[186]

44. If legal protection is now to be extended further than the current statutory warranty regime in New South Wales the protection would be best done by legislative extension of the current statutory warranties. [186]

ORDER

1. Appeal allowed.
2. Set aside the order of the Court of Appeal of the Supreme Court of New South Wales made on 25 September 2013 and, in its place, order that the appeal to that Court be dismissed with costs.
3. Special leave to cross-appeal granted.
4. Cross-appeal treated as instituted and heard instanter and dismissed with costs.
5. First respondent to pay the appellant's costs of the appeal.

On appeal from the Supreme Court of New South Wales

French CJ:

Introduction

1. The Court of Appeal of New South Wales held that the builder of strata-titled serviced apartments on land at Chatswood owed a duty of care to the owners corporation to avoid causing it to suffer loss resulting from latent defects in the common property which were structural or constituted a danger to persons or property in the vicinity or made the apartments uninhabitable[1] . An owners corporation is created by statute whenever a strata plan is registered. The common property is vested in it as manager of the strata scheme and as "agent" for the owners of the apartments. In this case, the owners corporation ("the Corporation") is the first respondent. The serviced apartments were incorporated in levels one to nine of a 22 storey development[2] . The apartments had been built under a design and construct contract made in November 1997 between the appellant, Brookfield Multiplex Ltd ("Brookfield"), and the registered proprietor of the land and property developer, Chelsea Apartments Pty Ltd ("Chelsea"). All of the apartments were subject to leases given by Chelsea to Park Hotel Management Pty Ltd ("Park Hotel"), a subsidiary of the Stockland Trust Group ("Stockland"), which was to operate them collectively as a serviced apartment hotel under the "Holiday Inn" brand.

2. The principal question raised on this appeal from the decision of the Court of Appeal is whether Brookfield owed the Corporation a duty to exercise reasonable care in the construction of the building to avoid causing the Corporation to suffer pure economic loss resulting from latent defects in the common property. The Corporation has filed a notice of contention asserting, contrary to the conclusion of the Court of Appeal, that the duty owed to it was not contingent upon the existence of a similar duty of care owed to Chelsea. The Corporation also seeks special leave to cross-appeal in relation to the limited ambit of the duty as defined by the Court of Appeal.

3. The contractual arrangements between Brookfield, Chelsea and Stockland had as their purpose the creation of a commercial venture which comprised serviced apartments to be operated collectively as a serviced apartment hotel. The Corporation, a creature of statute, came into existence as the statutory agent of Chelsea, albeit controlled pursuant to the lease arrangements by the hotel operator. The purchasers of individual apartments from Chelsea were effectively investors in the hotel venture. The nature and content of the contractual arrangements, including detailed provisions for dealing with and limiting defects liability, the sophistication of the parties and the relationship of Chelsea to the Corporation all militate against the existence of the asserted duty of care to either Chelsea or the Corporation. The appeal should be allowed. Special leave to cross-appeal should be granted and the cross-appeal dismissed.

4. The text of relevant statutory and contractual provisions, the reasoning at first instance and the reasoning of the Court of Appeal are set out in the joint judgment of Crennan, Bell and Keane JJ. Reference to the salient features of the statutory framework and the contractual arrangements appears later in these reasons.

Procedural history

5. By summons issued out of the Supreme Court of New South Wales on 3 November 2008, the Corporation claimed from Brookfield the cost of rectifying alleged defects in the common property[3] . The claim was in negligence and depended upon the existence and breach of a relevant duty of care owed by Brookfield to the Corporation.

6. On 10 October 2012, McDougall J delivered judgment on the separate question of the existence of a duty of care[4] . The alleged duty of care, as propounded by the Corporation, was a duty "to take reasonable care to avoid a reasonably foreseeable economic loss to the [Corporation] in having to make good the consequences of latent defects caused by the building's defective design and/or construction"[5] . His Honour held that the Corporation had not established that Brookfield owed it the duty of care alleged[6] . He made orders directing entry of judgment for the defendants and ordered the Corporation to pay their costs. The Corporation appealed to the Court of Appeal.

7. On 25 September 2013, the Court of Appeal allowed the appeal and set aside the orders made by McDougall J. Their Honours answered the separate question thus[7] :

> "[Brookfield] owed the [Corporation] a duty to exercise reasonable care in the construction of the building to avoid causing the [Corporation] to suffer loss resulting from latent defects in the common property vested in the [Corporation], which defects (a) were structural, or (b) constituted a danger to persons or property in, or in the vicinity of, the serviced apartments, or (c) made those apartments uninhabitable."

Brookfield appeals to this Court by special leave granted on 14 March 2014[8] .

The questions

8. The appeal raises two questions:

1. Did Brookfield owe a duty of care to the Corporation independently of the existence of a duty of care owed to Chelsea, and, if so, what was its content?
2. Did Brookfield owe a duty of care to Chelsea and thereby a similar duty of care to the Corporation, and, if so, what was its content?

As appears from the reasons that follow, the interaction between the statutory scheme and the contractual matrix causes the two questions to converge. It requires a negative answer to both. An outline of the statutory and contractual arrangements follows.

The strata schemes statutes

9. Under strata schemes laws in New South Wales, a parcel of land, including any building or buildings which comprise part of it, can be subdivided into lots in accordance with a strata plan[9] . A strata plan for freehold lots is registered in the office of the Registrar-General pursuant to s 8 (read with s 5(1)) of the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1973 (NSW) ("the Strata Freehold Act"). Common property is so much of a parcel as is not comprised in any lot[10] . Under the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW) ("the Strata Management Act"), the owners of the lots from time to time in a strata scheme constitute a body corporate designated "The Owners — Strata Plan No X", where "X" is the registered number of the strata plan to which that strata scheme relates[11] . The owners corporation comes into existence upon registration of the strata plan[12] . The Corporation came into existence on 11 November 1999. An owners corporation has the functions conferred upon it by the Strata Management Act or any other Act[13] . The common property is vested in it[14] . It holds its estate or interest as "agent" for the proprietor or proprietors of the lots[15] . If different persons are proprietors of each of two or more lots, it holds the common property as agent for the proprietors as tenants in common in shares proportional to the unit entitlements of the respective lots[16] . The content of the term "agent" is to be derived from the statutory functions conferred upon the owners corporation.

10. The interest of a lot owner in the common property has been characterised by the Supreme Court of New South Wales as an equitable interest as a tenant in common with other lot owners[17] . On that basis, the owners corporation has been described as holding the common property "as trustee for all the lot proprietors in proportion to their unit entitlements"[18] . Leeming JA in the Court of Appeal also referred to the relationship as "analogous to trustee and beneficiary"[19] . That cautious description may avoid attachment to the functions of the Corporation of the full panoply of equitable and statutory incidents of the trust relationship. In any event, the characterisation of the Corporation as a trustee or an analogue of a trustee was not in dispute before the Court of Appeal or in this appeal[20] .

11. The owners corporation has a statutory duty to properly maintain the common property and keep it in a state of good and serviceable repair[21] . It must renew or replace any fixtures or fittings comprised in the common property[22] . Those duties do not apply to a particular item of property if the owners corporation, by special resolution, determines that it is inappropriate to do any of those things[23] , albeit that exemption does not apply if the safety of any building, structure or common property is affected or the appearance of any property in the strata scheme detracted from[24] . The duties of the owners corporation do not depend upon whether someone was to blame for the common property being other than in a state of good and serviceable repair. As the primary judge correctly observed[25] :

> "The duty to maintain and repair common property is not limited by reference to the source of the problem that gives rise to the need for maintenance or [repair]. The duty will extend, in an appropriate case, even to the rectification of defective work left unrectified by the builder."

Generally speaking, funding for repairs and maintenance of the common property must come from the lot proprietors by way of levies. The owners corporation must establish an administrative fund and a sinking fund and can, and in some circumstances must, impose a levy so that it can meet particular maintenance and repair obligations[26] . Insurance payments, damages awards and negotiated settlements with persons said to be liable for damages for defects in the common property comprise other obvious sources of funding.

12. The connection between the Corporation and Chelsea, created by the Strata Management Act and Strata Freehold Act, was said in argument to be relevant to the question whether the Corporation was "vulnerable" with respect to economic loss arising from latent defects in the common property caused by Brookfield's alleged lack of care. As appears from these reasons, the Corporation's statutory relationship to Chelsea and subsequent purchasers of the lots is a circumstance which, taken with the contractual arrangements described below, militates against a finding of vulnerability supportive of the existence of a duty of care.

The Deed of Master Agreement

13. The working of the statutory relationship between the Corporation on the one hand and Chelsea and the purchasers of the apartments on the other was affected by the provisions of a Deed of Master Agreement made between Chelsea and Stockland. Under the Master Agreement, the apartments were to be leased to Park Hotel and operated collectively as a serviced apartment hotel under the "Holiday Inn" brand[27] . Under the leases, Park Hotel was to acquire Chelsea's rights, in effect, to direct the operation of the Corporation. Individual purchasers of the apartments were to acquire their interests subject to the leases to the operator[28] . The leases required that the owners yield their voting rights in the Corporation to the operator by appointing it as their proxy[29] . In the Master Agreement, Chelsea provided detailed warranties to Stockland in relation to the quality of the building work[30] .

The design and construct contract

14. The design and construct contract between Brookfield and Chelsea was made on 5 November 1997. The contract sum was $57,539,000. The contract contained detailed provisions relating to the quality of the services to be provided by Brookfield[31] . It imported the Australian Standard General conditions of contract for design and construct AS 4300-1995. It is not in dispute that Brookfield and Chelsea were experienced and sophisticated entities negotiating on an equal footing and at arms length. The contract contemplated the sale of the apartments to individual investors and annexed a standard form contract of sale to such investors. Brookfield was required to register the strata plan by 31 March 2000.

15. There was provision in the contract for a Defects Liability Period of 52 weeks, which commenced upon practical completion[32] . A Final Certificate would stand as evidence that the Works had been completed in accordance with the contract[33] . An exception was made in cl 42.6(b) for:

> "any defect (including omission) in the Works or any part thereof which was not apparent at the end of the Defects Liability Period, or which would not have been disclosed upon reasonable inspection at the time of the issue of the Final Certificate".

The contract also contained an express provision requiring Brookfield to maintain professional indemnity insurance with a run-off period of four years after issue of the Final Certificate[34] .

The standard form contract of sale

16. The standard form contract of sale to purchasers of the apartments, annexed to the design and construct contract, required Chelsea to cause the property and "the Common Property" to be finished in accordance with the schedule of finishes and "in a proper and workmanlike manner" before completion[35] . Chelsea was obliged to repair defects or faults in the common property due to faulty materials or workmanship of which written notice was served on it by the Corporation within seven months after the date of registration of the strata plan[36] . Notice of Special Faults, which were structural or required urgent attention or might cause danger to persons in the property or made the property uninhabitable, could be served by a purchaser[37] .

17. Basten JA said in his judgment in the Court of Appeal that there were no specific provisions in any of the contractual arrangements between Brookfield and Chelsea, and Chelsea and the purchasers of the lots, dealing with latent defects or limiting liability with respect to such defects[38] . There was, however, the qualification in cl 42.6(b) of the design and construct contract on the effect of the Final Certificate with respect to defects not apparent at the end of the Defects Liability Period.

The nature of the defects

18. It was conceded before the primary judge that it was reasonably foreseeable, at the time of construction, that if there were defects in the building, some of them might be latent at the time of registration of the strata plan[39] . His Honour observed that if the defects alleged by the Corporation existed, then many of them would properly be characterised as latent defects not readily detectable by any reasonable process of inspection[40] . So much can be assumed for present purposes. The question whether the defects existed and were latent and/or structural and/or dangerous would be a matter to be determined at trial if the appeal were to be dismissed.

The duty of care

19. The existence of a relevant duty of care is a necessary condition of liability in negligence. As this Court said in Sullivan v Moody[41] :

> "A defendant will only be liable, in negligence, for failure to take reasonable care to prevent a certain kind of foreseeable harm to a plaintiff, in circumstances where the law imposes a duty to take such care."

20. Historically, duties of care were attached to particular categories of relationships. The search for "some larger proposition" covering differing sets of circumstances was foreshadowed by Brett MR in Heaven v Pender[42] . Later, as Lord Esher MR, in Le Lievre v Gould[43] , he introduced what Lord Atkin characterised in Donoghue v Stevenson as a "notion of proximity" underpinning the existence of a duty of care. That "doctrine" was said by Lord Atkin to be reflected in his famous description of the "neighbour" in law to whom a duty of care is owed[44] . His generalisation, as refined in later decisions bearing with them the metaphor of "proximity", was restated in Wyong Shire Council v Shirt[45] :

> "prima facie a duty of care arises on the part of a defendant to a plaintiff when there exists between them a sufficient relationship of proximity, such that a reasonable man in the defendant's position would foresee that carelessness on his part may be likely to cause damage to the plaintiff".

21. An extended concept of proximity was adopted in this Court as a criterion of the existence of a duty of care in the 1980s and until the beginning of this century[46] . It was used to identify categories of cases in which a duty of care arose under the common law of negligence, rather than as a test for determining whether the circumstances of a particular case brought it within such a category[47] . It was invoked in 1995 in Bryan v Maloney[48] , in which the Court held that the builder of a dwelling house owed a duty of care to a subsequent purchaser of the house, a breach of which, by careless construction giving rise to latent defects, would support an action in negligence for economic loss. Thereafter it became a metaphor under threat. McHugh J in Perre v Apand Pty Ltd[49] regarded it as already despatched[50] . In Sullivan v Moody, it was put to rest by the whole Court, which observed that despite its centrality for more than a century[51] :

> "it gives little practical guidance in determining whether a duty of care exists in cases that are not analogous to cases in which a duty has been established".

That was not to say, and the Court did not say, that its application in previous cases such as Bryan v Maloney, which was of a classificatory and conclusionary character, falsified the underlying judgments that the circumstances said to be indicative of "proximity" gave rise to a duty of care. As Basten JA observed in the Court of Appeal, "the factors which were apt to be included" in "the concept of 'proximity' as a touchstone of the existence of a duty of care … remain relevant"[52] .

22. Abstracting the reference to proximity in Bryan v Maloney, the decision adverted to factors adverse to the recognition of a duty of care for pure economic loss other than in special cases. The special cases would commonly, but not necessarily, involve an identified element of known reliance or dependence on the part of the plaintiff, or the assumption of responsibility by the defendant, or a combination of the two[53] . The contract between the prior owner and the builder in that case was "non-detailed and contained no exclusion or limitation of liability"[54] . The subsequent owner would ordinarily be unskilled in building matters and inexperienced in the niceties of real property investment. Any builder should be aware that such a subsequent owner would be likely to assume that the building had been competently built and that the footings were adequate[55] . Those considerations may be seen as elements of the notion of "vulnerability", which has become an important consideration in determining the existence of a duty of care for pure economic loss. In this context, it refers to the plaintiff's incapacity or limited capacity to take steps to protect itself from economic loss arising out of the defendant's conduct[56] .

23. It is in relation to vulnerability that there is a sharp distinction between Bryan v Maloney and the present case. That distinction is analogous to that made in the subsequent decision of this Court in Woolcock Street Investments Pty Ltd v CDG Pty Ltd[57] , which is discussed below. Before turning to Woolcock, the point should be made that there are special features of the present case, generated by the contractual and statutory matrix in which the duty of care is asserted, that give it an element of novelty not overcome by a straightforward application of precedent.

24. This Court in Sullivan v Moody eschewed any attempt at formulating a general test for determining the existence or non-existence of a duty of care for the purposes of the law of negligence. As the Court said, different classes of case raise different problems, requiring "a judicial evaluation of the factors which tend for or against a conclusion, to be arrived at as a matter of principle"[58] . The development of the law of negligence had revealed "the difficulty of identifying unifying principles that would allow ready solution of novel problems"[59] .

25. Much legal reasoning in relation to novel cases can proceed by way of analogy, as McHugh J pointed out in Crimmins v Stevedoring Industry Finance Committee[60] . The advantage of the analogical approach appears from an observation by Professor Cass Sunstein quoted by McHugh J[61] :

> "[A]nalogical reasoning reduces the need for theory-building, and for generating law from the ground up, by creating a shared and relatively fixed background from which diverse judges can work. Thus judges who disagree on a great deal can work together far more easily if they think analogically and by reference to agreed-upon fixed points."

Reasoning by analogy should be conducive to coherence in the development of the law. Concerns about coherence may also inform the determination of the existence or non-existence of a duty of care in particular classes of case. As the Court said in Sullivan v Moody, the problems in determining the duty of care[62] :

> "may [sometimes] concern the need to preserve the coherence of other legal principles, or of a statutory scheme which governs certain conduct or relationships".

26. The reference to analogical reasoning directs attention to the decision in Woolcock. This Court held that an engineering company, which had designed inadequate foundations for a warehouse and office complex resulting in subsequent structural damage, did not owe a duty of care in respect of economic loss suffered by a subsequent purchaser of the complex. The case came to the Court on appeal from a decision of the Court of Appeal of the Supreme Court of Queensland, which had decided the matter on a case stated to that Court from a single judge[63] . It was decided on a restricted set of agreed and pleaded facts.

27. Bryan v Maloney was held not to support the plaintiff's claim. On the agreed and pleaded facts in Woolcock, the prior owner had exercised control over geotechnical investigations carried out by the engineering company[64] . There was no allegation of any assumption of responsibility by the engineering company or of known reliance by the prior owner[65] . There was no duty of care owed to the prior owner[66] .

28. In Bryan v Maloney, the existence of an anterior duty of care to the prior owner was supportive of a duty of care to the subsequent purchaser. Its existence overcame a "policy" concern that liability to the subsequent purchaser would be inconsistent with the defendant's legitimate pursuit of its freedom to protect its own financial interests by limiting its liability to the prior owner[67] . The building contract had left the way open for concurrent tortious liability to the prior owner. There was no disconformity, therefore, between the duty owed by the builder to the first owner and the duty asserted by the subsequent purchaser[68] . This Court in Woolcock did not decide whether such a disconformity would always deny the existence of a duty of care to a subsequent purchaser[69] . There is no reason to regard the existence, or non-existence, of an anterior duty of care to a prior owner as more than an important factor relevant to the existence of a duty of care in respect of pure economic loss to a subsequent purchaser.

29. The question whether the plaintiff in Woolcock was vulnerable, so as to attract a duty of care, could not be answered definitively in that case. The agreed and pleaded facts were insufficient to demonstrate vulnerability. Specifically[70] :

- It was not shown that the plaintiff could not have protected itself against the economic loss which it suffered.
- No warranty of freedom from defect was included in the contract entered into by the plaintiff in purchasing the complex.
- There was no assignment to the plaintiff by the prior owner of the prior owner's rights in respect of any claim for defects.

• There was nothing to demonstrate what could have been done to cast on to the engineering company the burden of the economic consequences of any negligence by it.

• There was nothing about whether the plaintiff could have obtained the benefit of terms of that kind in the contract.

In the end, Woolcock was not a "special" case in the sense in which that term was used in Bryan v Maloney.

30. The present appeal falls for decision against a background of prior decisions about classes of case in which a person performing a contract may have a concurrent duty of care to another contracting party, classes of case in which a party to a contract may owe a duty of care to a person who is not a party to the contract, classes of case involving pure economic loss, and classes of case in which the careless performance of a building contract has left latent defects in the building and thereby caused economic loss to a subsequent purchaser. Those decisions interact with each other but none is precisely applicable in this case. Consistently with the approach taken in Woolcock and, before that, in Bryan v Maloney, the determination of this appeal requires consideration of the salient features of the relationship between the Corporation and Brookfield, including whether Brookfield owed Chelsea a relevant duty of care and whether the Corporation was vulnerable in the sense discussed above.

Whether Brookfield owed a duty of care to the Corporation

31. When Brookfield entered into the design and construct contract with Chelsea, Chelsea was the owner of the parcel of land upon which the apartment block was to be constructed. It remained the registered proprietor of that parcel until it was subdivided into lots and common property when the strata plan was registered by Brookfield in November 1999. Upon that registration, the Corporation came into existence and became the legal owner of the common property. It had no contractual relationship with Brookfield or with Chelsea. Nevertheless, it held the common property as agent for Chelsea within the meaning of the Strata Freehold Act. It was effectively subject to Chelsea's control, albeit Chelsea's controlling rights and those of its successors in title to the strata lots were ceded to Park Hotel under the prior leasing arrangements.

32. The Corporation had a function under the standard form contract of sale whereby it could, within seven months of registration of the strata plan, serve written notice of defects or faults in the common property on Chelsea which would enliven Chelsea's contractual obligation to the lot owners to repair such defects and faults. No doubt control of the Corporation, which was effectively conferred on Park Hotel by the leases from the lot owners, enabled Park Hotel to require the Corporation to issue such notices. Chelsea, as initial owner of all of the lots, was at the outset the directing mind of the Corporation, albeit it had delegated its powers of direction to Park Hotel. The Corporation was controlled by Chelsea and Park Hotel, who were party to and therefore can be taken to have been fully apprised of the contractual arrangements and in particular the extent and limits of Brookfield's obligations and liabilities in relation to defects in the common property.

33. The responsibility assumed by Brookfield with respect to Chelsea, as initial owner of the lots, was defined in detail by the design and construct contract. Chelsea cannot be taken to have relied upon any responsibility on the part of Brookfield, and Brookfield assumed none, in relation to pure economic loss flowing from latent defects extending beyond the limits of the responsibility imposed on it by the contract. The statutory relationship between the Corporation and Chelsea as first owner meant that there was no duty of care owed to the Corporation as a proxy for Chelsea. The question that follows is whether there was a duty of care owed to the Corporation by virtue of its relationship to subsequent purchasers from Chelsea.

34. The purchasers of lots from Chelsea were effectively investors in a hotel venture under standard form contracts which were an integral part of the overall contractual arrangements. The standard form contract contained specific provisions relating to the construction of the building and Chelsea's obligations to undertake repairs. Those provisions have already been mentioned. This is not a case in which, for the purposes of the subsistence of a duty of care, the subsequent owners could be regarded as vulnerable. Nor, therefore, could the Corporation as their statutory "agent". The position of the subsequent owners and the interaction of the contractual and statutory frameworks are antithetical to the proposition that Brookfield owed the Corporation the duty of care found to exist by the Court of Appeal.

35. Against that background, the relationship between Brookfield and the Corporation is not analogous to the relationship in Bryan v Maloney between the builder of a dwelling house and the downstream, arms-length purchaser of the house, who suffered economic loss by reason of latent defects in the construction. It is analogous, although not identical, to the position of the purchaser of the complex in Woolcock.

36. There was no duty of care in respect of pure economic loss flowing from latent defects owed by Brookfield to Chelsea. Nor was there a duty of care owed by Brookfield to the subsequent owners. There was therefore no duty of care owed to the Corporation. That conclusion means that the appeal must be allowed. It is fatal to the notice of contention and to the proposed cross-appeal. In so holding, I would also wish to associate myself with the observation by Hayne and Kiefel JJ that that conclusion does not depend upon any a priori assumption about the proper provinces of contract and tort.

Conclusion

37. The following orders should be made:

1. Appeal allowed.
2. Set aside the order of the Court of Appeal of the Supreme Court of New South Wales made on 25 September 2013 and, in its place, order that the appeal to that Court be dismissed with costs.
3. Special leave to cross-appeal granted.
4. Cross-appeal treated as instituted and heard instanter and dismissed with costs.
5. First respondent to pay the appellant's costs of the appeal.

Hayne and Kiefel JJ:

The issue

38. The first respondent ("the Owners Corporation") claimed damages from the appellant ("the builder"). The Owners Corporation alleged that the builder owed it a duty of care in carrying out certain building works on land at Chatswood, New South Wales. The Owners Corporation alleged that, because the builder had breached that duty of care, the building had various latent defects in common property vested in the Owners Corporation and that, as a result, the Owners Corporation had suffered loss and damage. The Owners Corporation particularised that loss and damage as the cost of rectifying the defects and "the diminished value to the Building and the loss of rents and income during the period of and due to the rectifying of the defects".

39. Did the builder owe the Owners Corporation the alleged duty of care?

The decisions below and the appeal to this Court

40. In the Supreme Court of New South Wales, McDougall J held[71] that the builder did not owe the alleged duty and entered judgment for the builder. On appeal, the Court of Appeal of the Supreme Court of New South Wales held[72] that the builder owed the Owners Corporation "a duty to exercise reasonable care in the construction of the building to avoid causing [the Owners Corporation] to suffer loss resulting from latent defects in the common property vested in [the Owners Corporation], which defects (a) were structural, or (b) constituted a danger to persons or property in, or in the vicinity of, the serviced apartments, or (c) made those apartments uninhabitable".

41. By special leave the builder appeals to this Court. The Owners Corporation applies for special leave to cross-appeal seeking orders providing for a larger duty of care than that found by the Court of Appeal. The builder's appeal should be allowed with costs. The orders of the Court of Appeal should be set aside and the appeal to that Court dismissed with costs. The Owners Corporation should have special leave to cross-appeal but the cross-appeal should be dismissed with costs.

The essential facts

42. The building works were to construct “a mixed use retail, restaurant, residential and serviced apartments building” on the land. The builder undertook these works under a “design and construct” contract it made with a developer: Chelsea Apartments Pty Ltd (“the developer”). The contract obliged the builder to construct the building in general accordance with detailed plans and specifications for a contract price of more than $57 million. The contract incorporated detailed provisions regulating the performance and superintendence of the work. The contract provided for certain warranties by the builder about the work and for the builder to remedy defects or omissions in the work. It provided that the issue of a “final certificate” under the contract was evidence, subject to specified exceptions, that the works had been completed in accordance with the contract.

43. Before a final occupation certificate was granted by the relevant municipal council, a strata plan was registered in relation to that part of the building which was to be used for serviced apartments. Initially, the developer owned the lots in the strata scheme. The lots were later sold by the developer to different proprietors under standard sale contracts, the form of which was fixed by agreement between the developer and the builder. Those contracts obliged the developer, as vendor, to “cause the Building to be constructed in a proper and workmanlike manner” and made detailed provision about the repair of defects or faults (including defects or faults in the common property).

44. Upon registration of the strata plan, the Owners Corporation was created by operation of law[73] . The owners of the lots from time to time in the strata scheme constitute[74] a body corporate under the name of the Owners Corporation. The estate or interest of that body corporate in the common property is held[75] by the Owners Corporation as agent for the owner or owners of the lots the subject of the strata scheme. Initially, the Owners Corporation held the common property as agent for the developer as the owner of all of the lots. Now that the lots are owned by different proprietors, the Owners Corporation holds the common property as agent for those proprietors as tenants in common in shares proportional to their unit entitlements[76] . The Owners Corporation is bound[77] to properly maintain and keep in a state of good and serviceable repair the common property and any personal property vested in the Owners Corporation and to renew or replace any fixtures or fittings comprised in the common property and any personal property vested in the Owners Corporation.

The damage

45. There may be a real and lively debate about whether the Owners Corporation itself suffered any loss as a result of defects in the common property. The better view may be that any loss constituted or occasioned by defects in the common property was suffered by the owners of the lots for whom the Owners Corporation held the common property as “agent”[78] . It is not necessary, however, to pursue that question.

46. Nor is it necessary to explore what follows from observing that, at the time the builder is alleged not to have taken reasonable care in the execution of the building works, the Owners Corporation did not exist. It is convenient to assume, without deciding, that nothing turns on this observation. It is sufficient to instead focus on whether the builder owed a duty of care to a subsequent owner of part of the building.

47. The nature of the damage suffered is important to resolving the issue about duty of care. The defects which the Owners Corporation identifies in the common property are not alleged to have caused any damage to person or property. Steps can be taken, therefore, to prevent damage to person or property. If the Owners Corporation has suffered damage, that damage is pure economic loss.

Duty of care to avoid pure economic loss?

48. Determination of whether, under the common law of Australia, the builder owed a duty of care to a subsequent owner of part of the building (in this case, the Owners Corporation) depends on applying the principles which have been established by the decisions of this Court. Immediately, it requires close attention to what this Court decided in Woolcock Street Investments Pty Ltd v CDG Pty Ltd[79] . No doubt Woolcock

Street must be read and understood in the light of the Court's earlier decisions including, in particular, Bryan v Maloney[80] . No party suggested, however, that Woolcock Street should be reopened. Hence, that decision must be the starting point for considering the issue in this appeal.

Woolcock Street Investments Pty Ltd v CDG Pty Ltd

49. In Woolcock Street, six members of the Court held[81] that an engineering company which designed the foundations of a warehouse and office complex did not owe a subsequent purchaser of the building a common law duty of care to avoid economic loss. That decision was reached recognising[82] that similar questions had been considered by the courts of other jurisdictions and resolved by applying principles about recovery for negligently inflicted pure economic loss which differ from those which this Court has held are to be applied in Australia.

50. Four members of the Court observed[83] that the decision in Bryan v Maloney had depended upon an anterior demonstration that the builder owed a duty to take reasonable care to avoid economic loss to the original owner of the kind suffered by the subsequent purchaser. And the plurality further observed[84] that in Woolcock Street there had been neither reliance by the original owner on, nor an assumption of responsibility by, the engineering company. Hence, the plurality held[85] that the reasoning in Bryan v Maloney by which an original duty owed by the builder to the owner was extended to a subsequent purchaser did not apply.

51. The plurality founded[86] their conclusion that the engineering company did not owe the subsequent purchaser a duty of care on the proposition that the subsequent purchaser was not vulnerable to the economic consequences of the engineering company's negligence in designing the foundations. In the context, vulnerability was said to refer[87] to a plaintiff's inability to protect itself from the defendant's want of reasonable care, either entirely or at least in a way which would cast the consequences of loss on the defendant. It is the question of vulnerability which, consistent with the decision in Woolcock Street, must determine the outcome of this appeal.

Matters that need not be considered

52. Before dealing with the issue of vulnerability, two other aspects of the matter, mentioned in argument, should be noted but then put aside from consideration.

53. First, it is not useful to examine particular decisions made in other jurisdictions about the tortious liability of a builder for economic loss occasioned by the negligent construction of a building without recognising that those decisions necessarily reflect the particular ways in which those jurisdictions have developed and applied principles about recovery for negligently caused pure economic loss. It was not submitted that this Court should revisit those principles as they have been developed by this Court.

54. Second, some argument was directed in this Court to the proper construction of the contract pursuant to which the builder built the building. In particular, there was debate about three aspects of that contract: the provisions which stated the builder's obligations; the provisions for superintendence of the work by a superintendent appointed by the developer; and the provisions about the defects liability period and the issuance of the final certificate. In addition, argument was directed to the proper construction of the standard form agreements for purchase of lots in the relevant strata scheme.

55. It will not be necessary to pursue the arguments about the proper construction of these provisions to their conclusion. It is enough to notice that the relevant parties made contracts for the construction of the building and for the subsequent sale of parts of the building which were contracts that could (and did) make provisions regulating the quality of what was to be received in return for payment of the price. The making of those contracts denies vulnerability. It is necessary to explain that conclusion.

Vulnerability?

56. It may be assumed, without deciding, that the developer and the purchaser of a lot from the developer relied on the builder to do its work properly. The purchaser of a lot could not check the quality of the builder's work as it was being done. Perhaps the developer was in no different position. (That would turn on what meaning is given to the superintendence provisions of the developer's contract with the builder.) The Owners Corporation was in no better position to check the quality of the builder's work as it was being done than the original purchaser of a lot. Because these parties could not check the quality of what the builder was doing, it can easily be said that each relied on the builder to do its work properly.

57. Reliance, in the sense just described, may be a necessary element in demonstrating vulnerability, but it is not a sufficient element. As noted earlier, vulnerability is concerned with a plaintiff's inability to protect itself from the defendant's want of reasonable care, either entirely or at least in a way which would cast the consequences of loss on the defendant.

58. It is neither necessary nor profitable to attempt to define what would or would not constitute vulnerability. It is enough to observe that both the developer and the original purchasers made contracts, including the standard contracts, which gave rights to have remedied defects in the common property vested in the Owners Corporation. The making of contracts which expressly provided for what quality of work was promised demonstrates the ability of the parties to protect against, and denies their vulnerability to, any lack of care by the builder in performance of its contractual obligations. It was not suggested that the parties could not protect their own interests[88] . The builder did not owe the Owners Corporation a duty of care.

Contract and tort

59. The conclusion just expressed denies the existence of a duty of care. The conclusion does not depend, however, upon making any a priori assumption about the proper provinces of the law of contract and the law of tort. As McHugh J pointed out[89] in Woolcock Street, "[t]he decisions in Hedley Byrne [& Co Ltd v Heller & Partners Ltd[90]], Donoghue [v Stevenson[91]], White [v Jones[92]] and Hill [v Van Erp[93]] … make it difficult to argue that claims in negligence for pure economic loss should be excluded merely because such claims may outflank or undermine fundamental doctrines of the law of contract". And as McHugh J also observed[94] , this Court rejected in Bryan v Maloney "the notion that in Australia contract and tort were so neatly compartmentalised that it would be an error to give a remedy in tort for economic loss". That rejection manifests the necessary premise for earlier decisions of this Court about liability for pure economic loss, such as Mutual Life & Citizens' Assurance Co Ltd v Evatt[95] , as well as later decisions like Perre v Apand Pty Ltd[96] .

60. Nor does the conclusion about absence of vulnerability depend upon detailed analysis of the particular content of the contracts the parties made. As in Woolcock Street[97] , it is not necessary to decide in this case whether disconformity[98] between the obligations owed to the original owner under the contract and the duty of care allegedly owed to the subsequent owner would necessarily deny the existence of that duty. It may again be observed, as it was in Woolcock Street[99] , that in Bryan v Maloney there was the absence of disconformity of that kind. The absence of disconformity was an essential step in the reasoning in Bryan v Maloney. That step is not available in this case.

Conclusion

61. The appeal to this Court should be allowed. The first respondent should pay the appellant's costs. The orders of the Court of Appeal of the Supreme Court of New South Wales should be set aside and, in their place, there should be orders that the appeal to that Court is dismissed with costs. The Owners Corporation should have special leave to cross-appeal; the cross-appeal should be treated as instituted and heard instanter and dismissed with costs.

Crennan, Bell And Keane JJ:

62. The first respondent, which is conveniently referred to as "the respondent"[100] , is the owners corporation in respect of the common property in a strata-titled serviced apartment complex in Chatswood, New South Wales. The appellant built the complex pursuant to a contract with a developer, who owned the land on which it was built.

63. The respondent brought proceedings against the appellant in the Supreme Court of New South Wales to recover damages for the cost of repairing what were said to be latent defects in the common property of the serviced apartment complex. The respondent contended that the appellant was liable in negligence for breach of a duty "to take reasonable care to avoid a reasonably foreseeable economic loss to the [respondent] in having to make good the consequences of latent defects caused by the building's defective design and/or construction."[101] The respondent's contention was rejected[102] at first instance, but was upheld[103] (albeit subject to limitations presently contested by the respondent) by the Court of Appeal of New South Wales.

64. The Court of Appeal proceeded to its conclusion on the basis that the duty of care propounded by the respondent matched an equivalent tortious duty of care owed by the appellant to the developer of the serviced apartment complex. The appellant contended that the Court of Appeal had erred in supplementing the appellant's obligations to the developer by adding a tortious duty equivalent to that propounded by the respondent: the appellant's obligations to the developer as to the quality of the work were comprehensively stated in the contract pursuant to which the complex was built. The respondent disputed the contention that it was not permissible to supplement the appellant's contractual obligations to the developer in this way, and argued that, in any event, imposing an equivalent tortious duty in favour of the developer was not an essential step on the path to holding the appellant liable in negligence to the respondent.

65. To the latter contention the appellant replied that dispensing with the need for an equivalent liability on its part to the developer, for whom it built the complex, would reduce the law to incoherence, in that, in relation to defects in the quality of construction, a builder of a building may find itself potentially liable in tort to every subsequent owner of the building and yet not be liable to the party for whom the building was originally constructed.

66. The appellant also contended that the contracts pursuant to which the owners of apartments acquired their rights in the common property afforded those owners, and the respondent as their agent, such protection against the risk of economic loss attributable to defects in construction that the owners and the respondent were not relevantly vulnerable to the appellant, for the purposes of the law of negligence, in respect of the risk of economic loss by reason of such defects.

67. The appellant's contentions should be accepted. It is of critical importance in this regard that, as was common ground between the parties, the loss for which the respondent claimed damages is truly characterised as economic loss. The respondent's claim is based on the failure of the purchasers of the apartments to get value for money from the developer rather than on the appellant's causing damage to the respondent's property. One difficulty with the respondent's claim is that the respondent itself paid nothing for the common property: it suffered no "loss" arising out of the acquisition of the common property. And to say that the common property, for which it paid nothing, is less valuable to it by the amount which it must expend to repair it, is distinctly not to show that any act or omission on the part of the appellant caused the respondent's assets to be diminished[104] . As Stanley Burnton LJ said in Robinson v P E Jones (Contractors) Ltd[105] :

> "the crucial distinction is between a person who supplies something which is defective and a person who supplies something (whether a building, goods or a service) which, because of its defects, causes loss or damage to something else. …
> I do not think that a client has a cause of action in tort against his negligent accountant or solicitor simply because the accountant's or solicitor's advice is incorrect (and therefore worth less than the fee paid by the client). The client does have a cause of action in tort if the advice is relied upon by the client with the result that his assets are diminished."

68. If that preliminary difficulty is put to one side on the basis that the respondent acquired the common property as a proxy for the purchasers of apartments who are disappointed with the bargains they made with the developer, a substantial difficulty remains. The circumstance that economic loss of this kind is a foreseeable consequence of a want of reasonable care by the appellant is not of itself sufficient to make the loss compensable in negligence, even where acceptance of the claim will not give rise to indeterminate liability[106] .

69. The expansive view of the appellant's obligations to the respondent which was upheld by the Court of Appeal in this case is not supported by the decision in Bryan v Maloney[107] ; and it does not accord with the decision of this Court in Woolcock Street Investments Pty Ltd v CDG Pty Ltd[108] . This Court's decision in Bryan v Maloney does not sustain the proposition that a builder that breaches its contractual obligations to the first owner of a building is to be held responsible for the consequences of what is really a bad bargain made by subsequent purchasers of the building. To impose upon a defendant builder a greater liability to a disappointed purchaser than to the party for whom the building was made and by whom the defendant was paid for its work would reduce the common law to incoherence[109] . Moreover, to hold that a subsequent purchaser of a building is vulnerable to the builder so far as the risk of making an unfavourable bargain for its acquisition is concerned would involve a departure from what was held by this Court in Woolcock Street Investments[110] .

The commercial background

70. The serviced apartment complex was constructed by the appellant as part of a transaction between Chelsea Apartments Pty Ltd ("the developer") and companies in the Stockland Group ("Stockland"). The development involved the construction of a 22-storey building, with two major components, the serviced apartment complex being floors one to nine, and residential apartments being floors 10 to 22.

71. The respondent is the owners corporation in respect of the serviced apartment lots on floors one to nine.

72. Pursuant to the terms of a Deed of Master Agreement dated 11 August 1997 ("the Master Agreement"), the developer, who was the registered proprietor of the land on which the building was to be constructed, agreed with Stockland to design and construct the building and then to lease apartments on certain floors to a Stockland subsidiary, Park Hotel Management Pty Ltd ("Park"), to be operated by Park as serviced apartments[111] . The apartments were to be sold to investors, subject to the leases granted to Park; and Park would operate a business of servicing those apartments under the "Holiday Inn" brand[112] .

73. Under the Master Agreement, the developer warranted the quality of its building work to Stockland[113] .

74. On 5 November 1997, the developer and the appellant entered into a design and construct subcontract ("the D&C contract") for the construction of the building for the sum of $57,539,000. It was common ground that the D&C contract was negotiated between sophisticated and experienced parties at arms' length and on an equal footing[114] .

The D&C contract

75. The D&C contract contained detailed provisions with respect to the quality of the work to be performed by the appellant as "Contractor" for the developer as "Principal".

76. Clause 3.1 of the D&C contract provided that "[t]he Contractor shall execute and complete the work under the Contract in accordance with the requirements of the Contract."

77. Clause 4 of the D&C contract provided relevantly:

> "4.1 Contractor's Warranties
>
> Without limiting the generality of Clause 3.1, the Contractor warrants to the Principal that the Contractor—

(a) … shall exercise due skill, care and diligence in the execution and completion of the work under the Contract;
(e) shall execute and complete the work under the Contract in accordance with the Design Documents so that the Works, when completed, shall—

(i) be fit for their stated purpose; and
(ii) comply with all the requirements of the Contract and all Legislative Requirements."

78. Clause 30 of the D&C contract provided relevantly:

"30.1 Quality of Material and Work

The Contractor shall use the materials and standards of workmanship required by the Contract. In the absence of any requirement to the contrary, the Contractor shall use suitable new materials and proper and tradesmanlike workmanship.

30.3 Defective Material or Work

If the Superintendent discovers material or work provided by the Contractor which is not in accordance with the Contract, the Superintendent shall as soon as practicable notify the Contractor. The Superintendent may direct the Contractor—

(c) to … reconstruct, replace or correct the material or work; or

The Superintendent may direct the times within which the Contractor must commence and complete the … reconstruction, replacement or correction.

30.6 Generally

Nothing in Clause 30 shall prejudice any other right which the Principal may have against the Contractor arising out of the failure of the Contractor to provide material or work in accordance with the Contract."

79. Clause 55 of the D&C contract obliged the appellant to:

"(a) cause the Building to be constructed in general accordance with the Development Consent (including, without limitation, the plans and specifications in the Development Application);
(b) cause the Serviced Apartments Parcel to be constructed in general accordance with the Serviced Apartments Floor Plan;
(c) cause the Serviced Apartments Parcel to be finished in general accordance with the Serviced Apartments Finishes; and
(d) install in each of the Serviced Apartments the FF&E Package (as amended by the Trade Off List) relevant to the particular Serviced Apartments."

80. The D&C contract provided for a Defects Liability Period. In this regard, cl 37 provided that the appellant would be liable to rectify construction defects for a period of 52 weeks commencing from the date of practical completion[115] .

81. Clause 31 of the D&C contract made provision for the Superintendent to test any material or work at any time before the expiry of the Defects Liability Period. To this end the Superintendent was authorised by cl 31.2 to direct that any part of the work under the contract shall not be "covered up or made inaccessible without the Superintendent's prior approval."

82. Clause 42.6 provided for the Superintendent, at the expiry of the Defects Liability Period, to issue to the developer a "Final Certificate" of "the amount which, in the Superintendent's opinion, is finally due from the Principal to the Contractor or from the Contractor to the Principal arising out of the Contract or any alleged breach thereof."

83. Clause 42.6 continued:

> "Unless either party, either before the Final Certificate has been issued or not later than 21 days after the issue thereof, serves a notice of dispute … the Final Certificate shall be evidence that the Works have been completed in accordance with the terms of the Contract … except in the case of—
> (a) fraud, dishonesty or fraudulent concealment relating to the work under the Contract or any part thereof or to any matter dealt with in the said Certificate;
> (b) any defect (including omission) in the Works or any part thereof which was not apparent at the end of the Defects Liability Period, or which would not have been disclosed upon reasonable inspection at the time of the issue of the Final Certificate".

84. The effect of cl 42.6(b) was that the developer had contractual protection against the appellant in respect of the expense of repairing latent defects in the building after the Defects Liability Period had expired.

85. The D&C contract also provided for the terms on which the developer would offer individual lots for sale to investors. Annexed to the D&C contract was a form of standard contract for sale, which conferred on each purchaser of a lot specific contractual rights in relation to defects in the property, including the common property[116] .

The contracts for sale

86. By cl 26.1 of the standard form contract for sale the purchaser represented and warranted that it "did not rely on any representations or warranties about the subject matter of this contract … except those representations and warranties set out in this contract", and had "obtained appropriate independent advice on and is satisfied about … the purchaser's obligations and rights under this contract".

87. Clause 32.1 of the standard form contract set out the purchaser's rights in respect of the quality of construction. In particular, the developer was obliged "[b]efore completion … [to] cause the property and the Common Property to be finished as specified in the Schedule of Finishes … in a proper and workmanlike manner."

88. Clause 32.6 obliged the developer to:

> "repair in a proper and workmanlike manner, at the [developer's] expense, within a reasonable time after the applicable notice has been served by the purchaser, any defects or faults in the property due to faulty materials or workmanship (including Special Faults but excluding minor shrinkage and minor settlement cracks) of which notice is served by the purchaser within 6 months after completion. The purchaser may not serve notice of defects or faults other than Special Faults on more than 3 occasions."

89. Clause 32.7 obliged the developer to:

> "repair in a proper and workmanlike manner, at the [developer's] expense, within a reasonable time after the applicable written notice has been served on the [developer], any defects or faults in the Common Property due to faulty materials or workmanship … of which written notice is served on the [developer] by the Owners Corporation within 7 months after the date of registration of the Strata Plan."

The strata scheme legislation and the owners corporation

90. After a construction period of approximately two years, the serviced apartments were completed. On 11 November 1999, the appellant registered the strata plan for the serviced apartments. By virtue of that registration, the respondent was brought into existence[117] and the common property in the serviced apartment complex was vested in it[118] .

91. The developer, as the registered proprietor of the serviced apartment lots, sold them to investors subject to the leases which enabled them to be deployed by Park in its "Holiday Inn" business.

92. Section 20 of the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1973 (NSW) ("the SSFD Act") provides:

> "The estate or interest of a body corporate in common property vested in it or acquired by it shall be held by the body corporate as agent:
> > (a) where the same person or persons is or are the proprietor or proprietors of all of the lots the subject of the strata scheme concerned — for that proprietor or those proprietors, or
> > (b) where different persons are proprietors of each of two or more of the lots the subject of the strata scheme concerned — for those proprietors as tenants in common in shares proportional to the unit entitlements of their respective lots."

93. Section 61(1)(a) of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW) ("the SSM Act") provides that "[a]n owners corporation has, for the benefit of the owners … the management and control of the use of the common property of the strata scheme".

94. Section 62(1) of the SSM Act provides that "[a]n owners corporation must properly maintain and keep in a state of good and serviceable repair the common property".

The proceedings

95. The respondent commenced an action against the appellant in 2008[119] to recover the cost of rectifying defects found in the construction of the common property of the serviced apartment complex. Initially, the respondent also claimed that the appellant was liable for breaching statutory warranties relating to the quality of workmanship under Pt 2C of the Home Building Act 1989 (NSW), but that claim was resolved before trial[120] .

96. The respondent particularised the defects of which it complained[121] . The primary judge accepted that "if the defects alleged exist, then many of them are properly to be characterised as latent defects"[122] . For present purposes, it is necessary to note only that of the five categories of alleged defects, the complaint made by the respondent in relation to two categories, namely, the steel lintels and windows, was that the work does not comply with the specifications under the D&C contract. The complaint in respect of the third category was that "[t]he external render to the façade of the building is defective." The complaint in respect of the fourth category, namely, the sheet metal cowlings to the fire services shutters, is that they "were fabricated and coated with materials which were unsuitable for exterior exposure." The complaint in respect of the fifth category of defects, namely, the water leak from the spa, is that there were "defects to the waste connection and inadequate waterproofing to the enclosure below the spa."

97. Whether such defects as may be proved to exist are structural or likely to render the building dangerous to person or property or uninhabitable is an issue contested by the appellant. It has not yet been decided.

The decision of the primary judge

98. The parties asked the primary judge (McDougall J) to determine the question whether the appellant owed the respondent the duty propounded by the respondent separately from the other issues in the proceedings.

99. On 10 October 2012, the primary judge answered the separate question, holding[123] that the appellant did not owe the respondent the duty of care propounded by the respondent. In consequence, his Honour gave judgment for the appellant in the action.

100. His Honour held[124] that "[w]here the parties have negotiated in full their rights and obligations, there is no reason for the law to intervene by imposing some general law duty of care." His Honour concluded that the duty of care propounded by the respondent was not supported by this Court's decision in Bryan v Maloney[125] ; and, given the difficulties of principle involved in imposing on the appellant what Brennan J in Bryan v Maloney referred to as a transmissible warranty of quality[126] , any alteration to the position at common law should be undertaken by the legislature[127] .

The decision of the Court of Appeal

101. The respondent appealed to the Court of Appeal of the Supreme Court of New South Wales. The Court of Appeal (Basten JA, Macfarlan and Leeming JJA agreeing) allowed[128] the appeal.

102. Basten JA proceeded on the basis "that no general law duty of care can arise with respect to successive owners unless there [is] a general law duty owed to the original owner with whom the builder contracted to construct the building."[129] His Honour concluded[130] that the appellant owed the developer a duty under the law of tort to take reasonable care that it should not suffer economic loss concurrently with the contractual duties which arose under the D&C contract. In this regard, his Honour held[131] that the developer was "vulnerable" to the appellant in the sense that it was reliant on the appellant's "expertise, care and honesty … in performing its obligations under the [D&C] contract."

103. Basten JA rejected the argument that the contractual arrangements between the appellant and the developer dealt comprehensively with their relationship so as to leave no room for the imposition of a duty of care in tort[132] . His Honour held that the D&C contract:

> "did not purport expressly, or by necessary implication, to exclude any liability for defects or omissions which might arise otherwise than during [the Defects Liability Period], whether under contract or under the general law."[133]

104. It may also be noted here that Macfarlan JA, melding a number of lines of argument, including a reference to this Court's decision in Astley v Austrust Ltd[134] , said[135] :

> "The existence of a contract between the developer and a builder for the latter to construct a building does not preclude the existence of a duty of care owed by the builder to the developer as similar contractual and tortious rights may exist concurrently[136] . Further, it was not suggested in Astley that proof of the existence of a tortious duty of care concurrent with contractual obligations was dependent upon proof by the party to whom it was owed that it could not have negotiated with the party subject to the duty for contractual protection against the loss that came to be suffered. This being the case, it is difficult to see why a successor in title, or > a party otherwise related to that to whom the duty of care was owed, should have to show that it could not have negotiated contractual protection in order to establish that a duty of care was owed to it."
> [140712]

105. Basten JA went on to conclude[137] that the appellant owed the propounded duty to the respondent, as successor in title to the developer. His Honour reasoned that, as the respondent was at least as vulnerable as the developer to the risk of economic loss from latent defects, so the respondent was owed a duty in tort equivalent to that held to be owed by the appellant to the developer. Basten JA said[138] :

> "[the respondent] was vulnerable with respect to latent defects in the same way that the developer was. Indeed, its position was weaker than that of the developer, which may have had some opportunity to carry out inspections during the course of the construction and before the defective materials were no longer examinable."

106. Basten JA summarised his conclusions[139] :

> "Accepting that the general law does not impose a general duty of care to avoid economic loss, and that the decision in Bryan v Maloney does not in terms dictate the outcome in the present case, there are significant features which militate in favour of the existence of a duty of care covering loss resulting from latent defects which (a) were structural, (b) constituted a danger to persons or property in, or in the vicinity of, the serviced apartments, or (c) made them uninhabitable. The existence of a duty expressed in those terms should be accepted."

107. It is to be noted that Basten JA confined[140] the appellant's duty so that the appellant was bound only to avoid causing economic loss in relation to those defects which were "dangerous" in the sense that, if left unrepaired, they could cause personal injury or damage to property or made the premises uninhabitable. The respondent had not argued for a duty of care confined in this way; and consequently, in this Court, the respondent contended that the duty owed to it by the appellant should not be qualified or limited as indicated by Basten JA.

108. Macfarlan and Leeming JJA made some additional observations upon which the respondent was disposed to rely in this Court in support of its argument that it was unnecessary that there be a duty owed by the appellant to the developer equivalent to the duty propounded by the respondent against the appellant. In this regard, Macfarlan JA said[141] :

> "[T]he [appellant] argued that the [respondent] did not show that it had been vulnerable, in the sense that it had been unable to protect itself from the consequences of the [appellant's] lack of care[142] , because it did not show that it could not have bargained with the developer for contractual protection. One answer to this argument is that the [respondent] only came into existence on registration of the strata plan and was not a conventional successor in title which acquired the property in question under a contract with the previous owner (here the developer)."

109. Leeming JA referred to the SSM Act and to s 20 of the SSFD Act, adding[143] :

> "There is nothing antithetical in those provisions to a duty of care owed by the builder to that special creature of statute which is intended by builder and developer to come into existence following the performance of the builder's obligations. The legislative scheme is such that the owners' corporation is much more vulnerable than, say, a company which owns land on which is to be erected a company title building. To the contrary, what would be strange, to my mind, would be an imputed legislative intention to deny to that corporation the ordinary rights legal persons enjoy at common law."

110. In the upshot, the Court of Appeal set aside the orders made by the primary judge and answered[144] the separate question posed by the parties by holding that the appellant owed the respondent a duty:

> "to exercise reasonable care in the construction of the building to avoid causing the [respondent] to suffer loss resulting from latent defects in the common property vested > in the [respondent], which defects (a) were structural, or (b) constituted a danger to persons or property in, or in the vicinity of, the serviced apartments, or (c) made those apartments uninhabitable."
> [140713]

The appeal to this Court

111. The appellant appealed to this Court pursuant to special leave granted on 14 March 2014.

112. The respondent filed a notice of contention to the effect that the Court of Appeal had erred in restricting the scope of the appellant's duty of care to latent defects that were "dangerous". The respondent also sought to cross-appeal on the basis that the appellant owed the respondent the duty propounded by it even if the appellant did not owe an equivalent duty to the developer.

The appellant's submissions

113. The appellant's first submission was that the appellant's obligations to the developer were so comprehensively stated in the D&C contract that there was no room for the imposition by the law of tort of a concurrent duty of care to the developer.

114. The appellant's second submission was that, whatever its obligations to the developer, it did not owe the respondent the duty of care propounded by it.

The respondent's submissions

115. The respondent submitted that the duty of care propounded by it does not depend on finding an equivalent duty of care owed by the appellant to the developer. The respondent argued that, in determining whether the appellant owed the respondent a duty of care, the correct approach was to focus on the salient features of the relationship between the appellant and the respondent separately from the relationship between the appellant and the developer. The salient features on which the respondent relied were the appellant's power of administration of the D&C contract (which gave the appellant control of the developer's rights and expectations), the expertise of the appellant in business matters, the commercial cost to the developer of monitoring the construction work, and, based on the foregoing, general notions of assumption of responsibility and reliance.

116. The respondent also embraced the point made by Macfarlan and Leeming JJA that, because the respondent did not come into existence until the registration of the strata plan, it was vulnerable to the risk of loss from latent defects because it had no opportunity to take steps to protect itself against the financial consequences of latent defects in the construction of the common property.

117. In this regard, the respondent emphasised that cl 65 of the D&C contract obliged the appellant to register the strata plan which brought the respondent into existence, so that from the moment of its coming into existence it was obliged by s 62(1) of the SSM Act to rectify defects in the common property as they became apparent. Because the respondent had no opportunity to accept or reject the vesting in it of the common property and to protect itself from the expense of having to make good any defects in the construction, it should be held, so it was said, that the respondent was relevantly vulnerable to a risk of loss in respect of which the appellant owed it the propounded duty. This was said to be so irrespective of whether the appellant owed an equivalent duty to the developer.

118. In the alternative, the respondent submitted that there was an assumption by the appellant of liability to the developer for latent defects, and reliance by the developer on the appellant, which gave rise to a duty in tort equivalent to the duty propounded by the respondent.

119. In addition, and contrary to the conclusion of the Court of Appeal, the respondent contended that, in establishing the nature and scope of the propounded duty, it is the significance of the loss in value of the building or the expenditure necessary to make good the defects that is germane, rather than the characterisation of the defects as "dangerous".

120. Before addressing these submissions directly, it is desirable to make some general observations in relation to the protection afforded to economic interests by the common law.

The common law and economic loss

121. Economic interests are protected by the law of contract and by those torts that are usually described as the economic torts, such as deceit, duress, intimidation, conspiracy, and inducing breach of contract[145] . Generally speaking, the common law protects the interest of a party in having its contractual expectations met by the law of contract[146] . The law of negligence developed as part of the common law in this context. As Blackmun J said in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in East River Steamship Corp v Transamerica Delaval Inc[147] , "the failure of the purchaser to receive the benefit of its bargain [is] traditionally the core concern of contract law."

122. The causes of action known as the economic torts were established in the common law before the decision of the House of Lords in Donoghue v Stevenson[148] . In Allen v Flood[149] in 1897, the House of Lords held that a person may deliberately cause economic harm to another without liability in tort provided that the defendant was not part of a conspiracy and that the means employed to inflict the harm were not themselves unlawful. Unintentionally inflicted economic loss was held to be compensable by an action for negligence only after the decision in Hedley Byrne & Co Ltd v Heller & Partners Ltd[150] . Until then, the common law of tort passed the burden of economic loss from plaintiff to defendant only where the defendant intentionally inflicted harm on the plaintiff by conduct which was unlawful for reasons other than that it was likely to, and did, cause economic loss[151] . And even then, the expanded liability for economic loss established by Hedley Byrne & Co Ltd v Heller & Partners Ltd depended upon proof of the fact of assumption of responsibility by a person giving advice to another, and that other having relied upon the advice.

123. The respondent sought to rely upon the decision of this Court in Voli v Inglewood Shire Council[152] . That case establishes that the appellant may have been liable in damages for physical injuries to third parties resulting from defective work performed in the course of its contract with the developer. But the respondent's argument fails to observe the crucial distinction between physical injury and economic loss. Under the common law, "[t]he former is protected by the law even when, in similar circumstances, the latter is not."[153]

124. A cause of action in negligence does not arise unless and until the plaintiff suffers damage[154] . Damage is the gist of the cause of action in negligence[155] . As Brennan J said in John Pfeiffer Pty Ltd v Canny[156] , a "duty of care is a thing written on the wind unless damage is caused by the breach of that duty." It is of critical importance to appreciate that the loss for which the respondent seeks damages is the expense which it is obliged to incur as a result of the emergence of latent defects after its acquisition of the common property. It was common ground that this expense is properly understood as a species of economic loss as distinct from damage to its property. The gist of the respondent's cause of action is that the interest in the common property it acquired from the developer was not as valuable as it should have been if the purchasers had got value for their money.

125. Quite apart from "the traditional common law approach" reflected in the maxim "caveat emptor"[157] , the loss incurred by a purchaser of a building who, it turns out, has paid more for the building than it should have, is significantly different from a liability in the owner to third parties who have suffered personal injuries or damage to their property as a result of a defect in the building. An owner who is, or should presumably be, aware of a defect in a building may incur liability to third parties injured by the defect because the owner decided not to incur the expense of repairing the defect in the building. The decision which attracts that liability will usually not be one to which the negligent builder has contributed[158] .

126. These considerations were reflected in the observations of McPherson JA in Fangrove Pty Ltd v Tod Group Holdings Pty Ltd[159] that the common law maintains the distinction between the protection afforded to personal or property interests and economic interests because the common law "values the physical integrity of a person at a level well above the interests of commerce", and because of "the capacity of those who engage in commerce to protect themselves against the kind of loss that the plaintiff sustained here." These observations accord with this Court's decision in Woolcock Street Investments.

Woolcock Street Investments

127. In Woolcock Street Investments[160] , Gleeson CJ, Gummow, Hayne and Heydon JJ accepted that the general rule of the common law is that damages for economic loss which is not consequential upon damage to person or property are not recoverable in negligence even if the loss is foreseeable. Their Honours said:

> "In Caltex Oil (Australia) Pty Ltd v The Dredge 'Willemstad'[161] , the Court held that there were circumstances in which damages for economic loss were recoverable. In Caltex Oil, cases for recovery of economic loss were seen as being exceptions to a general rule, said to have been established in Cattle v Stockton Waterworks[162] , that even if the loss was foreseeable, damages are not recoverable for economic loss which was not consequential upon injury to person or property."

128. In Woolcock Street Investments[163] , the plurality noted that the exception to the general rule for negligent misstatement recognised in cases such as Mutual Life & Citizens' Assurance Co Ltd v Evatt[164] and Shaddock & Associates Pty Ltd v Parramatta City Council [No 1][165] depends on proof of an assumption of responsibility by the defendant and known reliance on the defendant by the plaintiff.

129. In Woolcock Street Investments[166] , Bryan v Maloney was explained as an example of a decision based on "notions of assumption of responsibility and known reliance." The plurality said[167] that Bryan v Maloney:

> "depended upon considerations of assumption of responsibility, reliance, and proximity. Most importantly, [the principles that were engaged] depended upon equating the responsibilities which the builder owed to the first owner with those owed to a subsequent owner."

130. Further in this regard, the plurality in Woolcock Street Investments[168] noted that in decisions such as Perre v Apand Pty Ltd[169] , Hill v Van Erp[170] and Esanda Finance Corporation Ltd v Peat Marwick Hungerfords[171] , the concept of vulnerability could be invoked as the rationale explaining the exceptions to the general rule. Vulnerability, in this field of discourse, is concerned not only with the reasonable foreseeability of loss if reasonable care is not taken by the defendant, but also, and importantly, with the inability of the plaintiff to take steps to protect itself from the risk of the loss. Their Honours held[172] that the concept of vulnerability did not afford a basis for holding the defendant liable in that case because the facts of the case did:

> "not show that the appellant could not have protected itself against the economic loss it alleges it has suffered. It is agreed that no warranty of freedom from defect was included in the contract by which the appellant bought the land, and that there was no assignment to the appellant of any rights which the vendor may have had against third parties in respect of any claim for defects in the building. Those facts describe what did happen. They say nothing about what could have been done to cast on the respondents the burden of the economic consequences of any negligence by the respondents."

131. To similar effect McHugh J said[173] :

> "The first owners and subsequent purchasers of commercial premises are usually sophisticated and often wealthy investors who are advised by competent solicitors, accountants, architects, engineers and valuers. In the absence of evidence, this Court must assume that the first owner of commercial premises is able to bargain for contractual remedies against the builder. It must also assume that a subsequent purchaser is able to bargain for contractual warranties from the vendor of such premises."

132. These passages accord with the primacy of the law of contract in the protection afforded by the common law against unintended harm to economic interests where the particular harm consists of disappointed expectations under a contract. The common law has not developed with a view to altering the allocation of economic risks between parties to a contract by supplementing or supplanting the terms of the contract by duties imposed by the law of tort[174] .

133. Statutory provisions may supplement the common law of contract by providing for special protection to identified classes of purchasers on the ground, for example, that they may not be expected to be sufficiently astute to protect their own economic interests.

Part 2C of the Home Building Act 1989 (NSW) is an example of such a statutory regime.

134. By enacting the scheme of statutory warranties, the legislature adopted a policy of consumer protection for those who acquire buildings as dwellings. To observe that the Home Building Act does not cover claims by purchasers of serviced apartments is not to assert that the Act contains an implied denial of the duty propounded by the respondent. Rather, it is to recognise that the legislature has made a policy choice to differentiate between consumers and investors in favour of the former. That is not the kind of policy choice with which courts responsible for the incremental development of the common law are familiar[175] ; and to the extent that deference to policy considerations of this kind might be seen to be the leitmotif of this Court's decision in Bryan v Maloney, the action taken by the New South Wales legislature served to relieve the pressure, in terms of policy, to expand the protection available to consumers.

Bryan v Maloney

135. It might be said that this Court's decision in Bryan v Maloney is distinguishable from the present case because it was concerned with the construction of a dwelling house rather than a commercial investment. But this distinction was not said to be material by either party in this Court. That is understandable, given that the distinction between purchases of buildings for domestic and commercial purposes is an unstable one (at least in the absence of statutory definition), because its application means that liability is apt to come and go depending on the use intended for a building by its successive purchasers[176] .

136. The material distinctions between the present case and Bryan v Maloney lie, first, in the detailed prescriptions of the D&C contract between the appellant and the developer, in contrast to the simple obligation in Bryan v Maloney between the builder and the original owner to exercise reasonable skill and diligence in the construction of the dwelling; and, secondly, in the express promises in cll 32.6 and 32.7 of the sales contracts, in contrast to the situation in Bryan v Maloney, where there was no promise as to quality given to Mrs Maloney when she acquired the dwelling.

137. As to the first of these grounds of distinction, in Bryan v Maloney[177] the builder's obligations as to the quality of design and construction were not expressed in the specific and detailed provisions to be found in the D&C contract. That being so, it could also be said that the relationship between the builder and the original owner in Bryan v Maloney was:

> "characterized by the kind of assumption of responsibility on the one part (ie the builder) and known reliance on the other (ie the building owner) which commonly exists in the special categories of case in which a relationship of proximity and a consequent duty of care exists in respect of pure economic loss."[178]

138. A conclusion that the builder owed to the first owner obligations equivalent in content to the tortious duty asserted by the subsequent owner was apparently thought to lessen the force of the objection to imposing a more onerous obligation on a builder in favour of the subsequent owner than was owed by the builder to the person for whom it agreed to carry out the building work and by whom it was paid[179] . In Woolcock Street Investments[180] , the plurality noted that:

> "In Bryan v Maloney, it was found that there was no disconformity between the duty owed to the original owner and the duty owed to the subsequent owner. As Toohey J said[181] , that case was 'uncomplicated by anything arising from the contract between the appellant and Mrs Manion' (the original owner)."

139. In this case, by contrast, there was no substantial equivalence between the obligations of the appellant to the developer and the duty propounded by the respondent. That may be seen by a consideration of the terms of the contract between the appellant and the developer to which reference will be made in the next section of these reasons.

140. As to the second ground of distinction noted above, in the present case each purchaser from the developer exercised its contractual wisdom to bargain for protection against the risk of defects in the work. Purchasers of units in the serviced apartment complex from the developer, and the respondent, were protected by reason of the developer's promises in cll 32.6 and 32.7 of the sales contracts against the risk of economic loss because of defects of quality. It is true that these provisions did not protect purchasers or the respondent against the possibilities that the developer would not be of sufficient substance to meet the liability or that any defect would not be discovered within time to make a claim under the warranty. But as to these possibilities, the appellant had nothing to do with the purchaser's decision to accept the value of the developer's warranty or with the decision by the purchaser not to investigate for defects. Had a purchaser not been satisfied that its investment was adequately protected in this way, it could have avoided the risk of loss by taking its capital and investing elsewhere. As McHugh J said in Woolcock Street Investments[182] :

> "A commercial building is constructed or bought because it is perceived to be a suitable vehicle for investment. … [N]o prudent purchaser would contemplate buying a building without determining whether it has existing or potential construction defects. Knowledge of its defects, actual or potential, is central to any evaluation of its worth as an investment. In so far as risks are uncertain or unknown, the prudent purchaser will factor the risk into the price or obtain contractual protections or, if necessary, walk away from the negotiations."

The obligations of the appellant to the developer

141. Basten JA held that the developer was "vulnerable in the relevant sense" to the appellant. In this regard, his Honour said[183] :

> "The defects, so far as one can tell, do not involve complaints about the design stage of the project, but rather the execution of the building works. There was a superintendent appointed under the design and construct contract, but there can be no doubt that the developer relied upon the expertise, care and honesty of the builder in performing its obligations under the contract. Whatever may be possible in theory, there is no suggestion that in practical terms the contract was not administered in accordance with usual industry practices, which inevitably involve reliance by the developer on the exercise of responsibility by the builder. There is no reason in these circumstances to treat the developer as otherwise than vulnerable in the relevant sense."

142. This passage suggests that one may disregard the role of the Superintendent under the D&C contract as a mechanism apt to afford protection to the developer against loss of value due to latent defects. But, whatever the "usual industry practices" to which his Honour was referring, the provision made by cll 31 and 42 of the D&C contract for supervision and assessment of the appellant's performance by the Superintendent, linked as it was to payment of the appellant for its work, was a contractual mechanism which squarely placed the risk of deficient work upon the appellant.

143. The respondent referred to Barclay v Penberthy[184] to support its argument that the duty propounded by the respondent was owed by the appellant to the developer concurrently in contract and tort. In Barclay, the plaintiff succeeded in its claim for damages for economic loss suffered when the aircraft it had chartered crashed as a result of the pilot's negligence, killing the plaintiff's valued employees and thus depriving it of their services. The Court held that it was an implied term of the contract of charter that the charter would be carried out with reasonable skill and diligence. There was no express provision in the contract which dealt with the subject of this term. The obligation created by this implied term was sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover the loss suffered as a result of negligent performance of the contract between the plaintiff and the defendant. The content of the duty which arose from the defendant's assumption of responsibility under that contract was the same as that which arose under the implied term of the charter. That was also the case in Astley v Austrust[185] , to which Macfarlan JA referred. In each of these cases, the content of the duty was the same in contract and tort. That is not the case here.

144. In the present case, the liability of the appellant to the developer was the subject of detailed provisions relating to the risk of latent defects in the appellant's work. The provisions in cll 4, 30, 31, 37 and 42 of the D&C contract expressly cast onto the appellant the risk of expense required to make good any defect in the work. These detailed provisions were apt to secure performance of cl 55 of the D&C contract, which required that the construction be completed in accordance with detailed specifications. They set out the extent of the appellant's obligations to ensure that the developer should "get what it paid for". To supplement them with an obligation to take reasonable care to avoid a reasonably foreseeable economic loss to the developer in having to make good the consequences of latent defects caused by the appellant's defective work would be to alter the allocation of risks effected by the parties' contract.

145. The provisions of the D&C contract regulated the appellant's obligations to the developer and the extent of the appellant's liability for failing to meet those obligations. To the extent that the respondent's complaints in relation to the steel lintels and windows are grounded in an alleged failure to comply with the contract's specifications, reliance on a duty in the terms propounded by the respondent would be unnecessary and indeed embarrassing. Either the work and materials of the appellant complied with the specifications, in which case the appellant had fulfilled its obligations to the developer, or they did not. In relation to the other categories of alleged defect, whether the respondent's claims of defective work could be established would necessarily depend upon the specifications and other documents referred to in cl 55 of the D&C contract, rather than upon the general duty propounded by the respondent.

A duty owed by the appellant to the respondent independently of its obligations to the developer?

146. Basten JA analysed the position of the respondent in terms of its vulnerability to the appellant. His Honour said[186] :

> "[T]he [respondent] is to be viewed as a true successor in title to the interests of the developer. However, it was vulnerable with respect to latent defects in the same way that the developer was. Indeed, its position was weaker than that of the developer, which may have had some opportunity to carry out inspections during the course of the construction and before the defective materials were no longer examinable."

147. In relation to the ability of purchasers of lots from the developer to protect themselves against the risk of economic loss, Basten JA said[187] :

> "The question of legal protection is more complicated. The standard sale contracts did not include such protection. They were agreed between the builder and the developer and the builder retained a contractual right to be informed of and to approve any change in their terms. It seems inconsistent with the concept of vulnerability, in relation to the existence of a liability on the part of the [appellant] in tort, to say that the purchasers were not vulnerable because they could have insisted upon a contractual right as against the builder or the developer."

148. That reasoning is not consistent with Woolcock Street Investments[188] . And, in any event, in this case the purchasers did insist upon "a contractual right as against … the developer" in cl 32.6 of the sales contracts. It may also be noted that there was no factual basis for a conclusion that each purchaser was deprived by the appellant's conduct of the choice of bargaining with the developer for a more extensive warranty as to quality or of walking away from the negotiation and investing elsewhere if a satisfactory warranty at an acceptable price was not forthcoming. In this regard, there was no encouragement given by the appellant or suggestion that the appellant assumed responsibility to them for their decision.

149. As to the points made by Macfarlan and Leeming JJA in the Court of Appeal upon which the respondent relied in this Court, the question on which the liability asserted by the respondent depends is not whether the legislative scheme of the SSM Act and the SSFD Act excludes a duty of care in favour of the owners corporation. Rather, the question is whether the owners corporation itself suffered a loss in terms of the value of the common property vested in it when, viewed separately from the individual lot owners, it came into existence.

The circumstance that the respondent did not exist at the time that the defective work was carried out points against, rather than in favour of, the duty of care propounded by the respondent given that on this basis it could not have relied upon the appellant in any way. There is no basis for a finding of fact that there was an assumption of responsibility by the appellant in favour of the respondent, or known reliance on the appellant on the part of the respondent, in relation to the quality of the common property of the serviced apartment complex. Further, an owners corporation acquires the common property in a strata scheme without any outlay on its part. Its assets are not diminished by the acquisition, at least if the common property is worth more than the cost of repairing latent defects (and there is no suggestion here that the common property is worth less than the cost of repair). Accordingly, if one considers the owners corporation independently of the individual lot owners, it is impossible to see that it has suffered any loss by reason of the quality of the common property vested in it.

151. If the respondent is viewed as the alter ego of the purchasers from the developer, the respondent's position is not any stronger. Before explaining why that is so, it is desirable to acknowledge that it may be the better view of the position to regard the respondent for present purposes as the representative of the lot owners.

152. In Owners — Strata Plan No 43551 v Walter Construction Group Ltd[189] , Spigelman CJ, with whom Ipp and McColl JJA agreed, said that the statutory description of an owners corporation in s 20 of the SSFD Act as agent for the proprietors of individual lots should not be understood "solely in terms of an agency at common law." The precise significance of the reference to agency in s 20 of the SSFD Act is debatable[190] , but it is sufficient for present purposes to say that it tends to confirm, rather than to deny, that the detriment to the economic or financial interests of the owners corporation is, in substance, suffered by the owners of lots. There is nothing in the SSFD Act to suggest that the cost incurred by an owners corporation in meeting the need to keep the common property in good repair is not a loss truly borne by the individual lot owners, given that they are called upon to make proportionate contributions by way of levy under ss 75 and 76 of the SSM Act in order to meet that expense.

153. That view is supported by s 227(2) of the SSM Act, which provides in relation to common property that "[i]f the owners of the lots in a strata scheme are jointly entitled to take proceedings against any person … the proceedings may be taken by … the owners corporation." Section 227(3) goes on to provide that "[a]ny judgment … given … in favour of or against the owners corporation in any such proceedings has effect as if it were a judgment … given … in favour of or against the owners." These provisions are consistent with the view that the legislation, while establishing the owners corporation as a convenient vehicle for the vindication of the interests of the individual lot owners, does not deny or diminish those interests.

154. On the basis that the respondent is to be regarded as making its claim as a proxy for the purchasers from the developer, counsel for the respondent argued that cl 32.7 of the standard form contracts was concerned not with the protection of the purchasers, but with the conferral on the developer of a right to repair defects and thereby to mitigate the damages which might otherwise be recovered from it by the purchasers if they incurred expense in repairing defects themselves. Counsel's argument was evidently intended to lessen the force of the appellant's argument that the tortious duty propounded by the respondent was more extensive than the contractual protection which purchasers had obtained from the developer. As an argument in favour of discounting the protection conferred on the purchasers it is not persuasive.

155. Clause 32.7 expressly obliged the developer to repair defects brought to its attention within a specified period. The purchasers had a contractual right against the developer which could have protected them against the risk of which the respondent now complains had those rights been pursued in accordance with their terms. It is true that the purchasers would have been required to be alert to the possibility of latent defects in order to exercise their rights under cl 32.7, but the very existence of the provision reflects an awareness of the relevant risk as well as a means of dealing with it.

156. Counsel for the respondent also said that, if individual lot owners might have brought claims against the developer under cl 32.7 in respect of their proportionate share of the loss incurred by reason of the defects in the common property which have emerged, this right might not now be valuable, for example, because it might be unenforceable due to the lapse of time and associated expiration of the applicable limitation period for bringing an action in contract against the developer, or because of the financial inability of the developer to meet the claims. But these arguments serve only to make the point that the contractual rights of individual purchasers for which they bargained were cast in terms which expressly limited their scope and duration in a manner inconsistent with the open-ended liability now asserted by the respondent.

Winnipeg Condominium and dangerous defects

157. Basten JA derived support[191] for his answer to the separate question from the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Winnipeg Condominium Corporation No 36 v Bird Construction Co[192] . In that case the Supreme Court of Canada held that a builder owes a duty of care in tort to a subsequent purchaser of the building if it can be shown that it is foreseeable that a failure to take reasonable care in constructing the building would create defects that pose a substantial danger to the health and safety of occupants. Where such defects become manifest before any damage to persons or property occurs, a subsequent purchaser may recover the reasonable cost of making good the defects in order to put the building into a non-dangerous state.

158. The respondent argued that the Court of Appeal erred in limiting the duty said to be owed by the appellant to the respondent to cases where the repair of defects in construction was necessary to obviate a situation of danger to person or property. Nevertheless, counsel for the respondent sought to rely upon the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Winnipeg Condominium as a last resort to support the Court of Appeal's answer to the separate question.

159. It may be noted that in Winnipeg Condominium the Supreme Court of Canada chose not to follow the approach of the House of Lords in D & F Estates Ltd v Church Commissioners for England[193] and Murphy v Brentwood District Council[194] .

160. The approach in Winnipeg Condominium was noted, but not followed, by this Court in Bryan v Maloney[195] and in Woolcock Street Investments[196] . In Fangrove Pty Ltd v Tod Group Holdings Pty Ltd[197] , de Jersey CJ, in the Court of Appeal of Queensland, noted that no Australian authority had adopted this approach. In terms of Australian authority, the position has not improved for the respondent in this regard in the years since that case was decided.

161. The approach in Winnipeg Condominium is attended by the practical difficulty that "the existence of the duty will not be known until after the defects have occurred and they can be confidently categorised as dangerous."[198] More importantly, in point of principle the approach in Winnipeg Condominium is driven by the assumption that the cost of repair or diminution in market value of a building is a reflex of the liability for physical damage to person or property which may occur if the defect is not repaired. Quite apart from the haphazard nature of this notion of equivalence of damage, this approach is flawed in that it detaches the duty not to inflict harm from the harm which is the gist of the cause of action.

162. As Lord Oliver of Aylmerton said in Murphy v Brentwood District Council[199] :

> "If one assumes the … case of one who has come into possession of a defective chattel … which may be a danger if it is used without being repaired, it is impossible to see upon what principle such a person, simply because the chattel has become dangerous, could recover the cost of repair from the original manufacturer.
>
> The suggested distinction between mere defect and dangerous defect … is, I believe, fallacious. … [O]nce the danger ceases to be latent … [t]he plaintiff's expenditure is not expenditure incurred in minimising the damage or in preventing the injury from occurring. The injury will not now
> [140721]
> ever occur unless the plaintiff causes it to do so by courting a danger of which he is aware and his expenditure is incurred not in preventing an otherwise inevitable injury but in order to enable him to continue to use the property or the chattel."

The position in other common law jurisdictions

163. The conclusion that the duty propounded by the respondent should not be accepted is in accord with the position in the United Kingdom[200] . In addition, the preponderance of judicial authority in the United States accords with the conclusion that the respondent's claim should fail[201] .

164. That a different view prevails in Canada has already been noted. For the reasons set out above, that approach should not be followed in Australia. The respondent's preferred position is also supported by the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on appeal from New Zealand in Invercargill City Council v Hamlin[202] . But in that decision it was acknowledged that it departed from the approach which has prevailed in the United Kingdom[203] . For the reasons set out above, the latter view better accords with the coherent development of the common law.

Conclusion and orders

165. The appeal should be allowed.

166. The orders of the Court of Appeal of New South Wales should be set aside, and in their place it should be ordered that the appeal to the Court of Appeal of New South Wales should be dismissed with costs.

167. The first respondent should be granted special leave to cross-appeal, but the cross-appeal should be dismissed with costs.

168. The first respondent must pay the appellant's costs of the appeal to this Court.

Gageler J:

169. A duty of care at common law is a duty of a specified person, or a person within a specified class, to exercise reasonable care within a specified area of responsibility to avoid specified loss to another specified person, or to a person within another specified class. Whether or not a particular duty of care should be recognised in a novel category of case is determined on the understanding that "[t]here are policies at work in the law which can be identified and applied to novel problems, but the law of tort develops by reference to principles, which must be capable of general application"[204] .

170. The question in this appeal from the Court of Appeal of the Supreme Court of New South Wales is whether the builder of a strata development should be recognised to have a duty to exercise reasonable care, in executing the building work undertaken pursuant to a contract with the developer, to avoid specified loss to the owners corporation, which is the body corporate brought into existence on registration of the strata plan[205] , as the legal owner of the common property[206] , with an ongoing statutory responsibility for keeping the common property in a good state of repair[207] .

171. The specified loss, on the widest formulation of the putative duty, would extend to the cost of repairing all defects in common property not apparent at the time of registration of the strata plan. A narrower formulation of the duty, which the Court of Appeal accepted, would limit the specified loss to the cost of repairing only those defects in common property not apparent at the time of registration of the strata plan which are structural, are dangerous to persons or other property, or make an apartment in the building uninhabitable.

172. Neither the existence nor the scope of the putative duty of care can turn on the peculiar feature of an owners corporation that the corporation has no option but to be brought into existence as the legal owner of common property and to shoulder the ongoing responsibility for keeping that common property in a good state of repair. It is not the function of the common law to fashion a principle of tortious liability which would confer a right to compensation exclusively on the unique statutory creation of a particular statutory scheme.

173. If the builder of a strata development is to be recognised as having the putative duty of care, it is because the owners corporation stands in relation to the builder as proxy for the owners from time to time of the registered lots corresponding to apartments in the building. In them the beneficial interest in the common property is vested as tenants in common[208] . For them the corporation is constituted agent[209] . To them the corporation can ultimately look to cover the cost of repair if that cost cannot be recouped elsewhere[210] . It is they who bear the economic burden of the loss.

174. Whether or not the putative duty of care should be recognised therefore falls to be determined by applying principles which must be capable of general application to determine the existence and scope of such duty as a builder may have to exercise reasonable care, in the execution of building work, to avoid a subsequent owner incurring the cost of repairing latent defects in the building.

175. It has long been accepted that a common law duty of care can coexist with a duty in contract and that a duty of care can be to avoid economic loss. That being so, legal taxonomy alone cannot assign such common law liability as a builder may have to a subsequent owner of a building to the province of contract to the exclusion of the province of tort. Nor is recognition of a duty on the part of a builder to avoid a subsequent owner incurring the cost of remedying a latent defect in the building open to criticisms of indeterminacy which often count against recognising a common law duty of care to avoid economic loss.

176. Markedly divergent approaches to whether a builder should be recognised to have such a duty of care to a subsequent owner have now prevailed for more than two decades in other common law jurisdictions. In the United Kingdom, a duty of care has been rejected[211] . In Canada, a duty of care has been recognised, limited to the cost of remedying dangerous defects in the building[212] . In New Zealand, a duty of care has been recognised, extending to the cost of remedying all latent defects[213] . There is no reason to consider any one of those approaches to result in a greater net cost to society than any other. Provided the principle of tortious liability is known, builders can be expected to accommodate it in the contractual terms on which they are prepared to build and subsequent owners can be expected to accommodate it in the contractual terms on which they are prepared to purchase.

177. There is a net cost to society which arises from uncertainty as to the principle to be applied. McHugh J made that point in the context of discussing tortious liability for economic loss more generally when he referred to costs to parties and to the public of principles or rules whose application cannot confidently be predicted, and stated that "[i]f negligence law is to serve its principal purpose as an instrument of corrective justice, the principles and rules which govern claims in negligence must be as clear and as easy of application as is possible"[214] . Concern to minimise the cost of legal uncertainty was identified as a factor in overruling, rather than attempting to distinguish, prior authority so as to arrive at the position in respect of the liability of a builder to a subsequent owner which has prevailed in the United Kingdom[215] .

178. Part of the difficulty encountered by the Court of Appeal in the present case was in discerning the principle for which Bryan v Maloney[216] remains authority after Woolcock Street Investments Pty Ltd v CDG Pty Ltd[217] .

179. The question addressed in Bryan v Maloney was identified by the plurality in that case (Mason CJ, Deane and Gaudron JJ) as "whether, under the law of negligence, a professional builder who constructs a house for the then owner of the land owes a prima facie duty to a subsequent owner of the house to exercise reasonable care to avoid … foreseeable damage" specified as "the diminution in value of the house when a latent and previously unknown defect in its footings … becomes manifest"[218] equating to "the amount which would necessarily be expended in remedying the inadequate footing[s] and their consequences"[219] . Their Honours gave a positive answer to that question. They said that the contrary approach which had then recently come to prevail in the United Kingdom rested on "a narrower view of the scope of the modern law of negligence and a more rigid compartmentalization of contract and tort than is acceptable under the law of this country"[220] .

180. The plurality in Bryan v Maloney referred to the relationship between the builder and the subsequent owner of a house as one characterised "by assumption of responsibility on the part of the builder and likely reliance on the part of the owner"[221] , and emphasised that the decision in that case turned, "to no small extent, on the particular kind of economic loss involved" and, in particular, on the building having been "erected to be used as a permanent dwelling house"[222] . The other member of the majority, Toohey J, similarly emphasised that the decision related to "the building of a house that is a non-commercial building"[223] . Subsequent decisions of intermediate courts of appeal treated its holding as confined to buildings of that description[224] . The plurality in Woolcock Street Investments (Gleeson CJ, Gummow, Hayne and Heydon JJ) nevertheless expressed doubt that Bryan v Maloney should be "understood as depending upon drawing a bright line between cases concerning the construction of dwellings and cases concerning the construction of other buildings" and pointed to difficulties of maintaining such a distinction[225] .

181. The question addressed in Woolcock Street Investments was whether an engineering company owed a duty to exercise reasonable care, in designing the foundations of a warehouse and office complex, to avoid a subsequent purchaser of the building sustaining economic loss when it became apparent after purchase that the building was suffering substantial structural distress. The plurality noted that the engineering company designed the foundations in circumstances where "the original owner asserted control over the investigations which the engineer undertook for the purposes of performing its work"[226] . Their Honours did not, however, treat the alleged defect in the design of the foundations as outside the scope of the work undertaken. Their stated ground for concluding that the engineering company did not owe the putative duty was that the subsequent purchaser did not allege that it "could not have protected itself against the economic loss"[227] . They mentioned as a possible means of achieving that protection that the subsequent purchaser might have contracted on terms which would have cast on the engineering company the "economic consequences" of any negligence[228] .

182. The ground so stated by the plurality for denying the putative duty accorded with the observation of McHugh J, who also formed part of the majority in Woolcock Street Investments, that "the capacity of a person to protect him or herself from damage by means of contractual obligations is merely one — although often a decisive — reason for rejecting the existence of a duty of care in tort in cases of pure economic loss"[229] . In Woolcock Street Investments, it was the decisive factor.

183. McHugh J referred in Woolcock Street Investments to a variety of ways in which a subsequent purchaser might take steps to protect against the risk of latent defects by adjusting the terms on which the subsequent purchaser is prepared to contract with the vendor[230] . He also referred to the possibility of commissioning expert investigation of the building prior to purchase[231] . He pointed to disadvantages of imposing tortious liability on a builder which included the practical difficulties in determining whether there has been a breach of an appropriate standard of care and the incentive to create artificial business structures to avoid a long tail of claims[232] . He continued[233] :

> "Of course … contractual protections and expert investigations may turn out to be inadequate. In that event, a remedy in tort — particularly a remedy against secondary parties such as architects, engineers and sub-contractors — would be desirable. But cases where contractual protection will be found deficient are likely to be the exception rather than the rule. Whether exceptional or not, the ultimate question is whether the residual advantages that an action in tort would give are great enough to overcome the disadvantages to which I have referred. This involves a value judgment, and the data that might permit that judgment to be made, if the data exists at all, is not before us. Because that is so, the better view is that this Court should not take the step of extending the principle of Bryan v Maloney to commercial premises. That is, this Court should hold that, in the absence of a contract between the owner of commercial premises and a person involved in the design or construction of those premises, the latter does not owe a duty to the current owner to prevent pure economic loss."

184. Turning specifically to the continuing authority of Bryan v Maloney, McHugh J said[234] :

> "Nothing in this judgment is intended to suggest that Bryan v Maloney would now be > decided differently. Whether a different decision would now be reached under current doctrine almost certainly depends on whether evidence would reveal that the purchasers of dwelling houses are as vulnerable as the Court assumed in that case."
>
> [140724]

185. Absent any application that Bryan v Maloney should be overruled, and absent data which might permit the making of a value judgment different from that made in Woolcock Street Investments, the view expressed by McHugh J in Woolcock Street Investments should in my opinion be accepted. The continuing authority of Bryan v Maloney should be confined to a category of case in which the building is a dwelling house and in which the subsequent owner can be shown by evidence to fall within a class of persons incapable of protecting themselves from the consequences of the builder's want of reasonable care. Outside that category of case, it should now be acknowledged that a builder has no duty in tort to exercise reasonable care, in the execution of building work, to avoid a subsequent owner incurring the cost of repairing latent defects in the building. That is because, by virtue of the freedom they have to choose the price and non-price terms on which they are prepared to contract to purchase, there is no reason to consider that subsequent owners cannot ordinarily be expected to be able to protect themselves against incurring economic loss of that nature.

186. The plurality in Woolcock Street Investments noted that the actual decision in Bryan v Maloney had by then been "overtaken, at least to a significant extent, by various statutory forms of protection for those who buy dwelling houses which turn out to be defective"[235] . The Court of Appeal in the present case referred in detail to the current statutory regime in New South Wales[236] . If legal protection is now to be extended, it is best done by legislative extension of those statutory forms of protection. Neither version of the putative duty of care should be recognised.

187. I agree with the orders proposed by the Chief Justice.

190 It may be of some significance in this regard that, in Salomon v Salomon & Co [1897] AC 22 at 31, the great case which established that a company formed under the Companies Act 1862 (UK) and its analogues is a legal person separate from its shareholders, Lord Halsbury LC expressly rejected the proposition that a limited liability company could be regarded as the "agent" of its shareholders; see also at 35, 54–55. The terms of s 20, in deploying the concept of agency, are at least apt to ensure that an owners corporation is not the owner of the common property as an entity distinct from the lot owners. Rather, it is a convenient statutory conduit for the funds necessary to maintain and conserve the beneficial interests of lot owners in the common property.

Queensland Body Corporate And Community Management Commissioner Adjudicators Orders

Decision delivered on 10 October 2014

Pet by-law — Whether the respondent's dog should be removed under the current by-law — Whether the current by-law is valid — Act, s 94, 169, 108(7).

Where the respondent kept a dog in her lot even though the complex was designated as a "no dogs" complex in its by-laws and via signs at the front of the complex. Residents could seek the body corporate's approval to keep one cat per lot. The by-laws for the scheme provided that no dogs were allowed. At the interim stages of the matter the adjudicator wrote to the body corporate expressing his interim view that the by-law was unreasonable; however, owners provided submissions supporting the keeping of the by-law.

Held.

1. If the by-law went beyond simply providing for the regulation of the use and enjoyment of the lots in the scheme it prohibited the use and enjoyment of the lots.

2. In this instance the by-law did not prohibit the keeping of pets, only the keeping of certain types of pets.

3. If the by-law was oppressive or unreasonable under section 180(7) the adjudicator had the power to order that it be removed.

4. The context in which the by-law prohibited the keeping of certain animals or certain classes of animals had to be considered including the scheme's "no dog" policy, the extent to which the environment would be suitable, the effect on owners and occupiers use and enjoyment of lots and common property and the dangerous nature of dogs.

5. On all the material provided, there was no evidence to suggest that the circumstances of the scheme are such that they required a prohibition on all dogs.

By-law 13 was unreasonable and invalid pursuant to section 180(7) of the Act. The body corporate was to amend its pet by-law and following that the respondent would need to apply to the committee for permission to keep her dog.

M. Tsui, Adjudicator:

ORDERS MADE:

1. I hereby order that the application is dismissed.
2. I further order that By-law 13 in the community management statement for the Body Corporate for The Timbertop Terraces which states:

> "No dogs are allowed on scheme land. The body corporate must place appropriate signs at the main entrance on Pineridge Road, Runaway Bay. The committee may, at its absolute discretion, grant permission for one cat to be kept in any lot, after receipt of a written request from the occupier (and if the occupier is not the owner, written permission from the owner) with accompanying veterinary evidence that the cat has been de-sexed."

is invalid.

3. I further order that, within three (3) months of the date of this order, the Body Corporate for The Timbertop Terraces shall lodge a request to record a new community management statement which replaces the current By-law 13 with either:

> A. An alternative pet by-law passed by special resolution at a general meeting of the body corporate; or, if no alternative by-law is passed by the body corporate:

B. The wording of By-law 11 contained in Schedule 4 of the Act.

M. Tsui, Adjudicator:

Introduction

[1] This is a dispute concerning a dog that is being kept on the respondent's lot. The pet by-law (by-law 13) for the scheme states that no dogs are allowed on scheme land. The body corporate says the respondent is in contravention of by-law 13 by keeping a dog on her property and seeks to have the dog removed.

[2] The main issues that have arisen out of this application are whether the respondent has breached by-law 13, whether by-law 13 is in fact a valid by-law, and whether there is any basis to require the removal of the respondent's dog.

Jurisdiction

[3] I am satisfied this matter falls within the legislative dispute resolution provisions.[1] It is a dispute between the body corporate and a lot owner about a claimed contravention of a by-law under the scheme's community management statement (CMS).

[4] An adjudicator's order may require a person to act, or prohibit a person from acting, in a way stated in the order.[2] Further, an adjudicator's order may contain ancillary and consequential provisions the adjudicator considers necessary or appropriate.[3]

Procedural Matters

[5] In November 2013, the Commissioner's Office attempted to organise a conciliation session to assist in the resolution of this dispute. Unfortunately conciliation did not proceed. The body corporate then lodged the current adjudication application to resolve the dispute.

[6] Under section 243 of the Act, a copy of the adjudication application was provided to the respondent and all lot owners in the scheme, with an invitation for written submissions in response to the application. Submissions were received from five lot owners however the respondent has not made a submission.

[7] In the course of investigating the application, I wrote to the body corporate setting out my provisional views in this matter. In particular, I explained that it was my provisional view that by-law 13 is unreasonable as it prohibits the keeping of dogs absolutely, without provision for the body corporate to consider individual circumstances to determine whether it would be appropriate to allow the keeping of a particular dog. I put the parties on notice that I was considering dismissing the application and instead, making an order to invalidate by-law 13 and requiring the body corporate to replace the by-law. Therefore I invited the body corporate committee and all lot owners to make further submissions in light of my provisional views and to comment on the appropriateness of making an order regarding the validity of the by-law and requiring its replacement.

[8] In response to this invitation, I received eight further submissions from lot owners. Seven of these submissions support the keeping of the current by-law 13 for various reasons which will be considered below.

Analysis

[9] In determining this application, I will consider the pet by-law in this scheme, the relevant legislative provisions, the case-law on pet by-laws and the respondent's particular circumstances.

Has the respondent breached by-law 13?

[10] By-law 13 of the scheme's CMS states:

"No dogs are allowed on scheme land. The body corporate must place appropriate signs at the main entrance on Pineridge Road, Runaway Bay. The committee may, at its absolute discretion, grant permission for one cat to be kept in any lot, after receipt of a written request from the occupier (and if the occupier is not the owner, written permission from the owner) with accompanying veterinary evidence that the cat has been de-sexed."

[11] The body corporate says since the scheme was established in 1989, this by-law has been upheld with signs being displayed at the front entry indicating dogs are prohibited.

[12] On 13 September 2013, the body corporate issued the respondent with a contravention notice advising that she was in breach of by-law 13 by keeping a dog on her lot. The notice required the respondent not to repeat the contravention. The body corporate says the respondent did not respond to the contravention notice and continued to keep the dog on her lot.

[13] The respondent has not made a submission in response to the application. On face value, the respondent has breached by-law 13 by keeping a dog on her lot contrary to the by-law.

Is by-law 13 a valid by-law?

[14] However, as raised with the parties in my provisional views, I have concerns regarding the validity of by-law 13. There are two key provisions in the body corporate legislation relating to by-laws that are of particular relevance here.

a) Does the by-law regulate the use and enjoyment of lots?

[15] Section 169 of the Act deals with the content and extent of by-laws. Under section 169(1)(b)(i), a by-law may only provide for the regulation of the use and enjoyment of lots in the scheme. A by-law that goes beyond regulating and instead prohibits a particular use and enjoyment of a lot has been found to be an invalid by-law.

[16] In the Queensland Civil and Administrative Tribunal (Tribunal) decision of Body Corporate for River City Apartments v McGarvey[4] (River City Apartments), Mr Barlow SC considered a by-law which purported to prohibit the keeping of any animals on the scheme. He said [at para 49] that "a by-law that prohibits altogether the keeping of pets in lots is not a by-law regulating the use or enjoyment of lots, but purports to prohibit a particular use and type of enjoyment altogether. It therefore goes beyond the scope of a valid by-law permitted by s 169 and is invalid."

[17] In the current dispute, by-law 13 is not a blanket ban on all animals. Rather, the by-law prohibits the keeping of dogs and allows the keeping of one cat upon permission being granted by the body corporate. A similar by-law was considered in the decision of McKenzie v Body Corporate for Kings Row Centre (McKenzie)[5] in which the by-law in question did not prohibit the keeping of pets, but only the keeping of certain types of pets. In that decision, Mr Barlow SC concluded that the by-law did purport to regulate, rather than to prohibit, a use of lots in the scheme — namely, the keeping of pets.

As such, I am of the view that while by-law 13 in the current application is restrictive in the type of pets it permits, it does not seek to prohibit all pets. Therefore, I consider the by-law falls within the regulation power provided by section 169 of the Act and is not invalid for this reason.

b) Is the by-law oppressive or unreasonable?

[19] The second legislative provision that needs to be considered is section 180(7) of the Act, which states:

"A by-law must not be oppressive or unreasonable, having regard to the interests of all owners and occupiers of lots included in the scheme and the use of the common property for the scheme."

[20] If a by-law is found to be contrary to section 180(7), an adjudicator has the power to order that the by-law be removed.[6]

[21] There has been considerable discussion in recent years over the validity of by-laws that purport to prohibit all animals in a scheme, or to prohibit certain classes of animals.

[22] In McKenzie, the by-law in question specifically prohibited the keeping of cats and dogs (apart from those that already had the approval of the committee as of a certain date). There, the Tribunal found that such a by-law was unreasonable as there were circumstances in which dogs and cats which are "ordinary domestic pets" could be kept in community titles schemes, subject to reasonable conditions without causing an inconvenience to other residents.[7]

[23] The issue was further considered by Mr Barlow SC in River City Apartments in which he clarified that section 180(7) requires consideration of the by-law in the context of the particular scheme within which it operates. Mr Barlow SC stated [at para 62]:

> "It cannot be said that in all cases a by-law prohibiting the keeping of certain pets in a scheme is automatically unreasonable or oppressive. It must be determined in the context of each particular scheme. Although, in many cases, a by-law which did not provide for the body corporate to consider individual circumstances in determining whether or not to allow a particular lot owner to keep a certain type of pet would be unreasonable or oppressive, it is necessary for that question to be considered in each case having regard to the facts before the adjudicator and, in the context of those facts, the interests of all owners and occupiers in the scheme and the use of the common property."

[24] It is therefore necessary for me to consider by-law 13 in the context of the circumstances of this particular scheme to determine whether it is unreasonable or oppressive.

No dog policy

[25] One of the arguments raised in support of the application is that owners have purchased into the complex knowing that dogs are not permitted. It is submitted that the prohibition against dogs is not only spelt out in the by-law but it is also clearly signed at the entry to the complex. Some owners state they have chosen to live in this scheme on the basis that dogs are not permitted.

[26] While it may seem unfair that some owners are keeping dogs on their lots in apparent disregard of the by-law while others may have bought into the scheme in reliance on the by-law, this has no bearing on whether the by-law is valid. All owners and occupiers are subject to their scheme's by-laws however this does not prevent an owner from challenging the validity of an existing by-law or an adjudicator from determining its validity as is the case here.

Suitability of environment

[27] One of the arguments raised by several of the submissions is that the complex is unsuitable for dogs as the units are closely joined together and the backyards are too small.

[28] In McKenzie, the scheme in question was a high rise building of units. Despite this, the Tribunal accepted that cats and dogs could potentially be kept in the scheme without incident. Following this decision, I am not satisfied that Timbertop Terraces is inappropriate for the keeping of dogs merely because the units are within close proximity of each other. That is the nature of community living. There has been nothing presented in the submissions evidencing anything in the nature, structure or environment of this scheme which convinces me that the lots here are automatically unsuitable for dogs of every kind in every situation.

[29] Further, while I note owners' concerns regarding the size of the yards, no expert evidence has been presented to suggest that the yards are inappropriate for the keeping of a dog.

Effect on owners' and occupiers' use and enjoyment of lots and common property

[30] The submissions also raise concerns regarding the detriment that dogs cause to an owner or occupier's use and enjoyment of their lot and common property. Some say there are already dogs in the complex that bark while others suggest that barking is a very foreseeable problem. There are also concerns raised about dogs being allowed to wander over and defecate on common property. One owner says he is allergic to dogs (and cats) which would cause issues with sneezing and sleeping.

[31] Although I appreciate these issues may be genuine concerns for some owners, I am not satisfied they form a reasonable basis to ban all dogs from the scheme. One owner submitted that "dogs, no matter how well intended…will ALWAYS cause a nuisance". I do not accept this proposition. Rather, I consider there are circumstances in which some dogs could be kept on the scheme without causing such inconveniences to other residents. It has become very common place for domestic pets like dogs to live in community titles schemes. While some may cause nuisance problems, a number do not.

[32] Further, the committee can impose a variety of reasonable conditions to minimise the risk of any dog creating a nuisance or interfering with other residents' use and enjoyment of their lot or common property. Additionally, if a dog is permitted to be kept on a lot and does create a nuisance, the body corporate may seek its removal pursuant to the nuisance provisions. One should also bear in mind what actually constitutes a nuisance. The test for nuisance is an objective, rather than a subjective one such that the activity complained of needs to be of "such volume or frequency that it would interfere unreasonably with the life of another lot owner of ordinary sensitivity".[8]

Dangerous nature of dogs

[33] One submission stated that despite what dog owners may think about the non-vicious nature of their dogs, they are potentially unsafe. The owner in his submission recounts his personal experience of being attacked by a dog which has left him with a fear of dogs of any shape or size. He also submits that there are a number of small children living in the complex and that even a small dog can be dangerous with small children around. As such, it is submitted that keeping them as pets is not practical or safe in this kind of complex.

[34] While I am aware and sympathetic to the fact that dog attacks can and do happen, I do not consider that the possibility of this risk should preclude all dogs from being kept on the scheme. Dogs are an ordinary part of everyday life and by large, they are a peaceable domestic pet. Modern day living has meant that we are living in closer proximity to our neighbours and as a result, one expects to come into contact with neighbouring dogs in our daily travels.

[35] I do not consider it reasonable to say that because there are small children in a complex, dogs cannot be allowed there. This would be like saying cars are not permitted in the complex as driving can cause accidents, especially if there are children around. How this sort of "risk" is normally addressed in a complex is for by-laws to be implemented and signs to be put in place requiring a speed limit to be adhered to, to prevent the likelihood of such accidents. Similarly, it is not reasonable to ban all dogs from the complex because of the possibility that dogs may attack. Instead, what would be reasonable is for each dog to be assessed on its own merits and where a dog is permitted, conditions may be put in place for example, requiring the animal to only traverse common property for the purpose of entering and exiting the scheme and to be appropriately restrained or transported by vehicle during such times. This would ensure the animal is never 'loose' or unrestrained on common property and therefore unable to come into direct contact with other residents.

Summary

[36] Based on the material submitted before me, there is nothing to suggest the circumstances of this scheme are such that it requires a prohibition of all dogs. Rather, I consider there may be instances where dogs could be kept on the scheme without causing an inconvenience to other residents. Accordingly, after considering the arguments raised, I consider by-law 13 is unreasonable pursuant to section 180(7) of the Act and is invalid.

Replacement of by-law 13

[37] As I have determined that the current pet by-law is invalid, the next question to be addressed is what should be implemented as an alternative pet by-law.

[38] One option is to restore an earlier by-law.[9] By-law 11 as recorded for The Timbertop Terraces on 8 August 1989 states:

> "Keeping of Animals. Subject to Section 30(12), a proprietor or occupier of a lot shall not, without the approval in writing of the Committee keep any animal upon his lot or the common property."

[39] While this by-law appears appropriate, as it refers to section 30(12) of the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 and not the current Act which the scheme is registered under, it would require an amendment to the legislative references and terminology.

[40] A more appropriate alternative in the circumstances would be to implement the standard pet by-law in Schedule 4 of the Act which has the same effect as the previous By-law 11. The by-law in Schedule 4 states:

> (1) The occupier of a lot must not, without the body corporate's written approval —
>
> (a) bring or keep an animal on the lot or the common property; or > (b) permit an invitee to bring or keep an animal on the lot or the common property.
> (2) The occupier must obtain the body corporate's written approval before bringing, or permitting an invitee to bring, an animal onto the lot or the common property.

[41] Under this by-law, the committee may decide on a case by case basis, whether or not to approve a particular animal sought to be kept on the scheme. The committee should note the requirement under section 94(2) of the Act which requires a body corporate to act reasonably in anything it does including making a decision. In considering a pet application, the committee may impose reasonable conditions on the approval to alleviate any risk of nuisance or unreasonable interference with the peace and enjoyment of other residents.

[42] Alternatively, the body corporate may adopt its own new pet by-law by special resolution at a general meeting. In doing so, the body corporate should take into consideration the comments I have made above to ensure the new by-law is valid.

What should happen with the respondent's dog?

[43] I note that the respondent does not have body corporate approval for the dog kept on her lot. Once the body corporate amends the pet by-law, the respondent will need to apply to the committee for permission to keep the dog. In considering the request, the committee must act reasonably. The following are conditions that adjudicators have previously placed on the keeping of pets:

- The dog must be kept within the lot while it is present on scheme land.
- The dog must traverse common property only for the purpose of being brought onto or taken off scheme land, at which time the dog must be appropriately restrained.
- The dog must not cause a nuisance to any other occupiers or unreasonably interfere with the enjoyment of their lots.
- The dog must be cleaned, trimmed, immunised and treated for worms, fleas and ticks, in accordance with the recommendations of a qualified veterinary surgeon.
- The dog's waste must be disposed of in such a way that it does not create noxious odours or otherwise contaminate the scheme.
- The committee shall be entitled to rescind permission for the dog if it reasonably considers the applicant has not complied with these conditions and that the applicant has failed to respond appropriately to warnings about their concerns.

[44] Finally, I note that none of the submissions have made any specific complaints about the respondent's dog to suggest that it causes a nuisance. Neither has the body corporate identified how the respondent's dog is interfering with other residents' enjoyment of their lots or common property. Rather, the sole basis for the application is that the respondent is keeping a dog on her property in contravention of the current by-law 13, which I have determined to be invalid. Accordingly, unless evidence is given to suggest otherwise, it would be difficult to see how the committee would have any reasonable basis for not approving the respondent's dog. The parties should note that if the committee refuses to grant its approval for the dog, it is open for the respondent to lodge an application with this Office to dispute the committee's decision.

Conclusion

[45] Although prima facie, the respondent has breached by-law 13, I am dismissing the application on the basis that the by-law is unreasonable pursuant to section 180(7) and cannot be relied upon by the body corporate to require the removal of the respondent's dog.

[46] I have ordered that the by-law must be replaced. Owners may pass a resolution at a general meeting within the next three months to adopt an alternative pet by-law. If no alternative by-law is passed within that stated period, the new pet by-law shall be By-law 11 in Schedule 4 of the Act.

[47] The cost of amending the by-law and recording the new CMS will be the responsibility of the body corporate. It is then open for the respondent to apply for approval from the body corporate to keep her dog in accordance with the new by-law.

[48] Finally, it should be noted that if the respondent does not apply for approval under the new by-law, or the body corporate refuses to give approval on reasonable grounds, the respondent should then remove the dog from the scheme.

Conveyancing — Community schemes — Arbitration generally — Enforcing the award made by an arbitrator — Management rights — Review of resident unit manager's annual salary — Removal of duties from resident manager's duty schedule — Reduction in salary — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld), Ch 6, s 227(1)(d), 229(2), 312.

The applicant body corporate received complaints from lot owners regarding the security services provided by the respondent resident unit manager who had operated as the caretaker and letting agent within the scheme since 1999. The parties agreed that the body corporate would assume the security duties and would deduct an amount which was to be agreed upon from the resident unit manager's salary as a result of its resumption of those duties.

An agreement as to the correct reduction in salary could not be agreed upon after three meetings with numerous quotes provided by the body corporate and the resident unit manager. The body corporate moved to seek an independent valuation of the security services. Solicitors for the resident unit manager wrote to the body corporate noting that the resident unit manager had not requested an independent valuation.

Nevertheless, the body corporate wrote to the Queensland Law Society and asked for an arbitrator to be appointed. The resident unit manager was copied into all correspondence and later signed an acknowledgement noting its agreement for an arbitrator to be appointed.

Less than a month after his appointment, the arbitrator received correspondence from the resident unit manager advising that it would no longer be participating in the arbitration and that there would not be any point as the relationship between the resident unit manager and the body corporate chairperson had become strained.

Ultimately after seeking to withdraw, the resident unit manager partially participated in the arbitration by continuing to provide requested material to the arbitrator. The arbitrator found in favour of the body corporate and awarded a reduced salary.

The resident unit manager objected to the award and the body corporate sought the enforcement of the award.

Held: body corporate's application dismissed.

1. The arbitration was in fact ineffective to resolve the dispute between the parties: [36].

2. The dispute was a "complex dispute" and came under the provisions of s 227(1)(d) within Ch 6 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld): [36].

3. The dispute could only have been resolved using the remedies set out in s 229(2) — arbitration was not an option under that section: [36].

Dalton J:

[1] The applicant, Liberty, is the body corporate of a community titles scheme which runs a large (predominantly) residential block on the Gold Coast. In 2004 Batwing took an assignment of an On-site Management Agreement (OMA) originally dating from 15 September 1999. Batwing under the agreement was both the letting agent and service contractor within the meaning of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) (BCCMA). Something named "Security Objective" is set out in the schedule to the OMA as part of the services which the service contractor must provide. The parties fell into dispute about the provision of security services by Batwing. There was an arbitration conducted and the arbitrator delivered an award on 19 May 2011.

[2] Liberty makes an application pursuant to s 33 of the Commercial Arbitration Act 1990 (Qld) for leave to enforce the arbitration award and for a declaration that Batwing's annual remuneration under the OMA be reduced. Batwing makes a cross-application for declarations that the award is a nullity.

[3] The OMA provided for a yearly on-site manager's fee payable in monthly instalments – cl 6.2. At cll 6.12 and 6.13 it contained express provisions for the body corporate to reduce services provided by the service contractor and reduce the fee paid to the service contractor accordingly. Clause 19.2(b) mentioned security services in particular in this context. Strangely the provisions were never relied upon by the applicant. Nonetheless there is no suggestion that they are exclusive of the parties' rights and obligations.

[4] Clause 12 of the OMA deals with default and termination. Clause 12.1 lists a number of specific defaults, none of which is said to have occurred here. Clause 12.2 then provides that on such default there is a procedure to terminate the OMA. Clause 12.7 provides that if there is any dispute between the parties with respect to the subject matter of default or termination (which must mean as those words are used in the preceding subclauses), there is a particular dispute procedure which applies. That dispute procedure includes at cl 12.10:

> "If the dispute is not resolved by the exchange of notices the parties must confer in the presence of a mediator appointed by the Queensland Law Society Incorporated. If the dispute has not been resolved within thirty days after the appointment of a mediator by the parties, the dispute shall be submitted to arbitration administered by the Queensland Law Society Incorporated. …"

[5] On 4 March 2010 the chairman of the body corporate committee sent an email to Batwing attaching a complaint about security services from a lot-holder. One gathers that this is not the first such complaint as it is described in the email as the "straw that broke the camel's back". The email continues:

> "I will be recommending to Committee that the Body Corporate takes over the responsibility of Security as soon as we can vote on it at the next meeting and deduct the allowance from your contract … you can contest the issue, but I am confident we have more than adequate justification for making this move. …"

[6] Batwing replied on 5 March 2010 saying:

> "I have never contested the issue of BC taking on security.
>
> It's all yours.
> Make me an offer, and if acceptable by me, draw up the deed of variation and it's done."

[7] Later that same day the chairman replied, taking issue with some of the Batwing email not extracted and continuing:

> "Nevertheless, this will all become the Body Corporate's concern now that you have again agreed to relinquish Security. I'm sure the Committee will pass a VOC to confirm it, and set up an EGM as soon as it can be arranged.
>
> The price is already set, as a breakdown of your Salary was determined in 2001-2002 and attached to the Contract.
>
> The original Security figure of $183,750.00, adjusted annually at 5% is now $271,482.44, as shown for year 8 on the attached chart. That is the amount by which your remuneration will be reduced. GST is not included in these figures.
>
> [140543]
> We'll make immediate arrangements for the VOC and EGM and get Security off your plate for you as soon as possible."

[8] On 8 March 2010 Batwing replied saying:

> "Your calculation is totally flawed.
>
>
> I will collect 3 quotes 'like for like' to provide the same service security has provided for Liberty over the last 6 years.
>
> You will collect 3 quotes for the same service 'like for like'.
> We then average out each of our quotes to determine a contract amount.

If we both fail to come to an agreement on the amount, a Law Society/Real Estate Institute of Qld will make the final decision on the contract amount.

His decision is final.

How fair is that.

Please advise when you have collected your 3 quotes."

[9] The same day the chairman responded saying:

"I won't argue about the price at this stage, but I believe the breakdown was part of the contract and should apply.

Nevertheless, there are other ways of calculating the right deduction as you suggest. The committee has not recently discussed those alternatives, but I'm sure that we would accept them if the breakdown of your remuneration is not applicable.

For the moment, suffice to say you have agreed to relinquish Security and the Body Corporate Committee has agreed to take direct control of Security, if the owners vote accordingly.

I think it can all be achieved by 1 May 2010, if we move along reasonably quickly with care.

We have to resolve by VOC to put the matter to an EGM. Those processes will take some time. Please confirm we can commence the procedure by taking the first step – the VOC, while quotes etc are being obtained."

[10] The same day a reply was received from Batwing:

"Please proceed with your VOC.

Hopefully I will have my quotes by week's end.

I am happy to proceed in a business like manner.

The stress is not worth it Greg."

[11] On 17 March 2010 the committee of the body corporate unanimously resolved:

> "1. THAT an Extraordinary General Meeting be convened on 23 April, 2010 to consider a motion to vary the On-Site Management Agreement with Batwing Resorts Pty Ltd by changing the annual remuneration increase during the next option period from a minimum of 5% to a fixed 3%.
> 2. THAT the same Extraordinary General Meeting consider a motion to remove security duties from the On-Site Management Agreement and reduce the annual remuneration accordingly, and also consider a motion to approve the engagement of an external security firm to provide the required security duties."

[12] An EGM was conducted on 23 April 2010. The second resolution foreshadowed above was passed in the following terms:

"THAT the On-Site Management Agreement with Batwing Pty Ltd be varied to remove security duties from that agreement and reduce the annual remuneration accordingly and the Committee be authorised to execute an appropriate Deed of Variation to that effect."

It was passed with 49 votes for, 11 against, and six abstaining.

[13] Later that morning the committee of the body corporate met again. Three quotations were tabled by Batwing and three on behalf of the committee. Discussions failed to reach an agreement as to the figure which should be deducted from the on-site manager's remuneration.

On 9 July 2010 the committee of the body corporate met again. Further quotations were tabled and again there was no resolution. The minutes record, "In accordance with Mr Batros' request for an independent Valuer to determine the purchase price, the BC requested the community manager to seek an appointee from the Law Society of Queensland". This may have been a reference back to Batwing's email of 8 March 2010. The minutes of that meeting were approved at the next meeting without question by Mr Batros. However, on 10 August 2010 solicitors instructed by Mr Batros wrote to the secretary for the body corporate saying that Mr Batros had never requested an independent valuation.

[15] On 27 September 2010 the chairman of the body corporate committee wrote to the Queensland Law Society:

> "We seek the immediate appointment of an arbitrator of the Law Society to determine a simple issue between the Body Corporate of Liberty and our On-Site Manager, Batwing Resorts Pty Ltd.
>
> Under our current On-Site Management Agreement, the provision of 24 hr Security service is provided by Batwing Resorts Pty Ltd and forms part of his annual remuneration package. Both parties recently agreed that Security would become the direct responsibility of the Body Corporate and a Motion to that effect was duly passed by Lot Owners at a recent EGM.
>
> It was further resolved that, if and when agreement could not be reached on the appropriate reduction in remuneration, we would request an Arbitrator from your Society to be appointed to determine a fair price. We propose that both parties make written submissions on price within 14 days so your nominee can determine the fair price reduction.
>

The letter was marked, "C.C. Batwing Resorts Pty Ltd".

[16] A response was received from the Law Society dated 7 October 2010:

> "Thank you for your correspondence dated 27 September and received in this office on 1 October 2010.
>
> You have requested that, in accordance with the terms of an agreement between the parties, the President of the Queensland Law Society appoint an arbitrator to assist with the resolution of a dispute between the parties.
>
> You will appreciate that the agreement is between the parties, that the President is not a party to the agreement and is not contractually bound by its terms. In an attempt to assist the parties to resolve their dispute and in accordance with the parties contractual agreement the President will, however, take steps to make the requested appointment on the following basis:
>
> 1. all parties consent to the appointment,
> 2. …
>
>
> To confirm that both parties agree to the appointment being made on the above basis, please have them sign on the attached copy of this letter and return with payment of the administration fee together with a copy of the Agreement by Friday 22 October 2010 for the appointment to proceed."

[17] The letter makes provision at its foot as follows:

> "I confirm I agree to the President appointing an arbitrator in accordance with the above terms and conditions and subject to the reservation of rights regarding the payment of a high fee."

[18] There is provision for the chairman of the body corporate and for the director of Batwing to sign. The letter is marked as "c.c. the director Batwing Resorts Pty Ltd".

[19] Both the chairman of the body corporate and the director of Batwing signed a copy of this letter and returned it to the Law Society.

[20] An arbitrator was appointed by the President of the Law Society and on 8 November 2010 wrote to the parties:

> "I have been appointed as Arbitrator in relation to a dispute arising out of the [OMA] by the President of the Queensland Law Society.

> I have been provided with a copy of the [OMA] and a series of Deeds of Variation to that Agreement. I note that clause 12 of the agreement is the operative dispute resolution clause and that I am to conduct the arbitration in accordance with the laws of Queensland."

[21] The body corporate made submissions to the arbitrator. Then, on 20 December 2010, Batwing sent a letter to the arbitrator saying:

> "Batwing Resorts Pty Ltd is withdrawing from mediation on the Security Services being returned to Liberty Committee. As in accordance with Batwing's contract, I am not in default and therefore Batwing does not have to proceed with arbitration.
>
> Batwing's intention at the time, although not contractually obliged, was to agree to arbitration to mutually agree on a reduction in salary, and hand back security.
> The current relationship between the Chairperson and myself is somewhat strained, and therefore whatever the result from arbitration would not be agreed to by the Chairperson. …"

[22] The arbitrator was asked to stand advised that, "Batwing Resorts Pty Ltd, at this point in time no longer has any intention to remove its obligation to provide the security services from the Agreement, irrespective of the consideration for the transaction." It appears that by this stage the parties were in further dispute about other matters dealt with by QCAT.

[23] The mediator took the view that he had entered onto the arbitration and it was not possible for one party to unilaterally attempt to bring the process to an end. On 22 February 2011 solicitors acting for Batwing sent a letter dated 18 February 2011 to the arbitrator saying that: 1) the committee for the body corporate for Liberty did not have the requisite authority to commence the arbitration proceedings (s 312 of the BCCMA); 2) there was no default so as to enliven the dispute resolution clause (cl 12) of the OMA which referred to an arbitration; 3) cl 12 of the OMA did not comply with s 229(2) and s 318 of the BCCMA, and 4) even if cl 12 of the OMA did apply, the prerequisite notices and mediations prescribed by it had not been undertaken.

[24] The arbitrator was not deterred and curiously enough, without any explanation as to the inconsistency in approach, also on 22 February 2011, Batwing provided written submissions in support of the merits of the position it took in the dispute, to be considered by the arbitrator in deciding the point referred to him for arbitration. The committee responded to Batwing's substantive submissions and then Batwing, on 3 March 2011, responded to the substance of the committee's response.

[25] The arbitrator wrote to both parties saying he would consider questions of jurisdiction and asking for any additional material. Mr Batros then replied:

> "I do not wish to present additional material.
>
> The Committee has not requested additional duties for security that would increase the labour content in the current contract, so therefore please proceed on the basis of my schedule of works.
>
> Please proceed to determine a 'fair market value' for security services for Liberty based on security's current schedule of works.
>
> Please proceed to determine a 'fair market value'."

[26] In his award the arbitrator made reference to the dispute about his jurisdiction and recorded that the parties appeared before him at preliminary conferences and "agreed they wished me to determine the issue between them".

[27] The arbitrator's decision was in favour of the body corporate.

[28] Batwing advances similar arguments before me as were advanced in the letter dated 18 February 2011.

Written Agreement to Arbitrate

[29] Pursuant to ss 3 and 4 of the Commercial Arbitration Act there must be a written agreement to arbitrate for the Act to apply.

It is plain that cl 12.10 of the OMA was never relied upon by either the applicant or the respondent as the agreement for arbitration which was sought from the Queensland Law Society. There are no facts before me which show that the factual prerequisites to an arbitration pursuant to cl 12.10 of the OMA had occurred. I think it is plain that the OMA cannot be relied upon as a written agreement to arbitrate.

[31] Equally plain is that by the emails and letters dated 8 March 2010 (Batwing to body corporate); 27 September 2010 (to Law Society, copied to Batwing), and 7 October 2010 (to body corporate, copied to Batwing, and signed by both Batwing and body corporate), there was a written agreement between the parties to arbitrate.

Body Corporate Not Authorised to Arbitrate

[32] Section 312 of the BCCMA provides that a body corporate "may start a proceeding only if the proceeding is authorised by special resolution of the body corporate".

[33] This matter originally came before me in the applications list on 4 March 2012. It was adjourned to the civil list after some argument. That argument revealed the respondent's position that there had not been a special resolution in terms of s 312 of the BCCMA. In ex tempore reasons given that day, I expressed the view that I would not see it as improper for the applicant to pass a resolution ratifying the referral of the matter to arbitration, even at that stage. The matter came back before me on 24 August 2012. On 3 August 2012 the general meeting of the body corporate had resolved:

> "THAT the Body Corporate is and was authorised to enter into an agreement with Batwing Resorts Pty Ltd to have the Queensland Law Society appoint an arbitrator and sign all necessary documents to give effect to the appointment of the arbitrator, and to pay any fee for the appointment of the arbitrator for the purpose of having determined by the arbitrator the amount of remuneration to be deducted from the OSM Agreement in exchange for the relinquishment of the security obligations to the Body Corporate."

The voting was 99 for, 10 against, and four abstentions.

[34] Batwing accepted that this was sufficient and effective ratification of the initiation of the arbitration by the body corporate. It was assumed by both parties that an arbitration was a "proceeding" within the meaning of s 312 of the BCCMA.

Arbitration Ineffective to Determine Parties' Dispute

[35] An application under s 33 of the Commercial Arbitration Act is not one where it is appropriate for the Court to examine the merits of the decision by the arbitrator. A Court may refuse to enforce an award if it is subject to appeal, or if the arbitrator has misconducted himself or herself.[1] No doubt it would be a proper reason to refuse leave to enforce an award if it could be shown that the arbitrator's decision was void.[2]

[36] I find that leave to enforce the arbitration award should be refused because the arbitration was ineffective to resolve the dispute between the applicant and the respondent. This conclusion is based on the provisions of chapter 6 of the BCCMA. The dispute between the body corporate and Batwing was a dispute as defined by s 227(1)(d) of the BCCMA. Section 229 goes on to provide exclusive remedies for disputes which may "be resolved under this chapter by a dispute resolution process". It seems to me that the matter is a "complex dispute", at least within the meaning of s 149B of the BCCMA because it is a dispute about a contractual matter concerning the engagement of Batwing as a caretaking service contractor for a community title scheme. The dispute as to the amount to be paid to Batwing under the OMA, after deletion of the security services from the scope of works in that contract, is within the definition of "contractual matter" in Schedule 6 to the BCCMA, concerning, as it does, Batwing's rights under the terms of the OMA and the body corporate's duties thereunder. Section 229(2) provides exclusive remedies for the resolution of complex disputes. They do not include arbitration by a private arbitrator. While the wording of the section is peculiar, it has been interpreted as meaning that the only manner in which a dispute caught by the section can be resolved is by the prescribed means.[3]

The fact that the result of the arbitration does not, by law, resolve the dispute between the applicant and the respondent is in my opinion a good reason for refusing to enforce the award of the arbitrator. The applicant did not rely upon any argument based on waiver or estoppel, probably because of s 318 of the BCCMA which provides, "A person can not waive, or limit the exercise of, rights under this Act or contract out of the provisions of this Act."

[38] The applicant argued that the parties were not in dispute at the time of the reference to the arbitrator. The dispute between them had settled: the terms of the settlement being to exclude security services from the scope of works under the OMA at a price to be fixed, with an agreed mechanism (arbitration) to fix that price.[4] In my view, having regard to the facts of this matter, that is not a correct legal interpretation of what has occurred. The parties were in dispute at all material times.

[39] My formal order will therefore be to dismiss the originating application brought by the applicant and to declare that the award of Mr Ross Williams of 19 May 2011 has no effect on the rights and obligations of the applicant and respondent. I cannot see any necessity for the cross-application to have been brought and I dismiss it also.

[40] This may seem an unsatisfactory result having regard to Batwing's clear participation in the arbitration after having initially been the party who suggested the process. Further, having regard to the fact that Batwing raised the very point which has succeeded before me before the arbitration commenced and then, by implication at least, resiled from it. No doubt this approach by Batwing has contributed to delay and expense for both parties and further soured relations between parties who must work together until the OMA expires. The result is however, one compelled by law. In this regard I note that the body corporate seems to have acted for itself, including throughout the duration of the arbitration. The law relating to community title schemes is technical and, as this case illustrates, it is unwise for parties to proceed in disputes of this kind without legal advice, relying merely upon their notions of the justness of their cause.

[41] I will hear the parties as to costs.

Supreme Court of Queensland

12 December 2012

Conveyancing — Community schemes — Off-the-plan contracts — Statutory obligations — PAMDA warning requirements — BCCM Form 14 information sheet — Letter directing buyer's attention to the contractual documents — Correct document order — Negligence of the developer's solicitor — Subsequent solicitors — Termination of the off-the-plan contracts by buyers — Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000, s 365(2A)(c)(ii), 366B — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld).

The applicant, SDW Projects Pty Ltd, was a developer who undertook a residential development in 2006. This particular application was brought by the applicant as a result of its professional negligence proceedings against the first respondent, Mr Modi, in which the first respondent alleged that the second respondent, Ms Clements, ought to be joined. Subsequently the second respondent was joined. Both respondents denied that they had been negligent, submitting that their correspondence enclosing the disclosure statements and contracts complied in all respects with s 365(2A)(c) of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 (Qld) (PAMDA) (Note — this is now s 368(2A)(c)). The applicant, in this proceeding, sought a declaration that the correspondence sent by both the first and second respondent did not meet PAMDA requirements.

Initially the applicant instructed "Gold Coast City Solicitors" of which the first respondent was the principal. The first respondent sent 12 contracts to prospective purchasers with a covering letter which noted that the "Contract of Sale and Disclosure Statement" were enclosed. No reference was made which drew the buyer's attention to the PAMD Form 30c warning statement or BCCM Form 14 information sheet or to the order in which these documents were provided.

In fact, the warning statement, the information sheet and the contract were all contained in a booklet, as a composite document. However, the letters referred specifically to the contract of sale, rather than the booklet as a whole: [38]–[39].

The applicant later retained the second respondent to prepare and send off-the-plan contracts to two subsequent buyers. Likewise, the second respondent sent two contracts enclosed with letters which referred to the contract of sale and disclosure statement only. Her correspondence did not mention or draw the buyer's attention to the PAMDA Form 30c warning statement or the BCCM Form 14 information sheet.

The buyers who had received those contracts subsequently elected to terminate those contracts with notice.

Held: for the applicant developer

1. The correspondence sent by both the first and second respondent to the buyers did not comply with s 365(2A)(c)(ii) in that it did not direct the attention of the buyers to the PAMD Form 30c warning statement or the BCCM Form 14 information sheet.

2. The buyer must receive the disclosure statement, PAMDA Form 30c warning statement, BCCM Form 14 information sheet and contract in the correct order. The PAMDA Form 30c warning statement and BCCM Form 14 information sheet must be attached to the contract: [35].

3. The seller must direct the attention of the buyer to the PAMDA 30c warning statement and BCCM Form 14 information sheet and the contract: [35].

4. In this case the buyer's attention was directed by the first and second respondent to the contract but not the PAMDA Form 30c warning statement or the BCCM Form 14 information sheet: [38].

5. The fact that the letters were sent to a solicitor does not assist the respondents. There was no reason to think that a solicitor would understand a reference to a contract of sale to refer to something other than a contract of sale: [40].

Before: Peter Lyons J

Peter Lyons J:

[1] The issue in these proceedings is whether the provisions of s 365(2A)(c) of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 (Qld) (PAMDA) have been complied with by the sending of letters each of which enclosed a contract for the sale of a proposed unit, attached to which were a warning statement and information sheet[1] , when each letter did not, in terms, refer to the warning statement or information sheet.

Factual background

[2] In 2006, the applicant (SDW) undertook a residential development at 1 Hinterland Drive, Mudgeeraba. The development was to include 30 residential units. As is not uncommon, the proposed units were offered for sale before the development was completed.

[3] SDW retained solicitors to assist it in relation to the sale of the proposed units. Between June and October 2007, it retained the firm "Gold Coast City Solicitors", the principal of which was the first respondent, Mr Modi. From early October 2007, SDW retained the second respondent, Ms Lisa Clements, of Clements Lawyers, to provide similar assistance.

[4] On 12 occasions between 6 and 25 June 2007, Mr Modi forwarded by courier an executed contract for the sale of a proposed unit in the development and other documents to the solicitor representing each of the purchasers. The letters generally included the following:

> "RE: SDW PROJECTS SALE TO [BUYER NAME]
>
> PROPERTY: UNIT [NUMBER AND ADDRESS]
>
> We refer to the above matter and advise that we act on behalf of the vendor and note that you act on behalf of the purchaser.
>
> We now enclose Contract of Sale and Disclosure Statement for your attention.

[5] However, one letter included the words set out above, save for the phrase, "for your attention". No party relied on this difference, and I shall henceforth ignore it.

[6] Enclosed with each letter were two spiral bound books of documents. In one book, the first page was the warning statement for which provision is made in PAMDA. Immediately following the warning statement was the information sheet (a document identified in the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) (BCCMA)); followed by the contract. In each case, the warning statement and the contract had previously been signed by the purchaser. Each contract recorded that the buyer had received the information sheet[2] .

[7] The second book contained a disclosure statement (also a document identified in the BCCMA).

[8] Ms Clements acted in relation to the sales of proposed unit 8 and proposed unit 27. On about 2 October 2007 she sent a letter to the solicitors for the purchasers of proposed unit 8. Apart from a reference to the transaction, that letter included the following:

"We refer to the above matter and enclose herewith the following:

1. Executed Contract of Sale;

2. Disclosure Statement.

We further note the following:

Contract Date: 9 October 2007

Initial Deposit: $1,000.00

Balance Deposit 6 November 2007

Settlement: 14 days after the Sellers[*] Solicitors gives notice to the Buyer that the Scheme has been created at the Department of Natural Resources & Mines."

[140550]

[9] On 7 February 2008 Ms Clements sent a letter to the solicitors for the purchaser of proposed unit 27. Apart from a reference to the transaction, that letter included the following:

"We confirm that the above contract has been accepted and signed by the Seller and is dated 01/02/2008. We now enclose signed Contract for your attention.

This Contract was sent to you by express post. The cooling off period commenced on your receipt of the Contract.

As the PAMD Act is not specific as to the date of receipt, and unless you immediately advise us to the contrary, we deem that the cooling off period will commence the next business day after the above date, on the basis that the policy of Australia Post with respect to express post, is next day delivery.

[10] Each of these two letters included two booklets, corresponding to the booklets sent by Mr Modi. The warning statement and contract had been signed by the purchaser; and the contract contained similar provisions acknowledging receipt of the information sheet.

[11] In early 2009, the purchaser in each of these 14 transactions gave notice of the withdrawal of its offer pursuant to s 365(2A)(c)(ii) of PAMDA. The third respondent, Holding Redlich, was retained by SDW in February 2009 to advise and act for it in its disputes with those purchasers. Holding Redlich briefed the fourth respondent, Mr Bradley, a barrister, to advise whether the purchasers could lawfully withdraw their offers. It seems appropriate to assume for the purpose of this application that, in a number of cases, he advised that letters did not satisfy s 365(2A)(c)(ii).

History of proceedings

[12] In April 2009, SDW commenced proceedings against Mr Modi (BS 4244/09), alleging that he had been negligent by reason of his failure, in the letters previously mentioned, to comply with the requirements of s 365(2A)(c)(ii). Mr Modi alleged that Ms Clements should have identified and attempted to rectify any non-compliance with the PAMDA requirements, resulting in Ms Clements' being added as a defendant in those proceedings.

[140551]

SDW had also commenced proceedings against Ms Clements in respect of the two transactions previously mentioned (BS11953/09). In each case, SDW had alleged that Ms Clements was negligent in failing to comply with the requirements of s 365(2A)(c)(ii) of PAMDA.

[14] Mr Modi and Ms Clements denied that they were negligent, on the grounds that in each of these transactions, their letter and the accompanying documents sufficiently complied with those requirements.

[15] In her defence in each of these proceedings, Ms Clements has alleged that Holding Redlich was a concurrent wrongdoer because it failed to advise SDW that none of the purchasers was entitled to withdraw the offer to purchase, and because it failed to advise SDW to insist that each purchaser complete its contract of sale, and if necessary, to sue each purchaser for specific performance of its contract. It is anticipated that a similar allegation might be made against Mr Bradley by one of the other parties to this proceeding.

[16] The present application has arisen as a consequence of a consideration and a review of the two actions commenced by SDW as to whether all necessary parties had been joined.

Statutory provisions

[17] The relevant provisions of PAMDA are found in ch 11. It is convenient first to note its stated purposes, as follows:

> "363 Purposes of ch 11
>
> The purposes of this chapter are –
>
> (a) to give persons who enter into relevant contracts a cooling-off period; and
> (b) to require all proposed relevant contracts or relevant contracts for the sale of residential property in Queensland to include consumer protection information, including a statement that a relevant contract is subject to a cooling-off period; and
> (c) to enhance consumer protection for buyers of residential property by ensuring, as far as practicable, the independence of lawyers acting for buyers."

[18] Relevant definitions for that chapter include the following:

> "364 Definitions for ch 11
>
> In this chapter —
>
> attached, in relation to a warning statement, any information sheet and a contract, means attached in a secure way so that the warning statement, any information sheet and the contract appear to be a single document.
>
> cooling-off period, for a relevant contract, means a period of 5 business days —

(a) starting on the day the buyer under the relevant contract is bound by the relevant contract or, if the buyer is bound by the relevant contract on a day other than a business day, the first business day after the day the buyer is bound by the relevant contract; and
(b) ending at 5p.m. on the fifth business day.

Example —

Assume a contract is entered into at any time on Monday and the buyer is bound by the contract. Assume also that the cooling-off period is not affected by public holidays. The cooling-off period ends at 5p.m. on Friday disclosure statement see the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, section 205A.

information sheet see the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, section 206(5) or (6) or 213(5) or (5A).

relevant contract means a contract for the sale of residential property in Queensland, other than a contract formed on a sale by auction.

unit sale means a sale of a lot included in a community titles scheme, or proposed to be included in a community titles scheme, within the meaning of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997.

warning statement means a statement in the approved form that includes the information mentioned in section 366D(1)."

Each transaction which gives rise to the present application was a "unit sale". A contract for such a sale is affected by s 365 of PAMDA which includes the following:

"365 When parties are bound under a relevant contract

(1) The buyer and the seller under a relevant contract are bound by the relevant contract when —

(a) for a relevant contract, other than a relevant contract relating to a unit sale — the buyer or the buyer's agent receives the warning statement and the relevant contract from the seller or the seller's agent in a way mentioned in subsection (2); or
(b) for a relevant contract relating to a unit sale — the buyer or the buyer's agent receives the warning statement, the information sheet and the relevant contract in a way mentioned in subsection (2A).

(2A) For a relevant contract relating to a unit sale, the ways are —

(c) by being handed or otherwise receiving the documents mentioned in paragraph (a)(ii), (iii) and (iv) other than by electronic communication, if —

(i) the warning statement and the information sheet are attached to the relevant contract with the warning statement appearing as the first or top page of the document and the information sheet appearing immediately after the warning statement; and

(ii) the seller or the seller's agent directs the attention of the buyer or the buyer's agent to the warning statement, the information sheet and the relevant contract.

Example of receipt other than by electronic communication —

• post

Examples of how attention may be directed —

• by oral advice
• by including a paragraph in an accompanying letter

(3) Without limiting how the buyer may withdraw the offer to purchase made in the contract form, the buyer may withdraw the offer at any time before being bound by the relevant contract under subsection (1) by giving written notice of withdrawal, including notice by fax, to the seller or the seller's agent.

(5) If a dispute arises about when the buyer and the seller are bound by the relevant contract, the onus is on the seller to prove when the parties were bound by the relevant contract.

(6) In this section —

buyer's agent includes a lawyer or licensee acting for the buyer and a person authorised by the buyer or by law to sign the relevant contract on the buyer's behalf."

[20] Obligations in relation to the provision of a warning statement and an information sheet are set out in s 366B, as follows:

"366B Warning statement if proposed relevant contract is given in another way

(1) This section applies if a proposed relevant contract is given to a proposed buyer or the proposed buyer's agent for signing in a way other than by electronic communication.

(2) The seller or the seller's agent must ensure that the proposed relevant contract has attached a warning statement and, if the proposed relevant contract relates to a unit sale, an information sheet with the warning statement appearing as its first or top page and any information sheet appearing immediately after the warning statement.

(3) If the proposed relevant contract does not comply with subsection (2) -

(a) if the seller gave the proposed relevant contract — the seller; or
(b) if the seller's agent gave the proposed relevant contract — the seller's agent;
commits an offence.

Maximum penalty — 200 penalty units.

[140553]

(4) If the seller or the seller's agent hands the proposed relevant contract to the proposed buyer, the seller or the seller's agent must direct the proposed buyer's attention to the warning statement and, if the proposed relevant contract relates to a unit sale, the information sheet and any disclosure statement.

Note —

A contravention of this subsection is not an offence. Under section 366D(3), in the circumstances of this subsection a warning statement is of no effect unless it is signed by the buyer.

(5) Subsection (6) applies if the seller or the seller's agent gives the proposed relevant contract to the proposed buyer or the proposed buyer's agent in a way other than by handing the proposed contract to the proposed buyer or the proposed buyer's agent.
(6) The seller or the seller's agent must include with the proposed relevant contract a statement directing the proposed buyer's attention to the warning statement and, if the proposed relevant contract relates to a unit sale, the information sheet and any disclosure statement.

Maximum penalty — 200 penalty units."

[21] The content of a warning statement is specified in s 366D. The words used in the warning statement must be presented in substantially the same way as those words are printed on the approved form. The statement is of no effect unless signed by the buyer, before the buyer signed the proposed contract[3] .

[22] Provision is made for the cooling off period in pt 3 of ch 11. It is sufficient to note that it generally permits termination of a contract by signed notice[4] .

[23] There has been no suggestion that any of the contracts was not a relevant contract, as that expression is used in these provisions. In each case the warning statement was in the approved form, with the word, "WARNING" in bold type near the top.

Contentions of the parties

[24] The applicant, the third respondent and the fourth respondent each contended that the first respondent and the second respondent had failed to comply with s 365(2A)(c)(ii) because in each of the transactions, the solicitor then acting for the applicant had failed to direct the attention of the buyer's agent to the warning statement and information sheet in one of the booklets accompanying each letter. They relied upon the approach taken in MNM Developments Pty Ltd v Gerrard[5] ; Hedley Commercial Property Services Pty Ltd v BRCP Oasis Land Pty Ltd[6] (Hedley); and Collis v Currumbin Investments Pty Ltd[7] . Their submissions sought to distinguish the decision in Boylan v Gallagher[8] (Boylan). It was submitted that this approach to s 365(2A)(c) was to be preferred, pursuant to s 14A of the Acts Interpretation Act 1954 (Qld) (AIA) because it best achieved the purpose of the provision. Reference was also made to the passage from the judgment of McHugh, Gummow, Kirby and Hayne JJ in Project Blue Sky Inc v Australian Broadcasting Authority[9.] to the effect that ordinarily the legal meaning of a statutory provision will correspond to its grammatical provision.

[25] The submissions of the first and second respondents drew attention to some statements of principle in Boylan (discussed below). They also draw attention to the factual similarities between that case and the present case. These respondents submitted that, so far as it discussed a requirement in ch 11 pt 1 of PAMDA relating to directing the attention of the purchaser to particular documents, Hedley dealt with a provision which required a "clear statement" which had that effect; and in any event, what was said was only said obiter. It was also submitted that the treatment of the relevant provision in Hedley was inconsistent with the subsequent decision of the Court of Appeal in Boylan. They submitted that the letters drew attention to the warning statement, the information sheet and the relevant contract, in the circumstances. Those circumstances were that in each case the letter drew attention (either by use of the words "for your attention" or at least by implication) to the enclosures; one of those enclosures was referred to as a "Contract of Sale"; the relevant enclosure was a booklet which included the warning statement, the information sheet, and the relevant contract; in relation to each transaction, the warning statement had been signed, and the information sheet had been seen, by the relevant purchaser; in each transaction, the recipient of the letter was a solicitor; and in each case the warning sheet was identified in bold and capital letters, and the information sheet immediately followed it in the booklet. It was submitted that in the circumstances, the purpose of s 365 of PAMDA had been satisfied.

Consideration

[26] It is convenient, consistent with the applicant's submissions, to commence with a consideration of the sequence in which the operative provisions of ch 11 pt 1 of PAMDA take effect, and some related matters. It is sufficient to do so, by reference to provisions dealing with the sale of a proposed unit, not involving electronic communication.

[27] If a proposed contract is given to a proposed buyer for signing, then the seller must ensure that the proposed contract has attached to it a warning statement and, for a unit, an information sheet; with the warning statement appearing as the first or top page, and the information sheet appearing immediately after the warning statement[10] . The seller must direct the proposed buyer's attention to the warning statement, and the information sheet[11] . The warning statement is of no effect unless the buyer signs the warning statement; and in a case where a proposed contract is handed to the buyer, it is of no effect unless the buyer signs it before signing the proposed contract[12] . The matters referred to thus far are generally pre-contractual.

[28] The general rule which would determine when a contract becomes effective is modified by s 365 of PAMDA. Its effect is that the parties are not bound by the contract until the buyer receives the warning statement, the information sheet, and the contract in accordance with s 365(2A)(c)[13] . Thus it is necessary that the buyer again receive a warning statement, and an information sheet, attached to the contract; whereas s 366B required that these documents be attached to the proposed contract. On both occasions, there is a requirement to direct the attention of the (proposed) buyer to the warning statement and the information sheet[14] .

[29] The requirement to provide these documents on two occasions to a buyer, and to direct the buyer's attention to them on each occasion, emphasises the importance which the legislature attaches to these matters.

[30] The applicant's submissions pointed out that the obligation to direct attention to these documents found in s 365(2A)(c)(ii) may be satisfied by directing the attention of the buyer's agent to them; and that the statute expressly recognised that the buyer's agent might be a lawyer[15] . The obligation to direct attention to the documents applies, notwithstanding that the documents are delivered to a lawyer acting as the buyer's agent.

[31] In MNM Developments Pty Ltd v Gerrard the Court of Appeal had to consider ch 11, pt 1, of PAMDA as it stood prior to amendments made in 2005. Section 366 then required that a warning statement be attached to a contract as its first or top sheet; and s 367 provided that if that was not done, the buyer might terminate the contract before settlement. De Jersey CJ said:

> "[16] The context of the requirement set up by s.366 tells against a liberal interpretation of that requirement. Chapter 11 of the Act, in which s. 366 occurs, contains a detailed set of technical requirements plainly directed to ensuring a form of consumer protection for purchasers of residential property. One of the objects of the Act, stated in its preamble, is 'to protect consumers against particular undesirable practises'. That protection extends in case like these, to give a purchaser a right to terminate even for quite technical contraventions, and whether or not the purchaser has suffered any material disadvantage. See, for example, s.366(4)(a), s. 366(4)(b) (including the example) and s. 367(2)."

[32] Notwithstanding the changes in the provisions, in my respectful opinion his Honour's comments remain applicable to ch 11, pt 1, including to the provisions which are significant in the present case.

[33] In Boylan, the Court had to determine whether a provision found in s 365(2)(c) relating to directing attention to a warning statement and a relevant contract had been complied with. Save that there is no reference to an information statement, the provision is in the same terms as s 365(2A)(c)(ii). Of s 365(2)(c), Fraser JA (with whose reasons the other members of the Court agreed) said[16] :

> "… the relevant test is that which is expressed in the statutory provision. Neither the text nor the examples require the relevant direction to refer specifically or expressly to the warning statement or the relevant contract and s 365(2)(c) also does not require the 'clear' statement which is called for by s 365(2)(a)(i) and s 365(2)(b)(i) …
> Although proof of compliance with the provision ordinarily would justify an inference that the buyer or the buyer's agent in fact became aware of the documents, it is not necessary for the seller to prove that fact … The focus of the provisions is upon what was said, written, or done by the seller or the seller's agent. The statutory purpose is fulfilled if the seller or to the seller's agent does what is required to be done on the part of the seller to direct the attention of the buyer or the buyer's agent to the warning statement and the relevant contract. No less is sufficient but no more is required."

[34] In the same case, Philippides J (with whose reasons Chesterman JA agreed) said[17] :

> "While the buyer's attention must be directed to both the warning statement and the relevant contract, there is nothing which requires each to be identified distinctly and specifically. Moreover, whether there has been a direction of attention to the warning statement must be informed by the circumstances of each case.

[35] In my view, in a case where the parties would otherwise be bound by a contract relating to the sale of a unit, and a copy of the contract is delivered to the buyer by some means other than electronic communication, the effect of s 365 is that the parties are not bound until the buyer receives (in a case like the present case) a copy of the contract, the warning statement and the information sheet, in a way which satisfies two conditions. One is a condition containing several elements, they being that the warning statement and the information sheet are attached to the contract; and that the warning statement must be the first or top page of the document created by the attachment, with the information sheet appearing immediately after it. Moreover, because the statutory provision uses the defined term "warning statement", the provision refers to a document with "WARNING" in bold type. The second condition is that the seller directs the attention of the buyer to the warning statement, the information sheet and the contract. In my view, both conditions must be satisfied, before the parties are bound by the contract.

[36] What has been said about the effect of s 365 thus far is not in dispute. The issue is whether the second condition is satisfied.

[37] The first respondent and the second respondent submitted that the second condition was satisfied in this case. The effect of their submission was that, since two booklets accompanied each letter, and one booklet was clearly referred to in the letter (the disclosure statement), the other reference in the letter was to the other booklet. It was submitted that a practical approach must be taken for determining whether the condition was satisfied, bearing in mind the circumstances of the case, previously mentioned.

[38] It is appropriate to describe the booklet containing the warning statement, the information sheet and the contract as a composite document. However, the difficulty for the first respondent and the second respondent in the present case is that that booklet included the contract, described on its face as a contract of sale. The same expression appeared in each letter. In my view, therefore, the letter in each case directed attention to the contract, but did not direct attention to the other two documents in that booklet. It might be observed that the argument for the first and second respondents is particularly weak in relation to Ms Clements' letter of 7 February 2008.

[39] The specific reference in the letters to the contract of sale, rather than the booklet as a whole, materially distinguishes the facts in the present case, from those considered in Boylan. There, the buyer's solicitor, had prepared what was referred to as a "composite document", which included the warning statement and the contract (a deed). That solicitor described the composite document as "Put and Call Option document". When the seller's solicitor returned those documents after execution by the seller by a letter dated 12 May 2008[18] , the seller's solicitor, in the letter, described the relevant enclosure as "full executed copy of the Put and Call Option document". The adoption of the description adopted by the buyer's solicitor was considered sufficient to refer both to the deed, and the warning statement. That conclusion was reinforced no doubt by the use of the word "full". It might also be observed that the letter from the seller's solicitor enclosing the executed documents, when wishing to refer to the contract itself, used a different description, "Put & Call Option Deed"[19] . Looked at in the context of the communications of the parties, it is in my respectful opinion, by no means surprising that the adoption by the seller's solicitor of the expression used by the buyer's solicitor to describe a bundle including both the warning statement and the contract was held to be "apt" to refer to both those documents[20] . That is not true in the present case.

[40] In my view, the fact that each of the letters at present under consideration was sent to a solicitor does not assist the first respondent and the second respondent. There is no reason to think that a solicitor would understand a reference to a contract of sale to be a reference to something other than a contract of sale. The taking of a "practical approach" does not, in my view, alter the effect of the expression used in each letter.

Conclusion

[41] I am prepared to make the declaration sought by the applicant.

Supreme Court of Queensland

21 December 2012

Conveyancing — Community schemes — Encroachment between neighbouring lot owners — Common boundary fencing — Improvements made to the encroached area — Conciliation in the Office of the Commissioner for Body Corporate and Community Management — Dispute resolution — Order which an adjudicator can make — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld), Ch 6, s 228, 276(1), 285 and Sch 5 — Property Law Act 1974 (Qld), Pt 11 Div 1.

The plaintiffs and the defendants were adjoining lot owners who shared a common boundary within their scheme. After the plaintiffs purchased their lot in 2007, they agreed with the defendants to split the cost of a replacement fence between the two lots.

After the fence was replaced, the plaintiffs undertook improvements to their lot including laying sandstone tiles and installing a shade sail structure with the permission of the body corporate. In July 2011 the defendants engaged a surveyor to check the boundaries of the lots and the surveyor confirmed that the plaintiffs' lot encroached onto the defendant's land by about 6.5 m^2.

The parties discussed a resolution to the problem. The plaintiffs wanted the defendants to convey that portion of the land to them while the defendants wanted the encroachment removed. The defendants lodged an application with the Office of the Commissioner for Body Corporate and Community Management. The plaintiffs refused to participate and later wrote to the Office of the Commissioner seeking the matter be dismissed so that the plaintiffs' claim (which had been filed in the District Court) could be heard by that court.

The Commissioner refused to dismiss the request and placed the adjudication in abeyance until such time as the District Court claim was concluded. The District Court transferred the proceeding to the Supreme Court. The plaintiffs sought relief under Pt 11 Div 1 of the Property Law Act 1974 (dealing with encroachments).

The defendants applied for a declaration that there was no jurisdiction for the court proceedings, or alternatively sought a stay order.

Held: defendants' application dismissed.

1. An adjudicator can make an order about a matter in s 276(1) and those mentioned in Sch 5 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) (BCCM Act): [41].

2. Section 285 of the BCCM Act excludes an adjudicator from resolving a question regarding title to land: [41].

3. The adjudicator did not have the power to grant the only relief which would resolve the dispute. In obiter, Martin J noted that even if the adjudicator had resolved the dispute in the plaintiff's favour, the adjudicator would not have had the power to grant them the relief which they were seeking. There would ultimately be no utility in going through the dispute resolution process: [43].

4. The legislature has specifically provided for the Supreme Court to resolve disputes about encroachments. Such disputes should be dealt with by the Supreme Court and not through the dispute resolution processes in the BCCM Act: [46].

Martin J:

[1] The plaintiffs have commenced proceedings seeking relief under Part 11 Division 1 of the Property Law Act 1974 ("PLA") being that part of the PLA which deals with encroachments. The defendants seek a declaration that those proceeding have not, for want of jurisdiction, been properly commenced in this Court. In the alternative, the defendants seek an order staying the proceedings permanently or until such other time as determined.

Background

[2] The plaintiffs are the registered owners of Unit 16, 101 Morala Avenue, Runaway Bay. They are adjoining neighbours of the defendants, who are the registered owners of Unit 15. The properties are more properly described as Lots 24 and 23 of the Mornington Quays Community Title Scheme CTS 23056 ("Mornington Quays") respectively.

[3] The plaintiffs purchased Lot 24 in November 2007. At that time, the two lots were separated by a brush fence apparently located on the common boundary between the lots.

[4] In April 2009, the plaintiffs and defendants shared the cost of replacing the brush fence with a wooden fence. The wooden fence was constructed along the same line as the brush fence and extended to the boardwalk at the first defendant's request.

[5] From April to June 2009, the plaintiffs undertook improvements in the vicinity of the wooden fence, including laying sandstone tiles to replace and extend the patio area and installing a shade sail structure. These improvements were carried out with the permission of the Body Corporate for Mornington Quays.

[6] In July 2011, the defendants engaged a surveyor to determine the correct boundary line between the two lots.

[7] In August 2011, the surveyor confirmed that there had been an encroachment onto the defendants' property of an area of about 6.5 square metres. The encroachment consists of, among other things, the wooden fence, the patio improvements, a shade sail and supporting post, and a split-system air-conditioner motor.

[8] Discussions occurred in an attempt to resolve the encroachment dispute. The plaintiffs want the defendants to convey the area of encroachment to them, and the defendants in turn seek the removal of the encroachment.

History of proceeding

[9] On 21 March 2012, the defendants lodged a conciliation application with the Office of the Commissioner for Body Corporate and Community Management ("Office of the Commissioner") in relation to the dispute.

[10] A conciliation session was scheduled for 23 April 2012 but the plaintiffs advised that they would not be attending. As a result, the Office of the Commissioner issued a Conciliation Certificate to the effect that "the respondent did not make a reasonable attempt to participate in conciliation".

[11] On 18 April 2012, the plaintiffs filed a claim in the District Court at Southport seeking declarations that lasting improvements were made to the area of encroachment and orders vesting the area of encroachment in the plaintiffs.

[12] On 27 April 2012, the defendants applied to the Office of the Commissioner for adjudication of the dispute.

[13] On 18 May 2012, the defendants filed a conditional notice of intention to defend together with this application.

[14] On 25 May 2012, the plaintiffs' solicitors wrote to the Office of the Commissioner seeking a certificate of dismissal in relation to the adjudication application on the basis that the matter should be dealt with by a court of competent jurisdiction, which the plaintiffs asserted was the District Court at Southport, it being the court in which the plaintiffs had filed their claim.

[15] On 26 June 2012, the Commissioner refused the dismissal request after considering the parties' submissions and placed the adjudication in abeyance until the District Court claim was concluded.

[16] The Commissioner stated:

> "Given the case history of encroachment disputes referred to, and determined by, department adjudicators I am not persuaded that any dispute involving an encroachment must automatically be outside the > jurisdiction of a dispute resolution officer. I accept that a specific proceeding under, or seeking orders in accordance with, the Property Law Act 1974 would be another case entirely.
>
> [140559]
>

Consequently, on balance I am satisfied that the applicants have prima facie demonstrated a dispute for the purposes of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 that is within the jurisdiction of a dispute resolution officer.

I [turn] my mind to the question of whether the subject matter of adjudication is part of, or closely related to, the existing District Court proceedings – for which the answer is clearly in the affirmative.

… it should be noted that if I dismiss this application under section 250 then the jurisdiction of this Office to resolve the dispute is permanently relinquished and it cannot be revisited. In the knowledge that dismissal under section 250 is irrevocable I am therefore reluctant to dismiss the application outright on what, in my view, amounts to speculation of how the Court will proceed in respect of the respondents' claim. For these same reasons I believe it is equally inappropriate to progress an adjudication application while a potentially related claim is under consideration in the District Court."

[17] McGinness DCJ heard this application on 3 September 2012. Her Honour was not satisfied that the plaintiffs' cause of action was within the jurisdiction of the District Court and transferred the proceeding to this Court.

Relevant legislation

[18] Chapter 6 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) ("BCCM Act") sets out a dispute resolution scheme that the defendants contend should govern the dispute exclusively.

[19] The relevant provisions are.

"227 Meaning of *dispute

(1) A dispute is a dispute between –

(a) the owner or occupier of a lot included in a community titles scheme and the owner or occupier of another lot included in the scheme; …

228 Chapter's purpose

(1) This chapter establishes arrangements for resolving, in the context of community titles schemes, disputes about –

(a) contraventions of this Act or community management statements; and
(b) the exercise of rights or powers, or the performance of duties, under this Act or community management statements; and
(c) the adjustment of lot entitlement schedules; and
(d) matters arising under the engagement of persons as body corporate managers, the engagement of certain persons as service contractors, and the authorisation of persons as letting agents.

(2) Also, this chapter authorises the provision of education and information services aimed at promoting the avoidance of disputes.

229 Exclusivity of dispute resolution provisions

(1) Subsections (2) and (3) apply to a dispute if it may be resolved under this chapter by a dispute resolution process.[1]

(3) Subject to section 229A, the only remedy for a dispute that is not a complex dispute is –

(a) the resolution of the dispute by a dispute resolution process; or
(b) an order of the appeal tribunal on appeal from an adjudicator on a question of law.

(4) However, subsections (2) and (3) do not apply to a dispute if –

(a) an application is made to the commissioner; and
(b) the commissioner dismisses the application under part 5.

[140560]

(5) Also, subsections (2) and (3) do not limit –

(a) the powers of QCAT under the QCAT Act to –

(i) refer a question of law to the Court of Appeal; or
(ii) transfer a proceeding, or part of a proceeding, to the Court of Appeal; or

(b) the right of a party to make an appeal from QCAT to the Court of Appeal under the QCAT Act.

[20] The plaintiffs also rely on s 184 and 185 of the PLA.

"184 Application for relief in respect of encroachments

(1) Either an adjacent owner or an encroaching owner may apply to the court for relief under this division in respect of any encroachment.
(2) This section applies to encroachments made either before or after the commencement of this Act.

185 Powers of court on application for relief in respect of encroachment

(1) On an application under section 184 the court may make such order as it may deem just with respect to –

(a) the payment of compensation to the adjacent owner; and
(b) the conveyance, transfer, or lease of the subject land to the encroaching owner, or the grant to the encroaching owner of any estate or interest in the land or of any easement, right, or privilege in relation to the land; and
(c) the removal of the encroachment.

…"

[21] Schedule 6 of the PLA defines "court" to be the Supreme Court.

Dispute resolution scheme

[22] The principal objective of the BCCM Act is to "provide a legislative framework which accommodates the establishment, operation and management of community titles schemes."[2] One of the secondary objectives in support of the principal objective is to provide "an efficient and effective dispute resolution process."[3]

[23] The starting point for considering the scheme is s 229, which gives exclusive jurisdiction to the dispute resolution provisions in chapter 6 if the "dispute" is one that "may be resolved under this chapter by a dispute resolution process"[4] .

[24] The criteria that have to be satisfied are:

(a) the "dispute" must come within the definition of s 227;
(b) the dispute must concern an enumerated purpose in s 228; and
(c) it must be a dispute that may be resolved under chapter 6 by a dispute resolution process (s 229(1)).

Is it a "dispute"?

[25] A "dispute" is broadly defined in s 227 by reference to the parties involved. It is accepted by the plaintiffs that the parties fall within s 227(1)(a).

Is it within the chapter's purpose?

[26] Chapter 6 establishes arrangements for resolving disputes about matters contained in s 228(1).[5]

[27] The relevance of s 228 in limiting the scope of exclusive jurisdiction was the subject of argument. The plaintiffs contend that a "dispute" for the purpose of chapter 6 is confined only to those matters which concern a subject matter enumerated in s 228. The defendants submit that the plain intention of the legislature is that an adjudicator has exclusive jurisdiction to make orders for disputes under s 227. I was referred to two decisions: one in support of each proposition.

[28] In Penberg Pty Ltd v Body Corporate for Market Town Community Titles Scheme 2052,[6] Tutt DCJ considered exclusivity of jurisdiction in relation to a dispute between a lot owner and the body corporate regarding repairs to a unit.

> "[18] While s 229 could be expressed in clearer terms, it seems to me that it is the intention of the legislature to require any dispute between the Body Corporate and the owner of a lot included in a community title scheme under the Act to seek remedy for the dispute under Chapter 6 if the dispute may be resolved by the dispute resolution process prescribed under the Act."
> [140561]
> (original emphasis kept)

[29] In contrast, in Body Corporate of the Lang Business v Green,[7] Daubney J considered a dispute between a lot owner and body corporate regarding monies due and owing. His Honour said, in relation to s 227:[8]

> "[30] … This definition, however, does not clarify with any precision whether it covers every conceivable dispute between a body corporate and an owner or merely those within the purview contemplated by the Chapter's purpose set out in s 228. In my view, good-sense and practicability, in conjunction with a purposive approach to the legislation, dictate that the latter must be the case; it could scarcely be said, for instance, that the legislature intended for the dispute resolution processes set out in the BCCM to apply in case of a personal injuries dispute between an owner and a body corporate."

[30] The dispute in Green fell squarely within s 228 and Daubney J ultimately did not have to make a finding on the point.[9] However, I respectfully adopt his Honour's view. The primary purpose of the Act is the establishment, operation and management of community titles schemes. The application of the dispute resolution scheme to every single dispute between the parties listed in s 227 could hardly be said to accord with the purpose of the Act. Take, for example, a contractual dispute between two people who happen to be lot owners in the same community titles scheme for the sale of a boat. To read chapter 6 of the BCCM Act as requiring these lot owners to settle their contractual dispute in accordance with the dispute resolution procedures would be to go outside the boundaries of a piece of legislation concerning the management of body corporate affairs.

[31] Section 228 therefore establishes the parameters within which the dispute resolution scheme operates. A "dispute" within the definition of s 227 has to come within one of the four categories in s 228 before s 229 falls to be considered.

[32] The plaintiffs submit that this proceeding does not fall within the scope of s 228. The defendants point to s 167 as an example of a provision that, if contravened, would bring the dispute within the scope of s 228(1)(a):

> "167 Nuisances

> The occupier of a lot included in a community titles scheme must not use, or permit the use of, the lot or the common property in a way that –
>
> > (a) causes a nuisance or hazard; or
> > (b) interferes unreasonably with the use or enjoyment of another lot included in the scheme; or
> > (c) interferes unreasonably with the use or enjoyment of the common property by a person who is lawfully on the common property.
> (emphasis added)

[33] This section prohibits the occupier of a lot from using his or her lot in a way that interferes with the use or enjoyment of another lot. Examples of nuisance include noise, smoke and unruly behaviour[10] and creating dust and sawdust.[11]

[34] The present dispute involves the plaintiffs making improvements on land belonging to the defendants. It does not concern the use of their own lot in such a way that causes a nuisance, or otherwise interferes with the use or enjoyment of the defendants' lot. Section 167 is not relevant in these factual circumstances and this dispute therefore does not fall within s 228(1)(a) of the BCCM Act.

[35] On this basis, therefore, the dispute resolution procedures of the BCCM Act do not govern this dispute exclusively.

[36] However, even if I am incorrect on this point, this dispute is nevertheless not subject to the BCCM Act dispute resolution procedures as it is not a dispute that can be resolved by a dispute resolution process.

Can the dispute be resolved by a dispute resolution process?

[37] If ss 227 and 228 are satisfied, s 229(1) requires the dispute to be one that may be resolved under chapter 6 by a dispute resolution process.

[38] A 'dispute resolution process' is defined in schedule 6 of the BCCM Act. The defendants in this matter applied for department adjudication.

The meaning of 'may be resolved under chapter 6 by a dispute resolution process' was explained by the Court of Appeal in James v Body Corporate for Aarons Community Titles Scheme 11476,[12] where Davies JA stated:[13]

> "Section 184[14] does not speak in terms, specifically, of jurisdiction to hear and decide but in terms of providing a remedy. However I think its plain intention is that the adjudicator is to have exclusive jurisdiction to make orders of the kind which the Act prescribes, relevantly in s 223 and s 227, in disputes of the kind to which s 182 refers, subject to any statutory exception or limitation."
>
> (emphasis added)

[40] The following sections are relevant to the powers of the adjudicator.

> 270 Dismissal of applications
>
> > (1) The adjudicator may make an order dismissing the application if –
> >
> > > (a) it appears to the adjudicator that the adjudicator does not have jurisdiction to deal with the application; or > > > (b) the adjudicator is satisfied the dispute should be dealt with in a court or tribunal of competent jurisdiction;…

276 Orders of adjudicators

(1) An adjudicator to whom the application is referred may make an order that is just and equitable in the circumstances (including a declaratory order) to resolve a dispute, in the context of a community titles scheme, about –

(a) a claimed or anticipated contravention of this Act or the community management statement; or
(b) the exercise of rights or powers, or the performance of duties, under this Act or the community management statement; or
(c) a claimed or anticipated contractual matter about –

(i) the engagement of a person as a body corporate manager or service contractor for a community titles scheme; or
(ii) the authorisation of a person as a letting agent for a community titles scheme.

(2) An order may require a person to act, or prohibit a person from acting, in a way stated in the order.
(3) Without limiting subsections (1) and (2), the adjudicator may make an order mentioned in schedule 5.
(4) An order appointing an administrator –

(a) may be the only order the adjudicator makes for an application; or
(b) may be made to assist the enforcement of another order made for the application.

(5) If the adjudicator makes a consent order, the order –

(a) may include only matters that may be dealt with under this Act; and
(b) must not include matters that are inconsistent with this Act or another Act.

285 Limitation on powers of adjudicator

The adjudicator does not have power to resolve a question about title to land."

[41] An adjudicator may make an order about a matter in s 276(1) and those mentioned in schedule 5 of the BCCM Act. The matters enumerated in s 276(1) are broad and generally correspond with those in s 228. The adjudicator also has the power to dismiss an application for want of jurisdiction, or if the adjudicator is satisfied that it should be dealt with in a court or tribunal of competent jurisdiction. Importantly, s 285 specifically excludes the adjudicator from resolving a question about title to land.

[42] The question to be answered is whether the orders the adjudicator is empowered to make will resolve the dispute. The plaintiffs seek the conveyance of the area of encroachment to them while the defendants want the encroachment removed.

[43] The answer is apparent in s 285 of the BCCM Act: the adjudicator does not have power to resolve a question about title to land.

If the plaintiffs were to be successful and the dispute was resolved in their favour, the adjudicator would not have the power to grant them the relief they seek. There would be no utility in going through a dispute resolution process that is incapable of ultimately resolving the dispute.

[44] I was referred to Independent Finance Group Pty Ltd v Mytan Pty Ltd[15] as authority for the proposition that the plain intention of the legislature is that an adjudicator is to have exclusive jurisdiction to make orders of the kind prescribed in ss 276 and 281 for disputes under s 227. A salient question in that decision was whether the adjudicator had to resolve a question about title to land in giving effect to a resolution granting exclusive rights over common property. In separate reasons, Thomas JA and Atkinson J (with whom McMurdo P agreed) both found that the adjudicator's order did not resolve a question about title to land.[16]

Both their Honours acknowledged that, where the adjudicator has to resolve a question about title to land, the adjudicator would be prohibited from resolving the dispute.[17]

The Property Law Act 1974

[45] Part 11, Division 1 of the PLA provides for relief in respect of encroachments. Section 183 of the PLA provides that that division applies despite the provisions of any other Act. Section 185 gives powers to the Supreme Court to grant relief in respect of encroachments as it may deem just, including the power to order the conveyance of the subject land or the removal of the encroachment.

[46] The legislature has specifically provided for this Court to resolve disputes about encroachments. It has also specifically excluded an adjudicator under the BCCM Act from resolving a question about title to land. The legislative intent is clear. Disputes concerning encroachments are to be dealt with by this Court and not be subject to the dispute resolution processes contained in the BCCM Act.

Conclusion

[47] The application is dismissed.

Supreme Court of Queensland — Court of Appeal

Decision delivered on 26 February 2013

Conveyancing — Sale of property — Clarification of residential property agents' duty of disclosure to prospective purchasers — Statutory obligation on agents to disclose person receiving benefit and amount, value or nature of benefit in connection with a sale — Whether the person receiving benefit must be identified by name — Whether amount of benefit must be described in a precise dollar figure — Interpretation of s 138(1)(c) of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 — Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000, s 138(1)(c).

One of the applicants was a residential property agent engaged in the business of marketing and selling residential properties in new developments in Brisbane, the Gold Coast and the Sunshine Coast. Its activities were directed towards the interstate investor market.

The applicant operated within a corporate group that included a financial services company that provided finance to prospective purchasers and a marketing company that marketed the properties via seminars.

The modus operandi generally adopted by the corporate group was that the marketing company would initiate contact with prospective purchasers at its information seminars. Travel and accommodation arrangements would then be made for the prospective purchasers to fly to Queensland to inspect properties, accompanied by a representative of the applicant. Finance to purchase a property would then be offered through the financial services company.

The marketing company would be paid a fee by the property developer in return for advertising the properties.

The marketing company's name was not disclosed to a prospective purchaser, nor was the fee it was to receive in connection with the sale. Instead, disclosure was made to the prospective purchaser using Form 27b (now Form 27c), which described the benefit that the "developer's consultants" were to receive in a formulaic manner (ie up to 1.5% of the purchase price with respect to each service provided by the marketing company) rather than a precise dollar fee.

It was alleged by the Office of Fair Trading that the applicant had contravened s 138(1)(c) of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000. Section 138(1)(c) provides that a residential property agent must disclose the following to any prospective purchaser:

> "(c) the amount, value or nature of any benefit any person has received, receives, or expects to receive in connection with the sale, or for promoting the sale, or for providing a service in connection with the sale, of the property."

The section goes on to give examples of persons who may receive a benefit (finance broker, financial adviser, financier, solicitor, seller, etc).

The issues in dispute involved the extent of the obligation to identify the "person" in s 138(1)(c) and the adequacy of the description of the benefit that person receives in connection with the sale.

The Magistrate, in finding in favour of the applicant, held that:

> • the term "developer's consultants" disclosed in Form 27b sufficiently identified the marketing company as a beneficiary because of the knowledge of the marketing company acquired by the prospective purchasers during the marketing campaign, and
> • the formulaic manner of describing the benefit to be received sufficiently stated the benefit the marketing company was to receive (even though that bore no realistic relationship to the benefit the marketing company was in fact to receive).

[140565]

On appeal, however, the District Court judge held that:

> • the description of the marketing company as the "developer's consultants" did not satisfy the requirements of s 138(1)(c) because they were not identified by name
> • the formulaic description of the benefit to be received by the marketing company was inaccurate and therefore insufficient.

(See Peebles v Cross & Ors [2012] QDC 44.)

Held: appeal dismissed.

Description of recipient issue

1. Disclosure of the identity of the recipient of benefits by name is not required.

Neither s 138(1)(c) nor the prescribed Form 27b stipulated that the identity of the recipient person must be disclosed by stating the name of the person. Identifying the person by the function that person performs will suffice. Indeed, examples of persons who might receive a benefit as per s 138(1)(c) all describe the person by reference to the person's status which, in turn, is referenced to the function that the person performs (eg finance broker, property valuer, solicitor).

Description of benefit received issue

2. The formulaic description of the benefit to be received by the marketing company stated in Form 27b was inaccurate.

Further, the description was not in compliance with the notes in Form 27b (the relevant text is almost identical in current Form 27c). Compliance with the notes to the form was mandatory.

The notes to Form 27b provided that the amount, value or nature of the benefit must be provided as accurately as is possible at the time of the disclosure. The benefit should be expressed as a dollar amount where possible. Where an exact amount or value of the benefit is not known, a reasonable estimate of the final amount or value based on the purchase price at the time of disclosure should be provided.

It was possible for an accurate calculation of the amount of the benefit to be disclosed as the purchase price of the relevant properties was known at the time the form was given to the purchasers (with the unsigned sale contract). Even if a different purchase price might have been negotiated after the form had been provided to the purchaser but before the contract had been executed by all parties, an estimate based on the purchase price at the time of disclosure should have been made.

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

M J Byrne QC (instructed by Peter Shields Lawyers) for the applicants.

M D Hinson SC with A C Freeman (instructed by Crown Law) for the respondent.

Before: Fraser and Gotterson JJA and Henry J

Fraser JA: I agree with the reasons for judgment of Gotterson JA and the orders proposed by his Honour.

Gotterson JA: At all times material to these proceedings Cross Country Realty Pty Ltd ("the corporation") held a property agents and motor dealers licence (real estate agent) which had been issued pursuant to Chapter 2 Part 6 of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 ("PAMD Act") and was a residential property agent within the meaning of that Act. Each of Kellie Lee-Ann Cross and Ronald Malcolm Cross was an executive officer of the corporation as that term is defined in Schedule 2 to the PAMD Act. They were also concerned in the management of Park Trent Investments Pty Ltd ("Park Trent Investments"), Park Trent Real Estate Pty Ltd ("Park Trent Real Estate") and Easy Plan Financial Services Pty Ltd ("Easy Plan"). Those three corporate entities together with the corporation operated within a corporate group described as the "Park Trent Group".

By a complaint made on 24 August 2004, an officer of the Office of Fair Trading, alleged against the corporation some 38 counts of failing to disclose to a prospective purchaser of residential property the amount of a benefit that a person then expected to receive in connection with the sale of the property to the purchaser, in contravention of s 138(1)(c) of the PAMD Act. For almost all of the counts, the recipient of the benefit was identified as being Park Trent Investments or Park Trent Real Estate.

[4] By separate complaints made the same day against Kellie Cross and Ronald Cross, the same officer alleged some 38 counts of failing to ensure that the corporation complied with s 138(1)(c), thereby committing offences pursuant to s 591(2) of the PAMD Act. That section provides that if a corporation commits an offence against a provision of that Act, each of the executive officers of the corporation commits an offence of failing to ensure that the corporation complies with the provision.

[5] The complaints were heard in the Magistrates Court at Southport over seven days in August 2010. At the conclusion of the prosecution case, a no case submission was advanced on behalf of the corporation and the Crosses. The submission was based upon the interpretation and application of two provisions within s 138(1)(c) applicable to all counts, which are elaborated later in these reasons. After consideration of argument on the submission, the learned Magistrate upheld it and on 4 March 2011 made formal orders dismissing each complaint and ordering the complainant to pay the defendants' costs.

[6] The complainant appealed against these orders to a judge of the District Court of Southport pursuant to s 222 of the Justices Act 1886. The appeals were heard on 20 February 2012. On 27 March 2012, the learned District Court judge ordered that the appeals be allowed and set aside the orders under appeal. He remitted the charged offences to the Magistrates Court at Southport with a direction that the Magistrate proceed according to law, and further ordered that the defendants pay the complainant's costs of the appeal on the standard basis unless agreed.

[7] On 23 April 2012 the defendants filed applications in this Court pursuant to s 118 of the District Court of Queensland Act 1967 for leave to appeal against the orders made on 27 March. In these reasons it is convenient to refer to the defendants as "the applicants" and to the complainant as "the respondent". In the event that leave is granted, each applicant seeks orders that the appeal be allowed, that the judgment appealed be set aside, and that the respondent pay the costs of this appeal and of the District Court appeal.

The corporation's business activities

[8] As its licence authorised it to do, the corporation at the relevant time engaged in the business of marketing and selling, as agent, residential properties in new developments in Brisbane, the Gold Coast and the Sunshine Coast. Its activities were directed towards the interstate investor market. Park Trent Investments and Easy Plan participated in these activities, the former by marketing properties via seminars and the latter by providing finance to prospective purchasers.

[9] The modus operandi generally adopted was that Park Trent Investments would initiate contact with prospective purchasers at its information seminars. Once interest as a prospective purchaser was expressed by an individual, that company would make travel and accommodation arrangements for the individual to travel to Queensland to inspect a property or properties. Upon arrival in Queensland, the individual would be met by a representative of the corporation, taken on an inspection tour of properties and offered finance through Easy Plan.

[10] The corporation and Park Trent Investments would customarily enter into an agreement or agreements with the property developer for a particular development before actively marketing the development. Typically, the agreements would stipulate the fees that the corporation and Park Trent Investments would be paid for effecting a sale of a property within the development. The fees were denominated as a fixed amount per sale to be divided between those two corporate entities in accordance with a formula referenced to the sale price of the property.

Section 138 PAMD Act

thereof (ss 131-157) contains conduct provisions. Section 138 constitutes Division 3 of Part 2. Division 3 is headed "Disclosure of Interest" and s 138 itself has the heading "Disclosure to prospective buyer".

[12] Of the 38 counts, some are based upon conduct which occurred between 19 March 2002 and 23 April 2002 and the others upon conduct which occurred between 24 April 2002 and 12 June 2003. Section 138(1)(b) was amended, effective from 24 April 2002, to substitute the word "benefit" for the expression "consideration, whether monetary or otherwise" and for the word "consideration" in that provision. Section 138(1)(c), which is central to these applications, was not amended at that point.

[13] Subject to those amendments to s 138(1)(b), the enacted s 138 was in the following terms during the whole of the period relevant to all of the 38 counts:

> "138 Disclosures to prospective buyer
>
> (1) A residential property agent for the sale of residential property must disclose the following to any prospective buyer of the property —
>
> (a) any relationship, and the nature of the relationship (whether personal or commercial), the agent has with anyone to whom the agent refers the buyer for professional services associated with the sale;
>
> Examples of relationships for paragraph (a) —
>
> 1. A family relationship.

2. A business relationship, other than a casual business relationship.
3. A fiduciary relationship.
4. A relationship in which 1 person is accustomed, or obliged, to act in accordance with the directions, instructions, or wishes of the other.

(b) whether the agent derives or expects to derive any benefit from a person to whom the agent has referred the buyer and, if so, the amount or value of the benefit;
(c) the amount, value or nature of any benefit any person has received, receives, or expects to receive in connection with the sale, or for promoting the sale, or for providing a service in connection with the sale, of the property.

Examples for paragraph (c) of persons who may receive a benefit —

- seller
- finance broker
- financial adviser
- financier
- property valuer
- solicitor
- residential property agent.

Maximum penalty — 200 penalty units.
(2) The disclosure is effective for subsection (1) only if it is —

(a) given to the prospective buyer in the approved form; and
(b) acknowledged by the prospective buyer in writing on the approved form; and
(c) given and acknowledged before a contract for the sale of the residential property is entered into.

(3) Also, for subsection (1)(c), disclosure in compliance with the approved form is sufficient.
(4) In this section —

"benefit" means monetary or other benefit.

"residential property agent" means —

(a) a real estate agent; or
(b) a real estate salesperson acting for the real estate agent; or
(c) a person acting as a real estate agent in contravention of section 160; or
(d) a person acting as a real estate salesperson in contravention of section 161.

[14] The form approved by the chief executive pursuant to s 598 of the PAMD Act for the disclosure required by s 138(1) is Form 27b. It provides for disclosure of s 138(1)(a) and (b) matters in Section 3.1 and for disclosure of s 138(1)(c) matters in Section 3.2.

The sufficiency of the disclosure given by the corporation in Section 3.2 of the Form 27b to the prospective buyer named in each of the 38 counts is in issue in these applications. How that issue arises in fact may be outlined by reference to the circumstances of the transaction on which any one of the counts is based. It is convenient to select the Weir transaction for which relevant documents have been included in the record of proceedings in this Court and to which the Court was taken in the course of argument.

The Weir transaction

[16] Mr and Mrs Weir entered into a contract of sale dated 23 December 2002[1] to purchase proposed Lot 16, a two-storey townhouse, in proposed Community Titles Scheme "Lakeside on Varsity" at Christine Avenue, Varsity Lakes. The purchase price was $264,000. The purchase was financed by a loan made by Adelaide Bank Ltd and brokered by Easy Plan. Settlement occurred on 14 February 2003. The contract of sale identified the vendor as Narson Pty Ltd ("Narson") and the corporation as its agent for sale.

[17] A number of significant events had occurred prior to the date of contract. The first in time is that on 16 October 2002, Park Trent Investments and Narson entered into an Administration Agreement in a form which had been prepared within the Park Trent Group and forwarded to Narson that day.[2] By its terms, Narson, as the Vendor, agreed to pay Park Trent Investments, as Marketer, in accordance with Annexure "A" of that agreement. Annexure "A" which was located within the terms of contract, consisted of the following:

"ADMINISTRATION/MARKETING EXPENSES

The administration fee is the sum agreed upon by both the Marketer & Vendor. The administration fee of $20000.00 plus GST shall be paid by the Vendor to the Marketer on settlement of each contract.

$20,000.00 plus GST to be paid on settlement of each contract.
The REIQ Commission will be payable to Cross Country Realty on settlement and is part of the total fee charged.

The fee shall be agreed up upon by use of irrevocable authority or (sic) each sale."[3]

Under the terms of the agreement, Narson agreed to sign an irrevocable authority for payment of the administration fee prior to the contract of sale concerned being released to its solicitor by Park Trent Investments.[4] The parties also agreed that the terms of the agreement were confidential and that its details were not to be released to any person or entity.[5]

[18] The second event occurred after the Weirs had expressed interest in purchasing Lot 16 during a vendor-sponsored trip to the Gold Coast from Melbourne on 10 and 11 December 2002. Bill Myers of the Park Trent Group had shown them Lot 16, mentioned a price of $264,000 and taken them to Easy Plan's office.[6] Then he took them to the office of a solicitor. There, they were given a completed Form 27b[7] which was signed on behalf of the corporation by Mr Myers and dated 11 December 2002. The Weirs signed an acknowledgement of receipt of it on that date. They were also given an undated contract of sale for Lot 16 stating the purchase price to be $264,000 which was attached to a PAMD Act Form 30,[8] and, as well, a Deposit Power application form which also stated the purchase price to be $264,000.[9] They signed the contract and left it with the solicitor. In due course they received that document in the mail which, in the interim, had been signed by the vendor, dated 23 December 2002, and stamped.[10]

[19] Section 3.2 located on page 2 of the prescribed form was headed "Benefits other than by referral". It contained a direction to the person making disclosure which required them to disclose in that section, "… the amount, value or nature of any benefit TO YOUR KNOWLEDGE, (other than those already disclosed by you in section 3.1) which any person has received, receives, or expects to receive in connection with the sale, …" This section further directed the person to Notes on page 3 of the form "For guidance on completing table and meaning of benefit". Below this direction was a box in which disclosure was to be made. The box made provision for two columns, the one on the left-hand side being headed "Person/Entity", and the one on the right "Amount ($), value (%) or nature of benefit". Finally, this section contained the notation that if there was insufficient space in the box, then an additional sheet was to be used.

[20] In the case of the form given to the Weirs, the box in section 3.2 contained in handwriting the words "Refer annexure "A"". This Annexure "A" was on a separate page of the form. It was comprised of the following:

"Selling Agent	1.	Commission of 5% of the first $18,000, and 2.5% of the balance of purchase price.
	2.	The agent has a business relationship with Easy Plan Financial Services. Kellie Cross as Queensland Manager of Cross Country Realty is a director of Easy Plan Financial Services but receives no financial gain. Easy Plan Financial Services offers the following Services Providing Tax Depreciation Schedules Providing the best finance to suit particular situations Financial Planning Providing insurance solutions for clients
Developers Consultants:	A fee of up to 1.5% of the purchase price with respect to each of the following services:
	1.	Consultation and advisory services with respect to each of the following services.
	2.	Assisting with the drafting and preparation of advertising and promotional material; assisting with the design, structure and implementation of ongoing advertising and marketing programs.
	3.	Assisting with the Co-ordination and supervision of service providers with respect to sales and marketing, including advertising and public relations providers; provision of reports to the developer with respect to matters the subject of this agreement.
	4.	Consultation services with respect to project marketing the development: provision of sales information centre/s; conducting and staffing sales information centres
	5.	Liasing (sic) with real estate agents to introduce buyers to the project: undertaking promotional activities with respect to the development including; property exhibitions, database marketing and mail-outs, letter-box drops etc
	6.	Provision of and access to and use of database/s.
	7.	The payment of expenses including advertisements, printing and stationary (sic), postage and sign-writing and general expenses."[11]

[140570]

I note that the disclosure made in Section 3.1 located on page 1 of the form did not refer to any of the above benefits.

[21] On 12 December 2002 Narson signed two documents each headed "Irrevocable Authority" which it faxed to the corporation on 15 December.[12] Both related to the sale of Lot 16. In one of the documents, Narson acknowledged that, on settlement, it would pay to the corporation REIQ commission of $7,050 plus GST. That amount is equal to five per cent of $18,000 and 2.5 per cent of $246,000 ($264,000 less $18,000) plus GST. In the other document, Narson acknowledged that, on settlement, it would pay to Park Trent Real Estate an Administration Levy of $12,950 plus GST. The REIQ commission and the Administration

Levy together equal the amount of the administration fee of $20,000 plus GST which the Administration Agreement provided be paid on each sale.

[22] After settlement and on 18 February 2003, separate tax invoices for $7,755 ($7,050 plus GST) and $14,245 ($12,950 plus GST)[13] were submitted to Narson on behalf of the corporation and Park Trent Real Estate respectively. The invoices were paid by Narson on that day.

The issues for consideration

[23] Argument of the appeal before the learned District Court judge was centred upon two issues concerning the Annexure "A" to the form 27b. They were:

> (a) whether the description of each of the recipients of the respective benefits was sufficient to satisfy the requirements of s 138(1)(c); and
> (b) whether the description of what was to be received by the developer consultant was sufficient to satisfy the requirements of that section. (There appears to have been no issue that the description of the amount to be received by the selling agent, the standard REIQ commission, was sufficient.)[14]

[24] His Honour concluded on the first issue that the descriptions were insufficient in that they failed to identify the recipient selling agent and developer consultant by name.[15] On the second issue, he concluded that the formulaic description of the benefit to be received by the developer consultant, namely up to 1.5 per cent of the purchase price with respect to each of the some six listed services,[16] was inaccurate and therefore insufficient.[17] Adapted to the Weir's case, his Honour would have regarded either a "precise $ figure" or a description which incorporated the formula "$20,000 – the REIQ commission on purchase price" as a sufficient description for the disclosure required.[18]

[25] In the appeals for which leave is sought, the applicants propose to challenge his Honour's conclusions on each of these issues. It is convenient to consider the two issues separately.

Issue (i) – description of recipient

[26] It may be accepted that neither s 138(1)(c) nor the prescribed Form 27b, in terms, stipulates that the identity of the recipient person must be disclosed by stating the name of the person. The applicants rely on that feature of the section and also upon the further feature of it that the examples of persons who might receive a benefit given by the section all describe the person by reference to the person's status which, in turn, is referenced to the function that the person performs, for example, as a finance broker, a property valuer or a solicitor. These examples themselves have statutory force as part of the enacted s 138(1)(c).[19] Relying upon these matters, the applicants argue that disclosure of the identity of the recipient by name is not required.

[27] The applicants supplement their argument by reference to the interpretative provisions in s 14A(1) of the Acts Interpretation Act 1954 ("Interpretation Act"). They submit that the legislative objective of consumer protection enunciated in s 10 of the PAMD Act is best achieved by interpreting s 138(1)(c) as permitting the required disclosure by disclosure of the function – referenced status of the recipient rather than as compelling mere disclosure of the name of the recipient.

[28] The respondent argues that disclosure of the identity of the recipient by name is mandatory. Reliance is placed on the provision in s 36 of the Interpretation Act which ascribes to the word "person" in an Act, a meaning that includes both an individual and a corporation. Further reliance is placed on the heading "Person/Entity" in Section 3.2 of the form and the provision in s 49(2)(b) of the Interpretation Act to the effect that if a statutorily prescribed form requires specified information to be included in it, then the form is not properly completed unless there is compliance with that requirement.

[29] In my view, the applicant's argument on this issue is to be preferred. The absence of any express requirement for disclosure of identity by name affords a sound basis for this preference. I consider that the respondent's argument ought not be accepted for the following reasons. To interpret the word "person" in the section as meaning both an individual and a corporation has the consequence that any recipient of a benefit, be it an individual or a corporation, must be disclosed. It does not have the consequence that the recipient individual or corporation must be identified by name, to the exclusion of disclosure by way of status referenced to function. Similarly, with respect to the heading "Person/Entity", that denotation is not apt to specify that the name of the recipient person or entity must be disclosed. The heading is sufficiently general to allow for disclosure by way of status referenced to the function of the recipient.

[30] For these reasons, I respectfully disagree with the learned judge on this issue.

Issue (ii) – description of benefit

[31] Here, it may be accepted that the description in Annexure "A" of the benefit to be received by the developer's consultant was not untruthful. The description gave a range in which the fee might fall of between nothing – if no services were provided, and nine per cent of the purchase price – if all six of the services were provided. Adopting a purchase price of $264,000, that range was from $0 to $23,760. The fee in fact received by Park Trent Real Estate was $12,950 plus GST, an amount well within that range.

[32] However, the statutory requirement for disclosure of the benefit was not merely that whatever description might be given of it not be untruthful. What was required was truthful disclosure of particulars of the benefit in accordance with all applicable statutory provisions. I have already outlined both the requirement in s 138(1)(c) that the amount, value or nature of the benefit be disclosed and the relevant content of Section 3.2 in the prescribed form. Attention needs to be given also to the notes on page 3 of the form to which the party making disclosure was directed for guidance by Section 3.2. Those notes contain the following statement:

> "'Amount, value or nature' of the benefit
>
> You must provide the amount, value or nature of the benefit as accurately as is possible at the time of the disclosure. You should express the benefit as follows:
>
> (1) an amount ($). If you can not do this, then –
> (2) a value (%). If you can not do this, then –
> (3) describe the nature of the benefit. You should ONLY do this if the benefit can not be described as an amount or value.
>
> If you do not know the exact amount or value of the benefit, provide a reasonable estimate of the final amount or value, based on the purchase price at the time of disclosure."

[33] Section 49(2) of the Interpretation Act at all relevant times provided:

> "(2) If a form prescribed or approved under an Act requires —
>
> (a) the form to be completed in a specified way; or
> (b) specified information or documents to be included in, attached to or given with the form; or
> (c) the form, or information or documents included in, attached to or given with the form, to be verified in a specified way;
> the form is not properly completed unless the requirement is complied with."

[34] A question arose in argument whether the notes were to be regarded as a requirement that Section 3.2 be completed in a specified way for the purposes of s 49(2)(a) of the Interpretation Act or a requirement that specified information be included in Section 3.2 for the purposes of s 49(2)(b) thereof. If either, then a failure to comply with the requirement would have the statutory consequence that the form was not properly completed.

[35]

The applicants submit that the descriptor "For guidance" indicated that compliance with the notes was not a requirement as would engage s 49(2). I do not accept that submission. Firstly, that descriptor does not imply choice on the part of the disclosing party as to whether it takes guidance from the notes or not. To the contrary, in my view, the descriptor connotes that the party is to obtain guidance from them. Secondly, the mandatory terms in which this extract from the notes is expressed – exemplified by the words "must provide" in the first paragraph and the imperative "provide" in the second – are indicative of a requirement to comply rather than of choice.

[36] The applicants point to s 138(3) of the PAMD Act which provides that for s 138(1)(c), disclosure in compliance with the approved form is sufficient. They submit that disclosure in compliance with the form, not any notes to it, is sufficient. This submission overlooks that the notes are part of the prescribed form. They are set out on page 3 of a five page document. There is no reason for treating them as separate from the form.

[37] Linked to that submission is a proposition suggested in oral argument by the applicants that s 138(3) overrides the application of s 49(2) of the Interpretation Act to disclosure for the purposes of s 138(1)(c). That is not so. The role of s 138(3) is a limited one. It addresses the circumstance that a form that has been approved for s 138(1)(c) disclosure might fail to provide accurately or comprehensively for disclosure in accordance with the requirements of that section properly construed. The section has the effect that, in that circumstance, disclosure in accordance with the approved form is sufficient. However, for the purposes of compliance with s 138(1)(c), s 138(3) has no bearing upon what is sufficient for proper completion of the approved form. That topic is one that falls within the province of s 49(2). Neither s 138(3) nor s 49(2) encroaches upon the field of operation of the other.

[38] It is convenient at this point to note that the applicants seek support for this submission from an observation made at first instance by Cooper AJ of the Supreme Court of New South Wales in defamation proceedings, Cross v Queensland Newspapers Pty Ltd,[20] in which the Weir and many other like transactions were considered. Referring to s 138(3) his Honour expressed the view[21] that that section does not mean that disclosure not in compliance with "the explanatory notes" to the Form 27b is insufficient. He concluded that the form which had been provided to the Weirs did comply with s 138.[22]

[39] For the reasons just given, I do not agree with this view. His Honour's reasons suggest that his view was reached without regard for the provisions in s 49(2) of the Interpretation Act. It also appears that the Administration Agreement was not in evidence before him. It remains to note that the judgment was set aside by the Court of Appeal of New South Wales[23] although his Honour's view on this matter is not discussed in the Court's reasons for judgment.

[40] The respondent submits that Annexure "A" was not compliant in two respects with the notes in the form for stating the amount, value or nature of the benefit to be received by the developer's consultant. First, the description of the benefit in Annexure "A", whether regarded as a description by value (as a percentage) or by nature, was not as accurate as possible at the time of disclosure, as required by the first paragraph in the extract from notes which I have set out. The respondents submit, correctly in my view, that under the Administration Agreement, the benefit to be received by the developer's consultant was an amount to be calculated by deduction from $20,000 plus GST of the REIQ commission plus GST: it was not an amount to be calculated (and, in fact, was not calculated), by reference to a fee of up to 1.5 per cent of the purchase price for any one or more of the six services listed in the Annexure "A". The description given was not accurate.

[41] Secondly, the respondent submits, also correctly in my view, that the amount of the benefit could and should have been stated at the time of disclosure. In the Weirs' case, the Form 27b was given to them contemporaneously with the unsigned contract and the Deposit Power application form both of which stated the purchase price to be $264,000. In those circumstances, an accurate calculation of the amount of the REIQ commission payable on that price could have been made and, further, an accurate calculation of the amount of the developer's consultant fee could also have been made by a simple deduction of the commission plus GST from the amount of $20,000 plus GST.

[42] There is no substance in the applicant's claim that the corporation was excused from stating the amount of the fee because a different purchase price might have been negotiated after the Form 27b had been provided to the Weirs but before the contract had been executed by all parties. The second paragraph of the notes in the extract stated that if the exact amount was not known at the time of disclosure, then an estimate based on the purchase price at the time of disclosure was to be made and disclosed. This was not done notwithstanding that the purchase price at the time of disclosure was known to be $264,000.

[43] Accordingly in my view, the part of the Form 27b which required disclosure of the amount, value or nature of the benefit to be paid to the developer's consultant was not properly completed. The benefit was not effectively disclosed for the purposes of s 138(1)(c). On this issue I am in respectful agreement with the learned judge.

[44] For the Weir transaction, effective disclosure of the fee to be received by the developer's consultant required that the amount of the fee be stated. That could have been done by either stating that it was $14,245 or that it was $12,950 plus GST. I would add that, for that transaction, I would not regard disclosure by means of the formula proposed by his Honour as complying with the requirements in the notes for completing the form. Disclosure by the formula would not have been disclosure of an amount which, at the time that the form was provided, could have been calculated accurately, or, at least, reasonably estimated.

Disposition

[45] The issues raised by these applications warrant the grant of leave to appeal.

[46] The failure of the applicants' appeal with respect to Issue (ii) has the consequence that these appeals must be dismissed. The orders and directions made on 27 March 2012 ought to be affirmed.

[47] In this court, each side has been successful on one of the two issues for decision. In these circumstances, I consider that there ought to be no order as to costs of these applications and appeals.

Orders in each application

[48]

1. Grant leave to appeal.
2. Appeal dismissed.
3. Affirm the orders and direction made on 27 March 2012 in the District Court at Southport.

Henry J: I have read the reasons of Gotterson JA. I agree with those reasons and the orders proposed.

Supreme Court of Queensland — Court of Appeal

Decision delivered on 15 March 2013

Conveyancing — Contract for sale — Remedies for breach of contract — Where the parties entered into a standard contract of sale (being the second edition of the REIQ/QLS standard form contract for the sale of residential lots under community titles schemes) for an apartment — Where the contract contained a subject to finance clause requiring the purchaser to take all reasonable steps to obtain finance approval — Where the purchaser did not take all reasonable steps — Whether the vendor could rely on contractual remedies under cl 9 of the contract in addition to common law remedies for breach of contract — Whether the subject to finance clause was exclusively for the benefit of the purchaser.

The respondent purchaser entered into a contract of sale (using the REIQ/QLS standard form contract for the sale of residential lots under community titles schemes) to buy an apartment situated in Queensland from the vendor appellants. The contract was conditional on the purchaser obtaining approval for a loan from ING Bank with cl 3 of the contract providing that:

> "3. Finance
>
> 3.1 This contract is conditional on the Buyer obtaining approval of a loan for the Finance Amount from the Financier by the Finance Date on terms satisfactory to the Buyer. The Buyer must take all reasonable steps to obtain approval.
>
> 3.2 The Buyer must give notice to the Seller that:
>
> (1) approval has not been obtained by the Finance Date and the contract is terminated; or
> (2) the finance condition has been either satisfied or waived by the Buyer.
>
> 3.3. The Seller may terminate this contract by notice to the Buyer if notice is not given under clause 3.2 by 5pm on the Finance Date. This is the Seller's only remedy for the Buyer's failure to give notice.
> 3.4 The Seller's right under clause 3.3 is subject to the Buyer's continuing right to terminate this contract under clause 3.2(1) or waive the benefit of this clause 3 by giving written notice to the Seller of the waiver."

The purchaser did not attempt to obtain approval from ING Bank as she believed she would not be able to get approval within the stipulated time. Instead she approached an alternative financier; however the alternative financier was not able to approve the loan in time.

The purchaser purported to terminate the contract because finance was not forthcoming and requested the return of the deposit.

The vendor subsequently purported to terminate the contract as a result of the purchaser not taking "all reasonable steps to obtain approval" from ING Bank in accordance with cl 3 of the contract. The vendor asserted a right to the contractual remedies under cl 9 of the contract in addition to common law remedies for breach of contract.

Clause 9.1 of the contract provided that if the purchaser failed to comply with any provision of the contract, the vendor could affirm or terminate the contract which activated the vendor's remedies in cl 9.3–9.6.

The trial judge allowed the vendor the deposit but denied it recourse to the contractual remedies under cl 9, confining them to common law relief. The trial judge held that the cl 3 subject to finance clause was entirely for the purchaser's benefit and it was not intended that if the purchaser did not comply with its provisions, the cl 9 remedies would be activated. The vendor was appealing on the ground that it should have been allowed recourse to the contractual remedies.

Held: appeal allowed.

1. The trial judge erred in finding that the purchaser's breach of the obligation to take all reasonable steps to obtain finance approval pursuant to cl 3.1 did not amount to a breach of contract within the contemplation of cl 9.1. The trial judge found that the breach was not within the contemplation of cl 9.1 as cl 3.1 was "entirely" for the benefit of the purchaser. However, both parties had an interest in the completion of the contract. The vendor has an interest in ensuring the purchaser makes every reasonable effort to secure necessary finance to enable completion of the contract.

2. Even though the second sentence of cl 3.1 (ie "The Buyer must take all reasonable steps to obtain approval") is couched in the language of a covenant or promise, it should, however, be regarded as a "provision" of the contract for the purposes of cl 9.1.

3. Pursuant to cl 3.3, the vendor may terminate the contract if the purchaser fails to give the requisite notice. This is the vendor's only remedy where no notice is given. In the present case, the purchaser had given notice (even though it lacked the necessary foundation). The purchaser's contractual breach was her failure to take all reasonable steps to obtain finance approval. In these circumstances, the vendor was entitled to the remedies specified in cl 9.

Had a contrary interpretation of the relevant clauses been intended by the parties, they could easily have made that clear by express provision to that effect.

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

J Baird SC with L Stephens (instructed by Trevor Hauff Lawyers) for the appellants.

R Murdoch QC (instructed by Robert Palethorpe Solicitor) for the respondent.

Before: Chief Justice and Holmes JA and Dalton J

Holmes JA and Dalton J:

[1] CHIEF JUSTICE: The respondent entered into a contract to purchase a home unit from the appellants. The contract was subject to finance. The respondent purported to terminate the contract because finance was not forthcoming. It emerged the respondent had not applied to the nominated financier. The appellants subsequently terminated the contract claiming the deposit and asserting a right to pursue damages etc under the provisions of the contract.

[2] The learned Judge allowed the appellants the deposit, but denied them recourse to their other contractual remedies, confining them to common law relief. The appellants appeal on the ground that they should have been allowed recourse to the contractual remedy.

[3] The respondent cross-appeals on the basis the Judge erred in finding that she had not taken reasonable steps to obtain finance: her right to terminate was predicated upon her having taken those steps.

Factual circumstances

[4] By the contract, which is dated 3 September 2010, the appellants agreed to sell unit five in a block at Port Douglas to the respondent for $575,000. The deposit was $10,000. The settlement date was 1 October 2010. The "finance amount" was $400,000, to be obtained from ING Bank by 10 September 2010.

[5] When the approval was not obtained, the appellants, following an approach on behalf of the respondent, agreed to extend time for the obtaining of finance until 5 pm on 17 September 2010, with time to remain of the essence.

[6] At 4.22 pm on 17 September, the solicitors for the respondent advised the solicitors for the appellants:

> "Our client has not been able to obtain finance approval. Accordingly the contract is now at an end. Please authorise the agent to refund the deposit to our client in full."

[7] On 20 September, the solicitors for the appellants pointed out to the solicitors for the respondent that they needed to be satisfied that the respondent had taken all reasonable steps to obtain finance, and the appellants' solicitors sought copies of the relevant documentation.

[8] In response, on 20 September, the solicitors for the respondent furnished communications from The Rock Building Society, on the basis that material confirmed "that finance was not going to be approved by the due date". The query arises why the respondent applied not to the contractually specified financier, ING Bank, but to The Rock. As recounted by His Honour:

> "On entering into the contract the defendant had previously negotiated a loan facility with ING Bank, obtaining pre-approval for $200,000.00. The contracts were signed on a Friday and that evening the defendant contacted her mortgage broker, Ms Fisk to seek that ING Bank 'reactive the loan'. When Ms Fisk contacted ING Bank on Monday 6 September 2010, she was informed by email from ING that 'this has been archived in our system due to no action since May 2010, we will require a brand new loan application to be submitted in order for the deal to proceed.' Ms Fisk was of the view that it would not be possible to obtain a suitable loan from ING Bank by the Finance Date in the building contract. The defendant then decided, on the advice of Ms Fisk, to seek finance from a different financier, the The Rock … There is no evidence that the plaintiffs were advised of this decision."

[9] Informed that the respondent had made no application to ING Bank referable to the instant contract, the solicitors for the appellants said this to the solicitors for the respondent, on 20 September 2010:

> "The [contract] of sale specifically provides that the lender was ING Bank not the Rock Building Society. Additionally even the Rock Building [Society] has not refused to approve the loan simply stating it could not do so in time for the 17th September 2010 although the reason for that is unstated. That time was not a critical date as firstly an extension of time could have been requested, or simply the notice of termination not be given, in which case the contract would have remained on foot until terminated by the Seller (or Buyer if finance could [not] be obtained). If the circumstances had been explained to the Seller it would have extended the time and indeed is still willing to do so. In any event if the termination notice had not been given then the contract would have remained on foot allowing ample time for finance to be obtained. It appears that it was not an issue of whether finance could be obtained but whether it could be obtained by the 17th September 2010 from the Rock Building Society, not the contract nominated party the ING Bank and the circumstances surrounding why it could not be obtained have not been explained.
> This documentation does not show that the Buyer acted reasonably and we therefore cannot authorise the release of the deposit."

[10] It is convenient to observe here that the appellants were not thereby electing to affirm the contract. They were effectively negotiating as to the future of the transaction. In relation to the words, "the seller … is still willing to do so" (that is, extend time if asked), it is relevant to note that no further request for an extension of time was made. In other words, the respondent was standing by her purported termination. As in Tropical Traders Ltd v Goonan (1964) 111 CLR 41, 55, the appellants had effectively held any right of termination which had accrued to them in abeyance.

[11] Then on 21 September 2010, the appellants for their part purported to terminate the contract in reliance upon the respondent's breach of an obligation under the finance provision. They advised the solicitors for the respondent in these terms:

> "Further to my earlier email, it appears from the advice supplied to me by Joanne of Rob Palethorpe solicitor (copy attached) that the Buyer at best may have applied for a loan with the Rock Building Society, but apparently made no attempt whatsoever to get a loan from the nominated Financier ING Bank as required by the finance clause. Therefore the Buyer has not complied with the contract to take all reasonable steps to obtain the loan from the nominated Financier. In fact it appears the Buyer did not even make an application to the nominated Financier.
>
> In these circumstances the Buyer has breached the contract and the Seller may under Clause 9.3 keep the deposit and interest earned, sue the Buyer for damages and resell the property.
> In the circumstances, The Seller lays claim to the deposit and if necessary will sue for damages."

[12] In a letter the following day, the solicitors for the appellants advised that the appellants expressly terminated the contract pursuant to cl 9.1, and asserted the appellants' entitlement to relief under cl 9.3.

[13] There was subsequent correspondence in relation to compliance with the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000. Prior to the trial, the respondent disavowed any reliance on that legislation, and it is not necessary to consider it further in these reasons.

[14] The appellants sought at trial: first, a declaration that the respondent was in default under the contract and the appellants had terminated the contract under cl 9.1; second, a declaration that the appellants were entitled to the remedy specified under cl 9; third, a declaration that the appellants were entitled to the deposit monies of $10,000; and fourth, a declaration that the appellants were entitled to a deposit of $3,000 which had been paid under a related contract for the purchase of the contents of the unit. (The claim was pleaded in the statement of claim by reference to clauses 3 and 9, not anticipatory breach and repudiation.)

[15] There is no need to say more about that other contract: there is no challenge to the relief granted in that regard by the Judge.

The contractual provisions

[16] The contract was in the form of the second edition of the REIQ/QLS standard form contract for the sale of residential lots under community titles schemes. The finance clause provided:

"3. Finance

3.1 This contract is conditional on the Buyer obtaining approval of a loan for the Finance Amount from the Financier by the Finance Date on terms satisfactory to the Buyer. The Buyer must take all reasonable steps to obtain approval.
3.2 The Buyer must give notice to the Seller that:

(1) approval has not been obtained by the Finance Date and the contract is terminated; or
(2) the finance condition has been either satisfied or waived by the Buyer.

3.3 The Seller may terminate this contract by notice to the Buyer if notice is not given under clause 3.2 by 5pm on the Finance Date. This is the Seller's only remedy for the Buyer's failure to give notice.
3.4 The Seller's right under clause 3.3 is subject to the Buyer's continuing right to terminate this contract under clause 3.2(1) or waive the benefit of this clause 3 by giving written notice to the Seller of the waiver."

[17] Clause 9, upon which the appellants rely for their claimed relief, provides:

"9. Buyer's Default

9.1 Seller May Affirm or Terminate

If the Buyer fails to comply with any provision of this contract, the Seller may affirm or terminate this contract.
9.2 If Seller Affirms

If the Seller affirms this contract under clause 9.1, it may sue the Buyer for:

(1) damages;
(2) specific performance; or
(3) damages and specific performance

9.3 If Seller Terminates

If the Seller terminates this contract under clause 9.1, it may do all or any of the following:

(1) resume possession of the Property;
(2) keep the Deposit and interest earned on its investment;
(3) sue the Buyer for damages;
(4) resell the Property.

9.4 Resale

(1) The Seller may recover from the Buyer as liquidated damages:

(a) any deficiency in price on a resale; and
(b) its expenses connected with this contract, any repossession, any failed attempt to resell, and the resale; provided the resale settles within 2 years of termination of this contract.

(2) Any profit on a resale belongs to the Seller.

9.5 Seller's Damages

The Seller may claim damages for any loss it suffers as a result of the Buyer's default, including its legal costs on a solicitor and own client basis.

9.6 Interest on Late Payments

(1) Without affecting the Seller's other rights, if any money payable by the Buyer under this contract is not paid when due, the Buyer must pay the Seller at settlement interest on that money calculated at the Default Interest Rate from the due date for payment until payment is made.
(2) The Seller may recover that interest from the Buyer as liquidated damages.
(3) Any judgment for money payable under this contract will bear interest from the date of judgment to the date of payment and the provisions of this clause 9.6 apply to calculation of that interest."

[18] The competing positions, as placed before the learned Judge, were these.

[19] The appellants asserted that the respondent breached an obligation under what I note is part of the condition subsequent cl 3.1 (Sutter v Gundowda Pty Ltd (1950) 81 CLR 418, 443) to "take all reasonable steps to obtain approval" of finance. The respondent had made no formal application to the specified financier. Accordingly, under cl 9.1, the appellants had duly terminated the contract, becoming entitled to the relief specified subsequently in that clause.

[20] The respondent's position was that applying to ING Bank, the specified financier, given the short timeframe, would have been an exercise in futility; she was entitled to give the notice terminating the contract under cl 3.2(1) and to retain the deposit.

The learned Judge's approach

[21] His Honour held that the respondent had not satisfied her obligations under cl 3.1. He said:

> "It is established law that the defendant bears the onus of establishing that she had taken all reasonable steps to obtain finance from ING Bank in order to invoke the benefit of clause 3.1 of the building contract. The difficulty for the defendant is that no evidence was called from ING Bank as to her prospects of obtaining finance by 5:00 p.m. on Friday, 17 September, 2010, the extended Finance Date. In the circumstances and particularly having regard to the fact that she made no application for finance to this financier as contemplated by clause 3.1 at all, I am not satisfied that the defendant has discharged the onus of proving that she took all reasonable steps to obtain finance approval from the nominated financier, ING Bank."

[22] His Honour then addressed the question whether the clause 9 rights consequently accrued to the appellants. He answered that question in the negative, essentially for these reasons. He held that the provision that the respondent should take all reasonable steps to obtain finance was part of a provision (the subject to finance provision) which was "entirely for (the respondent's) benefit". Especially in light of cl 3.3, it was not intended that if she did not comply with that stipulation, her failure would activate the clause 9 regime. Rather, in giving notice of termination without the backing of compliance with its underlying requirement (to take all reasonable steps), she repudiated the contract. Having accepted that repudiation, the appellants were entitled to relief, not under cl 9, but at common law.

[23] That is my attempted summary of what His Honour said, which was as follows:

> "The relief sought pursuant to clause 9 of the building contract is couched in terms of the defendant 'failing to comply with any provision of this contract.' It could be argued that in not taking all reasonable steps to obtain approval of a loan from the nominated financier by the extended finance date the defendant failed to comply with a provision of the building contract, however this provision was entirely for her benefit and clause 3.3 makes it clear that it is not intended that non-compliance in this regard is within the contemplation of clause 9. Clause 3 was for the benefit of the defendant alone and she was not in breach of the building contract in failing to obtain finance pursuant to clause 3. In repudiating the building contract by purporting to rely on clause 3 when she was not entitled to, her conduct falls outside of what is contemplated in clause 9.1. In the circumstances, the plaintiffs clearly have remedies at common law, but the remedies specified in clause 9 of the building contract are not open to them."

[24] In the result, the Judge declined to make the first two declarations sought. He made these declarations:

> "(1) the plaintiffs are entitled to the deposit of $10,000.00 held by the Agent pursuant to Clause 2.4(1)(c) and 2.4(2) of the Terms of Contract in the Contract of Sale of Real Property made the 3rd September 2010 between the plaintiffs as Seller and the defendant as Buyer of the property described as Unit 5, at 14A-16 Andrews Close Port Douglas and being Lot 5 on SP168547; and
> (2) the defendant is in default of the Contract of Sale of Chattels and the plaintiffs are entitled to and have properly terminated the Contract for the sale of Chattels and are entitled to the deposit of $3000.00 pursuant to Clause 3 of the Contract for the Sale of Chattels.

[25] He ordered that the deposit monies, which had been paid into court, be paid out, with interest, to the appellants. He ordered the respondent to pay the appellants' costs to be assessed on the indemnity basis.

[26] It remains to set out the deposit provision:

> "2.4 Entitlement to Deposit and Interest
>
> (1) The party entitled to receive the Deposit is:
>
> (a) if this contract settles, the Seller;
> (b) if this contract is terminated without default by the Buyer, the Buyer; and > (c) if this contract is terminated owing to the Buyer's default, the Seller.
> (2) The interest on the Deposit must be paid to the person who is entitled to the Deposit.
> (3) If this contract is terminated, the Buyer has no further claim once it receives the Deposit and interest (if any), unless the termination is due to the Seller's default, misrepresentation or breach of warranty.
> (4) The Deposit is invested at the risk of the party who is ultimately entitled to it."

Analysis

Steps taken by respondent to obtain finance

[27] A mortgage broker, Ms Fisk, dealt with the issue of obtaining finance on behalf of the respondent. She had regard to what she believed to be "turn around time" for various financial providers, and reached the view that an approach to The Rock would more likely be successful within time. There is however evidence to suggest that she was also influenced by The Rock's "competitive interest rate".

[28] The evidence before the Judge did not establish that an application to ING Bank would have been futile. That lender had a file of background information on the respondent's financial position. Presumably updating it would not have taken an inordinate time, and it may have been that if apprised of the need for a swift determination, ING Bank could and would have obliged. One simply does not know, because no evidence from ING Bank was presented.

[29] The Judge was right to emphasise that the respondent made no application for finance to ING Bank (as distinct from what could be regarded as a preliminary inquiry on 6 September 2010). The respondent did not instigate the process required of her. The Judge's conclusion that the respondent did not establish that she had taken all reasonable steps to obtain finance approval was amply justified.

Consequences

[30] Taking a literal approach, the respondent therefore failed to comply with a provision of the contract, being the second part of cl 3.1, justifying termination under cl 9.1 and activation of the appellants' rights under cll 9.3, 9.4, 9.5, and 9.6. The question arises however, whether breach of the obligation resting upon the respondent to take all reasonable steps to obtain finance approval amounted to a breach of contract within the contemplation of cl 9.1.

[31] The learned Judge considered it was not, because the provision in cl 3.1 was "entirely" for the benefit of the respondent. I respectfully disagree with that characterisation. Regarding the obligation to take reasonable steps only as a condition regulating the purchaser's right to terminate were finance not obtained, would ignore the interest of both purchaser and vendor in the completion of the contract. See, in similar vein, Meehan v Jones (1982) 149 CLR 571, 588, 592 per Mason J and Perri v Coolangatta Investments Pty Ltd (1982) 149 CLR 537, 565 per Brennan J (as their Honours "were" in 1982). A vendor has an interest in ensuring the purchaser makes every reasonable effort to secure necessary finance to ensure completion of the contract.

[32] The question remains whether the second sentence at cl 3.1, which is couched in the language of covenant or promise, should however not be regarded as a "provision" of the contract within the meaning of cl 9.1.

[33] The way the obligation to take all reasonable steps is couched and presented suggests it may have a dual operation, both as a contractual promise on the part of the purchaser (separately expressed in its own self-contained sentence), and as the pre-condition for the exercise of the right to terminate should finance approval not be granted (that sentence immediately following the "subject to finance" clause).

[34] The parties have not said that the right to terminate only arises if the purchaser has taken all reasonable steps and approval is not given, and that it is entirely up to the purchaser whether or not the purchaser takes those steps.

[35] Under this form of cl 3.1, the purchaser is apparently subject to an unequivocal contractual obligation to take "all reasonable steps to obtain approval".

[36] The Judge's other reason for his contrary conclusion was that "clause 3.3 makes it clear that it is not intended that non-compliance (with clause 3.1) is within the contemplation of clause 9".

[37] Clause 3.3 accords the vendor a right to terminate, and no more, where the purchaser has given no notice under cl 3.2, whether of termination, waiver of the condition, or satisfaction of the condition. The vendor may then terminate "for the buyer's failure to give notice" (cl 3.3). That was not this factual situation, of course, where notice was in fact given, although lacking the necessary foundation.

[38] This reason advanced by the Judge does not address the question whether the second part of cl 3.1 should be regarded as, in effect, a stand-alone promise on the part of the respondent – in addition to its role as the foundation of the respondent's right to terminate if finance should not be approved.

[39] Clause 3.3 "codifies" the vendor's right to terminate in the event the purchaser gives no notice at all under cl 3.2, that is, whether finance is or is not approved, or if not approved, where the purchaser has waived the right to terminate. In any of those cases, if the vendor chooses to terminate, that is the vendor's only right. The vendor may of course not terminate, but hold the purchaser to the obligation to complete. If the purchaser breaches that obligation, the vendor will have a range of rights.

[40] Take the case where the purchaser has failed to take reasonable steps to secure finance, does not gain the approval, and fails to give notice of termination (or otherwise) under cl 3.2. The vendor could then terminate for the purchaser's failure to give notice (cl 3.3). That would then be the vendor's only remedy for the purchaser's "failure to give notice" (cl 3.3).

[41] But as in that case where the purchaser's failure to discharge its contractual obligation to give notice under cl 3.2 has been preceded by another separate contractual breach, that is breach of the obligation under cl 3.1, to take all reasonable steps to obtain finance approval, there is no reason why the vendor could not terminate, not for the failure to give notice, but for breach of the separate obligation to take reasonable steps, giving rise to the application of cl 9. That is what happened in this case on 21 September 2010.

[42] A purchaser's failure to give notice under cl 3.2 is a non-compliance with a provision of the contract, to use the terms of cl 9.1, but it is cl 3.3 which makes particular provision specifically regulating and limiting the vendor's rights upon termination for that particular breach.

[43] Other instances of non-compliance, such as non-compliance with the obligation to take reasonable steps to obtain finance approval, not being the subject of special provision in the conditions (by contrast with cl 3.3), therefore fall within the general ambit of cl 9.

[44] I see no sufficient reason to depart in this regard from the literal thrust of cll 3 and 9. (The issue appears not to have been canvassed previously at appellate level.) That the respondent was obliged to take all reasonable steps to obtain approval for the requisite finance was a "provision of the contract" (cl 9.1), in fact one of considerable potential importance to both vendor and purchaser, and there is no indication that it should not be regarded as falling within the purview of cl 9. Had the contrary position been intended by the parties, they could easily have made that clear by express provision to that effect.

Conclusion

[45] I would make the following orders:

1. that the appeal be allowed;
2. that the cross-appeal be dismissed;
3. that the judgment given on 19 July 2012 be varied by the addition of the following declaration:

> (3) that on 22 September 2010 the appellants duly terminated the said contract under cl 9.1, because of the respondent's failure to comply with cl 3.1, and that the appellants are consequently entitled, at their election and as applicable, to the remedies specified in cll 9.3, 9.4, 9.5 and 9.6.

4. that the respondent pay the appellants' costs of and incidental to the appeal and the cross-appeal. The basis on which they should be assessed is reserved, pending written submissions, to be furnished forthwith.

Holmes JA: I have had the advantage of reading the reasons of the Chief Justice and of Dalton J, and agree with them. The orders should be those proposed by the Chief Justice.

Dalton J: I agree with the orders proposed by the Chief Justice.

[48] The relevant clauses of the contract – cll 3 and 9 – are set out in the Chief Justice's judgment.

[49] The contract allowed only seven days for the purchaser to attempt to obtain finance from the financier, defined as ING Bank. The purchaser had previously negotiated a loan facility with ING Bank for an investment which did not go ahead. It appears that she and her finance broker, Ms Fisk, therefore anticipated that only a short time would be needed for ING Bank to reactivate that previously approved loan.

[50] The contract was made on 3 September 2010, a Friday. The purchaser contacted her finance broker that day and on Monday 6 September 2010 the broker made an email enquiry of ING Bank as to how she should go about reactivating the previously approved finance. The broker was told that, because of the time which had passed since the previous application, the bank would require a new loan application to be submitted. No attempt was made to deal further with ING Bank. The broker apparently thought that an alternative financier would be more likely to grant finance within the limited time available. Unfortunately that decision seems to have been taken in ignorance of the fact that the contract required the purchaser to take all reasonable steps to obtain approval from ING Bank by 10 September 2010.

[51] The primary judge was clearly right in holding that all reasonable steps were not taken to obtain finance approval from ING Bank. Nothing but a preliminary enquiry was made. No formal application was submitted and there was no attempt by the vendor to persuade ING Bank to reconsider reactivating the previous loan or grant a speedy approval to a new loan on the basis of their previous dealings.

[52] In my view, the last sentence of cl 3.1 of the contract operated to impose an independent contractual obligation on the purchaser. It would be better if that sentence were contained in an independent clause of the contract.[2] Nonetheless, that sentence is in my view, a "provision of [the] contract" within the meaning of cl 9.1 of the contract. It was breached. That entitled the vendor to terminate the contract and rely upon his rights under cl 9.1 of the contract.

[53] The first sentence of cl 3.1 is for the benefit of the purchaser – Zieme v Gregory[3] – and cll 3.2, 3.3 and 3.4 regulate the purchaser's rights to waive it. The second sentence in cl 3.1 is not wholly for the benefit of the purchaser, but also substantially for the benefit of the vendor – Zieme v Gregory, p 223. The provisions at cll 3.2, 3.3 and 3.4 do not regulate the purchaser's obligation to take reasonable steps to obtain finance approval contained in the second sentence of cl 3.1. Further, if the purchaser does not take reasonable steps to obtain finance approval, and is thus in breach of the second sentence in cl 3.1 (as this purchaser was), the purchaser will have no right to give a notice pursuant to cl 3.2(1) of the contract – Zieme v Gregory, p 223. The primary judge was wrong to think that cll 3.2, 3.3 and 3.4 limited the vendor's rights under cl 9.1 in circumstances where the purchaser was in breach of her obligation to take all reasonable steps to obtain finance approval.

Footnotes

2 I note that cll 2.6(1), 2.6(13), 4.2, 5.6(2) and 7.8 of the contract all contain more than one provision.

MICHAEL MCEVOY & ANOR v THE BODY CORPORATE FOR NO 9 PORT DOUGLAS ROAD

(2013) LQCS ¶90-186; Court citation: [2013] QCA 168

Supreme Court of Queensland — Court of Appeal

Decision delivered on 24 June 2013

Conveyancing — Where developer contracted to sell a lot which included an exclusive use area of common property — Where by a number of errors spanning 10 years the exclusive use area was not identified on any plan or part of a new community management statement — Where one of the subsequent purchasers of the lot applied to an adjudicator for an order that the body corporate register a new community management statement containing the by-law relevant to the use of the area — Where the body corporate appealed the adjudicator's decision but without having passed a special resolution to authorise undertaking that appeal beforehand — Whether the QCAT member was correct in finding that the exclusive use area was not identified — Whether the applicants' delay in seeking the relief was relevant to any exercise of the discretion.

The applicants, (Mr and Mrs McEvoy) sought the court's leave to appeal a decision made under s 276 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (BCCM Act). After purchasing Lot 16 in August 2010, the applicants discovered that the sun deck area which they thought was theirs by way of exclusive use was not recorded on the community management statement as had been intended by the developer in 1999.

Subsequently, the body corporate did not agree to recording a new community management statement. However an adjudicator determined it was just and equitable to make an order requiring the body corporate to record a new community management statement which allocated exclusive use of the sun deck to Lot 16. The body corporate then appealed to the Queensland Civil and Administrative Tribunal (QCAT). The applicants subsequently argued before the Supreme Court that:

- the body corporate lacked the authority to commence the QCAT appeal and could not cure it by ratifying the proceeding after it had been completed
- the QCAT member should have dealt with the lack of authority but failed to do so
- the original owner had conferred exclusive use on the owner of Lot 16 during the owner control period
- the body corporate had resolved in 1999 to record a new community management statement granting Lot 16 the exclusive use of the sun deck
- the adjudicator could make the order granting Lot 16 its exclusive use of the sun deck under the doctrine of rectification.

Held: applicants' leave to appeal refused.

1. The body corporate cured its lack of authority by proper ratification even after the matter had been determined.

2. Just because the member failed to deal with the lack of authority issue did not make his order invalid.

3. No by-law contained in the original community management statement authorised the original owner to confer the exclusive use of the sun deck.

4. The body corporate had not validly resolved to grant the exclusive use to Lot 16.

5. A clear and concise plan of the sun deck area had not been provided sufficient to ground the adjudicator's order.

6. The member was correct in taking the decade of delay into account as part of the consideration of a just and equitable outcome.

Before: Margaret McMurdo P, Holmes JA and Douglas J

Margaret Mcmurdo P: This application for leave to appeal should be refused for the reasons given by Holmes JA and the additional reasons given by Douglas J. I agree with the orders proposed by Holmes JA.

Holmes JA: The applicants seek leave to appeal a decision of the Queensland Civil and Administrative Tribunal (QCAT) which set aside an adjudicator's orders, made under s 276 of the Body Corporate Community Management Act 1997. Those orders required the respondent to register a new Community Management Statement stating the applicants' entitlement to exclusive use of an area of common property in a Port Douglas unit complex.

[3] Section 150 of the Queensland Civil and Administrative Tribunal Act 2009 permits a party to an appeal to QCAT to appeal to the Court of Appeal only on a question of law and with this Court's leave. This court has generally considered the question of leave by reference to whether there is a substantial injustice to be corrected.[1]

[4] The first of the applicants' proposed appeal grounds was described as a "preliminary point": that the appeal to QCAT against the adjudicator's decision was not authorised by the body corporate. The remaining grounds concerned whether exclusive use had been conferred on the applicants' predecessor in title (a company controlled by them) by the actions of the original owner or by a resolution of a general meeting of the body corporate; whether the QCAT member had erroneously had regard to the absence of a plan showing the area of exclusive use; and whether the adjudicator could properly order the filing of the new community management statement.

Background to the exclusive use dispute

[5] In May 1998, Famestock Pty Ltd, the applicants' company, bought Lot 16 from Blue Raven Pty Ltd, the developer of the unit complex; the latter company was controlled by a Mr Loane. The property purchased was described as:

> "Lot 16 in BUP 106455 together with an exclusive use of adjacent roof area [and] of car park no. as indicated on the plan in Annexure 'C' hereto".

[6] The Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, as it stood in 1998, contemplated (as it does now) that land in a community title scheme would be identified in a community management statement to be recorded under the Land Title Act 1994. The original community management statement for the unit complex had been executed in April 1998; it made no reference to any right of exclusive use of the kind which the contract purported to confer on Famestock Pty Ltd.

[7] In September of the same year, Mr Loane wrote to the body corporate manager on behalf of Blue Raven Pty Ltd, advising that > "Exclusive Use is hereby granted to Famestock Pty Ltd [the proprietor of Lot 16] for the sun-deck and common area outside and attached to this unit".

According to the letter, a copy of the plan highlighting the area to be made exclusive was enclosed, but it does not seem to have been produced to the adjudicator or QCAT. The manager was asked to note the body corporate records accordingly, but instead advised in response that an "exclusive use area allocation" could only be granted at a general meeting of the body corporate.

[8] On 12 January 1999, an annual general meeting of the unit owners was held. An amended voting paper was circulated in advance of the meeting; it included a motion that By-law 42 (which dealt with letting rights for the complex) be deleted and a new community management statement lodged noting the deletion. It contained no reference, however, to any grant of exclusive use. The complex held 18 units. The minutes of the annual general meeting record that Mr Loane, whose company retained three of the units, was present and held proxies in respect of four other units. Four other unit owners were present at the meeting. Ten votes were cast in favour of

(and none against) a special resolution in these terms:

> "RESOLVED that by-law 42 as per the attached be deleted, and that the owner of Lot 16 be granted exclusive use for himself and his licensees of the sun deck and common area outside and attached to his unit, as identified as attached, and a new Community Management Statement be lodged with the Department of Natural Resources noting the deletion."

It may be seen that the resolution as passed was significantly different from that notified on the voting paper. No document which was attached to the minutes and which identified the exclusive use area has come to light.

[9] A week after the meeting, a request was submitted to the registrar of titles to record a new community management statement. The request noted that changes had been made to schedule C (which contained the by-laws) and that By-law 42 had been deleted. The amended community management statement forwarded for registration contained By-law 43, which read:

> "EXCLUSIVE USE — LOT 16
> The proprietor for the time being shall be entitled to the exclusive use for himself and his licensees of the sun-deck and common area outside and attached to his unit, as identified on the attached plan marked 'C'."

The evidence before the adjudicator and QCAT included a floor plan which had been marked "Plan C". That plan shows the third level of the unit complex, including Unit 16, with openings onto an external area marked "Terrace" and an adjoining rectangular area which, it may reasonably be assumed, is common property. None of those areas has any further marking which would identify it as the subject of exclusive use.

[10] The request to have the new community management statement recorded met with a requisition. It noted, among other things, that in respect of By-law 43 the exclusive use description had to be shown in a schedule, and that the exclusive use plan marked "C" did not comply with the registrar's requirements. It does not seem that the requisition was ever satisfied.

[11] At some point in the succeeding years, the ownership of the unit passed from Famestock Pty Ltd to the applicants. In August 2010, the applicants applied for adjudication of their claim to exclusive use of what they described as "about 200 sq metres of rooftop" adjoining unit 16. They asserted that they had only recently discovered that the community management statement with the by-law relating to exclusive use had not been recorded. Shortly after, apparently on advice from the Commissioner for Body Corporate and Community Management, the applicants made a formal request to the body corporate to register the new community management statement in accordance with the motion passed in January 1999. The request was not complied with, and the matter proceeded to adjudication under chapter 6 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act.

The adjudicator's powers

[12] Section 276(1) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 sets out the circumstances of dispute in which an adjudicator may make a "just and equitable" order:

> "276 Orders of adjudicators
>
> (1) An adjudicator to whom the application is referred may make an order that is just and equitable in the circumstances (including a declaratory order) to resolve a dispute, in the context of a community titles scheme, about —
>
> (a) a claimed or anticipated contravention of this Act or the community management statement; or
> (b) the exercise of rights or powers, or the performance of duties, under this Act or the community management statement; or
> (c) a claimed or anticipated contractual matter about —
>
> (i) the engagement of a person as a body corporate manager or service contractor for a community titles scheme; or > (ii) the authorisation of a person as a letting agent for a community titles scheme."

[140586]

Subsection (3) permits the adjudicator to make any of the orders listed in sch 5 to the Act; that list includes:

> "1 An order requiring the body corporate to lodge a request to record a new community management statement consistent with the statement for which the body corporate gave its consent.
> 2 An order requiring the body corporate to lodge a request to record a new community management statement, regardless of whether the body corporate consents to the recording."

The adjudicator's decision

[13] The adjudicator recorded the history of events as given by the applicants: Famestock's purchase of the unit, the exclusive use condition, the resolution to record a new community management statement and the failure of the body corporate manager to meet the registrar's requisition. In support of their application was a statutory declaration from Mr Loane, who confirmed that his company had agreed to transfer exclusive use of the area to Famestock Pty Ltd. Mr Loane also confirmed that the general meeting vote in relation to the owner of Lot 16's entitlement to exclusive use had occurred and that the motion as recorded had passed.

[14] The owners of seven units in the complex also provided submissions. One who had been present at the January 1999 general meeting disputed the resolution as recorded in the minutes. A number of the submissions made the point that unit owners who had purchased over the following decade had done so in reliance on the original community management statement, believing that the roof area was common property.

[15] The adjudicator, noting the discrepancy between the wording of the resolution on the voting paper and the resolution actually passed, said that he was not satisfied that the body corporate had resolved to grant exclusive use of the common property. However, he accepted that the intention of the original owner had been to grant Famestock exclusive use over the common property, but as the result of errors, a new community management statement had not been registered. He referred to a decision, Burrell v Body Corporate for Boulevard North,[2] in which McGill DCJ observed that rectification might be available to correct a by-law. In Burrell, the developer, at a stage at which it was still the only lot owner, had executed a community management statement at a general meeting. Its intention was to give a particular unit two car parks, but it had inadvertently allocated one of the car parks to a non-existent unit. His Honour remarked that it might be 'just and equitable' to grant rectification of the current by-laws; but he decided on other grounds to set aside the decision of the adjudicator.

[16] Taking McGill DCJ's observation in conjunction with the power in sch 5 to order the recording of a new community management statement, the adjudicator concluded that it was > "just and equitable… to make an order requiring the body corporate to register a new Community Management Statement stating that the proprietor of lot 16 is entitled to exclusive use of the sun deck and common property area adjacent to lot 16. This will also involve the attachment of a plan clearly identifying the area of common property to which lot 16 is entitled to exclusive use."

The appeal to QCAT

[17] Section 289(2) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act permits a person aggrieved by an adjudicator's order to appeal on a question of law to QCAT. The aggrieved person in this case, by virtue of s 289(d)(ii), was the body corporate. Section 312 of the Act permits the body corporate to start a proceeding only if it is authorised by a special resolution by the body corporate. However, it was the committee for the body corporate which resolved to appeal against the adjudicator's decision, the appeal then being brought in the body corporate's name.

[18] Section 100(1) of the Act makes a decision of the committee a decision of the body corporate, except, by virtue of s 100(2), where the decision is one on a restricted issue under the relevant regulation module. As the respondent conceded here, the decision to appeal was one on a restricted issue within the meaning of s 42 of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 2008; which meant, under s 100 (2), that the committee's decision to appeal was not the body corporate's decision.

[19] In their submissions to QCAT, the applicants asserted that the body corporate had not complied with s 312 by obtaining a special resolution. On that basis (as well as of other submissions seeking to support the decision of the adjudicator), they argued that the appeal should be dismissed. The QCAT member did not deal with that contention, and indeed made no reference at all to it in his reasons for decision.

[20] Instead, the QCAT member began his reasons with a review of the history of the matter. Importantly, he noted, there had been no challenge to the adjudicator's conclusion that, given the wording of the voting paper, he could not be satisfied that the body corporate had resolved to grant exclusive use of the common property; a finding which the tribunal member described as "central to the case… [made]… in this appeal". He observed that there was no material before either the adjudicator or himself which showed that the parties to the contract (the developer and Famestock) or the parties to the appeal (Mr and Mrs McEvoy and, at least in name, the body corporate) had ever agreed on the proportions or boundaries of the area of common property in respect of which exclusive use was contemplated. Of the amended By-law 43 and the plan lodged for recording by the registrar of titles, the member noted

> "[23] The proposed by-law does not describe the size of the area to be exclusively used, and the faxed photocopy had no helpful markings. The respondents stated to the Commissioner, in their letter dated 5 November 2010, that,
>
> > 'the area marked 'C' is the 200sq metres adjoining Lot 16. I am not sure it is correctly 'marked' but…. this area is the 'most probable' area as it is the only area on the plan marked 'C'…'
>
> [24] That statement reveals two problems for the respondents. First, no marking 'C is evident on the attached plan, and second, the respondents were — as at 5 November 2010 — unsure of the actual location of the area over which they asked for exclusive use."

(The last sentence was the subject of an appeal ground. The member's reference to "the respondents" is, of course, a reference to the applicants here.)

[21] The member referred to Pukallus v Cameron,[3] in which debate had arisen as to whether a particular area was within the boundaries of the land described in a contract of sale. Wilson and Brennan JJ adverted to the need, before rectification of the contract could be ordered, for precision in the identification of the area which the parties were said to have intended to include. In the present case, the member observed, there had been no evidence identifying the precise boundaries of the area over which the applicants were to have exclusive use. The parties to the contract had not agreed on any specific place or area, and the body corporate was not found to have agreed to do anything.

[22] In addition to the problem of uncertainty, the member noted, there was an unexplained delay by the applicants in their application for adjudication. Some unit owners had bought their units believing that the area was common property. In the absence of explanation for what the member described as a "decade of delay", the order should not be upheld. Accordingly, he set aside the adjudicator's order and dismissed the applicants' application.

The lack of authority for the QCAT appeal

[23] The draft ground of appeal relevant to the "preliminary point" was that the QCAT member "[e]rred in law in entertaining the appeal which was not authorised by the Body Corporate". As already noted, the respondent conceded that the decision to appeal to QCAT had not been made by it. However, as evidence of its adoption of the proceedings, the respondent pointed to the fact that it had taken steps to oppose the application to this court, a decision which it could make by committee resolution.[4] That may well be so; but since any such committee resolution is not in evidence, and there is no other material on the point, it is impossible to say how and when any such steps were taken. The applicants contended that the decision to resist the application must be beyond the committee's spending limits so as to require it to be put to a general meeting; but there was no evidence to support that argument either.

Secondly, the respondent adduced affidavit evidence to show that at an extraordinary general meeting on 19 November 2012 (some four and a half months after the QCAT decision was given), the body corporate voted to ratify the decision of the committee to bring the appeal from the adjudicator's decision. The applicants, however, contended that in the absence of evidence that the unit proprietors knew of the material circumstances when they voted, this court would not be satisfied that there was in fact ratification. They relied on a decision of the Full Court in Victorian Professional Group Management Pty Ltd v The Proprietors "Surfers Aquarius" Building Units Plan No 3881.[5]

[25] That case turned on its own facts. A management agreement for a set of units was found to be invalid because its execution was authorised by an invalidly convened general meeting of the body corporate. It was argued that the agreement should be regarded as having been ratified for two reasons: the minutes of the invalid meeting had been confirmed at a later general meeting, and the body corporate's budgets, which included provision for payment of the management fee, had been approved at general meetings. Not surprisingly, the court held that in the absence of any evidence that the proprietors were aware of any dispute as to the validity of the management agreement, those acts were not sufficient for ratification.

[26] In the present case, in contrast, the resolution was in clear terms: it was that the body corporate ratify the actions of the committee in instigating, on behalf of the body corporate, an appeal of the adjudicator's orders for the dispute, which the resolution identified by number and by reference to the fact that it concerned the grant of exclusive use. The reference to ratification was explicit and the act requiring ratification was clearly identified; the proprietors could not have been in any doubt as to what they were being asked to vote for.

[27] As to the implications of the QCAT appeal's having been commenced without authority, the applicants referred the court to its decision in Sattel v The Proprietors — Be-Bees Tropical Apartments Building Units, Plan No 71593.[6] In that case, the body corporate had proceeded with an appeal to this court without obtaining the special resolution necessary under the legislation as it stood at that time. It was suggested for the appellant there that the appeal be adjourned so that a special resolution ratifying its commencement could be obtained. The court declined to grant the adjournment, saying:

> "It appears to us that, where a party having no right to do so purports to begin an appeal in this Court, on the deficiency being brought to the Court's attention the appeal would ordinarily be dismissed or struck out. The circumstances of the present case, so far as they appear from the record, do not suggest that this is a case where justice requires that any other course be followed."[7]

As a statement of practice for Court of Appeal proceedings, this is entirely unremarkable, but it does not assist very much in determining the status of the QCAT proceedings in the present case, or what approach this court should take to orders made below where the issue was live and remained unaddressed.

[28] The fact that proceedings have been commenced without authority does not render them a nullity. As much was recognised by the House of Lords in Russian Commercial and Industrial Bank v Comptoir D 'Escompte de Mulhouse.[8] In that case it was held that defendants wishing to dispute the authority of the manager of a branch of an expropriated Russian bank ought to have moved to have the bank's name struck out as plaintiff; it was not open for them to raise the issue by way of defence to the action. By implication, the court was prepared to countenance the action's proceeding to judgment with the question of the plaintiff's authority to bring it unresolved. As Ferris J, sitting in the Chancery Division in Re Oriental Gas Co Ltd[9] , remarked of the decision,

> "The court is thus prepared to contemplate the anomalous result that an action may be tried on its merits in a case where there was no authority to commence proceedings in the name of the plaintiff."

He went on to observe:

> "If the decision is in favour of the plaintiff this may cause no real problem, because
>
> [140589]
> those who have authority to give instructions on behalf of the plaintiff will be likely to adopt the favourable decision."[10]

[29] In the Australian context, in Doulaveras v Daher[11] the New South Wales Court of Appeal similarly held that a challenge to (in that case, a tutor's) authority to bring proceedings could not be raised in defence pleadings; instead, the court might, on a proper application or of its own motion, litigate the question of authority and take steps to bring any abuse of process entailed in unauthorised proceedings to an end.[12]

[30] It is well established that the commencement of proceedings without proper authority may be cured by subsequent ratification. In Danish Mercantile Co Ld v Beaumont,[13] an action was commenced in the name of a company without necessary approval by a general meeting or by the board of directors, but the action was adopted some months later by the liquidator appointed on the company's winding up. Subsequently, the defendants applied by motion to strike out the name of the company as a plaintiff. Jenkins LJ observed that the practice of the court in cases where there was dispute as to the authority for use of a company's name as a plaintiff was to adjourn any motion to strike out the company's name with a view to the holding of a meeting to determine whether the company adopted the bringing of the action. It was, Jenkins LJ said:

> "…open at any time to the purported plaintiff to ratify the act of the solicitor who started the action to adopt the proceedings, to approve all that has been done in the past, and to instruct the solicitor to continue the action."[14]

Similarly, in Alexander Ward & Co Ltd v Samyang Navigation Co Ltd[15] and Presentaciones Musicales SA v Secunda[16] it was held that proceedings taken without authority could be subsequently ratified; in the latter case, ratification was effective notwithstanding the expiration of the limitation period.

[31] In Ox Operations Pty Ltd v Land Mark Property Developments (Vic) Pty Ltd (in liq),[17] Finkelstein J discussed and applied the English line of authority as to ratification of proceedings, as well as noting the practice, where an action had been brought without a company's authority, of permitting the company to convene a necessary meeting to consider whether it would adopt the action.[18] In Victoria Teachers Credit Union Ltd v KPMG[19] the Victorian Court of Appeal similarly recognised the principle that a client could, by subsequent ratification, validate the commencement of an action without authority, the ratification relating back "so as to be deemed equivalent to an antecedent authority."[20]

[32] The disinclination to characterise improperly constituted proceedings as a nullity is consistent with the approach of the High Court in Berowra Holdings Pty Ltd v Gordon.[21] Of particular significance to the QCAT proceedings here is the distinction the court made between an order made by an inferior court without a power which was a nullity and

> "an order… made within power but improperly, in which case, until set aside by a superior court, the order had to be obeyed."[22]

The order here was of the latter kind.

[33] The question of whether the bringing of a proceeding can be ratified after its conclusion is not, however, one on which I have been able to find any contemporary and direct authority; probably because a defendant seeking to take any point at that stage would generally be regarded as disentitled through delay, while a successful plaintiff is hardly likely to advance it. The peculiar feature of this case is the fact that the point was squarely raised by the applicants in the tribunal, but not dealt with.

[34] Nineteenth century English cases contemplated that an individual named as plaintiff could take the benefit of an unauthorised but successful action, providing he also bore its expenses: see Hall v Laver[23] and Burge v Brutton.[24] On the other hand, in Bird v Brown[25] it was held

> "that… ratification must take place at a time, and under circumstances, when the ratifying party might himself have lawfully done the act which he ratifies."[26]

The ratification in the present case would not meet those criteria, taken literally; in November 2012 the body corporate could not have commenced an appeal against the adjudicator's order, because QCAT had already ruled.

[35] Bird v Brown has been read down considerably, however. It was distinguished by Dillon LJ (with whom Nolan LJ agreed) and doubted by Roch LJ in Presentaciones Musicales SA v Secunda, in which the named plaintiff was held able to ratify a writ the issue of which he had not authorised, notwithstanding the expiration of the limitation period. Dillon LJ identified the ratio of Bird v Brown, and other cases which followed it, as that ratification could not apply if it had the effect of extending a time fixed by statute or by agreement for doing an act.

[36] The decision in Trident General Insurance Co. Ltd v McNiece Bros Pty Ltd[27] suggests that the Bird v Brown approach is similarly unlikely to hold much sway in this country. In that case it was held that an agent's actions in taking out a policy of indemnity insurance could be the subject of ratification after the loss had occurred, on the basis that ratification was equivalent to original authority. However, the contended-for ratification, by commencement of an action seven years after the making of the policy and five years after the time for giving notice to the insurers of the event giving rise to the loss, was held not to have occurred within a reasonable period.

[37] The question of whether a concluded legal process could be ratified was raised in Alexander Ward & Co Ltd v Samyang Navigation Co Ltd. Two individuals acting in the name of, but without the authority of the former company (which at the time had no directors), obtained a warrant of arrestment of a ship which was duly executed on it in a Scottish shipyard, the effect being to give Scottish courts jurisdiction to try the proceeding which ensued between the company and the ship's owner. The company went into liquidation and the liquidator ratified the taking of proceedings. The ship's owner argued, among other points, that when ratification occurred the arrestment, the basis of jurisdiction, was spent and could not be revived. The court held, however, that the arrestment was properly to be regarded as a step in the action, validated by the liquidator's ratification of the proceedings. The question of what the situation would have been, had the arrestment been regarded as an entirely independent and completed process, was thus not resolved.

[38] In Davison v Vickery's Motors Ltd (In liq),[28] Isaacs J emphasised that a principal's ratification was not an adoption of the agent's act but of the relationship of agency which had been assumed by the latter. If the agency relationship had been adopted, the further question was whether the law would regard the adoption as relating back to the beginning of the transaction.[29] The purpose of the fiction by which the principal's ratification was allowed to operate as if antecedent authority had been given was "to prevent a mischief or to remedy an inconvenience that might result from the general rule of law"; but such a fiction could not be allowed to work an injury on a third party.[30]

[39] The "fiction" described by Isaacs J was accepted as "a well settled rule of common law" by the High Court in Federal Commissioner of Taxation v Sara Lee Household & Body Care (Australia) Pty Ltd:[31]

> "where a principal ratifies the earlier act of a person acting as agent without authority, the ratification relates back to the date of the unauthorised act, and the principal is bound as if the agent had had authority at the earlier time."[32]

[40] In my view (although the point need not finally be resolved in order to determine whether leave should be granted), accepting the principle that the effect of ratification is to clothe the agent with authority for the purposes of the unauthorised act, the body corporate was able retrospectively to give the committee authority to mount the QCAT appeal. That conclusion would be in keeping with the notion that ratification is designed to "remedy an inconvenience"; it seems clear enough that the body corporate wished to appeal, and that its failure to do so was the product of simple oversight as to the level of authorisation required. The applicants would not be deprived of any right by that result.

[41] There can be no doubt that the failure of the member of QCAT to deal with the submission put to him about the committee's lack of authority to bring the appeal was an error of law, but neither the proceeding nor his order were rendered invalid by that want of authority. Whether the error warrants the grant of leave to appeal requires consideration of whether substantial injustice has been caused by it; which in turn involves considering the practical consequences of the failure.

[42] Had the tribunal member addressed the question of authority, it would have been open to him, and, in view of the object in the Queensland Civil and Administrative Tribunal Act of dealing with matters in an "accessible, fair, just, economical, informal and quick"[33] way, would have been an appropriate exercise of power, to adjourn the hearing of the appeal to allow the necessary vote of the body corporate and general meeting to be taken. If the appeal on this ground were now to be heard and decided in favour of the applicants, the resulting orders would be the setting aside of the tribunal decision and the remitting of the matter for re-hearing, in circumstances where the committee's decision to bring the appeal to that tribunal had been ratified after the event. Even if that ratification were not regarded as effective, it would be difficult to argue that the body corporate should not be permitted to ratify the institution of what would then be pending proceedings. Given the ultimate unlikelihood of any different result purely on the basis of lack of authority for the tribunal appeal, I would not regard the applicants as having established a substantial injustice warranting a grant of leave to appeal on this ground.

The original owner's role

[43] The applicants' next proposed ground of appeal was that the tribunal member had

> "[e]rred in law in holding that 'exclusive use' could not be conferred upon a proprietor of a lot in a Community Title Scheme by the original owner during the "original owner control period" as defined by the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) notwithstanding until more than 50% of the lots in the Community Title Scheme are no longer in the ownership of the original owner there is no requirement to convene a first general meeting or elect a Committee to grant exclusive use."

The tribunal member did not in fact make any express finding that exclusive use could not be conferred by the original owner, although he did note that neither party had suggested any inaccuracy in the body corporate manager's advice to Mr Loane that the exclusive use had to be granted at a general meeting of the body corporate. But, in any case, having regard to the statutory requirements for a grant of exclusive use of common property, I do not think there is anything in the point.

[44] The Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, as it stood in 1998 when Famestock contracted to buy lot 16, contained no definition of "original owner control period", although "original owner" was defined to mean each person who, before the scheme's establishment, was the registered owner of a lot which then became scheme land. Section 133(1) was in the same terms as s 170 in the Act in its present form; it identified an "exclusive by-law" as a by-law attaching to a lot which gave the occupier exclusive use of common property or a body corporate asset.

[45] Section 134(1)[34] required the common property or body corporate asset to which an exclusive use by-law applied to be specifically identified in the by-law itself or allocated either by the original owner or the original owner's agent authorised under the by-law to make the allocation; or (in an instance not applicable here) two or more lot owners under a reallocation agreement. Section 134(2) and (3) required the written consent of the lot owner before an exclusive use by-law could attach to his lot, that consent to be given before either the passing of the resolution for recording of a new community management statement incorporating the by-law or the allocation of the common property to which the by-law applied, as the case might be.

[46] It is plain that exclusive use could not be conferred on Famestock without the creation of a by-law. The Body Corporate and Community Management Act did not in 1998, and does not now, contemplate the conferring of a right of exclusive use attached to a lot except by means of an exclusive use by-law. The only role which the developer might have played was in allocating the common property if a by-law had authorised it to do so. There was no such by-law.

The January 1999 exclusive use resolution

[47] The applicants' next proposed appeal grounds turned around the exclusive use resolution passed at the January 1999 general meeting. They were, that the QCAT member had erred in: not finding the body corporate had intended to and had, in fact, granted exclusive use by its vote; taking into account that the new community management statement had not been registered when non-registration did not affect the grant of exclusive use; and overlooking the fact that the applicants had relied on the adjudicator's "factual finding…

that a grant of exclusive use had been made". The last seems inaccurate; as the member observed, the adjudicator was not satisfied that the body corporate had resolved to grant exclusive use in the common property. In any event, I do not think any of these grounds have any prospect of success.

[48] Section 55(2) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 required at the relevant time that assent to the recording of a new community management statement must be given in the form of a resolution without dissent. The requirements for voting papers and passage of resolutions were contained in regulations. The original community management statement was not in evidence in this case, so it is not known whether it identified the regulation model applying to the scheme. If it did, it would, presumably, have identified the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 1997. If it did not, the Body Corporate and Community Management (Standard Module) Regulation 1997 would have applied. Both regulations required that a voting paper for a general meeting state each motion to be considered at a general meeting so as to enable any voter to cast a written vote.[35] A general meeting could pass a resolution only if it were stated in a voting paper accompanying the notice.[36] That plainly did not occur in this case. The adjudicator was correct in his finding that there had been no valid resolution as to exclusive use.

The absence of a plan identifying the exclusive use area

[49] The next ground relied on was that the QCAT member erred in having regard to the asserted absence of a plan of the area of exclusive use when the body corporate had submitted the plan marked "C" to the registrar of titles. That, I think, misapprehends the member's reasoning: he accepted that there existed a plan with the letter "C" on it; the difficulty he identified was that the applicants, writing to the Commissioner Body Corporate and Community Management, had referred to "[t]he area marked 'C'" on the plan as the "most probable" area to be the subject of the exclusive use grant. That, as the member observed, raised two problems: that there was no area marked "C" on the plan (as opposed to the plan as a whole being marked "C") and that it suggested that the applicants were uncertain of the actual area the subject of their claim for exclusive use.

[50] The plan marked "C" did show an area adjoining lot 16 which was presumably common property, but it contained no marking which would indicate what part of that area was to be the subject of exclusive use. Whatever plan might have been attached to the contract of sale was no longer available. The QCAT member was correct in concluding that there did not exist any clear and contemporary identification of the proposed exclusive use area which could have been the subject of the adjudicator's order.

Rectification and delay

[51] The applicants' remaining proposed appeal grounds were that the member had erred in holding that they could not obtain an order requiring the body corporate to file a new community management statement recording the grant of exclusive use and in holding that they were disentitled from relief on discretionary grounds. In that regard, it was said that Pukallus v Cameron and Burrell v Body Corporate for Boulevard North both supported the case for rectification; that the member should not have considered that there was a limitation arising from the case law on the orders the adjudicator could make; and that the adjudicator's statutory power to resolve the dispute was not fettered by rules relating to rectification.

[52] As to the last, I doubt that the adjudicator did have the statutory power to resolve the dispute in the way he did. The relevant powers to make an order that is "just and equitable" under s 276 arise when there is a dispute about "a claimed or anticipated contravention of [the Act or] the community management statement" or about "the exercise of rights or powers, or the performance of duties, under [the Act or] the community management statement". No contravention of the Act, or exercise of rights or powers or performance of duties under it, was identified as being the subject of dispute; and the recorded community management statement did not confer any right of exclusive use about which the parties could be in dispute.

[53] However, the basis on which the adjudicator purported to act was not explored either before him or in the QCAT proceedings, so it is probably more to the point to say that the QCAT member was entirely correct in saying that there was no relevant agreement between the applicants and the body corporate and there was nothing to identify precisely what the area the subject of the exclusive use was supposed to have been. That state of affairs, as the statements of Wilson and Brennan JJ in Pukallus make plain, did not lend itself to rectification.

[54] The adjudicator himself referred to the doctrine of rectification as a guide to whether he should exercise his perceived power. But even if one considers the matter entirely independently of any principle attaching to rectification, it could hardly be just and equitable to make orders compelling the body corporate to confer on the applicants an exclusive use as to which there was no valid resolution, on the strength of the developer's promise, made to a different entity, to confer a right to use property not now capable of identification. There was no error in the member's approach.

[55] On the question of discretionary grounds, it was put that because there had been no assessment of the credibility of the lot owners' evidence of prejudice (in relation to their having purchased without knowledge of the exclusive use area) there was no evidence on which the member could hold that the applicants were disentitled from relief on discretionary grounds. The member noted that for it to be just and equitable to make the order effectively giving exclusive use to the owner of lot 16, "an explanation had to be given for a decade of delay"; and there had been none. The evidence included a letter of 7 May 2001 which the chairman of the body corporate sent to the applicants, informing them that the community management statement had not been registered. The application for adjudication was made in August 2010. As the member observed, there was no explanation for that delay. That feature was entirely relevant to consideration of what was just and equitable.

Conclusions

[56] I do not consider that any of the proposed grounds of appeal, other than that as to the lack of authority for the commencement of the QCAT appeal, could succeed. For the reasons already given, I do not consider that the member's error in failing to deal with the lack of authority point is such as to have caused substantial injustice warranting a grant of leave to appeal. I would refuse the application for leave to appeal.

[57] So far as the question of costs is concerned, there was, up to the point of the body corporate's ratification of the committee's decision to bring the QCAT appeal, a live question about the body corporate's intentions in that regard; had that ratification not occurred, the applicants would have been in a different position in arguing that a substantial injustice had occurred. I would order that the applicants pay the respondent's costs of the application incurred after 19 November 2012 (when it may be assumed that the applicants, as members of the body corporate, became aware of the ratification) on the standard basis.

Douglas J: I agree with the reasons of Holmes JA which I have had the significant advantage of reading in draft form. I merely wish to add a few words about the question whether the bringing of a proceeding can be ratified after its conclusion.

[59] Cases such as Bird v Brown[37] and Alexander Ward & Co Ltd v Samyang Navigation Co Ltd[38] are discussed in Bowstead & Reynolds on Agency[39] as relevant to the rule formulated in that work that "ratification is not effective where to permit it would unfairly prejudice a third party, and, in particular -

> (1) where it is essential to the validity of an act that it should be done within a certain time, the act cannot be ratified after the expiration of that time, to the prejudice of any third party."

[60] That conclusion is consistent with the reference to third parties' rights by Isaacs J in Davison v Vickery's Motors Ltd (In liq).[40]

[61] In summarising the effect of their Article 19(1) on the limits of ratification, the learned authors of Bowstead & Reynolds on Agency say:[41]

> "But the workability of a rule that void acts cannot be ratified has already been doubted, and it may be better simply to proceed on the basis that certain acts are by their context required to be valid and effective when done, lest a time limit be extended or the party affected be in a state of uncertainty.

> Such a rule would require discrimination between situations. Thus although the unauthorised issue of a writ can apparently be ratified, an assignment probably cannot after action on the right assigned has been commenced by the purported assignee, nor a demand for payment or delivery, a notice of abandonment in marine insurance, a notice of dishonour of a negotiable instrument or a notice to quit. It may be possible to say that a ratification will be given retrospective effect unless there are cogent reasons why to give it such effect would contravene the purpose of any time element involved or otherwise be unfair to the third party."[42]

[62] Here the situation is analogous to the unauthorised issuing of a writ. The failure to authorise the appeal appears to have been a simple oversight. There is no evidence, for example, that it reflected a division of opinion on the body corporate during the period of six weeks allowed for an appeal by s 290 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld). That time limit may, in any case, be extended by order of the Queensland Civil and Administrative Tribunal, a course which would have been likely to occur in a case of this nature had the appeal been ratified before it was heard.[43] Giving effect to the ratification in such a case does not obviously contravene the purpose of the time limit established for the bringing of the appeal, that there be finality to litigation. Accordingly, there is no reason to refuse to give effect to the ratification. There is no evidence of any unfairness to a third party involved and no deprivation of any accrued right held by the applicants as Holmes JA has pointed out.[44]

[63] Accordingly, I agree with the proposed orders including the order as to costs.

Supreme Court of Queensland — Court of Appeal

Decision delivered on 21 May 2013

Conveyancing — Sale of a proposed lot — Where s 27 (in its unamended form) of the Land Sales Act 1984 allows a purchaser to avoid a contract for the sale of land if the vendor has not given it a registrable instrument of transfer within three and a half years — Where the primary judge held that purchasers were able to avoid sale contract even though they had refused to settle (and the vendors were therefore unable to provide the transfer) — Whether the primary judge was correct in applying a literal construction to the section — Whether, on the proper construction of s 27 (in its unamended form), a purchaser who wrongfully refuses to attend settlement and receive a registrable instrument of transfer obtains a right to avoid the contract — Land Sales Act 1984: s 27.

In January 2008, the respondent purchasers entered into a sale contract with the vendor appellants to buy an apartment in a proposed resort development in Queensland. Upon the registration of the subdivision plan and the community management statement, the vendors appointed 28 February 2011 as the settlement date. Settlement did not proceed as just prior to the settlement date, the purchasers gave notice that they were exercising their right to terminate the contract because the vendors' alleged misleading and deceptive conduct induced them to enter into the contract.

The vendors commenced proceedings in June 2011 seeking specific performance of the contract, payment of the balance purchase price and damages for breach of contract. The prescribed period for the vendors to provide the purchasers with the transfer under s 27 of the Land Sales Act 1984 expired before judgment in the specific performance proceeding was given. The purchasers then argued that they were entitled to avoid the contract under s 27 (as it existed at the relevant time).

Section 27 provides that a purchaser of a proposed lot may avoid a contract for sale if the vendor fails to provide a registrable instrument of transfer within three and a half years of the contract date (the section was amended in February 2012 to clarify that a purchaser can only avoid the contract if the failure to give the transfer is not due to the purchaser's default). The vendors countered that to allow the purchasers to avoid the contract would be unfair, given that the purchasers had deliberately delayed settlement in order to avoid the contract.

The primary judge dismissed the vendors' claim and declared that the purchasers had validly terminated the contract and were entitled to the $450,000 deposit. The primary judge held that, as the language of (the unamended) s 27 was "clear and unambiguous", the court was required to give the section its ordinary and grammatical meaning even if that would have resulted in the purchasers being able to take advantage of their own wrong in not attending settlement. The vendors were appealing against those orders in these proceedings. The vendors argued that the amendment to s 27 in 2012 was made out of an abundance of caution and that the meaning of the s 27 was unchanged by the amendment.

Held: for the vendors. Appeal allowed.

1. The primary judge was incorrect in concluding that the language of (the unamended) s 27 was "clear and unambiguous". The provision was not intended to be read literally as such a construction fails to have regard to the conveyancing context of s 27 and is plainly not in accordance with the legislative intent "to facilitate property development in Queensland". Section 27 concerns the conduct of the parties to a contract for the sale and purchase of a "proposed lot". As such, it necessarily contemplates that, unless the contract makes provision to the contrary, a registrable instrument of transfer will not be provided by the vendor to the purchaser except in return for the balance purchase price. Such obligations on the part of the vendor and purchaser are concurrent and mutually dependent.

It would follow that it is unlikely that s 27(1) was intended to operate so as to permit a purchaser who refuses to settle in breach of its contractual obligations and who frustrates the vendor's attempts to settle in compliance with its contractual obligations to escape from the contract and avoid liability.

2. Further, a statute should not be construed so as to enable a person to benefit from his/her own wrong or infringe common law rights (on the authority of Pyneboard Pty Ltd v Trade Practices Commission (1983) 152 CLR 328).

3. The construction urged by the purchasers was arguably consistent with the consumer protection aims of the legislation (ie to prevent vendors from delaying indefinitely). However, it was inconsistent with the object of the legislation "to facilitate property development in Queensland".

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

JC Bell QC with J O'Regan (instructed by Hopgood Ganim) for the appellants (vendors).

PJ Roney SC (instructed by Macrossan & Amiet Solicitors) for the respondents (purchasers).

Before: Margaret McMurdo P, Muir JA and Atkinson J

Margaret McMurdo P: I agree with Muir JA's reasons for allowing this appeal and with his Honour's proposed orders.

Muir JA: Introduction The purchasers entered into a contract of sale dated 2 January 2008 with the vendors for the purchase of an apartment in a proposed resort development at Airlie Beach. The first and second purchasers are the purchasers named in the contract. The vendors are the vendors. The third to fifth purchasers are guarantors of the obligations of the first and second purchasers. The contract provided that at settlement:

1. the purchasers pay the balance purchase price to the vendors (cl 11.4); and
2. the vendors, in exchange for payment, deliver to the purchasers unstamped transfer documents capable of immediate registration after stamping (cl 11.5).

[3] In a letter dated 4 February 2011, the solicitors for the vendors wrote to the solicitors for the first and second purchasers giving notice that:

1. the vendors appointed 28 February 2011 as the settlement date pursuant to cl 11 of the contract;
2. the conditions precedent in cl 5.2 of the contract had been satisfied and, in particular, the sub-division plan and the community management statement (CMS) had been registered; and
3. the Boathouse Community Title Scheme 42224 had been established.

[4] The letter stated the preparedness of the vendors' solicitors to forward transfer documents and settlement figures to the solicitors for the first and second purchasers on their undertaking to use the transfer documents for stamping purposes only prior to settlement. They requested that the undertaking be provided "urgently by return". In a letter dated 15 February 2011, sent by facsimile to the vendors' solicitors, the purchasers' solicitors provided the requested undertaking.

[5] In a letter dated 18 February 2011 to the vendors' solicitors, the solicitors for the first and second purchasers gave notice that the first and second purchasers exercised their right to terminate the contract on the basis of the vendors' alleged "misleading and deceptive conduct leading to their entry into the contract of sale". Also on that day, the solicitors for the vendors, by facsimile, advised the first and second purchasers' solicitors that their clients "although ready, willing and able to settle" would not have their solicitors "attend at settlement to tender in the circumstances". They stated that for their clients to tender at any time on the settlement date would be futile. Neither the vendors nor the first and second purchasers attempted to tender on the settlement date or at any time thereafter.

[6] The vendors commenced these proceedings on 30 June 2011 seeking specific performance of the contract, payment of the balance purchase price and damages for breach of contract.

[140598]

The period of three and a half years (the period relevant to the operation of s 27 of the Land Sales Act 1984 (the Act)) ended on 2 July 2011.

[8] On 25 November 2011, solicitors for the first and second purchasers advised the vendors that their "clients elect[ed] to avoid the contract in accordance with and pursuant to the provisions of section 27 of the [Act]".

[9] On 5 March 2012, the purchasers applied for summary judgment in the proceeding. On 14 September 2012, the primary judge dismissed the vendors' claim, declared that the first and second purchasers had validly terminated the contract and were entitled to the $450,000 deposit paid under the contract together with interest. The receivers and managers of the vendors were ordered to pay the purchasers' costs of and incidental to the proceeding on the standard basis. The vendors appeal against those orders.

[10] The vendors identified the issues for determination on the appeal as:

1. whether, on the proper construction of s 27 of the Act, a purchaser who wrongfully refuses to attend settlement and receive a registrable instrument of transfer obtains a right to avoid the contract; and
2. whether the purchasers, by their conduct, waived any right to avoid the contract or are estopped from relying on any such right.

[11] At relevant times, s 27 of the Act provided:

"27 Purchaser's rights if not given a registrable instrument of transfer within a certain period

(1) This section applies if —

(a) a purchaser entered upon the purchase of a proposed lot under an instrument relating to the sale of the proposed lot (the instrument); and
(b) the vendor has not given the purchaser a registrable instrument of transfer for the lot within 3½ years after the day the instrument was made.

(2) The purchaser may avoid the instrument by written notice given to the vendor before the vendor gives the purchaser the registrable instrument of transfer for the proposed lot."

[12] Section 27(1)(b) was amended in February 2012 by the insertion of the words "other than as a result of the purchaser's default" after "the instrument was made".

The vendors' contentions

[13] The vendors argued, in effect, that the amendment to s 27(1)(b) was made out of an abundance of caution and that the meaning of the subsection was unchanged by it. It was contended that subsection (1)(b) was ambiguous in meaning. In that regard, it was asked, rhetorically:

"Can a purchaser be said to have been 'not given' the instrument when that purchaser has refused to be given it? Is there a constructive 'giving' for the purposes of s 27(2) in these circumstances?"

[14] The argument was expanded as follows. On the proper construction of s 27(1), a purchaser does not obtain a right to avoid a contract in circumstances where: the vendor was ready, willing and able to provide a registrable instrument of transfer in return for payment of the purchase price on settlement; the vendor, as it was entitled to do, called for settlement within the prescribed period; and the buyer failed to settle. This "construction" was said to be supported by the following six matters:

1. It is consistent with the language of s 27 in that the words "the vendor has not given" refer only to the vendor's conduct. They are not apt to encompass the situation described in the previous paragraph.
2. It does not detract from the consumer protection purpose of s 27, and it is consistent with the mischief that s 27 was designed to address: preventing vendors from delaying indefinitely before providing a buyer with registrable title.
3. The primary judge's construction provides a disincentive for developers to sell lots "off the plan" as it makes them vulnerable to purchasers who deliberately delay settlement in order to enable them to avoid contracts under s 27. Such a construction conflicts with the object of the legislation stated in s 2(a) of the Act "to facilitate property development in Queensland".

[140599]

4. The primary judge's construction allows a purchaser to benefit from its own breach of contract. A defaulting purchaser would escape all liability, including liability for damages for breach of contract, if the vendor decided to seek specific performance instead of immediately terminating the contract for breach and the prescribed period expired before judgment in the specific performance proceeding, thereby allowing the purchaser to avoid the contract.
5. The primary judge's construction gives rise to a substantial risk of a purchaser deliberately delaying settlement to engineer a situation in which it could avoid the contract under s 27.
6. The primary judge's construction, in practical terms, would remove the vendor's option of obtaining specific performance. In the absence of a clear contrary intention, legislation is presumed not to alter common law or equitable rights.

The purchasers' contentions

[15] Counsel for the purchasers argued that s 27 was one of the Act's consumer protection provisions and that three and a half years had been selected by the legislature as a period "sufficient to accommodate all of the contingencies which might arise either in the process of development, or indeed to accommodate any contingencies or uncertainties such as the commencement and resolution of proceedings … relating to the non-completion of contracts".

[16] It was also argued that the legislation contemplated that a vendor, wishing to protect itself against a defaulting purchaser delaying settlement until such time as it could give a notice under s 27(2), would provide the registrable title and rely on a caveat preventing dealings between the purchaser and third parties to protect its position. The argument is unattractive and unworldly. It is highly improbable that a defaulting purchaser would accept a stamped registrable transfer from the vendor and hold it on the vendor's behalf. If the vendor registered the transfer in favour of the purchaser, it would be unlikely, at least on the purchasers' construction of s 27, that a transfer would have been "given" to the purchaser by the vendor for the purposes of s 27. Moreover, any secured creditor of the vendor is unlikely to be enthusiastic about relinquishing its security without payment of the moneys secured or the provision of substitute security.

Relevant principles of statutory construction

[17] General principles of statutory construction relevant for present purposes may be extracted, conveniently, from the joint judgment in Alcan (NT) Alumina Pty Ltd v Commissioner of Territory Revenue (Northern Territory):[1]

> "This Court has stated on many occasions that the task of statutory construction must begin with a consideration of the text itself. Historical considerations and extrinsic materials cannot be relied on to displace the clear meaning of the text. The language which has actually been employed in the text of legislation is the surest guide to legislative intention. The meaning of the text may require consideration of the context, which includes the general purpose and policy of a provision, in particular the mischief it is seeking to remedy." (Citations omitted)

[18] After referring to the above passage, French CJ and Hayne J in Certain Lloyd's Underwriters Subscribing to Contract No IH00AAQS v Cross & Ors[2] said:

> "The context and purpose of a provision are important to its proper construction because, as the plurality said in Project Blue Sky Inc v Australian Broadcasting Authority, '[t]he primary object of statutory construction is to construe the relevant provision so that it is consistent with the language and purpose of all the provisions of the statute' (emphasis added). That is, statutory construction requires deciding what is the legal meaning of the relevant provision 'by reference to the language of the instrument viewed as a whole', and 'the context, the general purpose and policy of a provision and its consistency and fairness are surer guides to its meaning than the logic with which it is constructed'.
>
> Determination of the purpose of a statute or of particular provisions in a statute may be based upon an express statement of purpose in the statute itself, inference from its text > and structure and, where appropriate, reference to extrinsic materials. The purpose of a statute resides in its text and structure. Determination of a statutory purpose neither permits nor requires some search for what those who promoted or passed the legislation may have had in mind when it was enacted. It is important in this respect, as in others, to recognise that to speak of legislative 'intention' is to use a metaphor. Use of that metaphor must not mislead. '[T]he duty of a court is to give the words of a statutory provision the meaning that the legislature is taken to have intended them to have' (emphasis added). And as the plurality went on to say in Project Blue Sky:
>
>
>
> > Ordinarily, that meaning (the legal meaning) will correspond with the grammatical meaning of the provision. But not always. The context of the words, the consequences of a literal or grammatical construction, the purpose of the statute or the canons of construction may require the words of a legislative provision to be read in a way that does not correspond with the literal or grammatical meaning."

[19] The primary judge referred to the following passage from the reasons of Heydon J in Momcilovic v The Queen:[3]

"[441] Pursuant to the principle of legality, the common law of statutory interpretation requires a court to bear in mind an assumption about the need for clarity if certain results are to be achieved, and then to search, not for the intention of the legislature, but for the meaning of the language it used, interpreted in the context of that language. The context lies partly in the rest of the statute (which calls for interpretation of its language), partly in the pre-existing state of the law, partly in the mischief being dealt with and partly in the state of the surrounding law in which the statute is to operate. The search for 'intention' is only a search for the intention revealed by the meaning of the language. It is not a search for something outside its meaning and anterior to it which may be used to control it. The same is true of another anthropomorphic reference to something which is also described as a mental state but in this field is not — 'purpose'. And it is also true of the search for 'policy'.

[442] Thus in Project Blue Sky v Australian Broadcasting Authority McHugh, Gummow, Kirby and Hayne JJ said of the common law rules of statutory interpretation:

> [69] The primary object of statutory construction is to construe the relevant provision so that it is consistent with the language and purpose of all the provisions of the statute. The meaning of the provision must be determined 'by reference to the language of the instrument viewed as a whole'. In Commissioner for Railways (NSW) v Agalianos Dixon CJ pointed out that 'the context, the general purpose and policy of a provision and its consistency and fairness are surer guides to its meaning than the logic with which it is constructed'. Thus, the process of construction must always begin by examining the context of the provision that is being construed.

What their Honours meant by 'purpose' is what Dixon CJ meant by 'purpose'. What he meant by 'purpose' may be inferred from his earlier analysis of a statutory discretion:

> it is incumbent upon the public authority in whom the discretion is vested … to decide … bona fide and not with a view of achieving ends or objects outside the purpose for which the discretion is conferred … But courts of law have no source whence they may ascertain what is the purpose of the discretion except the terms and subject matter of the statutory instrument.

The subject matter of an enactment, and its scope, like its purpose, can only be gauged from its language. And light is cast on what 'policy' means by the statement of Mason and Wilson JJ that a court could decline to adopt a literal interpretation where this did not conform to the legislative intent, meaning 'the legislative intent as ascertained from the provisions of the statute, including the policy which may be discerned from those provisions'." (Citations omitted, primary judge's emphasis)

[20] The vendors placed particular reliance on the principle of statutory interpretation that courts will resist an interpretation that will permit a person to take advantage of his or her own wrong.[4] In this regard, reference was made by the vendors to Holden v Nuttall[5] and Thompson v Groote Eylandt Mining Co Ltd.[6] In Nuttall, Herring CJ was required to consider whether an order for recovery of possession of premises by a landlord from a tenant who went into possession on a sublease shortly before the original lease was due to expire would cause the tenant "hardship". His Honour observed:[7]

> "In the circumstances of this case, moreover, I think it may properly be said that the hardship the [tenant] will suffer is self-inflicted and that it is his own conduct that has caused any hardship he may suffer. He has chosen to make use of the [National Security (Landlord and Tenant) Regulations] for his own protection regardless of the injury he has done the [landlord] thereby…
> The [National Security (Landlord and Tenant) Regulations] were not made to enable injustice to be perpetrated in this way. And the word 'hardship' should if necessary be limited as a matter of construction so as to avoid attributing to the regulation-maker the intention of bringing about an injustice or allowing a man to benefit from his own wrong. It is certainly most undesirable that people should be encouraged to make use of the regulations for the purpose of acquiring benefits for themselves at the expense of the legitimate rights of others."

[21] In Thompson, the Court considered legislation which provided that employers were liable to pay their workers compensation for workplace injuries. The definition of "worker" relevantly included an employee who was a "PAYE taxpayer". That term was defined as a worker in respect of whom the employer "makes deductions" from the worker's pay under the PAYE provisions of the tax legislation. The respondent was legally obliged to make PAYE deductions from the appellant's pay but failed to do so. The appellant was injured at work and the respondent denied liability to pay compensation on the basis that the appellant was not a "worker" as the respondent had not made the PAYE deductions it was required to make. Mildren J, with whom Thomas J agreed and Martin CJ expressed general agreement, said:[8]

"In Tickle Industries Pty Ltd v Hann (1974) 130 CLR 321 at 331, Barwick CJ said:

'It is … a sound rule of statutory construction that a meaning of the language employed by the legislature which would produce an unjust or capricious result is to be avoided. Unless the statutory language is intractable, an intention to produce by its legislation an unjust or capricious result should not be attributed to the legislature.'

There is another rule of construction which I think is also of great significance in this case, and that is the rule expressed in the maxim nullus commodum capere potest de injuria sua propria: no man can take advantage of his own wrong. This is a very ancient rule and it applies equally to the construction of statutes as it does to contracts."

[22] In Davenport v The Queen,[9] which was cited in Thompson, it was said:[10]

"In a long series of decisions the courts have construed clauses of forfeiture in leases declaring in terms, however clear and strong, that they shall be void on breach of conditions by the lessees, to mean that they are voidable only at the option of the lessors. The same rule of construction has been applied to other contracts where a party bound by a condition has sought to take advantage of his own breach of it to annul the contract: see Doe v Bancks; Roberts v Davey (1833) 4 B & Ad 664; 110 ER 606, and other cases in the notes to Dumpor's Case 4 Co Rep 1196; 76 ER 1110 …

It is however contended that this rule of construction is inapplicable when the legislature has imposed the condition. But in many cases the language of statutes, even where public interests are affected, has been similarly modified. Thus, where the statute provided that if the purchaser at an auction refused to pay the auction duty, his bidding 'should be null and void to all intents and purposes', it was decided that the bidding was void only at the option of the seller, though the object of the Act was to protect the revenue. In that case Coltman J said: 'It is so contrary to justice that a party should avoid his own contract by his own wrong that, unless constrained, we should not adopt a construction favourable to such a view': Malins v Freeman (1838) 4 Bing (NC) 395; 132 ER 839.

There is no doubt that the scope and purpose of an enactment or contract may be so opposed to this rule of construction that it ought not to prevail, but the intention to exclude it should be clearly established." (Emphasis added)

[23] The central issue for determination in Davenport was whether a proviso of forfeiture in s 8 of the Agricultural Reserves Act 1863 imported into the terms of a lease by the statute made the term of the lease void or voidable only upon a breach of the relevant condition. Section 8 relevantly provided:[11]

"If any person selecting lands in an agricultural reserve shall fail to occupy and improve the same, as required … the right and interest of such selector to the land selected shall cease and determine, and the amount of the purchase-money, less by one-fourth part, shall be refunded to him…"

[24] The principles discussed in Davenport were applied in New Zealand in Burrows v Molyneux Gold-Dredging Co Ltd[12] and Bank of New Zealand & Ewing v Scandinavian Water-Race Co (No 2).[13] Those or related principles have been applied frequently in the United Kingdom.[14]

[25] In Woodcock v South Western Electricity Board,[15] the word "occupier" in a provision in the Electric Lighting (Clauses) Act 1899 requiring electricity authorities "upon being required to do so by the owner or occupier of any premises [to] give and continue to give a supply of energy for those premises",[16] was held not to include reference to persons whose original entry on the premises was unlawful.

[26] In R v Registrar General, ex parte Smith,[17] Staughton LJ, referring to the proposition that "statutory duties which are in terms absolute may nevertheless be subject to implied limitations based upon principles of public policy accepted by the courts at the time when the Act is passed",[18] said:[19]

> "In the case of statutory duties the rule is, in my opinion, based upon interpretation of the meaning intended by Parliament. It is not a rule imposed ab extra as in the case of contracts. That is apparent from the passage of the judgment of Donaldson L.J. which I have just quoted. To hold otherwise would come perilously close to infringing constitutional doctrine of major importance. Our courts have no power to dispense with the laws enacted by Parliament or (as it is now called) to disapply them, subject to the law of the European Community. So the rule is that we must interpret Acts of Parliament as not requiring performance of duties, even when they are in terms absolute, if to do so would enable someone to benefit from his own serious crime."

[27] Widgery LJ observed in Buswell v Goodwin[20] that:

> "The proposition that a man will not be allowed to take advantage of his own wrong is no doubt a very salutary one and one which the court would wish to endorse …"

Consideration of the construction question

[28] Although it may be accepted that the principal purpose of s 27 is consumer protection, it does not follow that the object in s 2(a) ("to facilitate property development in Queensland") or the principles of construction relied on by the vendors have no room for application. The purchasers' argument that the legislature had set a three and a half year period to cover all contingencies is not particularly persuasive. Any disputes between a vendor and a purchaser in relation to the purchaser's obligation to complete under the contract are likely to arise after completion of construction of the apartments (or completion of the subdivision as the case may be), near the time of registration of the relevant plan and thus close to the contractual settlement date. As litigation, particularly if there are appeals, could well take substantially in excess of 12 months, there is no compelling reason to conclude that the limitation period was intended to be sufficient to enable the merits of any dispute to be fully litigated.

[29] Moreover, if a dispute as to a purchaser's obligation to complete arises within the limitation period, when the vendor is ready, willing and able to comply with the statutory requirements, it is surely far from obvious that the legislature contemplated that a defaulting purchaser be permitted to take advantage of its own wrongdoing.

[30] The primary judge held the language of s 27 to be "clear and unambiguous".[21] I respectfully disagree. The provision was not intended to be read literally. It does not contemplate that the vendor "give" the purchaser a registrable instrument of transfer in the sense of providing it gratuitously. Nor does it contemplate that the transfer be provided irrespective of the performance by the purchaser of its contractual obligations. Section 27 concerns the conduct of the parties to a contract for the sale and purchase of a "proposed lot".[22] As such, it, necessarily, contemplates that, unless the contract makes provision to the contrary, a registrable instrument of transfer will not be provided by the vendor to the purchaser except in return for the balance purchase price. Such obligations on the part of the vendor and purchaser are concurrent and mutually dependent.[23]

[31] It tends to follow from the foregoing that it is unlikely that s 27(1) was intended to operate so as to permit a purchaser which refuses to settle in breach of its contractual obligations and which frustrates the vendor's attempts to settle in compliance with its contractual obligations, to escape from the contract and avoid liability. That proposition, I think, emerges sufficiently from the text and context of s 27(1) not to require the support of principles of statutory construction. But if such support is needed, it may be found in the principles against construing a statute so as to enable a person to benefit from his or her own wrong or to infringe common law rights.[24] In Hongkong Fir Shipping Co Ltd v Kawasaki Kisen Kaisha Ltd,[25] Diplock LJ spoke of "the fundamental legal and moral rule that a man should not be allowed to take advantage of his own wrong".

[32] In my view it is implicit in subsections (1) and (2) of s 27 that the "purchaser" referred to is one which, at the time of giving notice under s 27(2), was not wrongfully failing or refusing to perform those of its obligations under the contract which were concurrent with and dependent upon the obligations of the vendor to provide it with a registrable instrument of transfer. The section does not contemplate the conferring of a right of avoidance on a purchaser which would have been provided with a registrable instrument of transfer on settlement under the contract were it not for its own contractual default.

[33] Section 14A of the Acts Interpretation Act 1954 (Qld) requires that, in interpreting a provision, the interpretation that will best achieve the purpose of the Act is to be preferred to any other interpretation.

[34] Neither s 14A nor the purposive approach to construction, however, authorises a departure from the grammatical or literal meaning of a statute, where that meaning gives effect to the purpose or object of the statute.[26] The court's role is one of construction not legislation.[27] Here, the construction urged by the purchasers is arguably consistent with the consumer protection aims of the legislation. However, it is inconsistent with the object of the legislation "to facilitate property development in Queensland".[28]

[35] The limits within which the courts must operate in straining the language of a statute in order to ensure that the legislative purpose is not thwarted were explored in the reasons of McHugh J in Newcastle City Council v GIO General Ltd,[29] where, after referring to a statement by Brennan CJ and himself in IW v City of Perth,[30] his Honour said:[31]

> "Nevertheless, when the purpose of a legislative provision is clear, a court may be justified in giving the provision 'a strained construction' to achieve that purpose provided that the construction is neither unreasonable nor unnatural. If the target of a legislative provision is clear, the court's duty is to ensure that it is hit rather than to record that it has been missed. As a result, on rare occasions a court may be justified in > treating a provision as containing additional words if those additional words will give effect to the legislative purpose. In Jones v Wrotham Park Estates, Lord Diplock said that three conditions must be met before a court can read words into legislation. First, the court must know the mischief with which the statute was dealing. Second, the court must be satisfied that by inadvertence Parliament had overlooked an eventuality which must be dealt with if the purpose of the legislation is to be achieved. Third, the court must be able to state with certainty what words Parliament would have used to overcome the omission if its attention had been drawn to the defect." (Citations omitted)

[36] Lord Diplock's statement of principle had earlier been adopted and applied by McHugh JA in Kingston v Keprose Pty Ltd,[32] in which his Honour said:

> "Where the text of the legislative provision which embodies the proposition is grammatically capable of only one meaning and neither the context, the purpose of the provision nor the general purpose of the Act throws any real doubt on that meaning, the grammatical meaning must be taken as representing Parliament's intention as to the meaning of the law. A court cannot depart from the grammatical meaning of a provision because that meaning produces anomalies or injustices where no real doubt as to the intention of Parliament arises: Cooper Brookes (Wollongong) Pty Ltd v Federal Commissioner of Taxation (1981) 147 CLR 297 at 305, 320 and Stock v Frank Jones (Tipton) Ltd [1978] 1 WLR 231 at 234-235, 237, 238; [1978] 1 All ER 948 at 951, 954, 955. If the grammatical meaning does give rise to an injustice or anomaly, however, a real doubt will usually arise as to whether Parliament intended the grammatical meaning to prevail: cf Cooper Brookes (at 320). As Cardozo J said in Re Rouss 116 NE 782 at 785 (1917): 'Consequences cannot alter statutes, but may help to fix their meaning.' A resulting anomaly or injustice is not itself, however, a ground for departing from the grammatical meaning. Equally the natural and ordinary grammatical meaning of the provision is not decisive. The courts no longer follow statements to the effect of that of Higgins J in Amalgamated Society of Engineers v Adelaide Steamship Co Ltd (1920) 28 CLR 129 at 162, that 'when we find what the language means, in its ordinary and natural sense, it is our duty to obey that meaning, even if we think the result to be inconvenient or impolitic or improbable': see Cooper Brookes (at 319-320).

Ascertaining the ordinary grammatical meaning of a legislative provision is only the first step in the process of statutory construction. If the consequences of the literal or grammatical construction raise a real doubt as to Parliament's intent, the court is justified in refusing to give the words their literal or grammatical construction: R v City of London Court Judge and Payne [1892] 1 QB 273 at 290, 301; R v Wimbledon Justices; Ex parte Derwent [1953] 1 QB 380 at 384; Re Lockwood [1958] Ch 231 at 238; R v Oakes [1959] 2 QB 350 at 354, 355; Luke v Inland Revenue Commissioners [1963] AC 557 at 577; Adler v George [1964] 2 QB 7 at 9-10; Wiltshire v Barrett [1966] 1 QB 312 at 332-333; Kammins Ballrooms Co Ltd v Zenith Investments (Torquay) Ltd [1971] AC 850 at 879; University College, Oxford (Master and Fellows) v Durdy [1982] Ch 413 at 419; Director of Public Prosecutions v Hester [1973] AC 296 at 323 and Cooper Brookes (Wollongong) Pty Ltd v Federal Commissioner of Taxation (at 311, 320-321). Fifty years ago in Sutherland Publishing Co Ltd v Caxton Publishing Co Ltd [1938] Ch 174 at 201, MacKinnon LJ said that when 'the purpose of an enactment is clear, it is often legitimate, because it is necessary, to put a strained interpretation upon some words which have been inadvertently used' (my emphasis).

However, it is not only when words have been inadvertently used that a court is empowered to give a legislative provision a strained construction. A strained construction may be justified because words have been omitted: Kammins Ballrooms Co Ltd v Zenith Investments (Torquay) Ltd (at 880-882); or because by inadvertence Parliament has failed to deal with an eventuality required to be dealt with if the purpose of the Act is to be achieved: Jones v Wrotham Park Settled Estates [1980] AC 74 at 105; or because the statute proceeds on a mistaken assumption: R v Draper (1870) 1 VR(L) 118; or because the purpose of the provision indicates that Parliament did not intend the grammatical meaning to apply: Adler v George (at 10); Wiltshire v Barrett (at 332-333); R v Oakes (at 354-355); or because words must be omitted to avoid absurdity; Re Lockwood (at 238). As many of the cases show, the purpose of the legislation may require a meaning to be placed on the words of a particular provision which, standing alone, they cannot reasonably bear. In Adler v George, the Divisional Court held that the words 'in the vicinity of any prohibited place' meant 'in or in the vicinity of any prohibited place'. In Wiltshire v Barrett the Court of Appeal held that the words 'may arrest …a person committing an offence' meant 'may arrest??a person committing or apparently committing an offence'. In Kammins the House of Lords held that the words, 'No application …shall be entertained unless …' meant that some applications could be entertained although the unless clause was not satisfied. But as Mason and Wilson JJ pointed out in Cooper Brookes (Wollongong) Pty Ltd v Federal Commissioner of Taxation (at 321), the propriety of departing from the literal rule does not depend upon labels. It:

> '…extends to any situation in which for good reason the operation of the statute on a literal reading does not conform to the legislative intent as ascertained from the provisions of the statute, including the policy which may be discerned from those provisions.'

In Jones v Director of Public Prosecutions [1962] AC 635, Lord Reid said (at 662) that you may not attach to a statutory provision a meaning which the words of that provision cannot reasonably bear. His Lordship expressed the view that if the words 'are capable of more than one meaning, then you can choose between those meanings, but beyond that you must not go'. The often quoted remarks of Lord Simonds in Magor and St Mellons Rural District Council v Newport Corporation [1952] AC 189 at 191 are to the same effect. But if these remarks were ever a correct exposition of the cases, they > no longer express the modern law of statutory construction. In Jones v Wrotham Park Settled Estates, Lord Diplock said (at 105) that if the application of the literal or grammatical meaning would lead to results which would defeat the purpose of a statute the court may read words into the legislation. But his Lordship said that words could only be read into a statute if three conditions were fulfilled. First, the court must know the mischief with which the Act was dealing. Secondly, the court must be satisfied that by inadvertence Parliament has overlooked an eventuality which must be dealt with if the purpose of the Act is to be achieved. Thirdly, the court must be able to state with certainty what words Parliament would have used to overcome the omission if its attention had been drawn to the defect."

[37] The above passage was referred to with approval by Mason CJ, Deane, Dawson, Toohey, Gaudron and McHugh JJ in Bropho v Western Australia.[33]

[38] Spigelman CJ, in R v Young, after referring to Kingston v Keprose Pty Ltd, Bropho v Western Australia and other authorities, said:[34]

> "As I understand the recent cases, they are not authority for the proposition that a court is entitled, upon satisfaction of the three conditions postulated by Lord Diplock, to perfect the parliamentary intention by inserting words in a statute. The court may construe words in the statute to apply to a particular situation or to operate in a particular way, even if the words used would not, on a literal construction, so apply or operate. However, the words which actually appear in the statute must be reasonably open to such a construction. Construction must be text based."

Spigelman CJ elaborated on the above observations as follows:[35]

> "Where the words actually used are not reasonably capable of being construed in the manner contended for, they will not be so construed: McAlister v The Queen (1990) 169 CLR 324 at 330; R v Di Maria (1996) 67 SASR 466 at 472-474. If a court can construe the words actually used by the parliament to carry into effect the parliamentary intention, it will do so notwithstanding that the specific construction is not the literal construction and even if it is a strained construction. The process of construction will, for example, sometimes cause the court to read down general words, or to give the words used an ambulatory operation. So long as the court confines itself to the range of possible meanings or of operation of the text – using consequences to determine which meaning should be selected – then the process remains one of construction.
> The construction reached in this way will often be more clearly expressed by way of the addition of words to the words actually used in the legislation. The references in the authorities to the court 'supplying omitted words' should be understood as a means of expressing the court's conclusion with clarity, rather than as a description of the actual reasoning process which the court has conducted. In all cases, what the court has done is to construe the words actually used in their total context."

[40] In my view the construction advanced in paragraphs [30]–[32] above construes the critical words in s 27 in their conveyancing context. The construction is not the literal one but, as was explained earlier, a literal construction fails to have regard to the conveyancing context of s 27 and is plainly not in accordance with the legislative intent. Once that is understood there is no difficulty in construing s 27 as I have done, particularly as this accommodates the principles of construction discussed earlier. This construction does not give the words of s 27 a meaning that they cannot reasonably bear. It conventionally reads down or limits the improbably broad scope of the words of s 27, if read literally, and gives effect to the principles against construing statutes to permit a person taking advantage of his own wrong and interfering with vested property interests and common law rights.[36]

[41] The primary judge derived support for his construction from the Explanatory Notes to the Sustainable Planning and Other Legislation Amendment Bill 2011 which relevantly provided:

> "The amendment is proposed to apply to existing contracts entered into before the commencement of the amendment. It is proposed to apply to such existing contracts regardless of whether the sunset period has elapsed. It will not apply to those contracts where the sunset period has elapsed, the vendor has not given a registrable instrument of transfer within the sunset period and the purchaser has given written notice to the vendor in accordance with section 27(2).

This will mean those purchasers who have defaulted under existing contracts, which have not settled on the date required by the contract (and still within the sunset period), cannot terminate the contract once the sunset period has expired. In other words, retrospective operation would mean that 'defaulting' purchasers with existing contracts to which the Land Sales Act 1984 applies, would no longer be able to take advantage of the ambiguity.

There are cases where sellers have commenced litigation to seek specific performance of the purchaser's obligation to settle. This is also in full knowledge that the existing interpretation of section 27 leaving the purchaser the right to terminate. It is also understood some purchasers are fully aware of the existing interpretation and have expectations of their existing statutory right.

Applying the proposed amendment to all existing contracts, regardless of court proceedings, will mean vendors can continue with their existing court proceedings or instigate proceedings, without being concerned with purchasers terminating the contracts due to the ambiguity of section 27.

It is understood there are vendors with existing contracts for proposed lots with a cumulative value in the hundreds of millions of dollars. If purchasers choose not to settle in light of the existing interpretation of section 27, vendors are left with two options without the amendment. They are, to take the risk of seeking a court order for specific performance and hope it will be granted within the sunset period or, to terminate the contract because of the purchaser's default. It is understood the risk is higher in seeking a court order as the settlement dates are usually very near to the end of the sunset period. It is understood vendors are deciding to choose termination of contracts as they know they can, under the contracts, keep the paid deposits.

If a defaulting purchaser terminates a contract under the existing interpretation of section 27, the vendor must return the deposit to the purchaser. This approach leaves the vendor in the position of no return on its investment and also facing new marketing and selling costs for the now completed but unsold lot. It is for these reasons that retrospective application is considered justified." (Emphasis added)

[42] Particular reliance was placed by the primary judge on the passage emphasised in bold type above. I am not confident, however, that the Explanatory Notes support the conclusion that it may be inferred from the amending legislation that the parliament indicated a view of the construction of s 27 consistent with that of the primary judge's. The words in italics demonstrate an understanding on the part of the Attorney-General, Minister for Local Government and Special Minister of State ("the Minister") that s 27 was ambiguous and that there was an interpretation, not necessarily the correct interpretation, which permitted a defaulting purchaser to take advantage of the section. There is no indication of a purpose to interfere with the vested rights of parties to contracts to which the proposed amendment of s 27 was not to apply.

[43] In his Second Reading Speech on the Sustainable Planning and Other Legislation Amendment Bill 2011, the Minister observed:[37]

"I am also moving an amendment to the bill to clarify the meaning of section 27 of the Land Sales Act. Section 27 sets out circumstances in which a buyer of a proposed lot may validly terminate the contract for that lot. It requires the seller of a proposed community title scheme lot to give a buyer of that proposed lot a registrar's transfer form to convey its title within 3½ years. If this does not occur within that 3½ year period the buyer may terminate the contract. The policy intention underpinning section 27 is that the seller must provide the buyer with a finished product within a reasonable development period so that the buyer is not faced with uncertainty as to the date of the completion of the proposed lot. However, if a buyer has not settled in accordance with the contract — that is, paid the purchase price in exchange for the title — it could be argued that a current reading of section 27 permits a buyer to still terminate the contract once the 3½ year period, or extended 5½ year period, expires. This clearly is not the policy objective intended by section 27. The overall policy objective of the act is to promote consumer protection for the buyer by compelling the seller to complete a relevant development on the proposed lot within a reasonable period.

At the same time, a further objective of the act is to facilitate property development and protect a seller by creating contractual certainty. The proposed amendment resettles the balance between these two objectives by clarifying that the buyer may only terminate a contract under section 27 if they are not in default under the contract or if they have not failed to settle in accordance with the contract. This will provide contractual certainty for both parties while at the same time preserve the rights to terminate if the seller does not give a registerable instrument of transfer within that 3½ years. In addition, the proposed amendment will apply to all existing contracts from midnight on the day the amendment is introduced into this House — that is today. Therefore, if you have already exercised your right or taken legal action it will not apply. If you have not sought to exercise any right then the new law will apply." (Emphasis added)

[44] It will be seen from the above that the Minister admitted only to the existence of an argument that s 27, as originally worded, permitted a defaulting purchaser to terminate. The Minister noted that this was "clearly … not the policy objective intended by s 27". His statement that the amendment will have the effect of "clarifying" that a buyer may only rely on s 27(2) if the buyer is not in default or has not failed to settle in accordance with the contract is inconsistent with the view that the section, if unamended, would have different consequences.

[45] In construing s 27 in its unamended form, regard may be had to the amending legislation. In Deputy Federal Commissioner of Taxes (SA) v Elder's Trustee and Executor Co Ltd,[38] Dixon, Evatt and McTiernan JJ said in a passage, which has often been repeated:

"'An Act of Parliament does not alter the law by merely betraying an erroneous opinion of it' (Maxwell, Interpretation of Statutes, 6th ed. (1920), p. 544, and, per Lord Atkinson, Ormond Investment Co. v. Betts). 'Where the interpretation of a statute is obscure or ambiguous, or readily capable of more than one interpretation, light may be thrown on the true view to be taken of it by the aim and provisions of a subsequent statute' (per Lord Atkinson). In Cape Brandy Syndicate v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, Lord Sterndale said: 'I quite agree that subsequent legislation, if it proceed upon an erroneous construction of previous legislation, cannot alter that previous legislation; but if there be any ambiguity in the earlier legislation, then the subsequent legislation may fix the proper interpretation which is to be put upon the earlier.'" (Citations omitted)

[46] Dixon J, in Grain Elevators Board (Vic) v Dunmunkle Corporation,[39] said:

"It would be a strange result if we were to interpret the prior legislation as giving a wider exemption than that conferred by the [later] provision so that the express exemption it makes would prove unnecessary and the qualifications it places upon that exemption would be futile."

[47] That passage was referred to by Dawson J in Hunter Resources Ltd v Melville,[40] where his Honour said:

"In Grain Elevators Board (Vict.) v. Dunmunkle Corporation Dixon J. expressed the view that an amending Act might be taken into account in the interpretation of the prior legislation, at least to avoid a result that would render the amending legislation unnecessary or futile." (Citations omitted)

[48] However, in determining the proper construction of earlier legislation, regard must be had to the possibility that the amendments were made out of an abundance of caution in order to remove doubt.[41] In Interlego AG & Anor v Croner Trading Pty Ltd,[42] Gummow J relevantly said:

"There is a line of authority that an amendment may be taken into account in determining the scope of the prior legislation, at least to avoid a result which would render the amendment unnecessary, or futile or deficient: see especially Grain Elevators Board (Vic) v Dunmunkle Corporation (1946) 73 CLR

70 at 85-86; Hunter Resources Ltd v Melville (1988) 164 CLR 234 at 254-255. But in doing so caution should be exercised: see D C Pearce and R S Geddes, Statutory Interpretation in Australia (3rd ed, 1988), §3.26. It is, after all, a curious way of revealing parliamentary intention at the time of passing the earlier provision. As was observed by Viscount Haldane LC in Re Samuel [1913] AC 514 at 526:

> 'It is not a conclusive argument as to the construction of an earlier Act to say that unless it be construed in a particular way a later enactment would be surplusage. The later Act may have been designed, ex abundante cautela, to remove possible doubts.'

See also Commissioner of Taxation (Cth) v Verzyden (1988) 88 ATC 4,205 at 4,210; Downey v Trans Waste Pty Ltd (1991) 172 CLR 167 at 177."

[140609]

Section 37 of the Sustainable Planning and Other Legislation Amendment Act 2012 provides:

> "'37 Transitional provision for Sustainable Planning and Other Legislation Amendment Act 2012
>
> '(1) Section 27 as amended by the Sustainable Planning and Other Legislation Amendment Act 2012, section 22B applies to an instrument relating to the sale of a proposed lot if —
>
> (a) the instrument is in force, and settlement has not been effected, immediately before commencement; or > (b) the instrument is made on or after commencement.
>
> '(2) Subsection (1)(a) applies —
>
> (a) regardless of whether the sunset period ended or ends before, on or after commencement; and
> (b) even if an action for specific performance of the purchaser's obligations under the instrument has been started by the vendor, but not completed, before commencement.
>
> '(3) Subsections (1)(a) and (2) apply despite the Acts Interpretation Act 1954, section 20.
>
> '(4) In this section —
>
> commencement means the commencement of the Sustainable Planning and Other Legislation Amendment Act 2012, section 22B.
> sunset period means the 3½ year period mentioned in section 27(1)(b) or, if that period is extended by a regulation made under section 28, the extended period.'."

[50] The amendment removes ambiguity and provides certainty in respect of instruments to which it relates. It does not apply to instruments which are not in force prior to its commencement or deal expressly or implicitly with the rights and obligations of the parties to such instruments. I do not detect in it any intention to declare or interfere with any rights or obligations in respect of instruments to which it does not apply.

Conclusion

[51] Having regard to the conclusions reached above, it is unnecessary to determine the merits of the vendors' waiver and estoppel arguments. I will content myself with these observations. As for the alleged estoppel, there did not appear to be any representation by the purchasers on which the vendors relied to their detriment. As for waiver, or election, it does not appear that the purchasers elected between inconsistent rights.[43] As the primary judge's orders were based on an erroneous construction of s 27(2) of the Act, they must be set aside. There are plainly triable issues which cannot be resolved by this Court and I would therefore order that:

1. The appeal be allowed.
2. Paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 of the orders made on 14 September 2012 be set aside.
3. The application filed by the purchasers on 5 March 2012 be dismissed.
4. The purchasers pay the vendors' costs of the application and of this appeal.

Atkinson J: I agree with the reasons of Muir JA and the orders he proposes.

Supreme Court of Queensland — Court of Appeal

Decision delivered on 9 August 2013

Conveyancing — Contract for sale of residential property — Off-the-plan contracts — Whether letter sent to buyers' solicitors returning executed contract with warning statement and information sheet directed attention to the warning statement and information sheet as required by then s 365(2A)(c)(ii) of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act — Whether reference in the letter to the "Contract of Sale" could be regarded as encompassing the warning statement and information sheet — Whether the context in which the letter was received or the form of the documents obviated the need to make specific reference to the warning statement and information sheet — Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000, s 365(2A)(c)(ii) (since repealed).

The first respondent was a developer of a set of units situated in Queensland. The appellants were solicitors retained in 2007 to assist in conveying the proposed units.

The solicitors prepared a number of booklets which contained as their first page the PAMD Form 30c warning statement, followed by the BCCM Form 14 information sheet and the contract. Each booklet was spiral bound with a clear plastic sheet as its cover. The warning statement and contract had previously been signed by the buyer and the contract recorded that the buyer had received the information sheet.

When returning the executed contracts to the buyer's representatives, a letter was sent with each booklet which stated (inter alia), "We now enclose Contract of Sale and Disclosure Statement for your attention …". The letter did not specifically draw the buyers' attention to the warning statement or information sheet. Consequently in January 2009, the buyers sought to withdraw their offers to purchase on the ground that they were not bound by the contracts because the letter did not comply with the requirements of then s 365(2A)(c)(ii) of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000.

The developer successfully sued the solicitors for negligence and breach of their retainer agreements (see SDW Projects Pty Ltd v Modi & Ors (2012) LQCS ¶90-182). The solicitors appealed against that decision.

On appeal the solicitors argued that the primary judge erred in concluding that the expression "Contract of Sale" in the letter referred only to the contract itself, rather than to the documents in the booklet as a whole. They argued that the booklet could colloquially be described as the "Contract of Sale". The solicitors also argued that if the contents of the letter taken in isolation were not sufficient, the primary judge, on the authority of Boylan v Gallagher (2011) Q ConvR ¶54-766; [2011] QCA 240, should have considered the surrounding circumstances including what was actually enclosed with the letter.

Held: appeals dismissed.

1. Section 365 required that the buyer's attention be directed to each of the three documents, ie the contract, the warning statement and the information sheet. The solicitors did not provide a compelling argument as to why a buyer's representative, on receiving a letter which said it enclosed the "Contract of Sale", without more, would regard the expression as encompassing the other two documents.

This finding is reinforced by the fact that "information sheet", "relevant contract" and "warning statement" are all separately defined in s 364 of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act.

2. The context in which the letter was received did not make a difference to the outcome of the appeal. While Boylan v Gallagher is authority for the proposition that it is not essential that there be express reference in the letter to the documents sent, a reference to the booklet as a whole, without more, did not direct attention to the individual documents contained in it.

The context in which the letter was received may have advanced the solicitors' case if, for example, there had been a mutual adoption of particular terminology by the parties that covered all three documents. However, no such common form of expression existed here. Instead, what the letter did was to direct the reader's attention to the delivery of only one of the documents, ie the sale contract.

3. The fact that the form of the documents (ie a booklet with a clear plastic sheet cover) might have made their content more readily ascertained did not obviate the need to draw attention to each individual document. Even though the warning statement might have been physically obvious to the buyers' representatives as it was the first sheet, the information sheet would not have been obvious.

Holmes JA: The first respondent was the developer of a set of units at Mudgeeraba. It retained, in turn, the appellants, Mr Modi and Ms Clements, both of whom are solicitors, to assist it in conveying the proposed units. Subsequently, it commenced separate actions against the appellants alleging a negligent failure to comply with the requirements of s 365(2A)(c)(ii) of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 (PAMDA). By an interlocutory application, the first respondent sought determination of whether letters which the appellants sent to buyers' solicitors, returning executed contracts with warning statements and information sheets, directed the attention of the buyer in each case to the warning statement and information sheet, as s 365(2A)(c)(ii), inter alia, required. The primary judge declared that the letters did not do so. The appeals are against that judgment.

[2] The third and fourth respondents are, respectively, a firm of solicitors and a barrister who gave advice to the first respondent to the effect that the letters did not meet the PAMDA requirements. They were joined as parties in the determination of the question as to whether the letters met the requirements of the PAMDA provision.

The legislation

[3] Section 365 appears in chapter 11 of PAMDA, which is concerned with residential property sales. Section 363 sets out the purposes of the chapter, and at the relevant time (June–October 2007) was as follows:

> "The purposes of this chapter are—
>
> > (a) to give persons who enter into relevant contracts a cooling-off period; and
> > (b) to require all proposed relevant contracts or relevant contracts for the sale of residential property in Queensland to include consumer protection information, including a statement that a relevant contract is subject to a cooling-off period; and
> > (c) to enhance consumer protection for buyers of residential property by ensuring, as far as practicable, the independence of lawyers acting for buyers."

[4] At the time of the transactions here, the scheme of chapter 11 parts 1 and 2 was, firstly, to impose certain requirements for provision of documents when a contract was furnished for the buyer's signature and, secondly, to make the contract's binding effect, once signed, contingent on provision again of such documents in the way prescribed. Part 3 of the chapter provided for a five-day cooling-off period,[1] which started when the contract became binding and during which the buyer remained entitled to give notice of termination of the contract. The documents to be provided under parts 1 and 2 included, apart from the contract itself, a warning statement which by virtue of s 366D of the Act was required to include information, inter alia, about the cooling off period to which the contract was subject, and, where the contract was for the sale of a unit, an information sheet in a form approved under s 320 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, explaining the obligations attendant on membership of a body corporate.

[5] The issue in the present case arose at the second, post-execution stage, which was then governed by s 365 of PAMDA. The section is set out below, with, for convenience, the sub-section applicable in this case emphasised in bold print:

> "365 When parties are bound under a relevant contract
>
> > (1) The buyer and the seller under a relevant contract are bound by the relevant contract when—
> >
> > > (a) for a relevant contract, other than a relevant contract relating to a unit sale — the buyer or the buyer's agent receives the warning statement and the relevant contract from the seller or the seller's agent in a way mentioned in subsection (2); or

(b) for a relevant contract relating to a unit sale — the buyer or the buyer's agent receives the warning statement, the information sheet and the relevant contract in a way mentioned in subsection (2A).

(2) For a relevant contract, other than a relevant contract relating to a unit sale, the ways are —

(a) by fax, but only if the documents mentioned in subparagraphs (i), (ii), (iii) and (iv) are sent in the following order—

(i) a single cover page that includes a clear statement directing the attention of the buyer or the buyer's agent to the warning statement and the relevant contract;
(ii) the warning statement;
(iii) the relevant contract;
(iv) any other documents; and

(b) by electronic communication other than fax, if the electronic communication contains —

(i) a message that includes a clear statement directing the attention of the buyer or the buyer's agent to the warning statement and the relevant contract; and
(ii) a single document, consisting only of the warning statement and the relevant contract, that is protected against unauthorised change, with the warning statement appearing as the first or top page of the document; and

Example of electronic communication—

• email

(c) by being handed or otherwise receiving the documents mentioned in paragraph (a)(ii) and (iii) other than by electronic communication, if—

(i) the warning statement is attached to the relevant contract and appears as the first or top page; and
(ii) the seller or the seller's agent directs the attention of the buyer or the buyer's agent to the warning statement and the relevant contract.

Example of receipt other than by electronic communication—

• post

Examples of how attention may be directed—

• by oral advice
• by including a paragraph in an accompanying letter

(2A) For a relevant contract relating to a unit sale, the ways are—

(c) by being handed or otherwise receiving the documents mentioned in paragraph (a)(ii), (iii) and (iv) other than by electronic communication, if—

(i) the warning statement and the information sheet are attached to the relevant contract with the warning statement appearing as the first or top page of the document and the information sheet appearing immediately after the warning statement; and

(ii) the seller or the seller's agent directs the attention of the buyer or the buyer's agent to the warning statement, the information sheet and the relevant contract.

(6) In this section—

buyer's agent includes a lawyer or licensee acting for the buyer and a person authorised by the buyer or by law to sign the relevant contract on the buyer's behalf."

[6] Sections 366, 366A and 366B of the Act as it stood at the relevant time were relevant to the first of the stages, pre-execution, described above. Section 366 was concerned with the situation where the proposed contract was faxed for signature, s 366A where it was sent by another means of electronic communication, and s 366B where it was sent otherwise than by electronic communication. The last section provided:

"366B Warning statement if proposed relevant contract is given in another way

(1) This section applies if a proposed relevant contract is given to a proposed buyer or the proposed buyer's agent for signing in a way other than by electronic communication.
(2) The seller or the seller's agent must ensure that the proposed relevant contract has attached a warning statement and, if the proposed relevant contract relates to a unit sale, an information sheet with the warning statement appearing as its first or top page and any information sheet appearing immediately after the warning statement.
(3) If the proposed relevant contract does not comply with subsection (2)—

(a) if the seller gave the proposed relevant contract — the seller; or
(b) if the seller's agent gave the proposed relevant contract — the seller's agent;

commits an offence.

Maximum penalty — 200 penalty units.

(4) If the seller or the seller's agent hands the proposed relevant contract to the proposed buyer, the seller or the seller's agent must direct the proposed buyer's attention to the warning statement and, if the proposed relevant contract relates to a unit sale, the information sheet and any disclosure statement.

Note—

A contravention of this subsection is not an offence. Under section 366D(3), in the circumstances of this subsection a warning statement is of no effect unless it is signed by the buyer.

(5) Subsection (6) applies if the seller or the seller's agent gives the proposed relevant contract to the proposed buyer or the proposed buyer's agent in a way other than by handing the proposed contract to the proposed buyer or the proposed buyer's agent.

(6) The seller or the seller's agent must include with the proposed relevant contract a statement directing the proposed buyer's attention to the warning statement and, if the proposed relevant contract relates to a unit sale, the information sheet and any disclosure statement."

[7] Section 364 provided a definition of "attached":

"attached, in relation to a warning statement, any information sheet and a contract, means attached in a secure way so that the warning statement, any information sheet and the contract appear to be a single document.

[140615]

Examples of ways a warning statement and any information sheet may be attached to a contract—

- binding
- stapling"

In the same section "relevant contract" was defined as meaning

"a contract for the sale of residential property in Queensland, other than a contract formed on a sale by auction."

The facts

[8] Mr Modi was retained between June and October 2007 and on 12 occasions provided contracts (each a relevant contract as defined by s 364 of PAMDA) and associated documents to the solicitors for the buyers. On 11 occasions, he sent two sets of documents by courier to the solicitors for the buyers; in the twelfth case, the two sets of documents were hand-delivered. Each set of documents was spiral bound, with a clear plastic sheet as its cover. One of the two sets of documents delivered in each case contained as its first page, visible through the clear plastic cover, the PAMDA warning statement, followed by the information sheet and the contract. The warning statement and contract had previously been signed by the buyer, and the contract recorded that the buyer had received the information sheet. The other set of documents delivered on each occasion concerned disclosure under the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, the Land Sales Act 1984 and the Corporations Act 2001 (Cth).

[9] The letters accompanying the two sets of documents in each case were headed with reference to the buyer's name and the property the subject of the sale, and contained the following:

"We refer to the above matter and advise that we act on behalf of the vendor and note that you act on behalf of the purchasers.

We now enclose Contract of Sale and Disclosure Statement for your attention…"

One letter did not contain the words "for your attention", but his Honour observed that no party had relied on the difference, and he did not have regard to it.

[10] Ms Clements, on the pleadings, was retained in October 2007 in place of Mr Modi to carry out the functions he had performed in relation to a further two contracts and to review the twelve contracts of sale for which he had previously been responsible. She adopted the same practice as he did of providing the warning statement, information sheet and contract in a spiral-bound volume, although it is not known whether the volume had a clear cover sheet. Again, the warning statement and contract had previously been signed by the buyers and receipt of the information sheet had been acknowledged.

[11] Ms Clements's covering letters were slightly different. One said that it enclosed "Executed Contract of Sale" and the "disclosure statement". The other merely said "We now enclose signed Contract for your attention". That was because in that instance only one spiral-bound volume, containing the warning statement, information sheet and contract, was delivered. In relation to that bound volume, there was also this difference: the first sheet in the bundle was, rather than a warning statement, a "Statement and Acknowledgement" that the buyer's attention had been directed to accompanying documents which included the warning statement, information sheet and contract. That statement and acknowledgment had previously been forwarded for the purposes of s 366B to the buyer, who had executed and returned it.

[12] In January 2009, the buyers under the 14 contracts sought to withdraw their offers to purchase on the ground that they were not bound by the contracts because of non-compliance with s 365(2A)(c)(ii). The result was that the first respondent sued each of the appellants for negligence and breach of the retainer agreements. The appellants pleaded that the letters they had sent with the documents met the provision's requirements and that any loss was caused by the third respondent, which had advised that the buyers were entitled to terminate. (The fourth respondent had also provided advice to that effect.) The first respondent then brought its application for declarations that the letters did not comply with s 365(2A)(c)(ii).

The judgment

[13] The primary judge noted the sequence of requirements under chapter 11. Similar requirements to those in s 365(2A)(c)(ii) existed before the contract was entered, under s 366B: the seller had to provide the warning statement and information sheet with the contract in the designated order and to direct the prospective buyer's attention to both. The fact that the requirements existed in both those contexts underscored the importance which the legislature attached to them. The section provided that the obligation to direct attention to the documents could be satisfied by directing the attention of the buyer's agent to them, and in s 365(6) it was recognised that that agent might be a lawyer. It was clear that the obligation was unaffected by the fact that the documents were to be delivered to a lawyer rather than a lay person.

[14] The learned primary judge set out comments made by de Jersey CJ in MNM Developments Pty Ltd v Gerrard[2] as to the purpose of the technical requirements in the chapter, of ensuring consumer protection for purchasers of residential property; which might, in some cases, give a purchaser a right to terminate "even for quite technical contraventions" and regardless of any disadvantage suffered. His Honour observed that those comments remained applicable to the chapter.

[15] The primary judge distinguished on its facts the case of Boylan v Gallagher[3] which dealt with a similar question, under an earlier version of s 365(2)(c)(ii), of whether the attention of the buyer had been directed to the contract and warning statement. However, he took note of statements in Boylan to the effect that the section did not require the relevant direction to refer expressly to the warning statement or contract (there being no requirement for an information sheet in Boylan, which did not concern a unit sale); that it was unnecessary for the seller to prove that the buyer or his agent had, in fact, become aware of the documents; and that whether attention had been sufficiently directed to them would depend on the circumstances of each case. However, in the case before him, the letters referred to the "Contract of Sale"; and the contract for the sale of each property, as it appeared in the bound volume, bore that title. The letters, in his Honour's view, thus directed attention to the contract, but not to the other documents in the bound volume. It did not assist that each of the letters was sent to a solicitor; there was no reason to think that a solicitor would take the reference to a contract of sale as meaning anything other than that. Consequently, he made the declarations the subject of this appeal.

The chapter 11 cases

[16] In MNM Developments Pty Ltd v Gerrard, the focus was on the requirement in s 366 that the warning statement be attached to the contract "as its first or top sheet". The facts of the case were that the agent for the seller sent the buyer a single sheet fax which comprised a covering letter, a disclosure statement, a warning statement and the contract in that order. The court held that the warning statement was not attached as the first or top sheet of the contract. The Chief Justice remarked that the legislature had intended that a buyer on receiving a contract would first see the warning statement, a result which would be achieved if physical attachment were required. He made this observation about construction of the provision:

> "The context of the requirement set up by s. 366 tells against a liberal interpretation of that requirement. Chapter 11 of the Act, in which s. 366 occurs, contains a detailed set of technical requirements plainly directed to ensuring a form of consumer protection for purchasers of residential property. One of the objects of the Act, stated in its preamble, is 'to protect consumers against particular undesirable practices'. That protection extends, in cases like these, to giving a purchaser > a right to terminate even for quite technical contraventions, and whether or not the purchaser has suffered any material disadvantage."[4]

(Those were the comments which the primary judge regarded as remaining generally applicable to Ch 11 Pt 1.)

[17] In Boylan v Gallagher, the seller had become entitled to exercise a "put option", pursuant to which the buyer was required to purchase the land under a contract in the form annexed to the relevant deed. The buyer executed the deed and the warning statement, which was stapled to the front of the deed, and her solicitor sent it to the seller's solicitors under cover of a letter, which said that it enclosed "Put and Call Option document in duplicate signed by client". The seller executed the deed and his solicitors returned it with the warning statement in the same form in which they had been received, with a covering letter to the buyer's solicitor. The letter advised that "[the buyer's] full executed copy of the Put and Call Option document" was enclosed.

[18] Fraser JA, delivering the leading judgment, agreed with the buyer's submission that compliance with the provision was important because it identified the commencement of the cooling-off period, which was at the heart of the legislative scheme for buyers' protection. However, the provision contained no prescription as to how the direction was to occur. Neither the text nor the examples required express reference to the warning statement or the contract; the direction could be by conduct. His Honour continued:

> "The focus of the provision is upon what was said, written, or done by the seller or the seller's agent. The statutory purpose is fulfilled if the seller or the seller's agent does what is required to be done on the part of the seller to direct the attention of the buyer or the buyer's agent to the warning statement and the relevant contract. No less is sufficient but no more is required."[5]

[19] It was not necessary for the seller to prove that the buyer had, in fact, taken note of the direction; and what the parties or their solicitors thought was conveyed by the communication was irrelevant. The circumstances of the case were different from those in Hedley Commercial Property Services Pty Ltd v BRCP Oasis Land Pty Ltd[6] (which involved a failure to direct attention to the relevant documents). His Honour regarded it as significant in the construction of s 365(2)(c)(i) that, unlike s 365(2)(a)(i) and s 365(2)(b)(i), it did not require a "clear statement" directing attention to the warning statement and contract.

[20] Fraser JA rejected a submission that the reference in the buyer's solicitor's letter to the enclosure as the "Put and Call Option document" only comprehended the deed; rather, that was the description which the solicitor had given the warning statement and deed as a single composite document on providing them to the seller's solicitors. By using the same expression as the buyer's solicitor together with the latter's reference and the same name of the matter in the body of the letter, the seller's solicitors had directed the buyer's lawyer back to his own file and his letter with its collective reference to the documents as the "Put and Call Option document".

[21] Other relevant circumstances were that there were only a few days between the parties' letters, so it was unlikely that the buyer's solicitor had forgotten what was enclosed with his letter. The fact that the words "warning statement" appeared in large and obvious form on the first page of the composite document reinforced the conclusion that the seller's solicitors' statement that they were enclosing the executed copy of the "Put and Call Option document" referred both to the warning statement and the relevant contract. The seller's letter had, it was concluded, directed the attention of the buyer's solicitor to the warning statement and the relevant contract, as s 365(2)(c)(ii) of the Act required.

[22] Hedley Commercial Property Services, referred to by Fraser JA, was a single judge decision which concerned a number of aspects of chapter 11 of PAMDA. Of relevance to the present case was a question as to whether the requirements of s 365(2)(b)(i) were satisfied by, firstly, an email which referred to sending a counterpart copy of the relevant contract (a call & put option deed) and, secondly, a follow-up letter which said that it enclosed the call & put option deed signed by the vendor and its counterpart copy signed by the buyer. Fryberg J in that case held that neither satisfied the requirements of the subsection, because the buyer's attention was not directed to the warning statement, although it was, in fact, attached as the top sheet of the contract. Fryberg J pointed out that the requirement of the Act was “not that the buyer be aware of the warning statement; it is that the seller direct attention to it”.[7]

The contentions on appeal

[23] The appellants made these points. The primary judge had erred in concluding that the expression “Contract of Sale” in the letters referred only to the contract itself, rather than to the documents in the bound volume as a whole. That group of documents could colloquially be described as the “Contract of Sale”. The question should have been whether there had been a sufficient direction to the relevant documents, not whether some particular form of words should have been used.

[24] If the content of the letter taken in isolation were not sufficient, the learned primary judge should have considered the surrounding circumstances, including what was actually enclosed with the letters. The reasoning in Boylan v Gallagher entailed what was described as a realistic approach to the direction requirement in s 365(2A)(c)(ii), of having regard to all the relevant circumstances in deciding whether the requirement was met. The primary judge, in contrast, had not done so and had taken too narrow a view of s 365(2A)(c)(ii).

[25] In other contexts, the statutory requirements were more specific than those in s 365(2A)(c)(ii). Section 365(2)(b)(i) and s 365(2A)(b)(i) required, where the documents were sent by electronic communication other than fax, a message that included “a clear statement” directing attention to the warning statement and contract. Under s 366B(6), where the contract was given to the proposed buyer in a way other than by handing it to him or his agent, included with it had to be a statement directing attention to the warning statement and, if applicable, the information sheet and any disclosure statement. There was no such prescription in s 365(2A)(c)(ii). It followed that the requirement was intended to be less onerous and more flexible where documents were physically delivered; the form of the documents themselves was part of the circumstances which could be taken into account in determining whether adequate direction had been given.

[26] In this case, the warning statement, under clear plastic, was the first page of the relevant set of documents, so that it was obvious that the volume consisted of more than the contract itself. The letters and accompanying documents were returned soon after they had been executed by the buyers; within a week or so. They were documents which the recipients must have been expecting, and the reference parts of the covering letters made it clear that they were being returned as part of the relevant property transaction in each case. The second bound volume, described as the “disclosure statement”, contained on its front page (again under clear plastic) a list of the documents contained on it and was evidently a compilation.

[27] Section 365(2A)(c)(ii) specifically allowed for the direction to be given to the buyer’s agent which, by definition in s 365(6), included a lawyer. Here the recipients were solicitors retained to act in the purchase whose professional obligation was to appreciate the legal significance of the documents and to examine them. That, too, was a relevant circumstance in considering whether the direction of attention to the documents was adequate.

[28] A solicitor receiving the letter which said that it enclosed “Contract of Sale and disclosure statement” together with two bound volumes would regard it as identifying the two distinct volumes, one as the contract and the other as the disclosure statement. It was not necessary that each of the warning statement, information statement and contract be separately listed. The form of the bound documents was designed to comply with s 366B(2), which required the attachment to the contract of the warning statement and the information sheet so that the warning statement appeared as “its” (the contract’s) first page; the requirement being, effectively, to treat those documents as part of the contract. Similarly, s 365(2A)(c)(ii) required the warning statement, information sheet and contract to be attached in that order, so as to appear as a single document. If attention was directed to the volume, which, by statute, was required to appear as a single document, attention was necessarily directed to every part of it. That was to be drawn from Boylan v Gallagher.

[29] The learned primary judge should not have distinguished Boylan v Gallagher, which was factually on all fours with this case. Fraser

JA had rejected the respondent buyer's submission that the reference in her solicitor's letter to the enclosure as the "Put and Call Option document" only referred to the deed, saying that since the warning statement and deed, as a composite document, were enclosed with the letter, it was clear that it referred to both. That was a conclusion that where it was apparent that the composite document consisted of more than just the contract, any reference at all to the documents was to the composite document. It did not depend on any mutual use of language, because this was the first of the letters between the parties. The fact that the seller's solicitors had adopted the description used by the buyers' solicitors was thus not necessary to the conclusion in that case.

[30] Counsel for Ms Clements made some additional submissions. He criticised the primary judge's reliance on the Chief Justice's comments in MNM Developments, arguing that they over-stated the purpose of the Act. The preamble to the Act, in speaking of protection against undesirable practices, was paraphrasing s 10, which related to the promotion of residential property rather than the regulation of contracts. In any event, s 363 expressly set out a more limited purpose: to give parties a cooling-off period; to require contracts to include consumer protection information including a statement about the cooling-off period; and to ensure the independence of lawyers acting for buyers. None of that suggested an approach to s 365(2A) which would result in a narrow reading of the words in the manner adopted by the primary judge. The court should take the view that because s 366B created penalties, the obligations imposed under it were more stringent than those under s 365(2A) which had no such consequence.

[31] The fact that the first document in the second of the bundles forwarded by his client was a "Statement and Acknowledgment", rather than a warning statement, reinforced rather than defeated the argument. That document referred specifically to the warning statement, information sheet and contract, a circumstance relevant in assessing the question whether the letter directed attention to the warning statement, information sheet and contract.

Discussion

[32] One must not lose sight of the particular issue framed by the parties at first instance. It did not entail some consideration at large of whether attention was drawn to the documents but the specific question of whether the letters sent with the documents drew attention to the information sheet and warning statement. The surrounding circumstances to which the appellants attach importance in their arguments were no more than the context in which "what was said, written, or done"[8] by their solicitors fell to be considered.

[33] In this case, the focus, given what was pleaded and what was at issue, was necessarily on what was written: the contents of the letters said to direct attention to the documents and whether they performed that function. That entailed a consideration of the effect of drawing attention to the "Contract of Sale". The provision required that the buyer's attention be directed to each of the three documents, the contract, the warning statement and the information sheet. No compelling argument has been advanced as to why a solicitor on receiving a letter which said that it enclosed the "Contract of Sale", without more, would regard the expression as encompassing the other documents. (It may be noted that in PAMDA itself "information sheet", "relevant contract" and "warning statement" are all separately defined in s 364.) The question, then, is whether the context in which the letters were received made a difference.

[34] It may be accepted, as was pointed out in Boylan v Gallagher, that it is not essential that there be express reference to the documents sent. In a particular case there may be something about the circumstances — such as the mutual adoption of particular terminology — to obviate the need to make a specific reference to the relevant documents. But contrary to the appellants' submission, Fraser JA did not conclude in Boylan that a reference to the bound volume as a whole, without more, directed attention to the individual documents contained in it. His statement that the reference to the "Put and Call Option document" in the buyer's solicitor's letter comprehended both the warning statement and the deed was made in response to the buyer's contention that her solicitor's letter referred to only one document, even though he, as the sender of it, enclosed both documents. That conclusion had nothing to do with whether the reference made at that stage directed attention to both documents from the perspective of someone receiving it, and was only relevant to whether, by the time the documents were returned to the buyer's solicitor, there was, indeed, a mutually adopted expression covering both documents.

[35] In Boylan, the reference in the seller's letter was not to the relevant contract (the deed) but to the "Put and Call Option document": the expression which the buyer had used for the composite document consisting of the warning statement and deed. It was clear that what was being returned was what was sent. No such common form of expression exists here. Instead, what the letters did in this case was to direct the reader's attention to the delivery of only one of the documents, the contract. The primary judge was correct in distinguishing Boylan.

[36] The argument for Ms Clements that s 365(2A) should be read more liberally than m s 366B because the latter has penal consequences seems to me an unorthodox approach to statutory construction. Section 365, as a protective provision, ought to be given a wide scope,[9] while if there is real doubt as to the meaning of s 366B, it should be resolved construing it in favour of the vendor liable to penalty.[10] Generally, reference to the slightly different language of other sections (requiring a "statement" or a "clear statement") is of limited assistance; one is still left with the question of whether the buyers' attention was directed to the relevant documents. With respect, I would adopt Fryberg J's observation that the Act requires not merely that the buyer be aware of the relevant documents, but that the seller act to make him aware, by directing attention to them. Whether the seller has directed the buyer's attention to the documents cannot be determined by the likelihood of the latter's solicitor examining the material himself.

[37] That the form of the documents might make their content more readily ascertained did not obviate the need to draw attention to them. In Boylan, the warning statement, the only item additional to the contract, was obvious at the top of the document. Here the warning statement might have been physically obvious, but the information sheet was not. The fact that the warning statement, information sheet and contract had, by virtue of the s 364 definition, to be attached so as to appear as a single document, does not assist. As the examples to that section demonstrate, that could be achieved simply by stapling them together. That attachment did not render them in fact or legally a single document, and it did not follow that a recipient who saw from the letter that the contract was enclosed and through a clear cover sheet that the warning sheet was in the bundle was thus made aware that the information sheet was with them.

[38] The reference in MNM Developments to one of the objects of the Act as protecting consumers against particular undesirable practices may, as Ms Clements' counsel submitted, have overlooked the context of that particular object, which related to the promotion of residential property. But it was, nonetheless, accurate to say, as the Chief Justice did in that case, that chapter 11 contained a separate set of requirements directed to ensuring consumer protection for purchasers of residential property. As the primary judge also pointed out, the repeated obligation to direct the buyer's attention to the documents reinforces the importance attached by the legislature to the requirement. The learned judge did not err in his assessment of the significance of compliance with the requirements; nor did he do other than give the provision its ordinary meaning.

[39] The fact that the second of the bundles sent by Ms Clements contained the "Statement and Acknowledgement" as its first document alters little. If the document were, indeed, the first in the bundle, it would appear that s 365(2A)(c)(i) was not complied with, since the warning statement did not appear as the first page. No reason was given for returning the "Statement and Acknowledgement" to the buyer; it was relevant, under s 366B, only to the earlier, pre-execution stage of the contracting process. It was not a document which required any further consideration or action by the buyer, who had already signed it. Its appearance (if it were visible) was not apt to do anything other than increase confusion about what the vendor was sending.

[40] No convincing reason has been advanced as to why "Contract of Sale" in the letters should be regarded as embracing the warning sheet and the information sheet. There was nothing in the surrounding circumstances which would alter the meaning of that expression and no practice adopted by the parties in this case which would lead to a different view. As the primary judge noted,[11] the taking of a "practical approach" did not change the effect of the expression used.

[41] No error has been identified in the reasoning of the learned primary judge. I would dismiss both appeals with costs.

Gotterson JA: I agree with the orders proposed by Holmes JA and with the reasons given by her Honour.

Boddice J: I have read the reasons for judgment of Holmes JA. I agree with those reasons and the proposed orders.

THE PROPRIETORS CATHEDRAL VILLAGE BUILDING UNITS PLAN NO 106957 & ORS v CATHEDRAL PLACE COMMUNITY BODY CORPORATE & ORS

(2013) LQCS ¶90-189; Court citation: [2013] QCA 264

Supreme Court of Queensland — Court of Appeal

Decision delivered on 17 September 2013

Conveyancing — Strata titles — Mixed use developments — Community property by-laws — Where a special car parking by-law was made to fulfil the developer's contractual obligations to purchasers of lots in a body corporate scheme — Whether community body corporate validly revoked by-law by a comprehensive resolution 10 years after it was made — Whether by-law was a "restricted community property by-law" for the purposes of s 206A of the Mixed Use Development Act 1993 necessitating a resolution without dissent to revoke it — Mixed Use Development Act 1993, s 206A.

The Cathedral Village was a mixed use development which comprised residential and commercial units referable to a number of different bodies corporate. The first appellant body corporate scheme ("Cathedral Village BC") contained commercial units. It also operated a commercial car park in the development. The area of the car park was principally the common property of four body corporates, including Cathedral Village BC which had six car spaces there as part of its common property.

The first respondent ("Cathedral Place CBC") was a community body corporate and owned common property associated with the whole development. It was responsible for, and was able to, make by-laws in relation to the ongoing management of the car park.

No allocation of car parks was made to the owners of units in the Cathedral Village BC scheme but representations were made by the developer to purchasers of those units when the development was created that the body corporate would have the benefit of at least 55 car parks in the area of the car park. The car parks were to be procured by the developer either by obtaining an exclusive use easement or by some other mechanism.

In order to fulfil this obligation, the developer caused Cathedral Place CBC (the developer still owned all lots in Cathedral Place CBC at this stage) to pass new by-law 28 which reserved a portion of the car park's common property (which was not part of the Cathedral Village BC scheme) for the lot owners in that scheme.

Ten years later in 2010, in an attempt to cause the operation of the car park to cease, Cathedral Place CBC revoked by-law 28 by a comprehensive resolution (Cathedral Village BC voted against the resolution).

Cathedral Village BC commenced proceedings before the primary judge seeking an injunction to restrain implementation of the resolution and a declaration against its validity (see The Proprietors Cathedral Village Building Units Plan No. 106957 & Ors v Cathedral Place Community Body Corporate & Ors (2012) LQCS ¶90-180). Cathedral Village BC asserted that by-law 28 was a "restricted community property by-law" for the purposes of s 206A of the Mixed Use Development Act 1993 as it restricted the use of part of the community property. This type of by-law can only be made by a resolution without dissent and can only be revoked by a resolution without dissent. Cathedral Village BC argued that the by-law was not properly revoked because there was no resolution without dissent.

The grant of a statutory right of user pursuant to s 180 of the Property Law Act 1974 was sought in the alternative.

Cathedral Village BC was appealing against the primary judge's decision that a resolution without dissent was not necessary to revoke the by-law and that the circumstances of the case did not warrant the imposition of a statutory right of user.

Held: for the respondents — appeal dismissed.

1. Cathedral Village BC was unable to provide any evidence that by-law 28 was notified as requiring a resolution without dissent or that the resolution to adopt it was passed as a resolution without dissent (even though the resolution was passed with no votes against it). As by-law 28 was not made by a resolution without dissent, it could not have been a "restricted community property by-law". A resolution without dissent was therefore not necessary to revoke the by-law and the 2010 comprehensive resolution was effective to revoke it.

2. While a statutory right of user could be imposed over a car park, at an evidentiary level, the lot owners of Cathedral Village BC failed to prove that it was reasonably necessary in the interests of effective use of the lots in the Cathedral Village building units plan to impose a statutory right of user over as extensive an area as that requested.

Holmes and Gotterson JJA and P Lyons J:

[1] THE COURT: The Cathedral Place development project was undertaken by Cathedral Place Developments Pty Ltd ("CPD"), a subsidiary of Devine Limited, over a number of years, beginning in 1998. The project was developed through a mixed use scheme[1] in which a prominent city site in Brisbane bounded by Wickham, Gipps, Ann and Gotha Streets was developed for commercial and residential uses.

[2] By the community plan for the site,[2] four community development lots ("CDL 1, 2, 3 and 15") and one community property lot ("CPL 4") were created. By virtue of the registration of the community plan and the operation of s 15(1) of the Mixed Use Development Act 1993 ("MUD Act"), a community body corporate, Cathedral Place Community Body Corporate ("Cathedral Place CBC"), was also created.

[3] CPL 4, with which this litigation is concerned, was thereupon transferred automatically to Cathedral Place CBC. Initially, the company CPD was the owner of each of the community development lots. By virtue of its ownership of them all, initially it was the sole member of Cathedral Place CBC.[3]

[4] As owner of it, Cathedral Place CBC became responsible for, and was able to make by-laws in relation to, the on-going management of CPL 4.[4] The lot occupies an area within the development, approximately at street level, and is accessible from Gotha Street. At all material times, it has been used as a car park.

[5] The principal frontage of CDL 2 is along Wickham Street. It was horizontally subdivided between the ground floor and the first floor into two community strata lots ("CSL 1 and 2").[5] CSL 2 was further subdivided by Building Units Plan 106957[6] into common property and individual lots. Registration of this building units plan also created a new body corporate, The Proprietors "Cathedral Village" Building Units Plan No 106957 ("Cathedral Village BC"). The individual lots were sold. They are used for a range of retail and other commercial purposes.

[6] CSL 1 and CDL 1, 3 and 15 were also subdivided by registration of separate building units plans. Each plan was referrable to a separate residential precinct within the overall development. Each created by registration its own body corporate, common property, and lots which were sold. Through this process CPD ceased to have an interest in the real property comprised in the project.

[7] Each of the bodies corporate created by registration of a building units plan became a member of Cathedral Place CBC in place of CPD. Thus, in respect of membership of the owner of CPL 4, whereas CPD had initially been the sole member of Cathedral Place CBC, once the subdivisions had been implemented, the members of that body corporate had become the respective bodies corporate created upon registration of the building units plans; and CPD had ceased to be a member of it.[7]

[8] CPL 4 is part of a car park floor, B1. The car park on this floor is comprised of CPL 4 and other areas, each one of which is common property for a building units plan, and some of which are contiguous with CPL 4. The common property for the Cathedral Village building units plan is itself used for four car parks on this level. There is a lower level car park floor, B2, where it has common property which is used for two additional car parks.

[9] An arrangement of easements affords access for CPL 4 to and from Gotha Street via a boom gate entry. This entry point provides access to an area on the floor which is comprised of part of CPL 4 and common property for three of the building units plans, including the Cathedral Village building units plan. The other two are the Oxford and Cambridge building units plan and the Notre Dame building units plan. This area is separated from the other car parking areas on the floor partly by a fence and partly by bollards and chains. The other areas have their own boom gate entry point.

[10] Two of the easements are of some relevance to these proceedings. They are registered Easements R and S. Both are within the separate car park area and are given over part of the common property of the “Notre Dame” building units plan. The dominant tenement for each is CPL 4. The easements are granted for the purpose in clause 3 of the Schedule to the registered instrument. The purpose of each easement is stated in clause 3 to be “of a right of way”.

The current dispute

[11] Ownership of a lot in the Cathedral Village building units plan does not confer on the owner a right to use any of the car parks. However, as those lots were marketed by the developer, representations were made to purchasers that they would have unallocated car spaces available to them on the car parking floors in a number proportionate to the area of the commercial units purchased. Moreover, in contractual documents entered into between CPD and purchasers of the lots, the company agreed to procure the benefit of at least 55 car parks to Cathedral Village BC “by either exclusive use easement or other mechanism at the Seller’s discretion”.[8]

[12] The mechanism which CPD chose for its intended purpose for fulfilling its contractual obligation was to cause Cathedral Place CBC to make a by-law in November 2000. This by-law, By-Law 28, was additional to some 27 by-laws that had already been adopted by the body corporate. It conferred an entitlement on “the Proprietors ‘Cathedral Village’ 106959 and any person authorised by them” to use CPL 4. The text of this by-law and the circumstances in which it was made are detailed later in these reasons.

[13] At an extraordinary general meeting of Cathedral Place CBC held in June 2001, it was resolved that up to $65,000 be expended by it for the installation of a boom gate and ticket dispenser. This resolution facilitated the installation of the boom gate entry point to which reference has been made. From about July 2000, Cathedral Place CBC and Cathedral Village BC acted as if they had, about that time, agreed that the latter would reimburse to the former the cost of the installation of those facilities, manage and maintain the car park at its own cost and risk, and receive the income from parking tickets issued to users.

[14] The immediate source of the current dispute is that on 28 June 2010, a comprehensive resolution (“2010 resolution”) was passed at an extraordinary general meeting of Cathedral Place CBC which purported to “delete” By-Law 28. By this date, of course, CPD had ceased to be a member of the body corporate. Each of the six body corporate members of Cathedral Place CBC was represented at the meeting. Five of them voted in favour of it. The representative for Cathedral Village BC voted against it.[9]

[15] There is no issue that this resolution was made in compliance with the provisions in the MUD Act for making community property by-laws by comprehensive resolution. Subject to compliance with other provisions relating to amendment and repeal of certain types of by-laws referred to later the resolution will have had the legal effect of rescinding the entitlement conferred by By-Law 28 on the proprietors of lots in the Cathedral Village building units plan and those authorised by them to use CPL 4. Those owners are aggrieved by the potential loss of convenient car parking facilities which they, their employees, clients and customers and suppliers, have enjoyed under the by-law since this commercial precinct in the development was ready for occupation.

The proceedings

[16] On 19 August 2010, proceedings with respect to the 2010 resolution were commenced in the Supreme Court by Cathedral Village BC in its capacity as a member of Cathedral Place CBC. During the course of the proceedings, all owners of lots in the Cathedral Village building units plan joined as plaintiffs. The defendants were Cathedral Place CBC and the two other body corporate members of Cathedral Place CBC whose common property is within the separate area of the car park which includes CPL 4. The relief sought by the plaintiffs consisted of an injunction to restrain implementation of the resolution and a declaration against its validity. The plaintiffs, other than Cathedral Village BC, also sought grant of a statutory right of user of CPL 4 pursuant to the provisions of s 180 of the Property Law Act 1974 (“PL Act”), in the alternative.

[17] The plaintiffs’ attack on the validity of the 2010 resolution was centred upon the operation of certain provisions in Division 1 of Part 10 of the MUD Act which are concerned with community property by-laws. Separate arguments that registration of By-Law 28 had created an indefeasible registered interest in favour of Cathedral Village BC in CPL 4 and, alternatively, that Cathedral Village BC had acquired an irrevocable proprietary interest in CPL 4 on equitable principles, were also advanced to impugn the validity or effectiveness of the resolution.

[18] The proceedings were tried during 2012. Reasons for judgment were delivered on 5 October that year. After further submissions on the form of orders and costs had been made, the learned trial judge made orders on 26 October 2012. All of the plaintiffs' claims were dismissed with costs. The court also made a series of declarations as had been sought by the defendants by way of counterclaim, the import of which is to affirm that By-Law 28 has been validly revoked.

The appeal

[19] On 14 November 2012, the plaintiffs filed a notice of appeal by which they have appealed against the orders and declarations. The respondent defendants filed a notice of contention on 3 December 2012. In summary, it advances a number of additional grounds for denying By-Law 28 the continuing efficacy that the appellant plaintiffs seek to attribute to it.

[20] Whilst the stated grounds of appeal and the written submissions canvass the range of issues considered at trial, at the hearing counsel for the appellants addressed two categories of them only, namely, those relating to the characterisation of By-Law 28 for the purposes of the common property by-laws provisions in the MUD Act of which mention has been made, and that relating to the s 180 issue.

[21] It is appropriate at this point to detail By-Law 28 itself and the circumstances in which it was made.

By-Law 28

[22] By-Law 28 was made at a meeting of Cathedral Place CBC held on 29 November 2000. The evidence tendered at trial did not establish that a notice of meeting had been given for it. The minutes of the meeting[10] record that it was held at the office of Stewart Silver King & Burns (Brisbane) Pty Ltd at 10.30 am. Mr Bill Ritchie who signed the minutes as chairman, was present. He was an employee of CPD. He was also representative of each of the body corporate members of Cathedral Place CBC, including Cathedral Village BC. It was in his representative capacity he attended the meeting. Thus he was the only individual who participated in it.

[23] The business transacted at the meeting is recorded in the minutes as follows:

> "1. Minutes
>
> Resolved that the meeting of the Extraordinary General Meeting held on 20th March 2000 be confirmed as a true and correct record of the proceedings of that meeting.
>
> [140626]
>
> 2. Amendment to By-laws – Adopt New By-law 28
>
> Resolved by Comprehensive Resolution that the Body Corporate adopt a new by-law number 28 as set out below and that the Body Corporate's Solicitors be authorized to take all steps required to bring the by-law into effect.
>
> '28. Restricted Community By-law
>
> (a) Application of By-Law
>
> This By-law applies to the Visitor Carpark designated on the plan attached to this By-law ("Visitor Carpark"). Part of the Visitor Carpark is Community Common Property and part of the Visitor Carpark is Common Property for the subsidiary body corporate known as "Notre Dame". The by-law applies to the portion on the Visitor Carpark that is on Community Common Property.

The by-law is intended to apply to that portion of the Visitor Carpark that is Common Property for Notre Dame on registration of an easement from the proprietors Notre Dame BUP 106911 granting the benefit of that area to the Community Body Corporate for carparking purposes.
(b) Persons Entitled to Use

The persons entitled to use the Visitor Carpark are the Proprietors "Cathedral Village" 106957 and any person authorized by them, all of whom are individually and collectively referred to as "Authorised Persons".
(c) Conditions of Use

The Proprietors Cathedral Village BUP 106957 must ensure that the Visitor Carpark is used:-

(i) only for purposes ancillary to the Mixed Use Development of Cathedral Place;
(ii) in a manner that complies with the by-laws form (sic) time to time for the Cathedral Place Community Body Corporate.

(d) Maintenance

The Proprietors "Cathedral Village" BUP 106957 must maintain the Visitor Carpark in a state similar to the other carparking areas on the common property for the Cathedral Place Community Body Corporate."[11]

[24] This minute records that the resolution to adopt By-Law 28 was passed as a comprehensive resolution. In evidence, Mr Ritchie confirmed that it was passed as a comprehensive resolution.[12]

[25] On 11 December 2000, the solicitors for Cathedral Place CBC submitted the by-law for ministerial approval advising that the body corporate had "by comprehensive resolution made:

"1. Community Property By-Laws pursuant to Section 206 of the Mixed Use Development Act 1993."[13]

[26] The ministerial approval sought was that under s 206(2) of the MUD Act which provides that a community property by-law does not have effect until the Minister approves it and notification of the approval is published in the Gazette. The Minister duly approved By-Law 28 on 17 January 2001. The approval, in the following terms, was published in the Gazette on 8 March 2001:

"Approval of Amendments of Planning Schemes

3. The Minister approved on 17 January 2001, the Community Property by-law made by the Cathedral Place Community Body Corporate for the Cathedral Place Mixed Use Development Scheme under Section 206 of the said Act."[14]

[27] The registrar of titles was notified of the approval by the Minister.[15] It is common ground that details of By-Law 28 were recorded on the community plan and noted on the title of Cathedral Place CBC to CPL 4 in the register on 1 September 2003.[16] However, the recording on the register of the by-law, whether characterised as made under s 206 or s 206A, would not have conferred indefeasibility on the entitlement thereby granted to the grantee. As the learned trial judge observed,[17] s 184 of the Land Title Act 1994 confers indefeasibility on the registered proprietor of an interest in a lot. The entitlement to use ostensibly granted by the by-law was not a proprietary interest in land; nor was it registered on the title as such.

By-Law 28 refers to a plan attached to it which designates a "Visitor Carpark" area. It may be assumed for present purposes, as it was for the purposes of argument of the appeal, that the plan referred to in the minute, is the plan, a copy of which appears at p 1235 of the Appeal Record. On that plan, the designated area is hatched. It is the same area as is described at paragraph 9 of these reasons, as being the separate car park on level B1 which comprises part of CPL 4 and common property of three of the other bodies corporate. It is identified as "Visitor Carpark" on the plan.

[29] From paragraph (a) thereof, it appears that By-Law 28 was intended to apply to parts only of the Visitor Car park area, namely that part of CPL 4 as was within it and the common property for the Notre Dame building units plan. In the case of the latter, the by-law was to apply to it only upon the registration of an easement from the proprietors of the Notre Dame building units plan granting the benefit of that area to Cathedral Place CBC for car parking purposes.

[30] Had such an easement been registered, this litigation might have put in issue the lawfulness of the by-law in so far as it purported to apply to the common property of the Notre Dame building units plan. However, there is no evidentiary basis from which a finding could have been made that such an easement had ever been registered. Easements R and S, considered singularly, or together, do not answer that requirement. They apply to part only of the common property. Moreover, they are not expressed to be for "car parking purposes".

[31] Terminology used in By-Law 28 and the language in which the by-law is cast give rise to several interpretative issues. First, the expression "The Proprietors "Cathedral Village" 106957" is apt to describe collectively the lot owners in the Cathedral Village building units plan. Notwithstanding, the context in which it is used in the by-law in imposing conditions of use and a maintenance obligation suggests that the intended beneficiary of the by-law was the single corporate entity, Cathedral Village BC. Furthermore, despite that the entitlement conferred by the by-law is not expressed to be an exclusive one, it is open to inference from the conditions of use and the maintenance obligation that the by-law was intended to confer such an entitlement over the area to which it was to apply on the intended beneficiary and those authorised by it or them. However, having regard to the conclusions we have reached on the characterisation of By-Law 28, it is not necessary to resolve either of these two issues.

The characterisation of By-Law 28 grounds

[32] At all times material to these proceedings, s 206 in Division 1 of Part 10 of the MUD Act has authorised a community body corporate to make by-laws, for the "control, management, administration, use or enjoyment of the community property". It might do so by a comprehensive resolution: s 206(1). A comprehensive resolution is defined in s 3 of that Act to mean a resolution:

> "(a) that is passed at a properly convened meeting of the body corporate; and > (b) for which the members that vote in favour have not less than 75% of the voting entitlements recorded in its body corporate roll."

[33] Section 206A of the MUD Act relates to a particular type of by-law that might be made by a body corporate under s 206. It is a by-law that "restrict(s) the use of any part of the community property" in any one of some eight ways which are set out in s 206A(1). This type of by-law is called a restricted community property by-law. Such a by-law may only be made by resolution without dissent: s 206A(2). A resolution without dissent is defined in s 3 to mean a resolution:

> "(a) that is passed at a properly convened meeting of the body corporate or committee; and > (b) against which no vote is cast."

[34] By virtue of s 172(9) of the MUD Act, Part 2 of Schedule 2 to the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 ("BUGT Act") applies to meetings of a community body corporate (other than its first annual general meeting), and to voting at such meetings. Section 1(2A)(d) of Schedule 2 requires that notice of a general meeting be served and that it set forth the business of the meeting and, in respect of each motion to be considered, specify whether it requires "a resolution, special resolution, resolution without dissent or unanimous resolution". Significantly, s 14 thereof has at all relevant times provided:

> "A unanimous resolution, resolution without dissent or special resolution of a body corporate may not be amended or revoked except by a subsequent unanimous resolution, resolution without dissent or special resolution, as the case may be."

[35] It is quite clear that s 14 is to be read distributively. Thus, a resolution without dissent may be amended or revoked by a resolution without dissent only. The expression "resolution without dissent" is defined by s 7 of the BUGT Act in materially the same terms as the definition given for it by s 3 of the MUD Act.

[36] The issue of characterisation of By-Law 28 arises in this way. If (as the appellants contend) it was made as a restricted community property by-law under s 206A, then it need have been made by a resolution without dissent. As such, it could be revoked only by a resolution without dissent: s 14. It will be recalled that the 2010 resolution was passed as a comprehensive resolution. Although, on the evidence, it appears that the resolution to adopt By-Law 28 was neither proposed, nor passed, as a resolution without dissent, the appellants contend that it was, or was also, a resolution without dissent as defined in s 3. That follows, they submit, because no vote was cast against it. If By-Law 28 was validly made as a restricted community property by-law, then the 2010 resolution will have failed to revoke it.

[37] However, if (as the respondents contend) By-Law 28 was made under s 206 but not as a restricted community property by-law under s 206A, then the 2010 resolution will have been effective to revoke it. Part 2 of Schedule 2 does not contain any impediment to the revocation by a comprehensive resolution of a community property by-law made by comprehensive resolution.

[38] It is therefore necessary to decide how By-Law 28 is to be characterised. In that regard, particular attention needs to be paid to whether or not it was made by a resolution without dissent for the purposes of s 206A and s 14.

[39] It is critical to the appellants' contention that By-Law 28 is a restrictive community property by-law that it have been made by resolution without dissent as required by s 206A(2). We turn first to consider that matter. In our view, the conclusion reached on it is determinative of the issue whether the by-law was validly revoked or not.

[40] There is a substantial body of direct evidence that the motion to adopt By-Law 28 was passed as a comprehensive resolution. As noted, the minutes record that and Mr Ritchie's evidence corroborates it. Whether it was also passed as a resolution without dissent will depend upon the meaning that that expression has in s 206A(2).

[41] Section 3 of the MUD Act contains the definitions for "comprehensive resolution" and "resolution without dissent" to which reference has been made, and also a definition for the term "unanimous resolution". Part 2 of Schedule 2 requires any notice of a general meeting of a body corporate to set forth whether a motion to be carried requires a resolution, special resolution, a resolution without dissent or a unanimous resolution.[18] The motion may not be submitted at the general meeting unless notice of it has been given in accordance with the section.[19] Entitlement to vote may vary according to whether a motion is one that requires a unanimous resolution or not.[20] These provisions, together with the provisions in the MUD Act which require a specific type of resolution to carry a motion on specified topics - of which ss 206(1) and 206A(2) are examples, forcefully indicate that each of the definitions of a type of resolution in s 3 is intended to be read as applying only to a resolution that is duly notified and passed as a resolution of that type by the meeting. That is to say, for example, a resolution will be a resolution without dissent only if it is notified as requiring a resolution without dissent and is passed as such.

[42] Moreover, this interpretation would preclude the circumstance that the same resolution might be classified as a unanimous resolution, a resolution without dissent and also a comprehensive resolution. Given the extent to which both Acts distinguish between different types of resolutions, it is most unlikely that the possibility of that circumstance would have been intended.

[43] These features of Part 2 of Schedule 2 also indicate that when s 14 speaks of a type of resolution being capable of amendment or revocation by a resolution of that type only, it intends to refer to a resolution which has been notified and passed as such. Thus, whilst s 14 provides that a resolution that has been notified and passed as a resolution without dissent may be amended or revoked by a resolution without dissent only, that stricture does not apply to a resolution which is notified and passed as a comprehensive resolution even though it might have been passed at a meeting with no vote against it.

[44] The appellants have not identified any evidence which proves that By-Law 28 was notified as requiring a resolution without dissent or that the resolution to adopt it was passed as a resolution without dissent. To the contrary, the evidence indicates that the resolution to adopt it was passed as a comprehensive resolution. In these circumstances, this Court cannot conclude that the resolution to adopt By-Law 28 was effective to adopt it as a restricted community property by-law under s 206A nor can it conclude that a resolution without dissent was required by s 14 to revoke it. By-Law 28 was validly made as a community property by-law by a comprehensive resolution. The 2010 resolution was therefore effective to revoke it. The learned trial judge so concluded.[21] His Honour's conclusion is correct, in our view.

[45] A number of other arguments were advanced by the parties with respect to characterisation of the by-law. They focused upon whether or not it answered the statutory description of a s 206A restricted community property by-law. Although the fate of this issue does not depend upon success on the respondents' part on any of them, it is appropriate that they be noted and addressed briefly.

[46] At the time that By-Law 28 was made, s 206A(1) provided:

> "206A.(1) The community body corporate may make by-laws under section 206 that restrict the use of any part of the community property ("restricted community property") to —
>
> (a) a member of the community body corporate; or
> (b) a body corporate created by the registration of a building units or group titles plan; or
> (c) a proprietor of a lot created by the registration of a building units or group titles plan; or
> (d) a precinct body corporate; or
> (e) a member of a precinct body corporate; or
> (f) a proprietor of a lot created in a staged use precinct by the registration of a building units or group titles plan; or
> (g) a lessee or occupier of a lot within the site; or
> (h) someone else while the person is engaged in construction works in the site or in a future development area or subsequent stage."

[47] For the respondents, it was submitted that in a number of respects, By-Law 28 was not a by-law of a type that might be made under s 206A. First, it was argued that By-Law 28 was not restrictive of the use of common property to any category of persons listed in the section. The respondents relied on the absence from the by-law of any express conferment of an exclusive right of user, submitting that the heading to the by-law, "Restricted Community By-Law" did not, of itself, cloak the grant with a restriction against use by others.[22] However, as is noted at paragraph 31 of these reasons, other features of the by-law are capable of grounding an inference that the grant of an exclusive right of user was intended. This argument would avail the respondents only if that inference were not drawn.

[48] Secondly, in so far as the by-law purported to confer on persons authorised by the Proprietors "Cathedral Village" 106957 an entitlement to use the Visitor Car park, it would have conferred an entitlement on persons who did not fall within any of the eight categories listed in s 206A(1). It is accurate to say that none of those categories would accommodate as potentially broad a class of persons as those authorised by the Proprietors. There is merit in the respondents' submission that on this account, By-Law 28 could not have qualified as a restricted community property by-law.

[49] Thirdly, the respondents argued that it was improbable that the by-law was intended to give exclusive use to Cathedral Village BC since that would mean that individual lot owners in the Cathedral Village building units plan would have to secure authorisation from their own body corporate before being able to use the car park. This argument is unpersuasive. It was open to the lot owners as members of the body corporate to ensure the adoption by it of suitable arrangements for the use by them of the car park.

[50] The learned trial judge considered each of these arguments to be valid.[23] He observed that had he held that By-Law 28 was made under s 206A, he would have held it to be invalid as a restricted community property by-law on account of these arguments.[24] For these reasons given in the preceding three paragraphs, we agree with his Honour's conclusions with respect to the second of them but have reservations with respect to the first and third of them.

Section 180 ground

[51] In their further amended statement of claim, the plaintiffs, other than Cathedral Village BC, pleaded that "it is reasonably necessary in the interests of the effective use of the carpark" that they or the registered owners of the commercial lots from time to time should have "a statutory right of user in respect of the carpark in perpetuity, subject only to termination by (Cathedral Place CBC) pursuant to a resolution without dissent."[25] On the footing of that allegation, those plaintiffs sought to invoke the jurisdiction conferred on the Supreme Court by s 180 of the PL Act to impose a statutory right of user in those terms.

[52] The plaintiffs supported their claim to the right with evidence in the form of a draft By-Law 30.[26] Additional affidavit evidence indicated that were the statutory right granted, then Cathedral Place CBC would adopt the by-law. Its purpose would be to regulate the operation, control and maintenance of the Visitors Car Park. The area designated as the Visitors Car park on the plan in Annexure A to this draft by-law equates to the whole of the hatched area on the plan attached to By-Law 28 (referred to in paragraph 28 of these reasons) reduced by some nine car parks at the western end of it which would be made available for trade vehicles and a loading zone.

[53] Section 180 provides as follows:

> "(1) Where it is reasonably necessary in the interests of effective use in any reasonable manner of any land (the dominant land) that such land, or the owner for the time being of such land, should in respect of any other land (the servient land) have a statutory right of user in respect of that other land, the court may, on the application of the owner of the dominant land but subject to this section, impose upon the servient land, or upon the owner for the time being of such land, an obligation of user or an obligation to permit such user in accordance with that order.
> (2) A statutory right of user imposed under subsection (1) may take the form of an easement, licence or otherwise, and may be declared to be exercisable—
>
> > (a) by such persons, their servants and agents, in such number, and in such manner and subject to such conditions; and
> > (b) on 1 or more occasions; or
> > (c) until a date certain; or
> > (d) in perpetuity or for some fixed period;
>
> as may be specified in the order.
> (3) An order of the kind referred to in subsection (1) shall not be made unless the court is satisfied that—
>
> > (a) it is consistent with the public interest that the dominant land should be used in the manner proposed; and
> > (b) the owner of the servient land can be adequately recompensed in money for any loss or disadvantage which the owner may suffer from the imposition of the obligation; and
> > (c) either—
> >
> > > (i) the owner of the servient land has refused to agree to accept the imposition of such obligation and the owner's refusal is in all the circumstances unreasonable; or

(ii) no person can be found who possesses the necessary capacity to agree to accept the imposition of such obligation."

[54] It may be seen at once that the appellants' reference in their pleading to effective use of the car park was misplaced. The appropriate reference for the application of s 180 in this context, is effective use of the appellants' respective lots in Cathedral Village. The appellants' submissions on appeal adopted that reference.

[55] It is common ground that the principles summarised in Lang Parade Pty Ltd v Peluso[27] and restated by the learned trial judge[28] guide the determination of whether it is reasonably necessary in the interests of the effective use in any reasonable manner of the dominant land that it, or its owner from time to time, should have a statutory right of user in respect of the servient land. It is unnecessary to restate those principles here.

[56] His Honour accepted a number of submissions made by the respondents to the effect that reasonable necessity in terms of s 180(1) had not been established and that, in any event, the discretion conferred by the section ought not be exercised. He summarised those submissions and made observations with respect to the application of the provision as follows:

"[62] It is not a remedy apt to be applied to enforce the creation of a car park for the holders of units in a particular part of a development such as this over the community property of another body corporate in the same development for what appears to be a claim to permit the unit holders to park permanently. The defendants made a number of submissions which appear to me to be insuperable, namely:

(a) the section is not designed to assist in creating a licence or lease over land for exclusive car parking rights;
(b) the evidence does not establish that it is reasonably necessary for the effective use of the units that such a right be imposed over the car park, rather only some of the unit holders gave evidence that it was highly desirable for the businesses they ran from their units to have convenient car parking;
(c) as to that factual issue the defendants argued that the evidence of the existence of delivery bays on the property and a proposal by Cathedral Place CBC to pass a new by-law permitting deliveries within the car park to the units in Cathedral Village and creating additional delivery bays as well as the evidence of the availability of other commercial car parks nearby made the issue one not of reasonable necessity but simply convenience of the unit holders;
(d) no evidence established that it was consistent with the public interest[29] to use the car park in the manner proposed, as opposed to the interests of the individual unit owners;
(e) the development approval required the area to be used for patrons of the retail/commercial area and visitors of residents only, not for use by proprietors of units exclusively;
(f) no evidence was led to show that there had been an unreasonable refusal by Cathedral Place CBC to agree to accept the imposition of such an obligation pursuant to s 180(3)(c), having regard to the wish of that body to maintain access to the car park for other unit holders in it, the other bodies corporate and visitors;
(g) the imposition of the obligation would be inconsistent with the legislation governing the community property of Cathedral Place CBC and the common property of the other defendants by which those bodies corporate are obliged to manage their common or community property for the benefit of their members, rather than surrendering its control to the members of Cathedral Village.

[63] It also seemed to me to be inappropriate to use this remedy in this situation where the legislature has already created a complex statutory scheme for the regulation of bodies > corporate. Decisions dealing with car parking are are (sic) intended to be made pursuant to those relevant statutes and the > bodies corporate have been empowered to deal with community property in precisely regulated circumstances. For these reasons it would be quite inappropriate to use the remedy provided by s 180 in favour of those plaintiffs."

> [140632]

[57] We agree that it was correct for his Honour to refuse relief under this section. Some only, and well short of a majority, of the lot owners testified. The evidence of a number of them was somewhat diminished in cross-examination. However, at the highest, there was sufficient evidence to find in respect of two lot-owners[30] that concerning the uses with which they are associated, there is need for the provision of some parking in close proximity to their respective lots. At an evidentiary level, the plaintiffs concerned did fail to prove that it was reasonably necessary in the interests of effective use of the lots in the Cathedral Village building units plan, to impose a statutory right of user over as extensive an area as the Visitors Car park area in Annexure A to the draft by-law. The evidentiary failure on this account was sufficient in itself to justify refusal of the relief sought.

[58] However, we would not accept in totality all of the submissions made on behalf of the respondents listed by his Honour in paragraphs 62 of his reasons. We make the following observations in respect of those which we would accept in part or reject.

[59] The learned trial judge accepted a submission made on behalf of the respondents to the effect that the development approval required the area over which the appellants sought the imposition of a statutory right of user, to be available for use by patrons of the retail/commercial area and visitors and residents only; and not for use exclusively by proprietors of units.[31] That finding was relied upon by the respondents in the appeal. For the appellants it was submitted that inconsistency with the planning approval was not the subject of evidence; and that the effect of the finding was questionable. It was submitted by them that the right which they sought was consistent with condition 37 of the development approval[32] , with reliance being placed upon a letter from the Brisbane City Council dated 1 July 2010.[33]

[60] The draft By-Law 30 demonstrates an intention to comply with the requirements of the development approval. It also makes clear that part of the area in respect of which the relief was sought was to be made available to visitors. However, under it, another part of the same area is to be "allocated" for the benefit of the occupiers of lots, including lots in the Cathedral Village building units plan.[34] The evidence led in support of the application under s 180 demonstrated an intent, in a number of cases, that those who conducted businesses in Cathedral Village would have exclusive use of at least some of the car parks.

[61] Condition 37 of the development approval[35] required that this area not be used as a public car park for purposes other than ancillary to the approved development and that notices be displayed stating that the public parking area "is for patrons of the retail/commercial area and visitors of residents only". It was not submitted on the appeal that condition 37 was ineffective or that the public parking area to which it refers was not the area in respect of which relief was sought under s 180.

[62] The language of condition 37 is not without its difficulties. However, it appears to be drawn on the basis that the designated area would be used as a public car park and to require that area to be used only for purposes ancillary to the development the subject of the development approval. It then specifies how the area was to be so used by requiring notices limiting the use of the car park to patrons of the retail/commercial area and visitors of residents only.

[63] Non-compliance with condition 37 would have risked contravention initially of s 3.5.28 of the Integrated Planning Act 1997 and later of s 245 of the Sustainable Planning Act 2009.[36] Thus, to the extent that the draft By-Law 30 would permit the exclusive use of some of the parking by the occupants of lots in the Cathedral Village building units plan, we would accept the submission of the respondents and uphold the finding of the learned trial judge.

[64] It need be said that the reliance by the appellants on the letter of the Brisbane City Council dated 1 July 2010 is misplaced. The effect of a condition of a development approval is a matter to be determined by a court and not by an officer of a local government. In any event, the letter indicates that the exclusive use by owners or tenants of those commercial lots is inconsistent with the condition.

[65] Next the respondents' submission that s 180 is not designed to assist in creating a licence or lease over land for exclusive car parking rights cannot be accepted. The section is a remedial statutory provision intended to confer on a court a discretion by which a right might be granted to enable the effective use of land in a reasonable manner. Conditions which must be established to enliven the discretion and the circumstances of which the court must be satisfied before exercising it are expressly identified in the section. Sub-section (2) indicates that the right which might be granted is not limited to interests in land or rights in relation to land according to the doctrines and principles of the general law. There does not appear to be anything within the section which would justify the conclusion that the imposition of an exclusive right to use land for car parking is beyond its intended scope.

[66] The respondents' additional submission that the imposition of a statutory right of user would be inconsistent with the scheme of regulation found in the BUGT Act does not withstand scrutiny. That Act is intended to enable the subdivision of land in such a way that owners of lots thereby created would have rights in common in respect of some of the land. It was necessary for that Act to include provisions about the regulation and alteration of such rights. That circumstance does not, however, lead to a conclusion that relief under s 180 is not available over land subdivided under the BUGT Act. Indeed, it is not difficult to conceive (particularly in a group title development) of a situation where the effective use of one lot in a reasonable manner would necessitate some right over another lot in the development. Moreover, since relief under s 180 is available in respect of land in which the applicant has no interest, the provision has a potential scope for operation in circumstances which might not be capable of being adequately catered for by rights created under the BUGT Act. These considerations militate against a conclusion that such relief is not available in respect of common property.

[67] It might also be observed that the conclusion of the learned trial judge about the availability of such relief in respect of land which has been subdivided under the BUGT Act would seem to be applicable only in respect of that part of the car park as is within CPL 4. Whilst they do own lots in the Cathedral Village units plan, the appellants concerned have no relationship with the Oxford and Cambridge or Notre Dame building units plans which might be capable of being regulated under the BUGT Act. It is therefore difficult to infer that the BUGT Act was intended to prevent relief being granted to them over common property of a building unit development in which they have no interest.

[68] It is also of some significance that at the time when s 180 was enacted, there were already in force in Queensland two other Acts providing for the creation, and regulation of the use, of common property.[37] Neither of those statutes was referred to in s 180 as exceptions from its purview.

Other issues

[69] Two other issues warrant brief mention. One arises in the appellant's case; the other from the notice of contention.

[70] In the alternative to a right under By-Law 28, the appellants claim to have an equitable interest in the car park relying on the doctrine of proprietary estoppel. This claim was rejected by the learned trial judge.[38] His Honour was not satisfied that expenditure of money on the car park by Cathedral Village BC was made on the understanding, express or implied, that it or the other appellants would thereby acquire a proprietary interest in the car park. He also considered it relevant that, as he found, the money which that entity had expended on the car park had been recouped by it from the parking fees. The appellants have not shown that his Honour erred in making either of these findings with respect to fact.

[71] In so far as the appellants have, in this context, sought to rely on contractual promises made by the developer, CPD, they are unavailing because:

(a) they were not made to Cathedral Village BC, the only appellant entity to have expended money on the car park;

[140634]

(b) the promisor was the developer and not Cathedral Place CBC or any other respondent; and

(c) the promise was not that the buyer of a lot would acquire a proprietary interest in the car park.

The claim to an equitable interest or interests in the car park was rightly rejected.

[72] The respondents also sought to impugn By-Law 28 as a fraud on the power of Cathedral Pace CBC to make a by-law. It was argued that the power had been exercised for the sole purpose of fulfilling CPD's contractual obligations to purchasers of lots in Cathedral Village and that, on that account, it was exercised improperly. This argument had been advanced at trial. The learned trial judge considered it[39] but declined to determine whether the licence which, in his view, By-Law 28 had created in favour of Cathedral Village, had been created by a fraudulent exercise of power. His Honour considered that it was unnecessary for him to make the determination given that he had already determined that By-Law 28 had been validly revoked.

[73] For similar reasons, we consider it unnecessary to decide that issue in this appeal. It is unnecessary for the respondents to rely on the argument to sustain the judgment at first instance in their favour.

Disposition

[74] For these reasons, we conclude that this appeal fails and that the appropriate order is that it be dismissed.

Orders

[75] We would propose the following orders:

1. Appeal dismissed.
2. Subject to any submissions on costs made in writing within seven days of today, the appellants pay the respondents' costs of and incidental to the appeal.

(2013) LQCS ¶90-190; Court citation: [2013] QCA 354

Supreme Court of Queensland — Court of Appeal

Decision delivered on 29 November 2013

Community schemes — Caretaking and letting agreement — Where the parties entered into a caretaking and letting agreement for the appellant to manage a unit complex — Where appellant allowed its real estate licence to lapse and was thus in breach of the letting agreement — Whether the implied duty to cooperate compelled the respondent to assist the appellant in seeking a new licence — Whether the duty to cooperate was a continuing obligation — Whether body corporate was responsible for the ultra vires act of its committee — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, s 92.

The appellant caretaker entered into a caretaking and letting agreement with the respondent body corporate in respect of a unit complex situated in Queensland. The caretaker held a restricted real estate licence as letting agent for the body corporate. The licence lapsed as a result of the caretaker not renewing it; however, the caretaker continued to act as a letting agent and was thus acting unlawfully and contrary to the provisions of the agreement. The body corporate was of the opinion that the agreement was no longer valid as a result of the breaches.

The caretaker applied to the Office of Fair Trading to renew the restricted real estate licence so as to continue as letting agent. However, the body corporate refused to provide a supporting letter to confirm that the agreement remained on foot. The body corporate committee subsequently issued a termination notice without general meeting authority to do so. The caretaker asserted that this amounted to a repudiation of the agreement by the body corporate and resulted in the caretaker losing commissions.

The issues to be decided on appeal included whether:

- the body corporate had breached the implied duty to cooperate to do what was necessary on its part to enable the caretaker to have the benefit of the contract. The caretaker asserted that the body corporate had a duty to assist it with its licence renewal application
- the requirement to cooperate was a continuing obligation or was limited to the outset of the contract
- unauthorised conduct of the body corporate committee (repudiating the agreement) should be treated as behaviour of the body corporate.

Held: for the respondent body corporate. Appeal dismissed.

1. Even though the court "will readily imply a term in any contract that the parties shall co-operate to ensure the performance of their bargain", a party is not required to "abandon looking after its own interests in relation to the contract at least in the sense of not pursuing, if such a remedy is available, the right to terminate the contract for failure on the part of the other party to comply with its obligations under it" as per Rolfe J in National Power Australia LLC v Energy Australia [1998] NSWSC 466.

There was no breach by the body corporate for failing to assist the caretaker with its application for licence renewal. The Office of Fair Trading needed "unfettered documentary evidence" of the body corporate's approval of the agreement. Given the body corporate's attitude to the caretaker's breaches of the agreement, such an approval was not forthcoming nor should it have been required to provide it.

2. While the body corporate would have been required to cooperate to ensure the caretaker secured a licence at the commencement of the agreement in order to give business efficacy to the contract, there was no positive obligation on the body corporate to cooperate with the caretaker's attempts to procure the licence in circumstances where the caretaker had allowed the licence to lapse and had been operating unlawfully and in breach of the agreement.

3. Section 92 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 made it clear that the committee had no actual or implied authority to determine the agreement. However, the conduct of the committee could not be treated as conduct of the body corporate in circumstances where there had been no attempt at delegation by the body corporate. The consequences of the committee's unauthorised behaviour should not be sheeted home to the body corporate so as to make it liable for damages for the caretaker's lost commissions.

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

D L Savage QC, with L Stephens (instructed by Alexander Law) for the appellant.

C L Francis (instructed by Hynes Legal) for the respondent.

Before: Chief Justice, Fraser JA and Douglas J.

Chief Justice: I have had the advantage of reading the reasons for judgment of Douglas J. I agree with the orders proposed by his Honour, and with his reasons.

Fraser JA: I have had the advantage of reading the reasons for judgment of Douglas J. I agree with those reasons and with the orders proposed by his Honour.

Douglas J: There are three issues raised by this appeal and cross-appeal. They stem from an agreement between the appellant and the respondent where the appellant had been the manager and caretaker for the unit development associated with the respondent body corporate. That relationship came to an end in disputed circumstances.

[4] The issues are:

> 1. Whether there had been a breach by the respondent of its implied duty to cooperate in doing what was necessary on its part to enable the appellant to have the benefit of the agreement;
>
> [140637]
> 2. Whether the respondent was liable in damages for commissions lost by the appellant and the loss of value of its business when it stopped acting as the respondent's agent;
> 3. Whether unauthorised conduct of the respondent's committee should be treated as behaviour of the respondent repudiating the agreement with the appellant.

[5] The bulk of the appellant's claim was dismissed by the learned trial judge on the basis that the respondent had not breached any implied duty to cooperate in assisting the appellant to obtain a new licence to act as a real estate agent. The appellant had allowed the licence it held when it first acted as a letting agent for unit holders in the respondent to lapse. His Honour found, clearly correctly in my view, that the implied duty to cooperate did not require the respondent to assist the appellant to obtain a new licence where it had itself previously breached clauses of its caretaking and management agreement requiring it to obtain licences needed to enable it to conduct the business of letting units in accordance with the relevant statutes and subordinate legislation.[1]

[6] Nor did his Honour accept that the appellant had proved the claimed loss of commissions in the amount of $270,349.

[7] Those two aspects of his Honour's decision were challenged by the appellant. For reasons I shall develop it is my view that the appeal should fail.

[8] The third issue was raised by the argument on the respondent's cross-appeal that actions of the committee of a body corporate which were not authorised should not be attributed to the body corporate so as to amount to evidence that it had repudiated a contract. The cross-appeal by the respondent against his Honour's conclusion that it was liable to the appellant for lost management fees totalling $37,632.53 arising from its committee's unauthorised act should succeed.

The facts

[9] The management agreement between the parties was entered into in February 1998 and included the following clauses:

> "8.1.5 The Manager shall obtain all permits, consents or licences required by any local or other lawful authority to enable the Manager to conduct on the Parcel the business of letting the Units or provide any other services as may be mentioned in this Agreement.
> 8.1.6 The Manager shall conduct such business in accordance with all statutes, regulations, by-laws or ordinances in any way relating to such business …
> 10. This Agreement may be terminated by the Body Corporate by notice in writing to the Manager in any of the following events:
> > 10.1.2 If the Manager shall fail or neglect to carry out the duties of the Manager pursuant to this Agreement and such failure or neglect shall continue for a further period of fourteen (14) days after notice in writing shall have been given to the Manager specifying the duty which the Manager has failed or neglected to carry out and calling upon the Manager to perform such duty.

10.1.3 If the Manager shall be guilty of gross misconduct or gross negligence in the performance of the duties of the Manager hereunder."

[10] The facts surrounding the dispute that developed between the parties were helpfully and uncontroversially summarised by his Honour as follows:[2]

> "[20] At or soon after the commencement of the agreement the plaintiff and Mrs McEvoy acquired restricted real estate agent licences from the licensing authority, which at that stage was the Auctioneers and Agents Committee (AAC). This was a requirement, under s 18 of the Auctioneers and Agents Act 1971 (Qld), of acting as a real estate agent, the definition of which includes a letting agent.
> [21] The licences, apparently only current for a year, expired on 9 June 1999, no renewal applications having been made. The plaintiff continued to act as a letting agent > and was thus acting unlawfully and contrary to cl 8.1.5 and cl 8.1.6 of the letting agreement.
> [140638]
> [22] Charges of acting as an unlicensed real estate agent were laid against the plaintiff and Mrs McEvoy and they were found guilty and fined on 18 June 2001 in the Mossman Magistrates Court. Between being charged and dealt with, the plaintiff and Mrs McEvoy lodged new licence applications, on 21 May 2001.
> [23] Subsequently, on 27 June 2001, the AAC requested the plaintiff provide evidence of the body corporate approval to conduct the letting business. This request was required to assess the applications under the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 (Qld) ('PAMDA'), which was to come into effect on 1 July 2001.
> [24] The defendant's manager, Mr Dan Moy, faxed a signed copy of the agreement to the Licensing Section (PAMDA) of the Office of Fair Trading, which was previously the AAC, on 3 August [2001].
> [25] On 6 August 2001, Mr Ross Hurst, now deceased, the then chairman of the defendant, allegedly telephoned the Office of Fair Trading and spoke to Ms Gwen Pusztay, an officer of the Licensing Section. Ms Pusztay's file note of 16 August 2001 recorded that:
>
> > 'I received a telephone call from the chairman of the body corporate on 6/8/01, advising that the body corporate considers that the above agreement is not now current or valid in consideration of the fact that the above clauses were breached, and ~~was~~ is in the process of taking further legal advice. I asked him to provide something to me in writing in relation to the matter, however I have not yet received anything.'
>
> The breached clauses there referred to were cl 8.1.5 and cl 8.1.6, which relate to obtaining licences and conducting the business in accordance with all statutes and regulations.
> [26] A further file note made 20 August [2001] records:
>
> > 'Mr Hurst (body corporate chairman) telephoned today (20/8/01), and advised that there will be a body corporate meeting tomorrow night which will consider legal advice obtained. The advice was that Famestock Pty Ltd had breached the agreement by not ensuring it remained licensed, and therefore the agreement was no longer valid.
> >
> > The meeting will (he said) vote not to approve Famestock Pty Ltd as the letting agent.
> >
> > He will advise me in writing after the meeting.'
>
> [27] On 31 August 2001, Ms Pusztay made an internal request for legal advice as to whether the agreement was at an end. The advice was received on 26 September 2001, the recommendation being that:
>
> > '… the applications received from Famestock Pty Ltd and McEvoy for restricted letting agent's licences not be decided until such time as there is clarity as to (a) whether the agreement granting letting approval has been terminated, and (b) whether any other form of letting approval has been given by the body corporate.

> Should Famestock Pty Ltd and McEvoy require their application to be determined, the Office of Fair Trading should decide the matter according to the provisions of the Act. As such, and in the absence of any advice from the body corporate that the agreement has been terminated, it appears that the licences should be granted. If the agreement is later terminated, and if no other letting approval is given by the body corporate, action could be taken to revoke the licences.'

[28] On 4 October 2001, Ms Pusztay made a handwritten note that she had:

> 'Asked Mr Hurst (B/C) to advise in writing that they have applied to the BCCM adjudicator for a ruling re the agreement. Also asked him to advise outcome.'

[140639]

[29] Mr Moy provided such confirmation on 5 October 2001.

[30] In a letter dated 8 October 2001, sent by facsimile the following day, Ms Pusztay, signing on behalf of the Office of Fair Trading, informed the chairman of the defendant that:

> 'It is understood that the caretaking and letting agreement dated 12 February 1998 between the body corporate and Famestock Pty Ltd is the subject of Body Corporate and Community Management adjudication as to its validity. That being the case, the Chief Executive would be unable to be satisfied that this agreement constitutes the required body corporate approval.
> If the body corporate wishes to give approval to Famestock Pty Ltd to carry on the letting business at No 9 Port Douglas Road, in order for the licences to be considered by the Chief Executive, it would need to provide unfettered documentary evidence of that approval.'

[31] On 19 October the defendant served two default notices on the plaintiff pursuant to c1 10.1.5. The first notice alleged a breach of cl 8.1.5 on the basis that the plaintiff did not hold a letting agent's licence. The second notice alleged a breach of special condition 2 of the agreement. The notices, in accordance with cl 10.1.5 required the plaintiff to remedy the breaches within 14 days.

[32] On 26 October 2001, the plaintiff gave notice to the owners of all units for which it acted as letting agent that it would cease letting their units from that day.

[33] Mr McEvoy, acting on behalf of the plaintiff, gave notice to Mr Hurst on 14 December 2001 that the plaintiff would cease acting as the letting agent for the unit holders.

[34] Between 21 and 28 December 2001 the owners of seven units, namely units four, five, seven, 10, 13, 14 and 17, gave notice to the plaintiff withdrawing its authority to let their units. The notices from each of the unit owners used language which in some paragraphs was strikingly similar. The irresistible inference is that there had been some sharing of common written information between them or with them by someone such as Mr Hurst. The writers called to give evidence refused to accept that they acted in concert however it is at least likely they were acting with knowledge of their mutual intentions. The plaintiff submits their evidence on this aspect lacked candour and that there was obviously some sharing of written information. However even if, as seems likely, those witnesses were knowingly acting with mutual intent there is nothing wrong with that. Clause 8.2 of the Letting Agreement expressly acknowledged the owners of lots were free to elect to use another letting agent. That is, they had the right to withdraw their authority to let, regardless of whether they did so with knowledge others were doing likewise or in similar terms as others.

[35] In addition, it seems the owners wanted to withdraw their authority for a number of reasons. They had concerns about the manner in which the advertising account was being run, the fact that the plaintiff was falling behind on its payments to TransMetro and the frequency of errors in their accounts. Apparently some owners also thought that it would be preferable to have a steady income from a permanent tenant. The other obvious reason why some owners withdrew their authority was that they had discovered that the plaintiff had been operating without a licence for some two years.

[36] Despite the withdrawals of authority, it appears that the plaintiff let out some units in January 2002, in particular units four, five, 10 and 13, and, it is alleged, retained the entirety of the proceeds from those rentals. In January 2002, the proprietors of units 10 and 14 discovered this, prompting the proprietor of unit 10 to make a complaint to the Office of Fair Trading.
[37] The defendant then purported to terminate the management agreement by various notices of termination dated 7 February 2002. That date precedes the committee meeting at which it was formally resolved to terminate, which was on 11

February 2002. This is explained by the fact that votes were actually submitted in writing prior to the meeting. The five members had all voted on or before 7 February.
[38] In total there were eight notices of termination. Each purported to terminate pursuant to a different ground. Three related to the failure to obtain the licence. One related to reg 84(e) of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 1997, another to c1 10.1.3 and the other on the basis that it was a fundamental breach of c1 8.1.5.
[39] There were also two notices of termination relating to an alleged failure to maintain and or audit trust account records as required by law. These termination notices were made pursuant to reg 84(c) and c1 10.1.3.
[40] Another notice terminated on the basis that the alleged breach of special condition 2 represented a fundamental breach of the contract. The remaining two notices were issued pursuant to c1 10.1.2 for the failure to remedy the breaches as contained in the October 2001 default notices.
[41] I have already found the committee of the defendant was not entitled to terminate the plaintiff's caretaking and letting agreement, that being a matter requiring the authority of a general meeting of the defendant.
[42] On 23 January 2002, Ms Pusztay made a handwritten file note recording:

> 'If B/C approval is provided, we will be looking for A/R up to time they stopped letting + possible police investigation, refer Gwen before proceeding.'

[43] Another handwritten note dated 12 February 2002 states:

> 'Rang Chair of B/C - Ross Hurst … Famestock was apparently served with 10 termination notices on 8.2.02.
>
> Will send copies to this office.
>
> Would seem agreement is at an end and licence applications should be refused.
>
> However, await notices and then determine.'

[44] The Office of Fair Trading received the notices of termination on 22 February 2002.
[45] A few days later, on 25 February 2002 the application for licences made by the plaintiff and Mrs McEvoy were refused. The applications were refused on the basis that the eligibility requirements, namely the requirement that Mrs McEvoy have body corporate approval to carry on a business of letting lots in the building complex and for the plaintiffs application that the corporation had body corporate approval and that a director of the corporation was a restricted letting agent were not met under s 35(1) of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000. The plaintiff was informed of this decision in a letter dated 7 March 2002.
[46] The plaintiff applied to an adjudicator for an order that the termination of the agreement was void. Ultimately, that application was dismissed on 29 May 2001 under s 201 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) on the basis that it should be dealt with in a court of competent jurisdiction.
[47] At an Extraordinary General Meeting of the defendant held on 22 August 2002 the McEvoys and associated entities exercised their lot entitlements to pass a series of resolutions, including for the removal of the current committee and chairperson.
[48] With Mr McEvoy as chairman of the committee, the plaintiff entered into new caretaking and letting agreements with the defendant in May 2003.

[49] The plaintiff did not resume letting the units but instead sold the letting and management rights to a third party in November 2004. The plaintiff claims that the letting pool at that time comprised nine units."

Implied duty to cooperate

[11] The appellant's argument that the respondent failed to perform its implied duty to cooperate to do what was necessary on its part to enable the appellant to have the benefit of the contract[3] focussed on the failure of the respondent through its then chairman, Mr Hurst, to inform the Office of Fair Trading in late 2001 that the agreement between the appellant and the respondent was still in existence. His Honour's conclusion on that factual issue was as follows:[4]

"[64] The evidence suggests there was communication occurring between Mr McEvoy and Mr Hurst about a potential letter to the Office of Fair Trading in October but not in the terms pleaded.
[65] In cross-examination the following exchange occurred:

'MR RYALL: Now - excuse me. Mr McEvoy, you had discussions with Mr Hurst during October about trying to reach some agreement? -- Yes.

And the idea of those discussions was that some accommodation be made between the body corporate and Famestock to allow Famestock to continue as caretaker and letting agent until it could sell its business to someone else?-- That's correct.

At 19 October or so of 2001, Mr Hurst indicated to you that he was prepared to send a letter to the Office of Fair Trading, I think it was at that stage, to say that the agreement was on foot. Do you remember that?-- It was a - yes, I do.

And that was followed by a letter, which I'll show you now and see if you recall? -- Yes.

Yes. So, that's a letter to you from Mr Hurst on-----?-- Yes.

And he signed it as the chairperson of the body corporate?-- Yes, he did.

And he says there that he thought there was an agreement reached on Friday the 19th of October between you and he?-- Yes.

That wasn't right, though, was it; you had a different proposal to put?-- There were discrepancies, yes.'

[66] The letter there referred to, of 26 October 2001 demonstrates that during the week prior there had obviously been discussions between Mr McEvoy and Mr Hurst working towards the plaintiff selling its management rights in an orderly manner. The letter explained an interim arrangement was agreed but later reneged on by Mr McEvoy:

'I am in receipt of your facsimile of 23 October. The contents of that letter are not acceptable to the Body Corporate committee.

The agreement which I believed I had reached with you and which you confirmed to me as late as in our telephone conversation of Friday, 19 October was as follows.

3. The Body Corporate would advise the Office of Fair Trading that although it regarded you as being in breech [sic] of the letting agreement it was prepared not to take any action for a period of three (3) months.
4. As a consequence of 3 the Office of Fair Trading would issue you with the appropriate licence for the limited period.

Your letter under reply indicates that you won't pursue this limited license [sic] and will accordingly not perform your obligations under the letting agreement.

It must be obvious to you that your response is not acceptable to the Body Corporate committee.'

[67] In the light of this evidence I would not have accepted that the request occurred as and when pleaded even if Mr McEvoy's evidence had been that such a request occurred on 22 October. At that stage any request for a letter would obviously have related to a heavily qualified communication of the kind contemplated in numbered para 3 of the above quoted letter of 26 October 2001.

[68] It is unsurprising that whether requested to or not the defendant did not provide a letter saying the agreement was still in existence in circumstances where the plaintiff had long been in breach of cl 8.1.5 and cl 8.1.6 of the letting agreement by operating unlicensed."

The argument was that his Honour erred in those findings on the basis that he should have found that the respondent's breach was its failure to tell the Office of Fair Trading that the agreement was on foot when the implied duty to cooperate required it to say that. There was no evidence, however, as to what the attitude of the chief executive of the Office of Fair Trading would have been had the Office been told, for example, that the agreement was still on foot whether or not the parties were in dispute about it. One suspects that it may have treated such information as material to its decision but not determinative. The letter of 8 October 2001 set out at para [30] of the learned trial judge's decision referred to earlier makes it clear that the chief executive of the Office needed "unfettered documentary evidence" of the respondent's approval of the agreement. Given the body corporate's attitude to the breaches by the appellant such an approval was not forthcoming nor should it have been required to provide it.

[13] Therefore his Honour's conclusion that it was unsurprising that the respondent did not provide a letter, whether requested to or not, saying the agreement was still in existence, in the circumstances where the appellant was in breach of the agreement, is clearly correct. As Rolfe J said in the Supreme Court of New South Wales in National Power Australia LLC v Energy Australia:[5]

"The Court will readily imply a term in any contract that the parties shall co-operate to ensure the performance of their bargain. The degree of co-operation required, however, is to be determined, not by what is reasonable, but by the obligations imposed - whether expressly or impliedly - upon each party by the agreement itself. If one party is in breach of its duty to co-operate, so that performance of the contract cannot be effected, the other will be entitled to treat itself as discharged.

Similarly, if an agreement is entered into which can only take effect by the continuance of a certain existing state of circumstances, each party is under an implied obligation to do nothing of its own motion to put an end to that state of affairs, under which alone the agreement can become operative.

As I understand it, it has never been suggested that these well recognised obligations go to the extent of requiring a party to, in effect, abandon looking after its own interests in relation to the contract at least in the sense of not pursuing, if such a remedy is available, the right to terminate the contract for failure on the part of the other party to comply with its obligations under it. Nor, as I would understand it, is there any obligation on a party not to pursue any available remedies it may have under the contract by virtue of the breach of the other party. In the present case, of course, there is a positive obligation on the defendant to provide reasonable assistance."

[14] This approach also puts paid to another argument of the appellant, that the learned trial judge erroneously decided that the duty to cooperate was limited to the outset of the contract and was not a continuing obligation. What his Honour actually said was:[6]

"[78] The plaintiff submitted the implied term was 'to allow one to apply to renew or to keep one's licence during the term' and 'to keep people licensed'. The argument's premise seems to be that this was a situation where the plaintiff was seeking to renew or keep its licence. Under the duty to co-operate such a situation may have called for the defendant to do what was reasonably necessary to enable the plaintiff to have the benefit of the agreement by ensuring its existing licensed status did not lapse. But that was not the situation here. This was not an instance of an existing licence coming up for renewal. The plaintiff had no licence to renew. The reality was that the defendant had not held a licence for over two years in breach of the letting agreement.

[79] The defendant conceded that the implied term would have required it to co-operate in the plaintiff's securing of a licence at the commencement of the agreement had it been necessary. That much may have been necessary to give business efficacy to the contract. However, there is an obvious distinction between that situation, when that which the parties had contracted for was being put in place, and the facts of this case. Here, the plaintiff was in material breach of the agreement in that it had been operating for over two years without a licence. It was no fault of the defendant that the licence lapsed and the plaintiff had been operating unlawfully and in breach of the agreement. The circumstances do not support an inference that there was a positive obligation on the defendant to co-operate with the plaintiff's attempts to procure a licence. Moreover, such an inference would run counter to the terms of the agreement.

[80] The very nature of the agreement meant that the parties in entering the agreement would have contemplated the plaintiff would remain licensed. The agreement does not bespeak the implication of a duty to co-operate so broad as to require the defendant to assist the plaintiff to remedy its breach and secure a licence after having operated unlicensed and in breach of the agreement for over two years."

[15] His Honour was correct in concluding that there had been no breach established by the respondent in respect of the implied duty to cooperate. Where the appellant breached the agreement by failing to renew its own licence the respondent was under no duty to tell the Office of Fair Trading that the agreement was still on foot when it was considering its own position in the matter because of the appellant's breach of the agreement which had, by then, occurred more than two years before. His Honour did not decide that the duty to cooperate was not a continuing obligation but said that it did not apply here where the appellant was itself in breach of the agreement.

Loss of commissions

[16] His Honour concluded that the appellant's claim for loss of commissions was premised on the assumption that its letting pool was diminished in December 2001 because of the respondent's alleged breach arising from its alleged failure to comply with the duty to cooperate. In the absence of such a breach no liability in damages would follow.

[17] His Honour went on to conclude that, in any event, by the time the ultra vires termination notice of 7 February 2002 issued, the plaintiff was no longer conducting the business of letting units as contemplated by the agreement. It had, on 26 October 2001, given notice to the owners of all units for which it acted as letting agent that it would cease letting their units from that day. It also indicated on 14 December 2001 that it would cease acting as the letting agents for the unit holders. As his Honour said:[7]

> "[110] … Its dilemma, of its own making, was that it was unlicensed and therefore could not conduct the business contemplated by the letting agreement. Its cessation of that business and any consequent loss of commission occurred earlier than the repudiation of 7 February 2002 and was not caused by it."

[18] His Honour was also unpersuaded by the evidence that the plaintiff had proved any loss of commission resulting from the defendant's repudiation.

[19] The appellant's submission was that his Honour failed to take into account that the appellant lost the chance to redeem its position with the owners of units because of its special position as the letting agent in the building and its connection with a chain whose business was the letting of similar units. That lost chance should have been reflected in a loss in the value of the business which should have been assessed by his Honour.

[20] The respondent argued that, even if there was conduct amounting to a repudiation on the part of the respondent, the appellant did not accept the repudiation and did not terminate the agreement but rather affirmed it by urgently applying to an adjudicator for an order that the agreement remained on foot. Mr Francis for the respondent submitted that an unaccepted wrongful repudiation that is not in itself a breach does not give rise to a right in damages.[8]

[21] The evidence supports his Honour's conclusion that any loss of commissions by the appellant did not result from any breach of contract by the defendant. As the respondent pointed out, the evidence from lot owners was that they were unhappy with the performance of the appellant as a manager and Mr McEvoy, a director of the appellant, conceded in cross-examination that it had not applied for a restricted letting licence after he became chairman of a new committee of the respondent at an extraordinary general meeting on 22

August 2002 because, at least in part, it was his commercial judgment that none of the lot owners would want to use the appellant's services.[9] The evidence supported his Honour's factual findings about these issues.

[22] Further, the respondent argued that, as a matter of law, the appellant had the benefit of the management agreement up until it was given a new agreement in May 2003 and the issue of the notices of termination had not resulted in its losing its restricted licence. It had lost that by its failure to renew it.

[23] In those circumstances and, having regard to my view that the appellant has not established that his Honour's finding in respect of any breach of the implied duty to cooperate has been established, I agree with his Honour's conclusion that the claim for lost commissions was not made out.

The committee's conduct

[24] The committee's conduct that was said to establish a repudiation of the agreement by the respondent was the issuing of the termination notices on 7 February 2002.

[25] The normal rule is that a disclosed principal is not bound by its agent's act which is outside the scope of the agent's actual, implied or apparent authority unless the principal in fact authorised the agent to do the particular act or ratified it.[10] The learned trial judge concluded in this case that, although the committee of the respondent body corporate was not entitled to determine the appellant's caretaking and letting agreement, the body corporate was still liable in damages to the appellant in respect of its loss of some management fees totalling $37,632.53 on the basis that the committee's conduct evidenced a repudiation of the agreement by the respondent.

[26] His Honour had, at the outset of the trial, decided as a separate question that the committee of the respondent was not entitled to determine the appellant's caretaking and letting agreement, that being a matter requiring the authority of a general meeting.[11] That was because s 92(2) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) provided at the time of the purported termination notices that the general statement in s 92(1) that a decision of the committee is a decision of the body corporate did not apply to a decision on a "restricted issue".[12]

[27] A "restricted issue", by s 24 of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 1997 (Qld), extended to decisions to change rights, privileges or obligations of the owners of lots included in a scheme. In this body corporate, community title scheme rights or privileges were conferred on the manager's lot, lot 1, including the right to use it for the purpose of caretaking. It also included the exclusive use of the office area in the lobby of the unit complex. His Honour concluded that under the by-laws those rights and privileges were clearly those of the owner of lot 1 with the result that a decision to terminate a current property management agreement must have been a decision to change rights and privileges in as much as it would remove the rights and privileges the appellant otherwise enjoyed as an owner of a lot.[13] That conclusion was not challenged at the hearing of the appeal as the first ground of the notice of cross appeal was not pursued.

[28] In deciding that the unauthorised termination notices issued by the committee on 7 February 2002 did breach the agreement, his Honour considered whether the acts of the committee beyond its power could manifest an intention that was attributable to the body corporate. In considering that issue, he referred to the reasons of Denning LJ in HL Bolton (Engineering) Co Ltd v TJ Graham & Sons Ltd[14] where his Lordship said that the state of mind of the managers and directors of a company is the state of mind of a company and is treated by the law as such. The learned trial judge then went on to conclude that the committee's issuing of the termination notices had the effect of representing the company's intention not to be further bound by the agreement. He concluded that that was a repudiation on the part of the defendant, manifesting an intention that the respondent would no longer be bound by the agreement.

[29] The respondent's argument was that HL Bolton (Engineering) Co Ltd v TJ Graham & Sons Ltd was a decision concerned with establishing intention on the part of the body corporate, not what intention may have been communicated to third parties by agents of it.

There was evidence that the appellant here knew at the time of the issuing of the notices to terminate that there had not been a general meeting that had considered the question of the termination of the agreement. It would be deemed to have known that because of its status as a member of the body corporate. The appellant owned or was associated with a significant number of units in the body corporate.

[30] Mr Francis argued that the appellant, therefore, knew from the outset that the body corporate had not formed an intention not to be bound by the agreement and that the communication from the committee in the form of the notices of termination was not representative of the intentions of the respondent. It followed, in his submission, that the actions of the committee would have been seen by a reasonable person in the appellant's position therefore not to be actions on the part of the respondent that evinced an intention not to be bound by the agreement at all, but only an ineffective attempt on the part of the committee to take a step they were not authorised to undertake.

[31] He argued that the learned trial judge erred in finding that the appellant, when receiving the notices, would have inferred that the body corporate's intention was not to be bound further by the agreement so that there should not have been a finding that the acts of the committee amounted to a repudiation of the agreement on the part of the respondent.

[32] In that context, he relied also on the terms of s 92 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act to which I have referred previously. The relevant subsections were:

> "92. Power of committee to act for body corporate
>
> (1) A decision of the committee is a decision of the body corporate.
> (2) Subsection (1) does not apply to a decision that, under the regulation module, is a decision on a restricted issue for the committee."

[33] He pointed out that the allegation by the appellant that these notices to terminate the agreement were in breach of s 92 had been made by the appellant since its pleading in August 2002 in circumstances where it was clear, because of the statute, that there was no actual or apparent authority in the committee to bind the body corporate. He referred to the decision in Northside Developments Pty Ltd v Registrar General[15] where Dawson J, when discussing Denning LJ's statement in HL Bolton (Engineering) Co Ltd v TJ Graham & Sons Ltd and speaking of the organic theory used to impose liability upon companies beyond that which could be imposed by the application of the principles of agency alone, said that that theory "merely extends the scope of an agent's capacity to bind a company and there must first be authority, actual or apparent. It is only then that a person may be regarded not only as the agent of a company, but also as the company itself - an organic part of it - so that '[t]he state of mind of [the agent] is the state of mind of the company'."

[34] Here there was no actual or implied authority. That was made clear by the terms of s 92 of the Act and the Regulation, the legislature having prescribed how "decision making power is to be distributed between the body corporate in general meeting and the committee."[16] The appellant must also have known from its own position as a unit holder in the respondent that there had been no resolution of the body corporate supporting the notices. So there was no apparent authority. Accordingly, in Mr Francis's submission, the conduct of the committee could not be treated as conduct of the respondent.

[35] At the trial the appellant referred his Honour to the decisions in Vine v National Dock Labour Board[17] and Francis v Municipal Councillors of Kuala Lumpur[18] as illustrations of the principle that a corporate entity can potentially be liable for the ultra vires acts of its committee. His Honour did not rely upon those decisions for the conclusion he reached but they were touched on by the appellant in the submissions. In the circumstances, it is appropriate to say something about them.

[36] In Vine v National Dock Labour Board, the respondent wrongfully delegated its power to dismiss a worker to a disciplinary committee instead of deciding the issue itself. It was that process of delegation to a committee which did not itself have the power to dismiss which led to the declaration that the termination of the appellant's employment was a nullity and that he was entitled to damages. That was an ultra vires act of the respondent itself. Here the purported termination notices were issued by the committee rather than by the body corporate which alone had the power to do that. There had been no attempt at delegation by the body corporate. It is difficult to see why the consequences of the committee's independent, unauthorised behaviour should be sheeted home to the body corporate so as to make it liable in damages.

[37] In Francis v Municipal Councillors of Kuala Lumpur, there had been a dismissal of an employee by municipal councillors who were his employers. He could, however, only be dismissed by the President of the Council. In refusing declaratory relief, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council decided that there had been a de facto dismissal of the appellant by his employers, the councillors, who were therefore liable in damages. Their Lordships took the view that it would be wholly unreal to accede to the declaratory relief claimed that the appellant continued to be an employee. They distinguished the different factual situation in Vine v National Dock Labour Board. There was no analysis whether the allegedly ultra vires actions of the councillors should insulate them from the consequences of their own actions in purporting to dismiss the appellant or be ascribed, for example, to the President. It does not seem to have been a case where there was any analysis of the question whether the unauthorised acts of an agent should be attributed to the disclosed principal, which is the aim of the appellant here. Neither of those decisions deals with the issue in this case.

[38] Mr Savage QC for the appellant argued in reply that it was the behaviour of the respondent in refusing to perform the agreement after the purported termination by the committee that deprived the appellant of its rights under the agreement and justified his Honour's conclusion that the respondent had repudiated. That was not the case pleaded which relied only upon the sending of the termination notices and the conduct complained of in failing to perform the agreement was not shown to be conduct of the respondent rather than the committee members.

[39] For the reasons expressed earlier, therefore, I have concluded that it was incorrect to attribute the behaviour of the committee in issuing unauthorised termination notices to the respondent body corporate. It was clear that they were not actually or impliedly authorised to issue them by the statute which governed the relationship between the parties on this issue. Nor, from the factual situation known to the appellant or which should have been known to it, was there a basis for concluding that the committee possessed apparent authority to do what was done.

Conclusions and order

[40] For these reasons, it is my view that the appeal should be dismissed and the cross-appeal allowed with costs, with the effect that the judgment below should be set aside and judgment there should be entered for the defendant with costs.

Queensland Supreme Court

Decision delivered on 2 December 2011

Conveyancing — Contract for sale of an "off-the-plan" apartment — Where purchasers required the developer's plans to be modified to accommodate the existence of a private lift for access between the two levels of the purchasers' apartment — Where registered community management statement contained inaccuracies in one of the schedules on the statement regarding the number of the plan upon which the penthouse was identified — Where purchasers purported to terminate the contract and sought orders for the return of the deposit on the grounds that the contract was entered into under the common mistake of the parties that proposed by-law 50 in the community management statement (which was concerned with giving the purchasers exclusive use of the lift) was valid when in fact, it violated s 177 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 — Whether purchasers entitled to terminate the contract pursuant to s 217 of the Act because of errors on the community management statement — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997: s 177, 217.

The purchasers (who were the applicants in the proceedings) were interested in purchasing an off-the-plan two-level penthouse apartment situated at the Gold Coast for $5.6 million. The respondent developer's plans depicted that the building was to contain (inter alia) two penthouses, each occupying half of level 40 and level 41. Among a number of factors which were important to the purchasers was the existence of a private lift for access between the two levels of their apartment. The developer agreed to this modification.

Information in the disclosure statement given to the purchasers ceased to be accurate as the development proceeded. The developers gave the purchasers a further statement purporting to rectify the inaccuracies. It advised that the community management statement had been amended and the exclusive use plans attached to it updated. The community management statement was registered, however, there were inaccuracies in one of the schedules on the statement regarding the number of the plan upon which the penthouse was identified.

The developers subsequently passed into receivership. The purchasers were duly notified of this fact and of the establishment of the community title scheme as well as the settlement date. The purchasers then purported to terminate the contract and sought orders for the return of the deposit on the grounds that:

> • the contract was entered into under the common mistake of the parties that proposed by-law 50 in the community management statement (which was concerned with giving the purchasers exclusive use of the lift) was valid when in fact, it violated s 177 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 because it purported to give exclusive use to "utility infrastructure which is common property". The by-law was also claimed to be invalid because it purported to confer the benefit of the by-law upon lots listed in the schedule on the statement that did not exist
> • the second disclosure statement was "inaccurate" within the meaning of s 217 of the Act, in that it had the same inaccuracies regarding the lots that did not exist. Such an inaccuracy was said to be materially prejudicial to the purchasers if compelled to settle because the inaccuracy had carried through to the recorded community management statement and the purchasers would be compelled to settle with an invalid by-law 50.

The developers countered that the Act did not prohibit granting exclusive use of the lift, that by-law 50 was not invalid and that the references to the lots that did not exist were a typographical error.

Held: for the respondents.

Mistake argument

1. The contract was not void for common mistake. The developers did not warrant the validity of proposed by-law 50. The law does not presume the validity of proposed by-laws or even their validity after the community management statement containing them is recorded in the Land Titles Register. Nothing prevented the due performance of the contract.

The existence or the validity of the by-law 50 was not a vital attribute of the consideration to be provided or the circumstances which must have subsisted for performance of the contract. The purchasers still had exclusive use of the lift as a result of the security system and access measures installed. Further, their private entries to the lift had been constructed and the main lifts did not go beyond level 40, with only the purchasers and the owners of the other penthouse having access to that level.

Section 217 argument

2. The error in the community management statement did not deprive the purchasers of the benefit of by-law 50. They would not have suffered material prejudice if compelled to complete the contract. Additionally, s 217 provides that the purchaser may terminate where (inter alia) "information disclosed in the disclosure statement, as rectified by any further statement, is inaccurate". The inaccuracy was not contained in the disclosure statement — s 213 of the Act makes it clear that the proposed community management statement is not part of the disclosure statement. Further, the purchasers would have suffered no material prejudice as a result of the error if compelled to complete as the error was obvious, and it was quickly and easily rectified once the developer's attention was drawn to it. Additionally, the error did not render anything in the contract void for uncertainty.

It was unnecessary to examine whether on the proper construction of the by-laws, there was in fact any real inaccuracy because the inaccuracy must be real or of substance as distinct from ephemeral or nominal: Tillmans Butcheries Pty Ltd v Australian Meat Industry Employees' Union [1979] FCA 85.

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

P A Kronberg (instructed by WWS Lawyers) for the applicant.

J McKenna SC and J M Horton (instructed by Allens Arthur Robinson) for the first respondent.

R J True (solicitor) (instructed by Mallesons Stephen Jaques) for the second respondent.

Before: Fryberg J.

Fryberg J: The applicants want to get out of a contract to buy an apartment, and to get their deposit back. They seek a declaration of invalidity of the contract and an order for the payment out of court of the deposit monies. At the outset of the hearing, they abandoned an earlier claim that they had validly terminated the contract for breach. Although their written submissions raised a number of issues, they informed the court that they relied only on common mistake and s 217 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997.

2. The facts are not in dispute.

The negotiations

3. The applicants are husband and wife. Toward the end of 2007 they were interested in purchasing a two-level penthouse apartment at the Gold Coast for vacation purposes. Among a number of factors which were important to them was the existence of a private lift for access between the two levels. They inspected many apartments before deciding upon a penthouse in a development called Oracle Tower 2. It was listed for sale for $5.5 million. It had not yet been built, but the developer, South Sky, provided them with plans. These showed that the building was to contain two penthouses, each occupying half of level 40 and a substantial portion of level 41 and designated at that time as units CC and DD respectively. Living accommodation was on the lower level. Much of the upper level was occupied by building machinery, but the balance comprised a pavilion, swimming pool and spa for each unit and a raised recreation deck.

4. Access to level 40 from the ground was achieved by a bank of four lifts which also serviced lower floors. These lifts terminated at a lift lobby at level 40. Entry to each penthouse was through a door opening on to the lobby. Also opening on to the lobby was a lift which operated between level 40 and level 41 ("the penthouse lift"). On the upper level that lift opened into another lobby from which doors lead into the recreation area of each penthouse.

5. The applicants tentatively decided to purchase unit CC, but they wanted some substantial modifications made to it. They paid a preliminary deposit of $55,000 and entered into negotiations with the developer through their solicitors. In October 2007 the developer agreed to a number of modifications at their request and they agreed to pay the cost of these, $100,000 plus GST, at the date of settlement. One of the modifications affected the penthouse lift. By letter dated 24 October, the developer wrote:

> "Subject always to any necessary architectural, engineering or Authority approvals that may be required, we advise that we raise no objection to the request by the Buyers for the following on-site building variations (Works) to be undertaken, at the Buyer's cost, to Lot 24001:
> (a) Provision for exclusive internal life access between the media room adjacent to the lift on level 40 (Annexure 'A') to the pavilion for area marked Unit CC on level 41 (Annexure 'B')."

6. Whether by accident or design, one wall of the penthouse lift well butted up against a boundary wall of unit CC on both levels of the penthouse. The applicants through their solicitor asked the respondent to modify the plans to provide for the penetration of that wall on both levels and the insertion in the penetrations of lift entrances. This would provide them with direct access from inside unit CC to the interior of the upper level pavilion. That modification was duly made. It was an important modification to the applicants, in part it seems because they believed that the lift provided the only means of access between the two penthouse levels. That belief was incorrect; there were also stairs.

The Disclosure Statement and the Community Management Statement

7. As might be expected, South Sky intended to establish a community title scheme under the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 for the building. Such a scheme is established when a plan of subdivision for identifying the scheme land is registered under the Land Title Act 1994 and the Registrar records a Community Management Statement (CMS) for the scheme;[1] scheme land and the statement constitute the scheme.[2] The lots come into existence on the establishment of the scheme; until then they are proposed lots. The scheme land must consist of at least two lots.[3] Once the CMS takes effect, it is binding on lot owners[4] ; until it is recorded (under the Land Title Act) it has no effect.[5] A purchaser obviously has a considerable interest in knowing what is in it.

8. South Sky was not prohibited from entering into contracts of sale in respect of proposed lots before the tower was built. Before it did so, however, it was obliged to give the buyer a disclosure statement.[6] That was inevitably a very substantial document; the one which South Sky prepared for Tower 2 was, including the accompanying documents, 177 pages in length. It included a considerable amount of information and was accompanied by a number of documents as required by the Act. One of the accompanying documents was the proposed CMS.[7] If the proposed CMS had not existed[8] or the disclosure statement had not been given[9] , purchasers could terminate any contract which had not already settled.

The proposed CMS was 24 pages long (counting the attached plan). The first page was in a bar-coded form prescribed for recording under the Act in the Queensland Land Registry. The remainder comprised five schedules listed on the first page. As required by the Act, it identified the scheme land.[10] Panel 4 on p 1 provided:

> "4. Scheme land
>
> Description of Lot
>
> Lots # to # on SP 194241
> Lots # on SP 194241"

and specified the county and parish for both of the last two lines. The specific lots were not identified, I infer because it was intended to include them in an enlarged panel in the final version to be lodged in the Land Registry. Schedule A listed the lot entitlements, but only for lots 20101 to 22007. The omission of the remaining lots was of little consequence; sch B of the CMS, headed "Explanation of the development of scheme land", set out how the development would proceed. That schedule made it clear that the development was to be a staged development and that sch A listed only the 131 lots in stage 1. A complete list of all residential lots with their contributions and interests formed part of sch B, but it was made clear that those comprised in stage 2 were subject to change. The lot previously described as Lot CC was now numbered 24001; all of the lots in stage 2 were on plan 194266.

10. Because South Sky did not propose to adopt the by-laws in the schedule in the Act, sch C in the proposed CMS stated, "The by-laws in schedule 2 of the Act will not apply to the Scheme and the following by-laws will apply."[11] The proposed bylaws were then set out. Two of those bylaws are presently relevant:

> "50. Exclusive Use Area — Lift (Penthouse Purposes)

(a) The Occupiers of Lots mentioned in Schedule E under the heading By-law 50 — Lift (Penthouse Purposes) are entitled to the exclusive use of that part of the Common Property (Penthouse Lift) which is identified in Schedule E.
(b) The following conditions apply to such use:-

(i) the Penthouse Lift must only be used for the purpose referred to in Schedule E;
(ii) the Benefited Owners are liable to:

(A) keep the Penthouse Lift clean and tidy, in good repair and condition and properly maintained;
(B) ensure Penthouse Lift maintenance is regularly carried out;
(C) perform all the duties of the Body Corporate in respect of the Penthouse Lift including ensure that the Penthouse Lift are maintained to a standard commensurate to the standard of other facilities on the Common Property.

(iii) the relevant Owner and Occupier allowing the Body Corporate, the Committee and its properly appointed agents, access at all reasonable times to the Penthouse Lift for any proper purpose;
(iv) the Benefited Owners must contributed to all costs and expenses associated with the Penthouse Lift within 30 days of written demand from the Body Corporate. Such costs will be apportioned between the Benefited Owners based on the contribution lot entitlement of the Benefited Lots they own as a proportion of the total contribution lot entitlement of all the Benefited Lots.

(c) If an Owner or Occupier of a Lot does not carry out its responsibilities in accordance with this By-law 50 then the Body Corporate, and persons authorised by it, may enter upon the Penthouse Lift for the purpose of carrying out such responsibilities and the Owner will be liable for the costs incurred by the Body Corporate in that regard. Such costs must be paid on demand.

[140411]

(d) In this By Law:

(i) Benefited Owners means the Owners of the Lots to which this By-law 50 attaches;
(ii) Benefited Lots means the Lots to which this By-law 50 applies.

54. Special Rights — Building Levels

(a) Occupiers and Owners of Lots on each level of the Building will have the special right over that part of Common Property consisting of the foyers on their respective levels (Special Areas) so that a security and access control system can ensure that only Authorised Persons may access that level.
(b) Authorised Persons are those who are:-

(i) Occupiers of a Lot on the relevant level;
(ii) invited by an Occupier or Owner of a Lot on the relevant level to visit them;
(iii) persons maintaining Common Property;
(iv) the Caretaker; and
(v) such other persons as the Committee decides, acting reasonably.

(c) The Body Corporate must carry out its duties (including maintenance and operating duties) in respect of the Special Areas. If there is any doubt about the location or extent of the Special Areas, the determination of the Chairman of the Body Corporate (or his nominee) (acting reasonably) will be final."

11. By-law 50(b)(i) referred to sch E. That was a schedule to the CMS, not to the by-laws. It was entitled "Description of lots allocated exclusive use areas of common property". It dealt (or envisaged future dealing) with car parks and storage and with a lift for construction and other purposes, and it also contained the following:

Lot No.	Area	Purpose
By-law 50 — Lift (Penthouse Purposes)
Lot 24001 on SP 194266	Area L1 on plan marked "Area A"	Lift (Penthouse Purposes)
Lot 24002 on SP 194266	Area L1 on plan marked "Area A"	Lift (Penthouse Purposes)

On the attached plan, two levels were shown, level 40 and level 41. On each area L1 was the area of the penthouse lift. Lot 24002 was the second penthouse.

The contract and the further statement

12. By a contract dated 14 January 2008 South Sky sold proposed lot 24001 to the applicants for $5.6 million. The contract provided for payment of a deposit of $510,000 and I assume that this was duly paid.

13. Before it entered into the contract South Sky gave the disclosure statement to the applicants.[12] The following special conditions were included in the contract:

> "2.2 The Seller will cause, at its cost, the following alterations to be made t the layout of the Lot by settlement:
>
> (a) provide for private and exclusive entry internal lift access between the media room adjacent to the left on level 40 (refer to Annexure A) and the pavilion area marked Unit CC on level 41 (refer to Annexure B);
>
> 3. Penthouse Lift Access
>
> The Buyer acknowledges that:
>
> (a) By-Law 50 of the CMS applies to the Lot (Lift Bylaw);
> (b) the Lift Bylaw gives the owner of the Lot and the owner of proposed Lot 24002 exclusive use of Area L1;
> (c) by settlement, the Seller will cause the Lift Bylaw to be amended as outlined in Annexure C; and
>
>
> (d) if, in accordance with Clause 25.1, the Body Corporate grants Lease to the Seller (or any person nominated by it) the Lift Bylaw will be amended to permit the lessee of the Lease to use Area L1 to gain access to and from the roof of the Scheme Buildings for the sole purpose of transporting equipment or material that is physically impossible to transport via the stairwell. To remove doubt, the lessee of the Lease is not permitted to use Area L1 as a general access way.
> 4. Rooftop Lease
> The Seller agrees that any Lease granted in accordance with Clause 25.1 will include a provision prohibiting the lessee of the Lease from using the leased area as a function area."

The applicants conceded that "exclusive" in cl 2.2(a) did not mean that the owners of Lot 24002 and their invitees were to be excluded from the lift.

14. Annexure C to the special conditions contained the following:

> "50. Exclusive Use Area — Lift (Penthouse Purposes)

(a) The Occupiers of Lots mentioned in Schedule E under the hearing By-law 50 — Lift (Penthouse Purposes) are entitled to the exclusive use of that part of the Common Property (Penthouse Lift) which is identified in Schedule E.
(b) The following conditions apply to such use:-

(i) the Penthouse Lift must only be used for the purpose referred to in Schedule E;
(ii) the Benefited Owners are liable to:

(A) keep the Penthouse Lift clean and tidy, in good repair and condition and properly maintained;
(B) ensure Penthouse Lift maintenance is regularly carried out;
(C) perform all the duties of the Body Corporate in respect of the Penthouse Lift including ensure that the Penthouse Lift are maintained to a standard commensurate to the standard of other facilities on the Common Property.

(iii) subject to 50(b)(v), the relevant Owner and Occupier allowing the Body Corporate, the Committee and its properly appointed agents, access at all reasonable times to the Penthouse Lift for any proper purpose;
(iv) the Benefited Owners must contributed to all costs and expenses associated with the Penthouse Lift within 30 days of written demand from the Body Corporate. Such costs will be apportioned between the Benefited Owners based on the contribution lot entitlement of the Benefited Lots they own as a proportion of the total contribution lot entitlement of all the Benefited Lots;
(v) if the Body Corporate, the Committee or its properly appointed agents or lessee intend to use the Penthouse Lift to move equipment or material of a significant size and nature (Equipment) the Body Corporate, the Committee or the agent shall first ensure Equipment is adequately protected to avoid damaging the Penthouse Lift. Any damage to the Penthouse Lift caused by the Equipment must be promptly made good by the Body Corporate at its cost.

(c) If an Owner or Occupier of a Lot does not carry out its responsibilities in accordance with this By-law 50 then the Body Corporate, and persons authorised by it, may enter upon the Penthouse Lift for the purpose of carrying out such responsibilities and the Owner will be liable for the costs incurred by the Body Corporate in that regard. Such costs must be paid on demand.
(d) In this By Law:

(i) Benefited Owners means the Owners of the Lots to which this By-law 50 attaches;

[140413]

(ii) Benefited Lots means the Lots to which this By-law 50 applies."

15. The Act envisages that information in the disclosure statement may contain errors or may cease to be accurate as a development proceeds. To deal with those situations it provides that if the contract has not settled, the seller must give the buyer a further statement rectifying the inaccuracies within 14 days or longer period agreed between the parties after becoming aware of an initial inaccuracy or after a supervening inaccuracy occurred.[13] By letter dated 7 June 2010 the solicitors for South Sky sent the solicitors for the applicants a further statement under the Act. It advised (among other things) that the (proposed) CMS had been amended and the exclusive use plans attached to it updated. A copy of the amended CMS with the updated plans was attached.

16. Page 1 of the CMS was not amended and panel 4 continued to lack specification of the lots in the development, but otherwise the amendments were substantial. Schedule A, the Schedule of Lot Entitlements, was expanded by the inclusion of stage 2 of the development, to include all 243 lots. All of the lots, including lot 24001, were stated to be on plan 194241. That was because in December 2008 South Sky decided to create the proposed lots in one stage only. Doubtless for the same reason, the content of sch

B (the explanation of the development) was entirely deleted and replaced with the words “Not applicable”. In sch C, the by-laws, by-law 49 (which had dealt with an exclusive use area for a lift for construction and other purposes) was replaced with a by-law entitled “Exclusive use area — Wine Lockers”. By-law 50 was amended as foreshadowed in the contract.[14] By-law 54 remained unaltered. Schedule E was altered to reflect the proposed wine lockers, but there was no amendment to the portion relating to the penthouse lift quoted above.[15] That was unfortunate, because the reference to SP 194266 was out of date. The two penthouses were now on plan 194241, as sch A showed.

17. Two consequences followed from the delivery of the further disclosure statement. First, the statement and all accompanying material became part of the provisions of the contract.[16] Second, the applicants acquired a right to terminate the contract by notice in writing given within 14 days if they would have been “materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract, given the extent to which the disclosure statement was, or [had] become, inaccurate”.[17] They made no attempt to terminate at that time.

The CMS as recorded

18. In due course the Gold Coast City Council endorsed the CMS[18] , it was signed by South Sky as original owner[19] and on 25 August 2010 it was recorded in the Queensland Land Registry.[20] In the recorded version the “Description of Lot” in panel 4 was changed by the deletion of the last two lines quoted above[21] and their replacement with the words “See enlarged panel”. The first page was followed by two pages listing all of the lots in the tower under the heading “Enlarged panel”. The list included “Lot 24001 on SP 194241”.

19. There were also some changes in schedule E, the description of lots allocated exclusive use areas of common property. Previously the heading relating to car parks had not included a list of lots identifying the areas allocated for car parking and storage. These areas were now listed for each lot by reference to plans. The same was true of areas under the heading “Wine Locker”. Lot 24001 appeared in both cases; it was listed as being on SP 194241. Under the heading “Lift (Penthouse Purposes)”, the erroneous reference to SP 194266 remained uncorrected.

20. SP 194266 was never lodged at the Land Registry and remains in the possession of South Sky’s surveyor.

The outbreak of hostilities

21. On 1 April 2011 the solicitors for South Sky notified the applicants of the establishment of the community title scheme and nominated 6 May 2011 as the settlement date.[22] That letter disclosed to the applicants (if they did not know it already) that South Sky had passed into receivership.[23] The applicants sought counsel’s advice and on that advice obtained a copy of the CMS as recorded in the Land Registry. Shortly thereafter their solicitors identified the error in schedule E. On 21 April they wrote to the solicitors for South Sky purporting to terminate the contract. The grounds upon which they did so were expressed in the letter:

[140414]

> “It has now come to our client’s attention, after receiving Counsel’s advice that:-
>
> > (a) By-law 50 in the CMS as recorded purporting to give an exclusive use by-law in favour of our clients in respect to ‘the penthouse lift’ is not a valid by-law for two reasons:-
> >
> > > (i) that purporting to give an exclusive use by-law in respect to the penthouse lift is prohibited pursuant to s.177(1) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (‘the Act’) in that it purports to give exclusive use to ‘utility infrastructure which is common property’ within the meaning of the Act; and > > > (ii) by-law 50 as set out in the recorded CMS purports to confer the benefit of the by-law upon the Lots ‘mentioned in Schedule E’ under the heading ‘By-law 50-(Penthouse Purposes)’ as ‘Lots 24001 and 24002 on SP 194266’. The lots ‘mentioned’ do not exist at all and thus the by-law is invalid in not giving effect to ‘attaching to a Lot under the Scheme’ as required by s.170(1) of the Act, nor to ‘a lot that is another community titles scheme', as required by s.170(2) of the Act, to be an 'exclusive use by-law';

(b) that the last disclosure statement dated 7 June, 2010, is 'inaccurate' within the meaning of s.217(b)(viii) of the Act, in that it has the same inaccurate reference to the 'Lots mentioned' as referred to in (a)(ii) above. Such inaccuracy will be materially prejudicial to our clients if compelled to settle, because that inaccuracy has carried through to the CMS as recorded and thus, as of today our client would be compelled to settle with an invalid by-law 50.

Accordingly, by virtue of (a)(i) above, the condition is impossible to be fulfilled, now or by the settlement date, entitling our clients to terminate.

Further, and in the alternative, the condition cannot be fulfilled because of (a)(ii) above, by the settlement date, in light of the statutory requirements to amend and record a new CMS, entitling our clients to terminate.

Further, and in the alternative, by reason of (b) above, our clients are entitled to terminate pursuant to s.217(d) of the Act."

22. The solicitors for South Sky responded on 29 April by asserting that the Act did not prohibit granting exclusive use of the lift; that by-law 50 was not invalid; and that the reference to SP 194266 was a typographical error. On the same day they lodged a request for a new CMS correcting the typographical error and the new CMS was immediately recorded. Nonetheless the applicants did not settle on the due date.

23. On 18 May the applicants applied for orders that they had validly terminated the contract and were entitled to the return of their deposit.

The applicants' submissions

24. The applicants submitted that they were entitled to terminate the contract on two bases:

"(a) That the Contract was entered into under the common mistake of the parties that the proposed bylaw 50 would be a valid exclusive use bylaw in respect of proposed Lot 24001 when in fact it was not, in accordance with s.177(1) of the BCCM Act;
(b) The last Disclosure Statement provided to the applicants dated 7 June 2010 was 'inaccurate' within the meaning of s.217 of the Act, in that it has the same inaccurate reference to the 'lots mentioned', being 'Lot 24001 and 24002 on SP 194266'."

The respondent's submissions

25. South Sky submitted that by-law 50 was a valid by-law and that even if it was not, any mistake was not a material mistake capable of supporting a decision that the contract was void. As to the argument based on s 217, upon the proper interpretation of the further (disclosure) statement, the information in it was not inaccurate, and in any event the applicants would suffer no material prejudice if required to settle.

The "Trial Arrangements" document

26. At the beginning of the trial the parties tendered a document headed "Trial Arrangements". That document provided:

"The parties approach the trial on the following agreed basis:

[140415]

1. SSI does not require the Applicants to formally prove the facts contained in:

a. paragraph 59 of the Applicant's submissions in Reply (up to and including the words 'not traverse other lots'); and
b. paragraph 29 of the Applicant's primary submissions. These facts, however, do not displace evidence of Mr Wilkinson of the way in which the lift the subject of this proceeding actually operates.

2. The parties are approaching the question of construction of the contract and material prejudice as objective tests and as being supported only be evidence of that kind. The Applicants' evidence of subjective matters goes only to their mistake case. The Applicants' counsel has, on this basis, withdrawn subparagraph 6(a) of his supplementary submissions.

3. On the basis outline in 2. above:

a. SSI does not object to the evidence of subjective matters deposed to by the Applicants;
b. the parties do not seek to cross-examine deponents;
c. the parties do not require their opponent's case to be put to their witnesses, the witnesses having had an opportunity, in affidavits, to respond to material aspects of the opponent's case.

4. The Applicants' Counsel will tender (without objection), a copy of the Applicants' solicitors letter of 31 May 2011 for the purposes of notifying the Court of a decision to abandon allegations as to anticipatory breach of contract earlier advanced in correspondence.[24] "

Having regard to the balance of these reasons, it is unnecessary to quote paras 29 and 59 referred to in para 1 of that document.

Mistake

27. In their outline of argument, the applicants submitted:

> "The Queensland Court of Appeal in Australia Estates Pty Ltd v Cairns City Council has authoritatively stated the principles of common mistake as set out in the English Court of Appeal decision of Great Peace Shipping Ltd v Tsavliris Salvage (International) Ltd. Accordingly, the principles as set out in Great Peace or, alternatively, the rather narrow rule in Taylor v Johnson are applicable."

They did not expand upon the alternative submission, and did not refer to it orally. Taylor v Johnson[25] was a decision about unilateral mistake. It has no application to the present case. South Sky tacitly accepted the primary submission and developed its submissions accordingly.

28. I am far from persuaded that the primary submission is correct. Australia Estates Pty Ltd v Cairns City Council[26] was decided on several alternative bases and different members of the court placed different levels of emphasis upon those bases. Identification of a binding ratio decidendi is not easy. But this is not the case for an excursion into the fine points of Australian law relating to mistake in contract.[27] As far as this case is concerned, the parties accepted the law as stated in Great Peace Shipping Ltd v Tsavliris Salvage (International) Ltd, in particular the following passage:

> "76 If one applies the passage from the judgment of Lord Alverstone CJ in Hobson v Pattenden, which we quoted above to a case of common mistake, it suggests that the following elements must be present if common mistake is to avoid a contract. (i) there must be a common assumption as to the existence of a state of affairs; (ii) there must be no warranty by either party that that state of affairs exists; (iii) the non-existence of the state of affairs must not be attributable to the fault of either party; (iv) the non-existence of the state of affairs must render performance of the contract impossible; (v) the state of affairs may be the existence, or a vital attribute, of the consideration to be provided or circumstances which must subsist if performance of the contractual adventure is to be possible."[28]

They joined issue over the application of that law to the facts of this case. It is not appropriate for me to go beyond deciding that issue.

Common assumption as to the existence of a state of affairs

29. The applicants submitted in their outlines that the parties assumed that an exclusive use licence could validly be given in respect of the penthouse lift, but it became apparent in the course of oral submissions that they were really relying upon an alleged mistake as to the validity of proposed by-law 50(a). In support of the existence of such an assumption they referred to special condition 3[29] of the contract and the letter of 24 October 2007.[30] They gave no evidence that they or their solicitor had ever turned their minds to the efficacy of the by-law, much less that they had relied upon it in any way.

30. Special condition 3 of the contract was a term proposed by South Sky, not one sought by the applicants. Its function was to give the applicants advance notice of South Sky's intention to vary the proposed by-laws set out in the disclosure statement as it stood at the date of the contract by adding the underlined words. That was why it was phrased as an acknowledgement on the part of the applicants, not conferral of rights upon them. There was no variation proposed to by-law 50(a). The inclusion of the special condition in the contract is neutral in relation to the question whether the applicants or their solicitor relied upon a mistaken view of the validity of proposed by-law 50(a). Neither they nor their solicitor swore to any such reliance in their affidavits.

31. Nor can any such reliance be inferred from South Sky's letter of 24 October 2007. That letter does not refer to the by-laws, but only to internal lift access between the floors. I do not doubt that that was of some importance to the applicants, but it was not the subject of the alleged mistake. There is no evidence that the applicants were even aware of the proposed by-laws at the time of that letter.

32. However South Sky did not rely on this point. It submitted that the by-law was valid. In the alternative it submitted that notwithstanding any invalidity of by-law 50(a), the contract could still be performed in accordance with its terms; and in any event, invalidity of the by-law made no material difference to the applicants' position.

Impossibility of performance

33. The applicants submitted that invalidity of the by-law under s 177 of the Act rendered performance of special condition 3 impossible. That submission depended upon the further submission that special condition 3 should be read as if it meant or implied:

> "The parties enter into Special Condition 3 of the Contract on the basis of the proposed bylaw 50 as set out in Special Condition 3 can be validly effected as an exclusive use bylaw within the meaning of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997."

With respect to counsel, that submission misconceived the purpose and effect of special condition 3. That condition stood simply as an acknowledgement by the applicants. It is impossible to imply the term for which the applicants contend.

34. The acknowledgement stands and has its force. South Sky did not warrant the validity of the proposed by-law. The law does not presume the validity of proposed by-laws or even their validity after the CMS containing them is recorded in the Land Titles Register[31] . Nothing prevents the due performance of the contract.

Vital attribute

35. The applicants submitted that in analysing this element of the test it was appropriate to have regard to what was written by Diplock LJ in Hong Kong Fur Shipping Co Ltd v Kawasaki Kisen Kaisha Ltd. I quote part of the relevant passage:

> "The test whether an event has this effect or not [discharging a party from further performance of his undertakings] has been stated in a number of metaphors all of which I think amount to the same thing: does the occurrence of the event deprive the party who has further undertakings still to perform of substantially the whole benefit which it was the intention of the parties as expressed in the contract that he should obtain as the consideration or performing those undertakings?"[32]

In Great Peace the Court of Appeal wrote that in deciding whether an alleged mistake was fundamental in all the circumstances, that test could be of assistance.

In the present case, the validity or invalidity of the by-law makes no difference to the applicants' position. They still have the exclusive use of the lift. Their position is protected by the security system on the lifts and by the provisions of by-law 54. Their private entries to the lift have been constructed. The main lifts do not go beyond level 40 and only the applicants and the owners of the other penthouse have access to that level. Only they have the electronic keys necessary to operate the penthouse lift. The existence or the validity of the by-law was not a vital attribute of the consideration to be provided or the circumstances which must subsist for performance of the contract.

37. It is unnecessary to consider whether by-law 50 is valid. South Sky's alternative submissions are correct. The contract was not void for common mistake.

Section 217

38. After some uncertainty, the applicants relied upon the following parts of s 217:

> "217 Terminating contract for inaccuracy of statement
>
> The buyer may terminate the contract if—
>
> (a) it has not already been settled; and
> (b) at least 1 of the following applies—
>
>
> (viii) information disclosed in the disclosure statement, as rectified by any further statement, is inaccurate; and
> (c) because of a difference or inaccuracy under paragraph (b), the buyer would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract; and > (d) the termination is effected by written notice given to the seller by the buyer not later than the latest of the following—
> (i) 3 days before the buyer is otherwise required to complete the contract".

They abandoned their original reliance on s 217(b)(i), doubtless because the CMS recorded for the scheme on its establishment was relevantly the same as the one most recently advised to them.

39. When the applicants purported to terminate the contract on 21 April 2011, it had not been settled. Settlement was due on 6 May 2011. Paragraphs (a) and (d) were therefore satisfied.

40. For the purposes of this submission, the applicants relied upon the error in sch E to the CMS, where, it will be recalled, the number of the plan upon which the penthouse was identified for the purposes of by-law 50 was incorrectly stated.[33] They submitted that the error was an inaccuracy which deprived them of the benefit of the by-law, and that they would suffer material prejudice if compelled to complete the contract.

41. That submission fails for at least two reasons: the inaccuracy was not contained in the disclosure statement; and it would cause no material prejudice to the applicants if they were compelled to settle. It is unnecessary to examine whether on the proper construction of the by-laws, there was in fact any real inaccuracy.[34]

42. "Disclosure statement" in s 217 is relevantly defined as a statement complying with s 213(2)–(4). Those subsections, among other things, specify what must be included in the statement and require that it be accompanied by the proposed CMS. Section 213 makes it plain that the proposed CMS is not part of the disclosure statement. Even if the incorrect plan number amounted to the disclosure of inaccurate information (a matter which is by no means clear), it was not information disclosed in the disclosure statement.

43. Moreover, for the reasons set out above[35] , the applicants would suffer no material prejudice as a result of it if compelled to complete. The error was obvious; it was quickly and easily rectified once South Sky's attention was drawn to it; and it did not render anything in the contract void for uncertainty.

Orders

44. The application is dismissed. I shall hear the parties as to consequential orders and costs.

Queensland Supreme Court

Decision delivered on 2 December 2011

Conveyancing — Where plaintiffs contracted to purchase apartments "off the plan" in a development described as The Oracle — Where disclosure statement made provision for an on-site manager to conduct a letting business and provide services associated with the letting of apartments — Where letting agent eventually selected focused on short-term stays and provided certain hotel-like services to guests — Where plaintiffs claimed that the development was no longer a residential development but was a hotel/ resort — Whether development had ceased to be a residential development — Whether seller had repudiated contracts — Where certain purchasers also claimed that the disclosure statements had become inaccurate and that any such inaccuracy would cause them material prejudice if compelled to complete — Where some of the purchasers sought to avoid the contracts under s 214 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 — Whether disclosure statements became inaccurate — Whether inaccuracy in the name of the development would cause material prejudice to the purchasers if compelled to complete the contracts — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997: s 214.

The plaintiff purchasers contracted to purchase apartments "off the plan" in a development described as The Oracle, situated on the Gold Coast. The development consisted of two high rise apartment towers and other low rise buildings containing retail, restaurant and commercial premises. The initial marketing of the development focused on its unparalleled status as a high-quality, luxury, residential development, perfect for the discerning retiree who desired long term residency.

The purchasers were given disclosure statements explaining that the development's residential component would be subdivided to create a community titles scheme and that it was proposed to appoint a caretaker who could carry on a business of letting lots in the scheme and who would occupy identified parts of the common property.

Prior to settlement, the purchasers received communications that announced that the letting rights had been acquired by Peppers Retreats, Resorts and Hotels and that The Oracle would be branded Peppers Broadbeach. Peppers focused on short-term and holiday letting and providing certain hotel-like services to guests. Peppers marketed the development as the "ultimate all encompassing hotel experience" being "a great hotel opposite the beach". Peppers was also permitted to place large neon Peppers' signage on the top of both towers as well as in and around the residential tower. A licence was granted and an application made to the local council for the establishment of an in-house restaurant and bar for the hotel guests to access.

The purchasers claimed that the final disclosure statement was inaccurate because it described the lots to be purchased as lots in a residential tower, whereas the apartments became part of a hotel/resort. It was thus asserted that the defendant developers had repudiated the contracts. Some of the purchasers claimed that they would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract pursuant to s 214(4) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 and were thus entitled to terminate their contracts due to the extent by which the disclosure statement, as amended, had become inaccurate.

Held: for the defendant developer.

1. The purchasers submitted that they contracted to buy a residential apartment in The Oracle, as identified on the location plan contained in the contract of sale. They argued that the developers had changed the underlying nature of the bargain by altering the development from a residential tower to a hotel/resort and by permitting the residential tower to be known and rebranded as Peppers Broadbeach.

However in providing for the lot to be in a residential tower, the contract did not additionally provide to the effect that the residential tower was to be of a particular kind (for example, occupied predominantly by owner-residents or for long-term residential purposes). Additionally, the Caretaking and Letting Agreement that was an annexure to the Disclosure Statement did not indicate that the letting business was confined to long-term tenancies — it gave for example, the entity conducting the letting business, authority to have and staff a tour desk.

2. The purchasers submitted that they were discharged from completing the contracts because the developers evinced an intention not to provide at settlement the subject of the contract, and instead, intended to provide a particular lot in a development which had become a Peppers hotel/resort.

However, the lots proffered by the developers in performance of the contracts were in a residential tower. The fact that the developers provided guests with certain "hotel-style services" did not mean that the tower had ceased to be a "residential tower". The fact that some of the occupants were there for a short term did not mean that the tower was not a residential tower. In its contractual context, a residential tower did not mean simply a tower for owners who are residents or long-term tenants.

3. The building did not have all of the features that would be expected of a typical, large, luxury hotel. The apartments were different from those in a hotel due to their physical size, the apartments being completely self contained and the duration of the average stay usually being longer than at a hotel. If the description "hotel" did not adequately describe its features, then it would be adequately described as consisting of self-contained apartments with access to many of the services that a hotel would offer.

The property through Peppers' on-site signage, on-site presence and extensive advertising of Peppers Broadbeach meant that the apartment tower had effectively been branded as Peppers Broadbeach. This branding went beyond the letting agent promoting its business (as the Caretaking and Letting Agreement envisaged it could) to a branding of the apartment tower. Further, at the time the various purchasers contracted to purchase their apartments, the development as a whole, and the residential tower that was promoted to them in particular, were branded as The Oracle. However, buyers who read the disclosure statement carefully or who reflected on the fact that their standard contract did not prevent them from letting their apartment for short-term or holiday letting, would have appreciated that the occupants of the tower would not only be owner-occupants or long-term tenants.

4. The form of alleged repudiation is conduct which "evinces an unwillingness or an inability to render substantial performance of the contract" (Koompahtoo Local Aboriginal Land Council v Sanpine Pty Ltd [2007] HCA 61). The purchasers' submission on repudiation was that the apartments purportedly offered in performance of the contract, were in a hotel/resort branded Peppers Broadbeach as opposed to a residential tower branded as The Oracle. As noted above, the tower was a residential tower whether described as a hotel, resort, hotel/resort or some other term. The purchasers' case on repudiation therefore turned upon whether the developers' failure to provide an apartment in a tower branded The Oracle as per the sale contract, and instead proffering an apartment in a tower with a different name, indicated an intention "not to provide at settlement the subject matter of the contract" because the relevant units were "substantially different from that contracted for".

The name of the tower was not pleaded or argued to be an essential term of the contract. The subject matter of the contract was a proposed lot in a residential tower. The failure to provide the relevant apartment in a tower branded as The Oracle did not indicate an intention not to provide at settlement, the subject matter of the contract. The unwillingness or inability to perform the term that provided for the tower itself to be known as The Oracle would not convey to a reasonable person, in the situation of the purchasers, renunciation either of the contract as a whole or of a fundamental obligation under it. As such there was no repudiation of the contract by the developers.

Additionally, the purchasers had not proven any departure from promised contractual performance in respect of the appointment of a letting agent in accordance with the Caretaking and Letting Agreement. There was no reduction in the value of the relevant apartments in consequence of the appointment of Peppers, its operation of the apartment tower and the branding of the towers as Peppers Broadbeach.

5. In order for the purchasers to have been entitled to terminate the contracts, any inaccuracy in the disclosure statements must have been "real or of substance as distinct from ephemeral or nominal" such as to impact on the bargain as per Mirvac Queensland Pty Ltd v Wilson [2010] QCA 322.

6. The matters noted in the disclosure statement which the purchasers claimed to have been inaccurate included:

- that the apartment purportedly offered was not an apartment in a residential tower in The Oracle but rather an apartment in a hotel/resort branded "Peppers Broadbeach". However, the disclosure statement described the lot as being in a residential tower which was not inaccurate. Further, the apartment was in a residential tower in The Oracle being the name of the development as a whole. Whilst it was true that the development had been rebranded as "Peppers Broadbeach", the change in the name of the tower itself was not alleged to have cause the purchasers material prejudice.
- the change in the focus of the letting business to short-stay tenants. This was claimed by the purchasers to have likely diminished the residential amenity of persons who resided in apartments that they owned or who resided there as long-term residents, compared to a letting business that did not have that focus. However, any such adverse effect would not have been because of an inaccuracy in the information disclosed in the disclosure statement but would be a result of a particular letting agent choosing to focus upon short-stay letting, as it was entitled to do under the Caretaking and Letting Agreement.

Applegarth J:

1. These eight proceedings, which were heard together, relate to "off the plan" contracts to purchase proposed lots in Tower One of a development described as The Oracle at Broadbeach on the Gold Coast. The development was undertaken by the defendant ("SSI"), and consists of two high rise apartment towers and other low rise buildings that contain retail, restaurant and commercial premises.

2.

SSI was incorporated in 2001 for the purpose of carrying out the development. The apartments in Tower One were released for sale in 2005. The construction of the development commenced in about October 2007. The construction of Tower One was completed in October 2010.

3. The plaintiffs in each proceeding, with the exception of the plaintiffs in proceeding 12179/10 (Mr Gough and Ms Groves), entered into contracts in late 2005 or early 2006 ("the original contracts") with SSI. In June 2006 SSI obtained approval under s 29 of the Land Sales Act 1984 to extend from three and a half years to five and a half years the period of time in which it was required to provide a registrable instrument of transfer. As a result, the plaintiffs who had entered into the original contracts entered into new contracts in the second half of 2006. Mr Gough and Ms Groves entered into their contract with SSI on 17 October 2006.

4. At various times the plaintiffs were given disclosure statements. In general terms, the disclosure statements explained that the development's residential component to be known as The Oracle would be subdivided to create a community titles scheme, and that it was proposed to appoint a caretaker who could provide letting services for the owners of lots in the scheme, could carry on a business of letting lots in the scheme and would occupy identified parts of the common property.

5. Each plaintiff gave evidence of the type of development that they expected to be created, and about their intentions in relation to the particular apartment that they contracted to purchase. The personal circumstances of the various plaintiffs differed, as did their intentions in relation to their particular apartment. Some intended to occupy the apartment they agreed to buy. For example, Mr and Mrs Wicks intended to retire to the apartment they agreed to buy once Mr Wicks retired from his career as an airline pilot and they returned to Australia from their home in Hong Kong. Others hoped to on-sell the apartment before the date for settlement in order to make a profit. For example, Ms Ryan, a teacher's aide, who had limited assets, intended to on-sell proposed Lot 902 in order to be able to settle her contract contemporaneously with the contract she hoped to enter with another buyer. Her limited financial resources did not enable her to settle the contract otherwise, and she hoped to make a profit by on-selling the proposed lot. Other buyers intended to find a long-term tenant. For example, Mr Walsh and his business partner, Mr Hutchins, intended to find a long-term tenant for the apartment they contracted to buy, and Mr Hutchins thought that eventually he might live in the apartment with his family.

6. In general terms, the plaintiffs in each proceeding gave evidence that they expected to purchase an apartment in a residential tower known as The Oracle, and that the tower was to be an iconic, luxurious, up-market residence, providing a sense of community and a high level of amenity to its residents. These features were to give it an "exclusivity" or a quality that distinguished it from other high rise apartment buildings on the Gold Coast. The advertisements, sales brochures, sales agents' representations or other sources of information that gave rise to the expectations of individual buyers are not the subject of detailed or precise evidence. That is because this is not a case that relies on express or implied representations that were made by representatives of SSI or others in marketing The Oracle as the basis of the claim that has been brought by each plaintiff. Instead, it is a contract case.

7. Each plaintiff relies on the terms of a written contract. They also rely upon disclosure statements, and annexures to them, which are said to form part of the provisions of the contract by virtue of s 215 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) ("the BCCM Act" or "the Act"). On this basis, SSI is alleged to have promised that:

> (a) the relevant lot would be, and would be sold to the buyer as, an apartment in a residential tower in The Oracle; and
> (b) any authorisation of a person as letting agent would be in the terms of the Caretaking and Letting Agreement annexed to the disclosure statement.

8. In about July or August 2010 the plaintiffs received communications that announced that the letting rights had been acquired by Peppers Retreats, Resorts and Hotels. Material sent by Peppers on 12 August 2010 included a brochure that advised, among other things, that Peppers Broadbeach would be the "ultimate all encompassing hotel experience" and that Peppers Broadbeach would be "a great hotel opposite the beach".

9. The plaintiffs claim that the disclosure statement made under the Act, as amended by further statements, would not be accurate if now given as a disclosure statement because of numerous matters. In very general terms, the allegations are that each plaintiff contracted to purchase an apartment in a residential tower known as The Oracle, and the disclosure statements described the lot to be purchased as a lot in such a residential tower, whereas the apartment in question is one in a hotel/resort branded Peppers Broadbeach. Certain plaintiffs claim that they would be materially prejudiced, as that expression is used in s 214(4)(b) and s 217(c) of the Act, if compelled to complete the contract by reason of the extent to which the disclosure statement, as amended, has become inaccurate because of a number of matters. The plaintiffs in three of the proceedings (Mr and Mrs Wicks, Mr Gough and Ms Groves, and Ms Ryan) purported to cancel their respective contracts pursuant to rights given to them under the Act within the time allowed by the Act. In all of the proceedings the plaintiffs claim that SSI evinced an intention not to be bound by the terms of the contract (and thereby repudiated the contract) in that:

> (a) SSI no longer intended to provide at settlement an apartment in a residential tower in The Oracle but rather an apartment in a hotel/resort to be known as Peppers Broadbeach with the features, attributes, uses and consequences alleged by them in their pleadings; and
> (b) any authorisation of a person as letting agent would not be in the terms of the Caretaking and Letting Agreement annexed to the disclosure statements.

10. The plaintiffs seek declarations either that they were entitled to treat the contract as discharged and that the contract has been discharged, or that they validly cancelled the contract pursuant to s 214 or s 217 of the Act.

11. SSI denies that the plaintiffs in each proceeding were entitled to terminate the contract. By counterclaim in each proceeding it seeks specific performance of the contract, interest on the purchase price since the date for completion and damages.

12. At the risk of excessively simplifying the numerous allegations of repudiation, inaccuracy in disclosure statements and material prejudice that appear in the statements of claim in the proceedings, the essential complaint of each plaintiff is in two parts. First, they contracted to purchase an apartment in a residential tower, whereas on settlement they were proffered a lot in a development that had become a hotel or resort. The second is that The Oracle has been re-branded Peppers Broadbeach.

The statutory context

13. The evidence concerning the original disclosure statement given pursuant to s 213 of the BCCM Act and the further disclosure statements given from time to time, their alleged inaccuracy, and the prejudice that the plaintiffs say they would suffer if compelled to complete the contract make it appropriate to summarise the relevant provisions of the Act[1] concerning disclosure statements about a proposed lot. Section 213(1) of the Act provides that before a contract is entered into by a seller for the sale of a proposed lot, the seller must give the buyer a disclosure statement. A proposed lot is a lot that is intended to come into existence as a lot included in a community title scheme when the scheme is established or changed. Section 213(2) prescribes what the disclosure statement must state, include and be accompanied by. The disclosure statement must be "substantially complete".

14. Section 214 relates to the variation of a disclosure statement by a further statement. It applies if the contract has not been settled and:

> "(a) the seller becomes aware that information contained in the disclosure statement was inaccurate as at the day the contract was entered into; or > (b) the disclosure statement would not be accurate if now given as a disclosure statement."

If s 214 applies, then the seller must, within 14 days (or a longer period agreed between the buyer and seller) after the section starts to apply, give the buyer a further statement rectifying the inaccuracies in the disclosure statement. Section 214(4) provides:

[140424]

> "The buyer may cancel the contract if—
>
> (a) it has not already been settled; and
> (b) the buyer would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract, given the extent to which the disclosure statement was, or has become, inaccurate; and

(c) the cancellation is effected by written notice given to the seller within 14 days, or a longer period agreed between the buyer and seller, after the seller gives the buyer the further statement."

The provisions of s 214 continue to apply after the further statement is given, on the basis that the disclosure statement is taken to be constituted by the disclosure statement and any further statement, and the disclosure statement date is taken to be the most recent further statement date.[2]

15. Section 215(1) provides that the disclosure statement, and any material accompanying the disclosure statement, and each further statement and any material accompanying each further statement, form part of the provisions of the contract. Section 216 states that the buyer may rely on information in the disclosure statement and each further statement as if the seller had warranted its accuracy.

16. Section 217 provides that the buyer may cancel the contract if:

(a) it has not already been settled; and
(b) at least one of the matters stated in sub-paragraph (b) applies; and
(c) because of the difference or inaccuracy under paragraph (b), the buyer would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract; and
(d) the cancellation is effected by written notice given to the seller by the buyer not later than the latest of the following—

(i) 3 days before the buyer is otherwise required to complete the contract;
(ii) 14 days after the buyer is given notice that the scheme is established or changed;
(iii) another day agreed between the buyer and the seller.

The relevant sub-paragraph of s 217(b) in this matter is:

"(iv) information disclosed in the disclosure statement, as rectified by any further statement, is inaccurate".

17. If the buyer cancels a contract under the provisions of the Act in relation to proposed lots, then the seller must repay to the buyer any amount paid to the seller (including the seller's agent) towards the purchase of the lot the subject of the contract.[3]

18. The entitlement to cancel under s 214 arises in the context of a case in which a further statement is provided.[4] The entitlement to cancel under s 217 may arise where the disclosure statement is inaccurate and no further statement is provided. The entitlement to cancel under s 217 arises if, because of an inaccuracy in the information disclosed in the disclosure statement, as rectified by any further statement, the buyer would be "materially prejudiced" if compelled to complete the contract. The entitlement to cancel under s 214(4) arises if, among other things, the buyer would be "materially prejudiced" if compelled to complete the contract, given the extent to which the disclosure statement was, or has become, inaccurate. The meaning of "materially prejudiced" in this context was discussed by Margaret Wilson J in Wilson v Mirvac Queensland Pty Ltd.[5] The Court of Appeal considered the concept of "material prejudice" in Mirvac Queensland Pty Ltd v Wilson[6] and approved the analysis and conclusions reached by her Honour. Her Honour had said that the following matters are clear:

"(a) The focus is on the buyer. This suggests that the test is objective having regard to the particular buyer's circumstances: would someone in those circumstances be materially prejudiced?
(b) Given that the buyer has only 14 days in which to cancel the contract, and the completion date may still be some months away …, material prejudice must be assessed in the light of the buyer's circumstances when the Further Statement is received or at the latest at the expiration of 14 days from its receipt.

[140425]

(c) There must be a causal relationship between the inaccuracy and the prejudice.
(d) There must be proportionality between the inaccuracy and the prejudice.
(e) Because this is consumer protection legislation, it should be construed beneficially."[7]

Justice Jones (with whom McMurdo P and Fraser JA agreed) stated that, in the context of s 214 (and also s 217), the question of prejudice depends upon the information which has come to the buyer's actual knowledge and whether the information on an objective basis is inaccurate. The prejudice for the purpose of the section flowing from the inaccuracy arises from some detriment or disadvantage to the buyer.[8] A person would be "materially prejudiced" if disadvantaged "substantially" or "to an important extent".[9] Justice Jones cited Vennard v Delorain Pty Ltd as Trustee for the Delorain Trust[10] which suggested, in a similar context, that the phrase "materially prejudiced" meant "disadvantaged in a way which is substantial or of much consequence."[11] The concept that the buyer would be "materially prejudiced" requires a consideration of "the personal circumstances of the buyer in what is otherwise a determination to be made objectively."[12] Justice Jones concluded that material prejudice for the purpose of s 214 (and s 217):

> "has to be assessed in the context of the buyer's personal circumstances being required to complete the contract on its changed terms. The evaluation of whether any disadvantage or detriment reaches the level of material prejudice such as to warrant cancellation of the contract, must be objectively determined in accordance with community standards."[13]

The President, who agreed with these reasons, made reference to the apparently harsh result to the seller in the circumstances of that case, but stated that such a result was consistent with the scheme of the Act and its objects, which relevantly included the secondary object of providing "an appropriate level of consumer protection for … intending buyers of lots included in community title schemes".[14]

The Oracle

19. SSI was incorporated in 2001 as a special purpose vehicle to undertake the development of the project known as The Oracle. It was associated with Niecon Developments Pty Ltd ("Niecon") and Niecon provided staff and services to manage the development. The development is on about 12,336 square metres of land located at Charles and Elizabeth Avenues, Broadbeach. It is in a tourist precinct. It comprises two residential towers, with Tower One being 51 levels containing 265 apartments and Tower Two being 41 levels containing 242 apartments. Tower One is closest to the beach. There are about 70 different apartment configurations. There are more than 200 two or three bedroom apartments. There is a much smaller number of one and two bedroom plus study apartments. In addition, there are a small number of three bedroom plus media apartments and three bedroom plus study and media apartments. There are three penthouses. Apartment living areas range from 81 square metres to over 318 square metres. The apartments contain separate kitchens. The average sale price for the apartments at the time of their release exceeded $1,200,000. Niecon and SSI's Chief Operating Officer, Mr Mark Johnson, who oversaw the development, described it in his affidavit as a "substantial 5 star development, with very high quality finishes, spectacular aspect and position and extensive luxury facilities throughout the common areas." The development also includes, in a gallery below the towers, four three-level buildings housing boutiques, retail stores, restaurants, cafes and licensed premises.

20. The apartments in Tower One were first released for sale in late 2005. Each of the plaintiffs in the separate proceedings gave evidence concerning their expectations, and not all of them descended to great detail in relation to the information that they relied upon in deciding to buy an apartment in The Oracle. However, the marketing of the development focused on its unparalleled status as a high-quality, residential apartment tower. For example, the first plaintiff to give oral evidence, Mr Wicks, said that he was told about The Oracle in late 2005 when he told sales representatives of his and his wife's plan to retire to the Gold Coast. He said that he and his wife were attracted to The Oracle "by what was proposed by way of luxurious, sophisticated residential living." Another plaintiff, Ms Ryan was told by a sales representative in late 2005 that The Oracle was to be "an iconic residential project with permanent and long-term residents only", and that the development was designed to attract "baby boomers" looking to downsize and move from homes into a luxuriously-appointed development with quality facilities and also to attract high-end, discerning owners looking for executive standard residences. She received promotional materials about The Oracle, including a large, glossy brochure with a foreword written by demographer Bernard Salt, and a DVD which focused on the "iconic sophisticated residential nature of the development designed to attract owner/occupiers". The glossy blue brochure about The Oracle opens with a statement by Mr Salt about the "evolving preference by Australians for a lifestyle location in a warm climate." Mr Salt observes:

> "What had been lacking was a measure of city sophistication in these places to attract and hold the interests of aging, city-based baby boomers."

The brochure emphasised the lifestyle that The Oracle offered. One of its first pages stated:

> "LIVE, WORK, INDULGE IN YOUR VERY OWN FULLY INTEGRATED LIFESTYLE DEVELOPMENT".

The exclusive nature of The Oracle was conveyed on a page headed "WORLD CLASS LIFESPACES" which stated:

> "Every one of the residences at this landmark address will indulge its owners with world class lifespaces. The Niecon vision is to create rooms that enhance your life."

One of the stated advantages of living at such a "landmark address" was membership of what was described as "YOUR VERY OWN EXCLUSIVE CLUB". This page of the brochure stated:

> "Acquiring a residence in The Oracle is equivalent to achieving membership in a supremely private club. Owners will enjoy the privilege of access to the Niecon Executive Lounge, a space where you can socialise with like minded neighbours over a quiet game of billiards or retreat to the ultimate tranquillity and privacy of the Zen garden. Entertain guests with a selection from your personal temperate wine locker, enjoy quiet space for reflection in the library, or treat your family and friends to a screening in the private cinema. Exclusive features that make The Oracle a truly individual environment for our residents."

As to its location, the brochure posed a question:

> "Could you locate a more strategic address to live, work and relax?"

21. As previously noted, Ms Ryan and each of the other plaintiffs do not rely upon these representations as the foundation for a contractual term, or for any cause of action based upon a representation such as a contravention of the Trade Practices Act 1974 (Cth), s 52. Instead, these representations and the expectations they generated are relevant to the personal circumstances of each plaintiff in considering the issue of prejudice.

22. The promotion of The Oracle prompted a strong reaction when apartments in Tower One were released for sale in late 2005. Prospective buyers were able to sign expressions of interest. Mr Johnson describes the release of Tower One as very successful and says that there was "a frenzy to purchase The Oracle apartments off the plan." It was the first launch of quality apartments in Broadbeach for a long time. Whilst the popularity of the development was not surprising to him, the extent to which people were keen to purchase was higher than had been anticipated and people were "practically lining up to buy the apartments." He and other Niecon staff could not keep up with the pace at which people wanted to buy the apartments. Contract administrators were appointed to process the execution and return of contracts.

23. The process was for the contracts administrator to prepare a letter to the buyer or the buyer's solicitor, under cover of which the following documents requiring execution by the buyer would be sent:

[140427]

(a) the contract and associated forms required by the Act and the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 (Qld) ("PAMDA");
(b) a Contract Disclosure Statement which contained a Developer Product Disclosure Statement, and another Disclosure Statement which itself included:

(i) a single page entitled "INFORMATION ABOUT THE DEVELOPMENT";
(ii) a Disclosure Statement given under the BCCM Act; and
(iii) a PAMDA Form 27c.

(c) an Operator Product Disclosure Statement.

24. The original contracts were executed by the buyers. In late May 2006 SSI obtained approval under s 28 of the Land Sales Act 1984 to extend the period of time within which it was required to provide buyers with a registrable instrument of transfer. Following that approval, SSI began preparing and issuing new contracts to buyers. As a result, the original contracts were replaced and discharged by new contracts. The reissuing and execution of new contracts did not involve the provision of an Operator Product Disclosure Statement to the buyers. However, new Disclosure Statements in the form described in (b) above were given. From time to time further statements were sent to buyers pursuant to s 214 of the Act.

Relevant provisions of the contract

25. After the pages consisting of statutory warning statements and the like, the first page of the contract is headed:

> "Contract of Sale
>
> The Oracle"

and bears the logo for The Oracle below which appears the name:

> "The Oracle
> Central Broadbeach"

The contract includes a number of plans, including the site plan, a matrix plan showing levels/floors and a draft building format plan. Each of the relevant plans is headed "The Oracle". The contract included various definitions, including the "Scheme" (being the community titles scheme to be created under the Act by SSI and comprising the Scheme Land and the Community Management Statement). Provision was made for the payment of a deposit and for SSI, at its discretion, to accept in lieu of a deposit a Security in favour of the deposit holder. Clause 3 related to the development and its subdivision. Clause 5 provided for settlement to occur on the "Settlement Date" and this was to be 14 days after SSI's lawyers gave notice to the buyer or its lawyers that the Scheme had been established, or changed, to create the Lot. The contract provided for time to be of the essence and for default interest. In Clause 16 the buyer acknowledged having received from the seller, before it signed the contract:

(a) a Product Disclosure Statement under the Corporations Act; and
(b) a Disclosure Statement under the BCCM Act.

26. Clause 18 of the contract described the development of "the Land" as comprising:

(a) the Retail Lot; and
(b) the Scheme.

In Clause 18.2 the buyer acknowledged that the Retail Lot would be used for commercial activities and would generate noise, pedestrian and vehicle traffic and related activities incidental to the commercial activities. Clause 18.3(a) related to commercial activities in the Scheme Buildings. By clause 18.3(a) the buyer acknowledged:

> "that the Scheme may contain up to two levels in the Scheme Buildings which are used for Commercial Purposes."

The clause defined "Commercial Purposes" to mean "any lawful purpose that is non-residential."

The Disclosure Statements

27. Those buyers who entered into the original contracts were sent a disclosure statement which is referred to in the pleadings as "the original disclosure statement". Another disclosure statement was given to these buyers pursuant to s 213 of the Act before they entered into the replacement contracts. The original disclosure statement and the new disclosure statement were in materially identical terms. One of its first pages was titled "INFORMATION ABOUT THE DEVELOPMENT". The information page purported to give "a general outline of the development being undertaken by the Seller". It stated that:

> "The Seller intends to construct a residential and retail development.
> Land on which the Development will be constructed is proposed to be initially subdivided to create 2 lots (being a residential lot and a retail lot). The residential component, to be known as The Oracle, will be further subdivided by a building format plan to create a community titles scheme in respect of which there will be one body corporate. The Seller has not yet decided whether the retail component of the Development will be subdivided to create a community titles scheme. The retail component may also, at the Seller's discretion, be subdivided to create land from which another residential community titles scheme will be derived."

28. The disclosure statement given pursuant to s 213 of the Act stated that details of the terms of any proposed authorisation of a person as a letting agent for the Scheme proposed to be given after the establishment of the Scheme appeared in the Caretaking and Letting Agreement in Annexure 2. Annexure 2 consisted of a number of documents including the Caretaking and Letting Agreement.

29. Clause 3 of the Caretaking and Letting Agreement made provision for the remuneration of the Caretaker. Clause 3.6 provided that no part of the remuneration paid under cl 3 would be for carrying out any letting functions, providing any letting services or operating a letting business. Clause 4 defined the duties of the Caretaker.

30. Clause 6 of that agreement related to the Letting Business. It provided:

> "6.1 The Caretaker may carry on from the Caretaker's Unit the business of:
>
> (a) letting lots in the Scheme;
> (b) all associated services commonly rendered in connection with letting lots in developments similar to that comprising the Scheme; and > (c) any other lawful activity.
> 6.2 The Caretaker may provide such letting service for such owners of lots in the Scheme as require that service. However the owners are free to choose whether or not to use the letting services of the Caretaker to be provided under this Agreement.
> 6.3 If the Caretaker decides to provide the services referred to in this clause, then it will supervise the standard of tenants of all such lettings arranged by it and ensure, so far as practicable, that no nuisance is created on the Scheme Land and that the Scheme and lots in it are not brought into disrepute.
> 6.4 In so far as it is lawful, the Caretaker may erect signs reasonably necessary in or about the Scheme Land for the purpose of promoting and fostering the letting business. Such signs must be temporary and moveable.
> 6.5 The Caretaker must comply with all laws in conducting the letting business."

31. Clause 16 of the Caretaking and Letting Agreement provided for the Caretaker's Unit to be used by the Caretaker for the purpose of management of the property, conducting the letting business and any other lawful purpose.

32. Clause 20 was headed "Occupation Authority". Its various sub-clauses gave the Caretaker the authority to occupy identified parts of the Common Property on certain conditions. These areas were identified as OA1, OA2, OA3 and OA4. In each case the Caretaker was authorised to use the area in question to perform its duties under the agreement "and for any other lawful purpose". Areas OA1, OA2 and OA4 were for the exclusive occupation of the Caretaker. In the case of OA3 the caretaker was authorised to use it "for special events, functions, presentations or any other lawful use" (which together were called an Event). Clause 20.3 permitted the Caretaker to charge a fee for persons attending an Event and to retain that fee as its property. The clause went on to make provision in relation to the prior booking or reservation of OA3 by an owner. Clause 20.3(e) entitled the Caretaker to serve alcohol, other beverages and food on OA3 but only if all appropriate licences were held and laws were complied with to allow such service.

Clause 20.5 authorised the Caretaker to place signage and other items. It provided:

> "20.5 The Body Corporate gives the Caretaker the authority to place (and, where appropriate, have manned) a tour desk, brochure stands, signage, vending machines and other similar things (Structures) (for example, without limitation, marketing activities and sale of products) on any part of the Common Property on the following conditions:-
>
> (a) the Caretaker must keep any Structures in good condition and repair and to a standard commensurate with the surroundings in which they are located (namely a high quality and standard);
> (b) the Structures must not materially inhibit the flow of persons on the Common Property;
> (c) the Caretaker does not have the exclusive use of the area in which the Structures are located.
> (d) if the erection and use of a Structure causes any damage to the Common Property (except for fair wear and tear), the Caretaker must promptly make good such damage."

34. The separate document entitled "Developer Product Disclosure Statement" had the purpose of informing buyers of apartments about the opportunity to make their apartments available to the Operator for letting purposes. Buyers were not obliged to appoint the Operator to let their apartments. This Developer Product Disclosure Statement ("PDS") was required by the Australian Securities and Investments Commission ("ASIC") as a condition of a class order given by it under the Corporations Act in respect of "managed investment schemes". The Developer PDS gave an overview of the development and indicated that a further document called an "Operator PDS" would be issued in relation to the management rights scheme known as the "Oracle MR Scheme". Part 7 of the Developer PDS identified the benefits of participating in the Oracle MR Scheme as follows:

> "(a) all services such as cleaning/servicing of rooms are on-site, and done in a timely manner to suit Guests' arrivals and departures;
> (b) on-site reception facilities to meet and check in Guests;
> (c) telephone connection to the main reception, and through the CTS central system;
> (d) ability to utilise all guest services such as room service, restaurants, tours, etc which can all be charged to the room;
> (e) the on-site building manager can make available any specials or promotions that may exist at that time;
> (f) the on-site building manager is readily able to deal with Guests' needs;
> (g) wholesale accommodation operators requiring accommodation for on-sale to retail customers often prefer to deal with on-site building managers rather than off-site letting agents. This is because of the convenience to wholesale operators of dealing with just a few on-site building managers rather than many individual agents;
> (h) Guests wanting to let apartments in particular resorts or buildings frequently make inquiries with on-site building managers rather than approaching off-site letting agents."

35. Part 10 of the Developer PDS was headed "Returns to Participating Apartment Owners". Part 16 related to the returns that might be expected from participation in the Oracle MR Scheme. It advised that the income that a participating apartment owner receives from participation is uncertain and may vary. Ultimately, "occupancy levels and room rates will determine the gross income" from letting an apartment. This part of the document identified a number of factors that affected occupancy levels, including demand, the Australian economy, different seasons and the Operator. As to the Operator, it stated:

> "The demand for rooms may be influenced by the contacts that the Operator has in the industry and the Operator's experience in operating similar properties. An Operator that is unknown in the accommodation industry may have more difficulty attracting Guests."

The Operator PDS was to like effect. The version that was provided to Mr and Mrs Wicks was dated 16 December 2005. It identified its purpose as offering apartment owners the opportunity to make apartments available to Sky Asset Management Pty Ltd (SAM) "for short term, holiday and medium term letting purposes." It also gave an overview of the Oracle development and the benefits of participating in the Oracle MR Scheme. Clause 9 stated that the Operator would have "certain rights over part of the common property of the CTS, for example, rights to erect signage." These rights were said to be outlined in the proposed Community Management Statement. Clause 10 addressed returns to participating apartment owners. It defined apartment revenue as income received by the Operator for occupation only of the relevant apartment less "frequent flyer commissions, fees and other money payable to travel wholesalers and booking agents". Sub-clause 10(d) provided:

> "(d) Any fees, charges or other income received by SAM or any Manager which are not Apartment Revenue will not form part of the revenue paid to Participating Apartment Owners. For example, income from food and beverages, laundry and dry cleaning income and extra room servicing is not Apartment Revenue. That income will not be included in Apartment Revenue."

37. The Operator PDS contained provisions similar to the Developer PDS in relation to returns from participation in the Oracle MR Scheme including the factors that would influence demand for rooms. Clause 22 of the Operator PDS identified the main documents relating to the Oracle MR Scheme to be an application form, the appointment (PADMA Form 20a) and the Caretaking and Letting Agreement. It sought to summarise the key terms of the appointment as including the fact that the apartment owner appointed SAM "exclusively as agent for the Apartment Owner to let the Apartment for short term, holiday and medium term lettings." It enabled SAM to engage a manager to carry out its day to day activities. The definitions in cl 24 of the document included a definition of Apartment Revenue. Apartment Revenue was said not to include money that SAM received for selling goods and services to Guests or any other person. These goods and services were defined to include, without limitation:

> "(a) food and beverages;
> (b) laundry and dry cleaning;
> (c) extra room servicing;
> (d) entertainment, pay television, video hire and in-room movies;
> (e) telephone, facsimile or other communications services;
> (f) valet parking, arranging and providing transport;
> (g) gift shop and tour sales;
> (h) foreign exchange;
> (i) recreational facilities; and
> (j) conference room use and conference, office and business services and equipment use."

38. The Operator Product Disclosure Statement concluded with advice as to what an apartment owner who wanted to make an apartment available to SAM "for short term and holiday letting" must do.

39. The proposed Letting Appointment Agreement annexed to the Operator PDS referred to the agent's duties. The services that the agent was to provide included:

> "advise and promote the Property and The Oracle generally to travel agents, tourism operators and the public as a quality Guest accommodation".

The Further Disclosure Statements

40. SSI issued further disclosure statements from time to time. Again, adopting the further disclosure statements provided to Mr and Mrs Wicks as a convenient point of reference, on 27 September 2006 SSI provided a further disclosure statement pursuant to s 214 of the Act. It advised, among other things, that a Facility Sharing Agreement allowing the owners and occupiers of lots in the proposed Oracle Tower Two to use the facilities in The Oracle Community Titles Scheme had been varied, and that the facility sharing agreement for owners and occupiers of lots in The Oracle to use the facility in The Oracle Tower Two had been varied. It advised of variations in relation to the Facility Sharing Agreement benefiting the retail lot. It also advised that the proposed

[140431]

Caretaking and Letting Agreement to be entered into with the body corporate for The Oracle had been varied. The main changes to the documents that had previously been supplied were highlighted on attached documents. The single page further statement dated 27 September 2006 and the attached documents run to almost 200 pages.

41. A document described in the pleadings as the second s 214 further statement was provided by SSI on 16 January 2007. It related to changes to the Community Management Statement and to the Body Corporate budget and levies, which are not presently relevant. The third s 214 further statement was provided on 22 December 2008. Among other things, it annexed an amended Caretaking and Letting Agreement.

42. On 28 May 2010 SSI provided the "fourth section 214 further statement". It advised that the occupation authority plans, attached to the Caretaking and Letting Agreement, had been updated and attached a copy of them. It also advised that the Caretaking and Letting Agreement had been amended and attached a copy of the amended document. The amended document identified South Sky Assets Pty Ltd as the Caretaker. The fourth s 214 further statement also advised, among other things, that the Product Disclosure Statement for The Oracle Community Titles Scheme that had been previously distributed had been withdrawn, and a copy of the withdrawal notification was attached. The withdrawal notice dated 28 May 2010 stated that Sky Asset Management Pty Ltd (SAM) had previously proposed operating letting schemes for apartment owners and that the buyer may have received a PDS about the letting schemes. SAM advised that the Product Disclosure Statements that it had previously issued had been withdrawn and that ASIC had been notified of the withdrawal. The reason for the withdrawal was that the ASIC class order provided that where the minimum purchase price exceeded $500,000 a PDS was not required, and SAM was withdrawing the PDS because minimum purchase prices at The Oracle and The Oracle Tower Two exceeded $500,000. The statement went on to advise that despite the withdrawal of the PDS, the seller advised that it still expected that buyers and owners would be able to participate in letting schemes at The Oracle and The Oracle Tower Two, and that updated details about the new proposed letting schemes would be sent to the buyer shortly.

43. It is unnecessary to detail for present purposes minor changes made to the Caretaking and Letting Agreements by the first, third and fourth s 214 further statements. The plaintiffs rely upon the fact that the amendments to the Caretaking and Letting Agreement for The Oracle did not change the terms of the Letting Business described in cl 6 of that agreement. SSI relies on the fact that the Caretaking and Letting Agreements annexed to the Disclosure Statement given under s 213 of the Act and to the first, third and fourth s 214 further statements provided, among other things:

> (a) for the Caretaker to provide letting services and to operate a letting business;
> (b) for the Caretaker's unit to be used for the purposes of the management of the property and conducting the letting business (and any other lawful purpose);
> (c) that the letting business involved the letting of lots, all associated services and any other lawful activity;
> (d) that the body corporate gave the Caretaker the authority to occupy part of the common property for special events, functions and presentations or any other lawful use and that the Caretaker might serve alcohol, other beverages and food in that area if all appropriate licences were held and laws complied with to allow such service;
> (e) that the body corporate gave the Caretaker the authority to place (and, where appropriate, have manned) a tour desk, brochure stands, signage, vending machines and other similar things on any part of the common property on certain conditions.

The plaintiffs' cases in relation to the disclosure statements

44. The plaintiffs rely upon the fact that the disclosure statement and the first, second, third and fourth s 214 further statements (and related material) were expressed to relate to The Oracle and/or The Oracle CTS. SSI admits this. There is no contest that the disclosure statement given under the Act, as varied by the first, second, third and fourth s 214 further statements, formed part of the contract by virtue of s 215 of the Act. The plaintiffs plead that, in the premises, there were further terms of the contract that:

> (a) SSI would sell to the plaintiff a specified lot "in a residential tower in The Oracle"; and

(b) any authorisation of a person as letting agent would be in the terms of the Caretaking and Letting Agreement annexed to the Disclosure Statement and as described in the Developer PDS and the Operator PDS.

The plaintiffs invoke s 216 of the Act and plead that they are entitled to rely on the information in the disclosure statement, the first, second, third, fourth (and, in one case, fifth) further statements, and the respective annexures to those as if SSI had warranted their accuracy. On that basis, the plaintiffs plead that SSI warranted to them that:

(a) the relevant lot would be, and would be sold to the relevant plaintiff as, an apartment in a residential tower in The Oracle; and
(b) any authorisation of a person as letting agent would be in the terms of the Caretaking and Letting Agreement annexed to the disclosure statement.

45. SSI admits that it was a term of the contract that, subject to the terms and conditions of the contract, it would sell to the plaintiffs the relevant lot in Tower One of The Oracle development, but otherwise denies that it was a term of the contract that any authorisation of a person as letting agent would be in the terms of the Caretaking and Letting Agreement, as pleaded by the plaintiffs. The denial is based upon, among other things, the additional terms pleaded by it in its defence and the fact that any authorisation by the body corporate for a person to be the on-site letting agent was to be on the terms of the Caretaking and Letting Agreement annexed to the fourth s 214 further statement.

The appointment of Peppers

46. Peppers was established in 1984 when Peppers Guest House opened in the Hunter Valley. According to its website, the "short break market" was then in its infancy. Its website states:

> "Today you will find the Peppers collection of Retreats and Resorts in the most extraordinary places throughout Australia and New Zealand. You will find us set amongst rainforests, vineyards and cities, as stately homes, on cattle stations, mountain ranges, golf courses, beaches and tropical islands, each property boasting its own individual charm and character."

Its web page titled "Escapes and Experiences" states:

> "At Peppers, our exquisite collection of Resorts and Retreats present a plethora of specialised escapes. Our romantic escapes offer the chance to reconnect while our indulgence escapes allow you to relish in life's luxuries. For blissful pampering try one of our renowned spas or for the ultimate in serene seclusion our beach or island escapes are perfect."

The website and other promotional material from Peppers is badged under the logo:

PEPPERS

RETREATS.RESORTS.HOTELS

47. Peppers forms part of the Mantra Group of companies. Mantra operates three divisions or brands — Peppers, Mantra and Break Free — which offer hotels, resorts, retreats and self-contained accommodation on a short-term or holiday basis. Each brand is positioned in different markets.

48. In about early 2009 SSI started to give serious thought to selling the management rights at The Oracle. In mid-2009 meetings were held with representatives of different groups who had expressed interest, including the Mantra group of companies. Any entity which was appointed to undertake caretaking/letting/management at The Oracle required substantial capacity since, with more than 500 apartments, the caretaking and letting activity was a substantial enterprise. After discussions, SSI decided that Mantra's top brand, Peppers, should be appointed because it was a "premium brand and because Mantra was prepared to offer a better price for the management rights." SSI thought that the Peppers brand would bring the level of professionalism and quality to The Oracle that was required. As part of the negotiations, Mantra requested that a liquor licence be obtained in the name of South Sky Assets Pty Ltd ("SSA"), and application was made by SSA with SSI's consent.

Discussions between SSI and Mantra turned to how Mantra could provide guests who stayed in The Oracle with services, including mini-bars.

49. A Share Sale Agreement relating to the sale of the shares in SSA, a company then in the Niecon group of companies, was entered into on 14 July 2010. All the issued shares in SSA which were owned at the time by South Sky Enterprises Pty Ltd, another Niecon company, were sold to Peppers Leisure Pty Ltd, conditional upon certain events.

50. The amount payable under the Share Sale Agreement was the subject of detailed provisions. There were to be various payments, including a "Key Payment" for each qualifying lot in excess of 150 qualifying lots during the initial period ending on 30 November 2012. The payment of the purchase price was subject to, among other things, the Tower One body corporate consenting to an application by SSA for a liquor licence in respect of the relevant part of the land in the tower that SSA could occupy and the body corporate of Tower Two consenting to a similar application in respect of relevant land in that tower. The Share Sale Agreement contemplated "Restaurant Works" as part of the "Buyer's Fitout". The works are set out in Annexure L to the Share Sale Agreement and involve the creation of a restaurant and kitchen in Lot 101 (the Caretaker's Unit) on the ground floor of Tower One. In addition to the provision for SSA to obtain a liquor licence over the areas it was entitled to occupy, the Share Sale Agreement provided for SSA to apply for a liquor licence in respect of the restaurant and bar, and areas adjoining them, the lots and the "Authorised Common Property" (being the Occupation Areas). These provisions were to facilitate the service of liquor in the planned restaurant and bar, at events, in mini-bars and by room service. They were important to Peppers in delivering the services that were necessary to achieve the standards required of one of its resorts.

51. The Share Sale Agreement addressed the issue of signage and required SSI within 14 days of the establishment of the Tower One Scheme to cause the Tower One body corporate to approve the signage referred to in Annexure I. A similar obligation arose in respect of signage on Tower Two.

52. The result of the carrying into effect of this agreement has been the establishment of large neon Peppers signage on the top of each building. Other Peppers signage appears in and around the residential tower.

53. On or about 14 September 2010, the Community Management Statement for The Oracle Community Titles Scheme was registered. On 4 October 2010 the body corporate for The Oracle CTS entered into a Caretaking and Letting Agreement with SSA. On and from 7 November 2010 Peppers Leisure Pty Ltd caused SSA to operate its on-site letting business in respect of Tower One and Tower Two in accordance with the Caretaking and Letting Agreement. Although SSA was still a Niecon company, Peppers Leisure Pty Ltd assumed control of its activities under the Share Sale Agreement. The Share Sale Agreement settled on Monday, 28 February 2011. However, before this date Peppers signage had been installed and Peppers Broadbeach had been launched.

54. Shortly after the Share Sale Agreement was entered into, the appointment of Peppers was announced in a letter to buyers and also in a joint press release made on or about 23 July 2010. The letter stated that:

> "The Oracle will be branded Peppers Broadbeach and will be the flagship Peppers hotel."

The joint SSI/Peppers press release was titled:

> "Peppers to launch the Gold Coast's first five star hotel in a decade".

The press release, which was approved by SSI prior to its release, made a number of references to "hotel". The news of Peppers' appointment apparently attracted attention. Mr and Mrs Wicks received a letter dated 6 August 2010 from Noble House Design which stated:

> "We were delighted to hear of the appointment of Peppers as Residential Managers to The Oracle which will be branded 'Peppers Broadbeach'".

[140434]

In late July, after the joint press release had been issued, Mr Mark Johnson, the Chief Operating Officer for both Niecon and SSI, says that he formed the view that it was not correct to call the development a hotel and he issued instructions to Niecon employees to request that Mantra not describe it as a hotel.

56. By this time, and despite the fact that the Share Sale Agreement was still conditional, Mantra had been provided with information about buyers to enable it to convey information to them.

57. By 12 August 2010, Mantra had prepared an "Owners Pack" and other material for distribution to buyers. Mr Johnson learned that the material had been printed for distribution that day, when he was told that Mantra had "boxes and boxes of documents printed and that it was too late for SSI to review it because they were being sent." Mr Johnson says that he asked Mantra's representatives to hold off sending information until SSI had had a proper chance to review it. However, the packs were sent without any review or approval by SSI. The material was sent under cover of a letter dated 12 August 2010 signed by Ms Simms of the Owner Relations Department of Peppers Retreats, Resorts and Hotels. It was on letterhead styled Peppers Broadbeach and referred to the appointment of Peppers as "onsite Hotel Managers". It referred to the opportunity for holiday letting, furniture packages and other matters. It enclosed forms that would facilitate its appointment by an owner as a letting agent. It attached a brochure that described Peppers Broadbeach as a hotel.

58. The material was sent by Mantra to buyers before SSI had an opportunity to review its contents properly and obtain legal advice about its implications for contracts with buyers. I accept Mr Johnson's evidence that SSI did not authorise or approve references in the packs to the development as a hotel.

59. On 24 August 2010 SSI sent a pro forma letter to owners advising that The Oracle precinct was nearing completion and that it was estimated that completion of the residential buildings (and settlements) should occur in early to mid October. It informed owners about the opportunity to undertake an inspection and provided contact details for various inquiries, including inquiries about the holiday or permanent letting program.

60. On 30 August 2010, Ms Simms from Peppers Broadbeach sent a letter to owners which stated:

> "By now you would have received Owners Packs outlining the letting program to be operated from The Oracle and The Oracle Tower 2. As you know, South Sky Assets Pty Ltd is to be the Caretaker of each tower in line with the disclosed Caretaking and Letting Agreements. The Caretaker will be operating the holiday letting pool under the Peppers Broadbeach brand."

The letter went on to advise that Peppers Broadbeach had a guest program that was "developed to not only provide you as an owner with great 'hotel style' services and management, but offers many services not available to any other apartment owner or guest on the Gold Coast."

61. Despite requests from SSI to Mantra/Peppers' representatives not to refer to the development as a hotel in the marketing, Ms Simms sent an email to a buyer in September 2010 which again referred to the development as a hotel. Ultimately, SSI instructed its solicitors to write to Mantra demanding that they cease referring to the development as a hotel in any marketing. Mantra eventually agreed to cease referring to the development as a hotel and made amendments to its website. However, it continued to communicate with owners and others by referring to Peppers Broadbeach rather than The Oracle. For example, a letter dated 24 September 2010 from Ms Simms of Peppers Retreats, Resorts and Hotels was sent on Peppers Broadbeach letterhead and referred to Peppers holiday letting packs. It stated: "In the 4 weeks since we commenced taking bookings for Peppers Broadbeach, bookings have been incredibly strong and we have already oversold on various room nights."

62. These communications were apt to alert buyers who had contracted to purchase an apartment in Oracle Tower One that the letting agent intended to engage in the business of short-term and holiday letting. This would not have come as a surprise to a buyer who had read the various disclosure statements and other documents that had been sent to them over the previous years. Earlier in 2010 SSI had written to buyers from time to time about the letting program. A pro forma letter dated 22 February 2010 advised owners that SSI had been "busy finalising our in-house Oracle Management and Letting Program." This letter advised that SSI could "dove-tail an ideal holiday letting program that will work with your own requirements for using your apartment". Other letters sent to buyers before the announcement of Peppers' appointment also informed buyers about a holiday letting program. For example, a letter dated 31 May 2010 to Mr and Mrs Wicks stated that the advantage of using the in-house management team included "walk-in bookings", convenient on-site check-in and other services guests would expect from a facility of such stature.

63. In short, after the Share Sale Agreement was entered into, and prior to the date for settlement of the buyers' contracts, the fact that the letting business would be operated by Peppers was communicated to buyers. Certain correspondence continued to refer to "The Oracle and The Oracle Tower 2". SSI did not give a further disclosure statement relating to the implications of the Share Sale Agreement. However, the Share Sale Agreement related to the sale by the developer of management rights, and a disclosure statement given under the Act is not required to disclose the terms of such a sale. If, however, such an agreement alters the terms of a Caretaking and Letting Agreement which has previously been disclosed pursuant to s 213 or s 214, so that the disclosure statement has become inaccurate, then this will attract the provisions of s 214 and s 217.

64. The Share Sale Agreement, in effect, stated the terms upon which South Sky Enterprises Pty Ltd (SSE) would sell the management rights business to Mantra/Peppers. The mechanism for the sale was the sale of SSE's shares in South Sky Assets Pty Ltd (SSA) to Peppers Leisure Pty Ltd (Peppers). The agreement was conditional upon a number of matters, including entry by the body corporates of the Tower One and Tower Two schemes into Caretaking and Letting Agreements in the form that had been disclosed to buyers. It was also conditional upon:

> (a) the body corporate consenting to applications for liquor licences over areas it was entitled to occupy;
> (b) the body corporate approving the alterations required for a restaurant and bar to be constructed in Lot 101;
> (c) the body corporate approving certain signage in accordance with the Caretaking and Letting Agreements.

The signage for which the Share Sale Agreement provided included Peppers "hero signs" atop each building and signs at the lobby entrance to each building.

65. The conditions of the Share Sale Agreement were implemented over time. The hero sign on Tower Two was installed in December 2010 and the one on Tower One in March 2011. On 1 October 2010 the first meeting of the body corporate for The Oracle was held, and the South Sky interests procured resolutions to enter the Caretaking and Letting Agreement with SSA, to consent to applications by SSA for a liquor licence over the lots and certain areas of common property and for the erection of signage in accordance with a signage plan.

66. A liquor licence was granted on 8 December 2010. The licence is a Subsidiary On Premises licence relating to The Oracle, which means that alcohol can only be served whilst SSA adheres to its primary function of providing accommodation. Since the liquor licence was granted, some apartments have been excluded from it, reflecting the fact that owners who do not wish to have it apply to their apartments can choose not to do so.

67. An application was made to the Gold Coast City Council for confirmation that the proposed restaurant and bar is generally in accordance with the existing approval. The restaurant and bar are yet to be built within Lot 101, but their establishment is important to Peppers in ensuring it achieves its desired rating, and this apparently requires an in-house restaurant and bar for its guests to access. In support of the application the Mantra Group's Director of Acquisitions wrote to the Chief Executive Officer of the Gold Coast City Council on 6 April 2010 and advised that, without a restaurant and kitchen, Mantra could not brand The Oracle as a "Peppers Resort" and that a "restaurant facility and room service is something that is expected in a 4.5–5 star strata titled resort." The letter concluded:

> "Although it is hoped that the restaurant will obtain a good reputation for its quality of service, it is not intended to be advertised for the general public. It is understood that it will be of such a capacity to service in-house guests and residents.

It is critical for the resort branding for Peppers at the Oracle to have a restaurant facility. A restaurant and room service facility is ancillary to its management rights business."

68. In the months immediately preceding the date for settlement of their contracts the plaintiffs knew of the appointment of Peppers as Caretaking and Letting Agent, and they received a variety of communications from both SSI and Peppers. Initially SSI stated that: "The Oracle will be branded Peppers Broadbeach and will be the flagship Peppers hotel." This was said by SSI on or about 23 July 2010. SSI and Peppers jointly announced the same thing. Peppers continued to describe Peppers Broadbeach as a hotel, despite SSI's requests that it not do so.

69. On 29 November 2010, which was after the date for settlement fixed by the contracts, SSI's Group Operations Manager wrote to purchasers noting that SSI's earlier advice that "The Oracle/Peppers Broadbeach would be the flagship Peppers hotel" had caused some confusion. The letter advised:

"While the 'Peppers Broadbeach' brand features prominently, the precinct includes the same luxury residential buildings and facilities which we started constructing in 2006. The Peppers group will be offering hotel-like services for the precinct, but The Oracle/Peppers Broadbeach is not a hotel. The two towers (called The Oracle Tower 1 and The Oracle Tower 2) are not hotel buildings. The Oracle/ Peppers Broadbeach comprises two luxury residential buildings, with all the facilities and services you'd expect to find in a hotel."

70. SSI's caution after July 2010 in not wanting The Oracle described as a hotel is understandable. As Mr Johnson explained in his evidence, the building had not been approved by Council for use as a hotel. At least one buyer had complained following the announcement about Peppers, and Mr Johnson was concerned that some buyers would use the description of Peppers Broadbeach as a hotel to avoid their contracts.

71. SSI had permitted the development to be described as a hotel in the joint press release of 23 July 2010, despite knowing that the development approval did not allow the building to be described as a hotel. Shortly afterwards Mr Johnson reflected on the matter and issued a standing instruction to his staff to request that Mantra not describe the development as a hotel. Part of the concern was that the building did not have a certificate of classification for hotel use, and an associated concern was that inaccurate descriptions of the building might prejudice contracts of sale. SSI sought to review documents, such as the material sent by Peppers to owners on or about 12 August 2010, because of a requirement of its financiers not to put any of the contracts of sale under threat.

72. After the 23 July 2010 joint press release, SSI received at least one protest from a buyer of a proposed lot. A question asked of Mr Johnson during his cross-examination tended to suggest that there were protests from more than one buyer, but Mr Johnson's answer referred to a "query from a buyer". There is no evidence that there was a large number of protests, and on the evidence there may have been only one, it having been made shortly after the 23 July 2010 joint press release.

73. The plaintiffs in these proceedings did not complain to SSI prior to the date originally set for settlement about the appointment of Peppers, save for Mr Gough and Ms Groves who purported to terminate in a solicitor's letter dated 13 October 2010, some six days before the settlement date. The letter complained about the promotion of the development by Peppers as a "hotel" and an increase in letting fees over those previously estimated. Ms Ryan gave her reasons for not complaining earlier than her solicitor's letter of 4 November 2010. She was hoping to be employed by Niecon and did not want to sound like she "hated the building". One plaintiff, NOA 8338 Pty Ltd, by its director, Mr Ford, communicated with Peppers in October 2010 about possible arrangements for leasing the apartment it had contracted to purchase. It is possible that the plaintiffs did not know the extent to which Peppers intended to brand the building as Peppers Broadbeach, and they were not told about the terms of the Share Sale Agreement that facilitated this by signage. They were not told about plans for a liquor licence of the kind contemplated by the Share Sale Agreement or of the plan to have a ground floor restaurant and bar so as to facilitate Peppers' plans. Still, the plaintiffs were aware after July/August 2010 of the appointment of Peppers, and of its plans to use the Peppers Broadbeach brand and to promote short stays and holiday lettings. The plaintiffs did not complain to SSI about these things soon after becoming aware of them, or complain about the services that they expected Peppers would supply to its guests.

Purported terminations

74. After The Oracle CTS was established, SSI's solicitors sent letters to buyers nominating settlement dates. Some of the plaintiffs negotiated short extensions of time within which to settle. The first settlements were set for 19 October 2010. In various forms, and on various dates, the plaintiffs in each of these proceedings purported to cancel the contract.

Common issues

75. The pleadings in each proceeding are in a generally similar form. In each proceeding the same essential allegation is made, namely that the plaintiff contracted to purchase an apartment in a residential tower in The Oracle when in fact the apartment purportedly offered in performance by SSI is an apartment in a hotel/resort branded Peppers Broadbeach.[15]

76. The statements of claim in each proceeding continue with allegations along the same lines. For example, it is alleged that the plaintiff contracted to purchase an apartment the resale value of which would be determined by reference to it being an apartment in a residential tower in The Oracle and not an apartment which is an element in a hotel/resort branded Peppers Broadbeach. Additional allegations along these lines are made in respect of the rental value of an apartment in a residential tower in The Oracle rather than an apartment in such a hotel/resort branded Peppers Broadbeach. Further allegations are made in relation to the ability to advertise and let through an off-site agent and the ability to obtain on-site caretaker and letting services in accordance with the disclosed letting agreements, which are pleaded to have been more favourable to an owner than that available through Peppers. The plaintiffs plead that the practical consequence of the apartment being in a hotel/resort branded Peppers Broadbeach rather than an apartment in The Oracle will include:

> (a) an increase in the extent and intensity of use of common areas because of the increased number of persons (hotel/resort guests and hotel/resort staff) using it;
> (b) an increase in the public access and use of the development resulting in a reduction of privacy and security;
> (c) a compromise of the plaintiffs' use and enjoyment of the apartment and common areas;
> (d) accelerated deterioration of common areas;
> (e) preventing the plaintiffs from attracting persons who do not wish to stay in a hotel/resort; and
> (f) preventing the plaintiffs from attracting persons who do not wish to stay in a premises the subject of a liquor licence.

77. By reason of the date upon which they purported to cancel, only some of the plaintiffs are able to seek to invoke the statutory right to cancel under s 214(4)(b) and s 217(b)(iv). However, each plaintiff alleges that the final disclosure statement has become inaccurate on a number of grounds. These include the fact that the disclosure statement describes the lot as a lot in a residential tower, whereas the disclosure statement if now given would state that the lot was an apartment in a hotel/resort, and also would state that the lot is in a hotel/resort branded "Peppers Broadbeach".

78. Reliance is placed upon the fact that the Caretaking and Letting Agreement, if given now, would have to disclose that the plaintiffs would have no practical ability to let the lot through an off-site agent or privately because:

[140438]

> (a) the development is branded as Peppers Broadbeach and as a hotel/resort rather than apartments available for holiday letting in the normal course;
> (b) The plaintiffs would not be able to use the name and mark Peppers Broadbeach in order to advertise the apartment; and
> (c) The plaintiffs would not be able to use the name and mark The Oracle in order to advertise the apartments.

79. Another ground of alleged inaccuracy is that the Caretaking and Letting Agreement, by cl 6, enabled the caretaker to erect temporary and moveable signs for the purpose of promoting and fostering the letting business whereas the disclosure statements if given now would disclose that the caretaker would be entitled to affix signage to and above the scheme property, including signs erected on the exterior of Oracle Tower One and Oracle Tower Two identifying each tower as “Peppers”.

80. The plaintiffs place reliance upon the terms of the Share Sale Agreement as part of their respective cases. Particular reliance is placed upon the provision of the Share Sale Agreement in relation to a liquor licence, the restaurant and bar to be established in the caretaker’s lot and the provision for Peppers signage.

81. The various pleaded features of the tower as a result of the appointment of Peppers are alleged to have resulted in a substantial difference between acquiring an apartment in a residential tower known as The Oracle and an apartment in a hotel/resort branded Peppers Broadbeach.

82. The common issues in each proceeding may be broadly summarised as follows:

> 1. What was promised by the terms of the written contract and the disclosure statements that formed part of it by virtue of s 215 of the BCCM Act? In particular, did the plaintiff in each proceeding contract to purchase an apartment in a residential tower known as The Oracle?
> 2. Was the plaintiff offered in performance of the contract something substantially different to what the plaintiff contracted to purchase, namely an apartment in a hotel/resort branded Peppers Broadbeach?
> 3. If so, was the plaintiff entitled to terminate the contract because SSI evinced an intention not to be bound by the terms of the contract in that:
>
> > (a) SSI no longer intended to provide to the plaintiff at settlement an apartment in a residential tower known as The Oracle but rather an apartment in a hotel/resort to be known as Peppers Broadbeach with the features alleged in the statement of claim; and > > (b) any authorisation of a person as letting agent would not be in the terms of the Caretaking and Letting Agreement annexed to the final disclosure statement, and as described in the Developer PDS and the Operator PDS.
> 4. In the alternative, were certain plaintiffs (Mr and Mrs Wicks, Mr Gough and Ms Groves, and Ms Ryan) entitled to cancel the contract pursuant to s 214 or s 217 of the Act?

83. If a plaintiff was entitled to terminate or cancel the contract, then there will be declarations to that effect and consequential orders for the delivery up of bank guarantees/deposits. If, however, the plaintiff was not so entitled, then it is accepted that SSI should obtain orders for specific performance and other relief on its counterclaim by way of damages for costs that it has incurred as a result of the plaintiff’s failure to settle. The basis for the calculation of such damages has been agreed and the parties proposed that an updated calculation be produced up to the date of judgment.

What documents comprised the contract by virtue of s 215 of the Act?

84. There is no issue on the pleadings that it was a term of the contract that, subject to its terms and conditions, SSI would sell to the plaintiff or plaintiffs in each proceeding the specified lot in Tower One of The Oracle. Nor is there any issue that by virtue of s 215 of the Act it was a further term of the contract that any authorisation by the body corporate for a person to be the letting agent would be on the terms of a Caretaking and Letting Agreement annexed to the disclosure statement given under the Act.

The first issue between the parties as to the terms of the contract relates to the documents that form part of the provisions of the contract by virtue of s 215 of the Act.

85. The plaintiffs submit that by operation of s 215 of the Act the contract comprised the following documents:

> (a) The Contract of Sale;
> (b) The Disclosure Statement title page;
> (c) The Developer PDS;
> (d) The Disclosure Statement given pursuant to s 213 of the Act and the 13 documents annexed to it; and > (e) The Operator PDS.

SSI submits that the Operator PDS is not a contractual document and has no effect under the Act. It also submits that the Developer PDS does not contain contractual warranties and the mere fact that it was provided at the same time as the BCCM Disclosure Statement does not make it "accompanying material" for the purposes of s 215 of the Act.

The Operator PDS

86. The Operator PDS was provided with the original contracts. It was not provided again to the buyers who entered the original contracts before they entered into the replacement contracts. Mr Gough and Ms Groves received an Operator PDS prior to executing contracts to purchase Lots 2905 and 2907 in October 2006.

87. The Operator PDS was issued by Sky Asset Management Pty Ltd (SAM), not SSI. It explained that it was issued by SAM to comply with the requirements of the Corporations Act in relation to managed investment schemes. Under a managed rights scheme class order, ASIC granted exemption from certain registration requirements subject to compliance with conditions. One of the conditions of the ASIC class order was that a Product Disclosure Statement be given to a buyer of an apartment before entry into a contract. The purpose of the Operator PDS was to provide information about the Oracle MR Scheme to enable owners to decide, once they had received it, whether or not to participate in arrangements to make their apartment available for letting.

88. The Operator PDS was provided as a separate bound document. The covering letter that was sent to the buyers who entered into an original contract identified it as a separate and distinct document from the disclosure statements which included the Developer PDS under the Corporations Act and the disclosure statement under the BCCM Act. Both the covering letter and the terms of the Operator PDS distinguished it from the disclosure statement given under the BCCM Act.

89. The contract itself did not refer to the Operator PDS, let alone give it contractual force. Clause 16 of the contract included an acknowledgment by the buyer of having received from the seller, before it signed the contract, a Product Disclosure Statement under the Corporations Act and a disclosure statement under the BCCM Act. In the case of the replacement contract this was referrable to the Developer PDS and the BCCM Disclosure Statement respectively since no new Operator PDS was provided to these buyers.

90. The contract did not incorporate the Developer PDS as a term of the contract. The Developer PDS contemplated that the operator would issue an Operator PDS. However, it did not purport to incorporate any Operator PDS. It contemplated that a detailed PDS about the Oracle MR Scheme would be issued by the Operator. The Developer PDS made no promise about what its terms would be, and stated that "no warranty can [sic] or is given by South Sky as to what conditions the Appointment will contain. Those conditions will be decided by the Operator."

91. The Operator PDS was not given any contractual force by the contract. Accordingly, the issue is whether s 215 of the Act operated so that it formed part of the contract. I have earlier summarised s 215. Section 215 provides:

> "215 Statements and information sheet form part of contract
>
> (1) The disclosure statement, and any material accompanying the disclosure statement, and each further statement and any material accompanying each further statement, form part of the provisions of the contract.
> (2) The information sheet does not form part of the provisions of the contract."

92. An Operator PDS was not provided at the time the disclosure statement required by s 213 was given in relation to the replacement contracts. However, Mr Gough and Ms Groves received an Operator PDS at the same time as they received the BCCM Disclosure Statement.

93. The word "accompanying" in s 215 must be construed in its statutory context. Section 213 of the Act provides that the disclosure statement that the seller must give pursuant to s 213(1) must "state", "include", "be accompanied by" or "identify" certain things. For example, s 213(2)(e) provides that the disclosure statement "must be accompanied by" the proposed community management statement.

94. The reference in s 215 to "material accompanying the disclosure statement" should be interpreted to refer to material that is required to accompany the disclosure statement and material that accompanies it because, for example, it is intended to form part of the disclosure statement, not simply material that happens to be provided at the same time as the disclosure statement. It is apt to refer to documents that are incorporated by reference into the disclosure statement and that accompany it, or to documents which are annexed to it.

95. I was referred to passages in Mirvac Queensland Pty Ltd v Horne[16] which considered the provisions of s 21 and s 22 of the Land Sales Act 1984 (Qld), but these passages do not particularly assist in deciding the meaning of "accompanying material" in s 215(1) of the BCCM Act.

96. I do not accept the plaintiffs' principal submission that the statutory purpose of the Act in which s 215 is contained is served by a literal interpretation of "any material accompanying" since the language is "of the widest import". Such an interpretation would extend the operation of s 215 and give contractual force to any material, for example, a document that had nothing to do with the requirements of the Act, such as a tourist brochure, or a statutory notice required by some other legislation, which happened to be sent together with the disclosure statement required by s 213 of the Act. An interpretation that extends the operation of s 215 to everything that is sent in the same envelope as the BCCM Disclosure Statement has little to commend it. An interpretation that will best achieve the purpose of the Act is to be preferred to any other interpretation.[17] An interpretation which gives contractual force to documents unrelated to the requirements of the Act does not achieve the purpose of the Act, and would have apparently unintended consequences. A seller would need to avoid including in the same envelope in which the s 213 disclosure statement was sent any other document, for fear that it would be treated as "material accompanying" the disclosure statement and form part of the contract by virtue of s 215.

97. It would also be an odd and apparently unintended consequence if the parties' contractual obligations depended on whether an Operator PDS required by the Corporations Act, or some other document not required by the BCCM Act, was sent in the same or a separate envelope to the disclosure statement required by s 213.

98. It is unnecessary to consider the variety of possible circumstances in which a document may constitute "material accompanying" the disclosure statement. It is sufficient to conclude that the separate provision of the Operator PDS did not mean that it was "material accompanying" the disclosure statement given under the BCCM Act for the purposes of s 215. It follows that the Operator PDS did not form part of the provisions of the contract by virtue of s 215.

99. In summary, the contract did not include the Operator PDS.

The Developer PDS

100. When the original contracts were sent to the buyers they were sent under cover of a letter which separately listed what were described as:

(a) Disclosure Statements;
(b) the Contract of Sale;
(c) the Operator PDS.

The Disclosure Statements were pre-bound under a title page "Disclosure Statement" and consisted of:

(a) the Developer PDS;
(b) the Disclosure Statement given under the BCCM Act which consisted of a covering page, an index and:

(i) a single page titled "INFORMATION ABOUT THE DEVELOPMENT";

[140441]

(ii) a document styled Disclosure Statement (Section 213 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 and Section 21 of the Land Sales Act 1984);
(iii) a PAMDA Form 27c and several annexures.

The Disclosure Statements were pre-bound. The Operator PDS was also sent to the buyers under the original contracts under cover of the same letter and was in a separate pre-bound form.

101. The original contracts were replaced and discharged by new contracts. The re-issuing and execution of the new contracts did not include the provision of an Operator PDS. However, it involved the sending of a new set of documents for execution by the buyers. The new contract of sale was sent along with disclosure statements in the form that I have already described, namely the Developer PDS, the disclosure statement given pursuant to s 213 of the BCCM Act and accompanying materials.

102. The Developer PDS was issued under the managed investment scheme provisions of the Corporations Act, not pursuant to any requirement of the BCCM Act. It explained that it was issued so as to satisfy one of the conditions of the ASIC class order. Its contents distinguished it from the disclosure statement required by the BCCM Act.

103. The contract did not give the Developer PDS contractual force. The document itself did not purport to be of contractual force. The fact that it was given at the same time and in the same bound document as the BCCM Act disclosure statement does not mean that it constituted "material accompanying" the disclosure statement for the purposes of s 215. It was in a different form to the documents which were annexed to the disclosure statement given under the BCCM Act. It was not required to be given by s 213 of the Act, and s 213 did not require it to accompany the BCCM Act disclosure statement. It was given so as to comply with the requirements of the Corporations Act. The disclosure statement given under the BCCM Act did not incorporate it by reference. It was not "material accompanying" the BCCM disclosure statement for the purposes of s 215 of the Act. The fact that, as a matter of convenience to both the buyer and seller, it was sent at the same time as a disclosure statement given under the BCCM Act does not mean that it formed part of the contract by virtue of s 215.

104. In summary, the Developer PDS was not incorporated by the terms of the contract, and it did not form part of the contract by virtue of s 215.

The information page

105. As previously noted, the Disclosure Statement given in compliance with s 213 of the BCCM Act included a single page titled "INFORMATION ABOUT THE DEVELOPMENT". The index of documents contained in that Disclosure Statement referred to it, and to other documents including numerous annexures, as being "documents contained in this Disclosure Statement". I find that the information page formed part of the BCCM Disclosure Statement in that it was physically bound up with it. If, however, it did not form part of it, like the annexures, it was "material accompanying" the Disclosure Statement since it was part of a single "pre-bound" Disclosure Statement that was given in order to comply with obligations under s 213 of the Act. Apart from being physically bound up with other parts of the Disclosure Statement, it was "material accompanying" the Disclosure Statement since it gave a general outline of the development more specifically described in the following pages of the document. Because it either formed part of the BCCM Disclosure Statement, or was "material accompanying" it within the meaning of s 215 of the Act, the information page forms part of the provisions of the contract by virtue of s 215.

The annexures included in the Disclosure Statement

106. For similar reasons, the annexures to the disclosure statement, including the Caretaking and Letting Agreement, form part of the provisions of the contract.

What did SSI promise in the contract?

107. The plaintiffs submit that in each case they contracted to buy an "off-the-plan" unit — a "proposed lot" — in a development to be known as The Oracle. They rely upon the terms of the contract (which was titled "Contract of Sale: The Oracle") and location plans that formed part of it. Each plan is headed The Oracle. They also rely upon the Disclosure Statement including the first document contained in it headed "INFORMATION ABOUT THE DEVELOPMENT". I have earlier quoted the contents of this document at paragraph [27] of these reasons. The plaintiffs place particular reliance upon the following statement:

> "Land on which the Development will be constructed is proposed to be initially subdivided to create 2 lots (being a residential lot and a retail lot). The residential component, to be known as The Oracle …".

The plaintiffs also rely upon the contents of the Disclosure Statement which refer to the proposed lot being purchased in The Oracle development as identified on the location plan contained in the contract of sale.

108. The plaintiffs submit that, whether taken individually or together, the contract of sale and these other documents (which form part of the provisions of the contract by virtue of s 215) provide that SSI "would sell to the Plaintiff the particular lot in a residential tower in The Oracle development."

109. In response, SSI notes that there are potentially two components to this allegation: firstly, that the tower was to be a residential tower; and, secondly, that the tower was to be in The Oracle. It relies upon the fact that there is no allegation in the pleadings that a reference to The Oracle had a particular meaning at the time of the contracts, so that such a meaning was somehow incorporated into them. Evidence from the plaintiffs about marketing material and conversations was not relevant to what was contractually promised about The Oracle because the plaintiffs did not plead that the contracts comprised anything other than certain documents referred to in the pleadings. The meaning of The Oracle is to be derived from the contractual documents, and the plaintiffs' various understandings of what was meant by The Oracle is irrelevant in determining the terms of the contract. SSI submits, and I accept, that in deciding what was contractually promised by it, I refer to the contract documents, not to some abstract concept derived from matters outside of them.

110. The plaintiffs do not plead that The Oracle had a particular meaning at the time the contracts were negotiated, and that this meaning is incorporated into them. The plaintiffs plead, and SSI admits, that SSI developed two high rise apartment towers on land at Broadbeach known as The Oracle. SSI also admits the pleaded allegation that the plaintiffs entered into an "off the plan" contract to purchase a lot in Tower 1 of the development described as Oracle. SSI pleaded that its development known as The Oracle also incorporated other buildings, retail stores, restaurants, licensed premises and commercial premises and that its development is "a substantial, five star, resort development." These pleaded contentions about the nature of the development do not alter the fact that the plaintiffs do not plead that a reference to The Oracle had a particular meaning at the time the contracts were made, and that such a meaning was incorporated into them. The plaintiffs do not plead that The Oracle had a meaning that the parties adopted in using that term in their contractual documents. For example, they do not plead that they contracted on the basis that The Oracle meant a residential tower that was predominantly occupied by owners or long-term tenants.

111. I accept the plaintiffs' submissions that a relevant term of the contract was that SSI promised to sell a particular lot in a residential tower in The Oracle development, and that by virtue of the contents of the contract and the information sheet which formed part of it, the contract provided that the residential component of the development was to be known as The Oracle. However, in providing for the lot to be in a residential tower known as The Oracle, the contract did not additionally provide to the effect that the residential tower was to be of a particular kind (for example, occupied predominantly by owner-residents or for long-term residential purposes). The reference to the "residential component" to be known as The Oracle must be viewed in its context, where there was a distinction between residential and retail components of the development.

112. Moreover, the Caretaking and Letting Agreement that was an annexure to the Disclosure Statement did not indicate that the letting business was confined to long-term tenancies. For example, it gave the entity conducting the letting business authority to have and staff a tour desk.

113. The paragraph of each plaintiff's pleading that alleges that it was a term of the contract that SSI would sell to the plaintiff a specified lot in a residential tower in The Oracle does not plead in terms that the residential tower itself would be known as The Oracle. However, this paragraph[18] refers to an earlier sub-paragraph which relevantly pleads that the residential component was to be known as The Oracle. The plaintiffs' cases were conducted on the basis that the documents that had contractual force provided that the residential component would be known as The Oracle. The plaintiffs allege that they were promised a lot in a residential tower known as The Oracle which is part of a development also known as The Oracle. Each plaintiff's case is that SSI has changed the substratum of the bargain in two related respects. First, the development has been altered from a residential tower to a hotel (or resort). Secondly, the residential tower is not known as The Oracle, but has become known as (and branded as) Peppers Broadbeach.

114. The essential promise in the contract was to sell "the Property" on the terms of the contract. The "Property" was identified in the contract particulars as a proposed lot number on a specified level "identified on the Location Plan …". The Location Plan consists of several pages showing site plans, other plans and building format plans, each headed The Oracle.

115. Senior Counsel for SSI submitted that the words "The Oracle" on the Location Plans were simply words, and that there was no promise that the building would have that name. He submitted that the identification of what the purchaser was to get was a proposed lot on a certain level, identified on the Location Plan. There was said to be no promise that the building would have the name The Oracle.

116. I consider that this takes an artificially narrow view of the documents that constitute the contract, and what SSI promised to sell.

117. The purchase of a lot in a community titles scheme does not only provide ownership of the lot itself, but also of the common property of the scheme with all other owners as "tenants in common, in shares proportionate to the interest schedule lot entitlements of their respective lots."[19] An owner's interest in a lot is inseparable from the owner's interest in the common property.[20]

118. The contract itself was titled "Contract of Sale: The Oracle". The Location Plans confirmed that the building was named The Oracle. The disclosure statement, and the material accompanying it which formed part of the provisions of the contract, was titled "Disclosure Statement: The Oracle". Annexures in the disclosure statement refer to The Oracle. For example, the Caretaking and Letting Agreement was styled "Caretaking and Letting Agreement: The Oracle". The information sheet which also formed part of the contract by force of s 215 stated that the residential component of the development was to be known as The Oracle.

119. The subject matter of the contract was a proposed lot in a residential tower to be known as The Oracle.

120. The next contentious issue concerning the terms of the contract relates to what SSI promised in relation to the letting business. As previously noted, the plaintiffs plead that SSI promised that any authorisation of a person as a letting agent would be in the terms of the Caretaking and Letting Agreement annexed to the Disclosure Statement, and as described in the Developer PDS and the Operator PDS. For the reasons that I have given, I accept that by reason of s 215(1) of the BCCM Act it was a term of the contract that any authorisation of a person as a letting agent would be in the terms of the Caretaking and Letting Agreement annexed to the BCCM Disclosure Statement. The Developer PDS and the Operator PDS were not part of the contract.

121. I have earlier quoted relevant provisions of the Caretaking and Letting Agreement, particularly cl 6 of that agreement which related to the letting business, and cl 20 which authorised the Caretaker to occupy certain identified parts of the common property. From time to time further statements given under s 214 of the Act made changes to certain identified Occupation Authority areas. Nothing turns on these changes. These areas were to be used for certain identified purposes. Some of these areas include external landscaped areas which might be used for special events, functions, presentations or any other lawful use. Another change resulted in the renumbering of cl 20.5. It became cl 20.4. The parties' submissions refer to cl 20.5 and I shall do the same. No issue was raised in the pleadings about the validity of cl 20.

122. Clause 6.4 of the Caretaking and Letting Agreement authorised the Caretaker to erect signs reasonably necessary in or about the Scheme Land for the purpose of promoting and fostering the letting business. Such signs "must be temporary and moveable".

123. Clause 20.5 dealt with different subject matter, including signs. I have quoted it in paragraph [33]. It relates to various items collectively titled "Structures" that the Caretaker was given authority to place (and where appropriate, have manned) on any part of the common property subject to certain conditions. The items were a tour desk, brochure stands, signage, vending machines and other similar things. Nothing in the terms of cl 20.5, or in its context, confines the type of signs to signs that are temporary and moveable. The limitation in cl 6.4 in that regard cannot be read into cl 20.5.

124. The essential contractual promise of SSI to each plaintiff was to sell an identified lot in a residential tower. The tower was to be known as The Oracle. The residential tower was to be one having the physical attributes described in the contract, and there is no dispute in these proceedings that the building, as constructed, has those physical attributes. There was no contractual promise that the residential tower be occupied predominantly, let alone exclusively, by owner-occupiers or long-term tenants.

125. The contract provided that any authorisation of a person as a letting agent would be in the terms of the Caretaking and Letting Agreement annexed to the Disclosure Statement. That agreement provided for the entity appointed by the body corporate to operate a letting business, and to use certain common property for specified purposes. The letting business was not limited to long-term tenancies. Nothing in the Caretaking and Letting Agreement provided that the letting agent could not conduct its letting business so as to attract short-term tenants and holiday-makers. The letting business involved associated services commonly rendered in connection with letting lots in similar developments and "any other lawful activity." This authorised the provision of services to guests occupying apartments, including guests staying for a short time who might require room service, a mini-bar and other "hotel-like services".

Did SSI's proffered performance amount to a repudiation?

126. The plaintiffs submit that they are discharged from completing the contract because SSI evinced an intention not to provide at settlement the subject of the contract and, instead, intended to provide a particular lot in a development which has become a Peppers hotel or resort. It submits that by altering the development from a residential tower to a hotel or resort, and by permitting its name to be changed, SSI has changed the substratum of the bargain.

127. The plaintiffs' submissions developed this point in two separate, but related, parts. The first was that SSI's proffered performance was of "a different product". The second is that the tower is not known as The Oracle because it has been branded as Peppers Broadbeach.

128. The plaintiffs point to the use by Peppers and other parties of the term "hotel" to describe the tower in which the plaintiffs contracted to purchase a lot. They also point to SSI's use of this description for some time. While relying upon the fact that the tower is still described by many as a Peppers hotel, the plaintiffs submit that, in any event, regardless of the label, the point remains that the lots are not lots in a residential tower The Oracle but are lots in a Peppers hotel or hotel-like resort. This submission reflects the plaintiffs' pleas that the apartments purportedly offered in performance by SSI are apartments in a hotel/resort branded Peppers Broadbeach. Although the plaintiffs' case relating to SSI's proffered performance and its alleged repudiation has this composite aspect, the parties' submissions separately addressed two related aspects, and I will do the same. The first is whether the lot is in a residential tower. The second is whether the tower is known as The Oracle and whether it is branded Peppers Broadbeach.

Is the lot proffered by SSI in a residential tower?

129. Following the appointment of Peppers and the opening of the building for guests, apartments in it were let for short term and holiday letting. There is nothing in the contracts concluded between the various plaintiffs and SSI to say that this would not be the case. There was no contractual promise that lots in the building would be occupied exclusively or predominantly by owners or long-term residents.

130. SSA (as a wholly owned Peppers subsidiary) provides guests with a variety of "hotel-style services" including room service. It has procured liquor licences to permit the installation of mini-bars and the service of alcohol. It proposes to develop Lot 101 in the tower (referred to in the contract documents as the Caretaker's unit) as a restaurant and bar. Many other residential towers on the Gold Coast have such a facility for residents and their guests.

131. The fact that SSA provides guests with certain "hotel-style services" does not mean that the tower has ceased to be a "residential tower" in the sense earlier described. The fact that some of the occupants are there for a short term does not mean that the tower is not a residential tower. The contractual promise of a lot in a residential tower relates to a tower used for residential purposes. The relevant provision distinguished the residential component from the retail component of the development. In its contractual context, a residential tower does not mean simply a tower for owners who are residents or long-term tenants.

132. Clause 20 of the Caretaking and Letting Agreement gave certain authorities to occupy parts of the common property and, among other things, to operate a tour desk. This serves to confirm that the residential tower was one that might house short-term guests and persons on holiday.

133. If, contrary to my earlier finding, the Developer PDS did form part of the contract, then my conclusion that the residential tower was one that permitted the Caretaker to provide services to holiday makers and other short-term guests would have been reinforced. The Developer PDS indicated that the on-site letting agent would conduct a business that included short-term and holiday letting, with associated hotel-style services.

134. I conclude that the lots proffered by SSI in performance of the contracts are in a residential tower.

Is the residential tower known as The Oracle and is it a hotel/resort branded Peppers Broadbeach?

135. The proceedings raise two related, but slightly different factual issues. One is whether the residential tower is known as The Oracle. The second is whether it is a hotel/resort branded Peppers Broadbeach. It is not part of the plaintiffs' pleaded cases that SSI promised to the plaintiffs that it would continue to invest in The Oracle brand, or ensure that there would be a certain level of signage, branding or marketing of The Oracle. The contractual promise was a simple one, namely that the residential tower would be known as The Oracle (and be part of a development also known as The Oracle). I shall address in turn:

> (a) Is the residential tower a hotel/resort?
> (b) Whether described as a hotel or a resort (or the amalgam in the plaintiffs' pleading, "hotel/resort"), is it branded Peppers Broadbeach?
> (c) Is it known as The Oracle?

Is the residential tower a hotel/resort?

136. Definitions of a hotel vary, and whether or not this particular building is described as a hotel is largely dependent on the perspective of the beholder. It will be recalled that SSI initially was content to join in a press release with Peppers in July 2010 that announced that Peppers was to launch the Gold Coast's "first five star hotel in a decade", but that later SSI requested Peppers not to describe the development as a hotel in its marketing material. Mr Johnson, in an affidavit first sworn on 14 May 2011, stated that he would describe the development as "an extremely high quality residential apartment complex, at which guests may expect many of the sort of services that a five star hotel would offer."

[140446]

He noted that their stay will differ from a hotel in that the physical size of the rooms/space that guests occupy is substantially greater, the accommodation is completely self-contained and the duration of the average stay is usually longer than at a hotel. In this regard he observes:

> (a) the physical sizes of the apartments are much larger than a hotel, ranging from about 81 square metres to over 318 square metres, whereas hotel rooms are generally 30 to 40 square metres;
> (b) each apartment contains one, two or three bedrooms, save for the penthouses, which contain four bedrooms;
> (c) all apartments, save for one-bedroom apartments, contain multiple bathrooms;
> (d) each apartment contains a fully operational kitchen;
> (e) each apartment contains a laundry;
> (f) each apartment contains significant balcony space;
> (g) the development contains a cinema which is not something to be found in a hotel;

(h) wine lockers are provided in respect of each apartment, which would not be found in a hotel;
(i) there is a significantly larger number of car spaces provided than would be found at a hotel;
(j) there are no dedicated rooms for hotel use;
(k) there are no major back-of-house facilities, for example, kitchens and laundries;
(l) there is a mix of owner-occupiers and guests on any given floor (at the time of swearing his affidavit there were 97 apartments "signed with SSA");
(m) the apartments "signed with SSA" are randomly located throughout the towers. Accordingly, a guest who books an apartment through SSA/Peppers may be located next to an owner-resident or an owner-holiday-user or a long-term tenant or a guest who booked through an off-site letting agent;
(n) there is a body corporate responsible for all apartments and the facilities, which has effective control of the development.

Mr Johnson's reference to apartments that are "signed with SSA" should be taken to mean apartments that, in effect, are in the pool of apartments that Peppers lets.

138. I accept on the basis of this evidence that the building does not have all of the features that would be expected of a typical, large, luxury hotel. However, the description of the building in which the plaintiffs contracted to purchase an apartment as a "hotel" is not governed entirely by whether it has all of the features of a five star hotel such as ballrooms, large conference centres and the like, or the fact that it possesses certain features that most hotels lack. As Mr Johnson notes, guests may expect many of the sort of services that a five star hotel would offer. These include being met upon their arrival and the impression that they are entering a hotel. That impression depends upon, among other things, on-site signage and presentation, and off-site marketing. I shall address these issues in connection with the alleged branding of the building as Peppers Broadbeach. For present purposes, it is sufficient to conclude that the description "hotel" does not completely describe the type of apartment complex in question for the reasons given in Mr Johnson's affidavit. However, many individuals would describe it as a hotel, as SSI was initially content for it to be described.

139. It has the features of a resort, and the description of it as a resort would not be inaccurate. If the description "hotel" does not adequately describe its features, then it would be adequately described as consisting of self-contained apartments with access to many of the services that a hotel would offer. Incidentally, the website of the on-line travel service Expedia.com.au describes Peppers Broadbeach as "Broadbeach aparthotel with an outdoor pool". The following summary appears as a result of a hotel search for the city of the Gold Coast:

> "Peppers Broadbeach
>
> Corner Elizabeth Ave & Surf Parade Broadbeach, QLD 4218 Australia
>
> [140447]
>
> Broadbeach aparthotel with an outdoor pool
>
> Airport nearby
>
> Situated by the sea, this aparthotel is close to Oasis Shopping Centre, Broadbeach Mall, and Kurrawa Beach. Area attractions also include Gold Coast Convention and Exhibition Centre and Pacific Fair Shopping Centre.
>
> Pool, fitness facility
>
> At Peppers Broadbeach recreational amenities include an outdoor pool and a sauna. The aparthotel also features self parking and a porter/bellhop.
>
> DVD players/iPod docks
> In addition to kitchens and balconies, guestrooms feature washers/dryers along with iPod docking stations and microwaves."

140. It is sufficient to resolve the issues in these proceedings to find that the residential tower in which the plaintiffs contracted to purchase an apartment is either a hotel or a resort. If it is not adequately described as a hotel, it certainly is a resort in which guests may expect many of the services that a luxury hotel would offer.

Is it branded Peppers Broadbeach?

141. I turn to the issue of whether the tower, whether described as a hotel/resort or by some other description, has been branded Peppers Broadbeach. Shortly before the trial I undertook a view of Oracle Tower One, Oracle Tower Two and the Oracle Boulevard precinct. This view in the company of counsel and solicitors was to enable me better to understand the evidence of witnesses and exhibits, which include photographs and signage plans. The issue of branding was also addressed by expert reports and two experts who gave oral evidence. The plaintiffs relied upon a joint report of Professor Bill Merrilees and Associate Professor/Senior Lecturer Richard Jones. Dr Jones was the principal author of the report and gave oral evidence. SSI relied upon the expert report of Dr Larry Neale, who is a senior lecturer in marketing at the Queensland University of Technology. In accordance with pre-trial directions, Dr Jones and Dr Neale met and produced a joint report that highlighted areas of agreement and disagreement between them. I found their evidence of assistance in determining the branding issue. However, that issue is not one to be determined by experts. It is a question of fact to be decided by me on the basis of all of the evidence, which is assessed with the benefit of the view that I undertook. I shall first address certain evidence which is relevant to whether the building is branded Peppers Broadbeach before addressing the evidence of the experts.

142. From a distance and on closer inspection, the subject building, the other tower and the precinct in general present as a well-designed development which is visually impressive, and built to a high standard. For present purposes, namely the branding issue, a striking feature is the rooftop signage. Tower One has a large illuminated Peppers sign that faces west. Tower Two has a similar sign. At ground level, the entrance to Tower One is dominated by a Peppers sign. A photograph of it is the first photograph in Exhibit 76. Its large black lettering is featured against the white background of the main entrance to the building. On a facia inside the entrance is a sign for “Oracle Tower 1” and the Oracle logo. The Oracle logo is also tiled into the footpath immediately outside the entrance. The “Oracle Tower 1” sign on the facia inside the entrance and the Oracle logos to which I have referred do not significantly detract from the impression given by the large Peppers signage at the entrance to the building.

143. There are many signs and icons throughout the general precinct that refer to The Oracle, Oracle Boulevard or a particular part of the development such as Oracle North, Oracle South, Oracle East or Oracle West. There is a portable Peppers Concierge stand outside Tower 2, which houses the main reception for Peppers guests. There is also a Peppers sign above the entrance to this reception, a Peppers mat leading into it and a Peppers sign above the reception desk. There also is a surfboard with “Peppers” on it.

144. There are Oracle logos in the paving outside the reception of each tower. Oracle logos are built into glass as a safety feature. Oracle logos also appear in corridors and rooms within the towers.

[140448]

Peppers signage dominates Oracle signage on entering Tower One. The large entrance mat is marked Peppers Broadbeach.

146. Signage is, of course, only one component of branding. Dr Jones, in his joint report with Professor Merrilees, offers the following definition of a brand:

> “A brand is widely defined as ‘A name, term, sign, symbol, or design, or a combination of them which is intended to identify the goods or services of one seller or a group of sellers and to differentiate them from those of competitors’ (American Marketing Association). Thus, the brand is that intangible object that manifests itself through tangible communication elements that indicate, first the source or ownership of the brand, i.e. that it is different from competing products and services, and secondly, the differential value of the brand, i.e. how it is different from competing products and services.”

147. Dr Jones's report examines, in the case of the Peppers brand and the Oracle brand, three elements: the appearance of the brand, the behaviours associated with the brand and the service offered by the brand. These three elements make up what is often referred to as "the brand promise". There is no disagreement between the experts concerning these matters of definition or in relation to the concepts of brand meaning, brand signification and brand architecture, as outlined in Dr Jones's report. The experts also agree on the following points:

> "1. That Peppers is positioned as offering short-break residential accommodation at the luxury end of the market.
> 2. That both brands, The Oracle and Peppers, are positioned as luxury brands in their respective markets, and share many of the same brand promises.
> 3. Regarding the scope of the presence of the two brands on site:
>
> > a. Peppers signage is present in and on the residential buildings: (rooftop signage, main entrances). Peppers' presence is focused around the residential elements of the precinct.
> > b. Oracle signage and branding icons are also present also [sic] in and around the buildings — often built into the precinct.
> 4. That the Peppers brand is highly activated through marketing communications and that there is little evidence of Oracle branding outside the Oracle precinct; Peppers undertake a large and sophisticated integrated marketing campaign of promotions and cross-promotions, advertising, direct marketing, PR, social media and others, which has been focused in the last year disproportionally on Peppers Broadbeach.
> 5. Of the role of the Peppers brand, as expressed through their brand promise, for delivering high quality services. We agree that the brand promise, expressed through key touchpoints of communication, services and products, plays an important part in helping consumers evaluate the brand. We note that both brands have many similarities in their brand promises; namely luxury and high quality."

148. The evidence, including the opinions of these experts, establishes that the Peppers brand is positioned as offering short-break residential accommodation at the luxury end of the market. The Peppers brand signifies short breaks with an emphasis on luxury and is often associated with locations that offer consumers short-term "escapes". Peppers seeks to differentiate its services from other accommodation providers by promoting its "relaxing resorts" and "couples retreats".

149. Peppers has heavily promoted its brand in connection with the residential components of the development. In addition to signage and on-site services, it has promoted Peppers Broadbeach through a broad range of marketing material.

150. The precinct in general, and the residential towers in particular, are not so heavily promoted as The Oracle as to overcome the domination of the Peppers brand in respect of the residential component of the site. As to marketing, Mr Johnson's first affidavit (sworn 14 May 2011) states:

> "After the Share Sale Agreement was entered into, the Development continued to be marketed by SSI as The Oracle. There > were still a number of apartments available for sale in the Development, particularly in Tower 2, that were not sold off the plan.
> [140449]
>
> After the appointment to SSI of the Receivers & Managers, however, there has been little active marketing of the Development. However, The Oracle sales office has continued to operate, predominantly to make available for sale the remaining apartments in the Development."

This limited marketing, compared to Peppers' on-site signage, on-site presence and extensive advertising of Peppers Broadbeach means that Tower One effectively has been branded as Peppers Broadbeach. The same applies to Tower Two. This branding (or re-branding) began with the announcement of Peppers' appointment, and was achieved by, among other things, the Peppers signage on the site and the extensive promotion of the Peppers brand.

151. This branding goes beyond the letting agent promoting its business (as the Caretaking and Letting Agreement envisaged it could) to a branding of the apartment tower. The existence of signs for "Oracle Tower 1" and the Oracle icon on glass and other features does not lead to the conclusion that the building is branded as The Oracle or not branded as Peppers Broadbeach. Whereas some residents, retail owners and others would take these signs and icons as indicating that the building is in the Oracle precinct, and has a connection with the brand/sub-brand Oracle Boulevard, these features do not brand the building. The Peppers signage and other features signifying the presence of Peppers do. The Peppers brand dominates the building from top to bottom. From the illuminated signs at the top of the tower to the welcoming doormat at the entrance, the dominant brand is Peppers. The building would be likely to be referred to as Peppers or Peppers Broadbeach, not only by short-term visitors who booked accommodation in it through Peppers, but by members of the general public who are in its vicinity, either on foot or in a vehicle.

152. The dominance of the Peppers brand in respect of the residential elements of the site is set to continue.

153. Brands are said to require "continual investment in their promotion and renewal" in order to achieve sustained levels of awareness. At the time the plaintiffs entered their contracts there was extensive marketing of The Oracle. It signified a high quality luxury precinct that included apartment towers carrying that brand. The appointment of Peppers, the dominant presence of the Peppers brand in both towers (exemplified by the illuminated signs that surmount and virtually brand them), the active promotion of Peppers Broadbeach and the limited promotion of The Oracle in connection with the residential component of the development leads to the conclusion that the tower in which the plaintiffs contracted to purchase an apartment is branded as Peppers Broadbeach.

154. Separate but related issues arise about the branding of the entire development. SSI submits that the whole development can be described as "The Oracle". It submits that "The Oracle is the entire development rather than any particular component part of it." There is scope for debate about whether the entire development is described as "The Oracle" or "Oracle". Accepting, however, the submission made by SSI on this point, the fact remains that particular components of the development have been branded. The retail component has been branded Oracle Boulevard. The residential component has been branded Peppers Broadbeach.

155. The branding of the residential component as Peppers Broadbeach may have been reinforced by the erection of hero signs atop the buildings since the date for settlement under the plaintiffs' contracts. But this simply carried into effect the branding to which the South Sky entities committed as part of the Share Sale Agreement's provisions in relation to signage, and the body corporate's resolution of 1 October 2010 that carried this into effect. The process of branding the tower as Peppers Broadbeach began as early as the joint media release to which SSI was a party, and it has continued. Reference in correspondence sent to buyers in 2010 to The Oracle does not alter the fact that Mantra/Peppers was intent on branding the building as Peppers Broadbeach.

Mantra/Peppers is a successful, large organisation that devoted substantial resources to marketing and otherwise branding the apartment towers as Peppers Broadbeach. It has succeeded in its stated intention of branding Tower One as Peppers Broadbeach. Its success has been achieved in part by the absence of any real attempt by SSI or anyone else to brand the residential component by a different name. However, the success of Mantra/Peppers has been in large measure the result of its own promotion of the Peppers and Peppers Broadbeach brands in connection with the residential component of the development, aided by the signage that the Share Sale Agreement contemplated.

157. I conclude that the residential tower in which the plaintiffs contracted to purchase an apartment is branded Peppers Broadbeach. There is no prospect that this branding will change prior to the settlement of contracts pursuant to any decree of specific performance.

The expert evidence on branding

158. I have reached the conclusion that the building is branded Peppers Broadbeach without reference to contentious aspects of the evidence of experts, and I would have reached the same conclusion without the benefit of their evidence.

159. Because of the branding issues raised in the pleadings, the parties sought and obtained pre-trial directions for expert reports and for the experts to confer. The experts' respective reports and their joint report addressed "The Oracle" brand and Dr Jones's report devoted a section to the signification of "The Oracle" brand in 2005 and 2006. Evidence about the branding of the building (and also the whole development) as "The Oracle" has some relevance to the issue of whether the building has become branded (or re-branded) as Peppers Broadbeach.

160. SSI criticised Dr Jones's view that in 2005 and 2006 The Oracle held a brand promise of "entirely owner occupied apartment towers" as:

> (a) being based upon unpleaded marketing material, including material that post-dated 2005–2006 which is not specifically related to the evidence of the plaintiffs about the material they received or considered; and
> (b) not taking account of "core documents" (the contract, disclosure statements and so on) with which Dr Jones was not briefed.

I accept that Dr Jones's evidence about the Oracle "brand promise" is not relevant to the contractual promise made by SSI to the plaintiffs. It is, however, relevant to the branding issues in the case. The evidence of Dr Jones (and Dr Neale) about branding issues is legitimately based on sources that include marketing material, and did not need to be limited to marketing material read by the plaintiffs. I discount the weight of Dr Jones's opinions about the Oracle brand in 2005 and 2006 to the extent that it relies on material that post-dates that period. Provision to Dr Jones of the "core documents" would have given a more complete account of material that relates to the branding of The Oracle to a particular section of the general public, specifically buyers. I accept SSI's submission that reference to the core documents would have shown a conflict between the content of those documents and the view that The Oracle brand signified exclusive owner occupied residences and the creation of an exclusive club of owners. That view was expressed by Dr Jones based on marketing and other material and without reference to the "core documents" that were sent to the plaintiffs since the latter were not briefed to him.

161. I accept SSI's point that someone who received and read the "core documents" would not have found in them a promise that The Oracle was to consist exclusively of owner occupied residences, given references in them to short-term and holiday letting. Accordingly, I do not rely upon Dr Jones's opinion relating to what The Oracle signified in 2005–2006 (or at other times) as relevant to the contractual promise made to the plaintiffs. Dr Jones's evidence is relevant to the branding of The Oracle to persons who received the kind of marketing materials that were considered by him and Dr Neale.

162. I shall first address the experts' evidence in relation to The Oracle brand, and then other matters about which they had differences of opinion. Before doing so I shall give my reasons for ruling on objections to certain parts of Dr Jones's report. SSI's objections were argued just before Dr Jones gave his oral evidence and the parties indicated that I might give my reasons later. I do so now.

163. The first objection, described as "an overarching objection", is that the opinions and conclusions stated in the expert reports are no more than the experts' views on what is conveyed by various communications to the mind of an ordinary person and is not something which is the proper subject of expert evidence. In deciding whether the field is one in which expert evidence can be called, two principles apply according to the learned authors of the Australian edition of Cross on Evidence:

> "One seeks to exclude evidence on the ground that the ordinary person is as capable of forming a correct view on the question as anyone else. The second seeks to exclude evidence which, since it is not based on an organised body of sound knowledge or experience, is insufficiently reliable."[21]

SSI's objection is on the first ground. There is no objection on the basis that there is not an organised body of knowledge or experience in relation to branding. As to the first aspect, the relevant question is:

> "whether the subject matter of the opinion is such that a person without instruction or experience in the area of knowledge or human experience would be able to form a sound judgment on the matter without the assistance of witnesses possessing special knowledge or experience in the area".[22]

164. The expert evidence to which objection is taken does not relate to how an ordinary person would be likely to be influenced by a particular communication. In that regard, ordinary human nature is not the subject of proof by expert evidence.[23] The reports relate to the meaning of "branding" and the process by which branding occurs. They relate to the relationship between relevant brands, and aspects of branding which is outside ordinary knowledge and experience. Although some aspects of the reports may relate to matters in respect of which expert opinion is not essential to form a correct view, this cannot be said in respect of the reports as a whole. The experts' opinions are of substantial assistance in relation to branding issues, and I do not accept the overarching objection to them.

165. The next objection relates to parts of Dr Jones's report which relate to what the Oracle brand meant or signified between December 2005 and October 2006. The objection was on the grounds of relevance. For the reasons canvassed during the hearing of this objection, I consider that the evidence is relevant to the issues raised in the pleadings concerning the difference between a building known as The Oracle and one branded Peppers Broadbeach, and also to the issue of "material prejudice" under the BCCM Act. In this latter regard, although the marketing and other materials upon which individual plaintiffs' expectations were based were not pleaded, evidence was given in that regard. The evidence of Dr Jones is relevant to the issue of "material prejudice", and admissible on that basis. The issue of "material prejudice" is assessed objectively, having regard to the particular buyer's circumstances. The evidence of branding is relevant to the pleaded issues of material prejudice. Whether the claimed material prejudice was caused by an inaccuracy in a disclosure statement, or some other cause, is a separate issue that does not go to the admissibility of the evidence. The evidence is relevant to issues on the pleadings.

The Oracle brand

166. Dr Neale's report states that: "The Oracle brand signifies a high quality luxury precinct comprising apartment towers, restaurants, cafes and retail boutiques." His site visit revealed "a great deal of Oracle branding throughout" the precinct, including "on the street, street signs, retail shops and common areas". This branding included the large Oracle logos that were part of the footpath. Dr Neale also reported:

> "Outside the Oracle precinct, however, there is little evidence of Oracle's marketing and branding activities. My information search did not reveal much in the way of brand activation. Oracle have a web site, but not much else for people who are searching for the brand. There was no search marketing campaign evident, and I could find no examples of Oracle advertising."

Dr Jones distinguished between the brand "The Oracle", other signs and things containing references to "Oracle" (such as the "Oracle Tower 1" inside the main entrances to the residential towers and signs containing references to "Oracle Boulevard"). As to the brand "The Oracle", he concluded that it was positioned "as a unique residential development at the absolute top end of the apartment market." He explained his reasons for this more fully in his report and under cross-examination. He notes that there are a number of brand names associated with Oracle, and that it is necessary to define the brands and sub-brands. The development at the site is branded as "The Oracle, Central Broadbeach". This refers to the development on the relevant block which includes the two towers. "Oracle Boulevard" refers to the shopping precinct at the ground level running through the site. Dr Jones is of the opinion that, as originally launched, "The Oracle" was the core brand for the whole development and that "Oracle Boulevard" was a sub-brand referring only to the retail elements of the development. His report describes the various value propositions contained in the Oracle brand. The brand "The Oracle" is said to have significant emotional elements that make up its brand promise. These were emphasised in the description of The Oracle as a "landmark address" and "the unchallenged centre of Gold Coast sophistication". Drawing upon these elements and the appeal to exclusivity (such as the promise that "Acquiring a residence in The Oracle is equivalent to achieving membership in a supremely private club"), his report concludes that The Oracle is defined by its residents being owners of the properties they reside in. The “hedonic value proposition” of The Oracle brand is conveyed in propositions such as: “Every one of the residences at this landmark address will indulge its owners with world class life spaces”.

168. Dr Neale does not agree with Dr Jones about the brand promise offered by The Oracle in 2005/2006. The differences in the opinions of the experts is summarised in their joint report dated 25 July 2011:

> “Dr Neale does not agree that the Oracle brand promise from 2005/2006 was that of entirely owner occupied apartments. He forms this opinion because purchasers would rely on all information received, not just brochures. For example, the Operator Product Disclosure Statement contained information about: the choice available to owners to let out their apartment, three different ways for an owner to let out their apartment, the provisions of on-site services for letting out an apartment including room service and an on-site reception desk, and apartment owners being able to use their letting pool apartments for 21 days per year. As purchasers would have had all this information before purchasing the apartment, Dr Neale contends the brand promise of Oracle in 2005/2006 was not of an owner-occupied building but rather a precinct that offered apartments that could be occupied by the owners, or occupied by long or short-term renters.
>
> Dr Neale also does not agree that the private element drives the emotional value proposition of the Oracle brand. He maintains that all purchasers would have been aware that there are in excess of 500 apartments across the two Oracle towers, and that the Oracle precinct is located in one of the busiest tourist locations in Australia.
>
> Prof Merrilees and Dr Jones maintain their view that a significant driver of the brand promise of The Oracle brand lies is [sic] in its emotional and hedonic elements. Key drivers in the emotional value proposition are those of luxury, well-being and exclusivity. Exclusivity is articulated in several ways that emphasises [sic] the private element of the brand The Oracle. As pointed out in their report, notwithstanding functional similarities between the brands: for example, the quality of the finishes, the facilities and the ability to rent apartments, the distinction between the brands lies in the emotional promise of exclusivity directed towards owner-occupiers and the creation of an exclusive club of owners. The perception of this distinction is an important value driver for the brand ‘The Oracle’. Prof Merrilees and Dr Jones maintain their opinion that exclusivity is a driving force of the brand ‘The Oracle’.”

169.

For the reasons given by Dr Neale, I find that any purchaser who relied on the information contained in disclosure statements would not have understood that The Oracle would have been entirely owner occupied apartments. Someone who received, read and relied on these documents would not have gained that impression.

170. Persons who read and relied only upon marketing material may have derived an impression of the residential component of The Oracle as being directed towards owner occupiers, including club-like facilities for owners. Still, it is unlikely that such persons would have understood The Oracle as consisting entirely of owner occupiers.

171. It is unnecessary to dwell on this aspect, since it involves an element of uncertainty about the type of persons reading marketing material, the precise material and the other information they relied upon, and the extent to which they reflected upon how a high proportion of owner-occupiers was to be achieved and what would prevent an owner from renting an apartment for short terms.

172. The differences between the expert opinions should not detract from the substantial area of agreement between them about The Oracle brand from time to time. They agreed about the matters that I have earlier identified, and that The Oracle brand (like the Peppers brand) is positioned at the luxury, premium end of the market.

The signification of the illuminated signage of Peppers mounted on the Oracle complex

173. The experts did not agree about the signification of the signage and branding on the site. After describing the illuminated signs that are mounted on the top of each tower Dr Jones's report states:

> "Such signs are important indicators of the brand as reflected in the definition of a brand … In this case the Peppers signage surmounting both towers indicates the dominant presence of the brand in both towers."

His report continues to the effect that in order to determine the signification of the illuminated signage of Peppers surmounting both towers, the illuminated signage must be seen in the context of other signage on the site. He discusses that signage in his report. On the basis of his observations he assesses that there are "two dominant brand names on the site: Peppers and Oracle Boulevard." He explains:

> "There are only two references to the brand The Oracle on insignificant signage (an evacuation sheet and roadwork sheeting). In the absence of significant signage for the brand The Oracle, references to Oracle (as in 'Oracle Tower' and 'Oracle North') have in our opinion a very weak symbolic link to the brand The Oracle. In our opinion and based on or [sic] site visits, the signs Oracle Tower 1 and Oracle North, Oracle West, Oracle South and Oracle East do not refer significantly (semiotically) to the brand The Oracle. Brands need reinforcing through visual identity systems and marketing communication. We see little evidence of the reinforcement of the brand The Oracle on site.
> The Peppers brand is dominant for the residential elements of the site and the Oracle Boulevard for the retail elements. This dominance reinforces the significance of the rooftop-mounted signage. Given the lack of other residential signage to indicate the presence of other brands (notably The Oracle), we conclude that Peppers is the dominant brand for the residential elements. The signification of this is that the residential elements of this site are a Peppers resort, retreat or hotel."

174. By contrast, Dr Neale's report expresses a different view of the signification of the illuminated signage of Peppers mounted on The Oracle complex. It says that, in general, rooftop signage has two main functions: direction and promotion. For visitors to the Broadbeach area, the illuminated Peppers signs atop the residential towers are said to be "primarily directional in function." The report states that "[l]ocals would also use the rooftop signs to help them navigate to the precinct, and Peppers would derive some awareness and branding benefits from their visibility." Dr Neale notes that, for Peppers, signage is only a part of their overall promotional campaign, and that Peppers undertakes a large and sophisticated integrated marketing campaign. I accept the proposition advanced by Dr Neale that because most Peppers customers who visit the site will already have made their booking decision, and have already committed to paying for the accommodation, the rooftop signs have a directional function for them. However, I do not consider that this proposition detracts from the essential point made by Dr Jones that the Peppers signage surmounting both towers indicates the dominant presence of the Peppers brand in both towers. I accept Dr Jones's evidence that whilst the rooftop and roof-level signage is not an indicator of 100 per cent brand ownership of the building it surmounts, it is used to reflect the dominant brand of the site.

The signification of advertising rental accommodation in the Oracle complex as Peppers accommodation

175. The experts also addressed the signification of advertising rental accommodation in the Oracle complex as Peppers accommodation. In that regard Dr Jones had regard to advertisements and internet peer review sites such as Trip Advisor, Expedia and Hotels.com. These are said to be important brand touch points for accommodation brands and important sources of advertising. He notes that the sustainability of brands relies on their reinforcement through communication. Having noted that the on-site communication of the brand "The Oracle" is poor, he notes that this increases the significance of the role of rental advertising. Dr Neale agrees that the Peppers brand is highly activated through marketing communications and that there is little evidence of Oracle branding outside the Oracle precinct. As to the significance of the advertising of rental accommodation in the complex as Peppers accommodation, he states:

> "From a consumer behaviour and branding perspective, it is in the interests of investors in the Oracle towers to have a well recognised and trusted brand, like Peppers, to offer short-term rental accommodation. The Peppers brand is already known for luxury accommodation with high quality services, and this is the advantage of branding the short-term rentals as Peppers accommodation rather than Oracle."

Brand relationship

176. Dr Neale's report describes the current relationship between the two brands as follows:

> "From walking through the precinct, there is evidence of Oracle and Peppers branding throughout. Customers and visitors currently see the brands side-by-side in and around Tower 2. This is also the case in and around Tower 1, but the Peppers branding is less predominant than Tower 2. For the remainder of the precinct (retail boutiques, café district, streets, car parks), the conspicuous branding is mostly Oracle, while Peppers branding is sparse.
> Given the ubiquitous Oracle branding throughout the entire precinct, in my opinion it is reasonable to expect that some residents, retail owners and local customers think of and refer to the precinct as Oracle, whereas short-term visitors may be more likely to refer to the complex as Peppers."

177. It is correct to refer to "the ubiquitous Oracle branding throughout the entire precinct". However, I accept the distinction made by Dr Jones between references to Oracle and The Oracle, and that Oracle Boulevard is a separate brand or sub-brand that should be distinguished from The Oracle. The O-shaped icon that is used around the site has a relationship to both. However, the brand "The Oracle" is not strongly present on the residential component of the site, in part because of the dominance of the Peppers brand. I accept the conclusion of Dr Jones:

> "Signage is a visual identifier of the brand. The dominant positioning of the two Peppers illuminated signs surmounting both Tower 1 and Tower 2 on the site identify the source of the site's brand as being Peppers. Examination of on-site signage in its entirety sees this dominance compounded. Three conclusions are made. Firstly, that Peppers is the dominant brand name for the residential elements of the site. Signage is located above both main entrances and in the reception foyers. Secondly, that whilst there remains extensive use of The Oracle logo, this can be regarded as signifying The Oracle Boulevard brand (rather than its original signified [t]he brand The Oracle) referring to the shopping areas and not the > residential elements of the site. Thirdly, [t]he brand The Oracle is not significantly present on the site. The signification of this is that the residential elements of this site are a Peppers resort, retreat or hotel."
> [140455]

178. This conclusion requires qualification in the light of what Mr Doyle SC described as a small thing in his cross-examination of Dr Jones — the Peppers signage described at page 13 of the Jones/Merrilees report as being "above the reception clearly visible from outside" relates to the reception in Tower Two, not Tower One. Dr Jones acknowledged this in his evidence, and it was not suggested that this misdescription alters his opinion. In his report he referred to a doormat in the entrance to Tower Two "emblazoned Peppers Broadbeach", and in his oral evidence (but not in his report) he gave evidence of such a large doormat just inside the reception of Tower One. It was described by Dr Jones to have the Peppers logo woven into it and to have a "very high impact" because one "has to tread over it to go into the building." This oral evidence tends to reinforce the conclusion drawn in Dr Jones's report about the significance of signage and the fact that Peppers is the dominant brand name for the residential elements of the site.

179. Dr Jones's report and oral evidence about branding were not based simply on signage on Tower One. They related to signage elsewhere and the extent of marketing activities. His views on signage were not based on an inspection of the extent of internal signage in rooms and corridors and the like and I take this into account in assessing the weight of his opinions.

180. Dr Jones's report states, and Dr Neale does not contest, that the Peppers brand is currently the dominant brand for the residential elements of the site. The fact that, as Dr Neale says, some residents, retail owners and local customers think of and refer to the precinct as Oracle, does not alter the fact that Peppers is the dominant brand for the residential elements of the site. And, as Dr Neale says in his report, short-term visitors may be more likely to refer to the precinct/complex as Peppers.

The oral evidence of the experts

181. Dr Jones made the point that the presence in the precinct of signs relating to The Oracle (such as evacuation diagrams inside services entrances and on roadworks sheeting), Oracle (such as Oracle Tower 1) and the Oracle icon (on windows, pavements and directory signs) are not linked in a significant way to the brand The Oracle. The icons around the site were said to have lost their function as signifiers of the brand, and had become way markers or indicators of physical areas. For example, Oracle South is used to denote the location of part of the precinct, and contributes to a brand Oracle, not the brand The Oracle which was promoted in 2005/2006. The signs referring to "Oracle" and to logos around the site had limited significance to the brand The Oracle. This was because of "very little marketing and promotion of the brand". If there had been "more robust" branding of The Oracle or Oracle, then those signs would have had gained more signification. By contrast, the promotion of the retail precinct as Oracle Boulevard, including its own web page, leads to the conclusion that Oracle Boulevard has its own brand.

182. Dr Neale, in oral evidence, accepted that the "Hero Sign" atop each tower denotes a building name. Like other equally large neon signs on other buildings, such as the Sofitel, the Peppers sign gave the building a name and this was reinforced by other Peppers signage that was the subject of signage applications. The signage for Oracle Boulevard denoted a street name and the retail and commercial precincts on lower levels.

183. Dr Neale did not see any difference between the use of "Oracle" and "The Oracle" from a consumer behaviour or branding perspective. Consumers would see "Oracle", "Oracle Tower 1", "Oracle Boulevard" and the Oracle logo around the precinct, and that would confirm that they were in the Oracle precinct. If they were looking for something more specific, like Oracle Boulevard, they would know they were in a certain part of the precinct, such as the retail or commercial sector.

184. As to the extensive Peppers signage, Dr Neale accepted that it was the dominant signage on the building and that, whilst "some locals would think it was still Oracle", most people would call the towers Peppers.

[140456]

Summary of expert evidence on the branding issue

185. Despite some differences in relation to matters such as the signification of illuminated signage, there was a level of agreement between the experts about the branding of the tower as Peppers or Peppers Broadbeach. They agree that the Peppers brand is the dominant brand for the residential component of the development. I accept this view.

Conclusion on the branding issue

186. Leaving aside the opinion evidence of the expert witnesses on the issue of branding, I conclude that, at the time the various plaintiffs contracted to purchase their apartments, the development as a whole, and the residential tower that was promoted to them in particular, were branded as The Oracle. Buyers who read the disclosure statements carefully, or who reflected on the fact that their standard contract did not prevent them from letting their apartment for short-term or holiday letting, would have appreciated that the occupants of the tower would not only be owner-occupants or long-term tenants. Still, in its marketing to the general public, the apartment tower was promoted as a place of residence, and an exclusive one at that. As the blue brochure said "Every one of the residences at this landmark address will indulge its owners with world class lifespaces." This kind of representation is not alleged to have contractual force. Instead, the promotion of The Oracle at that time is relevant to the branding of the apartment tower, and to the alleged re-branding of it after the arrival of Peppers. Prior to the advent of Peppers the apartment tower was branded as The Oracle. That brand signified, in the case of the apartment towers (as distinct from the retail precinct), a luxurious residence. The signage and advertising of Peppers and Peppers Broadbeach on the site, and the active promotion of Peppers Broadbeach by Mantra/Peppers in other ways, effectively has branded the apartment towers as a Peppers retreat, resort or hotel. The Peppers brand is positioned as offering short-break accommodation.

187. Tower One is branded as Peppers by the large neon “hero” sign that effectively names the building. The dominance of the Peppers brand is reinforced by other Peppers signage and the activation of the names Peppers and Peppers Broadbeach in a variety of forms. By contrast, the brand The Oracle has a diminished presence in and about the apartment tower by reason of the dominance of Peppers, and the absence of investment in and promotion of the brand The Oracle in connection with the occupation of the apartment tower. As a result, its impact is low.

188. Mantra presumably had good reason to negotiate the terms which it did in the Share Sale Agreement to promote its Peppers brand. As appears from its April 2010 correspondence to the Gold Coast City Council in support of the application to allow a restaurant to operate on the ground floor of Tower One, it intended to “brand” the building as Peppers, and I find that it achieved that result. By branding the building as Peppers and by its active promotion of Peppers Broadbeach by signage, doormats and marketing of the hotel/resort by that name, it has done more than promote the letting business of the company it acquired. It effectively has rebranded the apartment tower in which the plaintiffs contracted to buy an apartment as Peppers Broadbeach.

Is the tower known as The Oracle?

189. A finding that the tower has been branded Peppers Broadbeach does not necessarily determine the related issue of whether it is known as The Oracle since, theoretically at least, a building might be widely known by two names. However, in the circumstances of this matter the branding of the tower as Peppers Broadbeach means that it is not generally known as The Oracle. It is possible that some individuals would describe the tower, as distinct form the development as a whole, as The Oracle. However there was no acceptable evidence that the tower is generally known as The Oracle.

190. SSI submits that the plaintiffs’ expert, Dr Jones, did not express the view that Tower One is no longer known as a tower in The Oracle. They also note that Dr Jones also expressed the view that signs such as “Oracle Tower 1” and “Oracle Tower 2” are way marks or indicators of physical areas, and are used to identify each building, rather than signify the brand The Oracle. This oral evidence was directed to the issue of branding, but it has a relevance to the issue of whether the building is known as The Oracle. I accept that Dr Jones has not expressed the view that Tower One is no longer in The Oracle. His evidence was directed to a different issue, namely branding.

191. I also accept that the use of the Oracle name and icon throughout the precinct, including the presence of signs such as “Oracle Tower 1” and “Oracle Tower 2” as depicted in photographs that became exhibits or parts of expert reports, leads to the conclusion that the development as a whole is known as The Oracle or Oracle. Certain signs may lead some people to describe Tower One, as well as the development as a whole, as The Oracle. Others to whom the building was once marketed as The Oracle may also know it by this name. However, the effect of the branding of the building as Peppers Broadbeach does not support the conclusion that it is generally known as The Oracle. I agree with Dr Neale that most people would call the towers Peppers.

192. The development as a whole may be known as Oracle or The Oracle. However, the residential component is known as Peppers Broadbeach, just as its retail component is known as Oracle Boulevard.

193. I find that the tower itself is not known as The Oracle. It is known as Peppers Broadbeach as a result of the branding of it by that name. The finding that the tower itself is not known as The Oracle is made in the context of the contractual promise that the tower was to be known as The Oracle. That contractual promise should not be taken to refer to the name by which the building was to be known by only some individuals, who had some special knowledge, but to the name by which it was known more generally. The evidence does not support the conclusion that the tower itself is generally known as The Oracle.

Repudiation

194. The plaintiffs contend that SSI evinced an intention not to provide at settlement the subject matter of their contract, and instead proposed to provide an apartment in a hotel/resort to be known as Peppers

Broadbeach. They contend that the relevant apartments are substantially different from what they contracted for, SSI evinced an intention not to be bound by the relevant contract and thereby repudiated it.

195. The form of alleged repudiation is conduct which "evinces an unwillingness or an inability to render substantial performance of the contract".[24] It is sometimes described as conduct "which evinces an intention no longer to be bound by the contract or to fulfil it only in a manner substantially inconsistent with the party's obligations", and may be termed renunciation.[25] The test is whether the conduct of one party is such as to convey to a reasonable person, in the situation of the other party, renunciation either of the contract as a whole or of a fundamental obligation under it.[26] The plaintiffs' case on repudiation does not allege the breach of a term, any breach of which justifies termination. In the joint judgment of Gleeson CJ, Gummow, Heydon and Crennan JJ in Koompahtoo Local Aboriginal Land Council v Sanpine Pty Ltd their Honours stated:

> "There may be cases where a failure to perform, even if not a breach of an essential term … manifests unwillingness or inability to perform in such circumstances that the other party is entitled to conclude that the contract will not be performed substantially according to its requirements. This overlapping between renunciation and failure of performance may appear conceptually untidy, but unwillingness or inability to perform a contract often is manifested most clearly by the conduct of a party when the time for performance arrives. In contractual renunciation, actions may speak louder than words."[27]

196. In determining whether SSI has repudiated each contract, the point of reference is the promised contractual performance, not expectations built on representations that are not pleaded or proven to have had contractual force.

197. The plaintiffs' pleaded case on repudiation in respect of SSI's proffered performance of "an apartment in a hotel to be known as Peppers Broadbeach" referred to a variety of "features, attributes, uses and consequences" referred to in earlier paragraphs of the pleading.[28] They also pleaded in support of their case on repudiation that any authorisation of a person as letting agent would not be in the terms of the Caretaking and Letting Agreement annexed to the final disclosure statement.

198. The plaintiffs' submissions on repudiation did not invoke each of the pleaded "features, attributes, uses and consequences" but were of the more general kind that I have earlier identified, namely that the apartment purportedly offered in performance is in a hotel (or resort) or hotel/resort branded Peppers Broadbeach. Some of the specific matters that are pleaded in support of repudiation are relied upon in the plaintiffs' submissions on cancellation pursuant to the BCCM Act, which raise different issues compared to repudiation under the general law.

199. In relation to the plaintiffs' case on repudiation as advanced in their submissions, I have found that SSI's purported performance of each relevant contract did not meet its contractual obligations in that the tower is not known as The Oracle and has been branded as Peppers Broadbeach. In short, the departure from the promised contractual performance relates to the name of the tower.

200. The inability or unwillingness of SSI to provide an apartment in a tower known as The Oracle and the proffered performance by providing an apartment in a tower branded Peppers Broadbeach is not submitted by the plaintiffs in their submissions on repudiation to have had certain consequences in relation to "the product" being sold. The plaintiffs' case on the name aspect, as distinct from their case that the tower is a hotel, does not assert that the proffered performance is of "a different product". Their submissions headed "A different product" are to the effect that the development is a hotel or resort, rather than a residential tower. To quote the plaintiffs' written submissions:

> "Whilst the change of name is important (and addressed below), by altering the development from a residential tower to an hotel or resort, the Defendant has changed the substratum of the bargain."

201. I have declined to find that the tower is something other than a residential tower, whether described as a hotel, resort, hotel/resort or some other term. In the light of that conclusion, the plaintiffs' case on repudiation, as argued, turns upon whether the proffered provision of an apartment in a tower that is not known as The Oracle and that is branded as Peppers Broadbeach constitutes a repudiation.

202. The issue then is whether the failure to provide an apartment in a tower that has the name provided for in the contract, and the proffering instead of an apartment in a tower with a different name, indicates an intention "not to provide at settlement the subject matter of the contract" because the relevant units are "substantially different from that contracted for" (to quote the plaintiffs' submissions). To use the similar language of the High Court in Koompahtoo Local Aboriginal Land Council v Sanpine Pty Ltd, the issue is whether the different name of the tower entitles the plaintiffs "to conclude that the contract will not be performed substantially according to its requirements" or amounts to a renunciation either of the contract as a whole or of a fundamental obligation under it.

203. The relevant departure from the promised contractual performance relates to the name of the tower, not the fact that the business conducted under the name Peppers Broadbeach attracts short-stay guests and holiday-makers, and would be described by many as a kind of hotel or a hotel/resort. The name of the tower is not pleaded or argued to be an essential term in the sense discussed in Koompahtoo Local Aboriginal Land Council v Sanpine Pty Ltd[29] . The name of the tower and the promise that it was to be known as The Oracle are provisions of the contract for the reasons I have earlier canvassed. The name of the tower appears on the contract, including the plans that are included in it, and on documents that form part of the contract by virtue of s 215. One of these documents, the information sheet, stated that the residential component was to be known as The Oracle. But these provisions are not pleaded or submitted to have been an essential term.

204. The subject matter of the contract is a proposed lot in a residential tower. The failure to provide the relevant lot in a tower known as The Oracle does not indicate an intention not to provide at settlement the subject matter of the contract or something substantially different from that for which the plaintiffs contracted.

[140459]

The unwillingness or inability to perform the term that provided for the tower itself to be known as The Oracle (as well as being part of a development described as The Oracle) would not convey to a reasonable person, in the situation of the plaintiffs, renunciation either of the contract as a whole or of a fundamental obligation under it.

Conclusion — alleged repudiation in relation to the name of the tower

205. The plaintiffs have not proven that the unwillingness or inability to perform the contractual provision in relation to the name of the tower constitutes a renunciation of the contract or a fundamental obligation under it so as to amount to a repudiation.

206. I have declined to find that the tower is not a residential tower, such that a description of it as a hotel/resort means that SSI "has changed the substratum of the bargain" or that the relevant apartment is substantially different from, or a "different product" from, the subject matter of the contract, namely an apartment in a residential tower. I have declined to find repudiation in relation to the name of the tower. These conclusions determine the issue of repudiation on the bases that it was argued.

207. In case it becomes relevant I will make findings in relation to certain other matters which were pleaded in relation to the issue of repudiation, but not urged in submissions.

The Caretaking and Letting Agreement

208. As noted, one element of the plaintiffs' pleaded case on repudiation is that by entering into the Share Sale Agreement SSI evinced an intention not to be bound by "the disclosure statement terms" of the contract, particularly that any authorisation as letting agent would be in terms of the Caretaking and Letting Agreement annexed to the final disclosure statement. However, the Caretaking and Letting Agreement entered into by the body corporate and SSA is in that form.

209. The Share Sale Agreement did not alter those terms. Instead, it addressed matters such as signage, obtaining the body corporate's consent to a liquor licence and the fit-out of Lot 101 as a restaurant and bar. These were aspects of a commercial negotiation for the sale of management rights by a developer to the purchaser of those rights. The Caretaking and Letting Agreement is a different kind of agreement, namely one between a body corporate and the entity appointed by it to the role of caretaker and letting agent.

210. In any event, the Caretaking and Letting Agreement contemplated signage being authorised by cl 20, the provision of services by the letting agent, and the use of Lot 101 and certain "Occupation Areas" for certain purposes. The service of alcohol to guests, the holding of events at which alcohol is served and the use of Lot 101 as a restaurant and bar are not beyond the matters contemplated by the Caretaking and Letting Agreement. If, however, there has been an authorisation beyond the terms of the Caretaking and Letting Agreement, it does not amount to a repudiation of the contracts entered into by the plaintiffs.

Short-term and holiday letting and the provision of hotel-like services

211. The provision of short-term and holiday letting was not pleaded to be a departure from a contractual term, save perhaps insofar as it and the provision of "hotel-like services" are subsumed in the allegation that the tower was not a residential tower and was a hotel/resort. If the tower is to be described as a hotel or a hotel/resort, then this does not amount to a repudiation. The provision of hotel-like services to short-term guests and holiday makers is not inconsistent with any contractual promise. The tower is designed to be in the nature of a resort, particularly for short-term guests. If it is described as a hotel, rather than a resort or apartment tower with access to hotel-like services including room service, then there is no departure from promised contractual performance, or any departure is not repudiatory. The type of "hotel" is of a particular kind, namely self-contained apartments with access, if required, to certain hotel-like services. It does not have a ballroom or a large conference centre. The proposed restaurant and bar is a feature of similar high-rise apartment blocks on the Gold Coast that attract short-term stays and holiday makers. The provision of alcohol in such a tower, at certain events, in mini-bars and by room service, is not inconsistent with any contractual promise to the plaintiffs.

If the conduct of the letting business, the provision of certain hotel-like services and the proposed establishment of a restaurant/bar has made the tower a hotel/resort, and if (contrary to my findings) this involves a departure from the promise that the tower would be a residential tower, then any departure does not amount to a repudiation. One reason is that the kind of residential tower contemplated by the contract was one in which residents might be on short-stays or be holiday makers who sought and received services from the letting agent of the kind in fact provided by Peppers. Expressed differently, the contract did not provide that the residential tower was to be of a character that restricted it to owner-occupiers or long-term tenants, or that it would not be in the nature of a resort at which residents received certain hotel-like services.

The consequence of the tower not being known as The Oracle

213. The consequences of the tower not being known as The Oracle, as distinct from being known as The Oracle and being a place at which Peppers conducted a letting business under the name Peppers Broadbeach and provided certain hotel-like services in doing so, is not pleaded or proven. The plaintiffs' case on repudiation was of the dual or composite kind earlier described, with the "branding" or "change of name" aspect being somewhat secondary to its "different product" aspect. The "branding" or "change of name" aspect was not explored separately as to its consequences on the subject matter of the contract or its value. The following discussion of the valuation evidence should be read in that context. Moreover, any assessment of the consequences of the tower itself not being known as The Oracle, while still being in a precinct or development known as The Oracle or Oracle, would need to take account of the provision in the relevant documents about the conduct of the letting business. Nothing stopped the letting agent from promoting its own brand and using signs to do so. It would also need to take account of the fact that the promise that the tower was to be known as The Oracle did not entail any promise about a particular level of promotion of that name, by signage or marketing, or that the tower would retain that name for a particular period after settlement.

The valuation evidence

214. The plaintiffs each plead that they contracted to purchase an apartment "the resale value of which would be determined by reference to its being an apartment in a residential tower in The Oracle and not an apartment which is an element in a hotel/resort branded Peppers Broadbeach". This was not a plea that the resale value would decline or had declined as a result of the residential towers being a hotel/resort branded Peppers Broadbeach. By an amendment shortly before trial to a different section of the pleading in relation to "material prejudice" in terms of ss 214(4)(b) and 217(c) of the Act, it was alleged that the apartment purportedly offered in performance by SSI:

> "… is, and was at all material times since the appointment or engagement of Peppers as aforesaid, of lesser value in consequence of such appointment or engagement, the uses to which Peppers intends to put (or is putting) apartments and other facilities and areas in the development and branding as 'Peppers Broadbeach' as aforesaid than if [the] apartment … was an apartment in a residential tower in the 'Oracle' without any (and all) of such appointment or engagement of Peppers, uses by Peppers and branding as 'Peppers Broadbeach'."

215. Two valuers gave evidence at the trial: Mr Muchall for the plaintiffs and Mr Hamilton for the defendant. They also prepared a joint report to the Court. The joint report recorded the following points of agreement:

> (a) The subject property is an iconic twin high rise tower development with in excess of 500 apartments.
> (b) The apartments are finished to a high standard and the fitting and fixtures are considered to be of a high standard. They are self contained with separate bedroom, bathrooms and living areas.
> (c) The communal facilities provided in the development are extensive and present to a very high standard.
> (d) Broadbeach, where the development is located, is a suburb which caters for both tourists and permanent residents.
> [140461]
>
> (e) Large high rise residential developments on the Gold Coast have been previously by a mix of owner occupiers (resident or lock up) and investors (permanent and, where permitted, short term holiday let).
> (f) Purchasers of a unit in the subject development have the option to reside in the apartment, or theoretically utilise an onsite letting agent or an offsite letting agent to manage it privately.

216. Mr Hamilton in his report considered that the correct approach to the valuation of the apartments is as an apartment in a residential tower in The Oracle, although it should be valued with the full knowledge that Peppers is the operator. Mr Hamilton's view is that Peppers as part of the Mantra Group has the necessary expertise and resources to conduct the duties of the caretaker and on-site letting agent to a high standard, and that the commission and management fees charges are in line with comparable on-site letting agreements and that the commission fees would be regulated by market forces. The provision of hotel-like services (such as concierge, room service and 24 hour reception) did not alter the valuation approach. Mr Hamilton did not agree with the contention that the relevant apartments are of a lesser value due to the appointment of Peppers and the branding of the development. He considers that the appointment of Peppers would be favourably received by the market.

217. By comparison, Mr Muchall expressed the opinion that Peppers is seen "more as a boutique smaller scale of up-market short stay accommodation resorts". Other than the Peppers Resort at Kingscliff in New South Wales, he was not aware of any other metropolitan resorts managed by "Peppers" of the nature and scale of Peppers Broadbeach. As a result, Mr Muchall stated in the joint report that he was "not able to comment on the expertise or resources of Peppers to undertake the caretaking and letting duties for Peppers Broadbeach to a high standard." In addition, Mr Muchall was of the opinion that the appointment of Peppers Broadbeach provided a greater emphasis on the overall development as a hotel/resort providing short stay accommodation, and that this would not be attractive to the owner-occupier market, given the high turnover of accommodation and greater use of communal facilities and common areas. He also expressed the view that the approval of a liquor licence for the provision of mini-bars in rooms and in a restaurant/bar would place a greater focus on the development being a hotel, reducing "the prestige residential amenity".

218. In his report Mr Muchall said that potential purchasers of an apartment in such a development generally fall into one of three categories: those who intend to buy for immediate or near term permanent owner occupation; for use as a holiday unit for themselves and their family on a casual basis; or as investment for capital appreciation or a rental return. Each had a different perspective in making a decision to purchase. Owner occupiers preferred to not live in buildings utilised for short stay accommodation. The same could be said for "part-time" owner occupiers who utilise the units for their own holiday use. With investors, the main concern was either for a short/medium term capital gain or a good rental return.

219. As to the difference in value of an apartment in a "Peppers" brand of hotel and/or resort against one in The Oracle as a residential complex where apartments can be let by owners if they choose, Mr Muchall's report expressed the opinion that a potential purchaser would not look as favourably on a Peppers apartment as against an Oracle apartment. His report said that he had not been asked to quantify the difference in value between the two scenarios and he considered that this was "both difficult and fraught with too many unknowns". He said that any difference would also be dependent on the type, size and nature of the accommodation and the purchaser's requirements, which will vary.

220. On a separate question, Mr Muchall's report said that there would not be any perceived difference in value between the Peppers letting business being:

(a) a Peppers luxury five star hotel (or the like); or
(b) a Peppers accommodation resort as part of which Peppers provides hotel-like services.

221. In his cross-examination Mr Muchall accepted that the building was never going to be wholly occupied by owners and long-term or medium-terms tenants, and that there was no exclusion of holiday letting. He accepted that if there had been an attempt to exclude owners from putting their apartment into a letting pool for holiday letting there would be a lot of people who would not be interested in buying an apartment in the building. One such category would be a purchaser who was interested in maximizing their return. Another would be purchasers who wanted to keep their options open. It would also exclude potential purchasers who wished to occupy the apartment for a few weeks themselves per year but otherwise rent it on a holiday basis. When asked whether the exclusion of those people would drive the apartment's value down Mr Muchall responded that this was not a simple question to answer. A restriction on short term accommodation would have an impact, but "on the flip side" it might make the owner-occupier or more prestigious residential areas more valuable. Ultimately, Mr Muchall acknowledged that one could not really tell what impact, if any, the appointment of Peppers had on value because of the absence of sales evidence.

222. Mr Muchall was the joint author of a valuation report produced in June 2008 in relation to The Oracle for first mortgage security purposes. That report addressed, among other things, the value of management rights and was based on a letting pool projection of 100 units in Tower One and 130 in Tower Two which equates to 38 per cent of the total units in Tower One and 54 per cent of the units in Tower Two, or 45 per cent of the total units in the development. The income to be derived by the manager included tour and ticket sales. The 2008 report did not suggest that the letting pool would not consist of short-term accommodation and holiday makers. It tended to indicate that it would. The report's analysis was based upon competition that was considered "to emanate from 41/2-star to 5-star resorts and hotels located throughout the Gold Coast." Calculations were made on the basis of expected occupancy rates and regard was had to occupancy rates for hotels, motels and serviced apartments. The 2008 report is consistent with an assessment of The Oracle as a building that would be conducted as a luxury resort attracting, among others, short-term letting and holiday makers. To the extent that Mr Muchall's 2011 report for the purpose of these proceedings and his oral evidence sought to distinguish between a "prestigious residential apartment complex" and a hotel/ resort, this is not a distinction made in the 2008 report. Further, reference to the disclosure statements given to purchasers, as distinct from material which initially marketed The Oracle, did not indicate that the tower would be predominantly occupied by owner-occupiers or long-term tenants. On the contrary, it indicated short-term letting and holiday-making and the provision of hotel-like services. To the extent that the questions asked of Mr Muchall for the purpose of preparing his 2011 report are based on assumptions about the extent of short-term letting, these assumptions are not reflected in contractual documents. He was briefed, and relied upon, the plaintiffs' affidavits, but was not briefed with the relevant contract and disclosure statements. Any shift from a prestigious residential apartment complex without short-term letting to one that focuses on short-term hotel/resort style accommodation relates to a supposed shift from something that buyers were not contractually promised. The building was always going to compete in the luxury short-term accommodation market, and the Landmark White valuation report of 2008 assumes this to be the case.

223. In the joint expert report Mr Muchall said that he was not able to comment on the expertise or resources of Peppers to undertake the caretaking and letting duties of Peppers Broadbeach to a high standard. However, the evidence, including Mr Hamilton's evidence, is that it is able to do so.

224. Mr Hamilton rejected the proposition that the value of the apartments had gone down as a result of the appointment and presence of Peppers. He saw it as an advantage to have an experienced, well-reputed manager. In connection with the plaintiffs' pleading that the resale value of an apartment will fluctuate in line with the value of the Peppers brand and "not as an individual, independently owned residential apartment", the plaintiffs point to the following evidence given by Mr Hamilton under cross-examination:

> "… if you looked at it on the basis that it wasn't being well managed — and it appears that it is being very well managed — and it was being managed poorly, it could have an adverse [effect] on the lifestyle elements for those people, if guests were unruly or things weren't maintained properly, but I would think that as a buyer I would take better — greater confidence having the Peppers as manager and take confidence that they would be able to control their guests' behaviour, maintain the property in a suitable way beyond its call, so I would think they would be positive things."

The plaintiffs submit that the proposition that if the apartments are well managed by Peppers then the value of lots will be affected positively, carries the corollary that if the apartments are managed poorly by Peppers their value will decrease. They submit that the apartments are "indexed" to the value of the Peppers brand and they have no control over how well or poorly Peppers will perform. These propositions are not really to the point in proving material prejudice. It may be accepted that the value of an apartment will be affected by the value of the Peppers brand and the value of the Peppers Broadbeach brand in particular. However, the value of the apartment would be affected by the brand and performance of any caretaker and letting agent. So too would the rental that it could command.

225. Mr Muchall did not suggest that the appointment of Peppers and the branding undertaken by it had a greater impact on value than if a different and possibly less well-known operator had been appointed and branded the resort with its name. Interestingly, the plaintiffs' submissions on valuation pointed to a recent magazine article as exemplifying the practical effect of the appointment of Peppers Broadbeach. The article claimed:

> "The number one reason to holiday at home: the Gold Coast boasts Australia's best hotel, Peppers Broadbeach."

But this and other descriptions of Peppers Broadbeach as a five star hotel or luxury resort tend to prove that it is being operated successfully.

226. There is no evidence that the management of the tower by Peppers and its promotion as a hotel/ resort branded Peppers Broadbeach has attracted undesirable elements and guests who are disorderly and adversely affect the amenity of residents. The evidence indicated that the tower has a mix of occupants with less than half the apartments being in the Peppers letting pool. This was the kind of proportion anticipated by Landmark White in its 2008 report. I take account of the practical problems that might confront the plaintiffs in proving bad behaviour by Peppers' guests or other adverse impacts that have arisen as a result of Peppers appointment. Current owners might be unlikely to give evidence of such negative matters for fear that it would reduce the value of their apartment. However, there was no evidence of these adverse impacts. Not only were the plaintiffs unable to call such evidence in their cases, the issue was not explored in the cross-examination of the defendants' witnesses, particularly Mr Johnson who is very familiar with the operation of the development. There is nothing to detract from the evidence, including Mr Hamilton's evidence, that the building appears to be very well managed. In addition, it is in Peppers' interest to control guests and maintain standards. It is contractually obliged to do so.

227. In arriving at his opinions concerning value, and the consequences of the appointment of Peppers, Mr Hamilton had regard to different sectors of the market, including investors and owner-occupiers. He did not consider that the appointment of Peppers as manager would adversely impact on the lifestyle of someone living at the property, and it gave them the opportunity if their circumstances changed to take advantage of Peppers expertise. Mr Hamilton did not consider that a newspaper description of the property as a hotel called for a completely different valuation exercise because one was not concerned with a hotel room. Instead what was being valued was an apartment with a particular number of bedrooms. Certain hotel-like services might be available via Peppers to short stay visitors who rented the apartment.

228. The essence of the plaintiffs' submission on valuation was that the plaintiffs contracted for what were to be "first-class, indeed 'iconic', units, probably the best units in the Broadbeach residential unit market" and that what were tendered in performance are apartments which focus on short-term hotel/resort style accommodation identifiable as Peppers Broadbeach. However, the correct valuation analysis for the purpose of the deciding whether there has been a diminution in value is to value what the plaintiffs' contracted for, namely an apartment in a tower in which the apartment and other apartments in the tower might be let for short-stays and to holiday makers. The apartment contracted for was one which the owner might use as a permanent residence or let to long-term tenants, but also was available for short-term letting, as were all other apartments in the building. The apartment contracted for was one in a tower with an on-site letting agent who could conduct the business of letting and provide services to residents and their guests. Mr Hamilton had appropriate regard to this mix. In response to a question about the advertising of hotel/like services and an "increased focus on short-stay accommodation", Mr Hamilton responded that he did not think that the building had changed its focus at all, because it was always going to have a mix of end users. Mr Hamilton did not regard the provision of a restaurant and bar on the ground floor of Tower One as adversely affecting the value of an apartment in it. In fact, in his opinion it had a positive impact. High rise apartments on the Gold Coast that had been built from 1970 onwards often included a restaurant/bar on the ground floor and the presence of such a facility was relevant to how star ratings were assessed. A restaurant was regarded as a positive attribute that would lift the star rating.

229. There was some debate and submissions were made as to whether Mr Hamilton had inappropriate regard to comparable buildings at Main Beach and Surfers Paradise. The plaintiffs' submissions contend that he approached the valuation on the basis that the apartment formed part of a broader market on the Gold Coast for high rise residential towers. I do not consider that the criticism is justified. Mr Hamilton referred to a "prestige sector of the apartment market" and to a "Broadbeach Highrise Market Sector". He paid appropriate regard to other high rise residential towers, as did Mr Muchall. Both had appropriate regard to high rise apartments at Broadbeach and elsewhere on the Gold Coast. Both had regard to the tower's high quality and its locality.

230. The valuation witnesses were cross-examined about whether an apartment might have had a higher value if a greater proportion of apartments in the tower were occupied by owners and the tower was not operated by Peppers. Such a tower would have greater appeal to certain categories of investors. But its greater appeal to a certain category of buyers needs to be balanced against its reduced appeal to other categories of buyer. A tower that could not be operated as it currently is by Peppers, and which focused upon permanent residents, would appeal to some sectors of the market, but not to others. I do not consider that either expert was in a position to say reliably whether an apartment in such a tower would be worth more or less than its present value.

231. No contractual provision indicated that the tower was going to be occupied entirely, or even predominantly, by owner-occupiers, even if some buyers were led to believe that owner-occupiers were its target market. Mr Muchall in 2008 assumed that 38 per cent of the units in Tower One would be in the letting pool that was managed by the entity that acquired management rights. It is doubtful whether each apartment would have had a higher value if there had been a contractual provision in all of the contracts for the tower to be occupied exclusively by owner-occupiers and long-term tenants. Mr Hamilton's evidence was to the effect that such an apartment would probably have less value because of its reduced appeal to the largest part of the investor market. Mr Muchall said that such arrangements would have a negative impact upon investors who wish or might wish to let the apartment on a short-term basis, but would increase its appeal to owner-occupiers. Under cross-examination he did not say what the net effect would be.

232. The first valuation issue on the pleadings relates to the fluctuation in value of an apartment in line with the value of the Peppers brand and/or the Peppers Broadbeach brand. This point seems to go no where. The resale value of an apartment might fluctuate in line with the value of these brands and those, in turn, might be linked to the performance of Peppers and Peppers Broadbeach in particular. An apartment is to be valued as a "residential apartment", but as one in a residential tower that will be occupied by a variety of residents, including persons occupying an apartment for a short term or on holiday. The apartment is to be valued as an apartment in a residential tower, but knowing that the tower has a caretaker and letting agent whose letting business seeks to service consumers wanting to occupy the apartment on holidays or for a short term. There is no evidence that the value of an apartment would fluctuate any more if the letting business was conducted by Peppers as opposed to any other manager. The plaintiffs have failed to establish the material prejudice pleaded in sub-paragraphs 40(b) and (c) in the Wicks proceeding in relation to fluctuation in value.

233. As to the issue of alleged reduction in value, as pleaded in paragraph 40(m) and hinted at in paragraph 33 of the Wicks pleading, the plaintiffs have not proven their pleaded case. They have not proven that the apartment that Mr and Mrs Wicks agreed to purchase, or any other relevant apartment in these proceedings, is of lesser value in consequence of the appointment of Peppers, the conduct of Peppers and the tower's branding as Peppers Broadbeach. This addresses the matters earlier raised in paragraphs 33 and 34 of the Wicks pleading in relation to the "resale value" and the "rental value" of the apartment. The plaintiffs have not proven that the value of an apartment is any less than it would have been if a different operator had been appointed to conduct the letting business under a different brand, or under no brand at all. What can be said is that the apartment would be worth less if a less competent and experienced manager, who lacked the experience and competence of Peppers, had been appointed.

234. In conclusion, the plaintiffs have not proven their pleaded case in relation to an alleged reduction in the value of the relevant apartments in consequence of the appointment of Peppers, its operation of the apartment tower and the branding of the building as Peppers Broadbeach.

235. It follows that the plaintiffs have not proven that any departure from promised contractual performance in respect of the appointment of a letting agent in accordance with the Caretaking and Letting Agreement, and in particular the appointment of Peppers and the branding of the tower as Peppers Broadbeach, has had an adverse effect on the market value of any of the apartments which they contracted to purchase.

236. This issue of value, of course, is a different issue to the subjective value that a particular purchaser might place upon the consequences of the appointment of Peppers and the branding of the tower as Peppers Broadbeach. It is also an issue different from the effect upon the residential amenity of owner-occupiers of the appointment of Peppers, the branding of the tower as Peppers Broadbeach and the apparent success of Peppers Broadbeach in its operation. Those issues of residential amenity will be later addressed in the context of claims that rely upon the BCCM Act.

237. I have addressed the valuation evidence and certain pleaded issues of material prejudice at this point because the plaintiff's submissions were that "[v]aluation considerations run commonly as regards both repudiation and BCCMA Operation". To the extent that valuation considerations and the valuation evidence bear upon issues of repudiation rather than pleaded issues of material prejudice under the BCCM Act, I conclude that the plaintiffs have not proven that the appointment of Peppers, Peppers' operation or the branding of the tower as Peppers Broadbeach has had an adverse effect upon the value of apartments. There is no evidence that the branding of the towers as such has had an adverse effect upon the value of individual apartments. The evidence is that Peppers is an experienced and competent operator, and there is no evidence that the resort is not well managed by it. The evidence is to the effect that it is well managed. The plaintiffs' contracts always contemplated the appointment of a manager and letting agent. There was no contractual promise that the management rights would be given to a company that had access to the management systems and experience possessed by Mantra/Peppers. To the extent that there was an expectation that the management rights would be sold to such an entity, the expectation has not been disappointed. Relevantly, the appointment of Peppers has not been shown to have reduced the value of the apartments compared to the value which they would have had if a different entity had been appointed. To the extent that valuation considerations are relevant to issues of repudiation, the plaintiffs have not proven their case.

Conclusion — repudiation

238. The plaintiffs have not established that SSI repudiated the contracts and that they were discharged from their contracts under the general law.

Purported termination under the BCCM Act

239. I have earlier outlined relevant sections of the BCCM Act and the principles that emerge from authorities in respect of them. The entitlement to terminate under the Act is invoked by Mr and Mrs Wicks, Mr Gough and Ms Groves, and Ms Ryan. These plaintiffs plead that the final disclosure statement had become inaccurate as that term is used in ss 214(4)(b) and 217(b)(iv) of the Act on certain grounds. They also pleaded that they would be "materially prejudiced", as that expression is used in the Act, if compelled to complete the contract, by reason of the extent to which the final disclosure statement has become inaccurate by reason of any or a combination of various matters. Fourteen sub-paragraphs of paragraph 40 of the Wicks pleading allege material prejudice by reason of the extent to which the final disclosure statement had become inaccurate. These sub-paragraphs also appear in the pleadings of Mr Gough and Ms Groves, and Ms Ryan, with one sub-paragraph in the Wicks proceeding being in a slightly different form since it contains specific reference to their retirement.

240. As to the issue of inaccuracy, the Court of Appeal judgment in Mirvac Queensland Pty Ltd v Wilson[30] states that the inaccuracy "must be 'real or of substance as distinct from ephemeral or nominal' such as to impact on the bargain." The inaccuracy by which the buyer would be "materially prejudiced" if compelled to complete the contract is an inaccuracy in the disclosure statement given under the Act, not an inaccuracy in some extraneous material. I will address each of the points of alleged material prejudice that were pressed by the relevant plaintiffs in final submissions under the relevant headings that appear in those submissions and which are pleaded in paragraph 40 of the Wicks pleading, paragraph 39 of the Gough and Groves pleading and paragraph 41 of the Ryan pleading.

Sub-paragraph (a): The apartment purportedly offered in performance by the defendant is not an apartment in a residential tower in The Oracle but rather an apartment in a hotel/resort branded "Peppers Broadbeach" with the features, attributes, uses and consequences pleaded in earlier paragraphs

241. The disclosure statement described the lot as being in a residential tower. This is not inaccurate. Matters extraneous to the disclosure statement (such as brochures and representations by sales staff) may have led some buyers to expect that the tower would be occupied predominantly by owner-occupiers or long-term tenants. However, the disclosure statement did not represent this to be the case. For the reasons given earlier, if the tower is described as a hotel/resort then it is still a residential tower. The final disclosure statement has not become inaccurate because some would describe the tower as a hotel/resort. A further disclosure statement which described it as a hotel might be inaccurate, at least according to some definitions of what constitutes a hotel. The relevant alleged inaccuracy relates to the fact that the lot was described as being a lot in a residential tower. This description has not become inaccurate since the tower is still a residential tower. A further disclosure statement describing it as a "hotel/resort" or by some other term was not necessary to prevent the disclosure statement from becoming inaccurate.

242. The next alleged inaccuracy relates to the fact that the final disclosure statement described the lot as being in a residential tower in The Oracle whereas the disclosure statement, if now given, would state that it is in a lot in a hotel/resort branded Peppers Broadbeach. The lot is in a residential tower in The Oracle, being the name of the development as a whole. Accordingly, the ground of inaccuracy pleaded in paragraph 39(b) of the Wicks pleading is not established. The alleged inaccuracy and the associated plea of material prejudice appear to relate to an inaccuracy because the disclosure statement, if now given, would need to state that the lot is in a hotel/resort branded Peppers Broadbeach. I do not consider that the final disclosure statement has become inaccurate because it does not describe the residential tower as being in a "hotel/resort". The tower contemplated by the disclosure statement was a residential tower with in excess of 260 apartments, managed by a caretaker and letting agent and having the features of a resort. The disclosure statement had not become inaccurate in any of these respects. The fact that some persons might label the building as a hotel does not mean that the final disclosure statement becomes inaccurate. Many would label it a hotel if a different letting agent had been appointed on the basis that it would be an apartment/hotel in which short-term guests, holiday makers and others would reside and receive certain hotel-style services.

243. The remaining issue then becomes one in relation to the branding of the hotel/resort as Peppers Broadbeach. The disclosure statement indicated that the tower was to be known as The Oracle. Its branding as Peppers Broadbeach means that this is not the case and the disclosure statement has become inaccurate in that regard. Incidentally, sub-paragraph 39(b) of the Wicks pleading in relation to the branding issue and sub-paragraph 40(a) dealing with the related matter of material prejudice do not specifically plead that the tower itself was to be known as The Oracle. In any case, I will proceed on the basis that the final disclosure statement has become inaccurate in respect of the name of the tower itself. The plaintiffs do not plead that the different name in itself is a ground of material prejudice. Some of their evidence touched on this aspect. I address it below. A beneficial construction of what is meant by "materially prejudiced" should be adopted in accordance with Mirvac Queensland Pty Ltd v Wilson.[31] However, it has not been demonstrated that the relevant plaintiffs have been disadvantaged substantially or to an important extent by an inaccuracy in the name of the tower. The tower remains one in a development known as The Oracle.

Sub-paragraphs (b), (c) and (m): Valuation issues

244. I have addressed above the issue pleaded in sub-paragraph 40(b) of the Wicks pleading in relation to fluctuation in the resale value of the apartment. Similar considerations apply in relation to the rental value of the apartment being a matter pleaded in sub-paragraph 40(c). The same conclusions reached in relation to fluctuation in the resale value apply to fluctuations in the rental value. I have found that the diminution in value alleged in sub-paragraph 40(m) has not been proven.

Sub-paragraph (d): The fees for caretaking and letting 245. The matter pleaded in sub-paragraph 40(d) of the Wicks pleading is not pressed.

Sub-paragraph (e): The ability, in practical terms, to use an off-site agent to let the apartment and/or to let it privately

246. The plaintiffs pleaded as a ground of inaccuracy that the Caretaking and Letting Agreement enabled them to advertise and arrange for the letting of the lot through an off-site agent or privately, whereas the disclosure statement if given now would be required to disclose that they "would have no practical ability to let the lot through an off-site agent or privately" because they would not be able to use the name and marks of Peppers Broadbeach in order to advertise the apartment, nor would they able to use the name and mark The Oracle. The plaintiffs did not specifically plead that any such practical inability was the result of what is described as the "Oracle Brand Licence" addressed in clause 45 of the Share Sale Agreement and the "Trade Mark Licence" in Annexure D to that agreement. The terms and effect of these licences were not specifically pleaded. SSI complained about the late emergence of any issue in relation to the licence granted by clause 45 of the Share Sale Agreement. I allowed certain cross-examination of Mr Johnson over objection. However, the plaintiffs established few, if any, facts in relation to the licensing of the marks and the practical effect that such licensing has upon the opportunity to advertise or let an apartment through an off-site agent or privately.

An important preliminary point in terms of the accuracy or inaccuracy of the disclosure statement is the fact that the disclosure statement made no statements about intellectual property in The Oracle. In particular, it did not represent that SSI, the body corporate or any other entity owned the relevant trade marks and would license them to individuals.

248. Clause 45 of the Share Sale Agreement requires South Sky Enterprises Pty Ltd to procure entry into a licence. The licence is between Niecon Developments Pty Ltd as licensor and Mantra IP Pty Ltd as licensee. This clause of the Share Sale Agreement relates to the licensing of certain marks in connection with Peppers' letting business in respect of the two apartment buildings.

249. The plaintiffs did not plead or prove that they had any rights in respect of those marks before the Share Sale Agreement was entered into or that entry into the Share Sale Agreement affected those rights. The disclosure statement simply did not address entitlement to any trade marks, let alone promise that buyers would have ownership or licences to use any such trade marks. Incidentally, the BCCM Act does not require a disclosure statement to address such matters.

250. The plaintiffs have not produced evidence, let alone proven, that the granting of the licences referred to in the Share Sale Agreement has caused them, or is likely to cause them, any harm. In particular, they have not shown that the relevant licences mean that they have no practical opportunity to advertise or let their apartment through an off-site agent or privately. There was no evidence that the licence impacts upon the practical ability of an owner to advertise or let their apartments through an off-site agent. The only evidence given on the topic tended to indicate that there was no apparent problem. No owner of an apartment gave evidence of any difficulty in using an off-site agent or in letting their apartment privately. No off-site agent was called to say that the licence did, or would, adversely affect their ability to let an apartment in The Oracle. The valuers who gave evidence did not suggest any practical problem in relation to off-site letting in general or licensing of names in particular. Mr Johnson was not aware of any difficulty experienced by owners who use off-site letting agents in using the word Oracle or The Oracle.

251. In any event, the licence referred to in clause 45 of the Share Sale Agreement does not appear to preclude the relevant plaintiffs from advertising the fact that they wish to let an apartment in The Oracle. A registered trade mark would not prevent the use of the word The Oracle to describe either the development or the tower in which the apartment is located.

252. The plaintiffs sought to rely upon the decision in the South Sky Investments Pty Ltd v Prins.[32] That decision involved an application by SSI (the plaintiff in that case) for summary judgment against purchasers. The argument advanced in opposition to summary judgment by the defendants in that case was that they intended to let two apartments by their own marketing and that the effect of registration of certain trademarks would be to make them uncompetitive with the on-site agency. Their case was that they should have been told this by SSI and that they were thereby misled or deceived in contravention of s 52 of the Trade Practices Act 1974 (Cth). A particular allegation was that registration of certain trademarks would make it impossible for any competitor, such as the defendants, to use the word "Oracle" as part of a domain name, and that there were other effects upon search results on the internet.

253. After referring to relevant authority, McMurdo J stated:

> "If the defendants here mean to say that any use of the expression 'The Oracle', in the promotion of their apartments if they must purchase them, would be an infringement of these marks, if registered, they are misstating the effect of that judgment. So far as the Trade Marks Act is concerned, the defendants would be able to use the name of this building (Oracle) or any similar name to identify and describe the apartments being offered for rental, as long as they did not use the words as a trade mark, ie use them to distinguish their business services from others offering apartments in this building."[33] (italics in original)

> "Nevertheless, on the state of the present evidence, it cannot be concluded now, in the plaintiff's favour, that the registration of the trade marks could have no substantial impact upon competitors of the on-site manager, such as the defendants if they are ordered to complete their contracts. There are two propositions in respect of trade mark infringements which are relevant at this point. The first is that although the use of a trade mark as a trade mark is often distinguished from a use which is merely descriptive of the product or service, a use might constitute an infringement, by its being used as a trade mark, although the mark also serves at the same time a descriptive function. Secondly, a party might infringe a trade mark although not intending to use the mark as a trade mark. The path for the intended user of the relevant words, in order to avoid an infringement, might not be so clearly marked that the user would not be forced to err on the side of caution to avoid an infringing use. Thus for the present, the claims by the defendants that they would be significantly affected in their use of the name of the building, specifically within their internet marketing, cannot be readily dismissed. Instead, all of this requires a factual inquiry at a trial. In particular, there are necessary inquiries as to what form of internet material is necessary to effectively compete with the on-site operator and as to what use of the relevant words might be necessary to that end. There would then be questions as to whether such material, at least arguably, would constitute an infringement. Even a serious prospect of infringement might be a sufficient deterrent to the use of the subject words that it would present a substantial impediment to persons such as the defendants in competing with the on-site operator."[34] (emphasis added)

These observations were made in the context of an application for summary judgment and served to identify the importance of undertaking a factual inquiry at trial of the issues raised in that proceeding. In these proceedings the plaintiffs did not call evidence that supported the relevant pleaded allegation or the unpleaded allegation concerning the effect of the licence on their practical ability to let the lot through an off-site agent or privately. The plaintiffs in this case did not call evidence or undertake the kind of factual inquiry at trial alluded to by McMurdo J.

254. The plaintiffs submit that the issue is whether they will be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contracts because of the extent to which the disclosure statement has become inaccurate and, as with the Prins case, the disclosure statement material did not refer to an intention to apply for registration of trademarks, nor to an intention to licence them. I note that the plaintiffs in this case did not plead or particularise an inaccuracy or material prejudice in that particular respect. However, leaving aside the absence of a specific pleading in this respect, the plaintiffs' case in relation to inaccuracy and material prejudice fails because the plaintiffs did not call evidence so as to permit a factual inquiry into the issue of whether trademark licences have deprived them of the ability, in practical terms, to let the apartment privately or by using an off-site agent.

255. In summary, I am not satisfied that the disclosure statement is inaccurate in the respect alleged or that any such inaccuracy would materially prejudice the relevant plaintiffs if they were compelled to complete their contracts.

Sub-paragraphs (f), (g) and (h): Tenants who do not wish to stay in a hotel/resort

256. Mr and Mrs Wicks plead as grounds of material prejudice:

> "(f) If the Plaintiffs do not include apartment 1803 in the letting pool for 'Peppers Broadbeach', they will be deprived of the ability to market apartment 1803 to, or to attract to apartment 1803, tenants who do not wish to stay in an hotel/resort.
> (g) If the Plaintiffs do include apartment 1803 in the letting pool for 'Peppers Broadbeach' they will be:
> (i) restricted to receiving less than 50% of the income from the apartment; and
>
> [140470]
> (ii) will not own a lot marketable to people who do not wish to stay in an hotel/resort.
> (h) If the Plaintiffs do not include apartment 1803 in the letting pool for 'Peppers Broadbeach' they will nonetheless be deprived of the ability to market apartment 1803 to or to attract to apartment 1803:
>
> (i) persons who do not wish to stay in an hotel/resort; and > (ii) persons who do not with to stay in premises the subject of a liquor licence;
> with diminished return from attempted letting accordingly."

257. The plaintiffs submit that the particular prejudice attaching as a result of these points is that the market sectors available to the plaintiffs if compelled to complete the contracts will reduce. In oral submissions the plaintiffs acknowledged that there was no promise of receiving 50 per cent of the income from the apartment, and that the evidence did not support a finding that they would be restricted to receiving less than 50 per cent of the income from the apartment. Accordingly, I disregard sub-paragraph (g)(i).

258. None of the plaintiffs who rely upon an asserted entitlement to cancel pursuant to the Act originally intended to let their apartments. However, as a result of the global financial crisis, Mr Wicks changed his retirement plans, and Mr Gough and Ms Groves changed their plans to sell their home and move into the apartment. To the extent that there always was a possibility that their plans might change and they might decide to let their respective apartments for some time before either occupying them or selling them, it is appropriate to address the alleged point of material prejudice in relation to tenants who do not wish to stay in a hotel/resort. The plaintiffs submit that they will be deprived of the ability to market the units to:

> "(a) people who do not wish to stay in an apartment the subject of a liquor licence. The largest sector particularly affected would be the Islamic market, bearing in mind the populations of tourists and purchasers from the Middle East and the Islamic countries of South East Asia.
> (b) people who do not with [sic: wish] to stay in or own an apartment in an hotel/resort — persons with the same views on the point as the Plaintiffs."

There was no evidence about the extent of the sectors of the market referred to in these submissions.

259. It is unnecessary to repeat matters that have been addressed in respect of other grounds of material prejudice, particularly those in relation to the description of the tower as a hotel/resort. The present point relates to sectors of the market who do not wish to stay in a hotel/resort. The threshold point relates to an inaccuracy in the disclosure statement or the fact that the final disclosure statement has become inaccurate as that term is used in sub-paragraphs 214(4)(b) and 217(b)(iv) of the Act. I have addressed that point in a related context. In the present context, the disclosure statement did not make any statement about the expected mix of tenants or their priorities. It was consistent with owners letting their apartments to a range of persons, including persons who would occupy the apartment for a short stay or on holiday and would receive certain hotel-like services supplied by the entity appointed as Caretaker and Letting Agent. Such services might include room service, which in turn might involve the service of alcohol. The other disclosure statements, namely the Operator PDS and the Developer PDS, clearly contemplated the provision of hotel-like services.

260. The present point arises because the provision of certain hotel-like services by Peppers and the marketing of Peppers Broadbeach leads to the tower being described by some as a hotel/resort. There is no direct evidence about the categories of people who would not wish to stay at such a resort. I am prepared to assume that there would be some individuals who would not wish to stay there because they do not wish to stay in a hotel/resort or do not wish to stay in premises that are the subject of a liquor licence. This point needs to be taken into account, along with the fact that the conduct of Peppers and the services it supplies (including room service and a mini-bar), are presumably attractive to many people, including those who do wish to stay in a hotel/resort and who would value the convenience of not having to go outside to purchase liquor. These might include individuals who are influenced by magazine articles and other marketing. For example, a magazine article tendered by the plaintiffs (Exhibit 105) effusively describes Peppers Broadbeach as Australia's best hotel, based upon feedback from guests who posted on the Trip Advisor website. The article refers to the services offered at reception and by porters. It refers to many aspects of the tower, to a day spa and to the hotel's position "without peer". These and other communications are apt to attract people who wish to stay in a hotel/resort.

261. If the appointment of Peppers means that the plaintiffs are deprived of their ability to market their apartment to persons who do not wish to stay in a hotel/resort, this needs to be counterbalanced against their ability to market the apartment to persons who do wish to stay in a hotel/resort, and a luxury one at that.

262. It should be recalled that the disclosure statement did not label the tower as a hotel/resort. The information sheet that formed part of it simply described it as the residential component of the development. Some would say that the residential component was always going to be in the nature of a resort or a hotel/resort for persons living there during short stays and on holidays. Its evolution into a tower in which a substantial number of apartments are in a letting pool of apartments to be used by holiday makers and others wishing to stay at a hotel/resort is not a development that makes the disclosure statement inaccurate. If, however, the disclosure statement was inaccurate or has become inaccurate because of this development, then it is not a development which has been shown materially to prejudice the plaintiffs because they have been deprived of the ability to market the apartment to persons who do not wish to stay in a hotel/resort. The plaintiffs have not persuaded me that they have been prejudiced materially in the respects alleged.

Sub-paragraphs (i) and (l): Residential amenity and increased use

263. Mr and Mrs Wicks plead:

> "(i) The Plaintiffs entered into the contract with the intention of retiring to Broadbeach to live in apartment 1803 as an apartment in a residential tower in 'The Oracle' and have no desire, and will be prejudiced if compelled to, live for the duration of their retirement in an hotel/resort with the features attributes uses and consequences referred to in paragraphs 32–37."

They and the other plaintiffs plead:

> "(l) The conduct of the development as an hotel/resort will:
> (i) compromise owners' enjoyment of the common property of the Scheme by reason of the use of a substantial part of that property for a restaurant and/or bar conducted for 'Peppers Broadbeach' with associated adverse effect on the amenity of the Scheme and individual apartments.
> (ii) accelerate the deterioration of the common property of the Scheme giving rise to a consequential increase in cost to the owners of apartments by the increase in levies to fund more frequent maintenance, repair and replacement than would otherwise be the case;
> (iii) increase the damage to and destruction of common property of the Scheme due to the increased number of persons (hotel/resort guests and hotel/resort staff) using the same (especially in light of sales of liquor) giving rise to consequential increase in cost to the owners of apartments by the increase in levies to fund repair and replacement of such common property;
> (iv) increase the cost of insurance of the development with consequential increases in levies to the owners of apartments;
> (v) have an adverse effect upon the residential amenity of both the common property and individual apartments."

264. The plaintiffs do not press the points made in sub-paragraphs (j) and (k) in relation to material prejudice. It is convenient to deal with sub-paragraphs (i) and (l) together because they both involve the issue of residential amenity. Sub-paragraph (i) relates to alleged prejudice in being compelled to live during retirement in a hotel/resort with the features of Peppers Broadbeach. This allegation is pleaded only in the Wicks matters. I will address their personal circumstances later. Sub-paragraph 40(l) in the Wicks proceeding and the equivalent paragraphs in the pleadings in the Gough and Groves and Ryan proceedings raise the issue of residential amenity and it is convenient to deal with that issue, including the particular prejudice that is alleged in respect of the amenity of Mr and Mrs Wicks during their retirement. The issue of residential amenity is relevant to each of the plaintiffs both in respect of any period in which they might reside in the apartment and also in respect of the amenity of the apartment to an individual who might use their apartment as a permanent residence. At one stage Mr Gough and Ms Groves intended to use their apartment as a residence. Ms Ryan, on the other hand, contracted to purchase an apartment expecting to re-sell it. She was told by a real estate agent that The Oracle was to be an iconic residential project with permanent and long-term residents only, and was designed to attract "baby boomers" looking to downsize and move from homes into a luxuriously-appointed development. Accordingly, the residential amenity of the tower to such potential purchasers is relevant to Ms Ryan's circumstances. It will be necessary to consider the personal circumstances of each of the plaintiffs who assert an entitlement to cancel under the Act in determining the issue of material prejudice. Before doing so, it is necessary to identify the alleged inaccuracy in the disclosure statement and the extent to which the disclosure statement has become inaccurate.

265. The BCCM Act is not concerned with material prejudice in some general sense but with material prejudice to the buyer if compelled to complete the contract "given the extent to which the disclosure statement was, or has become, inaccurate"[35] , or from the fact that the buyer would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract "because of" an inaccuracy under s 217(b), in this case because information disclosed in the disclosure statement, as rectified by any further statement, is inaccurate.

266. The relevant inaccuracy that is causally linked to the material prejudice that I am presently considering is not apparent on the pleadings. I may have already dealt with some alleged inaccuracies in dealing with earlier grounds of material prejudice. Without unnecessarily repeating matters, the apartment being offered in performance is an apartment in a residential tower in the development known as The Oracle. The plaintiffs currently under consideration (and others) may have expected the contracted apartment to be in a particular kind of residential tower, namely one predominantly occupied by permanent and long-term residents. This expectation was not based upon the contents of the disclosure statement. The final disclosure statement has not become inaccurate as that term is used in relevant provisions of the Act because it describes the apartment as being a lot in a residential tower.

267. Sub-paragraph 39(a) of the Wicks pleading says that a disclosure statement "if given now would and must state that Lot 1803 would be an apartment in an hotel/resort." I am not persuaded that the requirements of the Act require a disclosure statement to give such a short-form description, or that the final disclosure statement has become inaccurate because it does not include such a description. As previously noted, although some would describe the tower as a hotel, that simple description is, at best, incomplete and possibly misleading. The tower has many features that a hotel does not possess and lacks features that many hotels possess. It is not occupied only by hotel guests and hotel staff. Although the current mix of occupants is not clear from the evidence, SSI submits, and the plaintiffs' submissions do not contest, that it has a mix of occupants with less than half having decided to appoint Peppers to manage their apartments.

268. The BCCM Disclosure Statement and the "material accompanying" it did not make any statement about the expected mix of occupants. Apart from the information sheet which effectively described the tower as a residential tower, it did not give a general description of it. It did not state that the tower would be occupied predominantly by permanent and long-term residents. It did not state that the services to be provided by the letting agent, the features of the building and the facilities and services enjoyed by short-term tenants and holiday makers would lead to it being described in some particular way, or not being described as a hotel or resort, particularly by persons occupying apartments managed by the letting agent.

269. The fact that the tower is described as a hotel or resort, and in the opinion of many has become a hotel or resort, is a matter of particular concern to someone like Mr Wicks. As an airline pilot, much of his life has been spent in hotels, and he says in his affidavit that the thought of retiring to a hotel/resort development is abhorrent. This evidence is relevant to the issue of material prejudice in the case of Mr and Mrs Wicks. It bears upon their personal circumstances and upon their residential amenity.

270. In relation to issues of residential amenity that are specifically pleaded in sub-paragraph 40(l) of the Wicks pleading and in comparable paragraphs of the pleadings in the Gough and Groves and the Ryan proceedings, it is necessary to identify the relevant inaccuracy before turning to the extent to which any such inaccuracy would cause material prejudice if the plaintiffs were required to complete their contract. No specific allegation of inaccuracy in respect of residential amenity is made in paragraph 39 of the Wicks pleading. Instead, it is apparently subsumed in the general contentions that the lot was to be in a residential tower, whereas a disclosure statement if now given would have to state that it is an apartment in a hotel/ resort branded Peppers Broadbeach. The starting point for an assessment of alleged inaccuracy bearing upon residential amenity is the content of the disclosure statement that was given in respect of the contract, and each further statement and any material accompanying it. This includes the Caretaking and Letting Agreement in respect of a tower which was to have more than 250 apartments. The annexures to the disclosure statement also included Facility Sharing Agreements which contemplated use of facilities in Tower One by occupants of Tower Two and owners of lots and employees in the retail component of the development. The Caretaking and Letting Agreement was consistent with the letting agent seeking to attract short-term tenants and holiday makers. It contemplated the conduct of events in occupation areas and the use of the caretaker's lot on the ground floor of Tower One for services commonly rendered in connection with letting lots in such a development and for any lawful activity. The contract itself contemplated that two levels in the Scheme Buildings might be used for "Commercial Purposes", being any lawful purpose that was non-residential.

271. The occupation of the tower by short-term tenants and holiday makers and the provision of services to them by the letting agent was contemplated by the disclosure statement. It was more clearly indicated by the Operator PDS and the Developer PDS which the plaintiffs contend form part of the contract. Incidentally, very few of the plaintiffs read the disclosure statements in any detail. In any event, the disclosure statement given under the BCCM Act made no explicit statement about residential amenity. The plaintiffs plead no such statement. The disclosure statement did not indicate that the amenity of residents would not be affected by the movement of persons occupying the more than 250 apartments in the tower or the provision of services to them by the letting agent that was to be appointed to manage the tower.

272. The relevant inaccuracy in the disclosure statement is ill-defined by the plaintiffs' pleadings. Instead, the essence of their cases on inaccuracy and material prejudice relate to the appointment of Peppers, its operation of the letting business, and the provisions of the Share Sale Agreement that facilitate the conduct of that business. These and other matters are alleged to have resulted in the tower becoming a hotel/resort that attracts more people than the plaintiffs had expected. Those expectations, however, are not based on the BCCM Act disclosure statement. They arise because of statements made outside of it, including statements made by sales representatives. These expectations were not deflated or adjusted by reading the BCCM Act disclosure statement, its annexures, or the other disclosure statements provided to the plaintiffs.

273. Save in the respects that I have previously addressed, namely the name of the tower itself, I am not satisfied that the final disclosure statement is inaccurate or has become inaccurate on any of the bases pleaded and pressed by the plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs' written submissions anticipate the contention that the contract and the disclosure statements suggested that there would be a great deal of foot traffic in the premises. They submit that Peppers is a hotel/resort providing services in addition to those of a letting agent under the terms of the Caretaking and Letting Agreement annexed to the disclosure statement, and that this will involve an increase in the number of people able to access Tower One. Particular reliance is placed upon the proposed restaurant and bar on the ground floor as being open to the public and attracting members of the public to the foyer area. This is said to increase the number of people present, increase the number of inebriated people present and decrease the security of those residents wanting security. More generally, the "short-stay" nature of Peppers business is said to cause a substantial increase in both the number and turnover of short-stay tenants/ patrons, who will be distributed throughout the two towers.

275. As to the restaurant and bar pleaded in paragraph 40(l)(i), the proposed restaurant and bar is limited to the area described as Lot 101. By reason of its ownership of Lot 101, and the terms of relevant documents, the on-site letting agent (SSA) is entitled to use Lot 101 for the provision of certain services to residents and guests and other lawful activity. The use of Lot 101 as a restaurant and bar is authorised by the permission granted by the Caretaking and Letting Agreement to use it for the provision of services associated with the letting business. The letting business is one that provides services to residents and guests. It services apartments that are to be occupied by persons expecting to occupy an apartment warranting a star rating of four-and-a-half to five stars. The provision of an in-house restaurant and bar is necessary for Peppers to achieve its desired rating. The existence of a ground-floor restaurant and bar in such an apartment complex is common on the Gold Coast. In any event, the establishment of kitchen facilities would be necessary to operate room service. The plaintiffs do not allege that the proposed use of Lot 101 as a restaurant and bar would be unlawful.

276. The BCCM Act disclosure statement did not state that Lot 101 would be used as a restaurant and bar. However, this does not mean that the statement has become inaccurate. The use of Lot 101 as a restaurant and bar appears to be authorised by the Caretaking and Letting Agreement annexed to the disclosure statement. The fact that a different letting agent might have put Lot 101 to a different use, for example a retail shop directed at tourists or a tour office, does not mean that the appointed letting agent is not authorised to use it as a restaurant and bar. Peppers intends to use the restaurant and bar to provide services to residents and guests. The proposed restaurant and bar is targeted at residents and guests. There is no evidence that it is targeted at members of the general public. The area of the proposed restaurant and bar is fairly small. The proposal to use Lot 101 as a restaurant and bar does not make the disclosure statement inaccurate.

277. Its establishment may increase foot traffic in the foyer area. The possibility exists that persons using the restaurant and bar will become inebriated. There is no evidence that Peppers will knowingly permit this to occur or will not address the problem if and when it occurs. There is no evidence of a present problem in relation to inebriated residents and guests returning to the premises from bars and restaurants in its vicinity. However, the possibility of this occurring must be present in a tower with more than 250 apartments situated in a tourist area with restaurants and bars. It has not been shown that the proposed in-house restaurant and bar will have any significant adverse effect on residential amenity. The use of Lot 101 for such a purpose is authorised. No inaccuracy in the disclosure statement in this regard has been proven.

278. The broader issue of residential amenity relates to the increase in the number of people present on the premises and the amount of foot traffic as a result of the focus by Peppers on short-stay tenants, compared to the situation that might have obtained if a letting agent did not have that focus. It is indisputable that a focus on short-term tenants will increase the turnover of tenants. Holiday makers coming and going from their apartments may use lifts several times a day, more than permanent and long-term residents who travel to and from their place of employment and depart the building less frequently. An increase in the number and turnover of short-stay tenants has the potential to affect the residential amenity of the relevant plaintiffs if and when they take up permanent residence in the building, and upon the residential amenity of potential purchasers who might seek an apartment in which to reside permanently or frequently. The extent of any reduction in residential amenity is relevant to the issue of material prejudice. The relevant complaint is the focus of the letting business operated by Peppers. Yet the plaintiffs do not point to any statement in the BCCM Act disclosure statement to the effect that a letting agent would not have such a focus. Accordingly, any reduction in residential amenity is not because of any inaccuracy in the information disclosed in the disclosure statement.

279. The specific matters pleaded in sub-paragraph 40(l)(ii), (iii) and (iv) of the Wicks pleading relate to the consequences of increased use of the premises on common property and increases in the cost of insurance, which the plaintiffs submit are likely to be borne by the body corporate and passed on to members of the body corporate. There is no evidence that the conduct of the letting business as a “hotel/resort” has had these consequences compared to the position that would have applied had it not focused upon short-stay tenants and not attracted the description “hotel/resort”. There is no evidence that insurance companies have reclassified the nature of the premises or increased insurance premiums because the premises have become a “hotel/resort”. The plaintiff submits that these matters may be inferred. I am prepared to infer that the conduct of the letting business as a “hotel/resort” that focuses upon short-stay tenants is likely to involve greater use of common property and accelerate the deterioration of common property compared to usage in circumstances in which the letting pool had a greater number of long-term tenants. I am not prepared to infer that insurance premiums have increased. If they have, the extent of any increase is unproven.

280. Moreover, the extent of any accelerated deterioration in common property, any increase in damage to common property and any increase in the cost of insurance must be by reference to the extent to which these are a result of the development being conducted differently to the manner described in the disclosure statement. The disclosure statement did not preclude the letting of apartments on a short-stay basis. The cost to the body corporate and members of the body corporate by any increase in levies as a result of accelerated deterioration, increased damage and increased insurance premiums is unproven. Whatever its extent, it would need to be off-set by possible improvements in rental income because apartments are able to be let to persons who wish to stay at a hotel/resort that provides facilities including the sale of liquor in mini-bars by way of room service and in the yet-to-be established restaurant/bar. Regard would also need to be had to the possible increase in the capital value of the apartment because of its potential to be let to such short-stay tenants. The provision of certain hotel-style services to short-stay tenants is likely to attract more short-stay tenants and increase the amount for which an apartment may be rented on that basis. It may improve occupancy rates compared to the occupancy rates that would prevail if these services were not available. Any increase in occupancy rates may be a mixed blessing to some owners. It may increase the potential rental income of the apartment or maintain and improve its capital value compared to an apartment that did not offer these services and that had a lower occupancy rate. Those potential improvements, with their positive financial benefits, need to be balanced against the cost of providing such services, including increased levies. I am not persuaded that any financial consequences by way of increased levies by reason of the matters pleaded in paragraph 40(l)(ii), (iii) and (iv) exceed the financial benefits to an owner of Peppers conducting the development as a "hotel/resort".

Summary in relation to alleged inaccuracy of the final disclosure statement

281. I am not satisfied that the final disclosure statement has become inaccurate because it describes the lot as being in a residential tower. The tower remains a residential tower. I am not persuaded that a disclosure statement if given now would have to describe the apartment as a "hotel/resort". It might simply refer to it as a residential tower and not attempt to describe it as a hotel, apartment/hotel, self-contained apartments with access to hotel-like services, a resort or in some other way.

282. The final disclosure statement has not become inaccurate because it describes the lot as being a lot in a residential tower in The Oracle. It has, however, become inaccurate insofar as it said that the residential tower itself was to be known as The Oracle, when the residential tower has become branded Peppers Broadbeach. The name of the tower itself is not pleaded as an inaccuracy and the change in the name of the tower itself is not alleged to have caused the plaintiffs material prejudice. The relevant plaintiffs' pleading in relation to inaccuracy and material prejudice does not relate to the name of the tower, as such. The grounds that were pressed in final submissions relate instead to the conduct of the development as a hotel/resort branded Peppers Broadbeach with its focus on short-stays.

283. The conduct of the letting business so as to focus on short-stay tenants is likely to diminish the residential amenity of persons who reside in apartments that they own or who reside there as long-term residents, compared to a letting business that did not have that focus. However, any such adverse effect upon residential amenity and resultant prejudice to the plaintiffs if compelled to complete a contract would not be because of an inaccuracy in the information disclosed in the BCCM Disclosure Statement, as rectified by any further statement made under the BCCM Act. It would be because a particular letting agent chose to focus upon short-stay letting, as it was entitled to do under the Caretaking and Letting Agreement annexed to the BCCM Disclosure Statement.

284. Accordingly I am not satisfied that the final disclosure statement has become inaccurate in any of the pleaded respects, or that the respect in which it has become inaccurate (the name of the tower itself) is an inaccuracy which would result in a buyer being materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract because of that inaccuracy. In terms of s 214(4)(b), the plaintiffs have not proven that they would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract, given the extent to which the disclosure statement was, or has become, inaccurate. In terms of s 217(b)(iv) the plaintiffs have not proven that because of an inaccuracy in the information disclosed in the disclosure statement, as rectified by any further disclosure statement, they would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract.

285. In short, the plaintiffs have not established their pleaded case of inaccuracy, and the inaccuracy that I have found is not shown to have been causative of material prejudice.

Material prejudice — the particular circumstances of the relevant plaintiffs

286. I shall address separately the position of each of the plaintiffs who rely upon an entitlement to cancel under the BCCM Act.

Mr and Mrs Wicks

287. Mr Wicks is an airline pilot. He and his wife have resided in Hong Kong for 25 years, have visited the Gold Coast for 20 years and intended to retire there. On 27 January 2006 they executed a contract to purchase “off the plan” a lot on the eighteenth floor of Oracle Tower One. Mr and Mrs Wicks planned to live in this apartment in their retirement years. After SSI obtained approval to extend the period of time in which it was required to provide the plaintiffs with a registrable instrument of transfer, they executed a second contract to replace the original. This was on 25 July 2006.

288. They received a series of disclosure documents concerning their purchase. On 23 January 2006, prior to signing their first contract, they received an original disclosure statement pursuant to s 213 of the BCCM Act, a Developer PDS and an Operator PDS. On 24 July 2006, they received another disclosure statement (consisting of a Developer PDS and a BCCM Act disclosure statement) in terms materially the same as the original one.

289. On 27 September 2006 the defendant provided a further disclosure statement pursuant to s 214 of the BCCM Act. A second further disclosure statement followed on 16 January 2007, and a third on 22 December 2008. This third further disclosure statement contained an amended Caretaking and Letting Agreement, as did a fourth further disclosure statement on 28 May 2010.

From February 2010 Mr and Mrs Wicks received information about the holiday letting program to be conducted.

291. On 6 August 2010, a letter was sent to Mr and Mrs Wicks by Noble House Design. It referred to the appointment of Peppers as residential manager for the Oracle, and to the branding of the Oracle as Peppers Broadbeach. This was the first indication to them of Peppers’ involvement with the Oracle. On 12 August 2010, Peppers Broadbeach sent to Mr and Mrs Wicks a bundle of documents known as an Owners Information Pack. Among these documents was a letter announcing that the Oracle had recently joined the Peppers portfolio of retreats, resorts and hotels, a brochure promoting Peppers Broadbeach, a furniture package brochure, and various forms.

292. The initial settlement date for the contract was 19 October 2010. On 7 October 2010, newly-appointed solicitors sought an extension of the settlement date to 19 November 2010 on behalf of Mr and Mrs Wicks. The reason given for the extension was that the Wickses resided overseas and needed more time to make arrangements for settlement. Settlement was extended by agreement to 9 November 2010 on certain terms.

293. On 18 October 2010, Mr Wicks emailed Mr Stone of SSI. He stated that their retirement plans had changed, that they were to remain in Hong Kong and that they would no longer be making use of the apartment. He stated that there seemed to be two choices — complete the purchase and immediately put the apartment up for sale or seek to come to a commercial arrangement with SSI to terminate the contract. He stated that the apartment was exceptionally well positioned in the development but that the market was depressed. Mr Wicks sought to initiate a discussion about SSI re-marketing the apartment for sale with compensation being paid by Mr and Mrs Wicks. There was no reference to any concern about Peppers having been appointed.

294. Mr and Mrs Wicks changed solicitors again and appointed their present solicitors. On 1 November 2010 their new solicitors wrote purporting to terminate the contract. This letter focused on what was said to be the conversion of the development to a Peppers hotel, the effect that this would have on their letting options and a concern about an increase in letting fees. The letter of termination was essentially in the same terms as that sent on behalf of Mr Gough and Ms Groves on 13 October and on behalf of Ms Ryan on 4 November 2010.

295. Mr and Mrs Wicks’s pleading sets out six grounds upon which the final disclosure statement is alleged to have become inaccurate, and also thirteen grounds on which they would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete their contract. I have dealt with the matters that were pressed in this regard in final submissions. Mr and Mrs Wicks, like the other plaintiffs who gave evidence, relied upon affidavits which were read and stood as their evidence-in-chief.

296. Because of his occupation as an airline pilot, Mr Wicks has spent, and continues to spend, a lot of time staying in hotels. His affidavit says that he would never want to retire to a building that is a hotel or is run like a hotel. The essence of his complaint is that his retirement plans have been ruined by a switch from a sophisticated, upmarket residential development called The Oracle to a hotel called Peppers Broadbeach. He says he is now being an offered an apartment in one of a chain of hotels and resorts that cater to the short-term holiday market, and in which hotel-like services such as pay-for-use car parking, convention facilities, and the service of food and alcohol are offered. I note that, contrary to his affidavit, residential visitors do not pay for car parking, and there are no convention facilities. Mrs Wicks reiterates another of her husband's concerns, namely that the security and privacy of their complex has been compromised. She expresses concern that they have lost the secure, quiet retirement which they were expecting.

297. When and precisely why their retirement plans changed is not clear from the evidence. Mr Wicks accepted that the impression that he wished to give in his affidavit was that his retirement plans were ruined because of the appointment of Peppers. However, his email of 18 October 2010 (which was not disclosed by him) indicated that their retirement plans had changed and made no reference to the fact that this was a result of Peppers having been appointed. Mr Wicks's oral evidence was that his retirement plans are entirely flexible and that three months planning was all that he needs to retire. The first complaint made about Peppers was when Mr and Mrs Wicks engaged their present solicitor. This was long after they received documents announcing its appointment.

298. Mr Wicks appreciated after receiving disclosure statements in early 2006 that an owner could appoint a letting agent to arrange short-term holiday and medium-term lettings, and that other prospective purchasers could do the same. He did not pay much attention to these matters because, at the time, he and his wife intended to retire to rather than let their apartment. Mr Wicks's affidavit says that on and after 12 August 2010, after receiving the Owner's Information Pack from Peppers (and subsequently from other information received) he became aware of the appointment of Peppers and of the proposal for the development to become "a short-term holiday resort/hotel", and that his retirement plans were ruined. His affidavit asserts that he contracted to buy an apartment in a complex that was to provide "a secure and private environment for the benefit principally of the owner-occupiers with exclusive use of the upmarket private facilities." This last statement, of course, relates not to the contract's actual terms but to Mr Wicks's understanding of what he contracted to buy and the grounds of material prejudice asserted in his affidavit.

299. Under cross-examination, Mr Wicks was unable to explain the absence of complaint about the appointment of Peppers shortly after he learned of its appointment in August 2010. He accepted in his oral evidence that, when he entered into the contract in 2006, what was contemplated was a letting arrangement which would permit short-term occupation of apartments that were put into the letting pool. He thought, however, that the opportunity for short-term letting would not be taken up by many owners. He "imagined" that the sort of tenants would be the sort of people who come typically from Victoria or New Zealand and spend a couple of weeks or longer at Broadbeach. This was based upon his own experience of the type of people who holiday at Broadbeach. On this basis he expected short-term letting to be "relatively minor on the scale of things." He also thought that owner-occupiers would find it very hard to justify letting for less than three or four days because cleaning and other costs would eat into the net return. As a result of these considerations, he assumed that short-term letting would be relatively minor.

300. Mrs Wicks gave oral evidence that a letter of 12 August 2010 announcing the appointment of Peppers was a "warning bell". However no complaint was made about it at the time. Her evidence was that she and her husband were "fairly insulated" from the effects of the global financial crisis, although the airline industry suffered a severe downturn and he took some unpaid leave which allowed them to travel. She was aware that the apartment would be worth less as a result of the impact of the global financial crisis, but said that was "of no material importance to us." I find it hard to accept that this is the case. In any event, the relevant issue is whether the matters relied upon by Mr and Mrs Wicks as constituting material prejudice should be accepted.

301. Under cross-examination, Mrs Wicks clarified that her objection was not to short-term letting (which she defined as anything less than a week) as such. She explained that it was not to do with the length of the stay, but the fact that "it was a hotel and it was offering hotel services." Even then, it was not the fact that hotel-like services such a concierge, valet parking and room service were a concern. Rather, she explained that it "increases the business and the number of staff and the dynamics of the building. It's a completely different animal to a residential complex." The concerns expressed by Mrs Wicks in her oral evidence did not precisely coincide with those articulated in her affidavit and she said that she was not absolutely certain what she meant in the affidavit where it states: "There will be increased foot traffic and noise with the types of persons who will be attracted to holiday at The Oracle." She clarified that her concern was with the numbers that would be attracted, not the type of people, and her concern with foot traffic was with traffic on the eighteenth floor where there are six apartments. The concern she expressed over foot traffic was not in relation to people checking in and out, or people coming in and out of the foyer. Her concern was with traffic in the rooms adjacent to where the apartment was. In re-examination, Mrs Wicks was led back to her affidavit and prompted with questions about the restaurant and bar. She said in this regard that she had a concern for lack of security, lack of privacy and the ability for people to come off the street and use those services when they were not residents and not staying at the premises.

302. I place limited reliance upon the contents of the affidavits filed by Mr and Mrs Wicks. I place greater reliance upon the evidence given by them under cross-examination. They appreciated from an early stage that the building would include short-term letting. They did not give the matter much thought because of their own intentions to retire to the apartment, rather than let it, and because, based on their past experience, they expected the extent of short-term letting to be minor. I am not persuaded that the announcement of the appointment of Peppers was a matter of great concern because they expected short-term letting to be relatively minor. If the announcement of Peppers sounded any "warning bells", they were not of a kind that prompted any inquiry or complaint.

303. Ultimately, the point to emerge from the evidence given by Mr and Mrs Wicks, as tested under cross-examination, is a concern that the number of short-term tenants will be more than they expected, and Mrs Wicks's particular concern was with the movement of people on the eighteenth floor, rather than through other areas.

304. I accept that Mr Wicks genuinely does not want to live permanently in a hotel/resort, and did not expect to do so when he and his wife contracted to purchase Lot 1803 for $1.13 million. If the extent of short-term letting undertaken by Peppers in respect of the apartments that are in its pool makes the residential tower a "hotel/resort", then short-term letting to that extent was not something which the relevant disclosure statement, and other disclosure statements, either predicted or excluded. Mr Wicks may not have contemplated short-term letting to such an extent, based upon his own experience. Given his personal circumstances, including his resistance to the idea of spending his retirement in a hotel-like environment, I consider that Mr Wicks will be prejudiced in a significant way by living in a tower that is described by many as a hotel and which has a greater number of short-term guests than he expected.

305. However, any prejudice to the expectations of Mr and Mrs Wicks and their residential amenity is not because of an inaccuracy in the disclosure statement. It is because, as matters have transpired, the extent of short-term letting is greater than they expected.

306. Their residential amenity and their retirement plans have been affected by a greater number of short-term tenants and the provision by Peppers of services to those tenants, but that prejudice is not causally-related to any inaccuracy in the BCCM Disclosure Statement.

Mr Gough and Ms Groves

307. Mr Gough is a jeweller on the Gold Coast. He and his partner, Ms Groves, contracted to purchase two lots on level 29 of Tower One. Mr Gough negotiated the purchase directly with Mr Nikiforides, the developer. The apartments he was shown were too small for his residential requirements, and he sought to amalgamate three units. Eventually it was agreed that two units would be amalgamated into one, with a connection via the laundry. Mr Gough and Ms Groves intended to live in the larger lot, and to use the connecting lot either for their visitors or for renting to medium/long term tenants. The first lot that they contracted to purchase had a purchase price of $2.687 million. The second lot had a purchase price of $863,000.

308. On 23 October 2006, Mr Gough and Ms Groves executed contracts to purchase the two lots. Prior to signing those contracts they received disclosure statements, including an Operator PDS and a Developer

PDS. In January 2007, December 2008 and May 2010, Mr Gough and Ms Groves received further disclosure statements in relation to each lot.

309. It seems that Mr Gough and Ms Groves received communications about the on-site letting program that was initially proposed. Their pleading indicates that Mr Gough and Ms Groves first became aware of Peppers' involvement in the Oracle around July 2010 when they were shown an email sent to another purchaser. That email announced that The Oracle would be branded Peppers Broadbeach, that it would be a flagship Peppers hotel, that Peppers had entered an exclusive management agreement in relation to The Oracle and other matters. They received an Owners Information Pack dated 12 August 2010.

310. The settlement date for Mr Gough's and Ms Groves's lots was 19 October 2010. On 13 October their solicitors wrote to SSI's solicitors to cancel both contracts.

311. Their pleading raises essentially the same grounds of inaccuracy and material prejudice that were relied upon in the Wicks proceeding, and which I have previously addressed. In their affidavits, Mr Gough and Ms Groves particularly complain of the loss of the exclusive, "high-end" character of the Oracle development. Their affidavits say that they looked forward to mixing and forming relationships with other wealthy individuals. The Peppers brand, they say, devalues their investment and destroys the Oracle's unique, iconic status, and will result in their neighbours comprising substantial numbers of short-term tourists. Because of their jewellery business, they also have a particular concern for privacy and security, values which, they say, are compromised by the presence of, and orientation towards, tourist traffic. Under cross-examination, Mr Gough in particular did not articulate all of these concerns, and different concerns were expressed by each of them in their oral evidence.

312. Interestingly, in cross-examination Ms Groves gave evidence of having been told before entering the contract that there would be 60 per cent owner-occupiers in the building and that the remaining 40 per cent would be "long-term rental". She understood this to mean letting of between one and six months. Neither she nor Mr Gough read the disclosure statements. Mr Gough did not give evidence of having been told that there would be 60 per cent owner-occupiers and 40 per cent long-term tenants. However, I found both Ms Groves and Mr Gough to be honest witnesses and I accept that Ms Groves has a genuine recollection of being told there would be 60 per cent owner-occupiers and of the remainder being what she understood to be long-term rentals. I also accept that she believed what she was told. As she explained:

> "I have to trust what people tell me when I'm buying something, the same way somebody has to trust me when they [are] in my business."

313. I accept that because she did not read the disclosure statements, trusted in what she was told and did not think about short-term letting, she thought that the building would be an "upmarket, mostly residential apartment building", occupied to the extent of 60 per cent by owner-occupiers. She did not expect the provision of hotel-like services such as room service to short-stay guests. Her belief that the building was to consist mainly of owner-occupiers and tenants staying a month or more was a motivating factor in purchasing the apartment because she was worried about how busy it could be.

314. Mr Gough read only the part of the contracts relating to the price. He did not read the disclosure documents and gave them to his lawyers. He did not imagine that the building would only be occupied by owners and long-term tenants. He expected people to be there on short-term stays for a week or more. He understood that the letting agent business would be conducted so that it attracted both short- and medium-term stays. He expected certain hotel-like services such as reception staff to meet guests. He did not anticipate that there would be room service. Mr Gough was taken through a variety of services and his evidence was that he did not think that these would be available to short-term guests. He accepted that the concern expressed in his affidavit was that he did not want to live in an apartment building "that services the short term tourist market offering hotel type services". Under cross-examination, he clarified that his concern was not so much about the hotel-type services about which he was questioned, such as valet parking, room service, the capacity to have alcohol served at the pool and tours arranged, it was "more the amount of people that a hotel would attract on a short-term basis". His concern was with people who came for a couple of days or a day.

Mr Gough and Ms Groves listed their apartments for sale in August 2009. This was after the global financial crisis. Their original plan had been to sell their residential home and after the global financial crisis that seemed no longer to be in their financial interests. As a result they listed the apartments for sale. The listing occurred well before the announcement of the appointment of Peppers.

316. Mr Gough and Ms Groves articulated different concerns in their oral evidence, and those concerns do not coincide with the many matters mentioned in their affidavit evidence. Ms Groves's principal concern is that the building is not occupied by owner-occupiers and long-term tenants as she understood it would as a result of oral representations made to her, and she is worried about how busy it may be as a result of the presence of short-term tenants. Mr Gough's principal concern, as articulated in his oral evidence, is the number of people that would be attracted on a short-term basis. Their respective concerns are not about the name of the tower and its branding as Peppers Broadbeach. Their concern is not even with the fact that Peppers rather than some other operator has been appointed as the caretaker and letting agent. Rather, their concerns are: a) that Peppers' operation will attract short-term letting; and b) the amount of people that will be attracted to the building as part of the short-term tourist market.

317. Like the other plaintiffs in these proceedings, Mr Gough and Ms Groves did not complain about the appointment of Peppers when its appointment was announced.

318. I take account of the fact that Mr Gough and Ms Groves changed their plan to reside in the apartments as a result of the global financial crisis and a reassessment of their plans. I do not accept, however, that this means that their decision to cancel was based only upon financial considerations. I accept their evidence that they have a concern about the number of short-term guests in the building and about how busy it may be. They may have had these concerns at an earlier stage had they read the disclosure statements and, in the case of Ms Groves, not relied upon what she was told or at least what she understood she was told about 40 per cent of the apartments being occupied by long-term tenants.

319. Again, the entitlement to terminate under s 214 or s 217 of the BCCM Act does not arise simply because a buyer's expectations have been disappointed and he or she receives at settlement something substantially different from what was expected. The relevant point of reference is the BCCM Disclosure Statement, not expectations derived from extraneous sources. The Act requires material prejudice to be as a result of an inaccuracy. The inaccuracy must be the cause of the material prejudice. I am not satisfied that any prejudice to Mr Gough and Ms Groves as a result of being compelled to complete the contract is because of an accuracy in the BCCM Disclosure Statement.

Ms Ryan

320. Ms Ryan works as a teacher's aide. She thought that The Oracle stood apart from other developments on the Gold Coast and was well-situated to cater to a growing market of downsizing and retiring baby boomers. She never planned to live in, or to take possession of, her apartment. Rather, her intention was to on-sell it to another buyer prior to settlement. She contracted to buy a two-bedroom apartment in Oracle Tower One on 10 January 2006 for $940,000. That contract was replaced by a new contract on 18 July 2006.

321. The initial contract was entered into after she spoke to a real estate agent who told her that The Oracle was to be "an iconic residential project with permanent and long-term residents only". After investigating in late 2005 other projects planned for Broadbeach, and finding nothing which compared to The Oracle, she entered the contract. Her affidavit states:

> "I was satisfied that The Oracle would meet the requirements of a different and separate market from existing and planned developments in Broadbeach such as the Meriton, Sierra Grande, the Soffitel [sic] and Jupiters Casino. The Oracle was to be an iconic, luxury, residential development and had a unique position on the beach-side offering high quality finishes for discerning long-term residents and quality inclusions and facilities such as a Zen garden, private wine locker, gym, movie theatre and a teppanyaki bbq for use by owner/occupiers. I believed it would define Broadbeach long term as predominantly a city-like residential living environment with a mix of residential, hotels and commercial buildings."

322. Ms Ryan received a disclosure statement in January 2006, along with the Operator PDS and Developer PDS. She received another disclosure statement on 14 July 2006 before signing the second contract. She received further disclosure statements in September 2006, January 2007, December 2008 and May 2010. Ms Ryan gave oral evidence of probably "scanning through" the disclosure statements that she received.

323. The only means by which Ms Ryan would be able to perform the contract was by finding another purchaser and arranging contemporaneous settlements. She had no independent means of settling the contract.

324. In early 2010, and before any announcement of Peppers, Ms Ryan listed the property at a price of $1.28 million. This price was selected because it would enable her to cover the purchase price, stamp duty and agent's commission. However, the price of $1.28 million was unrealistic in the light of the global financial crisis and its impact on property prices, even though Ms Ryan had the hope that such an iconic building would not be affected as other parts of the market had been.

325. In July 2010 she was sent an email announcing that Peppers would manage The Oracle, which would henceforth be a flagship Peppers hotel branded Peppers Broadbeach. In August or September 2010 she received the Owners Information Pack including a letter and brochure promoting Peppers and Peppers Broadbeach, a furniture package brochure and various forms. In October 2010 she was sent the Peppers Investor Brochure promoting Peppers Broadbeach.

326. In her affidavit, Ms Ryan says that upon receiving the Owner's Information Pack from SSI on around 12 August 2010 she became aware that the circumstances with respect to her purchase had substantially changed from what she understood to be the case as a result of what was represented to her. Her affidavit says that she was "shocked and disappointed" to hear that Peppers/Mantra had been appointed as letting agents and that the building would be a Peppers flagship hotel. She did not complain to SSI about this. Instead, on 22 September 2010 she wrote to Mr Con Nikiforides of Niecon and explained her predicament. She explained that she did not have the funds to settle and that the matter had cost her $7,500 in bank guarantee fees. She explained that she had a mortgage of around $100,000 on her $300,000 townhouse, was in her mid-50s and earned about $550 per week as a teacher's aide. She asked to be let out of the contract and explained the difficulties that she had in meeting the required deposit of $94,000. She explained that she had brought up her children without maintenance from her former husband and saw the investment in The Oracle as a way of finally getting ahead by using the equity in her home as the deposit.

327. Her personal circumstances were apt to evoke sympathy. Ms Ryan's letter mentioned the severe health problems of her aged parents and the circumstances of her daughter who had recently separated from her husband and was left with the care of two small children and a $50,000 business debt. They were coming to live with Ms Ryan. Ms Ryan offered to work for Niecon in order to make up the deposit amount. A notation on the file copy of a letter of 22 September 2010 indicates that it received the standard Niecon response. Ms Ryan explained in her oral evidence that she did not complain in this letter or in others that she wrote to Mr Nikiforides in October 2010 that she was upset by the appointment of Peppers. She said that she did not know her legal rights and that she did not want to put herself in a bad light with Niecon by laying any blame on it. She did not complain about the building being turned into a hotel because she did not want to make it sound as if she hated the building, and she was offering to work for Niecon. She hoped to be let out of the contract. I accept her evidence as to her reasons for not complaining about the appointment of Peppers.

328. Ms Ryan's settlement date was 27 October 2010. This was extended by agreement to 9 November 2010. On 4 November, however, her solicitors wrote to SSI's solicitors to cancel the contract.

Ms Ryan pleads the same six grounds of inaccuracy as the other plaintiffs in these actions. She also pleads 13 grounds on which she would be materially prejudiced if required to complete the contract. Her affidavit makes the claim that the value of her apartment has been compromised by the Peppers re-branding. She says that her apartment's value would be higher if it was part of an iconic, luxury, residential development as opposed to being part of a hotel. The appointment of Peppers is said to have negatively impacted on the prestige of her lot, which it will no longer attract the sort of wealthy baby-boomers to whom she hoped to on-sell. Instead, her prospective market is now said to be limited to investors interested in night-rate letting, which is a market already met by other Broadbeach developments.

330. A separate complaint is made in relation to letting fees, but this complaint is without merit for the reasons given in SSI's submissions at paragraph 340, and which was explored in her cross-examination.

331. In her oral evidence, Ms Ryan reiterated that she was led to believe that The Oracle was to be a prestigious address and that the complex itself was unique. She was persuaded that the main market for it was "retiring baby-boomers" and that this was a large market. She was taken in cross-examination, as other plaintiffs were, to the contractual documents and disclosure statements. Her evidence was that references in the Operator PDS to short-term holiday letting would have come as a surprise to her had she read them. This is because it was not what was promoted to her. However, she did not read that document or the other documents. She recalled the documents but could not recall reading them.

332. In her oral evidence, she identified her concern as short-term letting, and the fact that the letting agent is Peppers, with accommodation being offered under its name. Her complaint would have been the same had the same services been offered by an agent under some innocuous unknown name. She identified her problem with the Peppers branding as being that it "devalues the development because it's not residential and you don't get the same capital gain and … the banks won't lend as much money on [it]." She stated that "it's just not The Oracle". Her concern with the branding of Peppers was not the name as such, but that the name is linked to a chain of hotels and the building was not "long-term residential in the mainstream". Instead of providing a lifestyle for long-term residents, the appointment of Peppers placed a focus on short stays. As Ms Ryan explained: "You don't go to Peppers to retire or to live" and so "that dynamic has changed."

333. As a result of what she was told prior to entering into the contract, Ms Ryan did not expect short-stay guests. Her definition of a short stay was not precise but it included people who booked at night-rates. She did not necessarily expect people to stay there for many months but did not expect it to be a place where people could go and stay overnight. She did not expect the business to attract weekend guests. In various ways, Ms Ryan explained that she was disappointed with the prospect of The Oracle having short-term guests. It was not "the iconic vision that everybody had". She expected the apartment, with its facilities that included a full kitchen, to be a home in which people lived. She accepted, however, that the contract documents that she signed placed no restriction on her capacity to short-term let her apartment and she did not think that anyone else had promised such a thing. She simply assumed that purchasers would live there.

334. I found Ms Ryan's oral evidence more informative of the substance of her complaint than her affidavit. However, one sub-paragraph of her affidavit captures the prejudice she claims to have suffered as a result of the development being rebranded Peppers:

> "The Oracle was to be an iconic, unique and luxury residential complex with the intention of attracting well-off baby-boomers who wished to downsize and live out their lives in luxury and exclusive living. The Oracle with the rebranding of Peppers will no longer attract such persons or any person looking for a residential apartment to live in or to let as a residential apartment …".

The essence of her complaint is that she believed that the development was to be for owner-occupiers and permanent residents only.

Like other plaintiffs, she complains that the letting agent conducts a business which will attract short-stay holiday makers.

335. In her oral evidence she explained that her complaint was not just that Peppers was offering certain hotel-like services, but that it was offering them "under a new name", namely Peppers Broadbeach. As she said in her oral evidence: "It's just not The Oracle." Part of her complaint was that the branding of the development as Peppers Broadbeach had a number of consequences, principally the attraction of short-term tenants, and that the Peppers branding and descriptions of it as a hotel had severely compromised her ability to sell the apartment to the market that she had identified.

336. Ms Ryan, probably more than any of the other plaintiffs, articulated the relevant prejudice occasioned to her because of a change in the name itself. The relevant prejudice arises because the residential tower is not known as The Oracle, but is branded as Peppers Broadbeach. This prejudice relates to what Ms Ryan understood the name The Oracle to mean as a result of what was said to her by an identified real estate agent and by unnamed Niecon sales staff before she entered the contract, namely that The Oracle would be an iconic residential project with permanent and long-term residents only. She believed that there was a market for on-selling an apartment in such a tower. The relevant prejudice is not to her own personal residential amenity; rather, it is that a tower branded Peppers Broadbeach, and not known as The Oracle, is not what she expected to purchase.

337. Her case, as pleaded and as put in submissions, did not focus upon an alleged inaccuracy in the name of the tower itself. Instead, it was pleaded on the wider basis that I have earlier addressed. The relevant pleaded inaccuracy is that the disclosure statement describes her lot as being a lot in a residential tower in The Oracle, whereas a disclosure statement if given now would state that the lot would be a lot in a hotel/resort branded Peppers Broadbeach. An inaccuracy in respect of the name of the tower itself was not specifically pleaded. Ms Ryan's evidence in relation to prejudice includes the fact that the lot is not in a tower known as The Oracle, and that the residential towers have been branded Peppers Broadbeach. Part of her case on prejudice relates to the name itself, and what that name meant to Ms Ryan.

338. I have earlier found that the disclosure statement stated that the residential component of the development was to be known as The Oracle. I have found that it has been branded Peppers Broadbeach. Accordingly, the disclosure statement would be inaccurate in this regard. It had become inaccurate in this regard prior to the date for settlement of Ms Ryan's contract and at the time she purported to exercise a statutory entitlement to cancel it. The statutory entitlement to cancel under s 214(4)(b) arises if the buyer would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract, given the extent to which the disclosure statement was, or has become, inaccurate. Section 217(c) has a similar causal element. An inaccuracy in the information disclosed in the disclosure statement, as rectified by any further statement, is not itself sufficient. The buyer must show that "because" of the inaccuracy in the information disclosed in the disclosure statement, he or she would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract. I have earlier addressed what is meant by "materially prejudiced". The test is objective having regard to the particular buyer's circumstances: would someone in those circumstances be materially prejudiced? As with the other plaintiffs relying upon the statutory right to cancel, it is necessary to identify the relevant "material prejudice", and there must be a causal relationship between the inaccuracy and the prejudice.

339. In Ms Ryan's case, the substance of her complaint is not the name of the residential tower as such (that is, that the tower is no longer known as The Oracle). The name aspect is part of a broader case on prejudice relating to the conduct of the development, namely that the arrangements that have been put in place attract short stays with the result that the tower has become a hotel/resort. The relevant prejudice is pleaded in paragraph 41(a) of her pleading, namely that the apartment purportedly offered in performance is not an apartment in a residential tower in The Oracle but, rather, an apartment in a hotel/resort branded Peppers Broadbeach with the features, attributes, uses and consequences referred to in paragraphs 33 to 38 of that pleading.

340. As with other plaintiffs, the claimed prejudice relates to the difference between what was expected as a result of statements not found in the disclosure statement and what is offered by way of contractual performance. However, the BCCM Act requires a causal relationship between the inaccuracy and the prejudice, and, as was said in Mirvac Queensland Pty Ltd v Wilson,[36] there must be "proportionality between the inaccuracy and the prejudice".

341. The relevant inaccuracy in the disclosure statement relates to the name by which the tower was to be known. This is the inaccuracy that has been established by Ms Ryan and the other plaintiffs. The disclosure statement has not been shown to have been inaccurate in the other respects pleaded by them. Having regard to the need for a causal relationship between the inaccuracy and the prejudice claimed by Ms Ryan, the disclosure statement did not say the things about the tower that she expected as a result of what was said to her. It did not say that the tower was to be occupied by permanent and long-term residents only. It did not say that owners could not let their apartments for a short term. The Caretaking and Letting Agreement contemplated, among other things, that the letting agent might operate a tour desk.

342. Any inaccuracy in the disclosure statement with respect to the name of the residential tower (being an inaccuracy not specifically pleaded) is an inaccuracy in respect of a tower in which apartments might be let for short-term stays. The disclosure statement did not become inaccurate because the appointment of Peppers permits such conduct. The disclosure statement was not inaccurate, and did not become inaccurate, because the tower might be a "resort" for a large number of persons occupying apartments for a short time. Any inaccuracy in the disclosure statement in respect of the name of the tower needs to be seen in that context.

343. In assessing "material prejudice", regard must be had to Ms Ryan's particular circumstances. She was misled by at least one real estate agent into believing that The Oracle was to be for permanent and long-term residents only. Her belief in this regard was in part a function of her failure to read each of the disclosure statements. If she had done so, she would not have formed that belief. She also would have questioned that belief if she had reflected on the absence of any contractual provision in her standard contract (and presumably in standard contracts signed by other buyers) that prevented her from letting her apartment on a short-term basis. In any event, I accept that Ms Ryan had an expectation that The Oracle would consist of permanent and long-term residents.

344. Ms Ryan attached significance to the name The Oracle because of what that name conveyed to her in the light of what she had been told (even if these things were not part of any contractual promise). She intended to on-sell the apartment to persons seeking an apartment with the features that she expected The Oracle to have, being individuals who wished to live in the apartment on a permanent basis or let it to others on a long-term lease.

345. Having regard to those personal circumstances, I conclude that someone in those circumstances would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract and acquire an apartment in a tower branded Peppers Broadbeach because of the meaning and significance that was attached to the name The Oracle as a result of non-contractual representations. That person would also be prejudiced even if the tower was not branded Peppers Broadbeach, and was known as The Oracle, but was managed by a letting agent with a focus on short-term stays.

346. The material prejudice that arises because of the focus of Peppers on short-term stays is not because of an inaccuracy in the disclosure statement. The only relevant inaccuracy is in the name of the tower itself. The material prejudice is not because of that inaccuracy. The extent to which the disclosure statement was or became inaccurate is in respect of the name of the tower itself. The material prejudice pleaded and proven by Ms Ryan relates to the difference between what she expected (on the basis of non-contractual representations) The Oracle would be like, and what was provided for in the contract, including the disclosure statement which formed part of it and which permitted short stays.

347. The tower that was to be known as The Oracle, as described in the disclosure statement, did not have the features that Ms Ryan expected, but it did have the features described in that document. These included an on-site letting agent who could promote its business and focus on short stays. The name given in the disclosure statement was the name of a tower having those features, not a tower having the features which Ms Ryan understood that The Oracle would have. The inaccuracy in the name of the tower must be seen in that context.

348. In summary, the apartment was still in a development named The Oracle, even if the tower itself would not be known as The Oracle because of the branding being undertaken by Peppers. A disclosure statement stating that the tower would be known as The Oracle would have been inaccurate if given in October 2010, but only in respect of the name of the tower itself. It would not have been inaccurate in relation to the nature of the tower and the type of guests that the letting agent might seek to attract to it. It is these matters, not the name of the tower itself, that constitute the substance of Ms Ryan's disappointed expectations and the prejudice that she says she will suffer as a result if she is compelled to complete the contract.

349. Any inaccuracy in the disclosure statement is not the cause of the material prejudice that has been pleaded and proven by Ms Ryan.

Conclusion — cancellation under the BCCM Act

350. The plaintiffs who claimed an entitlement to cancel pursuant to the BCCM Act have not established such an entitlement. I have had regard to the personal circumstances of each such claimant. In general terms, however, the focus of each of those plaintiffs was on the expectation that The Oracle would be predominantly, if not exclusively, occupied by owner-occupants and long-term tenants. This was important to Mr and Mrs Wicks and to Mr Gough and Ms Groves because of their own residential amenity. It was important to Ms Ryan because an iconic, luxury, residential tower catering to permanent and long-term tenants was what she understood The Oracle to be as a result of representations that were made to her. Each of the plaintiffs' expectations were not met because the tower in which they contracted to purchase an apartment permits short-term letting and the letting agent has a focus on short-term letting.

351. The disappointed expectations of each of the plaintiffs may be described as a "material prejudice". Having regard to each plaintiff's circumstances, someone in those circumstances would be materially prejudiced if compelled to complete the contract. They would be disadvantaged in a substantial way. However, the prejudice is not because of an inaccuracy in the information disclosed in the BCCM Disclosure Statement. They are not materially prejudiced in the respects alleged, given the extent to which the disclosure statement was, or had become, inaccurate prior to the date for their contract to settle. The prejudice suffered by the plaintiffs is because the contract (including the BCCM Disclosure Statement that formed part of it) did not give protection to their expectations.

Other plaintiffs

352. The personal circumstances of the other plaintiffs are not relevant to any claim under the BCCM Act. The written submissions of the plaintiffs do not address the individual circumstances of the plaintiffs apart from those plaintiffs who rely upon an entitlement to cancel their contracts under the BCCM Act. SSI makes some general submissions about the evidence given by the plaintiffs, and then descends to some detail concerning the evidence of each of them. The general submissions are as follows. First, the evidence given by the plaintiffs in relation to their expectations in respect of their apartments is irrelevant to the construction of the contract, or any issue of whether there has been a departure from it. Indeed, this evidence tends to disprove the plaintiffs' pleaded cases because it makes clear that the plaintiffs' expectations were not based upon the "core documents", being the contract and the disclosure statements. In fact, generally the plaintiffs did not read these documents or read only a small part of them. SSI also relies upon the absence of complaint by the plaintiffs about the appointment of Peppers until they went to their present solicitor. Finally, the general point is made that the plaintiffs are aware that the market value of their apartments had been substantially reduced as a result of broader economic events and, understandably, none of them wished to proceed with their contracts in those circumstances. I accept these general submissions.

353. It is unnecessary to address the individual circumstances of the other plaintiffs. The circumstances of their entry into the contracts are not in dispute. It is unnecessary to canvass in these reasons the oral evidence given by each of these plaintiffs concerning their expectations and the respects in which they say they will be prejudiced by being compelled to complete their contracts. In general, I found each of the plaintiffs to be an honest and reliable witness. I did not find substantial parts of the evidence given by Mr and Mrs Parsons to be reliable. Their former solicitor's correspondence sent in late 2010 did not reflect their actual circumstances. Mrs Parsons's evidence is that in late 2010 her husband still wanted to purchase the apartment. There was no document supporting Mr Parsons's evidence that he complained about the appointment of Peppers. I conclude that the predominant reason for Mr Parsons being disappointed with the purchase and wishing to explore reasons not to complete is the valuation that he obtained on 19 October 2010. I found Mr Parsons's evidence of having no recollection of receiving certain correspondence unconvincing. Apart from the evidence of Mr and Mrs Parsons which I found to be unreliable, I found the oral evidence of the other plaintiffs in relation to their expectations to be reliable. I do not propose to address their oral evidence in any detail. Their expectations differed in some respects, but generally were along the same lines. For example, Mr Walsh, who intended to let out the apartment that he and Mr Hutchins contracted to purchase to a long-term tenant, understood that he could rent out the apartment for a short term if he wanted to. When he entered the contract he understood that the building was directed "towards a residential market", but expected that the letting agent would be experienced, would promote its business and might conduct its business in a way that would attract short stay or holiday business. He did not expect, however, that there would be hotel-like services such as valet parking and room service, and it is these things that in his view have turned the development into a hotel-like environment. To similar effect is the evidence of Ms Ferguson, who understood that apartments in The Oracle could be let for short-term and holiday purposes, but thought that this would represent only a very small percentage because the development was "mainly marketed for [the] long-term, residential owner-occupier". Ms Taylor, who entered into the same contract, accepted that the decline in the market value of the apartment was part of the reason that she does not wish to complete, but did not wish to settle because she felt that she and Ms Ferguson were not now getting what they had contracted to purchase. When she entered the contract, Ms Taylor expected that there might be holiday letting but that most of the people who were purchasing an apartment were purchasing it to "either live in it or [when they were not living in it] close it up". In this regard, she expected that it would be "more of a residential building." She was aware that purchasers could use their apartments for holiday letting. Mr Hutchins likewise knew that it was possible that apartments could be let for short periods, but expected that it would be occupied primarily by long-term residents.

354. The convincing oral evidence given by a variety of plaintiffs about their expectations, and how the apartment offered to them at settlement falls short of those expectations, fails to prove that those expectations had contractual protection, and that there has been a repudiation of a contract that protected those expectations. The contractual promises are found in the contractual documents, not in the evidence of the plaintiffs about what they expected as a result of other matters, or what they imagined the building was going to be like in circumstances in which they did not read the contractual documents. As with the evidence of those plaintiffs who claimed an entitlement to cancel under the BCCM Act, the other plaintiffs are, in various ways and in varying degrees, disappointed because of features of the apartment tower, not to mention a decline in the value of luxury apartments on the Gold Coast because of general economic conditions.

In different ways the plaintiffs are disappointed because the apartment is not in the kind of building that they expected. They may have expected the building not to have the number of short-term stays that the appointed letting agent has achieved, and they may not have expected that short-term guests would be able to receive certain hotel-like services. However, the plaintiffs' expectations were not based on the provisions of the contract, including documents that formed part of it by virtue of the BCCM Act, or on the other disclosure statements that they received. Their disappointed expectations do not give them an entitlement to terminate their contracts for repudiation. Their contracts did not protect those expectations.

Conclusion

356. The plaintiffs in each proceeding have not established that they were discharged from their contract under the general law. Mr and Mrs Wicks, Mr Gough and Ms Groves, and Ms Ryan have not established that they were entitled to cancel their respective contracts under the BCCM Act. The plaintiffs breached their contracts by failing to settle. SSI was ready, willing and able to complete the contracts. In each proceeding it is entitled to a decree of specific performance.

357. SSI has also established an entitlement to damages. It proved an entitlement to damages which were calculated to the date of trial on an agreed basis. The final calculation will need to be updated to the date of judgment.

358. In each proceeding there will be judgment for the defendant. SSI is entitled to a decree of specific performance on its counterclaim, and also judgment on its counterclaim against the buyers and guarantors. I will hear the parties, if necessary, on the question of costs. However, there appears to be no reason as to why costs should not follow the event. I direct the defendant to submit proposed minutes of order within seven days. I anticipate that the form of order requiring each buyer specifically to perform and carry into effect the relevant contract will be in a form similar to that ordered in comparable cases and, if required, I will hear the parties as to the date for completion and other terms of the orders.

Queensland Court of Appeal

Decision delivered on 15 June 2012

Community schemes — Whether the name of a building was an essential term of the contract — Whether change of name and brand was a repudiation of the contract justifying termination — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, s 213, 215, 216.

This was an appeal from Gough & Anor v South Sky Investments Pty Ltd (2012) LQCS ¶90-176; [2011] QSC 361, and the factual background is set out in that case.

At trial the judge held that:

1. the appellant purchasers were not entitled to treat the contracts as discharged for repudiation
2. the breach of the terms of the contracts did not allow the appellants the right to treat the contracts as discharged for repudiation
3. the respondent developers did not proffer lots which were substantially different from those for which the appellants contracted.

The purchasers appealed, arguing that the language of the contract indicated that the name of the building was an essential term, and the change of name (and brand) from "The Oracle" to "Peppers Broadbeach" was a repudiation of the contract which justified termination: [8]ff.

Held: appeal dismissed.

Per Muir JA (with McMurdo P and Margaret Wilson J agreeing)

1. There was little in the findings of the primary judge to support the finding that there was a contractual intention that a term that Tower 1 be known as "The Oracle" or that the development be known as "The Oracle" was essential or would give rise to a right to terminate: [35].

2. The use of the name "The Oracle" in the contractual documents merely assisted in identifying the physical property to be sold and purchased: [37].

3. There was no provision in the contracts which required the use of the "The Oracle" on signage, documents, or anything else: [40].

4. There was nothing to indicate from "the general nature of the contract considered as a whole, or from some particular term or terms, that the promise [in such a term, assuming that there was one] is of such importance to the promisee that he would not have entered into the contract unless he had been assured of a strict or a substantial performance of the promise" (Koompahtoo Local Aboriginal Land Council v Sanpine Pty Ltd (2007) 233 CLR 115 at 137): [42].

5. Even if a breach of the term (in respect of the name "The Oracle") existed, it was not one which deprived the purchaser "of a substantial part of the benefit to which he is entitled under the contract" (Koompahtoo at 140): [43].

6. The Information Page (bound with the Disclosure Statement and noting apartments to be known as "The Oracle") was part of the Disclosure Statement. It could not be read and understood separate from the contract or the disclosure statement. It was doubtful that the reference to "The Oracle" and the residential component could mean anything more than the seller's present intention, subject to rights which might be exercised under the contract, Caretaking and Letting Agreement or the lease, that the residential component would be known as "The Oracle": [55].

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

R Bain QC with C Heyworth-Smith (instructed by Johnsons Lawyers) for the appellants.

S Doyle SC with D Clothier SC (instructed by Allens Arthur Robinson) for the respondent.

Before: Margaret McMurdo P, Muir JA and Margaret Wilson J

Margaret McMurdo P: These appeals should be dismissed with costs on the indemnity basis. The various appellants contracted with the respondent to purchase units in Tower 1 of The Oracle development at Broadbeach. Prior to settlement, the appellants were informed that Peppers Retreats, Resorts and Hotels had acquired the letting rights to Tower 1 which was to be known as and promoted as Peppers Broadbeach. They sought to be discharged from their contractual obligations claiming that the respondent had breached its obligations to them; they had contracted to purchase an apartment in a residential tower known as The Oracle. Senior counsel for the appellants conceded at the appeal hearing that there was one central issue in these appeals. It was whether the trial judge, on the evidence, was right to conclude that the respondent was entitled to specific performance because it was not an essential term going to the root of the contracts that the development be known as The Oracle.[1] I agree with Muir JA's reasons for finding the primary judge was right to reach this conclusion.

[2] I also agree with the orders proposed by Muir JA.

Muir JA: Introduction The appellants are purchasers under six contracts entered into with the respondent for the purchase and sale of proposed lots in a community titles scheme which was to be registered in respect of tower one of a two tower development described as The Oracle at Broadbeach. The appellants, with the exception of the appellants in appeal 11905/11, entered into their contracts in late 2005 or early 2006. Consequent upon the respondent obtaining approval under s 29 of the Land Sales Act 1984 to extend the time within which it was required to provide a registrable instrument of transfer, those appellants entered into new contracts of sale and purchase. The appellants in appeal 11905/11 entered into their contract on 17 October 2006. That contract and the new contracts, all of which are in standard form, will be referred to collectively as "the contracts" and individually as "the contract". Promotional material provided to the appellants before they signed all versions of the contracts referred to the development as The Oracle. So too did various disclosure statements provided to the appellants by the respondent from time to time pursuant to s 213 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 ("the Act").

[4] Before the due date for completion of the contracts, purchasers were notified that "The Oracle [would] be branded Peppers Broadbeach and [would] be the flagship Peppers hotel".[2] Peppers were appointed as caretaking and letting agents in respect of Tower 1. The appellants in appeal 11905/11 purported to terminate their contract by letter dated 13 October 2010. The other appellants purported to terminate on various dates after the respondent's solicitors sent letters nominating settlement dates.

[5] The appellants commenced proceedings claiming declarations that their respective contracts had been validly cancelled. They all relied on what the primary judge described in his reasons as:

> "…the same essential allegation…, namely that the [appellants] contracted to purchase an apartment in a residential tower in The Oracle when in fact the apartment purportedly offered in performance by [the respondent] is an apartment in a hotel/resort branded Peppers Broadbeach".[3]

[6] The primary judge found against the appellants who have appealed on grounds that:

> 1. Having found that:
>
> (a) Tower 1 is not known as The Oracle;
> (b) Tower 1 is known as Peppers Broadbeach; and > (c) the respondent promised that Tower 1 was to be known as The Oracle,
> the trial judge erred in holding that the appellants were not entitled to treat the contracts as discharged for repudiation.
> 2. The trial judge erred in holding that the breach of the terms of the contracts that required the respondent to provide to the appellants at settlement lots in a residential tower known as The Oracle did not afford the appellants the right to treat the contracts as discharged for repudiation.
> 3. The trial judge erred in finding that the respondent proffered at settlement lots which were not substantially different from those for which the appellants contracted.
> 4. The trial judge erred in finding that the appellants did not plead or argue that either:
>
> (a) the terms of the contracts that the name of Tower 1 was to be The Oracle were essential terms, breach of which gave rise to a right to terminate the contracts; or > (b) the terms of the contracts that the name of Tower 1 was to be The Oracle were indeterminate (sic) terms, the breach of which gave rise to a right to terminate the contracts.

Grounds 1, 2 and 3

The appellants' submissions

[7] The appellants relied on the following passage from the reasons of Gleeson CJ, Gummow, Heydon and Crennan JJ in Koompahtoo Local Aboriginal Land Council v Sanpine Pty Ltd,[4] referring to observations of Jordan CJ in Tramways Advertising Pty Ltd v Luna Park (NSW) Ltd:[5]

> "What Jordan CJ said as to substantial performance, and substantial breach, is now to be read in the light of later developments in the law. What is of immediate significance is his reference to the question he was addressing as one of construction of the contract. It is the common intention of the parties, expressed in the language of their contract, understood in the context of the relationship established by that contract and (in a case such as the present) the commercial purpose it served, that determines whether a term is 'essential', so that any breach will justify termination."

The appellants' argument proceeded as follows. The language of the contract reveals an intention to treat the name as an essential term or as a term, a sufficiently serious breach of which would give rise to a right to terminate the contract. The contract refers to the development by that name and reiterates the name in the location plans and disclosure statements. It need not have referred to the name at all as the location and address on the plans would have identified the lot being sold equally well. The emphasis of the name reflects its centrality to the bargain.

[9] The language of the contract must be understood in the context of the relationship established by the contract and the commercial purpose it served.[6] The subject matter of the contract must be considered in the statutory context enabling entry into a contract for the purchase of freehold title of a lot in a building that does not yet exist. The subject matter of the contract is a bundle of rights described in the Act and the disclosure statement is incorporated into the contract: s 215 of the Act.

[10] The first document of the 13 documents in the Disclosure Statement was headed "Information about the Development" and stated that the residential component was to be "known as The Oracle". The s 213 Disclosure Statement (the second of the 13 documents) provided adjacent to the heading "Lot Details" that "The proposed lot being purchased is lot no. … (Lot) in The Oracle development as identified on the location plan contained in the contract of sale (Contract) which accompanies this Disclosure Statement".[7] The Location Plan is headed "Oracle".

[11] "The Oracle" is more than just an identifier; it is a brand. This bears on the commercial purpose of the contractual term. Evidence of that significance derives from the evidence of the "branding" experts. In this regard, the trial judge failed to properly consider and characterise the effect of the change of name or brand on the value of the lots. Whilst noting the appellants' argument that "the apartments are 'indexed' to the value of the Peppers brand and they have no control over how well or poorly Peppers will perform",[8] his Honour considered only the effect of that "indexation" in so far as the management by Peppers of Tower 1 was concerned, without extending his consideration to the Peppers brand generally. The name was an essential consideration and how the residential towers are, now, effectively named ("branded") was an essential matter, accordingly.

[12] If viewed as an intermediate term of the kind described and considered in Hong Kong Fir Shipping Co Ltd v Kawasaki Kisen Kaisha Ltd,[9] the difference between a lot in a tower known as "The Oracle" and a lot in a tower known as "Peppers Broadbeach" is sufficiently serious to give rise to a right to terminate for repudiation. A change from "The Oracle" to "Peppers Broadbeach" denotes a change from an independently recognisable ("branded") apartment tower to a hotel/resort in a chain of hotel/resorts. This is a sufficiently serious change to constitute a renunciation of the contract by the respondent or a sufficiently serious breach of the term that the lot be a lot in a tower known as "The Oracle" to give rise to a right to terminate for repudiation.

The primary judge's relevant findings

[13] The primary judge rejected the respondent's submissions to the effect that the words "The Oracle" in the contractual documents did not have any promissory effect.[10] He found that "the subject matter of the contract was a proposed lot in a residential tower to be known as The Oracle"[11] and that Tower 1 "is not known as The Oracle"[12] and "is branded Peppers Broadbeach".[13] The primary judge accepted that although there was "Oracle branding throughout the entire precinct …Peppers is the dominant brand name for the residential elements of the site".[14] He found that Tower 1 was known generally as Peppers Broadbeach rather than The Oracle.[15]

[14] The primary judge held:[16]

> "The subject matter of the contract is a proposed lot in a residential tower. The failure to provide the relevant lot in a tower known as The Oracle does not indicate an intention not to provide at settlement the subject matter of the contract or something substantially different from that for which the [appellants] contracted. The unwillingness or inability to perform the term that provided for the tower itself to be > known as The Oracle (as well as being part of a development described as The Oracle) would not convey to a reasonable person, in the situation of the [appellants], renunciation either of the contract as a whole or of a fundamental obligation under it.
>
> [140493]
>
>
> Conclusion – alleged repudiation in relation to the name of the tower
>
> The [appellants] have not proven that the unwillingness or inability to perform the contractual provision in relation to the name of the tower constitutes a renunciation of the contract or a fundamental obligation under it so as to amount to a repudiation.
>
> I have declined to find that the tower is not a residential tower, such that a description of it as a hotel/ resort means that [the respondent] 'has changed the substratum of the bargain' or that the relevant apartment is substantially different from, or a 'different product' from, the subject matter of the contract, namely an apartment in a residential tower. I have declined to find repudiation in relation to the name of the tower. These conclusions determine the issue of repudiation on the bases that it was argued."

The contractual documents

[15] Before considering the grounds of appeal, it is useful to identify the provisions of the contract, Disclosure Statement and other documents on which the parties' debate was centred.

[16] The contract identified the property to be purchased as:

> "Proposed Lot No… on Level… identified on the Location Plan together with the Chattels.
>
> Parking… space for …car"

The Location Plan was made up of:

> "1. Site Plan
> 2. Matrix Plan – showing levels/floors
> 3. Draft Plan SP 189370
> 4. Draft Building Format Plan (Stage 1A) – draft SP 189371
> 5. Draft Building Format Plan (Stage 1B) – draft SP 189373."

[17] The words The Oracle were prominently displayed on each of these plans. The first page of the contract was headed "Contract of Sale: The Oracle" and the logo for The Oracle also appeared on that page above the words "The Oracle Central Broadbeach".

[18] "Development" is defined in clause 1 of the Terms of Contract as meaning "The Oracle development to be carried out on the Scheme Land in the way outlined in the CMS".

[19] The definitions in clause 1 of the Terms of Contract of "CMS", "Land", "Scheme Land" and "Scheme Buildings" are:

"…CMS means the community management statement for the Scheme recorded, or to be recorded, in accordance with the BCCM Act. A copy of the proposed CMS forms part of the Disclosure Statement.

…Land means the land as described in Schedule 1. Where the context permits, it includes any land that is ultimately derived from the Land.

…Scheme Buildings means the improvements to be made to Scheme Land (including the building of which the Lot will be part) as part of the Development.

…Scheme Land means the land derived from the Land."

[20] Other relevant provisions of the Terms of Contract are:

"3.1 Development of scheme land

Subject to other provisions of this Contract, the Seller will cause a licensed builder to build the Scheme Buildings on the Land substantially in accordance with the Location Plan and the Plans and Specifications.

3.2 Changes to the development

Subject to the BCCM Act, the Seller may:

(a) change the name of the Scheme;
(b) make variations to any of the Development, Scheme Buildings and Schedule of Finishes (including the substitution of any items with those of a similar quality as decided by the Seller (acting reasonably)) but only minor variations to the Property;

[140494]

(e) alter the Common Property or rights in relation to the use of the Common property;
(f) change anything in the CMS (but the proportion which the interest schedule lot entitlement and contribution schedule lot entitlement for the Lot bear to the total interest schedule lot entitlement and total contribution schedule lot entitlement respectively must not be substantially varied);

(h) grant any exclusive use or special rights over the Common Property or a body corporate asset;

3.7 Marketing/Construction of development

(b) The Buyer acknowledges that the construction of the Development may be carried out in stages. It will not object to, make any claim or take any other action whatsoever (including issuing any proceedings for an injunction or damages) related to:-

24.1 Variations in Staging

It is intended that the Scheme will be developed in 2 stages. However, the number of lots in each stage and, in particular, the levels of the Scheme Buildings included in a stage, may change as decided by the Seller in its absolute discretion. This clause applies despite any staging details disclosed in the Location Plan or the CMS.

24.2 No objection

The Buyer will not object or take any other action (including delaying settlement of this Contract or terminating it) in relation to any matters referred to in clause 24.1.

25.1 Granting of Lease

The Body Corporate will, if requested by the Seller, grant the Lease to the Seller (or any person nominated by it). The Lease will be over part of the Common Property (which is anticipated to be the roof of the Scheme Building).

25.2 Form of Lease

In this clause 25, Lease means a lease substantially in the form contained in Annexure 2 of the Disclosure Statement but incorporating such changes that the Seller may require, in its absolute discretion. In particular, the area the subject of the Lease may change.

28.1 Progressive Development

The Buyer acknowledges that:

(a) the Scheme will form part of a large mixed use development comprising a significant number of different uses (for example, and without limitation, residential, retail and commercial uses) which will be developed progressively over time;
(b) the Seller (and persons authorised by it) intends to lodge various Development Applications over that part of the Land (and, possibly, adjoining land) that will not be contained within the Scheme."

[21] The "Developer Product Disclosure Statement", which was provided to buyers under the managed investment scheme provisions of the Corporations Act,[17] had on its front page the words "The Oracle Broadbeach". The Oracle logo was under those words and under the logo "The Oracle Central Broadbeach" was written. Paragraphs 4 and 9 of this document provided:

"4. An overview of the Oracle development

(a) South Sky is proposing to construct a high rise building at the Location to create a strata title development to be known as Oracle. It is intended that the building will comprise:

(i) a non residential lot (which may be subdivided to create a community titles scheme); and
(ii) lots in an accommodation community titles scheme to be known as Oracle CTS.
(iii) It is proposed that the CTS will contain between 247 and 347 residential apartments. This PDS only relates to the residential apartments.

(b) It is proposed that the Body Corporate for the CTS will enter into a Caretaking and Letting Agreement with the Operator.
(c) Under the terms of the Caretaking and Letting Agreement the caretaker is required to maintain the common property of the CTS and is also entitled to conduct on-site letting activities, which it may do itself or through a Manager it engages. It is these on-site letting activities which, in effect, comprise the management rights scheme referred to in this PDS.
(d) The Operator will issue a further Product Disclosure Statement (called an Operator PDS) in regard to the management rights scheme (known as the OracleMR Scheme) it intends to operate and give to Apartment Owners an Appointment for Apartment Owners' consideration.

9. Property to be owned or occupied by the Operator to allow it to conduct the Oracle MR Scheme

The Operator will own or have the right to occupy an on-site reception/office area which will allow it to operate the Oracle MR Scheme. It may also have certain rights over part of the common property of the CTS, for example, rights to erect signage. These rights will be outlined in the proposed community management statement contained in the BCCM Disclosure statement and the Caretaking and Letting Agreement."

[22] The finding that the Developer Product Disclosure Statement "was not incorporated [into the contract] by the terms of the contract, and …did not form part of the contract by virtue of s 215" was unchallenged.

[23] The next part of the bundle of documents provided by the respondent to the appellants commences with a front sheet, headed "Disclosure Statement", similar in wording and layout to the front sheet of the Developer Product Disclosure Statement.

[24] The next page was an index which provided:

"Index of documents contained in this Disclosure Statement

1. Information About The Development
2. Body Corporate and Community Management Act Disclosure Statement
3. PAMD Form 27c

Annexure 1
4. Budgets and Related Financial Information

Annexure 2
5. Body Corporate Manager's Agreement
6. Caretaking & Letting Agreement
7. Community Management Statement
8. Building Management Statement
9. Lease of Roof
10. Facility Sharing Agreement (burdening adjoining residential scheme)
11. Facility Sharing Agreement (benefiting adjoining residential scheme)
12. Facility Sharing Agreement (benefiting adjoining retail lot)
13. Electricity Agreement"

[25] The index was followed by a one page document headed "Information about the Development". The appellants placed substantial reliance on this document, which, for convenience, I will refer to as the "Information Page". It provided, inter alia:

"• The information contained on this page is only intended to give buyers a general outline of the development being undertaken by the Seller (Development).
• The Seller intends to construct a residential and retail development.
• Land on which the Development will be constructed is proposed to be initially subdivided to create 2 lots (being a residential lot and a retail lot). The residential component, to be known as The Oracle, will be further subdivided by a building format plan to create a community titles scheme in respect of which there will be one body corporate. The Seller has not yet decided whether the retail component of the Development will be subdivided to create a community titles scheme. The retail component may also, at the Seller's discretion, be subdivided to create land from which another residential community titles scheme will be derived."

[26] After the Information Page came a document which the respondent claimed was the Disclosure Statement provided under the Act. It was headed "Disclosure Statement (s 213 of the [Act] and s 21 of the Land Sales Act 1984)". Its first page was numbered 2 and its last, a signing page, numbered 6, contained an acknowledgment that the "Buyer received this statement before entering into the Contract". This document, which also had on the top of each of its four pages, "Disclosure Statement" and "Allens Arthur Robinson", relevantly provided:

"1. Lot Details: The proposed lot being purchased is lot no. … (Lot) in The Oracle development as identified on the location plan contained in the contract of sale (Contract) which accompanies this Disclosure Statement."

[27] The numbered pages of the Disclosure Statement were followed by a "Selling Agent's Disclosure to Buyer" form of three pages. The next document, headed "Disclosure Statement – Annexure 1 – Budgets and Related Financial Information" was numbered 10 at the foot of the page. There then followed pages numbered 11 to 21 inclusive consisting of: a document headed "Body Corporate for The Oracle – Administrative Fund Budget"; a document headed "Body Corporate for The Oracle – Sinking Fund Budget"; a document headed "Body Corporate for The Oracle – Schedule of Lot Entitlements (Stage 1)" and a similar document for Stage 2. The next document, on page 22, was headed "Disclosure Statement"; underneath that were the further headings in bold type:

Annexure 2

Body Corporate Manager and Service Contract Engagements and Letting Agent Authorisations and Other Agreements

This Annexure contains the following:

• Body Corporate Manager's Agreement
• Caretaking & Letting Agreement
• Building Management Statement
• Community Management Statement
• Lease of Roof
• Facility Sharing Agreement (burdening adjoining residential scheme)
• Facility Sharing Agreement (benefiting adjoining residential scheme)
• Facility Sharing Agreement (benefiting adjoining retail lot)
• Electricity Agreement

Relevant contractual principles

[28] The principles relevant to the determination of whether the anticipatory breach of the contractual term found by the primary judge entitled the appellants to terminate the contracts were discussed in the following passage from the reasons of Jordan CJ in Tramways Advertising Pty Ltd v Luna Park (NSW)[18] quoted with approval by Gleeson CJ, Gummow, Heydon and Crennan JJ in Koompahtoo Local Aboriginal Land Council v Sanpine Pty Ltd:[19]

> The nature of the promise broken is one of the most important of the matters [ie, the matters which need to be considered in considering the legal consequences flowing from a breach of contract]. If it is a condition that is broken, ie, an essential promise, the innocent party, when he becomes aware of the breach, has ordinarily the right at his option either to treat himself as discharged from the contract and to recover damages for loss of the contract, or else to keep the contract on foot and recover damages for the particular breach. If it is a warranty that is broken, ie, a non-essential promise, only the latter alternative is available to the innocent party: in that case he cannot of course obtain damages for loss of the contract."

[29] Jordan CJ then considered the test for identifying whether a term was a condition or a warranty:

> "The question whether a term in a contract is a condition or a warranty, ie, an essential or a non-essential promise, depends upon the intention of the parties as appearing in or from the contract. The test of essentiality is whether it appears from the general nature of the contract considered as a whole, or from some particular term or terms, that the promise is of such importance to the promisee that he would not have entered > into the contract unless he had been assured of a strict or a substantial performance of the promise, as the case may be, and that this ought to have been apparent to the promisor. If the innocent party would not have entered into the contract unless assured of a strict and literal performance of the promise, he may in general treat himself as discharged upon any breach of the promise, however slight. If he contracted in reliance upon a substantial performance of the promise, any substantial breach will ordinarily justify a discharge. In some cases it is expressly provided that a particular promise is essential to the contract, eg, by a stipulation that it is the basis or of the essence of the contract; but in the absence of express provision the question is one of construction for the Court, when once the terms of contract have been ascertained."

[30] A little later in their reasons, their Honours further considered the approach to be taken in determining whether a term was such that any breach of it entitled the innocent party to terminate:[20]

> "It is the common intention of the parties, expressed in the language of their contract, understood in the context of the relationship established by that contract and (in a case such as the present) the commercial purpose it served, that determines whether a term is 'essential', so that any breach will justify termination."

[31] Dealing with breaches of intermediate terms, their Honours said:[21]

> "Breaches of this kind are sometimes described as 'going to the root of the contract', a conclusory description that takes account of the nature of the contract and the relationship it creates, the nature of the term; the kind and degree of the breach, and the consequences of the breach for the other party. Since the corollary of a conclusion that there is no right of termination is likely to be that the party not in default is left to rely upon a right to damages, the adequacy of damages as a remedy may be a material factor in deciding whether the breach goes to the root of the contract.
>
> A judgment that a breach of a term goes to the root of a contract, being, to use the language of Buckley LJ in Decro-Wall International SA v Practitioners in Marketing Ltd, 'such as to deprive the injured party of a substantial part of the benefit to which he is entitled under the contract', rests primarily upon a construction of the contract. Buckley LJ attached importance to the consequences of the breach and the fairness of holding an injured party to the contract and leaving him to his remedy in damages. These, however, are matters to be considered after construing the agreement the parties have made. A judgment as to the seriousness of the breach, and the adequacy of damages as a remedy, is made after considering the benefit to which the injured party is entitled under the contract."

Consideration

[32] In support of the findings identified in paragraphs [11] and [12] above, the primary judge observed that any assessment of the consequences of Tower 1 not being known as "The Oracle" would need to have regard to:

- "the provision in the relevant documents about the conduct of the letting business";
- the ability of the letting agent to promote its own brand and use its own sign on Tower 1;
- the absence of a promise to promote The Oracle name or even to maintain its use.[22]

[33] Elsewhere, the primary judge found that:

- the apartment contracted for was in a tower with an on-site letting agent who could conduct the business of letting and provide services to residents and their guests;[23]
- no contractual provision indicated that Tower 1 was going to be occupied predominantly by owner-occupiers;[24]
- there was no evidence that the value of an apartment would fluctuate any more if the letting business was conducted by Peppers as opposed to any other manager;[25] and
- it was not established that any apartment was of lesser value in consequence of the appointment of Peppers, the conduct of Peppers or the Tower's branding as Peppers Broadbeach.[26]

As the respondent submitted, the name The Oracle was not pleaded to have, and was found not to have, any content or significance independent of the subject matter of the contracts. There was no suggestion in the evidence which the primary judge accepted that The Oracle was a name which carried with it any particular attraction for purchasers or that the failure to use it exclusively or predominantly to identify Tower 1 would result in any detriment to the appellants.

[35] There is little, if anything, in the primary judge's findings which would support the finding of a contractual intention that a term that Tower 1 and/or the development be known as The Oracle was essential or one which would give rise to a right of termination in the event of a sufficiently serious breach.

[36] The findings, which with respect were justified on the evidence, support the contrary conclusion. The mere fact that a development is given a name and that name is used in promotional and contractual documentation says little, if anything, about whether there is to be found in the contract an implied promise that the name will be used in respect of the completed building. Developments such as The Oracle are invariably given a name by the developer for the purposes of identification in marketing. If the name had commercial significance, for example signifying an association with a nationally or internationally recognised hotel or apartment or resort brand, one would expect to see provisions in contracts for the sale of apartments in the development relating to rights in respect of the retention and use of the name.

[37] The respondent argued that the reference to The Oracle in the contractual documents merely assisted the identification of the physical property to be sold and purchased. I accept that submission. At the time of contract, Tower 1 had not been constructed and the apartments were being marketed as apartments in Tower 1 of a development known as The Oracle. The Community Titles Scheme was to have the name "The Oracle Community Titles Scheme" with the relevant scheme number added. The references in the contractual documents to The Oracle were accurate and assisted in identifying the property, albeit peripherally, as a more precise identification was effected by the proposed lot number and by the "Location Plan" documents.

[38] It was apparent from the contractual documents, and in particular clause 3 of the Conditions of Sale, that the final form of the overall development was subject to change and that there might be significant changes even with respect to Tower 1: a possible change of name of the Community Titles Scheme was flagged.

[39] Putting aside for the moment the effect of any warranty deemed to exist by s 216 of the Act, there is little support for the conclusion that, in addition to the role played by the Oracle name in identifying the apartments to be sold and purchased, there was also a promise by the vendor that Tower 1 be known or described as The Oracle at the date of completion. If such a promise existed, it needed to be inferred and the inference, if it could be drawn, was far from obvious.

[40] The existence of an obvious commercial explanation for the references to The Oracle in the contractual documents is an impediment to the drawing of any such inference. However, there are significant indications in the contractual documents which are inconsistent with an intention that there be any such promise.

One of the most obvious of these is the absence of a promise to promote, maintain or even use the name on or in connection with, Tower 1. There is no provision in the contracts which requires the use of The Oracle on signage, documents or anything else. There is, however, recognition that a letting agent may be engaged[27] and that a lease of part of the common property may be granted to the respondent or its nominee. Significantly, there are no restrictions in respect of the name under which a letting agent may carry on business and, as the respondent pointed out, it was always evident that any manager of the building would be a large corporate operator. Such an entity would be likely to trade under a nationally recognised name which it would use in relation to its business conducted at Tower 1.

The argument that the change of name from The Oracle to Peppers Broadbeach was a step too far is, in essence, no more than an assertion: an assertion which ignores the considerations just discussed. Accordingly, none of grounds 1, 2 and 3 was made out.

[42] For these reasons and for the reasons given below, I am unable to accept that the term found by the primary judge was either a condition or a warranty. There is nothing to indicate from "the general nature of the contract considered as a whole, or from some particular term or terms, that the promise [in such a term, assuming that there was one] is of such importance to the promisee that he would not have entered into the contract unless he had been assured of a strict or a substantial performance of the promise".[28]

[43] Assuming a breach of the term found to exist by the primary judge, it was not one which deprived the purchaser "of a substantial part of the benefit to which he is entitled under the contract".[29] It is of relevance in this regard that the development continued to retain and use The Oracle name. The primary judge found:[30]

> "There are many signs and icons throughout the general precinct that refer to The Oracle, Oracle Boulevard or a particular part of the development such as Oracle North, Oracle South, Oracle East or Oracle West…
>
> There are Oracle logos in the paving outside the reception of each tower. Oracle logos are built into glass as a safety feature. Oracle logos also appear in corridors and rooms within the towers."

The Information Page and the alleged statutory warranty

[44] I have thus far not considered the consequences of the primary judge's findings that the Information Page formed part of the Disclosure Statement or was "material accompanying" it and thus formed part of the provisions of the contract by operation of s 215 of the Act. The respondent challenged that finding in a Notice of Contention.

[45] The respondent argued that the Information Page, although bound up with the Disclosure Statement, was not part of the Disclosure Statement and did not relevantly accompany it. It was submitted also that to give literal meaning to the provisions of s 215(1) of the Act would lead to absurdity. For example, if documents which did not relate to the contract were included inadvertently in the envelope with the Disclosure Statement, statements in the irrelevant material would be treated as warranties. The way around this problem, it was submitted, was to read the reference to "any material accompanying the disclosure statement" as referring only to material of the type required to be contained in a disclosure statement under s 213 of the Act or to the material which the Disclosure Statement "must be accompanied by" under s 213(2)(e).

[46] As s 215 and s 216 of the Act relevantly provide:

> "215 Statements and information sheet form part of contract
>
> (1) The disclosure statement, and any material accompanying the disclosure statement, and each further statement and any material accompanying each further statement, form part of the provisions of the contract.
> (2) The information sheet does not form part of the provisions of the contract.

216 Buyer may rely on information

The buyer may rely on information in the disclosure statement and each further statement as if the seller had warranted its accuracy."[31]

[47] Section 213 of the Act makes provision for the giving by a "seller" to a "buyer" of a proposed lot in a community titles scheme a disclosure statement before a contract for the sale of such a lot is entered into. Sub-section (2) of s 213 contains a list of matters which "must" be stated or included in the disclosure statement. Section 213(2)(e) requires that the disclosure statement "must be accompanied by" the proposed community management statement and, if the proposed scheme is to be a subsidiary scheme, a community management statement of "each scheme of which the proposed subsidiary scheme is proposed to be a subsidiary". Section 213(2)(f) requires the disclosure statement to "identify the regulation module proposed to apply to the scheme". The disclosure statement "must be signed by the seller or a person authorised by the seller"[32] and "must be substantially complete".[33]

[140500]

I accept that s 215(1) should not be construed so as to produce an absurd result. Like any other words in a statute, the words "any material accompanying the disclosure statement" take their colour from their context and from the evident purpose they were intended to achieve.

[49] The Shorter Oxford English Dictionary defines accompany as:

> "1. To add or conjoin to …; to send (or give) with the addition of …
> 2. To keep company with… to combine."

[50] Whether, for the purposes of s 215, any material accompanies a disclosure statement will normally depend, not only on physical proximity and the nature and degree of attachment or annexation, but the nature of the additional material. Plainly, the Legislature did not intend that the seller warrant the accuracy of statements in material which did not relate in any way to the contract; for example a sales brochure for another development.

[51] The respondent's reading down of "any material accompanying the disclosure statement" has the advantage of certainty and simplicity but, in my view, provides a far from obvious construction of the words "any material", which are general and all encompassing in nature. Also, it may be thought that those words are not particularly apt to describe either any material accompanying the disclosure statement of a kind required to be provided under s 213(2) or the proposed community management statement required to accompany the disclosure statement by s 213(2)(e).

[52] It is unnecessary for present purposes, and perhaps undesirable, to attempt any fuller exploration of what may constitute "material accompanying". Whether, in any particular case, the material comes within the description needs to be determined by reference to the facts or circumstances of that case. Also, it does not appear to me that the outcome of this appeal turns on the resolution of the questions now under consideration.

[53] Here, not only was the Information Page bound up with the three page Disclosure Statement, it was paginated as part of it, followed and was listed in an index headed "Index of documents contained in this Disclosure Statement" which was preceded by a "Disclosure Statement" front sheet. These considerations seem to me to overwhelm the significance of the heading of "Disclosure Statement" which commences at page 2 of the collocation of documents and the description in the index of the document as "Body Corporate and Community Management Act Disclosure Statement". The fact that the pagination extends to page 22 and that the paginated documents comprise two annexures each headed "Disclosure Statement" is also relevant. Viewed objectively, as it must be, the Disclosure Statement provided by the respondent included the cover page, the index and the Information Page. I do not accept the argument that the "Disclosure Statement" is limited to those parts of a document provided by a vendor as a disclosure statement which met the requirements of s 213. That section proscribes matters which must be included in a disclosure statement. It does not purport to otherwise confine the content of such documents.

[54] For the above reasons, I conclude that the Information Page was part of the Disclosure Statement. As the appellants submitted, the effect of s 215(1) of the Act was to make any statement in the Information Page "part of the provisions of the contract". That being so, the Information Page could not be read and understood in isolation from the provisions of the contract or, for that matter, as divorced from the balance of the Disclosure Statement, all of which formed part of the provisions of the contract.

[55] When the critical words in the Information Page, "The residential component, to be known as The Oracle", are considered in their context, it is doubtful that they can mean anything more than that the seller's present intention, subject to rights which may be exercised under the contract, the Caretaking and Letting Agreement, or the lease, is that the residential component will be known as "The Oracle".

[56] These words are not promissory in nature. If they were intended to be promissory, or even to provide a representation as to a state of affairs which would exist at settlement or continue beyond that, the terminology would have been quite different. More precise language would have been used in respect of matters such as rights to names and logos, their continued use and the nature and location of signage.

The brand name argument

[57] The appellants argued that the primary judge:

- failed to properly consider and characterise the effect of a change of name or brand on the value of the lots; and
- failed to consider the effect of "indexation" of the value of the apartments to the Pepper's brand generally.

[58] The argument, at best, has a marginal bearing on the nature of the term found to exist by the primary judge and on the appellants' rights in the event of breach or repudiation and is unsustainable.

[59] The primary judge's relevant findings are in paragraphs [224], [232], [233], [234], [235] and [237] of the reasons. Paragraph [232], in particular, deals with the impact of a deterioration in the Pepper's brand generally. The primary judge found, with respect correctly, that the point that the apartments may fluctuate in value "in line with the value of the Pepper's brand and/or the Peppers Broadbeach brand… seems to go [nowhere]". His Honour's finding that there is "no evidence that the value of an apartment would fluctuate any more if the letting business was conducted by Peppers as opposed to any other manager" is unchallenged and the impact of changes in fortune of the Pepper's brand cannot be considered in isolation from its business in respect of Tower 1. It is only whilst that business continues that the Pepper's name will have any bearing on the value of the apartments in Tower 1.

[60] The respondent submitted, accurately, that there is no evidence which required the primary judge to make findings contrary to those under consideration.

[61] But even if the statutory warranty is as found by the primary judge, it is not a contractual provision which is essential or which would give rise to a right of termination in the event of a sufficiently serious breach. Ample justification for that conclusion is to be found in paragraphs [32] – [40] and [56] above. It is of particular significance that the warranty is not to be found in the contract proper, but in a document which was plainly not intended by the parties to have contractual force. The Information Page expressly stated that it was intended to provide only "a general outline" of the development. To the extent that there is conflict or inconsistency between the Information Page on the one hand and the contract, the Disclosure Statement and the documents which expressly form part of the Disclosure Statement on the other, it may be readily inferred that the intention of the parties was that the latter documents would prevail over the former. For the above reasons, grounds 1, 2 and 3 of the Grounds of Appeal have not been made out.

Ground 4

[62] There was no issue on the appeals concerning the content of the pleadings or the primary judge's findings in that regard and, consequently, ground 4 ceased to have relevance.

Conclusion

[63] For the above reasons, I would order that the appeals be dismissed and that the appellants' pay the respondent's costs of the appeals, including reserved costs if any, on the indemnity basis. Clause 7.3 of the Terms of Contract provides that "The Seller is entitled to damages for any loss which it suffers as a result of the Buyer's default, including legal costs on a full indemnity basis". It was not argued that this provision did not apply to the costs of the appeal.

Margaret Wilson J: I agree with the orders proposed by Muir JA and with his Honour's reasons for judgment.

FAMESTOCK PTY LTD v THE BODY CORPORATE FOR NO 9 PORT DOUGLAS ROAD COMMUNITY TITLE SCHEME 24368

(2012) LQCS ¶90-178; Court citation: [2012] QSC 129

Supreme Court of Queensland

Decision delivered on 10 May 2012

Community schemes — Whether a body corporate's committee can decide to terminate a caretaking and letting agreement, or whether a decision by the general meeting of the body corporate is required — Decision on a restricted issue — Whether a decision changed the "rights, privileges or obligations of the owners of lots included in the scheme" — By-law conferring rights and privileges on the owner of the managers' lot during a current property management agreement — Acts Interpretation Act 1954 (Qld), s 32C — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, s 92 — Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 1997, reg 24(b).

The plaintiff and the defendant, a body corporate for a community title scheme, entered a caretaking and letting agreement for the plaintiff to manage a unit complex. Subsequently, the defendant purported to terminate the agreement.

The decision to issue the notices of termination was at best a decision of the committee of the body corporate, not a decision of a general meeting of the body corporate. This was not in dispute.

The plaintiff submitted that the notices of termination were invalid and ineffective. It was contended that the decision to terminate was ultra vires because it was a decision which could only be made by the body corporate in a general meeting.

The agreement stated that it could be terminated by the body corporate by written notice, but did not indicate whether the decision to terminate could be made by the body corporate's committee, or whether a decision of a general meeting or extraordinary meeting was required.

Under s 92 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, the body corporate's committee cannot make decisions on a "restricted issue", as specified by regulation. Regulation 24(b) of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 1997 provides that a decision "to change rights, privileges or obligations of the owners of lots included in the scheme" is a decision on a restricted issue. The plaintiff submitted that the decision to terminate was a decision on a restricted issue under reg 24(b).

In this scheme, by-law 34 conferred rights and privileges on the owner of Lot 1, which was the managers' lot. These rights included the right to use Lot 1 for residential purposes and for the purpose of caretaking the unit complex, and for the sale and letting of units in the complex. The rights also included the exclusive use of the office in the lobby next to Lot 1. The rights in by-law 34 were qualified as existing only during the currency of any property management agreement between the body corporate and the owner of Lot 1.

Held: body corporate's committee not entitled to terminate the caretaking and letting agreement.

1. When the plain meaning of reg 24(b) of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 1997 is considered in context, the words "rights, privileges or obligations of the owners" clearly refer to the rights, privileges or obligations that arise in a person's capacity as an owner of a lot in the scheme. They are rights, privileges or obligations which derive from the person's ownership of the lot, and not from a different source, such as a contractual caretaking and letting agreement: [30].

Under by-law 34, the rights to use Lot 1 for certain purposes and the rights to exclusive use of the office in the lobby were clearly the rights of the owner of Lot 1 in their capacity as an owner of a lot in the scheme. A decision to change those rights fell within reg 24(b): [32], [33].

3. Despite the use of the plural in the words: "the owners of lots", reg 24(b) should be read as including a right, privilege or obligation which might only relate to a single owner of a single lot in the scheme. The ordinary meaning of these words was consistent with this interpretation. It was well known that different owners may have different rights in such schemes. Under s 32C of the Acts Interpretation Act 1954 (Qld), the pluralised words included the singular.

4. Rights and privileges could derive from both the property management agreement and from the by-laws; they were not mutually exclusive. On the plain meaning of by-law 34, during a current property management agreement, the owner of Lot 1 has rights and privileges in their capacity as the owner of a lot in the scheme. A decision to terminate the property management agreement was necessarily a decision that changed those rights because the owner could not enjoy those rights if the agreement was not current. The rights existed "only" during the currency of the agreement. The decision to terminate the agreement removed the condition for the existence of the rights under by-law 34, namely a current property management agreement: [36]–[37], [39].

5. Under reg 24(b), the decision to terminate the current property management agreement was a decision on a restricted issue. Therefore, it was a decision that the committee of the body corporate could not lawfully make. It was a decision requiring the authority of a general meeting of the body corporate. This was because the decision changed and removed the rights that the plaintiff otherwise enjoyed as an owner of a lot in the scheme, under by-law 34: [40]–[41].

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

D A Savage SC (instructed by Alexander Law) for the plaintiff.

C J Ryall (instructed by Williams Graham Carman) for the defendant.

Before: Henry J

Henry J:

[1] At the outset of the current trial the plaintiff successfully made an application for an order under Uniform Civil Procedure Rules 1999 (Qld) r 483 for the decision of a question before and separately from the other questions in the trial.

Background

[2] In a claim filed on 7 February 2008, the plaintiff seeks damages for breach of contract and a declaration.

[3] The defendant, a body corporate for a community title scheme, entered into a written caretaking and letting agreement, exhibit 4 ("the agreement"), with the plaintiff to perform caretaking and letting duties and obligations in respect of a unit complex. It was a condition[1] of the agreement that the plaintiff[2] would obtain all licences required to enable it to conduct the business of letting the units.

[4] At the commencement of the agreement the plaintiff obtained a letting agents licence from the Auctioneers and Agents Committee pursuant to the provisions of the Auctioneers and Agents Act 1971 (Qld)[3] in order for it to carry out its duties as letting agent. However, the plaintiff pleads that in or about May 2001, it discovered the licence had expired and it had failed to renew its licence.

[5] The plaintiff sought a letter from the defendant confirming that the agreement was still in existence in order to provide such a letter to the licensing authority as evidence of the relevant body corporate's approval of the conduct of the letting business. It is implicit in the pleadings that such a letter was not forthcoming.

[6] The plaintiff also pleads that in August 2001 the defendant's chairperson, Mr Hurst, advised Ms Pusztay, a representative of the [140505]

Auctioneers and Agents Committee at the Office of Fair Trading, that the view of the defendant was that the agreement was no longer valid and the defendant would subsequently be voting not to approve the plaintiff as the caretaking and letting agent.

[7] The plaintiff relies upon the failure to provide the letter as well as the representation by Mr Hurst to Ms Pusztay as conduct that breached an allegedly implied term of the contract.

[8] The defendant issued notices of termination on 7 February 2002 purporting to terminate the management agreement relying on a variety of grounds. It is common ground the decision to issue the notices was at best a decision of the body corporate's committee rather than a decision of a general meeting of the body corporate. The validity of the termination letters is denied by the plaintiff for various reasons, one of which is, in effect, that the purported termination was ultra vires. The plaintiff alleges that, in addition to the aforementioned breaches, the purported but ultra vires determination also constituted a breach of the agreement.

[9] The plaintiff seeks damages for breach of contract in the sum of $544,230. The plaintiff also seeks a declaration that the notices to terminate were invalid and of no effect and did not terminate the agreement.

[10] The trial of the proceeding has commenced although save for the opening of the plaintiff's case it has not proceeded substantively, there having been argument and rulings in respect of a number of applications relating to the state of the pleadings as well as the successful application for the Court to determine the separate question now under consideration.

The question to be determined

[11] The question to be determined is:

"Was the committee of the defendant entitled to determine the plaintiff's caretaking and letting agreement the subject of this proceeding, or was that a matter within the authority of the general meeting of the defendant?"

[12] The plaintiff's relevant pleading as to the invalidity of the notices to terminate is:

"29. The notices to terminate were invalid and of no effect because:

(b) the Defendant had not lawfully made the decision to terminate the Agreement and issue the notices to terminate.

Particulars

(i) The committee of the Body Corporate resolved to terminate the Agreement and issue the notices to terminate at a meeting of the Committee on 11 February 2002.
(ii) The decision to terminate the Agreement was a decision on a restricted issue as defined in regulation 24(b) of the BCCM (Accommodation Module) Regulation.
(iii) Therefore such decision should have been made by the body corporate and not by the committee .
(iv) In the premises, the decision of the committee was not a decision of the body corporate as provided for in s 92 of the BCCM Act." (emphasis added)

[13] In summary the purported decision to terminate is said to be ultra vires because it was at best a decision of the committee of the body corporate when, on the plaintiff's argument, it was only a decision which could be made by the body corporate in a general meeting. That is, it is contended it was not a decision the committee could make.

The Agreement

[14] The agreement which the defendant purported to terminate provides at clause 10 that it may be terminated by the body corporate by notice in writing but gives no indication of whether the decision to send such a termination notice can be made by the committee of the body corporate or whether it requires a decision of a general or extraordinary meeting of the body corporate members.

The Statute

[15] The relevant statute in force at the time of the purported termination notice was the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) Reprint 1F ("the Act"). Section 88 of the Act expressly vested in the body corporate for a community titles scheme all the powers necessary for carrying out its functions, including entering into contracts.

As to the power of a committee of the body corporate, s 92 relevantly provides:

"92. Power of committee to act for body corporate

(1) A decision of the committee is a decision of the body corporate.
(2) Subsection (1) does not apply to a decision that, under the regulation module, is a decision on a restricted issue for the committee. …" (emphasis added)

[17] This means decisions of the committee are deemed to be decisions of the body corporate, except for decisions of the committee on restricted issues, which are specified under regulation. If decisions fall to be made by the body corporate on restricted issues they could not be decided by its committee and by necessary implication would have to be made or authorised by the body corporate in a general meeting.

The Regulation

[18] The relevant regulation module in force at the time of the purported termination was the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 1997 (Qld) Reprint 2 ("the Regulation").

[19] The Regulation specifically provided at reg 85 that the body corporate could only engage a person as a body corporate manager or service contractor, or authorise a person as a letting agent with the approval by ordinary resolution of a general meeting of the body corporate. On the other hand in empowering the body corporate to also terminate such engagements, reg 84 did not specify whether such a decision could be made by the committee only or required approval by a general meeting.

[20] As to the Regulation's definition of restricted issues for the committee, reg 24 provided:

"24. Restricted issues for committee – Act, s 92[SM, s 26]

A decision is a decision on a restricted issue for the committee if it is a decision –

(a) fixing or changing a contribution to be levied by the body corporate; or
(b) to change rights, privileges or obligations of the owners of lots included in the scheme ; or
(c) on an issue reserved, by ordinary resolution of the body corporate, for decision by ordinary resolution of the body corporate; or
(d) that may only be made by resolution without dissent, special resolution or ordinary resolution of the body corporate; or
(e) to bring a proceeding in a court, other than –

(i) a proceeding to recover a liquidated debt against the owner of a lot; or
(ii) a counterclaim, third party proceeding or other proceeding in relation to a proceeding to which the body corporate is already a party; or

(f) to pay remuneration, allowances or expenses to a member of the committee, unless the decision –

(i) is made under the authority of an ordinary resolution of the body corporate; or
(ii) is for the reimbursement of expenses of not more than $50." (emphasis added)

[21] The plaintiff submits the decision to issue termination notices was a decision on a restricted issue because it was a decision, described at reg 24(b), "to change rights, privileges or obligations of the owners of lots included in the scheme".

Rights, privileges and obligations under the contract

[22] It is not in dispute that the plaintiff had rights, privileges and obligations under its agreement with the body corporate.

[23] The plaintiff was obliged as a condition of the agreement to purchase and retain ownership of the Managers unit or "lot", which was lot 1.[4] The agreement also made provision for the mandatory transfer of the manager's lot in the event of termination.[5]

[24] Under the agreement the plaintiff was to perform management and caretaking duties,[6] for which it was to receive monthly remuneration[7] as well as reimbursement for the cost of consumable materials and equipment required to carry out its duties.[8] It was required to carry on from its unit the business of letting lots for the owners thereof, supervise tenants and promote the letting of units, including by erecting promotional signs.[9]

Rights, privileges and obligations under the Scheme

[25] The plaintiff's rights, privileges and obligations as manager did not derive solely from the agreement between the parties but also derived from the so-called New Community Management Statement, exhibit 3, relating to the community title scheme with which this case is concerned.

[26] In Schedule C to that document, by-law 34 makes specific provision for the use to which Lot 1 can be put:

> "34. USE OF LOT 1
> 34.1 Lot 1 in the Parcel may be used for both residential purposes and only during the currency of any property management agreement made between the Body Corporate and the registered proprietor of Lot 1, for the purpose of caretaking the Parcel and for the sale and letting of units on the Parcel on behalf of the proprietors. The proprietors of Lot 1 may with the prior consent of the Committee of the Body Corporate display signs or notices for the purposes of offering for sale or for lease or for letting of any lot on the Parcel.
> 34.2 During the currency of any Property Management Agreement made between the Body Corporate and registered proprietor of Lot 1, the proprietor of Lot 1 shall be entitled to the exclusive use for office purpose of that area designated on the building plan as an office situated within the Common Property lobby area of the ground floor and being immediately adjacent to Lot 1." (emphasis added)

[27] The rights of use conferred by by-law 34 are rights or privileges. They are of potentially very significant value to the proprietor of lot 1 given the nature of the business they effectively allow that person to conduct. They were described as "special privileges" of the agent in Victorian Professional Group Management Pty Ltd v The Proprietor "Surfers Aquarius" Building Units Plan No. 3881.[10]

Discussion

[28] The meaning of reg 24(b) does not appear to have received any reported authoritative consideration. Its meaning can be readily derived from the plain meaning of the words used and the context of their use.[11]

[29] The reference in reg 24(b) to "rights, privileges or obligations of the owners of lots included in the scheme" ought not be read literally as a reference to any right, privilege or obligation which a person who owns a lot in the scheme happens to have. That would ignore the context of the words, which necessarily implies a connection between the rights, privileges or obligations and the person's status as an owner of a lot included in the scheme.

[30] When the plain meaning of the words is considered in context, the reference to an owner's rights, privileges or obligations is obviously a reference to the rights, privileges or obligations that arise in the person's capacity as an owner of a lot included in the scheme. That is, they are rights, privileges or obligations which derive from the fact of the person's ownership of the lot and not from some other source, for example, from a contractual agreement such as the Caretaking and Letting Agreement in this case.

[31] At first blush it might appear that the decision to terminate the contractual agreement in the present case was a decision that changed the plaintiff's rights, privileges or obligations deriving from the agreement and not in the plaintiff's capacity as an owner of a lot included in the scheme and was therefore not a restricted decision. However, that reasoning ignores the fact the community titles scheme expressly confers rights or privileges upon the owner of lot 1, the manager's lot, under by-law clause 34 in the community management statement for the scheme. Those are rights or privileges that do derive, as reg 24(b) contemplates, from the plaintiff's capacity as an owner of a lot included in the scheme.

The rights and privileges of the owner of lot 1 in the scheme include, under the scheme's by-law 34, the right to use lot 1 for the purpose of caretaking the parcel, ie. the unit complex, and for the sale and letting of units on the parcel. They also include the exclusive use of the office area in the lobby of the unit complex.

[33] Under the by-laws these rights and privileges are clearly those of the owner of lot 1 in that person's capacity as an owner of that lot in the scheme. A decision to change those rights is a decision described in reg 24(b).

[34] Such a decision only bears upon one owner of one lot included in the scheme whereas the regulation refers in the plural to "the owners of lots". However, the ordinary meaning of the words of the regulation is consistent with the rights, privileges or obligations not having to relate to all owners and all lots included in the scheme. It is well known in such schemes that there may be differences in the rights, privileges and obligations of some owners of lots compared to others. In any event, pursuant to s 32C of the Acts Interpretation Act 1954 (Qld), words in the plural include the singular. It follows reg 24(b) ought be read as including a right, privilege or obligation which might, as here, only relate to a single owner of a single lot included in the scheme.

[35] The defendant submitted that the aforementioned rights and privileges under by-law 34 are qualified as only existing "during the currency of any Property Management Agreement" and therefore are not rights and privileges which derive from ownership of a lot included in the scheme and, rather, derive from the property management agreement. The submission seems to assume a mutual exclusivity between rights and privileges that flow from the agreement and rights and privileges that flow from the by-laws. It ignores the reality that rights and privileges can derive from both. The issue is not whether the plaintiff has rights or privileges under the agreement; it is whether it has rights or privileges under the by-laws as an owner of a lot included in the scheme.

[36] On the plain meaning of by-law 34, if a Property Management Agreement is current, the owner of lot 1 has rights and privileges in that person's capacity as the owner of a lot included in the scheme. A decision to terminate the Property Management Agreement is necessarily a decision that will change those rights or privileges because they are not rights or privileges that the owner can enjoy if the agreement is no longer current.

[37] The defendant contended that the by-laws did not grant the plaintiff a right to insist, if the agreement were to be terminated, that it be terminated in any particular way. That is not to the point. The issue here is whether the committee had the power to decide to terminate.

[38] The defendant also contended that even if the agreement is terminated that does not change the rights and privileges accorded by by-law 34. It was submitted in effect that even though the decision would render those rights and privileges worthless or dormant, those rights and privileges still existed, unchanged, as rights and privileges under the by-laws. However, this ignores the reality that the rights and privileges accorded by by-law 34 exist, as the by-law says, "only during the currency of any Property Management Agreement" (emphasis added).

[39] It was submitted the body corporate had resolved in advance by clause 10 of the agreement that the rights or privileges could be terminated. The argument was in effect that the right or privilege in by-law 34 was subject to a determination in advance that it could be terminated and thus a decision of the committee to terminate could not be said to have changed a right or privilege under the by-law. This ignores the relevant sequence of events and ignores the difference between the potential for a decision to be made and the making of a decision. If an agreement is current and a decision is taken to terminate it, the rights and privileges under by-law 34 will exist up to and at the time the decision is being made. It is only when the decision has been made, assuming it is validly made, that the rights and privileges which up to that time were held by the owner of the lot will change. As at the time a decision to terminate a current agreement is being considered, the rights and privileges of the owner of the manager's lot included in the scheme still exist. The making of the decision to terminate will change those rights and privileges by removing the condition for their existence under by-law 34, namely a current Property Management Agreement.

[40] It follows the decision to terminate a current Property Management Agreement in this case must have been a decision to change rights and privileges in as much as it would remove the rights and privileges the plaintiff otherwise enjoyed as an owner of a lot included in the scheme pursuant to by-law 34. Regulation 24 therefore deemed the decision to be a decision on a restricted issue and it was therefore a decision the committee could not lawfully make.

[41] I determine the answer to the question is:

The committee of the defendant was not entitled to determine the plaintiff's caretaking and letting agreement, that being a matter requiring the authority of a general meeting of the defendant.

[140510]

The defendant (Kentcade Properties Pty Ltd) developed a resort which comprised 47 apartments.

Subsequently on 15 May 2009 the defendant appointed the plaintiffs (David John Mackenzie and Vicki Elizabeth Mackenzie) as its agent in respect of each of the 41 apartments which were still owned by the defendant. The plaintiffs became the resident managers and caretakers. The plaintiffs purchased Lot 9 from the defendant and began operating their letting business from the development by taking advanced holiday bookings. In the document appointing the plaintiffs as the agent for each of the 41 unsold apartments, the developer undertook to ensure that if any of the 41 lots were sold or transferred, then it would:

> i. give notice to the incoming purchaser of the particular lot of all of the advance holiday bookings relevant to that lot, and > ii. obtain from the incoming purchaser an undertaking to accept the transfer of the lot to that purchaser subject to the conditions of such advance bookings, and > iii. ensure that both the notice and the undertaking were enshrined in a contract between the defendant and the incoming purchaser (see [2]).

Later on 3 November 2011, the plaintiffs and the defendant entered into an Option Agreement, which would allow the plaintiffs to sell the management rights and Lot 9 to the defendant if certain Put Option Events occurred. Those Put Option Events included:

> a. breaches of a notice obligation requiring the defendant to give the plaintiffs notice of both the execution of a contract of sale and the completion of that contract of sale
> b. termination of a Form 20a letting agency form between the plaintiff and the incoming purchaser, the effect of which would mean the plaintiff no longer had the right to let that particular lot > c. the defendant's breach of an undertaking (see [5]).

Contracts for nine lots were entered into and completed by the defendant to sell those lots to incoming purchasers prior to 15 February 2012.

The plaintiffs alleged that Put Option Events did take place and then took steps to exercise the Option. They sought an order from the court that the defendant specifically perform the contract and purchase the lot and management rights from the plaintiffs.

On 30 November 2011, the plaintiffs took steps to prepare a specific PAMD Form 20a, which protected their rights as letting agents while also providing the Managed Investment Scheme exemption provision allowing them to attract an exemption under s 601ED of the Corporations Act 2001 (Cth) and this form was provided to the developer to use with incoming purchasers (see ¶39-300).

The defendants contended that the Put Option Events did not take place and alternatively that the court should exercise its discretion not to order specific performance. A further argument was raised by the defendant that the plaintiffs had breached their implied obligation of good faith.

Held: Put Option Events did take place allowing the plaintiffs to require the defendant to purchase the rights and Lot 9 from the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs validly exercised their Option.

1. The defendant breached their notice requirement — the defendant should not have taken longer than "a few business days" (see [40]) to communicate the relevant event (either a contract being executed or settling) to the plaintiffs. In obiter: the giving of notice was not an onerous task — the passage of weeks between the event and the notice was not a reasonable time: [40]–[41].

2. The completion of the settlement of the nine lots terminated the agency agreement between the defendant and the plaintiffs as to the ability to control the letting of those nine sold lots: [64].

The defendants failed to have each of the nine purchasers enter into a letting agreement on the plaintiff's terms which would allow the plaintiffs to control the letting of each of those units: [85].

4. The defendant breached its undertaking obligation to ensure that the contractual terms agreed with the plaintiffs (to incorporate the advanced holiday letting into all contracts with the nine purchasers) were incorporated. In obiter — the terms were agreed in correspondence between the conveyancing staff. This was not sufficient; it had to be within the contract itself. This was an event of default triggering the Put Option: [93]–[94].

5. The plaintiffs validly exercised their Put Option: [95].

6. Specific performance was an appropriate remedy. An order for specific performance was made: [96], [101].

7. The plaintiffs in exercising their option did not act in a manner which was "exploitative conduct" defeating the purpose for which the contract was made: [98].

Before: Applegarth J

Editorial comment: In this case, the developer obviously had difficulties selling all of the lots off the plan prior to the development being finished. To stop the loss, the developer appointed the plaintiffs so that they could come on site and at least ensure that people were using the lots for holidays. The developer would have received cash from these holiday lettings and it would have made it much easier for the developer to hold onto stock.

This case shows that it is very important for a developer to work with the onsite manager, especially in a staged development, to ensure that the onsite manager picks up as many potential letting contracts with incoming buyers as quickly as possible as the letting contracts go to the very heart of the profitability of the management rights business for the onsite manager and is relevant to the purchase price paid for the rights.

Applegarth J highlighted the significance of notice (of each unit sale to a fresh buyer) being provided by the developer to the onsite managers in compliance with the agreement to do so under the option, to allow them to take advantage of the ability to capture future holiday rentals and preserve the value of their management rights business. The developer's position that the requirement to provide advance notice was only sometime prior to settlement was soundly rejected by the bench. His Honour noted that the passage of weeks following the execution of a binding contract between the developer and a third party buyer was not a "reasonable time".

This case also discusses the importance of using the PAMDA Form 20a (Appointment of agent — Letting and property management) which meets with the approval of and/or is drafted by the onsite manager's lawyer in order to escape the managed investment scheme provisions administered by ASIC. Instead of using the correct form, the developer's solicitor issued a blank Form 20a to each of the buyers, effectively destroying any chance that the managers had of capturing those units into the letting pool.

This case is an example of "how not to" handle the sale of management rights to a resident manager where there is an option in place.

Applegarth J:

[1] The plaintiffs ("the Mackenzies") hold the management rights associated with the Coolum Seaside Resort, which comprises 47 apartments. They are resident managers and own Unit 9 from which they operate their caretaking and letting business. The resort was developed by the defendant ("Kentcade").

[2] On 15 May 2009 Kentcade appointed the Mackenzies its agent in respect of each of the 41 apartments it then owned ("the Kentcade Lots"). By Part 21 of the document that appointed it ("the Bulk Form 20a") Kentcade:

> (a) undertook that in the event of any of the Kentcade Lots being sold or otherwise transferred, Kentcade would:
>
> > (i) give notice to the purchaser or transferee of the relevant Kentcade Lot of all advance bookings for the Kentcade Lot;
> > (ii) obtain from that purchaser or transferee an undertaking to accept the purchase or transfer subject to the conditions of such advance bookings; and

(b) agreed that such undertaking on the part of the purchaser would form part of the contract for the purchase or transfer of the Kentcade Lot.

I shall refer to this as "the Undertaking Obligation".

[3] On 3 November 2011 the Mackenzies and Kentcade entered into an Option Agreement under which Kentcade granted to the Mackenzies an option ("the Put Option") to sell the management rights and Lot 9 to Kentcade upon the happening of a "Put Option Event". The Mackenzies contend that certain Put Option Events occurred, that they exercised the Put Option and are entitled to orders that the contract for the sale of the management rights and the contract for the sale of Lot 9 be specifically performed.

[4] Kentcade denies that there was a "Put Option Event". Alternatively, it submits that the Court should exercise its discretion to not order specific performance.

[5] The Mackenzies allege three separate Put Option Events:

(a) Breaches of clause 3.4 of the Option Agreement ("the Notice Obligation");
(b) Termination of "one or more of the Forms 20a" in the circumstances provided for by clause 4.1(4) of the Option Agreement ("the Form 20a Termination Event");
(c) Breach of the Undertaking Obligation.

The issues

[6] The substantial issues may be summarised as follows:

1. Did Kentcade breach the Notice Obligation contained in clause 3.4? This issue turns largely upon the meaning of "on" in clause 3.4.
2. Was there a Form 20a termination event as provided for in clause 4.1(4)? This issue turns on:
    (a) whether there was a termination of "one or more of the Forms 20a";
    (b) if so, whether the exception contained in clause 4.1(4) applies.
3. Is the Undertaking Obligation contained in a document "associated with" the Option Agreement and, if so, was there a breach of the Undertaking Obligation?
4. If the Mackenzies validly exercised the Put Option, whether orders for specific performance should be declined as a matter of discretion on the grounds that:
    (a) in exercising the Put Option the Mackenzies breached an implied obligation of good faith;
    (b) it would be unfair to order specific performance.

Background facts and relevant provisions

[7] The income that the Mackenzies derive from the ownership of the management rights comes mainly from their management of the letting of lots in the resort. There is no obligation on the owner of a lot in the resort to put their lot into the letting pool.

[8] Because the Kentcade Lots constituted 41 of the 47 lots in the scheme, any sale by Kentcade of the Kentcade Lots carried with it a risk that a purchaser or purchasers would decide not to place the lots in the letting pool as Kentcade had done pursuant to the Bulk Form 20a. This carried the risk of a diminution in the income derived by the Mackenzies from the letting business and a devaluation of their business.

[9] It was in this context that on or about 3 November 2011 the Mackenzies entered into the Option Agreement with Kentcade. The Option Agreement refers to the Mackenzies as "the Seller" and to Kentcade as "the Grantee".

[10] Clause 4 of the Option Agreement provides that each of a number of matters are Put Option Events. These include "all Events of Default". Clause 1.1(16) defines "Event of Default" to mean the following events:

> "(a) if a party fails to pay or repay money which is due and payable to the other party under this Agreement, a Contract or document associated with either of them;

(b) if a party defaults in the performance of an Obligation on that party's part under this Agreement, the Contract or a document associated with either of them; or
(c) any other event specifically described as an Event of Default in this Agreement." (emphasis added)

[11] Clause 3.4 contains obligations to give notice as follows:

"3.4 The Grantee must, in respect of each lot in Coolum Seaside (other than the Discretionary Lots and the Excluded Lots) which the Grantee intends to sell, transfer or assign ('Lot Sale'), give Notice to the Seller on both:

(1) the execution of a contract, or reaching of an agreement with the buyer for that Lot Sale; and
(2) the completion of the contract or agreement for that Lot Sale." (emphasis added)

Clause 3.5 provides that a breach of clause 3.4 by Kentcade is an Event of Default.

[12] Clause 4.1(4) includes among the Put Option Events the following:

"(4) Termination of any one or more of the Forms 20a except:

(a) where required to permit the completion of an arms length sale of one or more of the Grantee's lots in the Development to a third party unrelated to the Grantee ("Third Party"); and
(b) either:

(i) the Grantee procures the Third Party to enter into a PAMD[1] form 20a, in the Seller's standard form and terms, with the Seller on or before completion of the sale; or
(ii) no more than 2 Third Parties in any 12 month period fail to enter into a PAMD form 20a, in the Seller's standard form and terms, with the Seller on or before completion of their purchase …".

This provision prompts attention to the definition of "Forms 20a". This term is defined to mean "the PAMD forms 20a between the Seller and the Grantee, or an associate of the Grantee, for all of the Grantee's Lots".

Principles of construction

[13] The principles governing the interpretation of commercial contracts are not in dispute, and need not be restated at length. The meaning of the contract is to be determined objectively according to what a reasonable person in the position of the parties would understand the words to mean. If there is ambiguity, regard may be had to the commercial purpose of the transaction and background knowledge which would have been available to the parties. An interpretation which will give the contract a businesslike operation is to be preferred. Commercial contracts should be construed to make commercial sense of them. An absurd, unreasonable or capricious result is to be avoided.

[14] The starting point is the natural and ordinary meaning of the expression. The Court seeks to ascertain what the parties meant by the words which they have used. An objective approach is applied.[2] It is not the subjective beliefs or understandings of the parties about their rights and liabilities that govern their contractual relations. What matters is what each party by words and conduct would have led a reasonable person in the position of the other party to believe.[3]

[15] Evidence of the surrounding circumstances is only admissible where the words are ambiguous. Unambiguous language cannot be disregarded simply because the contract would have a more commercial and businesslike operation if an interpretation different to that dictated by the language were adopted.

[16] The interpretation should accord with what commercial people in the position of the parties would understand the words to mean. The interpretation should be "consistent with business common sense."[4] In the case of an ambiguous expression, the "more commercially sensible" construction should be preferred.

The Notice Obligation

[17] The issue of whether Kentcade breached the Notice Obligation turns principally on the meaning of "on" in the context of clause 3.4. Clause 3.4 required Kentcade to give notice to the Mackenzies "on" both:

1. the execution of a contract, or reaching of an agreement with the buyer for that Lot Sale; and
2. the completion of the contract or agreement for that Lot Sale.

The relevant facts are not in dispute. Paragraph 8 of the statement of claim, which was admitted, contains a table of the contracts entered into by Kentcade to sell a total of 15 of the Kentcade Lots. The table sets out the date of each contract, the date notice of each contract was given to the Mackenzies, the completion date of each contract that settled and the date notice of the completion of each contract was given to the Mackenzies. To take one example, the date of the contract for the sale of Lot 2 was 2 December 2011, but notice was not given of it until more than four weeks later on 5 January 2012. In most other cases the period between the date of the contract and the date of notice of it was about a month. In one case the length of time was 38 days.

[18] The Mackenzies submit that the word "on" is used in clause 3.4 in a temporal sense, and should be given its natural ordinary meaning. The Oxford English Dictionary defines "on" in a temporal sense as meaning "indicating the day or part of a day during which an event takes place; at the time of". The Mackenzies submit that even if some temporal latitude is allowed, "on" should not be construed to extend very far beyond the time of occurrence of the relevant event.[5] The expression "on" is incapable of accommodating a notice given many days or weeks after the relevant event.

[19] Such an interpretation of "on" is submitted to be supported by its context, including:

(a) the apparent commercial purpose of the provision;
(b) the requirement for a notice to be given "on" the occurrence of one of the events stated in clause 3.4(1), and a further notice "on" the completion of the contract pursuant to clause 3.4(2).

They submit that the flexible or imprecise construction of the word "on" contended for by Kentcade does not reflect the "business commonsense" approach to construction referred to by Diplock L in Antaios Compania Naviera SA v Salen Rederierna AB.[6]

[20] Kentcade submits that clause 3.4 does not stipulate the giving of notice within a particular time and, accordingly, clause 16.10 of the Option Agreement which provides that "time will be of the essence" is not engaged. It further submits that, by parity of reasoning with authorities that have construed the synonym "upon", the word "on" identifies "the trigger for the giving of the notice", not the time within which it must be given.

[21] Clause 3.4 is described by Kentcade as a "machinery provision" intended to assist the Mackenzies in obtaining the benefit of the Put Option Event in clause 4.1(4) if it becomes available.

[22] Although the requirement to give a further notice "on" the completion of the contract means that the first notice must be given before the completion date, Kentcade submits that the critical time is the date of completion of the contract of sale since it is only upon the completion of such a contract that the interests of the Mackenzies as the holders of the management rights may be threatened by diminution in the letting pool if Kentcade fails to secure their appointment at the settlement. Against that background, Kentcade submits that the context in which clause 3.4 appears and the subject matter of the Option Agreement lead to the conclusion that the requisite notices must be given after:

(a) entry into a contract for a Lot Sale, but probably before completion of that contract; and
(b) after completion of such a contract, but within a reasonable time so as to permit the Mackenzies a fair and reasonable opportunity to exercise the Put Option, if appropriate, within the applicable 90 day time limit.

[23] Kentcade's preferred construction is submitted to accord with reason and good sense where, for example, a buyer may make use of the statutory cooling-off period of five business days, or a contract may not proceed, for example, because it is subject to finance and the finance condition fails. The notice requirement in clause 3.4(1) is said to be intended to be "an advance warning that the seller should get ready to consider its position if ultimately it was informed in accordance with clause 3.4(2) that such a contract had been completed."

[24] Finally, Kentcade submits that its notices of entry into contracts and its notices of the completion of certain contracts were all within a reasonable time.

[25] Each party cited authorities which involved consideration of expressions "on", "on or about" or "upon" in a variety of contexts. As Stephen J stated in Bowman v Durham Holdings Pty Ltd:

> "'Upon' may mean 'before', 'simultaneously with' or 'after' the act done to which it relates and it will take its intended meaning from its context."[7]

Accordingly, in their context, the words "upon the exercise of the option" in that case did not require that payment of the purchase price should occur simultaneously with the exercise of the option. In other contexts, for example where the expression "on the death" is used the word "on" means either before the death, or simultaneously with the death, or immediately after the death.[8] Depending upon its context, the word "on" may impose a stricter time requirement than "on or about" which has been interpreted to mean no more than a few days away from the nominated event.[9]

[26] In other contexts the word "on" or "upon" has been construed as not imposing a temporal requirement in the nature of "at the same time as".[10] In some contexts it means "after".

[27] The authorities cited by both parties in relation to the meaning of "on", "on or about" or "upon" serve to illustrate that in some contexts the word "on" or its synonym "upon" does not stipulate a time for something to be done. Bowman v Durham Holdings Pty Ltd illustrates that point in respect of the synonym "upon". However, as Jordan CJ has observed:

> "The word 'upon' in different cases may undoubtedly either mean before the act done to which it relates, or simultaneously with the act done or after the act done, according, as reason and good sense require, the interpretation with reference to the context and the subject matter of the enactment."[11]

[28] The issue then is what reason and good sense require in the context of the present contract. This includes the context in which clause 3.4 appears, the apparent purpose[12] of including such a term in an agreement that related to management rights and the circumstances under which the Put Option might be exercised to sell them.

[29] I am not persuaded that the text or context of clause 3.4 supports the conclusion that the execution of a contract, or reaching an agreement for the sale of a lot, was simply a trigger, leaving Kentcade with latitude to give the first notice at any time after entry into the contract but before its completion.

[30] In its context, clause 3.4 is not a mere "machinery provision" that was intended to provide an advance warning that the Mackenzies should be ready to consider their position if they were later informed, in accordance with clause 3.4(2), that such a contract had been completed. The provision is not simply ancillary to the relevant Put Option Event under clause 4.1(4). Clause 3.4(1) is prescriptive in its terms and its requirement for the first notice to be given may assist the Mackenzies in the conduct of their business and thereby enhance its value. It may assist them to make forward bookings in respect of the lot and other lots, and arrange bookings so as to secure future bookings in later years to their advantage. Early notice assists them to make administrative arrangements for a possible change in ownership of a lot. Clause 3.4 is not necessarily linked to clause 4.1(4). Performance of its obligations may assist the conduct of the management rights business.

[31] The practical significance of the dual notice requirements to the conduct of the management rights business should be fairly apparent. Even without resort to the evidence of Mrs Mackenzie, I accept the Mackenzies' submission that the obvious purpose of the notice required by clause 3.4 is to apprise them of an agreement to sell a lot as soon as it occurs. Mrs Mackenzie gave evidence which touched upon the practical operation of the business. The nature of the business, as explained by Mrs Mackenzie, supports the submission that the construction of the word "on" contended for by the Mackenzies is to be preferred, so as to give the clause a business-like interpretation and an interpretation which business people would have understood in the circumstances of an agreement relating to the subject matter of a management rights business.

[32] Such a business relies on forward bookings of accommodation. Because bookings are often taken many months in advance, and customers pay deposits and otherwise plan holidays on the basis of their booking, it is important for the manager of such a resort to be given the earliest possible notice that a lot may be taken out of the letting pool. Although some forward bookings may be protected by the Undertaking Obligation, the risk exists that after the contract of sale is entered into and before the Mackenzies are informed of the contract, they will take further advance bookings. Lot owners are not obliged to join the letting pool. The earliest possible notice that a lot may change hands enables the Mackenzies to avoid the problem of continuing to take accommodation bookings for a lot purchased by a third party who may not join the letting pool. Taking such bookings and not being in a position to honour them could lead to upset customers and other consequences that might have an adverse impact on the business. The Mackenzies were protected against some problems to the extent that Kentcade promised to obtain an undertaking from each purchaser to honour all forward bookings. Some buyers might be unwilling to give such an undertaking or to honour it. In any event, directing forward bookings to a unit that is not subject to contract and which is expected to remain in the pool for the long term might enhance the business, particularly in respect of "repeat" holidaymakers who in following years will try to book the same unit. Having the earliest possible notice of entry into sales is an advantage to the Mackenzies in relation to their conduct of the business and the management of forward bookings.

[33] The notice requirements of clause 3.4 are also practically important to a manager to enable it to make appropriate plans to deal with the accounting and other administrative consequences of a change in ownership of one or more lots. Substantial administrative tasks are required in relation to accounting for income and expenses, and to make appropriate arrangements to ensure the continuity of the supply of utilities and other essential services to lots.

[34] In its practical operation the notice requirement contained in clause 3.4(1) may serve to inform the Mackenzies of the identity of the purchaser and facilitate their negotiation of a fresh authorisation in accordance with the PAMD Form 20a agreement to act as the incoming buyer's letting agent. However, the notice requirement does not expressly require Kentcade to inform the Mackenzies of the name and address of the buyer and I do not rely upon this aspect as a separate or additional basis to conclude that giving the Mackenzies as much time as possible might enhance the efficient conduct of their business and its value.

[35] Instead, the other matters pointed to by the Mackenzies in their submissions in relation to arranging forward bookings for the relevant lots or alternative lots within the letting pool and making appropriate arrangements for a possible changeover in ownership support the conclusion that the purpose of the notice required by clause 3.4(1) is to inform the Mackenzies of an agreement to sell as soon as the agreement is reached or the relevant contract is executed.

[36] The possibility that such a contract will not settle, for example because finance to complete it is not obtained, does not detract from the practical importance to managers such as the Mackenzies of having as much advance notice as possible of the real possibility that the contract will be completed, and for them to make suitable arrangements for the letting of the subject lot or others. Such arrangements are important to the practical operation of their business.

[37] An interpretation of "on" which requires the notice to be given on the date of the relevant occurrence or within a few days thereafter accords with the ordinary meaning of the word "on", while allowing for the exigency that it may not be possible for a notice to be given on the very same day that the contract is executed. For example, the contract may be executed late in the day and it may not be possible to give the notice that same day. In such a case the notice would be given in accordance with clause 3.4 if it was given on the next working day or possibly the next few working days. An interpretation which permits such a notice to be given many days or weeks after the event would not accord with the apparent commercial objective of clause 3.4.

[38] One reason for this conclusion is that the word "on" apparently has the same meaning in its application to both the event referred to in clause 3.4(1) and the event referred to in clause 3.4(2), namely completion. In certain circumstances the completion of the contract will bring to an end the authority of the Mackenzies in respect of the lot. It would be important for them to know that a contract has been completed on the day of completion for a variety of practical reasons, including that in some cases their authority would be at an end. An interpretation which interprets the word "on" in the sense contended for by the Mackenzies in respect of both parts of clause 3.4 makes commercial sense and gives the agreement a business-like interpretation.

[39] These considerations are not outweighed by Kentcade's countervailing argument that the event is simply a trigger, leaving, in the case of the notice required by clause 3.4(1), an obligation to give the notice at some indefinite time prior to completion.

[40] There is no contest between the parties that clause 3.4(1) was intended to provide "an advance warning" to the Mackenzies. Ultimately, the issue is whether an interpretation of the word "on" in accordance with its ordinary meaning and so as to give the Mackenzies as much warning as possible is to be preferred, as according with the parties' presumed intention in using that word. Having considered the competing submissions of the parties, including arguments based upon commercial sense, I conclude that the word "on" was used in a temporal sense, and its context meant the day of the relevant event or within a short time thereafter, being no more than a few business days.

[41] If, instead, the notices had to be given within a reasonable time after the relevant event, then I am not satisfied that the notices required by clause 3.4(1) were given within a reasonable time. The giving of the notices was not a demanding task. There is no suggestion that it was not possible to give such a notice on or shortly after the execution of a relevant contract, or after agreement was reached with the buyer of the relevant lot. The passage of weeks before the notice was given was not a reasonable time.

[42] In summary, the construction contended for by Kentcade of the meaning of "on" should not be accepted. I prefer the construction contended for by the Mackenzies. There was a breach of the Notice Obligation. The breach of the Notice Obligation was an Event of Default and gave rise to a Put Option Event.

Was there a Form 20a Termination Event?

[43] For there to be a Put Option Event pursuant to clause 4.1(4) there first needed to be "termination of any one or more of the Forms 20a". In other words, there needed to be termination of any one or more of the PAMD Forms 20a between the Mackenzies and Kentcade for all of the Kentcade Lots.

[44] Next, there would not be a Put Option Event if the exception in clause 4.1(4) applied, namely:

> (a) where the termination was required to permit the completion of an arms length sale of one or more of the Kentcade Lots to a third party unrelated to Kentcade; and
> (b) either:
>
> > (i) Kentcade procured the third party to enter into a PAMD Form 20a in the Mackenzies' standard form and terms with the Mackenzies on or before completion of the sale; or
>
> [140518]
> > (ii) no more than two third parties in any 12 month period fail to enter into a PAMD Form 20a in the Mackenzies' standard form and terms with the Mackenzies on or before completion of their purchase.

[45] The Mackenzies allege that nine contracts were completed by Kentcade prior to 15 February 2012, and:

> (a) the act of completing each contract terminated the Form 20a insofar as it applied to each relevant lot;

(b) Kentcade failed to procure entry by any of the purchasers under the Kentcade contracts into a Form 20a with the Mackenzies in the Mackenzies' standard form and terms on or before completion of the sale.

[46] The term "the Seller's standard form and terms" in clause 4.1(4) (which I have described as "the Mackenzies' standard form and terms" for ease of reference) requires some explanation. Part 21 of the Bulk Form 20a contained the following condition:

> "The Client undertakes that in the event of the Property being sold or otherwise transferred, notice will be given of all advance bookings to the buyer or transferee and an undertaking shall be obtained from that buyer or transferee to accept the purchase or transfer subject to the conditions of such advance bookings and such undertaking shall be part of the contract for the purchase or transfer of the Property and the Client indemnifies the Agent against any claim due to non-compliance with this part and against any loss the Agent may suffer due to any such non-compliance."

The Mackenzies' solicitor, Mr Kleinschmidt, who has extensive experience in the law in this area, prepared a new document which his affidavit describes as the Standard Form 20(a) on behalf of the Mackenzies. It included as paragraph 2 of Part 21 what Mr Kleinschmidt describes as "the MIS Exemption Provision" in the following terms:

> "The Client and the Agent acknowledge and agree that the Agent has rights with respect to property that facilitate the use of the strata units in the complex and that should a majority of owners of units in the complex and whom have current letting appointments ('Investors') with the Agent require that those rights be assigned to another person specified by those Investors then the Agent will:
>
> (a) Assign those rights to that person at their market value determined by a qualified independent valuer instructed by the Agent disregarding any special value of the property because it can be used to operate a resort, hotel, motel service department (sic) complex; and
> (b) Give reasonable assistance to enable that person to operate the resort, hotel, motel or serviced apartment complex including making available information concerning and in respect of bookings."

Mr Kleinschmidt explains that the MIS Exemption was incorporated by him into the Standard Form 20a in order to enable the Mackenzies to attract an exemption from the operation of some of the provisions of the Corporations Act 2001 (Cth) dealing with managed investment schemes. On one view of the relevant legislation, it operates to require registration of a managed investment scheme once the letting pool had more than 20 members. If a managed investment scheme is not registered as required by s 601ED, it is liable to be wound up. These provisions did not apply to the letting pool of the resort at the time of entry into the Option Deed because Kentcade owned 41 of the 47 lots. However, Mr Kleinschmidt was concerned that as soon as sales by Kentcade of its lots caused the letting pool to have more than 20 members then s 601ED might apply. A winding up of any scheme constituted by the letting pool had the potential to have a catastrophic impact on the financial affairs of the Mackenzies. Hence the need to obtain an exemption from the operation of the Act. The MIS Exemption Provision was included in the Standard Form 20a in order to attract an exemption under an ASIC Class Order.

[47] The Mackenzies instructed Mr Kleinschmidt to send to the solicitors for Kentcade a Form 20a that included the MIS Exemption Provision, and to tell them that this was the standard Form 20a used by the Mackenzies for the purposes of clause 4.1(4).

On 30 November 2011 Mr Kleinschmidt, acting on those instructions, caused a letter to be sent to the solicitors for Kentcade which enclosed the Standard Form 20a. The letter explained that it was the Mackenzies' "standard form and terms" PAMD Form 20a, including for the purposes of clause 4.1(4)(b)(i) of the Option Agreement. The letter anticipated that the Mackenzies would receive signed copies of the Forms 20a upon the settlement of each sale.

[49] The forms that Kentcade procured from the nine third parties who completed contracts of sale prior to 15 February 2012 were not in this form. Save in respect of one lot (Lot 15) the Form 20a that was signed by the third party was signed after 30 November 2011. In those circumstances, the Mackenzies submit that the Put Option Event provided for in clause 4.1(4) occurred because:

(a) there was termination of "one or more of the Forms 20a"; and
(b) the exception in clause 4.1(4) was not engaged.

[50] Kentcade submits:

(a) there is only one Form 20a, and it was not terminated;
(b) the change in the scope of the Bulk Form 20a arising upon completion of the sale of a lot does not constitute termination of "one or more of the Forms 20a" as it applied to the relevant lot;
(c) what clause 4.1(4) required in the circumstances was not termination of the Mackenzies' authority as it applied to particular lots, but the termination of the Bulk Form 20a.

[51] Next, Kentcade submits, in the alternative, that the circumstances of exemption envisaged in clause 4.1(4) applied with respect of the completion of the nine Kentcade contracts. This submission is advanced on the basis that:

(a) the Form 20a procured was in the form of the Mackenzies' standard form and terms (as appearing in the Bulk Form 20a); and
(b) what the Mackenzies describe as their "standard form and terms" Form 20a does not constitute a "PAMD Form 20a, in the Seller's standard form and terms" within the meaning of clause 4.1(4).

[52] On either basis, Kentcade submits that no Put Option Event under clause 4.1(4) of the Option Agreement has arisen.

The termination issue

[53] Kentcade resists the proposition that the words "any one or more of the Forms 20a" should be construed in circumstances in which the parties were aware that there was only one Form 20a between them (the Bulk Form 20a) as if the words referred to the numerous appointments in respect of each of the Kentcade Lots that were made, as a matter of convenience, in one Form 20a. Its essential submission is that there was only one Form 20a and, as a consequence, clause 4.1(4) was engaged only in the event of "the termination of the entirety of the obligations under a Form 20a". It speculates that the drafter of the Option Agreement may have thought that there were multiple Forms 20a, when in fact there was only one. I find it unnecessary to speculate about what the drafter had in mind, since it is the parties' presumed mutual intention that is relevant in construing the words, and the parties knew that there was only one Form 20a, covering multiple lots and making numerous appointments. The possibility that at some future time there might be a change of circumstances and the parties might enter into more than one Form 20a does not alter the fact that at the time they entered the Option Agreement they knew that there was only one Form 20a document, albeit one which made appointments in respect of numerous separate lots.

[54] Kentcade submits that although the interpretation of clause 4.1(4) urged by it may have unintended consequences, one must interpret the actual words used by the parties, and not read them as if they applied, in effect, to the numerous appointments made by the single form, or as if the single form that was used for convenience was made up of many Forms 20a. According to Kentcade, the opening words of clause 4.1(4) focus upon forms, not lots or appointments, and should be literally interpreted.

[55] This argument has surprising consequences. To take a simple, hypothetical example, if there were three Kentcade lots the subject of a single Form 20a, and one of the lots was sold, on Kentcade's argument, the Form 20a would not be terminated even in respect of the lot that was sold upon completion of the sale contract. The manager would still have obligations to Kentcade in respect of it.

[56] According to Kentcade, the opening words of clause 4.1(4) would be engaged only if it completed a sale of all of the lots. This interpretation is not said to advance any purpose, but is one which is said to be dictated by the words used in the agreement in circumstances in which there is only one Form 20a.

[57] The clause should be construed in circumstances in which the parties knew at the time they entered the Option Agreement that there was a single document, the so-called "Bulk Form 20a", which made numerous appointments in respect of many lots, and the clause addressed the circumstance in which "one or more of the Grantee's lots"[13] might be the subject of a sale to a third party. The clause contemplates the sale of one or more, but not necessarily all, of the Kentcade Lots to a third party.

[58] A PAMD Form 20a appoints a letting agent to perform letting services for an owner in respect of an identified lot. It is required by law.[14] The appointment does not run with the title to the lot. Leaving aside accrued rights and obligations, it ceases to operate upon the completion of a sale of the lot to a third party. The appointment of the agent, and its authority to act with respect to the lot, terminates, unless the agent is appointed by a Form 20a by the incoming buyer. This is the situation addressed by clause 4.1(4) and the word "termination" should be construed to refer to the termination of the agent's appointment upon completion of the sale of a lot.

[59] In the case of a sale by Kentcade of a single lot, the Bulk Form 20a is terminated in respect of that lot upon completion of the sale, but continues to apply to the remainder of the Kentcade Lots. This permits continuity of the Mackenzies' appointment in respect of lots that are still owned by Kentcade, and the obtaining of a Form 20a, if possible, from the new owner of the lot in respect of which the Mackenzies' appointment is terminated.

[60] Kentcade's argument that the Bulk Form 20a is not terminated in respect of the lot that is sold does not give the clause a sensible, business-like interpretation in circumstances in which the parties, as a matter of convenience, used the Bulk Form 20a rather than enter numerous, separate Form 20a documents. On Kentcade's argument the Bulk Form 20a is not terminated in respect of the relevant lot and the parties' obligations continue in respect of a lot that is no longer owned by Kentcade. This would seemingly extend to an obligation on the manager to account for rent and an obligation on the part of Kentcade to pay fees. Such an unreasonable and apparently unintended interpretation of the operation of the clause in the case of the sale of one or more, but not all, of the Kentcade Lots should not be preferred if another interpretation, consistent with the principles of construction is open which gives the clause a practical and apparently intended operation.

[61] The interpretation contended for by the Mackenzies is to be preferred. The clause, by its terms, was not concerned simply with the possibility of the sale of all of the Kentcade Lots, bringing the Bulk Form 20a to an end upon the completion of those sales. It applied to the sale of one or more, but not all, of the lots. In such a case, and in circumstances in which the parties knew there was only one Form 20a (the so-called "Bulk Form 20a"), a sensible interpretation of the clause is to treat the Bulk Form 20a as if it was, in effect, more than one Form 20a, and was inelegantly described as "the Forms 20a" in the opening words of clause 4.1(4). The words "the Forms 20a" should be so understood in circumstances in which the parties contracted on the basis that there was only one Form 20a which governed their relationship and operated as if a Form 20a had been given in respect of each lot to which the Mackenzies were appointed to act. If the Bulk Form 20a was to be treated for the purposes of clause 4.1(4) as if it was only one form then the clause would not have been cast in terms of "the Forms 20a".

[62] If, instead, the Bulk Form 20a is to be treated as a single form for the purpose of clause 4.1(4), then the opening words of the clause should be construed as relating to the termination of the appointment and the authority conferred by the Bulk Form 20a in respect of a lot that is the subject of a sale contract to a third party. Upon the completion of such a sale the Form 20a is terminated in respect of that lot.

[63] It is true that the literal words of the clause relate to the termination of the form, not the termination of an appointment conferred by that form. However, in their context, the words of clause 4.1(4) should be construed to refer to the termination of the authority conferred by the form to let a lot when the sale of one or more of the lots is completed.

[64] The completion of several of the Kentcade Lots terminated the Form 20a (being the Bulk Form 20a) in respect of each of the lots that were sold upon the completion of that sale.

Does the exception in cl 4.1(4) apply?

[65] The Mackenzies allege in respect of the nine Kentcade contracts completed prior to 15 February 2012 that Kentcade failed to procure entry by any of the buyers into a Form 20a with the Mackenzies in the Mackenzies' standard form and terms on or before completion of the sale. Kentcade contests this and says that it procured from each such buyer "a PAMD Form 20a in the Seller's standard form and terms", being the form of the Bulk Form 20a which was the only Form 20a that the Mackenzies had used at that time and was therefore their "standard PAMD Form 20a".

[66] The solicitor for Kentcade explains that until he received the correspondence from the Mackenzies' solicitors dated 30 November 2011, he proceeded on the basis of providing the Form 20a to the purchaser based on the Bulk Form 20a previously used. The Bulk Form 20a was the only form the Mackenzies had used to his knowledge up until the receipt of that correspondence. Upon receipt of the new Form 20a he then used it "for future contracts", being contracts that were issued after 30 November 2011. In respect of contracts which were in the process of being negotiated or executed (and in the case of Lot 15 had been executed by a buyer), no steps were taken to have the buyer enter into the new Form 20a that the Mackenzies' solicitors on 30 November 2011 had described as their "standard form and terms" PAMD Form 20a. As a result, the PAMD Form 20a that was signed by the buyer of each of the contracts of sale which were completed and which were referred to in paragraph 8 of the statement of claim was generally in the form of the Bulk Form 20a.

[67] The Mackenzies' point is that after 30 November 2011, and prior to completion of the relevant contracts, they had a Form 20a which constituted "a PAMD Form 20a, in the Seller's standard form and terms" being the document sent to Kentcade's solicitors on 30 November 2011, and Kentcade did not procure each buyer to enter into this form on or before completion of the sale. The Mackenzies raise other issues about the forms that were obtained by Kentcade, including the fact that in some cases the insurance information sought by Part 11 of the form was not completed.

[68] Kentcade submits that to constitute the Mackenzies' standard form and terms it was not sufficient for the Mackenzies' solicitors to nominate the same as being their "standard form and terms". This simply identified intended standard terms, not a form that had been used so as to become the seller's standard form. I do not accept this argument. A party starting a business can nominate its standard form and terms. From time to time, a party can change its standard form and terms. They may become the party's standard form and terms when they are so described by that party. To be effective they could not be kept a secret. But here the Mackenzies' standard form and terms were notified to Kentcade on 30 November 2011 and, in clear terms, Kentcade was told that this was the Mackenzies' "standard form and terms" PAMD Form 20a, including for the purposes of cl 4.1(4)(b)(i).

[69] The next, and more substantial submission by Kentcade is that the matters relied upon by the Mackenzies in support of the proposition that the PAMD Form 20a forms procured by buyers did not accord with the Mackenzies' standard form and terms are, in the main, about matters in the addendum to the form. On this basis they argue that a failure to provide information sought by the addendum to the Mackenzies' so-called "Standard Form 20a" is not a failure to have the third party "enter into a PAMD Form 20a in the Seller's standard form" within the meaning of the clause. Expressed differently, when the Option Agreement refers to a PAMD Form 20a, in the Mackenzies' standard form and terms, it should not be read as the Standard Form 20a "plus any addendum that the plaintiff might choose to tack on to the end of it". If, and to the extent, the Option Agreement authorised the Mackenzies to specify a "standard" Form 20a, it did not give them license to impose obligations on the buyer outside the scope of the statutorily-prescribed form.

[70] The approved statutory form has a number of parts, ending with Part 8 for signatures. Beneath that part the form allows for "SCHEDULES OR ATTACHMENTS (IF APPLICABLE)". Both the Bulk Form 20a and the form which the Mackenzies nominated as their standard Form 20a on 30 November 2011 contain an addendum. Each addendum is in a form authorised to be used under licence by members of the Queensland Resident Accommodation Managers Association. The Form 20a addendum in this form contains additional parts that deal with matters such as sole agency, bank account details, insurance, presentation of property, agents' responsibilities, clients' responsibilities and acknowledgments, cancellation policy, use of the property by the client, promotions, assignment, charges, commission and in Part 21 "Other Conditions". The addendum concludes with provision for a separate signature and a privacy statement and consent in order to comply with the requirements of the Privacy Act 1988 (Cth).

[71] Kentcade submits that to the extent the addendum goes beyond what is required by s 114 of the PAMD Act and contains additional information not mentioned in the approved form or permitted by s 49 of the Acts Interpretation Act 1954,[15] the addendum is not to be regarded as part of the Form 20a. The consequence is that a failure to provide the information sought by the addendum is not a failure to procure entry into a "PAMD Form 20a, in the Seller's standard form".

[72] The appropriate starting point is the Option Agreement itself and the meaning which should be given to the words "PAMD Form 20a, in the Seller's standard form and terms" in that context. Those words are not necessarily confined to matters which must, pursuant to s 114, be stated in an appointment. In any event, the statutory form contemplates that it might be supplemented with attachments. The status of the addendum relied upon by the Mackenzies in this case does not turn upon the fact that it was headed "Form 20a Addendum" rather than "Attachment".

[73] Section 114(3)(c)(iv) provides that the appointment must state "any condition, limitation or restriction on the performance of the service", and Part 4 of the approved form makes provision for this and states that if the space provided is insufficient additional sheets should be attached to the form.

[74] The terms of cl 4.1(4) and its subject matter serve to limit what the Mackenzies might choose to provide by way of their "standard form and terms". The attempted inclusion of extraneous items that do not relate to their appointment and the performance of the service would mean that such extraneous items could not be described as part of "a PAMD Form 20a, in the Seller's standard form and terms". However, many matters will relate to the appointment and be permitted to be included in an attachment or addendum to the PAMD Form 20a since they bear upon the rights and obligations of the client and the agent in respect of the appointment. Many matters will constitute a "condition, limitation or restriction on the performance of the service" and be required to be stated in the form. Insurance is an example. Both the Bulk Form 20a and the Mackenzies' Standard Form 20a includes as Part 11 a provision that the client must:

> "• maintain a public liability insurance policy for at least $5 million;
> • maintain a policy of insurance for the furniture and effects in the Property;
> • provide to the agent the following details of such insurance …".

These obligations in relation to insurance are not a matter which s 114 specifically prescribes, but are a condition upon which the agent agrees to perform the service. They bear upon the rights and obligations of the client and the agent in respect of the subject matter of the agent's appointment. Accordingly, the Mackenzies' standard form and terms in relation to insurance form part of a PAMD Form 20a.

[75] The position in relation to Part 21 of the form is more contentious. Kentcade submits that these conditions are not a "condition, limitation or restriction" on the performance of the service so as to be required to be stated in accordance with s 114(3)(c)(iv), and fall outside of the contents of a "PAMD Form 20a, in the Seller's standard form and terms".

[76] As to the first paragraph of Part 21, a condition by which the client undertakes in the event of sale to give notice of advanced bookings and to obtain an undertaking from the buyer to honour them is a condition upon which the agent agrees to perform the service. It relates directly to the subject matter of the agreement and is a condition or term which falls within the expression "a PAMD Form 20a, in the Seller's standard form and terms".

[77] The second paragraph in Part 21 provides for circumstances in which a majority of owners of units may require the manager's rights to be assigned to another person. The granting of such rights and the obligation imposed upon the agent to, among other things, give reasonable assistance to enable a new person to operate the resort, including making available information about bookings, relates to the terms of the agent's appointment and the conduct of the service that is the subject matter of the agreement. It confers rights upon the client and other owners affecting the conduct of letting. It is the kind of provision which an owner might seek for their protection, and the provision for assignment constitutes a limitation on the agent's rights in connection with the subject matter of the agreement. In short, it relates to the circumstances under which the agent will not be able to continue to provide the service. It also falls within the terms of cl 4.1(4)(b).

[78] I conclude that the Mackenzies' Standard Form 20a, as conveyed under cover of the letter of 30 November 2011, became the "Seller's standard form and terms" after their contents and status were communicated to Kentcade.

[79] To attract the exception in cl 4.1(4) Kentcade had to procure a PAMD Form 20a in that form from a buyer if it had not already done so.

[80] I leave open, but shall assume in Kentcade's favour that, in procuring the Form 20a signed by the buyer of Lot 15 prior to 30 November 2011 in accordance with the previous form, it fulfilled the requirement of cl 4.1(4)(b)(i). There is a competing argument that, having been notified of the new form, and possibly having not executed the contract, Kentcade was obliged to obtain a further, new Form 20a in respect of Lot 15. However, it is unnecessary to resolve this argument.

[81] In respect of other lots, it did not procure the buyer to enter into a PAMD Form 20a before it was informed of the Mackenzies' Standard Form 20a terms and conditions. It failed to do so. The fact that it subsequently procured buyers to execute a form which was not, and had ceased on 30 November 2011 to be, the Mackenzies' "standard form and terms" does not assist it. If Kentcade wished to attract the exception in cl 4.1(4) it was required to procure the buyer to enter into a form in the Mackenzies' "standard form and terms". After 30 November 2011 Kentcade knew what this form was.

[82] The possibility always existed that the Mackenzies might, at some stage and before a Form 20a had been executed by a buyer, nominate new standard terms and conditions. If Kentcade wished to guard against this possibility and engage the exception in cl 4.1(4) it should have contractually obliged the buyer to execute such a document or, in the absence of a contractual entitlement, requested the buyer to execute such a document.

[83] That the Mackenzies might adopt standard terms and conditions which differed from the contents of the Bulk Form 20a was something which might be expected. For example, the Bulk Form 20a in Part 16 contained no provision for the client or the client's relatives or friends to use the property, subject to availability. Kentcade presumably was content with such a provision. However, the standard forms and conditions introduced after 30 November 2011 in Part 16 provided a period of four weeks for the client's use. The

Mackenzies might have thought that such a provision was attractive to owners and should form part of their standard terms and conditions.

[84] It is unnecessary to address all of the various respects in which the forms that were provided to the Mackenzies are alleged to have failed to reflect their standard terms and conditions. As noted, some of the forms did not complete the section in relation to insurance by naming the insurer and giving a policy number. This information was only provided later, and well after settlement. The better view, it seems to me, is that Part 11 of the form required details of the insurance to be provided as part of the form. A form which failed to include these required details would not be a form which complied with the Mackenzies' standard form and terms, which required these details to be completed on the form.

[85] It is sufficient for present purposes to conclude that in respect of two or more sales, Kentcade failed to procure the buyer to enter into a PAMD Form 20a in the Mackenzies' standard form and terms. It failed to procure entry into that form after 30 November 2011. More than two third parties failed to enter into such a form with Kentcade on or before completion of their purchase. As a result, a Put Option Event pursuant to cl 4.1(4) arose.

The Undertaking Obligation

[86] The Mackenzies contend that in respect of the nine Kentcade contracts completed by it prior to 15 February 2012, Kentcade failed to:

> (a) obtain from the buyer of each Kentcade Lot an undertaking to accept the purchase subject to the conditions of such advance bookings applicable to the lot;
> (b) include such undertaking as a term of each of the Kentcade contracts, > and thereby breached the Undertaking Obligation. Kentcade denies this. Its first submission is that a breach of the Undertaking Obligation is not an event of default. In this regard, it submits that the Undertaking Obligation is contained in the Form 20a and this document is not "associated with" the Option Agreement.

[87] One obstacle to this argument is that Kentcade's defence admitted that the Form 20a is associated with the Option Agreement or the contract to be entered into upon exercise of the Put Option. When this was pointed out during oral submissions, senior counsel for Kentcade in his submissions in reply sought leave to withdraw the admission on the grounds that it was not an admission of fact, related to the construction of a document, but was more in the nature of a concession on a point of law and that withdrawing the admission would not cause the Mackenzies prejudice. An explanation as to why the admission was made was not proffered, but the point only arose late in the hearing and the efficient conduct of the hearing did not justify its prolongation to explore this issue. It is unnecessary to decide whether leave to withdraw the admission should be granted since I conclude that the admission was properly made.

[88] Kentcade submits that, whilst the Form 20a was connected or related to the Option Agreement, it is not "associated with" it. Expressions such as "associated with", "in connection with" and "related to" can bear a variety of meanings, depending upon their context. The word "associated" does not appear to have been used in cl 1.1(16)(b) in any special or technical sense. Kentcade submits that the word "associated", as used in that clause, requires something more than a connection or relation between the Bulk Form 20a and the Option Agreement.

[89] I accept that a passing reference to the Form 20a in the Option Agreement might not be sufficient to mean that the form is "associated with" the Option Agreement. However, there is more than a passing reference to the form. It is pivotal to the Put Option Event provided for in cl 4.1(4). I conclude that the Form 20a is associated with the Option Agreement.

[90] The Mackenzies submit that Kentcade did not comply with the Undertaking Obligation because, first, it did not give notice to the purchaser or transferee of the relevant lot of all advance bookings for that lot. This is apparent because no request for information about those advance bookings was made to the Mackenzies. This alleged breach is not contested. Instead, Kentcade appeared to argue that any such breach was of no consequence because suitably worded undertakings were obtained from the purchasers. However, this does not alter the fact of a breach.

[91] The Mackenzies further argue that they did not receive, on or before the completion date of the Kentcade contracts, any written undertakings on behalf of the purchasers undertaking to be bound by all forward bookings applicable to the relevant lot. The Mackenzies and their solicitors gave evidence that no such undertakings were given on or before completion. Insofar as undertakings were contained in the sale contracts, a complete copy of the contracts was not provided to the Mackenzies or their solicitors prior to 11 September 2012. However, in the case of Units 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, 18 and 24, the conveyancers for those purchases did not wish to have the undertakings referred to in Part 21 of the Form 20a as a term of the written contract for sale. Instead those undertakings were given in correspondence by which the conveyancers acknowledged and confirmed the existence of a collateral agreement.

[92] The obligation in Part 21 of the Form 20a required such undertaking to "be part of the contract for the purchase or transfer of the property". Kentcade submits that this expression is sufficiently broad to comprehend collateral agreements of the kind given here. The collateral agreements recorded in correspondence are said to be enforceable and "part" of the contract for the purchase or transfer of the property.

[93] In my view, the requirement that the undertaking "shall be part of the contract for the purchase or transfer of the property" should be interpreted in its context to require the undertaking to form part of the contract itself, whether this be in the form of a special condition or otherwise. The requirement for the undertaking to be part of the contract, and not simply recorded in correspondence by way of a collateral agreement, was apt to give greater practical assurance to the Mackenzies that such an undertaking would be honoured, without the need for argument as to whether the undertaking had the force of a contractual promise that was enforceable either at the instance of Kentcade or at the instance of the Mackenzies for whose benefit the undertaking was obtained.

[94] I conclude that Kentcade breached the Undertaking Obligation. This amounted to an event of default and gave rise to an additional Put Option Event.

Exercise of the Put Option

[95] The Mackenzies were entitled to exercise the Put Option. There is no dispute that the Put Option was exercised as required and that Kentcade failed to sign contracts in the form of the annexures to the Option Agreement and necessary associated materials. The Mackenzies, as attorney for Kentcade, executed the contracts and associated materials. The contracts which they seek to have specifically enforced came into existence. The Mackenzies remain ready, willing and able to complete them.

[96] There is no dispute that specific performance is an appropriate remedy, and more appropriate than a remedy in damages. The remaining issue is whether an order for specific performance should be declined as a matter of discretion.

Did the Mackenzies exercise the Put Option in breach of an implied obligation of good faith or unfairly?

[97] This matter was raised in argument, but not pleaded. The scope of an implied obligation of good faith in the exercise of an option of the present kind was not extensively argued in the hearing before me. Reference was made to leading authorities and articles on the implied obligation of good faith. Reference was made to the implied obligation of good faith in the context of the exercise of powers. The present context is somewhat different involving the exercise of a Put Option.

[98] In any event, Kentcade argues that, having regard to the purpose of the contract, and the fact that the Mackenzies do not suggest that the Put Option was exercised out of fear for the value of the management rights, I should infer that it was exercised for the purpose of merely realising on their investment at what for other reasons was a convenient time. I decline to draw this inference. It was not put to Mr Mackenzie when he was cross-examined, and Mrs Mackenzie was not cross-examined at all. I decline to find that the Mackenzies' conduct in exercising the option constitutes "exploitative conduct which defeats the purpose for which the contract was made". The option was exercised in circumstances in which the Mackenzies perceived it was in their interest to do so. One of the relevant circumstances is that the completion of the sales will bring Kentcade's interests to a level close to the level at which it will cease to have majority voting rights on the body corporate. The Mackenzies may have a legitimate concern as to the future. In short, Kentcade has not persuaded me that the Mackenzies exercised their rights under the Option Agreement in breach of an implied duty of good faith.

[99] The remaining discretionary ground is unfairness. Reference was made to Blomley v Ryan.[16] However, the present circumstances are far removed from the circumstances of that case.

[100] Kentcade argues that the burdens of management of the complex should not be forced onto it as an unwilling purchaser in the present circumstances, nor should an unwilling manager with no suggested management competence or experience be forced on the owners of units who are not parties to the present proceedings. However, I do not accept that there is any unfairness in the circumstances of the execution of the Put Option, or in the circumstances of the creation of the contracts that are sought to be specifically enforced. It is consistent with equity and good conscience to enforce the bargain reached between the Mackenzies and Kentcade. Kentcade agreed to acquire the management rights in certain circumstances. It is a substantial development corporation. If it lacks the staff or experience to undertake management of the resort, it can appoint suitably qualified managers or attempt to sell the management rights to such persons.

[101] I decline to exercise the discretion not to order specific performance.

Conclusion

[102] The Mackenzies have established at least one Put Option Event. They were entitled to exercise the Put Option, and did so. The contracts should be specifically enforced.

[103] I will hear the parties in relation to a suitable form of order.

THE PROPRIETORS CATHEDRAL VILLAGE BUILDING UNITS PLAN NO. 106957 & ORS v CATHEDRAL PLACE COMMUNITY BODY CORPORATE & ORS

(2012) LQCS ¶90-180; Court citation: [2012] QSC 301

Supreme Court of Queensland

5 October 2012

Conveyancing — By-laws — Management of common property — Commercial car park using common property — Control of exclusive use areas — Where the plaintiffs (the proprietors of Cathedral Village and 24 individual lot owners) carried on the business of a commercial car park in the development at Cathedral Place from 2001 — Where the property on which they were parking was the common property of four schemes — Where the First Defendant adopted by-law 28 in 2008 which created the rights to the common property — Whether the interest in the car park was in fact terminated and whether the court ought to impose a statutory right allowing the plaintiffs to continue using the common property for car parking — Plaintiff's equitable interest in the common property — Mixed Use Development Act 1993 (Qld), s 3, 206, 206A — Property Law Act 1974 (Qld), s 180.

The Cathedral Village development comprised a number of residential and commercial units referable to a number of different bodies corporate. Within the development a car park existed as part of the common property of four separate bodies corporate. The first plaintiff — Cathedral Village — had six car parks as part of its common property within the subject common property.

During the sale of the units, the developer agreed to procure at least 55 car parks for use by Cathedral Village using either "exclusive use easement or some other mechanism". On 29 November 2000, a new by-law 28 was passed by way of resolution without dissent, which attempted to reserve a portion of the common property which was not part of the Cathedral Village Scheme for the lot owners in Cathedral Village. In fact, it was part of the Notre Dame Scheme. Notre Dame did not pass a resolution to give effect to the by-law. The easements granted by Notre Dame also did not mention car parking — they were to allow right of way.

The plaintiffs argued that the by-law was necessary to give effect to the development approval and comply as required. When by-law 28 was subsequently revoked by a comprehensive resolution at an extraordinary general meeting on 28 June 2010, the plaintiffs argued that the resolution did not revoke by-law 28 as only a resolution without dissent could possibly have revoked it.

A number of plaintiffs gave evidence of the fact that they purchased their residential or commercial unit with the expectation of receiving a car park which did not eventuate.

Held: claim dismissed.

1. The plaintiff has an interest in its own common property (that is, the six car parks): [1], [4].

2. The plaintiff may have had a licence (at best) to use the common property car parks of the three other schemes; however, this was terminated: [3].

3. By-law 28 (giving rise to the licence) was revoked by comprehensive resolution under the Mixed Use Development Act 1993 (Qld) — a resolution without dissent was not necessary: [36].

4. The plaintiffs did not have an equitable interest in the car parks comprised of the common property of the three other schemes: [58]–[59].

5. The circumstances of the case did not warrant a statutory right of user under s 180 of the Property Law Act 1974 (Qld) being levelled against the development: [63].

Introduction

[1] The plaintiff, The Proprietors Cathedral Village Building Units Plan No. 106957 ("Cathedral Village"), has been operating a commercial car park in the development known as Cathedral Place in Fortitude Valley, Brisbane since some time in 2001. Cathedral Place is a development with a complex structure, which houses residential and commercial units referable to a number of different bodies corporate. The area of the car park is principally the common property of four of those bodies corporate, including Cathedral Village which has six car spaces there as part of its common property.

[2] A controversy about the provision made for car parking for the owners of units in Cathedral Village through the purported adoption of by-law 28 by the first defendant, Cathedral Place Community Body Corporate ("Cathedral Place CBC"), on 29 November 2000 has led to disputes within and among the members of all the bodies corporate over many years since then.

[3] Cathedral Village's tenure of the area owned by the other bodies is, at best at the moment on the view I have formed, a licence that has been terminated. The questions for me to consider in forming that view were:

> (a) whether Cathedral Village had acquired a legal or equitable interest in the area of the car park beyond its own common property;
> (b) whether any interest in the general area of the car park it may have had has been terminated; and
> (c) whether a statutory right of user should be imposed on the car park land in favour of Cathedral Village or its members.

[4] As will become clear, it is my view that the only interest that Cathedral Village now has in the car park area is the spaces forming part of its own common property. The rights it may have had earlier have been terminated and no statutory right of user should be imposed.

Background

[5] The task of comprehending the evidence will be assisted by reference to a plan of the basement area of the development which was incorporated into the statement of claim and which I have included as a schedule to this judgment. It is also important to become familiar with the parties.

[6] Cathedral Village is the first plaintiff. The remaining 24 plaintiffs hold lots in that body. The first defendant, Cathedral Place CBC, owns common property associated with the whole development in an area of the basement car park known as "CPL4" which is shown on the plan. The development includes a number of separate residential blocks as well as the Cathedral Village section devoted to commercial lots. The residential blocks each consist of separate bodies corporate. Two of those residential bodies corporate, the Proprietors Notre Dame Building Units Plan No. 106912 ("Notre Dame") and the Proprietors Oxford & Cambridge Building Units Plan No. 106905 ("Oxford & Cambridge") are the second and third defendants respectively and also own common property in the area of the car park.

[7] On the plan, the overall area in contention is outlined in yellow and CPL4 is hatched in green. Notre Dame common property is hatched in red, while Oxford & Cambridge's common property, appropriately, is hatched in blue.

[8] Four of Cathedral Village's car parks are hatched in red on the south-west corner of the plan. Another two are located in the basement below this level. Entry to the car park is from Gotha Street, which is at the bottom of the plan. It is controlled through a boom gate adjacent to the words "bollards and chains" at the entrance to the lift shown in the plan. Another entrance to the right is used for access to residential car parks allocated to owners of units in the residential bodies corporate.

[9] Two easements, "R" and "S" are shown on the plan and were registered over the community property of Notre Dame in favour of Cathedral Place CBC for access, defined as "for the purpose of a right of way … which shall include but not be limited to the right to pass up over and along the Servient Tenement." There is also an easement "A" at the entrance to the car park in favour of Cathedral Place CBC given by Cathedral Place Developments Pty Ltd ("CPD"), the company that developed the whole site, again for the purpose of a right of way.

[10] No allocation of car parks was made to the owners of commercial units in Cathedral Village but representations were made to purchasers of those units when the development was created that they would have unallocated car spaces available to them in the area of the car park in a number proportionate to the area of the commercial units bought.

[11] The vendor, CPD, was a development company and a subsidiary of the Devine Limited group of companies. It is not a party to these proceedings. It agreed, when selling units in Cathedral Village, that it would procure the benefit of at least 55 car parks to that body corporate "by either exclusive use easement or other mechanism at the Seller's discretion".[1] CPD's attempt to perform this condition occurred on 29 November 2000 at a meeting of Cathedral Place CBC whose chairman was Mr William Ritchie, then an officer of CPD. He also represented the unit holders of Cathedral Place CBC as all its units were then held by CPD. There was no other person with a vote present at the meeting. The attempt to comply with cl 46 of the contracts with unit buyers in Cathedral Village consisted of the passage by "comprehensive resolution" of a new by-law 28 of Cathedral Place.

[12] There were in existence already 27 by-laws which had been passed as special resolutions and resolutions without dissent. One of them was by-law 25 dealing with car parking for the lot owners and occupiers of the residential units. By-law 25 provided as follows:

"25. VEHICLE PARKING

(a) Purpose

The Body Corporate is responsible for the allocation of the exclusive use of carparking spaces that are either:-

- Located on the Common Property; or
- Located on the Common Property of a subsidiary Body Corporate and subject to an easement in favour of the Common Property.

The purpose of this By-law is to allocate the exclusive use of the carparking spaces.

(b) Allocation

(i) This By-law 25 refers to the Carparking Plans and the Allocation Schedule annexed to these By-laws;
(ii) The Lot Owners and Occupiers for the time being of the lots in the building designated in the Allocation Schedule are allocated exclusive use of the corresponding carparking space listed in the Allocation Schedule and identified in the Carparking Plan.

(c) Effective Date of Allocation

The allocation of the benefit of the exclusive use of the carparking space in this By-law 25 is effective from the date that both:-

(i) The Building Units Plan for the Lot Owners has registered; and
(ii) If applicable, the easement granting the benefit of the carparking space to the Body Corporate has registered.

(d) Swapping Carparking Spaces

Any two Lot Owners may by agreement swap carparking spaced provided that both give notice in writing of the swap to the Body Corporate."

[13] The new by-law 28 adopted on 29 November 2000 provided as follows:

"28. Restricted Community By-law

(a) Application of By-law

This By-law applies to the Visitor Carpark designated on the plan attached to this By-law ('Visitor Carpark'). Part of the Visitor Carpark is Community Common Property and part of the Visitor Carpark is Common Property for the subsidiary body corporate known as

'Notre Dame'. The by-law applies to the portion on the Visitor Carpark that is on Community Common Property. The by-law is intended to apply to that portion of the Visitor Carpark that is Common Property for Notre Dame on registration of an easement from the proprietors Notre [140530]

Dame BUP 106911 granting the benefit of that area to the Community Body Corporate for carparking purposes.

(b) Persons Entitled to use

The persons entitled to use the Visitor Carpark are the Proprietors 'Cathedral Village' 106957 and any person authorized by them, all of whom are individually and collectively referred to as 'Authorised Persons'.

(c) Conditions of Use

The Proprietors Cathedral Village BUP 106957 must ensure that the Visitor Carpark is used:-

(i) only for purposes ancillary to the Mixed Use Development of Cathedral Place;
(ii) in a manner that complies with the by-laws form [sic] time to time for the Cathedral Place Community Body Corporate.

(d) Maintenance

The proprietors 'Cathedral Village' BUP 106957 must maintain the Visitor Carpark in a state similar to the other carparking areas on the common property for the Cathedral Place Community Body Corporate."

[14] The plaintiffs also pleaded in paragraph 45 of the statement of claim that in about July 2000 Mr Ritchie agreed with himself in his capacities as representative of both Cathedral Village and Cathedral Place CBC at the time that:

"(a) The First Defendant would at its cost install a traffic control boom gate, parking ticket dispensing machine and associated equipment at the western Gotha Street entry and exit point for the carpark;
(b) The Plaintiff would, over time and on terms to be agreed, reimburse to the First Defendant the cost of installing the carpark equipment;
(c) The Plaintiff would pay levies imposed by the First Defendant including those calculated by the First Defendant to allow for the cost of carpark operation;
(d) The Plaintiff would manage and maintain the carpark at its cost and risk;
(e) The Plaintiff would receive the income from the parking tickets issued and paid for by users of the carpark."

[15] Such an agreement was not established formally on the evidence although there was some discussion of the facts related to the assertions in Mr Ritchie's evidence.[2]

[16] The plaintiffs argue that by-law 28 was intended to regulate the use of the car park in order to achieve compliance with the development approval for the project which provided, in respect of car parking that the developer should:[3]

"2. Construct/delineate/sign (as required) the following requirements as indicated on the approved plans of layout numbered A2001(4) and A2002(4) each as amended on 14 September 1998:

i. parking on the site not to exceed 556 cars and for the loading and unloading of vehicles within the site;

v. unrestricted access for bonafide (sic) visitors to any visitor car parking bay;

37. Demonstrate how it is proposed to ensure that the designated public parking area on Basement Plan Level B1 will not be used as a public car park for purposes other than ancillary to the approved development.

In particular:

(a) Notices are to be displayed in Basement Plan Level B1 alerting the public that the designated public parking area is for patrons of the retail/commercial area and visitors of residents only;
(b) The on-site Body Corporate Manager is to be responsible to monitor and police the designated area on Basement Plan Level B1 to ensure that it will not be used as a public car park for purposes other than ancillary to the approved development; and
(c) The designated public parking area is to remain as part of the Common Property of the development."

[17] Section 3 of the Mixed Use Development Act 1993 (Qld) ("the MUD Act"), the Act which regulated this [140531] development, defined a "comprehensive resolution" to mean a resolution that has been passed at a properly convened meeting of the body corporate and for which the members that vote in favour have not less than 75% of the voting entitlements recorded in its body corporate roll. It can only be repealed by a comprehensive resolution.[4]

[18] Although by-law 28 purports to deal with the common property of Notre Dame in the car park on registration of an easement from its proprietors, there was no resolution on Notre Dame's part in respect of the by-law. There was controversy also, whether easements "R" and "S" to which I have referred, which were registered later, were intended to be the easement from the proprietors of Notre Dame granting the benefit of that area to Cathedral Place CBC for car parking purposes referred to in by-law 28. The argument focussed on the fact that the easements registered were simply for access as a right of way and not for parking.

[19] At a meeting of Cathedral Place CBC held in June 2001, it was resolved that up to $65,000 be paid by it for the installation of a boom gate and ticket dispenser. One was eventually located on the common property of Notre Dame but was paid for by Cathedral Village and it charges fees for entry to the car park. No account of profits has been sought by the defendants in respect of that income.

[20] At an extraordinary general meeting of Cathedral Place CBC on 28 June 2010 by-law 28 was revoked by a comprehensive resolution but the efficacy of the resolution purporting to revoke the by-law is an issue in these proceedings because the plaintiffs contend that by-law 28 was actually a resolution without dissent which can only be repealed by a resolution without dissent.

[21] It is clear that Mr Ritchie, in passing the original resolution creating by-law 28, regarded it as a means of meeting CPD's obligations under its agreements with purchasers of units in Cathedral Village to procure them the benefit of at least 55 car parks. In his evidence, he agreed that he had a divided loyalty in his capacity as an employee of CPD as well as being the representative of each of the bodies corporate of Cathedral Place.[5] One issue that arose from that evidence was whether there had been a "fraudulent" exercise of the power given to Cathedral Place CBC to control its community property, as that concept is understood in Gambotto v WCP Limited[6] and other decisions, requiring that the by-law be set aside.

[22] There was also an issue about the construction of the by-law, what rights it conferred, and in what circumstances it could be repealed.

[23] A number of the plaintiffs, but by no means all of them, gave evidence that the existence of car parking for their business was highly relevant to their decisions to purchase units in Cathedral Village and necessary for the efficient running of their businesses. There was other evidence that commercial car parks operated nearby that would be able to be used by the unit holders or their employees and that deliveries to the commercial units in Cathedral Village could be made by the use of existing and proposed delivery bays.

[24] In managing the car park, Cathedral Village had caused it to be marked off from the balance of Cathedral Place CBC's community property by the use of chains, bollards and fencing. After the first defendant passed its resolution revoking by-law 28 on 28 June 2010, its committee gave instructions to remove the chains and bollards which had been installed at the eastern end of easement "R" shown on the plan attached. That had the effect of disabling the operation of the car park and enabling users to enter and exit without passing through the boom gate or taking a ticket from the ticket dispensing machine operated by Cathedral Village. The status quo was reinstated, however, by an interlocutory injunction pending the final hearing of this matter.

[25] In addition to the issues related to the meaning and continuing effect of by-law 28, there were issues including whether the plaintiffs or Cathedral Village had a registered interest in the car park or an equitable interest arising from some form of proprietary estoppel and whether a statutory right of user over the car park should be imposed.

[26] It is convenient to deal with the issues in the following order:

(a) What is the proper meaning and effect of by-law 28?
(b) Has by-law 28 been validly repealed?

[140532]

(c) Should by-law 28 be set aside as an abuse of power?
(d) Does Cathedral Village have a registered interest in Cathedral Place CBC's community property?
(e) Do the plaintiffs, or some of them, have an equitable interest in the car park?
(f) Should a statutory right of user under s 180 of the Property Law Act 1974 (Qld) be imposed over the area of the car park?

What is the proper meaning and effect of by-law 28?

[27] To understand the argument about the effect of by-law 28, it is necessary to consider the effect of s 206 and s 206A of the MUD Act. Those sections provide relevantly:

"Community property by-laws

206.

(1) Subject to subsection (5), the community body corporate may, by comprehensive resolution, make by-laws ("property by-laws") for the control, management, administration, use or enjoyment of the community property.
(2) A community property by-law does not have effect until—

(a) the Minister approves the by-law; and
(b) notification of the Minister's approval is published in the gazette.

Restricted community property by-laws
206A.

(1) The community body corporate may make by-laws under section 206 that restrict the use of any part of the community property ("restricted community property") to—

(a) a member of the community body corporate; or
(b) a body corporate created by the registration of a building units or group titles plan; or

(c) a proprietor of a lot created by the registration of a building units or group titles plan; or
(d) a precinct body corporate; or
(e) a member of a precinct body corporate; or
(f) a proprietor of a lot created in a staged use precinct by the registration of a building units or group titles plan; or
(g) a lessee or occupier of a lot within the site; or
(h) someone else while the person is engaged in construction works in the site or in a future development area or subsequent stage.

(2) Despite section 206(1), the by-law may only be made by resolution without dissent.

(5) The by-law that restricts the use of any part of the community property—

(a) must include—

(i) subject to paragraph (c), a description of the restricted community property; and
(ii) details of the persons entitled to use the restricted community property; and
(iii) the conditions on which the persons may use the restricted community property; and

(b) may include—

(i) particulars about—

(A) access to the restricted community property; and
(B) the keeping and supply of any necessary key; and

(ii) particulars of the hours when the restricted community property may be used; and
(iii) provisions about the maintenance of the restricted community property; and
(iv) provisions about imposing and collecting levies from the persons entitled to use the restricted community property; and

(c) need not describe the restricted community property, if—

(i) the by-law prescribes a way of identifying the property; or [140533]

(ii) the by-law authorises a person to identify the property; and

(d) may authorise a person to allocate the use of the restricted community property.

(7) If a person allocates the use of the restricted community property under a by-law mentioned in subsection (5)(d), the person must, as soon as practicable, give the community body corporate details of the persons to whom use of the property has been allocated.

(8) The description and details given to the community body corporate under subsection (6) or (7) are taken to be a by-law made under section 206 when both the description and details are received by the community body corporate.

(9) The community body corporate must give a by-law made or taken to be made under this section to the Minister for approval under section 206 as soon as practicable but not later than 3 months after it is made or taken to be made.

Maximum penalty—50 penalty units.
(10) If the by-law is approved by the Minister, the Minister must give details of the by-law to the registrar of titles as soon as practicable after the Minister approves it.
(11) A by-law made under this section does not have effect until the registrar of titles has recorded details of the by-law on the relevant community plan."

[28] The defendants argue that by-law 28 was made pursuant to s 206 while the plaintiffs' contention was that it was made pursuant to both s 206 and s 206A as a by-law restricting the use of part of Cathedral Place CBC's community property which could only be made by resolution without dissent and only similarly repealed. It is significant that it was proposed and passed as a comprehensive resolution, apparently pursuant to s 206 and given ministerial approval on the same basis.

[29] The defendants also point out that by-law 28 is expressed as the grant of an entitlement to the Cathedral Village proprietors and any person authorised by them to use the car park rather than an attempt to restrict the car park's use. The plaintiffs drew attention, however, to the description in the heading of the by-law "Restricted Community By-law".

[30] The critical feature, to my mind, precluding the resolution from being treated as a restricted community property by-law for the purposes of s 206A is that it does not restrict the use of that part of the community property to the entities listed in s 206A(1). Nor is there any history relied on by the plaintiffs to establish that somebody has been authorised to allocate the use of the property for the purposes of s 206A(5)(c) and (7) of the Act. In fact there was a car parking attendant but it is not clear to me that he has been authorised pursuant to those subsections.

[31] Properly construed, therefore, the by-law does not fall within s 206A. It does not restrict the use to s 206A's nominated classes of people but permits its non-exclusive use by the Cathedral Village proprietors and those they authorised. In that context, as the defendants submitted, it is relevant that by-law 25, in contrast, expressly refers to the allocation of "the exclusive use of the carparking spaces".

[32] There were other persuasive arguments relied on by the defendants, including the fact that the resolution was passed as a comprehensive resolution rather than one without dissent. The happenstance that it was passed without dissent does not mean that it therefore falls within that statutory category which requires a resolution without dissent. One might as well describe a company resolution, notified and passed as a general resolution, as a special resolution simply because it achieved the majority required for a special resolution.

[33] As the defendants submitted, the effect of the plaintiffs' literal interpretation of the statute is that a resolution about a matter which only requires an ordinary resolution, where the resolution is put to the meeting as an ordinary resolution, but passed without a vote against it, would meet the requirements of a "resolution without dissent", which would, in turn, attract the entrenching provision of the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 (Qld). They urged a purposive construction of the Act based on the submission that the legislation reflects an intention that something that is to be put to a meeting as other than an ordinary resolution should be notified as being a special resolution, a resolution without dissent or a comprehensive resolution or a unanimous resolution. That does make sense when one bears in mind that unit holders need to know the category of resolution that is proposed to them to be voted on at a meeting in order to help them to decide whether their attendance is desirable.

[34] The defendants also submitted convincingly that it would be improbable that the by-law was intended to give exclusive use to the visitors' car park to Cathedral Village and any person authorised by it as it could mean that a proprietor of a lot in Cathedral Village would only be able to use the car park if the proprietor first secured authorisation from the Cathedral Village body corporate. Similarly, they argued that it would be improbable that Cathedral Place CBC would be proposing to prevent Notre Dame and Oxford & Cambridge lot owners from using their own common property.

[35] The by-law was not put to the Minister as a by-law made under s 206A or as one which operated to restrict the use of community property. That is significant when one bears in mind that the Minister, when considering whether to approve the by-law, would be taken to address it as a resolution for non-restrictive use of community property only requiring a comprehensive resolution under s 206. It was submitted that the Minister's approval was important and that the way in which the by-law was presented was as one made pursuant to s 206.

[36] In my view, taking into account these matters, the by-law is one passed pursuant to s 206 which can be revoked by a comprehensive resolution, not a resolution without dissent.

[37] If I had formed the view that it was one made pursuant to s 206A the defendants argued persuasively that I should hold it to be invalid because of its failure to meet the requirements of s 206A because it went beyond the categories of permissible exclusive uses under s 206A(1) and gave exclusive use over areas that are not community property such as the common property of Notre Dame, Oxford & Cambridge and Cathedral Village and failed to properly describe the community property in respect of which the restriction of use is imposed.

[38] The latter argument arose because the by-law was said not to identify which area of the car park hatched on a plan said to be attached to it was community property. The by-law registered did not include the plan or, at least, no plan can now be identified as associated with the by-law registered in the Titles Office.

[39] Alternatively, the defendants also argued that if the by-law was validly passed under s 206A then the plaintiffs' actions went beyond what by-law 28 allowed and could not be saved by s 203.

[40] Had it been necessary for me to approach the case on the basis that the resolution had been made pursuant to s 206A, those submissions would have been persuasive but it is clear to me that the resolution was, as it was expressed to be, one made pursuant to s 206.

[41] The defendants also argued that the intention expressed in by-law 28 that it was to apply to that portion of the car park that was common property for Notre Dame had not been realised because no easement had granted the benefit of that area to Cathedral Place CBC "for carparking purposes". Rather, easements "R" and "S" and easement "A" granted rights of way only which did not confer a right to park on the easement.[7]

[42] Mr Perry SC for the plaintiffs argued that, in context, even though there was no express reference to parking in the easement, a right to park on the area of the easement was reasonably necessary for the effective and reasonable exercise and enjoyment of the rights expressly granted and should be implied here. He referred to easements over the common property of other residential bodies corporate to Cathedral Place CBC which, he argued, were also only for the purpose of access but which he submitted had been used for car parking as an example of parallel conduct.

[43] The conclusion does not necessarily follow however as it is clear that reference to material extrinsic to the registered easement to establish the intention or contemplation of the parties is contrary to the principles of the Torrens system.[8] Nor do other decisions relied on by Mr Perry persuade me that he has established that permanent or casual parking on these easements can be characterised as necessarily part of passing and re-passing to and from the dominant property.[9] Factually, also, the easements in the residential car parks do seem to operate as rights of way rather than the use for parking to which easements "R" and "S" have been put. If it were necessary, I would also decide therefore that the condition expressed in by-law 28 regarding the application of the by-law to Notre Dame's common property has not been met.

Has by-law 28 been revoked validly?

[44] On the view I have formed that by-law 28 was passed pursuant to s 206 of the MUD Act it is therefore one which can be revoked by a comprehensive resolution. That occurred in 2010 with the consequence that by-law 28 has not been in force since then.

Should by-law 28 be set aside as a fraud on the power?

[45] Another argument for the defendants was that by-law 28, in purporting to limit the persons entitled to use the "Village Carpark" to the proprietors of Cathedral Village and any person authorised by them, should be set aside. The submission was that Mr Ritchie for CPD preferred his, or its, self interest under the sales contracts to the original lot owners over the duty in the first defendant, Cathedral Place CBC, to discharge appropriately its power to control the use of its community property.

[46] The submission proceeds on the basis that CPD obtained an unauthorised benefit from the exercise of the voting power at the meeting from being able to regard itself as having discharged its contractual obligations to the purchasers of the plaintiffs' lots without regard to the implications for the other bodies corporate as a result of the passage of the resolution. It was asserted that if some resolution was needed to control parking in the visitors' car park then that could have been achieved by ensuring Cathedral Place CBC remained in control of its common property and expended money on installing boom gates and a system for operating the car park for the benefit of all the proprietors, their guests, and visitors.

[47] Rather, the argument went on, CPD illegitimately disposed of the common or community property if, as the plaintiffs contended, they had some kind of exclusive use or control of the visitors' car park. The following features were said to be important:

> "38. …
> (a) no duration was set for the plaintiffs' 'use' of the carpark;
> (b) no fee, charge or rent or other remuneration was stated to be payable by the plaintiff for such use, and the evidence from Mr Gilliland was that no special fee or levy was paid to the body corporate for the use or operation of the car park: only the pro rata proportion of sinking fund and administrative levy;
> (c) no fee, charge rent or other remuneration has in fact been paid by the plaintiffs to the defendants (or any of them);
> 39. On the above facts, the conferral of some sort of entitlement to exclusive use of the 'visitor car park' as contended by the plaintiffs amounted to a gift of that part of the community property of the first defendant (and probably the common property of the second and third defendants); or alternatively, a disposition of that part of the community property of the first defendant."

[48] Although, in his re-examination, Mr Ritchie emphasised the importance to the overall development of maximising the success of the commercial units in Cathedral Village,[10] the defendants' argument was that, if the effect of by-law 28 was to appropriate part of the common property of Cathedral Place CBC and the other defendants then CPD had preferred its interests to those of Cathedral Place CBC illegitimately in a fraud on the power given to Cathedral Place CBC to regulate its common property because the power was used to discharge CPD's obligations to the buyers of units in Cathedral Village.[11] This was partly at least because the rights of unit holders in common property are significant and should not be removed unheedingly or inadvertently to their detriment.[12]

[49] Mr Perry submitted that Mr Ritchie's evidence should be construed as an attempt to balance the respective unit holders' competing interests by reference to the overall success of the development as a mixed use project. He compared it with by-law 25 which gave Cathedral Place CBC the responsibility for allocating the exclusive use of car parking spaces on its common property or on the common property of a subsidiary body corporate and subject to an easement in favour of Cathedral Place's common property and argued that, if by-law 28 was bad, then by-law 25 should also be invalid.

[50] The analogy does not seem appropriate for the reasons advanced by Mr O'Donnell QC for the defendants, namely that by-law 25 merely implements the residents' contractual rights to exclusive use car parks, where by-law 28 deals with use generally. Further, by-law 25 was adopted pursuant to a proposed resolution without dissent under s 206A of the MUD Act which permits the restriction of the use of any part of the community property where the by-law is made by resolution without dissent.

[51] By-law 28, on the other hand, was moved as a comprehensive resolution, requiring a 75% majority to succeed. Although, with Mr Ritchie as the sole person entitled to vote, both resolutions were passed without dissent, the distinction is important as a resolution passed without dissent can only be repealed by a similar resolution passed without dissent as I have already pointed out.[13]

[52] To revert to the question whether there has been a misuse of the power relied on for the creation of by-law 28, one needs to ask whether Mr Ritchie's expressed concerns about the need for Cathedral Village to have car parking to assist the development to "work together in its totality"[14] should be permitted to override Cathedral Place's interest in retaining control of its use of its common property. Having regard to the alternative possibility proposed where Cathedral Place CBC could have remained in control and spent money on installing boom gates for the benefit of all proprietors, their guests, and visitors, no obvious reason springs to my mind to justify an appropriation of its rights.

[53] If the resolution had resulted in the appropriation of Cathedral Place's rights then the result would have been that Mr Ritchie, on behalf of CPD, exercised his power to secure a particular gain for CPD, in apparent discharge of its contractual obligations to the original purchasers of lots in Cathedral Village, which did not arise fairly out of Cathedral Place CBC's power to control its own community property pursuant to s 206 of the MUD Act and would have been able to be set aside.

[54] I should hasten to add that although the law uses the description "fraud on a power" to describe this type of behaviour it is clear that it does not necessarily denote any conduct in the common law meaning of the term which could be properly termed dishonest or immoral. "It merely means that the power has been exercised for a purpose, or with an intention, beyond the scope of or not justified by the instrument creating the power."[15]

[55] Because I have reached the view that Cathedral Place CBC remains entitled to deal with its property itself and has done so effectively by removing by-law 28 at its meeting of 28 June 2010, the occasion to determine whether the licence created by by-law 28 in favour of Cathedral Village was an improper exercise of the power does not arise. If, contrary to the view I have formed, the by-law had the effect of appropriating Cathedral Place CBC's property in the car park, I would have set it aside.

Does Cathedral Village have a registered interest in Cathedral Place CBC's community property?

[56] Another consequence of Mr Perry's argument that by-law 28 was passed pursuant to s 206A was, he submitted, that when its details were recorded on the relevant community plan they created a registered, indefeasible interest in favour of Cathedral Village unlike the situation that applies to a by-law passed pursuant to s 206. It is sufficient therefore, for present purposes, to rely on my conclusion that by-law 28 was an attempt at an exercise of power under s 206 not s 206A.

[57] Section 184 of the Land Title Act 1994 (Qld), as Mr O'Donnell pointed out, also makes indefeasible only the registered proprietor's interest, namely that of Cathedral Place CBC. The right to use its property ostensibly given by the by-law does not amount to a proprietary interest in it and is not registered on the title as such.

Do the plaintiffs or some of them have an equitable interest in the car park?

[58] Nor does the claimed proprietary estoppel arise. Although Cathedral Village has expended money on the car park, it has been reimbursed from its takings from those who park there and did not spend the money on any understanding, express or implied, that it would thereby acquire a proprietary interest in the car park. All that it has ever had was, at best, a licence without an expectation that it or its unit holders would obtain an interest in the land beyond the six car spaces allocated to Cathedral Village.

[59] It was argued that it had, in effect, become entitled to an irrevocable licence in the land by analogy with the discussion in cases such as Pearce v Pearce[16] and Vinden v Vinden.[17] But, in each of those cases, there was an expenditure of money on the assumption that the plaintiff would acquire an interest in the land which is not this case. In my view, there is no entitlement to such a proprietary interest in the car park that would be recognised in equity either in Cathedral Village or in its unit holders.

Should a statutory right of user under s 180 of the Property Law Act 1974 (Qld) be imposed over the area of the car park?

[60] The claim for the imposition of a statutory right of user under s 180 is brought on behalf of all the unit holders in Cathedral Village but not on its part. It appears to be a claim on behalf of each of the second and subsequent plaintiffs for a licence in perpetuity over the whole car park subject only to termination by Cathedral Place CBC by a resolution without dissent. It is not clear in favour of what land the imposition of the licence is sought, but I infer that it is in respect of each lot held by each of those plaintiffs. The section provides relevantly:

"180 Imposition of statutory rights of user in respect of land

(1) Where it is reasonably necessary in the interests of effective use in any reasonable manner of any land (the dominant land) that such land, or the owner for the time being of such land, should in respect of any other land (the servient land) have a statutory right of user in respect of that other land, the court may, on the application of the owner of the dominant land but subject to this section, impose upon the servient land, or upon the owner for the time being of such land, an obligation of user or an obligation to permit such user in accordance with that order.
(2) A statutory right of user imposed under subsection (1) may take the form of an easement, licence or otherwise, and may be declared to be exercisable—

(a) by such persons, their servants and agents, in such number, and in such manner and subject to such conditions; and
(b) on 1 or more occasions; or
(c) until a date certain; or
(d) in perpetuity or for some fixed period;

as may be specified in the order.
(3) An order of the kind referred to in subsection (1) shall not be made unless the court is satisfied that—

(a) it is consistent with the public interest that the dominant land should be used in the manner proposed; and
(b) the owner of the servient land can be adequately recompensed in money for any loss or disadvantage which the owner may suffer from the imposition of the obligation; and
(c) either—

(i) the owner of the servient land has refused to agree to accept the imposition of such obligation and the owner's refusal is in all the circumstances unreasonable; or
(ii) no person can be found who possesses the necessary capacity to agree to accept the imposition of such obligation.

…"

[61] The jurisdiction is used normally in cases where the relevant land has no or limited legal access available for rights of way or utilities. In determining whether it is reasonably necessary in the interests of effective use in any reasonable manner of the dominant land, the relevant principles have been summarised as follows:[18]

"[23] The applicant usefully and accurately summarised the relevant principles on this issue as follows:

(a) One should not interfere readily with the proprietary rights of an owner of land.
(b) The requirement of 'reasonably necessary' does not mean absolute necessity.
(c) What is 'reasonably necessary' is determined objectively.

(d) Necessary means something more than mere desirability or preferability over the alternative means; it is a question of degree.

[140538]

(e) The greater the burden of the imposition that is sought the stronger the case needed to justify a finding of reasonable necessity.
(f) For a right of user to be reasonably necessary for a development, the development with the right of user must be (at least) substantially preferable to development without the right of user.
(g) Regard must be had to the implications or consequences on the other land of imposing a right of user."

[62] It is not a remedy apt to be applied to enforce the creation of a car park for the holders of units in a particular part of a development such as this over the community property of another body corporate in the same development for what appears to be a claim to permit the unit holders to park permanently. The defendants made a number of submissions which appear to me to be insuperable, namely:

(a) the section is not designed to assist in creating a licence or lease over land for exclusive car parking rights;
(b) the evidence does not establish that it is reasonably necessary for the effective use of the units that such a right be imposed over the car park, rather only some of the unit holders gave evidence that it was highly desirable for the businesses they ran from their units to have convenient car parking;
(c) as to that factual issue the defendants argued that the evidence of the existence of delivery bays on the property and a proposal by Cathedral Place CBC to pass a new by-law permitting deliveries within the car park to the units in Cathedral Village and creating additional delivery bays as well as the evidence of the availability of other commercial car parks nearby made the issue one not of reasonable necessity but simply convenience of the unit holders;
(d) no evidence established that it was consistent with the public interest[19] to use the car park in the manner proposed, as opposed to the interests of the individual unit owners;
(e) the development approval required the area to be used for patrons of the retail/commercial area and visitors of residents only, not for use by proprietors of units exclusively;
(f) no evidence was led to show that there had been an unreasonable refusal by Cathedral Place CBC to agree to accept the imposition of such an obligation pursuant to s 180(3)(c), having regard to the wish of that body to maintain access to the car park for other unit holders in it, the other bodies corporate and visitors;
(g) the imposition of the obligation would be inconsistent with the legislation governing the community property of Cathedral Place CBC and the common property of the other defendants by which those bodies corporate are obliged to manage their common or community property for the benefit of their members, rather than surrendering its control to the members of Cathedral Village.

[63] It also seemed to me to be inappropriate to use this remedy in this situation where the legislature has already created a complex statutory scheme for the regulation of bodies corporate. Decisions dealing with car parking are are intended to be made pursuant to those relevant statutes and the bodies corporate have been empowered to deal with community property in precisely regulated circumstances. For these reasons it would be quite inappropriate to use the remedy provided by s 180 in favour of those plaintiffs.

Conclusion

[64] Although one can sympathise with the unit holders in Cathedral Village for not having obtained what they were promised by CPD, it is not open to them to seek to obtain what they were promised by attempting to prolong the revocable licence given by the original passage of by-law 28 by Cathedral Place CBC.

Orders

[65] I propose to dismiss the claim and make orders in terms of paragraphs 37(a), (b), (d), (e), and (h) and 38(a) and (b) of the counterclaim subject to further submissions as to the form of the orders and costs.

Queensland Court of Appeal

Judgment delivered on 18 March 2011

Community schemes — Contract for sale dispute — Changes were subsequently made to the special conditions after contract had been signed by purchaser — purchaser subsequently purported to terminate the contract asserting, inter alia, that he did not sign the warning statement again (or sign a new warning statement) when the vendor made the changes and thus the consumer protection provisions of s 366B(4) or 366D(3) of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 (as these sections existed at the time, now s 368A(2)(b) and (c)) were not complied with — Trial judge was correct in finding that the purchaser's purported termination of the contract (on the grounds of s 366B or s 366D of the Act not being complied with) was invalid.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Queensland Supreme Court (Martin J) reported at Fletcher v Kakemoto [2010] QSC 219.

In April 2007, the appellant purchaser was in the vicinity of an apartment complex and noticed that the penthouse apartment was for sale. The vendor was the first respondent in these proceedings. The purchaser informed the vendor's estate agent that he was interested in making an offer of $8.5 million to purchase the apartment. The estate agent advised the purchaser that it was essential that the "cooling-off period" be waived when making any offer.

The estate agent then prepared the necessary documentation so that the purchaser could make the offer. The estate agent handed the purchaser the documentation, explaining relevant parts. Before the purchaser signed the contract, he signed the warning statement.

Some changes were subsequently made to the special conditions of the contract on 13 April 2007. The changes were explained to the purchaser by the estate agent and the purchaser initialled those parts of the document which had been amended. The purchaser's attention was again drawn to the same warning statement. The certificate from the purchaser's solicitor regarding the waiving of the cooling-off period was also given at this time.

A second round of changes was required by the vendor. They were duly inserted into the contract and were again initialled by the purchaser. The vendor then signed the contract for the first time.

The purchaser subsequently purported to terminate the contract asserting, inter alia, that he did not sign the warning statement again (or sign a new warning statement) on 13 April 2007 when the vendor made the changes and thus the consumer protection provisions of s 366B(4) or 366D(3) of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 (as these sections existed at the time) had not been complied with.

The trial judge determined that the alterations made to the proposed contract were not such as to constitute a new contract, necessitating the re-signing of the warning statement. In reaching this decision, the trial judge noted that there was no offer made by the purchaser and counter-offer made by the vendor. Even though the document was prepared by the vendor's real estate agent (and was then subject to some further changes), it still amounted to an offer being made by the purchaser. The trial judge categorised the changes as minor in nature, being made for the purpose of "tidying up" the proposed contract in a form which could be put to the vendor.

On appeal, the purchaser asserted that the trial judge erred in finding that the changes to the contract were insignificant. The purchaser noted that one amendment imposed an obligation on the purchaser to bear the outgoings on the property from the date of his taking possession of the property (rather than from the settlement date as per the draft contract). This change would have added an additional $23,000 to the balance of the purchase money on settlement for adjustments to rates, land tax and body corporate levies. As such, the amendment constituted a significant alteration to the contract such that there was a second proposed relevant contract warranting a further warning statement to be signed by the purchaser.

It was also argued by the purchaser that because the real estate agent had delivered the documents signed by the purchaser to the vendor, the purchaser had at that time, made an offer. The amendments that followed were therefore the vendor's.

Held: Appeal dismissed.

1. The trial judge was correct in finding that the purchaser's purported termination of the contract (on the grounds of s 366B or s 366D of the Act not being complied with) was invalid. However, the trial judge's consideration of whether the course of negotiations between the parties resulted in there being a counter-offer was irrelevant. It was also not necessary to examine whether the nature of the alterations to the contract were material.

The trial judge's approach failed to have proper regard to the purpose of the warning statement provisions. The purpose of the warning statement provisions was not to provide a caution to the proposed buyer as to any particular term of a proposed relevant contract or alteration that might be made to its terms, but to ensure (inter alia) that all proposed relevant contracts include consumer protection information.

2. Once it was accepted that bringing the warning statement to the proposed buyer's attention was the object of the provisions, then that object was achieved in circumstances such as occurred in this case by having the warning statement attached to the front of the unsigned draft contract and drawn to the purchaser's attention and signed before the final contractual offer document was signed. The making of amendments to the contract document before it was submitted to the vendor for acceptance did not detract from the fact that the warning statement had been drawn to the attention of the purchaser.

3. The view above accords with the 2010 amendments to the Act which make it clear that a proposed relevant contract does not become another proposed relevant contract merely because, as a result of negotiations, the terms and condition of the proposed relevant contract change (provided the property and parties remain the same).

As per McMurdo P

4. In any case, the purchaser was wrong in asserting that the changes to the contract were significant when considered in the context of an $8.5 million sale. The changes were of the fine-tuning kind which are commonly made when parties negotiate the final terms of a contract for the sale of residential property.

Editorial comment: The interesting point to this case decision is the Court of Appeal clearly expressed that the Doolan v Rothmont Projects Pty Ltd [2010] QSC 193 decision was wrongly decided by the Supreme Court and should not be accepted as good law. The trial judge's approach in following the approach in Doolan was wrong (ie whether the course of negotiations between the parties resulted in there being a counter-offer was irrelevant). The Court of Appeal determined that the correct approach is to give effect to the object of the Act, which is to draw the attention of the purchaser to the warning statement before the final contractual offer document was signed.

Margaret McMurdo P: The appellant, Brian Fletcher, entered into a contract with the first respondent, Akeo Kakemoto, for the sale of the penthouse in the Q1 apartment building, Surfers Paradise, for $8.5 million on 13 April 2007. Settlement was due "on or before 9 months from the contract date". Mr Fletcher purported to terminate the contract on 14 January 2008. He contended he was entitled to do so under s 367 Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 (Qld)[1] because of non-compliance with s 366B(4) and s 366D(3), contained in Ch 11 (Residential Property Sales) of that Act.[2]

2. I agree with Philippides J's reasons for refusing this appeal with costs, but add a brief observation in case our construction of Ch 11 is wrong.

3. Philippides J has set out the relevant statutory provisions.[3] On 9 April 2007, Mr Fletcher signed both a proposed contract for the purchase of the penthouse and a Ch 11 warning statement. The primary judge found this was "a proposed relevant contract" under Ch 11. A few days later, on 13 April 2007, the parties executed a contract for the sale of the penthouse. It is not disputed that this contract was "a relevant contract" under Ch 11. There were variations between the proposed contract of 9 April 2007 and the relevant contract executed on 13 April 2007. These changes, as the primary judge recognised and as is clear from Philippides J's reasons,[4] were not significant, especially in the context of an $8.5 million sale. The relatively minor changes were of the fine-tuning kind, common as parties negotiate the final terms of a contract for the sale of residential property. These relatively minor changes between the proposed contract of 9 April 2007 and the relevant contract executed on 13 April 2007 were not such as to make the proposed contract of 9 April 2007 something other than "a proposed relevant contract" within the meaning of that phrase in s 366B; s 366D and s 367 of the Act. If this Court is wrong, and Doolan v Rothmont Projects Pty Ltd[5] is rightly decided, the primary judge correctly distinguished it from the present case.

4. I agree with the orders proposed by Philippides J.

Chesterman JA: I agree with the orders proposed by Philippides J and with her Honour's reasons for making those orders.

Philippides J: On 13 April 2007 the appellant, Mr Brian Fletcher, as purchaser, entered into a contract with the first respondent, Mr Akeo Kakemoto, as vendor, for the sale of an apartment in the Q1 building at the Gold Coast ("the property") for $8,500,000. The sale was a "unit sale" within the meaning of that term in the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 ("the Act"). On 14 January 2008 Mr Fletcher purported to terminate the contract pursuant to s 367 of the Act.

7. The issue of whether Mr Fletcher had validly terminated the contract by reason of alleged non-compliance with s 366B(4) and s 366D(3) of the Act was ordered to be tried as a preliminary matter.

Background facts

8. On 9 April 2007, Mr Fletcher attended at the offices of the second respondent, Lucy Cole Prestige Properties Paradise Waters Pty Ltd and spoke to its principal, Ms Lucy Cole, indicating that he wanted to make an offer to purchase the property for $8,500,000. Ms Cole instructed an employee to prepare the relevant documentation so that Mr Fletcher could do so. Mr Fletcher was handed a bundle of documents by Ms Cole which included:

> (a) an unsigned and undated copy of a contract for the sale of the property ("the 9 April proposal");
> (b) a two-page "PAMD Form 30c" document ("the warning statement"); and > (c) a one-page document headed "The Buyer/The Seller" ("the first buyer's acknowledgment").

9. The trial judge set out the factual background from the time of the 9 April 2007 meeting to the signing of the contract as follows:

[140316]

"[Mr Fletcher] in his written submission stated that he was in agreement with all of the events around the meeting of 9 April as stated in the affidavit of Lucy Cole. At that time there was only one affidavit from Ms Cole (dated July 2008), in which she said that:

> (a) she, Mr Fletcher and Mr Blunt of her office discussed matters including the terms on which Mr Fletcher would be prepared to make an offer to purchase the property;
> (b) she told Mr Fletcher that it was essential that the 'cooling-off period' be waived when making any offer as the auction of the property was set to proceed on 15 April;
> (c) [Mr Fletcher] said that he would leave his offer open until 5 pm on Friday (13 April), was prepared to waive the cooling-off period and would get the necessary solicitor's waiver form by Friday;
> (d) she took [Mr Fletcher] through the bundle of documents referred to above, document by document;
> (e) she directed [Mr Fletcher's] attention to the warning statement, the information sheet and the disclosure statement; and > (f) [Mr Fletcher] then signed documents including the warning statement under the Act. It was signed by Mr Fletcher before he signed the proposed contract.

In her affidavit of July 2008 Ms Cole said that between 10 April and 12 April [Mr Fletcher] kept coming back to her office asking whether there was any news about the contract. She told him that there were some changes being made to the special conditions and would advise him as soon as she had further details. On the morning of Friday 13 April a document from Mr Fletcher's then solicitors was sent to Ms Cole's office. That document demonstrated that [Mr Fletcher] had received the appropriate advice about waiving the cooling-off period and that he did, in fact, waive the cooling-off period.

At 3.30pm on 13 April [Mr Fletcher] arrived at the premises of the third party to go through the proposed changes to the offer. Ms Cole took [Mr Fletcher] through the documents, explained them to him, and he initialled those parts of the documents which had been changed. There were no changes to the warning statement under the Act but Ms Cole deposes and, in the absence of any cross-examination of her on this or any other point, I accept that she drew [Mr Fletcher's] attention to the warning statement under the Act.

After that some further changes were sent from the lawyers for the vendor and they were inserted into the proposed contract and were again initialled by [Mr Fletcher].

Ms Cole met with the vendor and his solicitors at 4.30pm and the vendor signed and initialled the documents. By 14 May, [Mr Fletcher] had paid the sum of $850,000 as the deposit. Settlement of the contract was due to take place on or before 9 months from the contract date.

On 14 January 2008, the then solicitors for [Mr Fletcher] wrote to the solicitors for the vendor in the following terms:

> 'We are instructed that section 366B(4) of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 was not complied with, in that our client's attention was not directed by your client or your client's agent to the information sheet and any disclosure statement.
>
> On that basis we are instructed and do terminate the contract pursuant to section 367(2).
>
> Please have your client refund the deposit within fourteen (14) days.'"

The trial judge's decision

10. The primary issue raised before the trial judge by Mr Fletcher concerned the fact that, while he signed the warning statement on 9 April, he did not sign the same or another warning statement on 13 April. It was contended that the Act required that he sign the statement again, notwithstanding having signed one on 9 April. The respondents disputed that proposition, submitting that the contract signed by Mr Fletcher on 13 April was, in all relevant respects, the document signed by him on 9 April.

11. In considering this issue, the trial judge referred to the statements made by Mr Fletcher and Ms Cole at their meeting on 9 April and made the following observations:

> "It is important to note that [Mr Fletcher] then became aware that the 'cooling-off period' had to be waived when making any offer. That was accepted by him and, as I have recorded above, the relevant solicitor's certificate with respect to waiving the cooling-off period was received on the morning of 13 April. It was, then, at that point that an offer could begin to be made. I accept that the documents signed on 9 April were not presented to [Mr Kakemoto] until late on the afternoon of 13 April. In the period before the presentation of those documents on 13 April a number of changes were suggested by an employee of Hickey Lawyers (Mr Boseljevic), who were acting for Mr Kakemoto."

12. The learned judge commented on the changes made at Mr Boseljevic's suggestion as follows:

> "(a) Page 6 of the reference schedule. He made some minor changes to the reference to the certificate of title, the time for payment of the deposit, some body corporate information, and some information concerning insurance. All of these were contained elsewhere in the documents which constituted the bundle signed by Mr Fletcher. Those changes made no difference to the terms of the contract.
> (b) Page 7. He inserted the words 'from the contract date' after the words 'on or before nine months' with respect to the date for settlement. That change would have been a necessary implication in the contract.
> (c) Page 8. He deleted Special Conditions 5, 6 and 7, and renumbered 8 and 9 so that they became Special Conditions 5 and 6. Clause 5 was irrelevant as it was a subject to finance clause and the contract was not of that type. The former clauses 6 and 7 were reworded and inserted in annexure 'A'. They had the same effect and more precisely represented the intentions of [Mr Fletcher].
> (d) He replaced the words 'PAMD 30(c)' with the words 'cooling-off period' in renumbered Special Condition 5, which was consistent with the intention of [Mr Fletcher].
> (e) He drafted page 9 in order that clauses 6 and 7 might be more clearly understood. The effect of those provisions was the same as those which had appeared earlier in the contract."

13. The trial judge noted that later on 13 April a further change was made by Mr Boseljevic with respect to the licence fee to be paid and concluded that those changes would have been implied in the contract had they not otherwise been inserted. There was one further late change with respect to the responsibility of Mr Fletcher for the consumption of electricity from the date of possession. His Honour observed that that "was inserted but would have been the case, in any event, from the terms of the contract for residential lots in the Community Titles Scheme".

14. The trial judge observed that on 13 April, as mentioned, Ms Cole took Mr Fletcher through all the documents again and Mr Fletcher initialled the changes to the proposed contract (his attention having been drawn to the warning statement made under the Act, the agent's disclosure statement, the pre-signing acknowledgement, and the disclosure statement under the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997). His Honour further noted that thereafter, the documents were presented for the first time to Mr Kakemoto, who then signed the contract and initialled the appropriate places in that document. Mr Fletcher was then provided with the documents and his attention drawn to the warning statement as required by the Act.

15. In respect of Mr Fletcher's argument that the alterations made to the proposed contract were such that it was in fact a new contract, the trial judge noted that he had dealt with a similar submission in Doolan v Rothmont Projects Pty Ltd [2010] QSC 193. His Honour, however, distinguished Doolan stating:

> "The difference in that case, though, was that the prospective purchasers made an offer which was responded to by the vendor with a counter-offer. In other words, the vendor had received and considered the offer, assessed it as being inadequate in some respects, and proposed a different contract. That is not what occurred here. It was clear to Mr Fletcher that until the > certificate from a solicitor about the waiving of the cooling-off period was obtained, the vendor would not consider his offer. After that certificate was obtained he accepted and initialled changes which had been suggested. He need not have done so. It was his offer. Unlike the position in Doolan, the vendor had not considered his proposal and had not made a counteroffer. The circumstances which played out on 13 April are such that they should be categorised as, in the main, a 'tidying up' of the proposed relevant contract in a form which could be put to the vendor. Even though the document was prepared by the vendor's real estate agent (and then subject to some further changes) it still amounts to an offer being made by [Mr Fletcher]."

16. In rejecting Mr Fletcher's submission, his Honour further stated that:

> "The major aim of the warning statement provisions in the Act is to bring them to the attention of a prospective purchaser. That statement must be signed before any proposed relevant contract is signed. That does not mean, though, that a prospective purchaser is required to sign a new warning statement or resign the original warning statement on each occasion that the purchaser makes any changes to a proposed relevant contract before it is submitted to a vendor."

Notice of Appeal

17. The appellant seeks a declaration that he has lawfully terminated the contract pursuant to s 367 of the Act and an order that the sum of $850,000 be paid to him pursuant to s 367(8).

18. The grounds of appeal as outlined in the Notice of Appeal are:

> # the learned judge erred in finding that there was one proposed relevant contract (within the meaning of that term as used in s 366 of the Act), and ought to have found that there were two proposed relevant contracts.
> # the learned judge made his decision on points that were not introduced or argued by the parties, breaching the rules of natural justice.
> # the learned judge erred in finding that it was only after the receipt of the relevant solicitor's certificate with respect to waiving the cooling off period on the morning of 13 April that an offer by Mr Fletcher could begin to be made. This was said to be contrary to the evidence of Ms Cole that she met Mr Kakemoto on 10 April 2007 to go through the offer documents, although he was unwilling to sign them until he met with his lawyers.

the learned judge erred in finding that the changes suggested by Mr Boseljevic to clauses 6 and 7 had the same effect and more precisely represented the intention of Mr Fletcher because as stated in the Notice of Appeal:

> "Clause 8.2 The introduction of a licensing agreement to replace the rental offer materially altered the rights and positions of the parties.
>
> Clause 8.3 (a and b). The requirement that [Mr Fletcher] accept the condition of the building in the condition at the date and make no claim. (There were in fact significant problems with the air conditioning and pool heating discovered on inspection after the 13th April).
>
> Clause 8.3 (e). The vendor required variable outgoings in addition to the rent offered in the first offer, the amount of which would have been in the region of a further $22,000."

Notice of Contention

19. The respondents sought an extension of time to file a Notice of Contention (which being unopposed was granted). The respondents thereby contended that the decision of the trial judge should be affirmed on the following alternate basis:

> "For the purpose of s 366D(3) of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000, a draft contract to which a warning statement is attached when the warning statement is signed remains the same proposed relevant contract notwithstanding alterations to the terms of the draft contract provided that the identity of the seller and purchaser and the identity of the land remain unchanged."

[140319]

Submissions

20. Mr Fletcher's submission before the trial judge was that the alterations made to the draft contract were such that it became a new or further proposed relevant contract requiring the warning statement to be signed again. As the respondents submitted, it appears that the learned judge understood this argument to have two aspects. One was that the terms of the offer contained in the document changed between 9 April and 13 April 2007 so that the document could not be regarded as the same proposed relevant contract. The other aspect was that the alterations to the terms were made at the instruction of the solicitors for Mr Kakemoto and, although this was not clearly articulated by Mr Fletcher, the learned primary judge took this as involving a submission that Mr Fletcher had made an offer which had been rejected and that Mr Kakemoto had made a counter-offer.

21. Mr Fletcher's arguments on the hearing of the appeal addressed both aspects.

22. As to the first aspect, Mr Fletcher submitted that the alterations to special condition 7 by the insertion of a new special condition 8 were significant alterations in that the consequence of the amendment was to impose an obligation on him to bear the outgoings on the property from the date of his taking possession of the property (rather than from the settlement date in accordance with clause 2.6(1) of the draft contract). The result was to add a sum of some $23,000 to the balance of the purchase money on settlement for adjustments to rates, land tax, and body corporate levies. Mr Fletcher contended that it was incorrect to claim that the special condition 8.3 would therefore be implied. He submitted that the amendment constituted a significant alteration to the contract such that there was a second proposed relevant contract warranting a further warning statement to be signed by him.

23. As to the second aspect, his contention was that, because Ms Cole delivered the documents signed by him to Mr Kakemoto on 10 April 2007, Mr Fletcher had, at that time, made an offer (notwithstanding the evidence that Mr Kakemoto was not prepared to consider any offer until the cooling-off period had been waived). The amendments that followed therefore were those of Mr Kakemoto. Dealing with this issue, counsel for Mr Kakemoto contended that what occurred should not be seen in terms of offer and counter-offer, but rather variations to an offer made by Mr Fletcher.

24. The respondents contended that the learned primary judge was correct in his observations concerning the issues of whether there had been an offer followed by a counter-offer and also as to whether the amendments made to the contract document simply gave expression to the unexpressed, but nevertheless held, intentions of the parties so as not to constitute variations. Nevertheless, they acknowledged that such an approach to the question of whether a proposed relevant contract became a different proposed relevant contract was one fraught with difficulties. The respondents' primary submission therefore was to urge the construction of s 366D(3) put forward in the Notice of Contention and to argue against an approach which analysed the issue of whether a proposed relevant contract became a new relevant contract by reference to the nature and course of negotiations and the materiality of alterations made to the terms of the proposed contract. It is convenient to deal firstly with that matter.

25. A starting point in considering the proposition raised in the Notice of Contention is the purposes and structure of Chapter 11 of the Act. The purposes of Chapter 11 are set out in s 363:

"363 Purposes of ch 11

The purposes of this chapter are—

(a) to give persons who enter into relevant contracts a cooling-off period; and
(b) to require all proposed relevant contracts or relevant contracts for the sale of residential property in Queensland to include consumer protection information, including a statement that a relevant contract is subject to a cooling-off period; and
(c) to enhance consumer protection for buyers of residential property by ensuring, as far as practicable, the independence of lawyers acting for buyers." (emphasis added)

[140320]

Central to the implementation of the purposes stated in Chapter 11 of the Act is Part 2 which concerns the giving of a warning statement. A "warning statement" is defined in s 364 as a statement in the approved form that includes the information mentioned in s 366D(1). The manner in which a warning statement is required to be given depends upon the way in which a proposed relevant contract is given to a proposed purchaser. The provisions of s 366B, which applied in the present case provide:

"366B Warning statement if proposed relevant contract is given in another way

(1) This section applies if a proposed relevant contract is given to a proposed buyer or the proposed buyer's agent for signing in a way other than by electronic communication.
(2) The seller or the seller's agent must ensure that the proposed relevant contract has attached a warning statement and, if the proposed relevant contract relates to a unit sale, an information sheet with the warning statement appearing as its first or top page and any information sheet appearing immediately after the warning statement.

(4) If the seller or the seller's agent hands the proposed relevant contract to the proposed buyer, the seller or the seller's agent must direct the proposed buyer's attention to the warning statement and, if the proposed relevant contract relates to a unit sale, the information sheet and any disclosure statement.

Note—

A contravention of this subsection is not an offence. Under section 366D(3), in the circumstances of this subsection a warning statement is of no effect unless it is signed by the buyer.

(5) Subsection (6) applies if the seller or the seller's agent gives the proposed relevant contract to the proposed buyer or the proposed buyer's agent in a way other than by handing the proposed contract to the proposed buyer or the proposed buyer's agent.
(6) The seller or the seller's agent must include with the proposed relevant contract a statement directing the proposed buyer's attention to the warning statement and, if the proposed relevant contract relates to a unit sale, the information sheet and any disclosure statement.

Maximum penalty — 200 penalty units.
(7) It is a defence to a prosecution for an offence against subsection (3) or (6) for the seller or the seller's agent to prove that the seller or the seller's agent gave notice to the proposed buyer or the proposed buyer's agent under section 366C." (emphasis added)

27. The contents of a warning statement and the prerequisites for its effectiveness are set out in s 366D:

"366D Content and effectiveness of warning statements

(1) The warning statement for a proposed relevant contract or relevant contract must include the following information—

(a) the relevant contract is subject to a cooling-off period;
(b) when the cooling-off period starts and ends;
(c) a recommendation that the buyer or proposed buyer seek independent legal advice about the proposed relevant contract or relevant contract before the cooling-off period ends;
(d) what will happen if the buyer terminates the relevant contract before the cooling-off period ends;
(e) the amount or the percentage of the purchase price that will not be refunded from the deposit if the relevant contract is terminated before the cooling-off period ends;
(f) a recommendation that the buyer or proposed buyer seek an independent valuation of the property before the cooling-off period ends;
(g) if the seller under the proposed relevant contract or relevant contract is a property developer, that a person who suffers financial loss because of, or arising out of, the person's dealings with a property developer or the property

developer's employees can not make a claim against the claim fund.
(2) A statement purporting to be a warning statement is of no effect unless the words on the statement are presented in substantially the same way as the words are presented on the approved form.

(3) If the seller or the seller's agent hands a proposed relevant contract to the buyer for signing, a warning statement is of no effect unless the buyer signs the warning statement before signing the proposed relevant contract.
(4) If a proposed relevant contract is given to the buyer for signing and subsection (3) does not apply, a warning statement is of no effect unless the buyer signs the warning statement.
(5) For subsection (3), the buyer's signature on the warning statement is taken to be proof that the buyer signed the warning statement before signing the proposed relevant contract unless the contrary is proved." (emphasis added)

28. Section 365 sets out the circumstances in which the parties to a relevant contract will be bound. It relevantly provides:

"365 When parties are bound under a relevant contract

(1) The buyer and the seller under a relevant contract are bound by the relevant contract when—

(b) for a relevant contract relating to a unit sale—the buyer or the buyer's agent receives the warning statement, the information sheet and the relevant contract in a way mentioned in subsection (2A).

(2A) For a relevant contract relating to a unit sale, the ways are—

(c) by being handed or otherwise receiving the documents mentioned in paragraph (a)(ii), (iii) and (iv) other than by electronic communication, if—

(i) the warning statement and the information sheet are attached to the relevant contract with the warning statement appearing as the first or top page of the document and the information sheet appearing immediately after the warning statement; and
(ii) the seller or the seller's agent directs the attention of the buyer or the buyer's agent to the warning statement, the information sheet and the relevant contract.

(3) Without limiting how the buyer may withdraw the offer to purchase made in the contract form, the buyer may withdraw the offer at any time before being bound by the relevant contract under subsection (1) by giving written notice of withdrawal, including notice by fax, to the seller or the seller's agent.

(5) If a dispute arises about when the buyer and the seller are bound by the relevant contract, the onus is on the seller to prove when the parties were bound by the relevant contract.
(6) In this section—

buyer's agent includes a lawyer or licensee acting for the buyer and a person authorised by the buyer or by law to sign the relevant contract on the buyer's behalf."

29. If the warning statement is not given or if it does not comply with s 366D then the buyer's rights are provided for in s 367:

"367 Buyer's rights if a warning statement is not given or is not effective

(1) This section applies if—

(a) a warning statement requirement for a proposed relevant contract is not complied with and notice is not given under section 366C; or
(b) a warning statement is of no effect under section 366D(2), (3) or (4).

(2) The buyer under a relevant contract may terminate the relevant contract at any time before the relevant contract settles by giving signed, dated notice of termination to the seller or the seller's agent.

[140322]

(3) The notice of termination must state that the relevant contract is terminated under this section.
(4) If the relevant contract is terminated, the seller must, within 14 days after the termination, refund any deposit paid under the relevant contract to the buyer.

Maximum penalty — 200 penalty units.
(5) If the seller, acting under subsection (4), instructs a licensee acting for the seller to refund the deposit paid under the relevant contract to the buyer, the licensee must immediately refund the deposit to the buyer.

Maximum penalty — 200 penalty units.
(6) If the relevant contract is terminated, the seller and the person acting for the seller who prepared the relevant contract are liable to the buyer for the buyer's reasonable legal and other expenses incurred by the buyer in relation to the relevant contract after the buyer signed the relevant contract.
(7) If more than 1 person is liable to reimburse the buyer, the liability of the persons is joint and several.
(8) An amount payable to the buyer under this section is recoverable as a debt.
(9) In this section—warning statement requirement, for a proposed relevant contract, means—

(a) if the proposed relevant contract is sent by fax — a requirement to comply with section 366(2) or (3); or
(b) if the proposed relevant contract is given by electronic communication other than fax — a requirement to comply with section 366A(2) or (3); or
(c) if the proposed relevant contract is given in a way other than by electronic communication — a requirement to comply with section 366B(2), (4) or (6)."

30. The respondents submitted that the structure of the warning statement provisions in Part 2 of Chapter 11 of the Act demonstrated that the object of the provisions is to ensure that the warning statement was drawn to the attention of the buyer, so that the buyer was made aware of the wisdom of obtaining independent legal advice and an independent valuation and of the existence of the cooling-off period during which the advice and valuation can be obtained. This was achieved, where a proposed relevant contract was provided to the buyer, in the various methods outlined in sections 366, 366A and 366B. It was said that in relation to a proposed relevant contract which does not fall within those provisions, because it is the proposed buyer that brings into existence a proposed relevant contract, which is signed and then provided to the proposed seller, the protection afforded by the Act came from s 365.

31. It was further submitted that Part 2 should be construed on the basis that it is directed towards the taking of those steps necessary to bring the warning statement to the proposed buyer's attention in a clear and unequivocal way. Nothing in the express purpose of the chapter or the terms of the provisions in question suggested that Chapter 11 is concerned at all with the terms of a proposed relevant contract or offer or any change in the actual terms of an offer made before a binding contract comes into existence.

Conclusion

32. While I agree with the conclusion reached by the learned judge as to the invalidity of the purported termination of the contract on the grounds of s 366B and s 366D, I accept the submissions made by the respondents that the learned judge adopted an incorrect approach in construing Part 2, and in particular the effectiveness of the warning statement under s 366B, from the viewpoint of whether the course of negotiations between the parties (that remained the same) resulted in there being a counteroffer or whether the nature of the alterations to the proposed relevant contract (which at all times concerned the same property) were material so that it could be said that there was a new proposed relevant contract. Such an approach failed to have proper regard to the purpose of the warning statement provisions being to achieve the objects in s 363, especially the consumer protection provisions in s 363(b), and not to provide a caution to the proposed buyer as to any particular term of a proposed relevant contract or alteration that might be made to its terms.

33. Section 363(b) states that the purpose of Chapter 11 is to require "all proposed relevant contracts or relevant contracts for the sale of residential property in Queensland to include consumer protection information". The word "all" should be construed as encompassing both categories of contracts referred to; there is no basis, for example, for construing "all" as intending to refer to each and every proposed relevant contract as materially varied.

34. As I have mentioned, to construe s 363 so as to require that the warning statement be signed again, on each and every occasion on which a material variation to the proposed contract is made, would serve no purpose in promoting the object in s 363. Such a construction proceeds on the implicit assumption that the relevant contract as ultimately concluded will remain in materially the same terms as the proposed relevant contract, yet there is nothing in the Act to suggest such a legislative intention. "Relevant contract" is defined in s 364 as a contract for the sale of residential property in Queensland, other than a contract formed on a sale by auction. No definition of "proposed relevant contract" is provided. However it is apparent, given that "relevant contract" is defined in terms of a type of contract, that is, a contract for residential property, that "proposed relevant contract" is simply a proposed contract of that nature.

35. Once it is accepted as the respondents contended that bringing the warning statement to the proposed buyer's attention is the object of the provisions, then that object is achieved in circumstances such as occurred in the present case by having a warning statement attached to the front of the unsigned draft contract and drawn to the proposed buyer's attention and signed before the final contractual offer document is signed. The making of amendments to the contract document before it was submitted to the seller for acceptance did not detract from the fact that the warning statement had been drawn to the attention of the proposed buyer. There is nothing in the consumer protection aims of Chapter 11 to support the view that the Act should be construed so as to require the documents ultimately submitted to the seller to have precisely the same terms, unaltered from those in existence when the warning statement was signed. Such a construction serves no useful purpose.

36. Given the view I have expressed, the respondents' proposition raised in the Notice of Contention should be accepted and accordingly, for the purpose of s 366D(3) of the Act, the draft contract to which the warning statement was attached and signed on 9 April remains the same proposed relevant contract, notwithstanding alterations to the terms of the draft contract.

37. It follows that the learned judge erred in the approach he took in analysing the issue that required determination in accordance with the approach outlined in Doolan. It also follows that Doolan should not be accepted as good law.

38. I note that this view accords with amendments made to the Act which took effect from 1 October 2010 (see Property Agents and Motor Dealers and Other Legislation Amendment Bill 2010). The amendments provide in s 368(A)(4) and (5) as follows:

> "(4) For this section a proposed relevant contract does not become another proposed relevant contract merely because, as a result of negotiations, the terms and conditions of the proposed relevant contract change if the residential property concerned and the parties remain the same.
> (5) For subsection (4) it is immaterial whether the proposed relevant contract is textually amended to show the changed terms and conditions or another proposed relevant contract form is prepared that incorporates the changes."

39. I also note that it is apparent from the explanatory notes that these amendments were dictated by a legislative perception of a lack of clarity in the original provisions rather than to address an omission or alter the previous legislative intent: cf Johnston v Jewry [2007] QCA 188 at [32]. As the explanatory notes to the Bill state, "Section 368(A)(4) and (5) make it clear that a proposed relevant contract does not become another proposed relevant contract if the residential property concerned and the parties to the contract remain the same".

40. As stated, I agree with the conclusion reached by his Honour that Mr Fletcher was not entitled to terminate the contract. My view, however, for reaching that conclusion is that the warning statement signed on 9 April 2007 at the time the proposed contract was signed remained effective for the purpose of s 366D(3), and notwithstanding that the contractual document signed by Mr Fletcher on 13 April 2007 contained altered terms, the latter did not become another proposed relevant contract. It follows from the conclusion I have reached that it is unnecessary to deal further with the grounds of appeal raised by Mr Fletcher.

Orders

41. I would order as follows:

1. The appeal be dismissed.
2. The appellant pay the respondents' costs of and incidental to the appeal.

ROSS NIELSON PROPERTIES PTY LTD v ORCHARD CAPITAL INVESTMENTS LTD

(2011) LQCS ¶90-168; Court citation: [2011] QCA 49

Queensland Court of Appeal

Judgment delivered on 22 March 2011

Community schemes — Development agreement entered into between purchaser and developer — Put and Call option included in development agreement — Whether nature of the agreement is a "relevant contract" under the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 — Whether the agreement complied with s 364 and 367 of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act at the time (now repealed and replaced with s 368A(2)(b) and s 368A(2)(c)(ii)) — A "relevant contract" is a contract "for the sale" of "residential land" between parties who may be described as "the buyer" and "the seller" of that land — the development agreement did not meet the statutory definition of "relevant contract".

Ross Nielson Properties Pty Ltd (RNP), the developer, and Orchard Capital Investments Limited (OCIL), the entity for the property fund, had entered into a development agreement. Before RNP and OCIL entered into the development agreement, RNP and Starlistic Pty Ltd (Starlistic), the owner of the land, made a contract which was the Starlistic Call Option Agreement. The Starlistic Call Option Agreement required RNP to pay Starlistic an Option Fee of $100,000 comprising of an initial $10,000 and a balance fee of $90,000. In exchange, Starlistic granted RNP an option to purchase the land. The Starlistic Call Option allowed RNP to nominate another person as the person entitled to exercise the option to purchase the land. If the option was exercised, the Option Fee of $100,000 would constitute the deposit under the contract for sale of the land (Land Contract). The Land Contract price was $2.2 million.

The development agreement between RNP and OCIL, recited that Starlistic was the registered owner of the land, that as at the "Effective Date" (being the completion of the Land Contract as a result of the exercise of the Starlistic Call Option), OCIL would be entitled to be the registered owner of the land. Further, OCIL would engage RNP as the developer for the site to procure a development approval in respect of the land for the building of a shopping centre and procure the execution of an agreement for lease with Coles as the anchor tenant. In return, OCIL paid to RNP:

[140325]

- $100,000 which $90,000 of it will be paid by RNP to Starlistic for the balance of the Option Fee and $10,000 retained by RNP
- $500,000 on execution of the development agreement, and
- $200,000 after RNP lodge the application for development approval.

OCIL was to pay RNP $2 million after notification by RNP that the development approval had been issued.

When RNP was unable to obtain development approval for a shopping centre to be built on the site, the joint venture between RNP and OCIL broke down. In accordance with the development agreement, RNP recommended to OCIL that an alternative use for the land would be to build townhouses and apartments instead. The proposal was rejected by OCIL. OCIL wished only to recoup its expenditure but not proceed with any development of the land.

Under the development agreement, OCIL may recoup its expenditure in pursuing the development as follows:

- RNP (with full control of the sale process) could require OCIL to execute all necessary documents to sell the land to a third party and distribute the net proceeds of the sale in accordance with the agreement.
- If the net proceeds of sale are less than $2.9 million, then RNP was required to pay to OCIL on settlement of the land, an amount equal to $2.9 million less the net proceeds of sale.
- If the net proceeds of sale of the land was more than $2.9 million, then OCIL will pay to RNP 50% of the excess on settlement of the land.

If no sale of the land was made within 12 months of the specified date in the development agreement, then OCIL could "put" it to RNP, that RNP (or its nominee) must purchase the land from OCIL for $2.9 million, with 60 days settlement. The agreement also conferred a call option in RNP's favour in similar terms.

OCIL's solicitors exercised OCIL's put option to RNP to require RNP deliver and execute the necessary documents to purchase the land. RNP did not comply with that demand. RNP gave OCIL notice purporting to terminate the development agreement under s 367(2) of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act (PAMDA) as it then was (now repealed and replaced with s 368A(2)(c)(ii)), on the ground that OCIL had not attached or drawn RNP's attention to a warning statement which is required in relation to "relevant contracts".

OCIL commenced proceedings in the trial division for orders to enforce RNP's obligations under the development agreement. RNP defended the proceedings. The trial judge found in favour of OCIL and declared that the development agreement was not a "relevant contract" as that term is defined in s 364 of the PAMDA and that RNP was not entitled to terminate the development agreement as it purported to do so. This was an appeal of the trial judge's decision by RNP.

According to RNP, it accepted that what was in issue was the characterisation of the development agreement itself. RNP's case on appeal was that the "put option" in cl 13.11 of the development agreement characterised the agreement as a "relevant contract" under PAMDA. RNP contended:

• that the trial judge erred in applying the "substance test" derived from the Cheree-Ann case in its determination of whether the development agreement was a relevant contract under PAMDA
• in Vale 1 P/L as Trustee for the Vale 1 Trust v Delorain P/L as Trustee for the Delorain Trust ("Vale"), the court (Applegarth J, with whose reasons McMurdo P and White JA agreed) upheld an appeal against the decision in the trial division, holding that the trial judge had erred by applying the "substance test"

• Vale dictated the conclusion that the development agreement was a "relevant contract".

Held: Appeal dismissed.

1. What Vale decided was that an option agreement held to be a relevant contract was not deprived of that character by addition of provisions found in the option agreements in Vale and Cheree-Ann. Vale did not decide that the mere presence in any agreement of any "put option" relating to residential land, whatever may be the terms of the option and agreement, defines the agreement as a "relevant contract" under the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act. Here the question is instead whether a very different kind of agreement should be characterised as a "relevant contract" because it included a put option which would become exercisable only upon fulfilment of a series of contingencies. Vale could not and does not answer that question. It is necessary to examine the particular agreement in issue and decided whether it falls within the statutory definition.

2. The provisions in Ch 11 of the Act themselves indicate that a "relevant contract" is a contract "for the sale" of "residential land" between parties who may be described as "the buyer" and "the seller" of that land, which might "settle", and in respect of which a "deposit" might be payable and, if paid, might be returned to "the buyer" upon termination. As a matter of ordinary language the development agreement was not a contract "for" the sale of residential property in which RNP was "the buyer" and OCIL was "the seller". Nor was the agreement of a character which might partake of the payment by "the buyer" of a refundable deposit upon the purchase of land.

3. Regardless of the precise legal nature of any interest OCIL held in the land after execution of the development agreement, the fact that the supposed "buyer" was a person who contracted to give up the right to exercise that party's option to purchase land in favour of the supposed "seller" militates against the characterisation of the development agreement as a contract "for" the sale of the land. Nor do the expressed purposes of PAMDA suggest that the ordinary meaning of the expression "contract for sale" should be stretched so far. The purpose, understood in light of the statutory scheme, indicates that the consumer intended to be protected is "the buyer" of residential land from "the seller" under a contract "for the sale of" that land, being a contract of a kind which might "settle", and in respect of which a "deposit" might be payable and, if paid, might be returned to "the buyer" upon termination. That consumer protection purpose would not be served by extending the drastic remedy given by s 367(2) (as it then was in PAMDA) to cases in which the ordinary meanings of those terms are inapplicable.

4. When regard is had to the whole of the development agreement, as is necessary for the purposes of Ch 11 of PAMDA, it is clear that the development agreement did not meet the statutory definition of "relevant contract".

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

PH Morrison QC with GJ Handran (instructed by Broadley Rees Hogan Lawyers) for the appellant RNP.

AB Crowe SC with VG Brennan (instructed by McMahon Clarke Legal) for the respondent OCIL.

Before: Fraser and Chesterman JJA and Martin J.

Fraser JA: The appellant, Ross Nielson Properties Pty Ltd ("RNP") as "developer", and the respondent, Orchard Capital Investments Limited ("OCIL"), as "owner", were parties to a "development agreement" made on 2 September 2005. On 8 February 2010, RNP purported to terminate the development agreement under s 367(2) of the [140327]

Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 (Qld) ("PAMDA"[1]) on the ground that OCIL had not attached or drawn RNP's attention to a "warning statement", which PAMDA requires in relation to "relevant contracts".

2. OCIL commenced proceedings in the trial division for orders designed to enforce RNP's obligations under the development agreement. RNP defended the proceedings. The trial judge found in OCIL's favour and declared that the development agreement was not a "relevant contract" as that term is defined in s 364 of PAMDA and that RNP was not entitled to terminate the development agreement as it purported to do by letter dated 8 February 2010.[2] Consequential orders giving effect to those declarations were made.

3. There was no warning statement attached to the development agreement. RNP sought to justify its purported termination of the development agreement under s 367(2) of PAMDA, which provides that if a warning statement is not attached to a "relevant contract" the buyer may terminate the contract at any time before the contract settles. The term "relevant contract" is defined in s 364 to mean "a contract for the sale of residential property in Queensland, other than a contract formed on a sale by auction." There was no provision for sale by auction in the development agreement and the relevant land was at all times "residential property" (because it was in a "residential area", since it was, in terms of s 17(4), "an area identified on a map in a planning scheme as an area for residential purposes.")

4. Accordingly, the question in RNP's appeal is whether the development agreement was "a contract for the sale of" the land, and thus a "relevant contract", within the meaning of those expressions in s 364. RNP contended that the development agreement possessed that character because one clause in it conferred a "put option" in favour of OCIL, the exercise of which would require RNP to purchase residential land from OCIL.

Chapter 11 of PAMDA

5. In construing the definition of "relevant contract" the trial judge derived assistance from the statutory purposes expressed in PAMDA. Section 10(1) expresses PAMDA's objects as including the provision of a system for (amongst other things) regulating persons as property developers, which "… achieves an appropriate balance between—

> "(a) the need to regulate for the protection of consumers; and > (b) the need to promote freedom of enterprise in the market place."

6. Section 10(2) provides that another significant object of PAMDA is "to provide a way of protecting consumers against particular undesirable practices associated with the promotion of residential property." Section 10(3) provides that the objects are to be achieved mainly by, amongst other methods, "(d) providing protection for consumers in their dealings with marketeers". More specifically, s 363 sets out the purposes of Chapter 11 of PAMDA as being:

> "(a) to give persons who enter into relevant contracts a cooling-off period; and
> (b) to require all relevant contracts for the sale of residential property in Queensland to include consumer protection information, including a statement that the contract is subject to a cooling-off period; and
> (c) to enhance consumer protection for buyers of residential property by ensuring, as far as practicable, the independence of lawyers acting for buyers."

7. The trial judge also found assistance in the scheme established by Chapter 11. Section 366(1) provides that a "relevant contract" must have attached, as its first or top sheet, a warning statement in the approved form containing information specified in s 366(3), including that the contract is subject to a "cooling-off period". Section 366(4) requires the statement to be signed and dated by "the buyer" before the buyer signs the contract. Under s 364 the cooling-off period is five business days from the first business day upon which the buyer is bound by the contract which, under s 365(1), is when the buyer or the buyer's agent receives a copy of the contract signed by the buyer and "the seller". As I have mentioned, s 367(2) provides that if a warning statement is not attached to a relevant contract the buyer may terminate the contract at any time before the contract settles. By s 368, a buyer under a relevant contract who has not waived the cooling-off period may terminate the contract before the end of that period, in which event the seller must refund to the buyer "any deposit paid under the contract" less the "termination penalty" (a term defined in s 364 to mean 0.25 per cent of the purchase price). In broad terms, the effect of s 369 is that the cooling-off period may be waived before the buyer is bound by the contract by the buyer giving to the seller a lawyer's certificate which confirms that the lawyer is independent of the seller and others involved in the sale, the lawyer will not benefit in connection with the sale otherwise than by receiving professional costs and disbursements from the buyer, and the lawyer has explained to the buyer the effect of the contract and the purpose, nature and legal effect of the certificate.

The development agreement

8. It is necessary now to refer to the effect of the development agreement. At the same time I will mention some events that occurred in relation to that agreement.

9. The original parties to the development agreement were RNP and SAI Teys McMahon Property Ltd ("SAITMPL"). SAITMPL contracted in its capacity as the responsible entity for a property fund. Subsequently, OCIL was appointed in place of SAITMPL as the responsible entity for the fund. The parties were content to adopt the convention that OCIL should be regarded as having been a party to the development agreement when it was made. In what follows I will adopt the same convention for ease of reference, as did the trial judge.

10. Before the parties entered into the development agreement, RNP and Starlistic Pty Ltd ("Starlistic"), the owner of land at Caloundra West ("the Property"), made a contract dated 7 April 2005 (the "Starlistic Call Option"). The Starlistic Call Option required RNP to pay Starlistic an "Option Fee" of $100,000, comprising an initial option fee of $10,000, which RNP paid, and a balance option fee of $90,000. In exchange, Starlistic granted RNP an option to purchase the Property. The Starlistic Call Option permitted RNP to exercise the option to purchase the Property or to nominate another person as the person entitled to exercise the option. If RNP gave Starlistic a notice of nomination, the nominee would be entitled to exercise the option to the exclusion of RNP. If the option were exercised, the Option Fee of $100,000 would constitute the deposit under the resulting "Land Contract" for the purchase of the Property.

11. The development agreement was formed some months later, on 2 September 2005. It recited to the effect that Starlistic was the registered owner of the Property, that as at the "Effective Date" (completion of the Land Contract resulting from exercise of the Starlistic Call Option) OCIL would be entitled to be the registered owner of the Property, and that OCIL wished to engage the services of RNP to procure a development approval in respect of the Property, the execution of an agreement for lease with Coles Myer Limited as the "Anchor Tenant", and completion of construction of "the Works" (which included the building of a shopping centre and related improvements) on the Property.

12. The development agreement included provisions to the following effect:

> (a) OCIL should pay RNP the Option Fee of $100,000 by a specified "Option Condition Date".
> (b) RNP should pay to Starlistic the balance Option Fee of $90,000 payable under the Starlistic Call Option.
> (c) RNP would be entitled to retain $10,000 from the $100,000 paid to it by OCIL as reimbursement for RNP's payment of that amount as the initial Option Fee under the Starlistic Call Option.
> (d) In consideration of the payment by OCIL to RNP of the Option Fee, RNP should nominate OCIL (or its nominee), by notice to Starlistic, as the purchaser under the Land Contract resulting from exercise of the Starlistic Call Option.
> (e) OCIL must comply with its obligations under the Land Contract (or ensure that its nominee does so) and do anything necessary to effect completion under the Land Contract in accordance with its terms.
> (f) If OCIL did not complete the Land Contract (otherwise than by its default or that of its nominee), then the development agreement should be at an end.
>
>
> (g) RNP would use its best endeavours to obtain a development approval for a retail centre with approximately 4,250 square metres net lettable area and otherwise in accordance with plans annexed to a pre-commitment from Coles Myer as the Anchor Tenant. The development approval was to be on terms and conditions acceptable to RNP in its absolute discretion and to OCIL acting reasonably.
> (h) RNP would use its best endeavours to procure Coles Myer Limited to enter into an agreement for lease in certain terms by a specified date.
> (i) OCIL would pay RNP $500,000 seven days after the date of execution of the development agreement by OCIL, $200,000 seven days after RNP lodged the development application with the local authority, and $2 million seven days after notification by RNP to OCIL that the development approval had issued.
> (j) RNP would carry out the development (including by engaging a builder to construct the shopping centre) and OCIL would pay RNP the balance of the "Contract Price" under the development agreement by way of periodic progress payments to RNP or, in specified cases, to the builder.

13. RNP embarked upon its obligations under the development agreement, including by nominating OCIL under the Starlistic Call Option and pursuing the necessary development approval and agreement for lease. OCIL paid the first instalment of $500,000 to RNP on 9 September 2005. On 16 September 2005

Starlistic contracted to sell the Property to the then custodian of the fund by a contract which, the parties accepted, should be regarded as being the Land Contract contemplated by the Starlistic Call Option and the development agreement. The purchase price under the Land Contract was $2.2 million. It was completed on 23 September 2005. OCIL paid the second instalment under the development agreement of $200,000 to RNP on 21 December 2005.

14. RNP was unable to obtain the necessary development approval from the local authority so that the development could not proceed. Clause 13 of the development agreement made provision for that contingency. Clause 13 applied if RNP had not obtained the development approval and the agreement for lease. Clause 13.2 provided that in this event RNP would "procure an independent valuation of the Property by a reputable valuer with at least 5 years experience in valuing similar properties" and prepare and submit to OCIL a "development and/or realisation strategy in relation to the Property". Clause 13.3 provided that the recommendation would consider, as alternatives, the sale of the Property, the development of the Property on terms or conditions other than that proposed in the development application, the retention of the Property, and such other commercial proposal as RNP determined. Clause 13.4 obliged RNP to base its recommendation on specified criteria, which included the highest and best use of the Property and the value of the Property obtained pursuant to the independent valuation conducted under clause 13.2. Clause 13.5 provided that OCIL must advise RNP as to whether it accepts or rejects the recommendation in relation to the future development of the Property no later than 14 business days after RNP made the recommendation. Clause 13.6 provided that if RNP's recommendation was to sell the Property and OCIL accepted that, or if the recommendation was to hold or develop the Property and OCIL rejected that, then the Property was to be sold as soon as practicable in accordance with clauses 13.7-13.14.

15. On 2 October 2008 RNP submitted to OCIL a recommendation under clause 13.2 that a development approval be sought for a development incorporating 12 townhouses and 114 units on the land, with RNP to prepare and submit the application and to provide development management services at no cost. OCIL was to pay certain costs of the application and approval (approximately $150,000). On receipt of approval the Property was to be marketed and sold with the benefit of the approval, with the profits to be shared equally between RNP and OCIL. OCIL rejected that recommendation on 8 October 2008 and indicated that it wished to proceed with the sale of the Property. (At the trial, RNP claimed that OCIL's rejection of the recommendation was made in breach of a contractual obligation to act in good faith. The trial judge rejected that claim. RNP abandoned its challenge to that decision at the commencement of the hearing of the appeal.)

16. By this point the development venture had failed. The Property would not be improved by a development approval, RNP would not be paid the third instalment ($2 million) or any further amount under the development agreement and, under provisions which I will now set out, OCIL might merely recoup expenditure it had made in pursuing the development:

> "13.7 As the Developer is required in accordance with clause 13.10 to contribute to any shortfall between the Net Property Sale Proceeds and the amount of $2.9million, the Owner acknowledges that the Developer is to have control over the sale process including, without limiting the generality of the foregoing:
>
> 13.7.1 the appointment of any agent to effect the sale of the Property, including the terms of such appointment;
> 13.7.2 the manner in which the Property is to be offered for sale (i.e. by auction, tender, etc.);
> 13.7.3 any negotiations with third parties in respect of the terms for the sale of the Property; and > 13.7.4 such other matters relating to the sale process of the Property that the Developer requires control over in order to properly effect the sale of the Property.
>
> 13.8 The Owner shall (or if applicable, procure the Owner's Nominee to), no later than 2 business days after written request from the Developer:

13.8.1 execute any document required to appoint an agent recommended by the Developer to effect the sale of the Property;
13.8.2 execute any contract recommended by the Developer for the sale of the Property provided that such contract is in the form of an Approved Contract; and 13.8.3 such other documents as the Developer may reasonably require to be executed by the Owner in order to effect the sale of the Property.

13.9 The Owner shall (or if applicable, procure the Owner's Nominee to) strictly comply with the terms of any Sale Document and acknowledges that any failure by the Owner (or Owner's Nominee) to comply with the terms of the Sale Document constitutes a breach of this Agreement.

13.10 If the Property is sold and the Net Property Sale Proceeds are:

13.10.1 less than $2.9million, then the Developer shall pay to the Owner on settlement of the sale of the Property an amount equal to $2.9million less the Net Property Sale Proceeds; or 13.10.2 greater than $2.9million, then the Owner shall pay to the Developer 50% of the excess on settlement of the sale of the Property."

17. There was no sale within the 12 month period specified in clause 13.11, which expired on about 8 October 2009. In this event, the "Put Option" in clause 13.11 became available for exercise. Clause 13.11 provided:

"13.11 If the Property is not sold by that day being 12 months from the date that the provisions of clause 13.6 apply (Sale Date), then the Owner (or Owner's Nominee) shall be entitled to exercise the Put Option contained in this clause 13.11:

13.11.1 The Developer grants to the Owner (or Owner's Nominee) for a period of 7 days from the date the Developer delivers to the owner the Supporting Material an option to require the Developer or its nominee to purchase the Property in accordance with the Option Contract. The Developer shall execute and deliver to the Owner (or Owner's Nominee) the Supporting Material no later than 2 business days after the Sale Date.
13.11.2 The Developer may at any time prior to exercise of the Put Option, nominate in writing to the Owner (or Owner's Nominee), another person or corporation who is to acquire the Property from the Owner (or Owner's Nominee) (Nominee). In order for the nomination to be effective, the Developer must procure the Nominee [to] deliver the Supporting Material to the Owner (or Owner's Nominee) duly executed.

[140331]

13.11.3 The Put Option may only be exercised by the Owner (or Owner's Nominee) delivering to the Developer on a business day at the address for service of notices on the Developer specified in Schedule 1, Item 4, a Put Option Notice executed by the Owner (or Owner's Nominee).
13.11.4 On exercise of the Put Option, the Option Contract will be deemed to have been entered into between the Owner (or Owner's Nominee) as Vendor and the Developer or its Nominee as Purchaser.
13.11.5 Following receipt of the Option Notice, the Owner (or Owner's Nominee) shall cause to be delivered to the Developer 2 copies of the Option Contract duly completed by inserting the appropriate details in any blanks, duly executed by the Owner (or Owner's Nominee). Following receipt of the Option Contract duly executed by the Owner (or Owner's Nominee), the Developer shall also promptly execute both copies of the Option Contract and deliver 1 copy to the Owner (or Owner's Nominee) duly executed by both parties.
13.11.6 Any duty under the Duties Act arising in relation to the provisions of this clause 13.11 or any transaction arising as a result of the Owner (or Owner's Nominee) exercising the Put Option under this clause is to be borne by the Owner, other than any duty under the Duties Act payable in respect of the Option Contract which shall be paid by the Developer."

18. Clause 13.12 conferred a call option in RNP's favour, in similar terms.

19. A draft of the Option Contract which would result from the exercise of the Put Option in clause 13.11 (or from the exercise of the call option in clause 13.12) was set out in a schedule to the development agreement. It provided for RNP (or its nominee) to purchase the Property for $2.9 million, with settlement in 60 days. That price was equivalent to the sum of the purchase price paid by OCIL to Starlistic to buy the Property and the two instalments paid by OCIL to RNP under the terms of the development agreement.

20. The "Supporting Material" referred to in clause 13.11.1 of the development agreement was defined to mean:

> "(a) a Lawyer's Certificate under section 369 of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 (Qld), waiving the cooling-off period under the Contract, duly signed by the Developer or Nominee's solicitor; and > (b) Form 30C under the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 (Qld), annexed as the top sheet of the Contract, duly signed by the Developer or its Nominee."

The fact that the Supporting Material appears to have been designed to meet requirements of PAMDA has no enduring significance because the parties accepted that the relevant time for the application of PAMDA was when the development agreement was made.

21. In the events that had occurred, the effect of clause 13.11.1 was that RNP became obliged to execute and deliver to OCIL (or its nominee) the Supporting Material and RNP granted to OCIL (or its nominee) an option to require RNP (or its nominee) to purchase the Property. On 16 October 2009 OCIL's solicitors wrote to RNP's solicitors calling upon RNP to deliver the Supporting Material to OCIL. RNP did not comply with that demand. Ultimately, RNP gave OCIL the notice purporting to terminate the development agreement under s 367(2) of PAMDA which I mentioned earlier.

The reasons of the trial judge

22. The trial judge referred to authorities which described the general character of an option to purchase land as a conditional contract to purchase land,[3] and to David Deane & Associates Pty Ltd v Bonnyview Pty Ltd,[4] in which Keane JA referred to that characterisation and held that, in the circumstances of that case, certain option agreements constituted "contracts of sale" within the meaning of a commission agency agreement. The trial judge then discussed Devine Ltd v Timbs[5] and Mark Bain Constructions Pty Ltd v Barling[6] (in which option agreements in forms similar to the options in clause 13.11 and clause 13.12 of the development agreement were characterised as "relevant contracts" under PAMDA) and Cheree-Ann Property Developers Pty Ltd v East West International Development Pty Ltd[7] ("Cheree-Ann") and Vale 1 Pty Ltd v Delorain Pty Ltd[8] (in which the opposite conclusion was reached where option agreements included additional provisions which facilitated or permitted the prospective purchaser under the options to market the land and profit by introducing a third party as a substitute purchaser).

[140332]

23. From those cases the trial judge derived the propositions that, in the case of an option, it is the option agreement, rather than a document executed after the exercise of the option, to which attention must be paid for applying the provisions of PAMDA; and in the case of an option agreement which includes a put option, the potential purchaser becomes bound to purchase the land "by virtue of obligations it undertakes as part of the option agreement, though the engagement of those obligations depends upon an act of the seller."[9] It followed that it was necessary to consider whether PAMDA applied to the development agreement in which clause 13.11 created the Put Option. The focus was upon the character of the development agreement itself: in a subsequent passage of the reasons,[10] the trial judge concluded that the provisions of PAMDA did not apply in relation to the Put Option considered separately from the development agreement, or in relation to any exercise of the Put Option or any contract which would result from that exercise.

24. RNP did not challenge those conclusions. It accepted that what was in issue was the characterisation of the development agreement itself. RNP's case on appeal was that the Put Option in clause 13.11 clothed the development agreement with the character of a "relevant contract".

25. The trial judge rejected that case in the following passage:

> "[46] Immediately before the parties entered into the Development Agreement, RNP had the benefit of the Starlistic option. Accordingly, it had an equitable interest in the land. At that time, neither OCIL nor any entity associated with it had any interest in the land. It seems to me it would produce a curious result if the Development Agreement were held to be a 'relevant contract' for the purposes of the PAMD Act, in respect of which OCIL was the 'seller' and RNP was the 'buyer'.
> [47] I have previously summarised the principal features of the Development Agreement. In substance, it was an agreement intended to bring about the development of the land as a shopping centre. It may be that the Development Agreement constituted a joint venture, and that as a result of its contributions, RNP acquire, or may have acquired, some equitable interest in the land, but it is unnecessary to reach a final view about this. The primary mechanism chosen by the parties to bring the project to an end, in the event that its primary purpose could be achieved, was the sale of the land, to be conducted by RNP, with a guaranteed minimum return to OCIL related to the amount paid by it (or an entity associated with it) for the purpose of the project, and a provision for sharing any excess above that amount between RNP and OCIL. If that mechanism was unsuccessful, and RNP had not previously exercised its call option rights under the Development Agreement, the put option came into effect. The put option appears to be a mechanism of last resort.
> [48] Adopting the analysis of Mullins J [in Cheree-Ann], it cannot be said that the sale of the land by OCIL (or an associated entity) to RNP is the substance of the Development Agreement.
> [49] The question which has to be determined is whether the Development Agreement was, in the language of the definition of 'relevant contract' in the PAMD Act, a 'contract for the sale of residential property'. It seems to me that some assistance in understanding the expression can be obtained by a consideration of the type of transaction envisaged by Chapter 11. It envisages a party who can be characterised as the buyer, > and another who can be characterised as the seller, in relation to the contract. The contract is likely to be prepared by the seller. It is likely to be signed by the buyer, before it is signed by the seller. It is likely to make provision for the payment of a deposit. The envisaged contract is one which 'settles'. It is not easy to see the development agreement as a contract to which the provisions of Chapter 11 are intended [to] apply.
>
> [50] The stated purposes of Chapter 11 include that purchasers who 'enter into relevant contracts' have the benefit of a cooling-off period, and to require 'all relevant contracts for the sale of residential property in Queensland' to include certain consumer protection information with regards to s 363. These statements of purpose provide no real assistance in understanding what is a relevant contract. More assistance is to be found in the provisions of s 10 of the PAMD Act. One of the significant objects of the Act is to provide a way of protecting consumers against particular undesirable practices associated with the promotion of residential property. Moreover, additional context may be derived from s 17, which identifies residential property as a single parcel of land, on which a place of residence is constructed or is being constructed, or if vacant, is in a residential area. Taken together, these considerations strongly suggest that Chapter 11 is directed to transactions involving consumers, and not to a transaction including the commercial complexities of the development agreement."[11] (citation omitted)

26. The trial judge found that those considerations indicated that a "relevant contract" was "one, the principal purpose of which is to bind the parties to the purchase and sale of residential property of the kind identified in s 17 of [PAMDA]". His Honour held that the development agreement was not a "relevant contract", compliance with s 366 was not required, and RNP's attempt to terminate the development agreement on the basis of non-compliance with that section was ineffective.[12]

Consideration

27. RNP's principal contention in this appeal was that the trial judge erred by applying the "substance test" which was derived from Cheree-Ann. That contention was based upon a decision which was delivered after the trial judge gave judgment. In Vale 1 P/L as Trustee for the Vale 1 Trust v Delorain P/L as Trustee for the Delorain Trust[13] ("Vale"), the Court (Applegarth J, with whose reasons McMurdo P and White JA agreed) upheld an appeal against the decision in the trial division, holding that the trial judge had erred by applying the "substance test". RNP contended that Vale dictated the conclusion that the development agreement was a "relevant contract".

28. That argument attributed too much to the decision in Vale. The option agreement considered in that decision was a "Call and Put Option Deed" by which a property developer ("Delorain") undertaking the construction of a residential development granted an option to purchase to Vale, who wished to purchase proposed apartments, and Vale granted to Delorain a "put option" to require Vale to purchase the apartments. The only conditions relating to the exercise of those options concerned the time and manner of their exercise. Notwithstanding reservations expressed in a different case,[14] the Court proceeded on the basis of earlier decisions in which certain option agreements in relation to residential property had been held to constitute "relevant contracts".[15] The option agreement in Vale differed from the agreements considered in the earlier cases because it contained additional clauses which permitted Vale to find a third party to purchase the property in Vale's place on terms which entitled Vale to share in any excess over the purchase price at which Vale would be obliged to purchase. In Cheree-Ann Mullins J held that an option agreement which contained similar provisions was not a "relevant contract" for the purposes of the consumer protection provisions of Chapter 11 because that agreement "in substance" provided stock for a property marketer. In that context, Applegarth J framed the first question for decision in Vale as being whether Cheree-Ann should be followed in concluding that, "… an option agreement that in substance provides stock for a property marketer should not be characterised as a "contract for the sale of property" for the purposes of the consumer protection provisions of Chapter 11".[16]

29. It was that question which Applegarth J addressed in the observations that "… the mere presence in an option agreement of provisions that permit a party to market an 'off the plan' lot to a potential purchaser and to refer that third party purchaser to the grantor/developer does not mean that what otherwise would be a 'relevant contract' ceases to be so …", and that "[t]he contingency that the property may be sold to a third party purchaser … does not alter the nature of the Deed as one that provided for the sale of residential property."[17] The rejection in Vale of the "substance test", though expressed at times in general terms,[18] must be understood in that context. What Vale decided was that an option agreement of a kind which had been held to constitute a "relevant contract" was not deprived of that character by the addition of provisions to the effect of those found in the option agreements in Vale and Cheree-Ann. Vale did not decide that the mere presence in any agreement of any "put option" relating to residential land, whatever may be the terms of the option and the agreement, necessarily defines the agreement as a "relevant contract".

30. RNP emphasised Applegarth J's references to the desirability of a certain definition of "relevant contract".[19] His Honour identified the significance of that consideration in the following passage:

> "In this matter Delorain invites the Court to apply, or even extend, the exception recognised in Cheree-Ann. However, such an approach is apt to create undesirable uncertainty concerning the application of the definition of 'relevant contract' in future cases. Certainty concerning parties' rights in relation to transactions for the sale of residential property is important. Consumer protection is enhanced by certainty in determining whether or not an agreement constitutes a 'relevant contract'. Unnecessary uncertainty and the potential for litigation of the present kind is not in the interests of consumers or other persons involved in contracts for the sale of residential property. The first basis upon which Cheree-Ann was decided leaves the definition of 'relevant contract' in an uncertain state and, on balance, I consider that the decision should not be followed in that respect."[20]

31. The concern about commercial certainty related to the creation of an exception to the general proposition concerning option agreements of the kind which had been held to constitute a "relevant contract".[21] Here the question is instead whether a very different kind of agreement should be characterised as a "relevant contract" because it included a put option which would become exercisable only upon fulfilment of a series of contingencies. Vale could not and does not answer that question. It is necessary to examine the particular agreement in issue and decide whether it falls within the statutory definition.

32. Where such questions of statutory characterisation are concerned, cases may arise where it is debatable whether or not a particular arrangement falls within the statutory definition. In the case of Chapter 11 of PAMDA, uncertainty inevitably results from the absence of any express limitation of its application to "consumers", the absence of any definition of that term, and the generality of the definition of "relevant contract". That has been manifested in the extensive litigation about those provisions. If that uncertainty is thought to be undesirable, the remedy lies with the legislature.

33. The parties accepted that an option agreement might constitute a "contract for sale" and thus a "relevant contract". However the exercise of applying the definition is not foreclosed by reference to tags such as "option agreement". As I have sought to emphasise, the question in this appeal is whether the development agreement itself was a "contract for the sale of" residential property, and thus a "relevant contract", within the meaning of s 364 of PAMDA.

34. As to that, it is significant that the expression "contract for the sale of" does not have a fixed, technical meaning. Its meaning is capable of being influenced by the context in which it appears. The trial judge therefore adopted the conventional approach of construing that expression in a way which sought to reconcile it with the statutory context and the underlying legislative purpose, so far as that purpose could be detected in the language of the statute and any admissible extrinsic material.[22] The trial judge summarised the statutory context and the legislative purpose in paragraphs [49] and [50] of his Honour's reasons. I will return to the legislative purpose but, as OCIL contended, the provisions in Chapter 11 themselves indicate that a "relevant contract" is a contract "for the sale" of "residential land" between parties who may be described as "the buyer" and "the seller" of that land, which might "settle", and in respect of which a "deposit" might be payable and, if paid, might be returned to "the buyer" upon termination. That is not an apt description of the development agreement.

35. Nor is there any real analogy between the development agreement and those option agreements which have been held to constitute "relevant contracts". In that regard, it is sufficient to refer to one such case. In Mark Bain Constructions Pty Ltd v Barling,[23] Philippides J held that a "Put and Call Option Deed", under which the grantee was entitled to exercise a call option to purchase residential property during a specified period and the grantor was entitled to exercise a put option requiring the grantee to purchase that property if the grantee had not exercised the call option, constituted a "contract for the sale of land", and therefore a "relevant contract", for the purposes of s 366 of PAMDA. Philippides J was influenced by Gibbs J's view in Laybutt v Amoco Australia Pty Ltd that an option to purchase was "a contract to sell the land upon condition that the grantee gives the notice and does the other things stipulated in the option."[24] Her Honour also relied upon a passage in David Deane & Associates Pty Ltd v Bonnyview Pty Ltd[25] in which Keane JA explained "how an option or contract relating to the sale of property may, by mutual resolution of the contingencies to which it was previously subject, become properly characterised as a contract of sale."[26] After referring to those decisions Philippides J said:

"In the present case, even if the option deeds could only be characterised as contracts of sale upon the fulfilment of the contingent conditions to which they were subject, the option deeds are, nevertheless, in my view properly characterised as contracts for the sale of residential property. Although contingent on the exercise of the put and call options granted under the deeds, the applicant assumed obligations to sell and the respondents assumed obligations to purchase from which they could not withdraw. The form and substance of the contracts resulting from the exercise of the options, including the sale price, fell to be determined by reference to the option deeds. The option deeds thus contained the machinery provisions which were facultative of the realization of the lots by sale by the applicant to the respondents. Further, as Barwick CJ observed in Petelin v Deger Investments Pty Ltd, a clause in an option requiring a new contractual document in an identified form to be signed or exchanged does not contemplate the formation of a new and different contract, but merely the recording in a formal fashion of the agreement which resulted from the exercised option."[27] (citations omitted)

36. In David Deane & Associates Pty Ltd v Bonnyview Pty Ltd[28] one question was whether such a transaction constituted a valid and enforceable "contract of sale" the completion of which would entitle an agent to commission under a commission agency agreement. In the passage cited by Philippides J, Keane JA said:

"Further, to speak of a contract of sale is to speak of a contract to transfer property for money. Those are the essential rights and obligations which characterize a contract as a contract of sale. The option agreements provided a mechanism by which these rights and obligations could be engaged. If the appellants elected to exercise their put option then the form and substance of the resulting contract, including the sale price, would be determined by reference to the provisions of the option agreements. In that regard, clauses 3 [which provided for the exercise of the call option by the grantee] and 5 [which provided for the exercise of the put option by the grantor] of the option agreements were machinery provisions facultative of realization of the lots by sale by the appellants to Traspunt or its nominees. Once the machinery conditions in the option agreements became irrelevant to the respective substantive rights of the appellants and Traspunt, the description of the arrangements in the option agreements as a contract of sale was undeniably accurate. What might have originally been characterized as options or contracts relating to a sale or even contracts simpliciter, but not contracts of sale, had become, by the mutual resolution of the contingencies to which they were previously subject, contracts which were properly characterized as contracts of sale and which were, indeed, performed as such. This point, that the character of a contract may change as its conditions are fulfilled or dispensed with, may be illustrated by reference to the observations of Wilson J in Perri v Coolangatta Investments Pty Ltd where his Honour said:

'The obligation to complete [the contract] is contingent on the fulfilment of the condition, but in the meantime there is a conditional contract in existence from which neither party is at liberty to withdraw at will. Interim obligations were undertaken by both parties. The vendor had to make good its title to sell, and the purchasers were obliged to pay the deposit and make all reasonable efforts to bring about a sale of the Lilli Pilli property.

Speaking for myself, I have difficulty in assigning the decision in Aberfoyle to the very limited category of cases dealing with conditions precedent to the formation of a contract. It seems to me that when Lord Jenkins ([1960] AC at pp 128, 130) spoke of a condition precedent, he was speaking of the condition in that case as precedent to the coming into existence of a binding contract of sale. As Sachs L.J. remarked in Property and Bloodstock Ltd v. Emerton ([1968] Ch 94 at p 121), after referring to Lord Jenkins' words,

"The distinction, of course, is there drawn between a contract and a contract of sale, and that particular distinction is one which derives from the long-used phraseology, almost the traditional phraseology, such as that to be found in Anson on Contract, 22nd ed. (1964), p. 111, and in Chalmers' Sale of Goods 14th ed. (1963), p. 243."

Again, in In re Sandwell Park Colliery Co.; Field v The Company ([1929] 1 Ch 277 at p 282), Maugham J. refers to a "condition upon which the validity of the contract as one sale depends" (sic "one of sale") and to a "condition precedent to the validity of a contract for sale of land" (my emphasis) ([1929] 1 Ch at p 283).'

The result, in my view, is that it must be accepted that the option agreements constituted valid and enforceable contracts of sale between the appellants and Traspunt."[29] (citations omitted)

37. The expression "contract for sale" in the definition of "relevant contract" encompasses a broader range of transactions than does the technical term "contract of sale". In that light, notwithstanding Keane JA's observation that the option agreements "might have originally been characterized as options or contracts relating to a sale or even contracts simpliciter, but not contracts of sale" before "the mutual resolution of the contingencies to which they were previously subject", his Honour's analysis supported the conclusion that the similar put and call options in Mark Bain Constructions Pty Ltd v Barling constituted "contracts for sale". In both cases one party assumed a binding obligation to sell and the other party assumed a binding obligation to purchase, the obligation in each case being contingent only upon exercise by one party of the relevant option. That contingency might properly be disregarded for present purposes, particularly bearing in mind the consumer protection purposes of Chapter 11 of PAMDA: sellers could not evade the legislative purpose merely by substituting options for conventional contracts of sale.[30]

38. With those considerations in mind, for the purposes of Chapter 11 of PAMDA a contract of sale formed upon the exercise of such an option might be assimilated with the option agreement from which it originated so that the option agreement itself, though not a contract "of" sale, might be treated as a contract "for" sale; and it then does not unduly stretch the language to treat the purchaser and vendor under the contract of sale formed upon exercise of the option as "the buyer" and "the seller" under the option agreement, to treat settlement of the contract of sale as amounting to settlement of the option agreement, and to treat a deposit payable upon the purchase as a deposit payable under the option agreement. That process of assimilation may also be justified in a case like Vale, where an option agreement of the same kind contains additional provisions which facilitate marketing of the land and the introduction of a substitute purchaser. Such provisions create uncertainty about the identity of the ultimate purchaser, but a party to such an option agreement may nevertheless be characterised as "the buyer" where, as in Vale, that party remains bound to purchase if it is unable to find a third party to complete the purchase instead.

39. The development agreement does not lend itself to any similar process of assimilation. OCIL would become entitled to exercise the Put Option only if OCIL had earlier exercised RNP's option to purchase the land from the owner and then only if three further contingencies were subsequently fulfilled: first, that the contemplated shopping centre could not proceed, because RNP was unable to procure the necessary development approval or the agreement for lease with Coles Myer Ltd; secondly, that OCIL then decided not to retain the land after considering the recommendation by RNP; and thirdly, that RNP did not within 12 months after OCIL's decision arrange a sale of the land to a third party at any price, on terms that RNP would make up any shortfall between the price and $2.9 million or would be entitled to 50 per cent of any amount by which the price exceeded that amount. Only if all of those contingencies were fulfilled would the Put Option become available for exercise by OCIL.

40. It is clear from the last of those contingencies that the Put Option was merely one of the contractual mechanisms which implemented the allocation of risk in the development venture. RNP's contention that the development agreement comprised an option with other provisions grafted on to it has the tail wagging the dog. The contractual terms reveal instead that the aim of the development agreement was a shopping centre development under which the land would cease to be "residential land" and it would be retained by OCIL. It was only in the unwanted event that such a development proved to be unachievable that there was to be any possibility of OCIL selling the land to RNP. As a matter of ordinary language such an agreement was not a contract "for" the sale of residential property in which RNP was "the buyer" and OCIL was "the seller". Nor was the agreement of a character which might partake of the payment by "the buyer" of a refundable deposit upon the purchase of land.

41. Further, if RNP were entitled to terminate the contract after OCIL had exercised the Starlistic Call Option, OCIL would forfeit substantial payments it had made to RNP and it would be left holding land in which it held no interest before it entered into the development agreement. I do not accept RNP's contention that the last mentioned consideration was irrelevant. As RNP contended, there is nothing unconventional about a contract for the sale of land by a seller who does not then own the land but expects to be in a position to secure title to the buyer at the time of settlement. In this case, however, OCIL was not in a position to secure title to the land before it contracted with RNP. It was RNP which held the right to acquire the land. Further, it was RNP, not OCIL, which had negotiated the price at which the option was to be exercised under the Starlistic Call Option, and that price would ultimately form one of the components in the price payable by RNP to OCIL upon any exercise of the Put Option. Regardless of the precise legal nature of any interest OCIL held in the land after execution of the development agreement, the fact that the supposed "buyer" was a person who contracted to give up the right to exercise that party's option to purchase land in favour of the supposed "seller" militates against the characterisation of the development agreement as a contract "for" the sale of the land.

42. Nor do the expressed purposes of PAMDA suggest that the ordinary meaning of the expression "contract for sale" should be stretched so far. RNP contended that the trial judge was mistaken in taking into account the consideration that Chapter 11 of PAMDA was directed towards transactions involving "consumers". As I have indicated, there is no definition of the term "consumer" and that term is not expressed to be a criterion for the application of Chapter 11. It follows that an agreement might amount to a "relevant contract" even if "the buyer" might not be thought to be a "consumer" in the popular sense of that term. As Applegarth J held in Vale, PAMDA "does not state an exception of the kind formulated in Cheree Ann for cases of parties who seemingly are not in need of the consumer protection that Chapter 11 provides."[31] That is not to say, however, that the expressed consumer protection purpose of PAMDA is irrelevant to the construction of the definition of "relevant contract". The purpose, understood in light of the statutory scheme, indicates that the consumer intended to be protected is "the buyer" of residential land from "the seller" under a contract "for the sale of" that land, being a contract of a kind which might "settle", and in respect of which a "deposit" might be payable and, if paid, might be returned to "the buyer" upon termination. That consumer protection purpose would not be served by extending the drastic remedy given by s 367(2) to cases in which the ordinary meanings of those terms are inapplicable. As the trial judge considered, the statutory purpose tends to confirm that Chapter 11 is not directed to the "commercial complexities of the development agreement."[32]

43. RNP did not seek to rely upon decisions under the Statute of Frauds that a contract fitted the statutory description where the contract included both a discrete promise which answered the statutory description and other promises.[33] Those decisions are distinguishable both because of differences between the applicable legislative regimes and because the Put Option in clause 13.11 of the development agreement was not a discrete promise which amounted to a contract for the sale of residential land. Its effect could not be ascertained without reference to the other provisions of the development agreement, particularly those provisions which identified the contingencies upon which the Put Option might become available for exercise.

44. When regard is had to the whole of the development agreement, as is necessary for the purposes of Chapter 11 of PAMDA, it is clear that the development agreement did not meet the statutory definition of "relevant contract".

Proposed Orders

45. I would dismiss the appeal, with costs to be assessed on the standard basis.

CHESTERMAN JA: I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs for the reasons given by Fraser JA.

MARTIN J: I agree, for the reasons given by Fraser JA, with the order he proposes.

Supreme Court of Queensland

Judgment delivered on 7 February 2011

Community schemes — Purchaser contracted to purchase a ground floor apartment — Vendor called for completion of contract upon establishment of community scheme — Purchaser claimed breach of contract for misleading and deceptive conduct but was unsuccessful — Court ordered specific performance of contract — Completion of contract was due 8 February 2011 — Before settlement the apartment was flooded by the Brisbane River — Vendor made an open offer to purchaser to clean up and restore the apartment to original condition at vendor's costs — Settlement to be extended by four months for clean up to be done — Purchaser rejected the offer and purported to rescind the contract on reliance of s 64 Property Law Act 1974 — Property destroyed or damaged so as to be unfit for occupation as dwelling house — Purchaser asked for this matter to be determined summarily — Court declined request as there were matters to be considered relating to application of s 64, including the date at which unfitness must be established, the meaning of unfitness and the relevance, if any, of the damage being capable of repair.

The plaintiff purchaser agreed to buy a residential apartment in a building located in Queensland from the defendant vendor. The apartment was on the ground floor of the building and included car parking and storage on one of the basement levels.

After the community titles scheme was established, the vendor called for completion. The purchaser unsuccessfully sought an order declaring the contract void, alleging misleading and deceptive conduct in breach of the then Trade Practices Act 1974 (Cth). The purchaser's claim was dismissed and an order for specific performance was made, with the new completion date being fixed as 8 February 2011.

Before the new settlement date arrived, the Brisbane River flooded. Both basement levels of the building were inundated. Water entered the apartment on the ground floor. The vendor made an open offer to the purchaser to clean up and restore the apartment to its original condition at the vendor's cost. The vendor said it required four months in which to complete that work and proposed a new settlement date of 4 June 2011.

However, on 28 January 2011 the purchaser rejected that offer and purported to rescind the contract in reliance on s 64 of the Property Law Act 1974 (Qld). Section 64(1) provides that:

> "In any contract for the sale of a dwelling house where, before the date of completion or possession whichever earlier occurs, the dwelling house is so destroyed or damaged as to be unfit for occupation as a dwelling house, the purchaser may, at the purchaser's option, rescind the contract by notice in writing given to the vendor or the vendor's solicitor not later than the date of completion or possession whichever the earlier occurs."

The purchaser then sought a declaration that the contract was duly rescinded. In support of her claim, she submitted that occupation of the premises would be illegal under statutory provisions relating to fire safety and other safety and health aspects.

The vendor argued that there were factual and legal issues which could not be determined summarily and asked the court to extend the date for completion without prejudice to the purchaser's right to maintain that the contract had been validly terminated pursuant to s 64.

Held: For the vendor.

1. There were legal questions and related factual questions about the application of s 64, including the date at which unfitness must be established, the meaning of unfitness and the relevance, if any, of the damage being capable of repair. These were matters which should go to trial and could not be determined in a summary fashion.

2. The purchaser would be adequately protected by an order extending the date for completion without prejudice to her right to maintain that the contract had been validly rescinded.

RA Myers (instructed by Hall Payne) for the plaintiff.

MD Martin (instructed by ClarkeKann) for the defendant.

Before: Wilson J.

Margaret Wilson J: The plaintiff agreed to purchase an apartment in the Softstone building, which is part of the Tennyson Reach Development, from the defendant.

The defendant was developing land at Tennyson where a community titles scheme under the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) was to be established.

The apartment in question is a residential apartment on the ground floor of the Softstone building; it includes car parking and storage on one of the basement levels. As well, the plaintiff was to acquire an interest in the common property, as tenant in common with proprietors of other apartments.

The community titles scheme was established on 28 April 2009. The defendant called for completion on 12 May 2009. The plaintiff alleged misleading and deceptive conduct in breach of the Trade Practices Act 1974 (Cth) and sought an order declaring the contract void. The defendant counterclaimed for specific performance.

On 10 December 2010 the plaintiff's claim was dismissed and an order for specific performance was made. The completion date was fixed as 8 February 2011. On 13 January 2011 the Brisbane River flooded. Both basement levels of the building were inundated. Water entered the apartment on the ground floor.

The plaintiff has deposed to being informed that it rose to a level of 605 millimetres within the apartment; however, she has not provided the source of that information and strictly that evidence is inadmissible.

The defendant is in possession of the apartment. After the flood, it removed the mud. The walls of the apartment consisted of Gyprock sheeting. The defendant removed the lower level of the Gyprock, which was flood affected. Wiring was disconnected; switches were removed and piled into a heap; appliances were disconnected. I refer to the affidavit of Georgina Louise Madsen, filed on 3 February 2011, as well as two photos of the apartment taken by the plaintiff's husband between 17 and 19 January 2011 (after the cleanup had started) which are exhibited to an affidavit by him filed on 2 February 2011.

On 24 January 2011 the defendant made an open offer to the plaintiff to clean up and restore the apartment to its original condition at the defendant's cost and to waive any right to default interest. The defendant said it required four months in which to complete that work and proposed a settlement date of 4 June 2011, with time remaining of the essence.

On 28 January 2011 the plaintiff rejected that offer and purported to rescind in reliance on section 64 of the Property Law Act 1974 (Qld), which provides:

> 64 Right to rescind on destruction of or damage to dwelling house
>
> (1) In any contract for the sale of a dwelling house where, before the date of completion or possession whichever earlier occurs, the dwelling house is so destroyed or damaged as to be unfit for occupation as a dwelling house, the purchaser may, at the purchaser's option, rescind the contract by notice in writing given to the vendor or the vendor's solicitor not later than the date of completion or possession whichever the earlier occurs.
> (2) Upon rescission of a contract under this section, any money paid by the purchaser shall be refunded to the > purchaser and any documents of title or transfer returned to the vendor who alone shall be entitled to the benefit of any insurance policy relating to such destruction or damage subject to the rights of any person entitled to the insurance policy because of an encumbrance over or in respect of the land.
> [140342]
>
> (3) In this section—
>
> sale of a dwelling house means the sale of improved land the improvements on which consist wholly or substantially of a dwelling house or the sale of a lot on a building units plan within the meaning of the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 or the sale of a lot included in a community titles scheme under the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 if the lot—
>
> (a) wholly or substantially, consists of a dwelling; and > (b) is, under the Land Title Act 1994—
>
> (i) a lot on a building format plan of subdivision; or

(ii) a lot on a volumetric format plan of subdivision, and wholly contained within a building.

(4) This section applies only to contracts made after the commencement of this Act and shall have effect despite any stipulation to the contrary.

Each party filed an application on 2 February 2011. The plaintiff sought a declaration that the contract was duly rescinded in accordance with section 64 of the Property Law Act 1974 (Qld) by notice from her solicitors to the defendant's solicitors on 28 January 2011, an order dissolving the decree of specific performance and the ancillary and incidental orders, or, alternatively, a perpetual stay of the decree of specific performance.

The defendant's application sought variation of the order of specific performance by replacing 8 February 2011 with 8 June 2011.

Both applications came before the Court in the Applications List on 3 February 2011. The plaintiff's counsel submitted that section 64 had been satisfied and sought orders in terms of her application. Counsel for the defendant submitted that there were factual and legal issues which could not be determined summarily, and asked the Court to extend the date for completion, without prejudice to the plaintiff's right to maintain that the contract had been validly terminated pursuant to section 64.

Upon a decree of specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, the contract continues to govern the rights and obligations of the parties, but the provisions of the order and not those of the contract regulate how the contract is to be carried out.

Once an order for specific performance has been made:

> 1) a party cannot rescind unless the order is vacated (Sunbird Plaza Pty Ltd v Maloney;[1] Kenning Investments Pty Ltd v Rusty Rees Pty Ltd;[2]) and
> 2) the Court has power to extend the time for compliance, both under its power to control the working out of the order for specific performance and pursuant to its power under Uniform Civil Procedure Rules 1999 (Qld) rule 665 to extend the time for compliance with an order (Zorbas v Titan Properties (Aust) Pty Ltd).[3]

In general, the Court has a discretion whether to vacate the order for specific performance to allow a party to rescind: see Facey v Rawsthorne;[4] JAG Investments Pty Ltd v Strati;[5] Buckman v Rose;[6] Hamdan and Widodo (No 2).[7]

Where a statutory right of rescission arises after an order for specific performance has been made, it may be that the party with the benefit of the statutory provision has an absolute right to the vacation of the order for specific performance. This is a matter on which I do not express a concluded view.

Pursuant to the contract, the property was at the plaintiff's risk from 12 May 2009. This was the result of the application of clause 15.2, which provided that it should be at the risk of the seller until the Date of Possession. That date was defined in clause 17 as the earlier of the Settlement Date or the date the buyer took possession of the lot. Settlement Date was in turn defined as 14 days after the seller notified the buyer that the scheme had been established, that a certificate of classification has been issued, for the building containing the lot, and that, in the reasonable opinion of the seller, the lot was ready for occupation.

However, the contractual provision about the passing of risk is subject to section 64, which has effect despite any stipulation to the contrary.

Counsel were unable to refer me to any reported decisions on the meaning of section 64, and I have found none. There was no discussion of it in the Queensland Law Reform Commission Report which preceded the introduction of the Property Law Act 1974 (Qld). Indeed, the section seems to have been added to the bill after that report was finalised.

Section 64 refers to a dwelling house being so destroyed or damaged as to be unfit for occupation as a dwelling house "before the date of completion or possession whichever earlier occurs."

It affords a right to rescind, “not later than the date of completion or possession whichever the earlier occurs.”

It is a moot point whether, “date of completion” means the date set for completion or the date of actual completion.

Here, the original date for completion was 12 May 2009. Pursuant to the order for specific performance the date for completion became 8 February 2011.

Counsel for the defendant submitted that it is arguable that section 64 applies only in the case of destruction or damage before 12 May 2009.

If the expression “date of completion” in section 64 means the date set for completion, I think it is more likely that 8 February 2011 is the relevant date, because the machinery for completion is now governed by the order of the Court. However, I am not expressing a concluded view on what “date of completion” means.

The section refers to the property being “so destroyed or damaged as to be unfit for occupation as a dwelling house.” I am inclined to think that on its proper construction it is referring to unfitness at the date of rescission.

Unfitness involves an assessment of the degree of damage. It may be, as counsel for the plaintiff submitted, that it does not matter whether the damage was all caused by the flood or partly by the flood and partly by work subsequently undertaken by the defendant.

Counsel for the defendant has pointed to the shortness of time available to his client to respond to the application and the absence of a full report on the extent of the damage. Whether the property was rendered unfit for occupation as a dwelling house by the time the notice of rescission was given, whether the damage is able to be rectified, and how long rectification will take are all matters which would require evidence. They are, in my opinion, matters strongly arguably relevant to the assessment of unfitness.

Counsel for the defendant submitted that his client ought to be given the opportunity to lead evidence on these matters at trial.

Counsel for the plaintiff relied heavily on Georgeson v. Palmos.[8] That concerned the lease of commercial premises for use as “a modern coffee shop and restaurant in conjunction with a retail business for the sale of coffee, tea and similar lines and also cakes, scones, confectionary, cigars, cigarettes, matches and tobacco and for no other purpose.”

Clause 10 of the lease provided for an abatement of rent in the case of destruction or damage subject to this proviso: “provided always that in the event of the demised premises or any part being destroyed or so damaged as to be wholly unfit for occupation or use for the purposes for which the premises were demised either of the parties hereto may at their option terminate the tenancy hereby agreed to be created by giving to the other fourteen days notice in writing to that effect.”

There was a fire in the premises. The Trial Judge found that the damage done by the fire and by the steps taken to quell it reduced the premises to such a state that for a time which could not be regarded as negligible the only purpose for which they could be occupied was to repair the damage that had been done in order to render them fit for use again, and that for that time occupation was not possible for any of the purposes for which the premises were demised.

By making some temporary repairs it was possible for the tenant to open a retail shop (a counter on the street front for restricted business) within 14 days of the fire. It was possible only to sell cigarettes and matches and the like from that counter.

The tenant refused to deliver up possession. The question before the Court was whether the premises were wholly unfit within the meaning of the proviso. It concluded that the premises were wholly unfit for occupation and use for the purposes specified, and that the applicability of the proviso could not depend on estimates of time and costs for carrying out repairs necessary to restore the premises to a state fit for such occupation and use.

While that case is helpful, particularly to the plaintiff, it may be able to be distinguished in the present case. It was concerned with a lease where the tenure was of limited duration and there was provision for abatement of the rent.

Here, the case is concerned with the sale of the fee simple in a property.

There are legal questions and related factual questions about the application of section 64, including the date at which unfitness must be established, the meaning of unfitness and the relevance, if any, of the damage being capable of repair.

In my view, these are matters which should go to trial.

Counsel for the plaintiff also told the Court that occupation of the premises at the moment would be illegal under statutory provisions relating to fire safety and other safety and health aspects. He referred to the Fire and Rescue Service Act 1990 (Qld) and the Building Act 1975 (Qld). Counsel for the defendant submitted that not having had notice of such arguments, he was not in a position to respond to them.

In my view, these arguments really support a favourable exercise of the discretion to extend time for completion, but do not provide a basis upon which the Court could or should determine whether the contract has been validly rescinded under section 64 on this application.

At the hearing I expressed concern about the delay and costs inherent in sending this matter to another trial. I remain concerned about those matters. However, there are questions of fact and law which cannot be determined in a summary fashion. I am satisfied that the plaintiff would be adequately protected by an order extending the date for completion without prejudice to her right to maintain that the contract has been validly rescinded.

I will hear the parties on the form of the order and on costs.

Queensland Supreme Court

Decision delivered on 28 April 2011

Community schemes — Where plaintiff and defendant executed a put and call option deed relating to land on which a dwelling, swimming pool and tennis court were constructed — Where the land comprised two lots on one indefeasible title — Where the plaintiff sought to withdraw her offer to purchase pursuant to the then s 365(3) of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 as a result of the vendor's failure to comply with the warning statement provisions of the Act — Whether the vendor needed to comply with the consumer protection provisions of the Act — Whether the lot was "residential property" as defined in s 17(1)(a) of the Act — Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000: s 17(1)(a).

The plaintiff purchaser executed a put and call option deed with the defendant vendor in respect of two adjoining lots on which a dwelling, swimming pool and tennis court were constructed. At the time the deed was executed, there was a single indefeasible title for the two lots and the dwelling, swimming pool and tennis court were built across both lots.

Clause 1A of the deed provided that the deposit was to be released to the vendor after a signed copy of the deed had been delivered to the purchaser. The deposit was expressed to be non-refundable unless the vendor was in default of its obligations under the deed or the contract. The purchaser sent the deed and the deposit to the vendor and the vendor complied with cl 1A.

Subsequently the purchaser sought to withdraw her offer to purchase pursuant to the then s 365(3) of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 as a result of the vendor's failure to comply with the warning statement provisions of the Act. However, the vendor later purported to exercise the put option. When the purchaser failed to complete, the vendor sought to terminate the contract for the purchaser's breach and resold the land to a third party.

In these proceedings, the purchaser was seeking a refund of the deposit paid under the deed. The vendor claimed that the Act did not apply to the transaction as the land was not "residential property" within the meaning of s 17 of the Act as the two lots were two parcels of land. "Residential property" is defined in s 17(1) of the Act as inter alia, "a single parcel of land on which a place of residence is constructed or being constructed …". "Place of residence" is defined in Sch 2 of the Act as a building used, or currently designed for use, as a single dwelling and any outbuildings or other appurtenances incidental to the use of the building. The purchaser countered that the land was residential property as the two lots were a single parcel and were used as such by the residents.

The vendor counterclaimed for the shortfall on the resale of the land plus the expenses of resale which was agreed at $2.1 million.

Held: For the plaintiff.

1. The definition of "residential property" in the Act is critical for determining whether the consumer protection rights that are conferred under the Act on purchasers of residential property apply in a particular case. The words "a single parcel of land" are descriptive rather than technical. Those words take their meaning from the balance of the definition in s 17(1) of the Act and the definition of "place of residence" which concentrates on the use to which the parcel of land is or can be put and, where there is a place of residence that has been or is being constructed, whether it is built on land that is properly characterised for the purpose of the definition in s 17(1)(a) of the Act as a single parcel of land.

As both lots were used as one parcel of land for the residence and appurtenances that were constructed on them, the two lots comprised a single parcel of land for the purposes of s

[140346]

17(1) of the Act. Consequently, the deed related to residential property and was therefore a relevant contract for the purposes of the Act.

2. Further, in Cheree-Ann Property Developers Pty Ltd & Anor v East West International Development Pty Ltd [2007] 1 Qd 132 it was noted in passing that a parcel could comprise more than one registered lot, if they adjoined and were intended to be used for the construction of one place of residence.

DA Savage SC (instructed by Morgan Conley) for the plaintiff.

MR Bland (instructed by Reichman Lawyers) for the defendant.

Before: Mullins J.

Mullins J:

1. On 7 May 2008 the plaintiff executed a put and call option (the deed) with the defendant who was the owner of land described as Lots 17 and 18 on CP WD5294 in the Parish of Gilston. At all material times a residential dwelling, swimming pool and tennis court were constructed on the land. The plaintiff's solicitor sent the deed together with the call option fee and security deposit payable under the deed of a total sum of $250,000 to the defendant's solicitors on 8 May 2008. On 12 May 2008 the defendant executed the deed and the defendant's solicitors sent the deed to the plaintiff's solicitor and requested confirmation that the call option fee and security deposit paid by the plaintiff under the deed could be released to the defendant.

2. Clause 1A of the deed provided:

> "The Grantee must pay the Security Deposit to the Depositholder when the Grantee signs this Deed, which amount is non-refundable unless the Grantor is in default of its obligations under this Deed or the Contract, and the Depositholder is authorised to release and pay it to the Grantor immediately after a fully executed copy of this Deed has been delivered to the Grantee."

3. On 14 May 2008 the plaintiff's solicitor wrote to the defendant's solicitors in the following terms:

> "I refer to previous communications in relation to this matter and confirm that it is in order for you to account to the Grantor for the Security Deposit in terms of clause 1A of the Put and Call Option document".

4. The plaintiff's solicitor wrote two letters to the defendant on 13 October 2008 seeking either to terminate the deed under s 367(2) of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 (the Act) or to withdraw her offer to purchase the land under s 365(3) of the Act. (Reprint No 3A was the relevant version of the Act that was in force at the time the parties signed the deed.)

5. On 17 October 2008 the defendant's solicitors wrote to the plaintiff's solicitor purporting to exercise the put option conferred by the deed. The defendant was ready and willing to complete the transaction of 20 November 2008, but the plaintiff did not complete. On 28 January 2009 the defendant's solicitors sought to terminate the contact for the plaintiff's breach and the defendant then resold the land.

6. The plaintiff commenced this proceeding to seek a refund of the deposit paid under the deed. The defendant has counterclaimed for the shortfall on the resale of the land plus the expenses of resale which are agreed at $2.1m.

7. There are no facts in dispute. It is common ground that, if the deed were a relevant contract for the purpose of chapter 11 of the Act, the plaintiff neither received from the defendant the warning statement and the deed in the manner required by parts 1 and 2 of chapter 11 of the Act, nor was the plaintiff's attention drawn to the warning statement in the manner specified in the Act. The parties are now agreed that, if the plaintiff were entitled to exercise any right under the Act, it would have been the right under s 365(3) to withdraw the offer to purchase. The issues that are raised by the proceeding are therefore:

> (a) whether the subject land is residential property within the meaning of s 17 of the Act; and
> [140347]
>
> (b) if so, whether the plaintiff waived her entitlement under s 365(3) of the Act to withdraw the offer to purchase, as a result of the plaintiff's solicitor's letter dated 14 May 2008 sent to the defendant's solicitors.

Did the deed relate to residential property?

8. Chapter 11 of the Act contains consumer protection provisions for buyers of residential property. The provisions apply to a "relevant contract" which is relevantly defined in s 364 of the Act to mean a contract for the sale of residential property.

9. The definition of "residential property" is found in s 17(1) of the Act:

> "Property is residential property if the property is
>
> > (a) a single parcel of land on which a place of residence is constructed or being constructed; or > > (b) a single parcel of vacant land in a residential area".

10. There is no definition of "parcel" in the Act. There is a definition of "place of residence" in schedule 2 to the Act which relevantly means a building used, or currently designed for use, as a single dwelling and any outbuildings or other appurtenances incidental to the use of the building.

11. The subject land comprises two adjoining reverse hatchet lots on a registered plan of subdivision that together have a total area of 2531m^2. The land has a street frontage on its eastern boundary and adjoins the Nerang River on its western boundary. The photographs and plans included in the valuation (exhibit 5) show that at the relevant time the house, tennis court and swimming pool were constructed across both lots and the tennis court and the swimming pool were used in conjunction with the house. A single indefeasible title had been issued by the Registrar under the Land Title Act 1994 (LTA) for the two lots.

12. The title search for the subject land shows that the title was created on 17 December 1982 which would have coincided with the registration of Crown Plan WD5294. The issue of a single title for Lots 17 and 18 may therefore have occurred prior to the commencement of the LTA. That single indefeasible title may not have been issued by the Registrar in exercise of the discretion under s 39(1) of the LTA, as suggested by the parties during submissions in this proceeding. Whatever power had been exercised that resulted in the single indefeasible title, it is relevant is that at the time the deed was executed by the plaintiff there was a single indefeasible title for the two lots.

13. The plaintiff's contention is that on the evidence the two lots are a single parcel and were used as such by the residents. Reliance is placed on an observation which I made in Cheree-Ann Property Developers Pty Ltd & Anor v East West International Development Pty Ltd [2007] 1 Qd R 132 (Cheree-Ann) at [55]:

> It is consistent with the genesis of chapter 11 and the consumer protection purpose sought to be achieved by the imposition of additional statutory requirements in relation to contracts for the sale of residential property that the word 'single' is used to describe the parcel of land that must be the subject matter of the contract before chapter 11 of the Act will apply. Although 'parcel of land' is not defined in the Act, it takes its meaning from the context of s 17(1) of the Act. Conceivably a parcel could comprise more than one registered lot, if they adjoined and were intended to be used for the construction of one place of residence."

14. This observation was made in Cheree-Ann in dealing with one of the arguments advanced in that case which was based on the definition of "residential property" in s 17(1) of the Act. The Court of Appeal in Vale 1 Pty Ltd as Trustee for the Vale 1 Trust v Delorain Pty Ltd as Trustee for the Delorain Trust [2010] QCA 259 (Vale v Delorain) at [1], [7], [73] and [89] did not follow Cheree-Ann to the extent that the decision was based on the conclusion that the substance of the subject agreements was to provide stock for the purchasers as property marketers and the agreements could therefore not be characterised as contracts for the sale of the property. The Court of Appeal in Vale v Delorain at [42] and [73] did not disapprove the other basis for the decision in Cheree-Ann which relied on the definition of "residential property." The specific comment made at [55] of Cheree-Ann suggesting that a parcel could comprise more than one registered lot if the lots were adjoining and intended for use for the one place of residence did not relate to the facts of Cheree-Ann and was therefore not essential for the decision.

15. The defendant contends that Lots 17 and 18 are two parcels of land. The defendant relies on the definition of "lot" in schedule 2 to the LTA as "a separate, distinct parcel of land created on the registration of a plan of subdivision." The defendant suggests that the explanation for the use of the word "parcel" arises from the mischief that chapter 11 was originally enacted to remedy which was the sale of residential property by unscrupulous property marketeers who may have used the tactic of selling a parcel of residential property off an unregistered plan with settlement to occur 30 days after the registration of the plan. The defendant therefore submits that neither the creation of a single indefeasible title for Lots 17 and 18 nor the construction of a single place of residence across both lots converted the subject land into a single parcel, as it remained divided into two lots that are shown as such on Crown Plan WD5294.

16. The definition of "lot" in schedule 2 to the LTA is for the purpose of the use of the word "lot" in the LTA: see s 4 LTA. It is of note that the legislature chose not to use the word or description "lot" for defining a residential property in s 17(1) of the Act. The definition of "residential property" is critical for determining whether the consumer protection rights that are conferred under chapter 11 of the Act on purchasers of residential property apply in a particular case. The words "a single parcel of land" are descriptive rather than technical. Those words take their meaning from the balance of the definition in s 17(1) of the Act including the definition of "place of residence" which concentrates on the use to which the parcel of land is or can be put and, where there is a place of residence that has been or is being constructed, whether it is built on land that is properly characterised for the purpose of the definition in s 17(1)(a) of the Act as a single parcel of land. The parcel of land accommodated the curtilage of the residence in addition to the residence and the appurtenances.

17. The defendant's submission merely equates "lot" for "parcel" and gives no significance to the legislature's choice of the word "parcel." The vice of the property marketeers was originally addressed by the introduction in chapter 11 of the requirement of warning statements and cooling off periods. I remain of the same opinion that I expressed in passing in Cheree-Ann in the last sentence of [55]. The single indefeasible title for Lots 17 and 18 is consistent with treating them as comprising a single parcel of land, but I did not find that fact decisive of the issue. As Lots 17 and 18 were used as one parcel of land for the residence and appurtenances that were constructed on them, the two lots comprised a single parcel of land for the purpose of s 17(1)(a) of the Act. That has the consequence that the deed related to residential property and was therefore a relevant contract for the purpose of chapter 11 of the Act.

Did the plaintiff waive her right to withdraw from the deed?

18. The right that the plaintiff claims she was entitled to exercise is that conferred by s 365(3) of the Act:

> "Without limiting how the buyer may withdraw the offer to purchase made in the contract form, the buyer may withdraw the offer at any time before being bound by the relevant contract under subsection (1) by giving written notice of withdrawal, including notice by fax to the seller or the seller's agent."

19. The defendant submits that, if the deed were a relevant contract for the purposes of the Act, the plaintiff's solicitor's letter dated 14 May 2008 waived the plaintiff's right to withdraw the offer to purchase arising from any non-compliance by the defendant with s 365(2) of the Act.

20. The parties referred to a number of authorities concerning the application of chapter 11 of the Act. Chapter 11 was substantially amended by part 5 of the Liquor and Other Acts Amendment Act 2005 (the 2005 amendments). These amendments addressed concerns raised by, and as a result of, the Court of Appeal decision in MNM Developments Pty Ltd v Gerrard [2005] 2 Qd R 515: see the reasons given for the Bill in the Explanatory

Notes. In relation to some of the authorities, the statements of principle found in the judgments have to be considered by reference to whether the judgment was given in respect of the Act as it stood either before or after the 2005 amendments.

21. The issue of waiver of a right of termination conferred by the Act (before the 2005 amendments) was considered in M P Management (Aust) Pty Ltd v Churven [2002] QSC 320 (M P Management). The purchaser had purported to terminate the contract on the basis that the warning statement had not been executed and witnessed or dated by the vendor or someone acting for the vendor at the time the purchasers signed the contract nor was it attached as the first and top sheet of the contract. This was not a case where s 365(1) applied to preclude the parties from being bound by the contract. The only statutory right that was in issue was that found in s 367(2) of the Act. Muir J (as his Honour then was) found that the purchaser did not waive its right of termination, because the right to terminate conferred by s 367(2) of the Act was able to be exercised at any time before the contract settled. Muir J explained at [46]:

> "Returning to the question for determination, there is no inconsistency between acknowledging the existence of the contract and taking a step under or in reliance on it on the one hand and the maintenance of the right to terminate conferred by s 367(2), on the other. That provision gives a buyer the right to terminate 'the contract at any time before the contract settles', irrespective of the nature and extent of the performance under the contract and irrespective of the party's conduct by reference to it. Consequently, failure to exercise the right of termination of a contract, even with full knowledge of the right to terminate, is not necessarily inconsistent with acts which acknowledge the continued existence of the contract."

22. In Juniper v Roberts [2007] QSC 379 the purchaser offered to purchase a residential property from the vendors on terms that did not require settlement for two years and entitled the purchaser to take possession on payment of the initial deposit and acceptance of title which the purchaser did within about two weeks of signing the contract (before the 2005 amendments). While in possession the purchaser leased the property to other persons, did some renovations, removed some fixtures and fittings, and advertised the property for sale. Towards the end of the period of two years and shortly before settlement was due, the purchaser gave notice of termination of the contract on the basis there had been a failure to conform with s 366 of the Act which at the relevant time had required the contract to have attached as its first or top sheet the warning statement containing the information set out in s 366(3). This was also not a case where s 365(1) precluded the parties from being bound to the contract. It was argued that the purchaser had waived his right to terminate the contract under s 367(2) of the Act or elected not to exercise that right by the steps taken by the purchaser under the contract. Douglas J followed the approach of Muir J in M P Management and stated at [13]:

> "Because s 367(2) provides a right to terminate at any time before the contract settles it also seems to me that it is correct to say that there is no occasion to elect between alternative rights in this case. In proceeding with the contract until close to the time for settlement, Mr Juniper did not elect to forego the statutory right to terminate at any time before settlement. Accordingly, there is no occasion to apply the doctrines of waiver or election."

23. It was the purchasers in Blackman v Milne [2006] QSC 350 (Blackman) who wished to enforce the contract (which was entered into after the 2005 amendments) and relied on their express waiver of the right conferred by s 365(2)(c)(ii) of the Act. The vendors were seeking to rely on their agent's failure to direct the purchasers' attention to the warning statement. It was therefore not a case involving any issue of waiver of the statutory right to withdraw the offer to purchase under s 365(3) of the Act. To the contrary, Douglas J concluded at [21] that the purchasers had waived the breach by the vendors and their agent of their statutory obligations to direct the purchasers' attention to the warning statement by affirming the contract, in spite of those breaches, and stated at [20]:

> "It seems to me, therefore, that the right in this case to have the buyers' attention directed to the warning statement was a statutory right created for the buyers' private benefit which they can, by their conduct, waive. That the performance of that obligation also permits sellers to clarify when the parties are bound to a contract does not stop the sellers' breach of the obligation from being characterised as a breach of a statutory right created for the buyers' private benefit."

24. A case in which waiver of the statutory right under s 365(3) of the Act to withdraw the offer to purchase was considered, but was not necessary for the decision, was Hedley Commercial Property Services Pty Ltd v BRCP Oasis Land Pty Ltd [2008] QSC 261 (Hedley). Fryberg J found that the subject contract did not relate to residential property by virtue of the exclusion in the definition in s 17(3)(b)(ii) of the Act. The Court of Appeal in Hedley [2009] QCA 231 dismissed the appeal, upholding the decision that the land was not residential property, as a result of s 17(3)(b)(ii) of the Act, but for different reasons to those of Fryberg J. Although Fryberg J considered the alternative arguments canvassed before him, the Court of Appeal at [55] decided they were hypothetical and that it was not necessary or appropriate to consider them.

25. Hedley concerned a call and put option deed signed by the parties after the 2005 amendments. If it were a relevant contract, Fryberg J found at [101] that the purchaser had waived any right under s 365(3) of the Act to withdraw its offer. Fryberg J did note, however, at [103] that no argument was addressed as to whether the right under s 365(3) was of such a nature as to be incapable of being waived.

26. The finding made by Fryberg J in Hedley was assisted by the admission that was made by the purchaser that the act that constituted the waiver was intended to convey to the vendor and the Office of Fair Trading that it was a party to a binding contract. After the parties had exchanged part and counterpart of the subject deed, the solicitor for the vendor applied to the Office on behalf of the vendor for exemption from ss 8, 9, 10A and 11 of the Land Sales Act 1984. The application informed the Office that the vendor had granted the purchaser an option to buy the subject land. The Office issued a requisition for the consent of the purchaser to the exemptions applied for by the vendor. The purchaser signed the consent identifying itself as a party to the subject deed with the vendor. Fryberg J found at [100] that conveying the consent to the vendor for forwarding to the Office with the intent to convey to both the vendor and the Office that it was a party to a binding contract was inconsistent with retaining an option not to be bound by the deed.

27. As illustrated by the authorities summarised above, waiver arises where a person who is entitled to alternative rights inconsistent with one another makes an election between the rights: see also Sargent v ASL Developments Ltd(1974) 131 CLR 634, 641, 645, 646, 655 and 658. It is not easy to analyse what occurred between the plaintiff and the defendant in this matter in terms of inconsistent rights, when the effect of s 365(1) of the Act was that they were not bound by the deed, because of the failure of the defendant to comply with s 365(2) of the Act. Apart from statutory rights, there was no binding contract to source the rights.

28. This is a very different case to Blackman where it was the purchasers who waived the right conferred by s 365(2)(c)(ii) of the Act to prevent the vendors from relying on their non-compliance with that provision. It makes sense to characterise the purchaser's right to receive the warning statement in the manner specified by s 365(2) of the Act when the relevant contract has been signed by both parties as a statutory right created for the purchaser's private benefit which can be waived expressly by the purchaser to enable the purchaser to obtain the benefit of having both parties bound by the relevant contract.

29. Unlike the purchasers' conduct in Blackman, it is difficult to characterise the plaintiff's solicitor's letter of 14 May 2008 as referable to the exercise of an election in relation to any statutory right. The letter authorising the release of the deposit amounts followed from the parties having signed the deed and the plaintiff having paid the total sum of $250,000 on account of the call option fee and the security deposit. Although the parties referred to the terms of clause 1A of the deed in the context of the plaintiff's authorising the release of the sum to the defendant, the deed was not, in fact, binding on the parties by virtue of s 365(1) of the Act. The release of the deposit which followed immediately on the payment was not the exercise of any right, as such, by the plaintiff pursuant to the deed or to assert a right that was inconsistent with the statutory right under s 365(3) of the Act. Unlike the purchaser in Hedley which asserted in a form required by the Office of Fair Trading that it was the purchaser under the subject deed made with the admitted intention of conveying that it was a party to a binding contract, the act of the plaintiff's solicitor was not made with any such intention. To characterise the letter of the plaintiff's solicitor sent within a day or two days after the deed signed by both parties had been received by the plaintiff's solicitor, and without any attention being given to the operation of s 365 of the Act, would negate the beneficial operation of the consumer protection provisions found in s 365 of the Act.

30. I am therefore not satisfied that in the circumstances the authorisation by the plaintiff, as a result of her solicitor's letter dated 14 May 2008 to release the deposit to the defendant, as anticipated by clause 1A of the deed, amounted to an election by the plaintiff in respect of inconsistent rights. I find that the plaintiff did not by her solicitor's letter dated 14 May 2008 waive her entitlement under s 365(3) of the Act to withdraw the offer to purchase Lots 17 and 18.
