(e) in around 2001 the Central and Eastern Neighbourhoods installed a watering system which extended onto Lot 16, the pump for which was connected to the power supply system. The watering system leaked at various locations which caused erosion and impacted on the stability of the surface in front of the berths. This, Mr Watson thought, impacted upon the conduits and the retaining walls.

524. In December 2004, the supermarket was completed. By this time, the extensions to the hotel had also been commenced. Mr Brockwell did electrical work in both these buildings. This work was linked to the existing 200kVA transformer.

525. Thereafter the hotel began to experience brownouts. No brownouts had been experienced before the extensions to the hotel and supermarket were built. A brownout is a situation in which the voltage through an electrical system is reduced because demand for the supply of electricity is greater than the supply capacity. It is a condition that causes a consumer's electrical devices to struggle, and in a lot of instances to fail, due to the weakness of the voltage.

526. On 13 May 2005, Mr Brockwell provided Mr Jarman with a report in relation to the supply capacity of electricity, which stated: "Substation is now at peak load and needs urgent upgrade".

527. Mr Jarman spoke about the electricity supply issues at a community association meeting held on 14 May 2005. The minutes record him saying that "there was a concern that the current supply would not [sic] be insufficient to supply future demand especially when the complex was full of owners, guests and visitors". In cross-examination, Mr Jarman said the word "not" was a typographical error. It obviously was. Mr Jarman tabled Mr Brockwell's report at another meeting of the community association held on 18 June 2005.

528. In December 2005, the CTTT made orders requiring the compulsorily appointed manager to obtain "as soon as possible a report from an electrical engineer into the safety and adequacy of the electricity facilities and services to the entire community scheme (excluding the independently installed systems to lots 12 and 13). Mr Brockwell performed this task.

529. On 1 February 2006, Mr Brockwell sent his report to Mr Patterson, the compulsorily appointed manager. It was to much the same effect as his May 2005 report. It stated: "Substation is overloaded and is experiencing brownouts" and "Existing substation is at peak load and requires upgrading to 500kVA".

530. During the period of compulsory management in 2006, the Brockwell works were commissioned and commenced. In lieu of the 200kVA transformer and single meter on Lot 15, a 500kVA transformer was installed on community property as was a shed containing a distribution board with individual meters for lots and copper cabling was purchased. The individual meters are not yet connected to the mooring lots. When the connection is made, the existing meters will become redundant. The payments for this work and the materials were from community association funds.

First alleged breach: exceeding maximum demand by development on Lots 14 and 15

531. The plaintiffs submit that:

> (a) the original developers are obliged by cl 1.2.1 of the community development contract to provide electricity to all the facilities shown in Plan 4 which require electricity;
> (b) when new facilities are developed, the developers must ensure that electricity services are provided. If new facilities divert, drain and create demand on power already being supplied, the developers have to provide properly for electricity to all facilities;
> (c) in developing the extensions to the hotel and the supermarket, the developers created a demand for power which exceeded supply. In order to properly facilitate supply they must provide services to meet the full demand. They have failed to do so.

532. As described above, in 1996 Mr Watson upgraded the 25kVA transformer to a 200kVA transformer to power a further 67 houseboat berths, a restaurant and a sewerage pump out station. The plaintiffs submit that by upgrading the transformer, rather than continuing to use the 25kVA, Mr Watson "recognised his obligation to maintain existing supply when providing for the next stage of development". They submit that this was the same obligation which arose at the time of the construction of the supermarket and hotel extensions; and thus the developers were obliged to upgrade the transformer to accommodate the new parts of the development.

533. The facilities for which power is supplied by the transformer are: the mooring berths; the pump out station; the hotel; the supermarket; and other associated communal facilities such as pumps. The supermarket, hotel and council pump out facility each have 100 amp circuit breakers. This totals 300 amps. For marina installations, maximum demand can be calculated by the "calculation" method in section 2.2.1.2 of the Australian Standard AS 3004-1993 "Electrical installations — Marinas and pleasure craft at low voltage". For an 85 berth marina, the maximum demand is 107 amps. Added together, 300 plus 107 gives a total of 407 amps. There are 1.33 amps to a kVA. Approximately 407 amps gives over 300 kVA, which exceeds the capacity of a 200 kVA transformer.

534. The evidence of Mr Wilson, the plaintiffs' electrical expert, establishes that about 320kVA on a 200kVA transformer would be likely to manifest as brown-outs.

535. It is common ground that after the hotel and supermarket were constructed, more than 200kVA power was being drawn from the electrical supply and the hotel experienced brown-outs.

536. The developers submit that:

> (a) assuming they are obliged to provide electricity to all the facilities shown on Plan 4 which required it (which they dispute), those plans did not oblige or contemplate the provision of a hotel and supermarket, let alone a supermarket that contains commercial fridges and a laundromat, both of which draw heavily on electrical supply. Therefore, they say, any inadequacy arising out of something developed beyond the scope of those plans is not their liability;
> (b) the developers did not develop the hotel and supermarket. Rather, they were developed by the O'Briens, who purchased the business and the land thereon, including some neighbouring land, and a hotel license. It was the O'Briens who applied to develop the land, and did so in 2004. This included the electrical work. The O'Briens converted the existing general store, which Mr Wilson thought would draw about 40kVA, when they were obliged to construct a general store only. This resulted in the capacity of the 200 kVA transformer being exceeded.

537. The developers' submission that the O'Briens were "obliged to construct a general store only" requires examination. It is based upon cl 31.5 of the contract of sale of what is now Lot 15 of October 2004 by the developers to Mr and Mr O'Brien which provided that the purchasers must "erect on the land within 12 months of the date of the Contract a general store in accordance with the Development Consent issued by the Shire of Murray". The developers' argument is that if the purchasers had merely put in a general store then the transformer would have continued to be adequate. However, they say, the purchasers went further and expanded the hotel/restaurant and put in a supermarket, which was the cause of the inadequacy of the transformer and the brownouts.

538. I am unable to accept the developers' submission. The unchallenged evidence of Mr O'Brien, which I accept, was that:

> (a) he agreed with the developers that if he could get a general hotel licence for the premises he would lodge a development application to extend the hotel and build a separate supermarket;
> (b) he subsequently purchased a general hotel licence and, accordingly, lodged DA 049/04 which was approved by the council in June 2004, apparently for an extension of the hotel and the building of a separate supermarket;
> (c) he then entered into a contract in October 2004 with the developers to acquire Lot 15. The purchase price was low ($5,000) because it was his responsibility to build the supermarket and extend the hotel and the developers told him they believed that work > would improve the value of their land for residential development within the scheme.

539. In context, the reference to "Development Consent" in cl 31.5 of the October 2004 contract appears to be a reference to the June 2004 development consent 049/04 and, according to Mr O'Brien's evidence, the reference to "general store" in cl 31.5 of the sale contract appears to be inaccurate. Be that as it may, by agreeing with Mr O'Brien that he would extend the hotel and construct the supermarket in exchange for their selling the land to him for a low price, the developers created the situation where the extension of the hotel and construction of the supermarket occurred. That led to the transformer becoming inadequate.

540. In my opinion, in the circumstances, the original developers are in breach of contract as alleged. The measure of damages, in my opinion, is the cost of the 500kVA transformer which was installed during the period of compulsory management.

541. The developers plead a defence to this claim under s 14 of the Limitation Act 1969. This defence appears to have been abandoned during final oral submissions. In any case I would, first, not accept that defence for the reasons which I gave when considering the same defence in the context of the claim in relation to the sealing of the carpark and access road (see [506] above); and secondly, because the cause of action did not arise until the hotel was extended and the supermarket constructed, which is within the limitation period.

Second alleged breach: metering

542. The second alleged breach concerns the situation whereby electricity was delivered to the Deep Creek Marina by the electrical supplier to a single meter located on Lot 15. The electricity was then on-supplied via submains from that meter to the supermarket and hotel and to four distribution boards on Lot 16. From these distribution boards the power was supplied through check meters located on the distribution boards to the final sub-circuits powering the individual mooring lots.

543. The plaintiffs submit that:

> (a) section 72 of the Electricity Supply Act 1992 prohibits the on-selling of power. This requires individual metering in accordance with the provisions of the NSW Service and Installation Rules. These meters are to be located in an accessible area on common property;
> (b) in the present case there was no individual metering;
> (c) that was a breach of cl 1.2.1 of the development contracts or, alternatively, a breach of the developers' obligation to provide all electrical services with care, diligence and skill. The onus is on a promisee to provide evidence that the promisor has not exercised the requisite degree of care, diligence or skill in order to make out a prima facie case: Hobbs v Petersham Transport Co Pty Limited (1971) 124 CLR 220 at 229-230 per Barwick CJ;

(d) the developers ceased to assume responsibility for the receipt of the single bill being received for the one supply authority meter in about August 2005.

544. As I understand it, the plaintiffs' argument essentially is that the electricity was being channelled through the transformer and meter that used to be located on Lot 15 (the supermarket lot). This was billed by the electrical supplier to Mr O'Brien (or whoever owned Lot 15). Somebody had to come around and inspect it to allocate the charges among the individual lot owners. Because the Electricity Supply Act says that you must not charge for electricity and the best practice now reflected in the NSW Service and Installation Rules requires individual meters on common property, this arrangement was a breach of cl 1.2.1 or, alternatively, a negligent performance of those contractual obligations.

545. The developers submit that:

(a) the plaintiffs' case is really whether the developers supplied the electricity in a careless way (rather than that they have not supplied the electricity). However, the plaintiffs do not plead that the lack of individual metering is a breach of the developers' obligations to provide all electrical services with the necessary degree of care, diligence and skill. The plaintiffs only plead that the electrical services have not been provided;

(b) in any case, s 72 of the Electricity Supply Act contains no requirement that there be individual metering;

(c) the plaintiffs' electrical expert, Mr Robert Wilson, accepted that the original certificates provided by MRE (being the relevant electrical supply authority) show that, so far as they were concerned, the developers were not in any breach of s 72. There is no evidence of any subsequent dissatisfaction by MRE with this arrangement;

(d) there is no evidence that the NSW Services and Installation Rules were, at the date of installation, or at any time thereafter, mandatory (and it does not appear to be alleged that this was the case);

(e) the original certificates provided by MRE establish that, so far they were concerned, the developers were not in breach of any applicable rules of standards (as Mr Wilson accepted); and there is no evidence of any later complaint by Country Energy or any other person, of non-compliance with the NSW Service and Installation Rules;

(f) thus, there being no legal obligation to replace the current metering arrangement, nor any loss suffered by the current metering arrangement, any cost incurred by the plaintiffs in replacing the current metering arrangement does not arise from a breach of the developers' obligations under the development contracts.

546. Section 72 of the Electricity Supply Act 1995 (NSW) provides:

(1) A person to whose premises electricity is supplied under a wholesale supply arrangement or customer supply contract must not charge any other person for the use of electricity so supplied.

Maximum penalty: 200 penalty units (in the case of a corporation) and 50 penalty units (in any other case).

(2) This section does not prohibit a person from imposing a separate charge for the use of a specified service or facility as a result of the fact that the use of that service or facility involves the consumption of electricity.

(3) This section does not prohibit a landlord from imposing a charge for electricity supplied to a tenant if:

(a) the quantity of electricity so supplied is measured by a separate electricity meter that complies with the regulations, and

(b) the charge imposed for the electricity so supplied is no greater than the maximum allowable amount.

(4) A landlord who charges a tenant for electricity supplied to the tenant:

(a) must make such records relating to the electricity so supplied, and
(b) must keep those records for such period, as may be prescribed by the regulations.

(4A) The regulations may, either unconditionally or subject to conditions, exempt:

(a) any specified person or class of persons, or
(b) any specified matter or class of matters, from the operation of subsection (1).

(5) The regulations may require the landlord to furnish the tenant with a copy of any records made under this section.
(6) In this section:

landlord means:

(a) the owner or lessor of any premises, whether business, residential or otherwise, or
(b) the proprietor or operator of the premises of any hotel, motel, inn, hostel, boarding or rooming house, holiday flats or cabins, manufactured home estate, caravan park or campsite or any other premises prescribed by the regulations.

maximum allowable amount, in relation to a quantity of electricity supplied during a specific period, means:

(a) the amount prescribed by or calculated in accordance with the regulations for a similar quantity of electricity supplied during the same period, or tenant includes any person who occupies premises in respect of which some other person is a landlord.

547. The Service and Installation Rules of New South Wales provide:

4.2 Service and metering equipment must be located in an accessible area on common property.

4.2.3 The metering for new multiple occupancy premises will be grouped at the one metering position. Provision should be made to cater for any future metering requirements.

The grouped metering must be in a location accessible to all associated tenants. It must not be located within any one occupancy.

548. In his Community Managers' Report, which was to be tabled at the meeting of the executive committee of the community association on 23 August 2005, Mr John Haydon stated:

Deep Creek Pty Ltd have also terminated an agreement for the supply of electricity to the site, the responsibility for payment now rests with the Community Association, there has been a request for a deposit of $10,000.00 (ten thousand dollars) these funds are not available however we also understand that the hotel/supermarket site consumes 80% of the electricity consumption, this being the case there would be an expectation that that lot owner will contribute 80% of the deposit.

549. The opinion of the plaintiffs' electrical expert Mr Robert Wilson was that, in line with the NSW Service and Installation Rules, the moorings, supermarket and hotel should have always been separately but centrally metered at the main meter board which should have been located on common property. In oral evidence Mr Wilson conceded that the issuing of a certificate such as a Notification of Electrical Work was proof of the satisfactory installation of electrical work; that the original certificates provided by MRE show that, so far as MRE were concerned, the developers had not breached s 72; and that if he were the installer and found a breach of s 72, he would not provide a certification.

550. The developers say that as there is no reference in the Notifications of Electrical Work to s 72 not having been complied with, it is a strong inference that if there had been a breach of s 72, MRE would have identified it. Furthermore, there is no evidence of MRE being dissatisfied with the arrangement. In my view, MRE's certification and Mr Wilson's concessions do not bear on the objective construction of s 72. However, it is clear that MRE has not expressed any concern about the issue.

551. The Service and Installation Rules in evidence were not in force at the relevant time. They commenced in October 2006. In evidence, Mr Wilson said that he had not made any searches for earlier versions of these rules because he only referred to the current version in his report. However, he indicated that between 1995 and the present day the practice reflected in the two provisions of the Service and Installation Rules quoted above reflected best practice. He said that in 1995 those two provisions were generally best practice known to everybody throughout the industry. However, enforcement was the responsibility of the individual suppliers. Here, the individual supplier was MRE.

552. I am inclined to think that there was no breach of s 72. On the evidence, it seems that the Lot 15 owner did not "charge" other persons for the use of electricity supplied to that owner's premises. Rather, there appears to have been a voluntary bill-sharing arrangement whereby other lot owners contributed to MRE's charges to the Lot 15 owner. However, that is not an end to the matter.

553. Clause 1.2.1 of the development contract required the original developers to provide "all" electrical services and cl 1.2.1 of the neighbourhood development contract required all electrical services to be provided to "each" lot.

554. An individual meter for each lot was, in my opinion, one of those electrical services. The contractual obligation was not discharged by providing only one meter to one privately owned lot (Lot 15) — and leaving it to the Lot 15 owner to work out an arrangement with the mooring lot owners as to how the electricity bill might be shared among them. Section 72 turns its face against arrangements where a person in the position of the Lot 15 owner would charge others for electricity on-supplied. The practice reflected in the Service and Installation Rules provides a solution by the installation of individual meters collectively on common property.

555. The community titles legislation and the strata title legislation are analogous in a number of respects. Take as an analogy a conventional residential strata building with 85 strata lots (the same number as the mooring lots in the present case. Suppose that: (a) a strata titles development contract contained a provision equivalent to cl 1.2.1 of the development contracts in the present case; (b) the developer, in purported fulfilment of that contractual obligation, installed one transformer and one meter in one residential strata lot from which electricity was on-supplied to all the other strata lots. The owner of that lot would be in the invidious position of having to enter into an arrangement with other lot owners for them to pay a proportion of his electricity bill and to enter his strata lot to inspect the meter. I think that would be a breach of the developers' contractual obligation. The present situation seems to me to be indistinguishable.

556. In my opinion, failure to supply individual meters was a breach of cl 1.2.1 of the development contracts.

557. The alternative analysis is that it was negligent in the sense of a breach of an implied contractual obligation to provide the electrical services with care, diligence and skill. It is true that the plaintiffs' pleading does not plead its case in that way. However, the report of Mr Wilson with which the developers were served prior to the trial supported such a case; the trial was conducted on both sides as though the matters in Mr Wilson's report were issues in the case; and the pleading point was not taken by the developers until final written submissions. In those circumstances, if it were necessary to decide the claim on the alternative basis, I would be inclined to do so favourably to the plaintiffs. That is, it seems to me to have been negligent to have provided only one meter on Lot 15 and not to have provided individual meters.

Third alleged breach: defects in cable depth

558. The plaintiffs submit that the developers failed to ensure that the cables were laid at an adequate depth of 500 mm prescribed by Australian Standard AS 3000 — 1991.

559. The developers submit:

> (b) Mr Compton's affidavits raise some suggestion that cables at a limited number of locations are not at that depth now, but he recognises that his measurement methods have a significant margin for error and that there are circumstances such as wheel tracks and excavation that would affect the depths over time. Mr Wilson agreed, adding flood as another possible cause, and there has been flooding at the marina.

560. Australian Standard AS 3000 — 1991 "Electrical installations — Buildings, structures and premises" (known as the "SAA Wiring Rules") states minimum depths for laying of underground wiring. Table 3.7 requires cables to be laid 0.5m below ground (other than where the cables are laid under continuous concrete paved areas of a minimum thickness of 75mm).

561. On 14 April 2008, Mr Dennis Compton, an underground cable locater, measured the depths of electrical cables at Deep Creek Marina. He gave evidence that in many locations around Deep Creek cables are buried shallower than 500mm. Mr Compton measured the depths of cables at 47 locations. At 15 of those locations (being Location Numbers 4, 5, 7, 15, 16, 19, 20, 23, 26, 28–32 and 39), the vertical depths of the cables were less than 500mm.

562. To measure cable depth, a transmitter was attached to the cable where it was above ground. The transmitter sent a signal down the cable which a receiver picked up. The receiver was placed on the ground at the point where the strongest signal was received. The machine which measured the depth had an inbuilt margin of error of 20mm.

563. In cross-examination, Mr Compton acknowledged that the location at which the receiver was placed would affect the reading. Where the land was not smooth or flat, for example at Location No 30, Mr Compton acknowledged that it would be fair to say that the reading may change by about 100–200mm if the receiver was moved a few centimetres to the left or right.

564. Mr Compton also acknowledged in cross-examination that the depth of the cable at the date of measurement is not necessarily indicative of the depth at the date the cable was laid. First, the cable itself may have been the subject of further works. Secondly, the level of the ground surface may be affected by works, or other factors such as erosion, irrigation, flooding or wheel tracks. There has been quite significant flooding at Deep Creek at times. These factors may mean that Mr Compton's measurements do not reflect the depths at which the cable was laid. As Mr Compton said in cross-examination: "Any work that's carried out after the pipe or cabling has been put in the ground, anything would affect" the depth of the cabling.

565. In cross-examination, the following exchange occurred between counsel for the developers and Mr Compton:

> Q. …having regard to the factors that you've identified, your report is in fact consistent or not inconsistent with cables having been laid at that location [Location Number 4] at 500 millimetres. That's fair to say?
> A. That's right.
> Q. In respect of all the measurements that were carried out, the same position pertains, doesn't it, namely that having regard to the factors you've identified, your report is consistent with cable being laid in those locations of at least 500 millimetres?
> A. That's right.

566. Mr Watson was present when MES laid the cables. On the basis of his actual observations, he said that all cable laid by MES was at a depth of "at least" 600mm. In cross-examination, Mr Watson said he was there every day of the work, although he may have been away for an hour at a time. He said he did not measure the depths himself, but was "99 per cent sure" that all wire went in at least 600mm.

567. Two documents entitled "Notification of Electrical Work", referred to above at [545] and [549], were tendered, dated 2 December 1994 and 4 April 1996. These Notifications were provided to MRE, an independent supply authority, by the Electrical Contractors Association of NSW. The Notification is a prerequisite to an inspection by MRE.

568. The Notification dated 2 December 1994 was in regards to the connection of electricity to the 18 berths in October 1994. The Notification dated 4 April 1996 was in regards to the connection of electricity to the 67 berths in 1996.

569. After inspecting the electrical work, the MRE inspector wrote "insp ok" (presumably meaning "inspection ok"). Mr Wilson said that the words "insp ok" conveyed to him that it was more likely than not that the electrical work installed at the marina was inspected by MRE and found to be "okay". Mr Wilson said that he had signed a number of certificates such as "Notification of Electrical Works"; that before signing he would always satisfy himself that the cabling had been buried at at least 500 mm; and that he would not have signed a certificate unless satisfied that the cable had at least 500mm of covering.

570. I accept the evidence of Mr Watson and Mr Wilson. I am not satisfied that the cables were installed at a depth which was less than that prescribed by the Australian Standard. The probable explanation for the later measurement of those cables at lesser depths rests with post-installation events. The plaintiffs' claim in relation to the cable depth is rejected.

Damages

571. I turn to the assessment of damages for breach of the electricity provisions of the development contracts. I have allowed two of the electricity claims: the need to upgrade from a 200 kVA to a 500 kVA transformer and the failure to provide individual meters to lots. The plaintiffs claim damages proportionate to their unit liability under the community scheme being 7,707 out of 10,000. The amounts to which they seek to apply this proportion are identified below.

572. First, the plaintiffs claim damages for the upgrade from a 200 kVA transformer to a 500 kVA transformer. The cost incurred by the community association for the latter was $46,110.57. On the proportion that they claim, the plaintiffs are therefore entitled to damages in the sum of $35,537.

573. Secondly, the plaintiffs claim that damages for the non-supply of individual metering should be on the basis of the lump sum quote of $774,302 dated 16 February 2006 by Brolec to the CTTT compulsorily appointed manager, which was discussed in Mr Wilson's report. On the proportion that they claim, the plaintiffs seek damages of $596,754 (7,707/10,000 × $774,302).

574. The Brolec lump sum quote was for the following items:

> 1. Supply of new 500 kva pole mount sub-station mounted at last pole on entrance road before bend. This is a direct cost to client from Country Energy estimate attached.
> 2. New mains supply from substation to new main switchboard and new metering facility in car park rear of Hotel. This facility will meter all Houseboats, Hire boats, Hotel, Supermarket and Public Light and Power.
> 3. New 15a single phase supply cabling to all houseboat moorings (85) plus 2 hire boat moorings.
> 4. All trenching and backfilling required for moorings, street lighting and public power and light.
> 5. Supply of Power head Bollards complete with 2 15a outlets RCD Protected 1 light 2 data/phone outlets key lock cover, 2 intergrated [sic] water meters. Eg. 1 Bollard per 2 moorings.
> 6. All concrete works and shed facility to house main switchboard and metering at one point. Light and power to this facility.

7. Supply of all street lighting and public lighting as required around site and main road entry into deep creek marina.
8. Supply of Power to front gate entry for future signage or lighting.
9. Power under Marina to Island at entry for entry lighting (only possible if we go ahead and dam the river and empty marina).
10. Re-route existing mains supply to Hotel, Supermarket and all auxiliary power to new main board.
11. Disconnect existing redundant services.

Item 1 was excluded from the amount of the quote.

575. The Brolec lump sum quote incorporates a number of items which are irrelevant to the claim for failure to provide individual meters. The relevant items appear to 2, 3, 6, 11 and possibly 10.

576. Only the actual cost of the cabling referred to in item 3 is known. The "2 hire boat moorings" referred to in item 3 were owned by the developers and at one time were kept on the public wharf but are no longer there. The new individual meters can only work if they are connected by 85 cables to the houseboat moorings. On 3 May 2006 Mr Brockwell of Brolec sent an email to the compulsorily appointed manager of the community association recommending that an order for this cabling should be locked in because of a forecast of an imminent rise in the price of copper. The cabling was supplied by Brolec to the community association. The price was $280,313 as recorded in Brolec's invoice dated 3 July 2006 addressed to the community association c/-the compulsorily appointed manager. The community association paid the invoice.

577. Apart from item 3 of Brolec's quote of 16 February 2006, there is substantial difficulty in allocating part of the lump sum quote to the other relevant items in the quote. There are invoices in evidence relating to progress claims, however they are so expressed as to be of no real assistance. The developers submit that the shortcomings in the quantum evidence are such that no damages should be awarded.

578. The new individual meters have been installed in a shed in the carpark, behind the hotel on community property. There is no evidence as to the actual cost of the shed and the meters. However, it is clear from the evidence and the site inspection that their cost must have been substantial. Difficulty in assessing damages is not generally a bar to recovery of the damages: Commonwealth of Australia v Amann Aviation Pty Limited (1991) 174 CLR 64 at 83, 125, 153. The Court should endeavour to do the best it can on the available evidence.

579. On the other hand, apart from item 3 in the Brolec quote, the difficulties in the evidence entitle the Court to take a conservative approach to the quantification of damages in order to ensure that there is no injustice to the developers. In the circumstances, I propose to take a conservative approach and to apportion $50,000 of the Brolec quote to the cost of the individual meters, the shed and any other relevant items. This will be added to the cost of the cabling ($280,313). The total is $330,313. On the proportion claimed by the plaintiffs, damages will be assessed in the sum of $254,572 (7,707/10,000 × $330,313).

580. Aggregating the said sums of $35,537 (for the 500kVA transformer) and $254,572, the plaintiffs should be awarded damages for their electricity claims against Mr Watson and Sammy One in the sum of $290,109.

An elaborate theory of causation

581. For completeness, I should mention that the plaintiffs put forward an elaborate alternative theory of causation of damages to support the proposition that the original developers should pay damages quantified by a reference to a schedule of damages in the sum of $1,111,126.44 plus whatever amount was required to repay the loan raised by the community association's compulsorily appointed manager. However, in final oral submissions the plaintiffs did not press some items in that schedule. The amounts in this schedule appear to relate largely to works commissioned by the compulsorily appointed manager and paid from community association funds (financed by a loan) and (so far as the schedule is pressed) appear to relate to electrical and carpark works.

582. The plaintiffs submit that this damage was caused by the developers' failure to discharge their contractual obligations (discussed earlier) in relation to the electrical works and sealing of the carpark and access road.

583. The steps in the plaintiffs' causation theory are as follows:

> (i) the developers are minority shareholders in the scheme, despite having large interests in neighbouring land;
> (ii) the developers had an overall plan to upgrade the marina and develop neighbouring land, and it was in their interest to upgrade the original marina originally built by the Watson interests;
> (iii) the developers had a number of outstanding obligations in relation to development consent which they were required to do;
> (iv) the developers did not want to pay for the work (both required under the development contract and other development consents);
> (v) the developers were concerned that as a consequence of not complying with conditions of the consent, the council would not approve other developments on adjoining land which they had planned;
> (vi) the developers used access as a tool for negotiation to require community contribution for the payment of these works and engaged in a course of pressure tactics to endeavour to secure their ends;
> (vii) this failing, the developers had a compulsory manager appointed;
> (viii) the compulsory manager was required to comply with a range of orders, specifically drafted by the developers to secure their plans for the marina (but now at 16 percent of the price);
> (ix) the compulsory manager was advised during the process by the developers' lawyers;
> (x) the compulsory manager was advised by the developers' site manager, Mr Jarman;
> (xi) Mr Jarman directed and had significant inputs into works while also having a significant vested interest in the land in Lot 16;
> (xii) the works were conducted against the will of the plaintiffs;
> (xiii) the plaintiffs had the works, being done at their cost, cease on retaining control of the community association;
> (xiv) the developers had brought new CTTT proceedings with a view to restoring the

> 2006 situation whereby a compulsory manager was appointed and performed prescribed work.

584. The plaintiffs are entitled to receive such loss as fairly and reasonably either arises naturally, that is, according to the usual course of things, from the breach of contract, or if it does not so arise, may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties at the time they made the contract as the probable result of the breach of it: Hadley v Baxendale (1854) 9 Exch 341 at 355; St George Bank Ltd v Indigenous Business Australia (2007) 215 FLR 79 (Hammerschlag J). It is unnecessary to pass judgment on the accuracy of the various links in the plaintiffs' alleged chain of causation. In my opinion, even if they were to be proved, the chain is incapable of establishing that the claims for breaches of contract (in relation to electricity and the sealing of the carpark and access road), which I have upheld, caused the claimed damages within either limb of the principle in Hadley v Baxendale.

CLAIM IN RELATION TO TELEPHONE CONNECTIONS

585. The plaintiffs claim that the original developers are in breach of their obligations under cl 1.2.1 of each of the neighbourhood development contracts by failing to provide any telephone services for mooring lots. Clause 1.2.1 relevantly provides that all telephone/telecom services "are to be provided to each lot by the developer". The plaintiffs claim damages of $59,193.20, which is the amount of a quote dated 23 June 2006 from Brolec to the CTTT compulsorily appointed manager for the supply of Telstra telephone conduits, pits and related services to all moorings.

586. It is clear, in my opinion, that the developers provided some but not all telephone services for mooring lots. On the one hand, there is evidence from Mr Bares, which I accept, that he was able to arrange telephone connections for three of his moorings in the Central and Western Neighbourhoods for $100 each. They appear to be connections to the telephone services provided by the developers. Therefore, telephone services appear to have been provided for at least the Western Neighbourhood and the western side of the Central Neighbourhood.

587. On the other hand, there is evidence from Mr Dennis Compton, an underground cable locater, which I accept, that he did not find underground telephone services to moorings on the eastern side of the marina with the exception of one telephone pit. This pit is near the boat ramp and has a connection from behind the supermarket. A connection runs from this pit to the first mooring on the eastern side of the marina. I conclude that telephone services have not been completely provided on the eastern side of the marina, although to precisely what extent is less than clear.

588. The developers submit that a telephone tower near the marina provides full telephone services. The submission is cryptic but I deduce that it is to the effect that the tower enables mobile telephones to be used at the moorings. The submission refers only to a very short piece of evidence by Mr Wilson in cross examination. I am not satisfied that that evidence supports the submission. In any case, I do not think that the contractual obligation is limited to providing telephone services that would only enable mobile telephones to be used.

589. The Brolec quote was for telephone services to all moorings. It therefore appears to be an upgrade so far as concerns telephone services that have already been provided. Consequently, the difficulty in apportioning part of it to the telephone services that have not been provided is such that I propose to take a particularly conservative approach to ensure that there is no injustice to the developers. I apportion $5,000 of the Brolec quote to the telephone services that have not been provided. On the proportion of the plaintiffs' unit liability, I assess damages at $3,853 (7707/10,000 × $5,000).

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE

590. In the Land and Environment Court proceedings the plaintiffs seek specific performance of the development contracts in relation to:

> (a) the construction of the facilities shown in the plan proposed to be annexed to the development contract pursuant to an order under s 70 of the Development Act: see [462]–[464] above;
> [140765]
> (b) the supply of the electricity, telephone, and road and carpark sealing required by the development contracts and considered above: see [476]–[589] above.

591. The developers submit that this is not a proper case for specific performance because:

> (a) it has not been established that damages are not an adequate remedy; and
> (b) the orders sought are not suitable orders for specific performance.

592. The developers also submit that insofar as specific performance is sought for access, access has either already been provided or is in the process of being provided. In that regard they refer to their undertaking to the Court, considered at [472]–[474] above. However, it is unnecessary to consider access relief, given my decision that the foreshore land should become community property pursuant to an order under s 70 of the Development Act.

593. The High Court in Patrick Stevedores Operations No 2 Pty Ltd v Maritime Union of Australia (1998) 195 CLR 1 at [78]–[80] gave general approval to the speech of Lord Hoffmann in Co-operative Insurance Society Ltd v Argyll Stores (Holdings) Ltd [1998] A.C. 1. Lord Hoffman held at 13:

> This is a convenient point at which to distinguish between orders which require a defendant to carry on an activity, such as running a business over or more or less extended period of time, and orders which require him to achieve a result. The possibility of repeated applications for rulings on compliance with the order which arises in the former case does not exist to anything like the same extent in the latter. Even if the achievement of the result is a complicated matter which will take some time, the court, if called upon to rule, only has to examine the finished work and say whether it complies with the order. This point was made in the context of relief against forfeiture in Shiloh Spinners Ltd. v. Harding [1973] A.C. 691. If it is a condition of relief that the tenant should have complied with a repairing covenant, difficulty of supervision need not be an objection. As Lord Wilberforce said, at p. 724:

> what the court has to do is to satisfy itself, ex post facto, that the covenanted work has been done, and it has ample machinery, through certificates, certificates, or by inquiry, to do precisely this.
> This distinction between orders to carry on activities and orders to achieve results explains why the courts have in appropriate circumstances ordered specific performance of building contracts and repairing covenants: see Wolverhampton Corporation v. Emmons [1901] 1 K.B. 515 (building contract) and Jeune v. Queens Cross Properties Ltd [1974] Ch. 97 (repairing covenant). It by no means follows, however, that even obligations to achieve a result will always be enforced by specific performance. There may be other objections…

One of the objections which his Lordship proceeded to consider was imprecision in the terms of the order. He held at 14:

> Precision is of course a question of degree and the courts have shown themselves willing to cope with a certain degree of imprecision in cases of orders requiring the achievement of a result in which the plaintiffs' merits appeared strong; like all the reasons which I have been discussing, it is, taken alone, merely a discretionary matter to be taken into account: see Spry, Equitable Remedies, 4th ed. (1990), p. 112. It is, however, a very important one.

594. The legislative intention for community titles schemes is easily set at nought or diluted unless specific performance is generally available in relation to the statutory covenants in Schedule 2 to the Management Act. The original proprietors thereby covenant to develop land in accordance with the registered community development contract and the development consent, and subsequent proprietors covenant to permit them to do so.

Manager's residence

595. I have explained earlier what facilities I consider should be included in the plan that is to become an appendix to the community development contract pursuant to s 70 of the Development Act: see [462]–[463]. One of those facilities is the manager's residence shown on Lot 16 adjacent to the carpark.

Mr Watson at one point in his evidence stated that the manager's residence shown on Plan 4 (and referred to in the brochure) had now been moved to the top of the supermarket. I reject that evidence. The supermarket is on Lot 15 which is not in the ownership of Mr Watson or the other current owners of Lot 16. Mr Watson's evidence is inconsistent with a statement made by Mr Jarman to a council meeting on 6 October 2005 indicating that the manager's residence on top of the supermarket was not to replace the manager's residence available to the marina at large. When confronted with that statement in cross-examination, Mr Watson conceded that his evidence was incorrect. He agreed that there is no reason why the manager's residence shown on Plan 4 cannot be built. He also agreed that the development contract, as he understood it, provided for an ongoing obligation on the original developers to build it. He said he was unsure when he proposed to build it.

597. In my opinion, an order for specific performance should be made in relation to the manager's residence shown on the plan which is to become an appendix to the community development contract pursuant to s 70 of the Development Act. The importance of the manager's residence to the development was emphasised in the developers' EIS accompanying DA 18/90, quoted at [65] above. The manager's residence appears next to the carpark on what is now Lot 16 on plans accompanying DA 18/90 and 66/92 which I have held were incorporated in the consents thereto. If the manager's residence is not built where indicated on Lot 16 in the development consent plans, the community association would have to find a location for the manager's residence on community property. In the circumstances, that is unreasonable. Damages for breach would also be very difficult to assess and I do not think damages would be an adequate remedy.

598. I disagree with the plaintiffs' proposal that the order should require the original developers to construct a manager's residence. As discussed at [416] above, in my opinion development consents 18/90 and 66/92, insofar as they were concerned with facilities, were on their proper construction for the use of the locations shown on the relevant plans for the facilities shown. They did not authorise construction of the buildings. Construction of buildings would require a further application to the council for approval, for which the council would no doubt require plans and specifications at an appropriate level of detail.

599. An appropriate order, I think, would be to the effect that the developers use all reasonable endeavours to within (say) two years: (a) obtain all necessary approvals for the construction of a manager's residence consistently with the plan which is (to become) appendix 2 to the community development contract; and (b) construct the manager's residence in accordance with the approvals. Anything will suffice that is consistent with the general description of a manager's residence in the general location shown in the plan. This is an order to achieve a result, of which Lord Hoffman spoke in Co-operative Insurance. There should be liberty to apply to allow for the possibility of an appropriate application for a ruling on compliance with the order or for extension of the time for compliance.

Sealing access way and carpark

600. I consider it appropriate to make orders to the effect that the original developers:

> (a) seal the access way with bitumen, to the extent that it has not already been sealed with bitumen, to the satisfaction of the Traffic Committee of the Council of the Shire of Murray;
> (b) seal the carpark with bitumen.

Other matters

601. Apart from the manager's residence and sealing, I accept that damages are an adequate remedy.

602. One of the orders sought by the plaintiffs is an order to "construct or plant, or effect the development of, shelterbelt planting". Shelterbelt planting is a landscaping requirement. By-law 4.5.2 of the community management statement states "the developer is responsible for the landscaping of community property only". The developers did plant shelterbelt on the community property along the access road. The plants died because they were not watered by the community association. If there remains any breach of a planting obligation, I think that damages are an adequate remedy.

CONCLUSION

603. In summary, in the Supreme Court proceedings I have held that the plaintiffs are entitled to relief to the following effect under s 70 of the Development Act:

> (a) conversion into community property of the land shown in annexure H hereto, with the possible exception of the public wharf as to which I will hear the parties: see [465], [467]–[468] above;
> (b) amendments to the development contracts to provide for annexation of a modified version of annexure J hereto and related amendments to the text of the development contracts and community management statement: see [462]–[464], [466] above.

604. In summary, in the Land and Environment Court proceedings I have held that the plaintiffs are entitled to:

> (a) orders for specific performance to the effect that the defendants —
> > (ii) seal the carpark with bitumen: see [600] above;
> > (iii) use all reasonable endeavours to obtain all necessary approvals for the construction of a manager's residence consistently with, and in the location shown on, the plan which is to become part of the development contracts (a modified version of annexure J to this judgment: see [599] above;
> (b) damages for breach of the electricity and telephone provisions of the development contracts in the total sum of $293,962: see [572], [579] and [589] above.

605. There should be liberty to apply in both proceedings.

606. I will hear the parties as to the form of relief and, if not agreed, costs. Subject to hearing the parties, it seems to me that the developers should pay the plaintiffs' costs. The parties are to bring in agreed or competing short minutes of orders in both proceedings to give effect to my decisions.

(2008) LQCS ¶90-146; Court citation: [2007] NSWCA 272

New South Wales Supreme Court of Appeal

4 October 2007

Strata Schemes — Common property — Identification of boundaries of strata lot — Boundaries of strata lot fixed at date of registration of strata plan — Whether notation on floor plan described lower horizontal boundary — Whether upper surface of floor included waterproof membrane and tiles — Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1973 (NSW): s 5(2) — Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW): s 62.

This was an appeal from Seiwa Pty Ltd v Owners Strata Plan 35042 [2006] NSWSC 1157.

The respondent Seiwa Australia Pty Ltd was the registered proprietor of a lot comprising the top floor of a residential unit block. At first instance, the respondent successfully argued that the appellant, Owners Corporation, breached s 62 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 by failing to maintain and keep in a state of good and serviceable repair that part of the common property comprising the tiles and underlying waterproof membrane that sealed the concrete floor of an external uncovered terrace of the respondent's unit. The Owners Corporation denied that the membrane was part of the common property.

The key issue on appeal was whether the membrane and the tiles covering the terrace were part of the common property or part of the respondent's lot, which required the identification of the lower horizontal boundary of the respondent's lot. The membrane and tiles were affixed to the upper surface of the concrete floor prior to registration of the relevant strata plan. A notation on the strata plan in respect of the terrace stated:

> "TERRACE LIMITED IN HEIGHT TO 2.5 ABOVE THE UPPER SURFACE OF THE CONCRETE FLOOR THEREOF EXCEPT WHERE COVERED".

The appellant submitted that:

- the notation constituted a description of the boundary within the meaning of s 5(2)(b) of the NSW Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1973
- the lower horizontal boundary (in respect of the terrace) was the upper surface of the concrete floor (not including the tiles and membrane) that supported the terrace and the internal space of the unit.

The primary judge rejected the submission that the notation referred to the lower horizontal boundary of the respondent's lot, and held that:

- the notation sought only to describe the upper horizontal boundary of the cubic space, the base of which was the terrace
- pursuant to s 5(2)(a)(ii), the lower horizontal boundary was the upper surface of the ceramic tiles.

Held: Appeal dismissed.

1. The primary judge was correct in finding that the notation sought only to describe the upper horizontal boundary of the cubic space the base of which was the terrace, and not the lower horizontal boundary. The lower horizontal boundary was defined by s 5(2)(a)(ii), being the upper surface of the floor (including the membrane and tiles).

2. The exception to s 5(2)(a) provided for in s 5(2)(b) requires the relevant boundary to be described in the prescribed manner by reference to a physical datum point being a wall, floor or ceiling (eg the upper surface of a concrete floor). It does not require the boundary to be described by reference to a wall, floor or ceiling that comprises a vertical or horizontal boundary (although it may).

3. Where s 5(2)(a)(ii) defines the lower horizontal boundary of a cubic space as the upper surface of the floor, that boundary is fixed as at the date of registration of the strata plan, ie:

- if a tile or timber floor has been affixed to the concrete slab at the registration date, the upper surface of the floor is the upper surface of the tiles or timber
- if the floor is subsequently removed and replaced, the upper surface of the floor remains the upper surface of the original covering.

Disputes regarding responsibility for repairs and maintenance can be avoided by utilising s 5(2)(b) to fully and clearly describe the relevant boundaries of the cubic space or spaces forming each lot of the strata plan.

Bradford (instructed by Alex Ilkin & Co) for the appellant.

M Young (instructed by Dixon Holmes Du Pont) for the respondent.

Before: Giles, Tobias and Basten JJA.

Giles JA: I agree with Tobias JA.

Tobias JA: This appeal raises an important question with respect to the identification of the upper and lower horizontal boundaries of a lot in a strata scheme where there is a dispute as to whether the physical features of that boundary form part of that lot or the common property. In the context of the present case, the issue arises in the following manner.

3. The respondent is the proprietor of Lot 14 (Lot 14) in Strata Plan 35042 (the Strata Plan). Its sole director and shareholder is Mr Shojiro Azuma. The appellant is the Owners Corporation of the Strata Plan. Lot 14 comprises the whole of the top floor (the unit) of a six storey residential flat building fronting the Warringah Expressway at North Sydney. The respondent complained that the appellant had breached its duty under s 62(1) of the (the 1996 Act) by failing to maintain and keep in a state of good and serviceable repair that part of the common property which comprised, first, certain rectangular steel uprights which provided the framework which enclosed a balcony that formed part of the unit and, second, the waterproofing membrane (the membrane) that sealed the concrete floor of an external terrace (the terrace) of the unit for the purpose of preventing water penetration of its internal, habitable space.

4. Relevantly for present purposes, the appellant disputed that the membrane comprised part of the common property to which s 62(1) would otherwise apply. It contended that the lower horizontal boundary of so much of Lot 14 as comprised the terrace was the upper surface of the concrete slab that supported not only the terrace but also the internal space of the unit. On the other hand, the respondent contended that the lower horizontal boundary was not the upper surface of the concrete slab but the upper surface of the ceramic tiles (the tiles), which had been laid on top of the membrane which in turn had been placed on top of the slab.

5. On 28 July 2005 the respondent instituted proceedings against the appellant alleging a breach of s 62 of the 1996 Act upon the basis that the common property in respect of which s 62(1) imposed upon the appellant a duty to maintain and keep in repair included the membrane and the tiled surface of the terrace. It was alleged that as a consequence of that breach, the membrane had failed thereby allowing rainwater falling upon the terrace to penetrate the tiles and the membrane and enter the living areas of the unit. The respondent further alleged that s 62(1) imposed a statutory duty upon the appellant, breach of which sounded in damages. In addition to such damages, the respondent sought an order that the appellant replace the membrane and reinstate the tiling on the terrace at its cost.

6. The primary judge upheld the respondent's contentions and on 6 November 2006 ordered that the appellant on or prior to 6 February 2007 properly maintain and keep in a state of good and serviceable repair the common property in the strata plan by repairing the membrane on the terrace of Lot 14 so as to prevent the penetration of water into the unit. His Honour further awarded the respondent damages in the sum of $150,000 in respect of loss of rent of Lot 14 for a period of 30 months at $5,000 per month commencing August 2004. The appellant appeals to this Court against those orders.

The decision of the primary judge

7. As I have indicated, the respondent alleged two breaches of s 62(1) by the appellant, being first, its failure to repair the rectangular steel uprights and, second, its failure to repair the membrane to the terrace. As to the first of these failures, the appellant did not contest that the uprights comprised part of the common property to which s 62 applied. Although it did not admit that the steel work was common property, it made no submission to the contrary and his Honour held (at [12]) that it formed part of the external wall of Lot 14 and substantially coincided with the external boundary of that lot marked on the Strata Plan. Accordingly, the lot boundary was its inner surface with the result that the steelwork was outside the boundary of Lot 14 and, therefore, formed part of the common property.

8. His Honour also found that the appellant was advised of the problems associated with the steel uprights as well as the problem with the water penetration through the membrane to the terrace no later than 3 March 2003. Notwithstanding that it did not admit that the steel framework formed part of the common property, the appellant remedied that particular problem by replacing the steelwork shortly after the present proceedings were instituted and, in any event, in August 2005.

9. However, there was a live issue before the primary judge as to whether the membrane comprised part of the common property. As I have indicated, his Honour resolved that issue in favour of the respondent. Notwithstanding the institution of an appeal to this Court against that decision, as a consequence of the refusal by the primary judge to stay his order that the appellant repair the membrane on or before 6 February 2007, the appellant carried out the necessary repair work in compliance with his Honour's order.

10. So far as the question of damages is concerned, the following facts as found by his Honour are relevant. Prior to August 2004 Mr Azuma occupied the unit with his family. He paid rent to the respondent at the rate of $5,500 per month, which was in accordance with a valuation obtained by him in May 2004 for refinancing purposes. That valuation was prepared by Mr Ray Laoulach, a registered valuer employed by John Virtue Valuers, who assessed the unfurnished rental value of Lot 14 at $1,300 per week as at 18 May 2004 (the Virtue valuation). Although there was no written lease between Mr Azuma and the respondent and notwithstanding that the rent was paid by journal entry by deduction from Mr Azuma's loan account with the respondent, his Honour found (at [41]) that there was no reason for supposing that the arrangement was other than bona fide, observing that the circumstance that the rent was fixed in accordance with the Virtue valuation (which was admitted into evidence without objection) reinforced its legitimacy.

11. Although the appellant challenges his Honour's adoption of the rental value in the Virtue valuation of $1,300 per week (or $5,500 per month), no challenge was, or could have been, directed to his Honour's finding that the lease transaction between Mr Azuma and the respondent was not other than bona fide.

12. Having failed by August 2004 to secure remediation of the defects of which he complained, Mr Azuma and his family vacated the unit being concerned as to their safety in the premises in the circumstances particularly having regard to the problem with the steel uprights which were found to be dangerous and which were of structural significance. At the time of vacating the unit Mr Azuma ceased to pay rent to the respondent. Accordingly, his Honour found that the respondent had earned no income and received no benefit from the use of Lot 14 as and from August 2004 to the date of judgment.

13. After noting that there was no allegation of a failure on the part of the respondent to mitigate its loss, his Honour held (at [45]) that but for the breaches of s 62 Mr Azuma and his family would have remained in occupation of Lot 14 paying rent at the rate of $5,500 per month. In these circumstances his Honour considered that the respondent's loss should be assessed at $5,000 per month or $60,000 per annum due to its inability to use the unit during the 30 month period from August 2004 to February 2007. The amount of damages so assessed was $150,000.

14. There were essentially three issues debated before the primary judge. Relevantly for present purposes the first was whether the membrane constituted part of the common property. The second was whether a breach of s 62(1) gave rise to a private cause of action sounding in damages. The third related to the proper assessment of the respondent's alleged losses. With respect to the last-mentioned, an issue also arose as to whether the respondent should be awarded damages on the basis of the diminution in value of the unit as a consequence of the breaches of s 62(1) or the cost of rectification of the appellant's breaches or, alternatively, whether a mandatory order should be made that those breaches be rectified. As already noted, his Honour adopted the last alternative.

15. As to the second issue, his Honour held that s 62(1) imposed a statutory duty upon the appellant breach of which gave rise to a private cause of action sounding in damages. Although the appellant's Amended Notice of Appeal alleged in Grounds 3, 3(a) and 4 that his Honour erred in so holding, those grounds were abandoned on 4 September 2007, two days before the date set for the hearing of the appeal.

As a consequence the costs associated with the preparation by the respondent of its written submissions with respect to those grounds of appeal were wasted. In my opinion, if the appeal be successful it will be necessary to reflect that fact in the final costs orders to be made on the resolution of the appeal.

16. With respect to the first issue, his Honour found that the tiles and, therefore, the membrane under the tiles, had been affixed to the upper surface of the concrete slab of the terrace prior to the date of registration of the Strata Plan. In those circumstances his Honour held (at [18]) that:

"The upper surface of the floor [of Lot 14] was the top of the tiles. The tiles were not themselves within the cubic space and thus do not form part of the lot. As common property is comprised of those parts of an allotment which are not within an individual lot, the tiles, and more particularly the membrane underneath them, were part of the common property."

17. Before the primary judge the appellant had contended that as a consequence of a notation on Sheet 8 of the Strata Plan which related to Level 6 of the subject building which comprised Lot 14, the lower horizontal boundary of that lot and, relevantly, so much thereof as comprised the terrace was the upper surface of the concrete slab. The terrace, except for a relatively small overhang, was uncovered, that is, it was open to the sky being on the top floor of the building. Marked on the floor plan of the terrace was the legend Ø. There was then endorsed on Sheet 8 a notation (the notation) that that legend:

"DENOTES TERRACE LIMITED IN HEIGHT TO 2.5 ABOVE THE UPPER SURFACE OF THE CONCRETE FLOOR THEREOF EXCEPT WHERE COVERED."

18. His Honour accepted the appellant's submission that the words "EXCEPT WHERE COVERED" in the notation referred to a cover of some part of the cubic space above the terrace such as a roof, awning or overhang. However, he rejected its submission that the reference in the notation to "THE UPPER SURFACE OF THE CONCRETE FLOOR" was a reference to the lower horizontal boundary of that part of Lot 14 of which the terrace was the base. He said (at [17]):

"The effect of the annotation is to describe the upper boundary of part of the relevant cubic space, by reference to a floor. It does not describe the lower boundary. Accordingly, as the floor joins vertical boundaries of the relevant cubic space, the lower boundary of the lot is, pursuant to s 5(2)(a)(ii), the upper surface of the floor." (Emphasis in original).

The issues on the appeal

(a) Were the membrane and the tiles covering the terrace part of the common property or part of the lot?

19. In order to resolve this question it is necessary to refer to the relevant provisions of the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1973 which were in force at the time of registration of the Strata Plan on 4 July 1989 (the 1973 Act). The following definitions in s 5(1) of that Act are presently relevant.

"lot means one or more cubic spaces forming part of the parcel to which a strata scheme relates, the base of each such cubic space being designated as one lot or part of one lot on the floor plan forming part of the strata plan … to which that strata scheme relates, being in each case cubic space the base of whose vertical boundaries is as delineated on a sheet of that floor plan and which has horizontal boundaries as ascertain under subsection (2) …

floor plan means a plan consisting of one or more sheets, which:

(a) defines by lines … the base of each vertical boundary of every cubic space forming the whole of a proposed lot, or the whole of any part of a proposed lot, to which the plan relates,
(c) …"

20. Section 5(2) provides as follows:

"(2) The boundaries of any cubic space referred to in paragraph (a) of the definition of floor plan in subsection (1):

(a) except as provided in paragraph (b):

(i) are, in the case of a vertical boundary, where the base of any wall corresponds substantially with any line referred to in paragraph (a) of that definition — the inner surface of that wall, and

(ii) are, in the case of a horizontal boundary, where any floor or ceiling joins a vertical boundary of that cubic space — the upper surface of that floor and the under surface of that ceiling, or

(b) are such boundaries as are described on a sheet of the floor plan relating to that cubic space (those boundaries being described in the prescribed manner by reference to a wall, floor or ceiling in a building to which that plan relates or to structural cubic space within that building)."

21. Section 8(1) of the 1973 Act provides that a plan intended to be registered as a strata plan must include, as sheets of the plan, inter alia, a floor plan. Clause 9 of the Strata Titles Act Regulations 1974 (the Regulations) as in force in 1989 when the Strata Plan was registered provided, relevantly, that a floor plan required for the purposes of s 8 shall be drawn showing —

> "(e) where the boundary of a lot is defined by reference to the surface of a floor or ceiling — such vertical connections and notations as are necessary to define that boundary; and > (f) in all circumstances, notations sufficient to ensure that each cubic space forming the whole of a lot or a whole separate part of a lot is fully defined; provided that where it is intended that a lot boundary is to be defined in accordance with the formula set out in section 5(2)(a) (but not otherwise) no notation shall be made for the purpose of defining that boundary."

22. It is important to note that the appellant conceded that were it not for the notation on Sheet 8 of the Strata Plan, the effect of s 5(2)(a)(ii) of the 1973 Act would be that the lower horizontal boundary of the cubic space constituted by the terrace of Lot 14 would be the upper surface of the tiles as the floor of the terrace would comprise not only the underlying concrete slab but also the membrane and tiles which were affixed thereto. However, it submitted that the notation constituted, within the meaning of s 5(2)(b), a description on a sheet of the floor plan relating to the cubic space constituted by the terrace of both the upper and lower horizontal boundaries of that space. As such, it described the lower horizontal boundary as the "upper surface of the concrete floor" meaning thereby the upper surface of the concrete slab.

23. It was further submitted that although the purpose of the notation was to define the upper horizontal boundary of the relevant cubic space as being 2.5 metres above the upper surface of the concrete floor, it did so by reference to the lower horizontal boundary describing it as the "upper surface of the concrete floor". Accordingly, the horizontal boundary between the common property and Lot 14 was the upper surface of the concrete slab thus excluding the membrane, the repair of which was therefore the responsibility of the respondent.

24. Although at first sight the submissions of the appellant seemed to have merit, further consideration of the relevant statutory provisions has convinced me that they should be rejected and that the primary judge was correct in finding that the notation sought only to describe the upper horizontal boundary of the cubic space the base of which was the terrace, and not the lower horizontal boundary which was defined in accordance with the provisions of s 5(2)(a)(ii) as the upper surface of the floor of the terrace which was conceded to be the upper surface of the tiles.

25. My reasons for so concluding are as follows. First, as I have indicated, the appellant conceded that where the formula referred to in s 5(2)(a)(ii) applied, the relevant horizontal boundary between the common property and the terrace forming part of Lot 14 was the upper surface of the terrace floor which included not only the concrete slab but also the membrane and tiles affixed thereto. Second, s 5(2)(a) sets out a statutory formula for the determination of both the vertical and horizontal boundaries of a cubic space being the whole of the lot except as provided in s 5(2)(b). The latter allows for the statutory formula to be departed from where either the vertical or horizontal boundaries of the relevant cubic space are relevantly "described" on a sheet of the floor plan relating to that cubic space.

Third, that part of s 5(2)(b) which is in parenthesis requires those boundaries to be described in the prescribed manner by reference to "a wall, floor or ceiling in a building to which" the floor plan relates. However, it does not require those boundaries to be described by reference to either a wall, floor or ceiling which comprises a vertical or horizontal boundary although no doubt it may do so. It merely requires a boundary to be described by reference to a physical datum point being a wall, a floor or a ceiling in the relevant building. In the present case the notation identified that datum point by reference to the upper surface of the concrete floor of the terrace.

27. Although it might be suggested that the foregoing construction of the phrase "a wall, floor or ceiling" in s 5(2)(b) gives a different meaning to the individual terms "floor", "wall" and "ceiling" to that which each has under s 5(2)(a), in my view that is of no consequence. Section 5(2)(a) lays down a statutory formula pursuant to which, for instance, the lower horizontal boundary of a cubic space is identified as the "upper surface" of a floor where it joins a vertical boundary of that space. However, s 5(2)(b) operates as an alternative to s 5(2)(a). Although it permits a lower horizontal boundary to be described on a sheet of the floor plan relating to that space by reference to a "floor" in the building to which that plan relates, it does not require that it do so by reference to the "upper surface" of that floor.

28. Although the term "floor" is not relevantly defined in s 5(1), contrary to the suggestion referred to in the preceding paragraph, in my view it has the same meaning in both limbs of s 5(2). But that is not to the point. The first limb (s 5(2)(a)(ii)) defines the relevant boundary by reference to the "upper surface" of the floor; the second (s 5(2)(b)) by reference only to "a … floor" in the relevant building. It may or may not describe that boundary by reference to the upper surface of that floor.

29. Of course, there is still the question of what is the upper surface of a floor even where s 5(2)(a)(ii) applies. Is it the upper surface of the floor slab or, where tiles are affixed to that surface as in the present case, the upper surface of the tiles? As a matter of common sense and common parlance I would have thought the latter. The appellant conceded as much. However, where it is intended to define the lower horizontal boundary pursuant to s 5(2)(b), there is nothing to prevent it being described, for instance, as the upper surface of the concrete floor slab. Provided the description adopted makes it plain that it is in fact purporting to fully define that particular boundary, it will be effective according to its terms.

30. However, the primary judge held (at [17]) that the notation did not purport to define the lower horizontal boundary although it clearly did with respect to the upper horizontal boundary. In my opinion, his construction of the notation which led to that conclusion was correct.

31. Fourth, the requirement of s 5(2)(b) that the boundaries be described "in the prescribed manner" is addressed by cl 9(f) of the Regulations. That clause requires that any notation be sufficient to ensure that each cubic space forming the whole of a lot or a whole separate part of a lot, be "fully defined". However, there is a proviso that where it is intended that a lot boundary is to be defined in accordance with the formula set out in s 5(2)(a), no notation shall be made for the purpose of defining that boundary. In other words, it is only where it is intended to describe the boundary in accordance with s 5(2)(b) rather than leaving its definition or its description to the statutory formula set out in s 5(2)(a), that a notation is necessary (and permitted) by cl 9(f).

32. For the foregoing reasons, in my opinion the notation should be construed as describing only the upper horizontal boundary of the relevant cubic space (being the terrace) and not its lower horizontal boundary which, in my view, was intended to be defined in accordance with the formula set out in s 5(2)(a)(ii). This would be consistent with the fact that the notation relates only to the terrace and does not extend to the balance of Lot 14, the lower horizontal boundary of which is defined by the statutory formula being, relevantly, the upper surface of the floor of the unit.

The reasoning process which I have adopted above finds some support in the judgment of Barrett J in Symes v The Proprietors Strata Plan No. 31731 [2001] NSWSC 527. Although his Honour's ultimate decision was reversed by this Court in Symes v The Proprietors Strata Plan No. 31731 [2003] NSWCA 7, that decision related to issues which do not impinge upon his Honour's observations with respect to the manner in which vertical and horizontal boundaries of a cubic space are determined pursuant to s 5(2) of the 1973 Act.

34. After referring to the definitions of "common property", "parcel" and "lot" in s 5(1) of the 1973 Act, his Honour observed (at [25]) that the "…definition 'lot' goes on to describe the cubic space by reference to three characteristics. First, its base must be designated as one lot or part of one lot on the floor plan forming part of the strata plan. … Second, that base's vertical boundaries must be delineated on a sheet of the floor plan. Third, the horizontal boundaries must be ascertained under s 5(2)."

35. As to s 5(2), his Honour made the following observations:

> "27 Similar provision is made by s.5(2) in relation to horizontal boundaries where any floor or ceiling joins a vertical boundary of the relevant cubic space. In such a case, it is the upper surface of the floor or the under surface of the ceiling which is the boundary of the lot so that again the material of the floor or ceiling is common property.
> 28 Boundaries of lots need not correspond with structural features such as walls, floors and ceilings. This is borne out by s.5(2)(b) which refers to boundaries being described on a sheet of the floor plan 'in the prescribed manner by reference to a wall, floor or ceiling in a building to which that plan relates or to structural cubic space within that building' [emphasis added].
> 29 The scheme of the Act is such that lines on plans and physical features of the building combine to identify a lot and its boundaries. Lines on plans alone are insufficient. If a boundary of a lot does not substantially coincide with a wall, floor or ceiling — such as, for example, where there is an open patio or balcony with no structure above — that boundary must nevertheless be delineated 'by reference to' such a physical feature. (I leave to one side for the moment the reference in s.5(2)(b) to 'structural cubic space' noting, however, that it too anchors matters back to physical features such as vertical structural members other than walls and is thus entirely consistent with the conceptual approach which pays attention to walls, floors and ceilings.)"

36. His Honour's remarks in [29] of his judgment are of particular relevance to the present case where he emphasises that in a situation such as the present where there is an open terrace with no structure above, its upper horizontal boundary must be delineated by "reference to" a physical feature being a wall, floor or ceiling. There is no requirement that that "physical feature" be a vertical or horizontal boundary but only that it be a physical reference point from which an appropriate description of the boundary can be made.

37. Accordingly, in my opinion the primary judge was correct in construing the notation on Sheet 8 of the Strata Plan as describing for the purposes of s 5(2)(b) only the upper horizontal boundary of the cubic space of which the terrace formed the base. As the notation did not purport to define the lower horizontal boundary of that space, that boundary is to be determined in accordance with s 5(2)(a)(ii), namely, as the upper surface of the floor of the terrace being the upper surface of the tiles. It follows, therefore, that the membrane is part of the common property to which the provisions of s 62(1) apply to impose upon the appellant the statutory duty to keep the membrane in a state of good and serviceable repair, which it failed to do.

38. For completeness, I should make it clear that where s 5(2)(a)(ii) applies to define the lower horizontal boundary of a cubic space as the upper surface of the floor of that space, that surface fixes the boundary as at the date of registration of the strata plan. If at that date the floor comprises only the bare concrete floor slab, then its upper surface will constitute the lower horizontal boundary.

However, if at the date of registration a tile or timber floor has been laid over and affixed to the concrete slab, then the boundary will be the upper surface of the tiles or timber flooring. If that upper layer of flooring is later removed and replaced by tiles or timber flooring the upper surface of which is higher than the surface as at the date of registration of the strata plan, it is the level of the original surface which remains the lower horizontal boundary, not the level of the new surface. The boundary remains fixed: it is not ambulatory. The same principle applies to the determination of the upper horizontal boundary being the ceiling to the relevant cubic space as well as to a vertical boundary of that space being a wall.

40. I am not unmindful of the practical effect of what I have written above. Careful consideration will need to be given by, for instance, a developer who is constructing a building which is proposed to be the subject of a strata scheme to what is intended to constitute the vertical and horizontal boundaries of the cubic space or spaces comprising a lot. Are they to be the surfaces of the concrete floor and ceiling slabs or brick walls or the surface of any tiles, timber or other material affixed to those slabs or walls?

41. The present case points up the importance of determining these matters prior to the registration of the strata plan. If they are not given attention, then the relevant boundaries will be determined under s 5(2)(a) by reference to the state of the floor, ceilings and walls at the date of registration, in all probability thus giving rise to unintended consequences in terms of the division of responsibility for repairs and maintenance between the owners corporation and the proprietors of the individual lots. It would seem ridiculous, for instance, if the owners corporation was required to take such responsibility for the state of the internal paintwork of a lot. Disputes over such matters can be simply avoided by utilising s 5(2)(b) to fully and clearly describe the relevant boundaries of the cubic space or spaces forming each lot of the strata plan.

42. I also appreciate that what I have said above will not necessarily assist the avoidance of disputes as exemplified by the present case with respect to many existing strata plans where advantage has not been taken of s 5(2)(b). In many cases it will be the luck of the draw dependent on the condition of the relevant floors, ceilings and walls at the date of registration of the particular strata plan. This is unfortunate and unavoidable as to the past but avoidable for the future.

(b) Did the primary judge err in assessing the respondent's damages in the sum of $150,000?

43. The only challenge by the appellant to his Honour's assessment of the respondent's damages arising out of the appellant's breach of s 62(1) is with respect to his adoption of the figure of $5,000 per month as constituting the respondent's loss of rent for the relevant period. As I have already indicated, his Honour adopted that figure based upon the rental value of the unit determined by the Virtue valuation. The appellant submitted that his Honour erred in adopting that figure given that the respondent tendered a valuation of Ms Petra Freeman, valuer, dated 9 November 2005 in which she estimated the rental income of the unit as at the date of the valuation at $600 per week. That figure assumed that the defects, which gave rise to the appellant's breaches of s 62(1), had been fully rectified.

44. The appellant accepted that it was reasonably foreseeable that if the unit was vacated as a consequence of the breaches of s 62(1) of which the respondent complained, there would be a loss to the respondent of the market rental from time to time which, at least after the respondent obtained Ms Freeman's valuation on or about 9 November 2005, was only $600 per week. It was submitted that it would not have been within reasonable contemplation of the appellant that that loss of rental would be as much as $1,300 per week. Accordingly, the primary judge erred in failing to accept Ms Freeman's valuation of the rental at least as and from 9 November 2005 which at that time was far more reliable than the Virtue valuation as at 18 May 2004.

45. In my opinion what was required, and that which was conceded, was that it was within the reasonable expectation of the appellant that the respondent would suffer a loss of rental from its existing tenant, Mr Azuma and his family, if they were required to vacate the unit as a consequence of the appellant's breaches of its statutory duty to repair the relevant part of the common property.

45. The law does not require that the appellant should have a particular rental value in mind. Nor is it necessarily the case that the only loss of rental recoverable is a loss of the market rent from time to time. Damages for breach of statutory duty in a case such as the present are determined in accordance with the normal principles applicable to the assessment of damages in tort. Those principles require that a wrongdoer must take his victim as he finds him. In the present case the primary judge found that but for the breaches Mr Azuma and his family would have remained in occupation of the unit paying rent of $5,500 per month. That rent was based upon what his Honour found to be a bona fide lease transaction where the amount of rent payable had been determined by an appropriately qualified valuer in circumstances which did not permit of any suggestion of lack of bona fides. Had there been no breach by the appellant of its statutory duties, there would have been no reason for Mr Azuma or the respondent to have obtained Ms Freeman's valuation. Mr Azuma would, as his Honour found, have merely continued to pay rent of $5,500 per month.

47. In my opinion it is trite that this Court is a court of error so that unless and until error on the part of the primary judge is established, this Court has no right to interfere with his Honour's assessment of damages.

The appellant does not challenge his Honour's finding that but for its breaches Mr Azuma and his family would have remained in occupation of the unit paying rent of $5,500 per month. It was clearly open to his Honour to so find. No error has been demonstrated.

Conclusion

48. In my opinion, the challenges by the appellant to his Honour's findings with respect to whether the waterproof membrane formed part of the common property of the Strata Plan on the one hand and his assessment of the respondent's damages on the other should be rejected. I would therefore propose that the appeal be dismissed with costs.

Basten JA: This appeal should be dismissed with costs for the reasons given by Tobias JA.

Court citation: [2004] QDC 154

District Court of Queensland

17 March 2004

Conveyancing — Community titles scheme — Contribution schedule lot entitlements — Adjustment of contribution schedule lot entitlements sought — Consideration of what is just and equitable — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld), s 46, 47, 48, 49 and 50

The body corporate defendant governed the affairs of a Gold Coast apartment block that contained more than 180 lots, a small number only of which were non-residential. The 33rd floor of the building gave access to the lower level of four penthouses. The first and second applicants each owned one of these four lots.

The owners of the other two penthouse lots did not wish to make common cause with the applicants, who sought adjustment of the contribution schedule lot entitlements pursuant to s 48 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) (the Act). The body corporate's position was that the contribution schedule lot entitlements should not be changed.

Under the Act, a lot in a community titles scheme has both a contribution schedule lot entitlement and an interest schedule lot entitlement. Under the Act, the contribution schedule lot entitlement should be equal except to the extent to which it is just and equitable in the circumstances for them not to be equal.

The applicants were afflicted with high lot entitlements. This required them to make larger than average contributions to body corporate expenditure, which was devoted not only to maintenance of the common property but to the provision of hot water and air conditioning to other privately-owned lots.

The applicants and body corporate reached a resolution that the Court would endorse; it interfered with the status quo only minimally and represented success for the applicants in that their lot entitlements were significantly reduced.

Held: resolution approved

1. The agreement reached between the parties came within the range of "just and equitable" solutions allowed under the Act.
2. The "equality" approach favoured by the Act applies in a general, global kind of way, rather than being one to be examined separately in respect of all categories of body corporate expenditure.

Robin QC DCJ:

1. These are the Court's reasons for the making of the following order at the conclusion of a hearing which took place on 3 and 4 February 2004:

> "Pursuant to s 48 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 the Court orders that the contribution schedule lot entitlement of each of Lot 179 and Lot 180 be adjusted from 100 to 40 in each case, the aggregate of such entitlements being reduced from 6881 to 6761 accordingly. Otherwise the contribution schedule lot entitlements in respect of the Body Corporate for La Porte D'Or CTS 12681 remain unchanged."

2. The body corporate governs the affairs of a well-known apartment block at the north of Surfers Paradise, better known by its English name of Golden Gate. It was constructed in the middle 1970s and contains more than 180 lots, a small number only of which are non-residential. The non-residential lots include a large ground-floor restaurant which has been unused for some years (one might hypothesise that the lack of dedicated parking facilities has something to do with the failure of the restaurant to thrive in recent times).

3. The 33rd floor of the building gives access to the lower level of four penthouses, Lots 179-182 inclusive. The applicant, Ms Franklin, is the owner of Lot 179; her fellow-applicants own Lot 180. The Court heard that the owners of Lots 181 and 182 (indeed, of any other lot) did not wish to make common cause with the applicants, who seek adjustment of the contribution schedule lot entitlements pursuant to s 48 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (the Act).

4. At one stage Mr Russell Eric Williams, who gave evidence by telephone, elected to become a respondent under s 48(2)(b) of the Act; he has since withdrawn from any role as a separate party, leaving it to the body corporate to respond under subsection (2)(a).

5. Under earlier legislation permitting the establishment of body corporates there was a single lot entitlement schedule which indicated the relative beneficial ownership of the aggregate development, voting rights and liability to contribute to body corporate expenses of the lot owners. The hypothetical lot owner would like to see the lot entitlement lower rather than higher from the point of view of its being the basis for contributions and levies, and higher, rather than lower, from the point of view of the share to be enjoyed if the whole community title arrangement came to an end on destruction of the building(s) or sale of all of the lots. My suspicion is that, except in some special instances, where voting power might really matter, experience has led individual lot owners to the view that there is no particular practical advantage flowing from an enhanced franchise.

6. Many developments occurred on the abovementioned basis. No doubt those involved became accustomed to them and regulated their affairs accordingly. A moment's thought would suggest that changes to the established order of things might be unwelcome, even unsustainable for many. This might be for financial reasons.

7. Under the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, a lot in a community titles scheme has both a contribution schedule lot entitlement and an interest schedule lot entitlement. Speaking generally, by s 47 the former indicates the relative extent of the lot owner's obligation to contribute to levies and voting rights in respect of ordinary resolutions. S 46(7) indicates that for new schemes the respective lot entitlements must be equal "except to the extent to which it is just and equitable in the circumstances for them not to be equal". The interest schedule lot entitlements by s 47(3) are the basis for calculating the lot owner's share of common property and the lot owner's interest on termination of the scheme, also the unimproved value of the lot, for purposes of land tax and rates; s 48(6) indicates that the respective lot entitlements should reflect the respective market values of the lots included in the scheme.

8. Setting aside those special situations in which voting control within the body corporate is important, an example of which is Ciriello v Panitz Centre Building Units Plan 3894 (1999) 20 QLR 138, originating application 67 of 1997 (Southport), 12.11.99, Judge Brabazon QC, it will normally suit a lot owner to have a higher interest schedule lot entitlement and a lower contribution schedule lot entitlement. Now that the Court or a specialist adjudicator may order adjustment of lot entitlement schedules under s 48 of the Act, the typical application encountered appears to be one for reduction of contribution schedule lot entitlements designed to reduce the applicant's proportionate responsibility for body corporate levies. (Ciriello was a special case, in which the applicants successfully sought increases against their lots in both schedules).

9. As to the contribution schedule, by s 48(4) and (5), the order of the Court must be consistent with, "…the principle (that)… the respective lot entitlements should be equal, except to the extent to which it is just and equitable in the circumstances for them not to be equal". While there are instances of adjusting orders made that introduce equality (as in Ciriello) the typical outcome appears to be that some measure of differentiation among lots is considered 'just and equitable'.

10. The Court was referred to two decisions of specialist adjudicators, Deltaline Properties Pty Ltd v Body Corporate for Surfers Hawaiian Community Titles Scheme 5682 (0296/2003, 27 November 2003, G F Bugden) and Peter Rogers v The Body Corporate for Taree Lodge and Beryl Hogan (20 November 2003, Warren D Fischer). In the latter, contribution schedule lot entitlements were adjusted so that one was 610, one 611, eight were 612, two 613, and one each were 617, 622, 623 and 795. In Deltaline, the outcome was that 63 lots were assigned a contribution schedule of entitlement of 10, the other lot being assigned an entitlement of 11; i.e. it was considered 'just and equitable' to depart from equality by a 10% loading in respect of one of 64 lots.

11. If Mr Bugden, who is an experienced writer in the field of body corporate law, is correct, Deltaline Properties establishes that it is permissible to apply again and again for adjustments of lot entitlements. The applicant before him was, I understand, a successor in title to the owner of the same penthouse unit which had previously successfully applied to this Court for an approximately 25% reduction in its contribution schedule lot entitlement in AEFK Properties Pty Ltd v Fiona Lin, Southport 379 of 1999, 5 April 2000. No opposition emerged to the applicant's proposal, except from Ms Lin, who withdrew. The Court made an order in terms of a table of lot entitlements prepared by an 'expert' in the field, Mr Stewart, which he asserted was 'just and equitable', in line with his considerable experience; the relative liabilities of some units lower in the building were increased by up to 50%. The Court's orders coming into effect was deferred for 28 days, to permit all lot owners to be notified of the order within seven days and within seven days from notification to apply for variation of the order. No such application was made.

12. In Burnitt Investments Pty Ltd v Body Corporate for St Andrews Community Titles Scheme 20508 [2002] QDC 006, the 'just and equitable' outcome was not equality, rather reduction of the applicant's lot entitlement of 32 to 10, where each of the other 33 separate lots in the scheme had an entitlement of one, rather than equality — essentially, the applicant had been responsible for about half of the contributions required to the body corporate, but received no benefit.

13. A practice appears to have developed of applications such as the present becoming the occasion for a wholesale review of the relevant lot entitlement schedule, notwithstanding that the applicant's real interest and concern relates only to the applicant's own contribution (or interest) schedule lot entitlement, and that, for all that appears, other lot owners are content with the status quo. The application proposes a completely revised contribution schedule affecting all 186 lots.

14. In Sandhurst Trustees Ltd v Condah Bay Investments Pty Ltd [2003] QDC 438 the respondent lot owners took the stance that some adjustment was appropriate; they presented an expert report of Mr Linkhorn proposing new contribution schedule lot entitlements for the 183 lots which were different from those proposed by the applicant's expert, Mr Sheahan. Neither recommended equality, but Mr Sheahan moved closer to equality than his opposite number, with the consequence that the applicant's contributions, from being much higher than the average, were to become much lower. My view was that the approaches of both (like a wide range of approaches that might be taken) could be regarded as 'just and equitable'. I considered it particularly significant that the respondents were agreed in supporting Mr Linkhorn's proposals – absent which, "there might be difficult issues here about changing the status quo adversely to the interests of lot owners indicating satisfaction with it". In the circumstances, I considered that notwithstanding the Act's strong policy of equality, "with so many lot owners involved, having disparate interests, an outcome which changes the status quo less, rather than more, seems preferable".

15. In Application by I J Banks and L J Banks in respect of "Noosa On The Beach" community title scheme 6417, Maroochydore application 96 of 1999, 14 December 1999, Judge Dodds, in respect of a scheme incorporating 31 lots, said in reference to a report obtained by the applicants (having refused to consider two other reports obtained by the body corporate for reasons which he gave) said:

> "I propose to act on the Stewart report. I am satisfied that it is just and equitable the lot entitlements in the scheme be not equal. For the reasons in Stewart's report the lot entitlements he suggests appear just and equitable. The present lot entitlements plainly are not."

16. In the present application, the applicants relied on the views of Ms Arkcoll (who did not support equality), and she was cross-examined by Mr Perry, representing the body corporate (now identified by the Act as the proper respondent, the way being left open for individual lot owners to elect to participate directly). The body corporate obtained a report from Mr Linkhorn which, like Ms Arkcoll's work, reallocated lot entitlements throughout the building, albeit not as favourably from the point of view of the applicants and proprietors of the other penthouses. Neither of them favoured equality. Mr Linkhorn was not cross-examined, but Mr Radcliff, for the applicants, made it clear that this was not because there was no challenge to his views. It was because the parties, with some encouragement from the Court, had arrived at a resolution of the application which both sides found acceptable.

17. The body corporate's position was not that Mr Linkhorn's views should be endorsed by the Court in an order: its position was that the contribution schedule lot entitlements should not be changed.

18. The resolution reached, which appears in paragraph [1], was one the Court was happy to endorse; it interfered with the status quo only minimally, representing success for the applicants, in that their lot entitlements are significantly reduced, but otherwise preservation of the long-standing status quo, which, for all that appears, suits the requirements of all lot owners, other than the applicants. There is no occasion to change lot entitlements of the other penthouse owners, invited to support the application, but not interested in doing so.

19. Only Mr Williams elected to be joined in the application as a respondent, and supporter of the existing contribution schedule lot entitlements. Although he withdrew as a respondent, he provided the Court with an affidavit whose contents, it seems to me, would be broadly typical of the views of many more lot owners. He works as a radio-technical officer employed in the Commonwealth Public Service; he and his wife purchased a one-bedroom unit in Golden Gate in November 2001, knowing what the lot entitlements were and what the liability for contributions in the form of annual fees would be or was likely to be, there being no suggestion at that time that there would be any increases, except of the kind attributable to inflation. The applicants' proposal boded to increase the Williams' contributions from $3,492 per annum by more than $833 per annum. They are in their fifties, expecting to move to the building some time next year "in semiretirement". Mr Williams says that "As a future retiree I am greatly concerned by the added financial burden that I will be required to bear whilst on a reduced income", describing a situation that may apply for many years to come.

20. I rejected Mr Radcliff's submissions that evidence of this kind was inadmissible. In my opinion, evidence as to the legitimate expectations of lot owners is most germane to an exercise in which the Court must determine what is 'just and equitable'; that s 49(5) precludes reference to the understanding of the applicant tends to reinforce the propriety of having regard to the knowledge and understanding of other lot owners. There was before the Court material from other lot owners similar to that from Mr Williams. I accept that evidence.

21. Ms Arkcoll's approach would result in some lot owners facing additional contribution liability in amounts that are multiples of the sum mentioned by Mr Williams. The interference with expectations is qualitatively more drastic in the case of those who bought in before the 1997 Act. They would have had no reason to anticipate adjustment of lot entitlement schedules. One lot owner whose contributions bode to fall by more than a dollar per week (Ms Murray) deposes to her belief that "the proposal is grossly unfair and inequitable". I accept that for some lot owners, either the Arkcoll proposal or the Linkhorn proposal would produce real financial hardship. Any financial detriment flowing from adjustment of the contribution schedule lot entitlements in respect of two lots only will have a minimal effect on the other lot owners, which the Court may reasonably disregard, especially as the body corporate, representing the interests of those affected, has agreed to it, as a way of resolving the present application.

22. It might be noted that s 50 of the Act leaves it open to the owners of two or more lots to agree in writing to change lot entitlements, provided the aggregate lot entitlement of the lots involved is not changed. The acceptability of "tinkering" in that way is consistent with the outcome of this application, with the notion that changing of lot entitlements may occur otherwise than in a wholesale revision of entitlements of all lots.

23. S 49(3) of the Act, in my view, leaves it open to the Court to receive and act upon evidence of the consequences of proposed adjustments to lot entitlements. Subsection (4)(b), entitling the Court to have regard to "the nature, features and characteristics of the lots included in the scheme", makes relevant (but not, of course, determinative) matters such as the relative sizes of lots and their location in the building.

24. In introducing the Bill which became the Act, the Minister said (Hansard 9 May 1997, 1806), having noted concerns expressed in Parliament regarding various issues – including exclusive use by-laws and management agreements:

> "The legislation will address these problems in the future. However, I have some concerns about redressing the problems of the past. That is where it gets difficult. There is no doubt that this legislation is for the future. However, we are trying to mop up any problems and we are trying to do that without changing or affecting people's vested rights."

25. A general intention not to change or affect people's vested rights is no less than one would ordinarily expect of the legislature. That apart, established rights and expectations in my opinion are pertinent in the making of judgments about what is 'just and equitable'. Although framed more widely, the application before the Court calls only for adjustment of the applicants' position. I think there is no call for a review of the relativities affecting 180 or so other lots, whose owners are content with the status quo.

26. The existing lot entitlements in Golden Gate roughly reflect areas of the lots, although the multipliers applied vary in a range exceeding three to four. There are special considerations affecting commercial lots. An area-based approach seems reasonable, for purposes of assessing contributions given that, by and large, larger units will account for larger areas of walls, roof and windows to clean. In my view, it is common sense that lots containing more bedrooms will generate more wear and tear upon the common property. There is no occasion here to adjudicate as between Mr Linkhorn's "accommodation potential" approach, which regards every bed as potentially occupied for the purpose of making calculations, and Ms Arkcoll's highly simplistic one, which tends to treat lots as essentially equivalent, however many bedrooms they have. There was some inconclusive statistical material (the implications of which really were unclear) regarding occupancy. I am aware of local government planning schemes which define the population density in terms of two persons for the first bedroom and one person for each additional bedroom; such an approach may be thought to produce a more 'accurate' comparison, assuming that it is realistic to hope for accuracy or anything like it.

27. The Court, in approving the resolution reached by the present parties, makes it clear that no precedent is being set, for example, as to what ought to be the lot entitlements of other penthouses. The Court was told that the considerations respecting all of them are not the same. For example, not all are required to maintain a swimming pool as a water reservoir to feed the fire sprinkler system in the building.

If the adjustment to be made had come down to my decision, it may well not have gone as far as the parties' "agreement" in reducing the applicants' lot entitlements. However, I am satisfied that the agreement comes within the range of 'just and equitable' solutions within the Act.

28. (My approach is indicated by paragraph [46] of reasons recently published in Lupton v Hodge, Southport 138/2003, 9 March 2004:

> "[46] The purpose of subdivision 2 of division 4 of Part 19 of the Property Law Act 1974, as set out in s 282 is 'to ensure a just and equitable property distribution at the end of a de facto relationship'. S 286 authorises the court to 'make any order it considers just and equitable about the property of either or both of the de facto spouses adjusting the interests'. The expression 'just and equitable' which is found also in the headings to subdivisions 3 and 4 and in s 296 seems tautologous, but is increasingly encountered in legislation. An early instance was in relation to contribution among tortfeasors for purposes of apportioning liability (see Daniel v Rickett, Cockerell & Co Ltd [1938] 2KB 32); the 'just and equitable' ground for winding up of companies is long established (see re Kurilpa Protestant Hall Pty Ltd [1946] State Reports Queensland 171, 183); more recently, the Body Corporate & Community Management Act 1997 calls for this court or a specialist adjudicator to determine what is 'just and equitable' by way of relative lot entitlements of owners of lots in community titles schemes: see s 48 and Sandhurst Trustees Ltd v Condah Bay Investments Pty Ltd [2003] QDC 438, where the view was expressed at para 14, to which I adhere in the present context, that there is no single 'just and equitable' solution. Both components of the expression 'just and equitable' signify 'fair'. I think that 'just' has a connotation that the outcome is defensible in accordance with legal principles of the kind people would expect to be applied in a court.")

29. As things stand, the applicants are afflicted with high lot entitlements (attributable to the generous proportions and/or, perhaps, the much greater market value of their lots). They must make larger than average contributions to body corporate expenditures, which are devoted not only to maintenance of the common property, but to provision of hot water and air conditioning to the other privately-owned lots. It is apparently the case that the penthouse owners gain no benefit from those services whatever, and are required to provide and pay for them in the penthouses. It seems there may be a facility whereby the body corporate could meter and charge for the hot water supplied by it, but the facility is not made use of so far. The applicants, as both experts acknowledge, have a case for adjustment downwards of their contribution schedule lot entitlements.

30. I am inclined to think that the 'equality' approach favoured by the Act applies in a general, global kind of way, rather than being one to be examined separately in respect of all categories of body corporate expenditure. I accept that it may be useful for the experts in these matters to do their analyses in this detailed way, treating the dedicated "high-rise" and dedicated "low-rise" lifts separately, for example. This was Mr Linkhorn's approach, whereas Ms Arkcoll, on the basis that there ought to be no distinction made between lift charges made against the 17th floor as opposed to the 16th, considered that there should be no distinction made between the 2nd floor and the 32nd; Mr Linkhorn thought it significant that the "high-rise" lifts cost more to run. It was not clear whether the costs of a lift depend more on distance travelled, or number of stops. This example illustrates the uncertainties in trying to achieve justice and equity by close financial analysis.

31. I would note one argument mounted by Mr Perry which I think merits further consideration, to the effect that the body corporate's expenditure on maintenance of common property helps the owners with higher interest entitlements to protect or enhance their capital. This may provide some justification, analogous with our so-called 'progressive' taxation system (which may be taken to be accepted generally in the community as 'just and equitable') for requiring lot owners deemed to be wealthier in the sense that they hold more valuable real estate, to pay more for the upkeep of the whole. Of course, it cannot be predicted whether expenditure on maintaining in good order and appearance a 30-year-old building will be reflected in the value if the whole scheme comes to an end: it may well be if the whole building is purchased by someone proposing to operate it as a going concern, rather than by someone who wishes to demolish it.

32. On the topic of values of lots in the building, I would note my acceptance of the evidence of the valuer, Mr Smith, to the effect that the market values of lots in Golden Gate whose lot entitlements in the contribution schedule are increased will decline, and appreciably so.

Court citation [2005] QCA 230

Supreme Court of Queensland, Court of Appeal

Judgment delivered 24 June 2005

Contract for sale — residential property — whether purchaser had a right to terminate contract due to vendor non-compliance with the requirements of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 — whether s 366(1) ``Warning Statement'' correctly attached — meaning of ``attached'' — Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act s 366(1); 367(2).

The respondent was the vendor of a residential property situated in the Gold Coast pursuant to a contract for sale dated 10 June 2003 with the appellant purchaser.

Pursuant to s 366(1) of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act, the vendor was required to ``attach'' to the contract for sale, ``as its first or top sheet'', a ``Warning Statement'' advising the purchaser of its rights in regard to the ``cooling-off period'' otherwise the purchaser would have a right to terminate the contract by notice prior to settlement (s 367(2)).

On 26 May 2003, the vendor's agent sent to the purchaser a continuous fax comprising a cover sheet/letter, a Form 27b (``Selling Agent's Disclosure to Buyer''), a Form 30C (``Warning Statement'') and then the contract for sale (in that order). A director of the purchaser signed the Disclosure Statement, the Warning Statement and the contract for sale (in that order) and faxed the executed documents back to the vendor's agent. The purchaser's director also separately sent the original documents back to the vendor's agent. The vendor then executed the original contract in June 2003.

The contract was to be completed on 4 June 2004. On 24 May 2004, the purchaser sent a fax to the vendor's solicitor advising that it was terminating the contract pursuant to its purported right to do so under s 367(2).

The vendor rejected the termination on the basis that the Warning Statement was validly attached to the contract for sale.

At trial, the purchaser sought a declaration that it had validly terminated the contract and sought an order for repayment of the deposit monies. This application was rejected by the trial judge on the basis that the requirements of s 366(1) had been complied with. As this judgment was not final, it was necessary for the purchaser to seek leave to appeal.

The purchaser submitted that the Warning Statement had to be physically annexed to the contract for sale by binding, stapling, pinning etc and that it was not sufficient for the Warning Statement to merely be in close proximity with the contract.

The vendor argued however, that the legislature could not have intended the term ``attached'' to be construed in such a limiting way because this would exclude the electronic exchange of contracts for sale.

In order to ascertain whether the requirements of s 366(1) had been complied with, the trial judge considered the meaning of ``attached'' to the contract, ``as its first or top sheet''.

In his exploration of the meaning of the term ``attached'', the trial judge referred to the observations of Muir J in MP Management (Aust) Pty Ltd v Churven & Anor (2003) Q ConvR ¶54-581; [2002] QSC 320 whereby it was reasoned that attachment in its less restrictive sense, does not necessary mean physical joinder. However it was noted that in its everyday sense, ``attached'' does suggest some form of joinder, fastening or affixation and that the intention of the legislature, (ie the protection of residential purchasers by giving prominence to the Warning Statement), would tend to indicate that construction of the term should be construed restrictively. Further, the requirement of s 366(1), that the Warning Statement be attached as the first or top sheet of the contract, is indicative that it is not sufficient to simply place the Warning Statement on the contract or provide it in a folder together with the contract. It must be affixed to the contract or at least be the first page of a bundle, and so numbered as the first page.

The trial judge then explored the meaning of attachment when applied to contacts involving facsimile transmission, finding that what is important in a facsimile transmission is the order in which the documents are submitted rather than the means by which they are attached.

Because the Warning Statement was placed immediately in front of the contract in a continuous facsimile transmission, the requirements of s 366(1) were satisfied, the trial judge found.

Held: Leave to appeal granted. Appeal dismissed. Matter needs to proceed to trial for determination.

As per de Jersey CJ (with Williams JA and McMurdo J concurring):

The trial judge erred in his construction of the statutory provisions for the following reasons:

1. The meaning of the term ``attached'' in s 366 should be construed restrictively. Chapter 11 of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act (of which s 366 is a part) includes technical requirements ``plainly directed to ensuring a form of consumer protection for purchasers of residential property''. Pursuant to such consumer protections, the purchaser had a right to terminate a contract even for ``quite technical contraventions... whether or not the purchaser has suffered any material disadvantage''.

2. The vendor's argument that the legislature could not have intended the word ``attached'' to be construed in a restrictive sense because this would frustrate commercial dealings by excluding the electronic exchange of contracts was immaterial. The intention of the legislation is first and foremost to protect purchasers of residential property. In any case, a restrictive interpretation would not impede negotiations by fax. It would mean however that the act of contracting must be done by the exchange of original documents.

3. The factual basis assumed by the parties at trial was that the concluded contract was in facsimile form, instead of the original executed contract. Accepting that assumption (which may or may not have been correct), the pages of the Warning Statement appeared in the midst of a series of pages. It is clear however that the intention of the legislation is to ensure that a purchaser would first be confronted by the Warning Statement before reading the rest of the contract. The Warning Statement could not be described as ``attached'' to the contract merely because the contract followed the Warning Statement in the sequence of the fax.

4. Further, if the legislature had intended for a less restrictive approach, it would have done so by using language less prescriptive than ``as its first or top sheet''.

Williams JA made the additional observation that the facts of the case were too convoluted for the court to make a determination. It was unclear which set of documents brought the contract into existence — was it the faxed documents of 26 May 2003 or the original contract of June 2003? Did the original contract of June 2003 include the Selling Agent's Disclosure to Buyer Form, and Warning Statement and if so, what order were the documents sent, and were they bound together?

McMurdo J also explored the issue of when the Warning Statement must be attached to the contract for sale, a matter not specifically addressed in the legislation. If it must be attached at the time the draft contract is prepared, is an offence committed if the Warning

Statement is not attached to the contract for sale but the sale does not proceed? It is obvious that the Warning Statement must be attached at the time there is a concluded agreement. Additionally, s 366(4) provides that the Warning Statement must be signed by the purchaser before the contract for sale is signed. There is no stipulation in the legislation however, that the Warning Statement must be attached to the contract at the time the Warning Statement and the contract are signed.

Judgment in full below

de Jersey CJ: By a contract dated 10 June 2003, the respondent agreed to sell to the appellant, for the sum of $1.25 million, residential property at the Gold Coast. The Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 (Qld) applied to the transaction. It obliged the respondent to ``attach'' to the contract, ``as its first or top sheet'', a ``warning statement'' advising the appellant of its rights (s 366(1)). In the event that did not occur, the appellant gained a right to terminate the contract by notice prior to settlement (s 367(2)). The contract was due for completion on 4 June 2004. On 24 May that year, the appellant faxed the respondent's solicitors advising that it terminated the contract under s 367(2). The respondent rejected that termination.

2. The appellant sought a declaration that it validly terminated the contract, and an order for repayment of the deposit monies of $62,500. On the basis there was no relevant dispute about the facts, a learned District Court Judge dismissed the application, because he concluded the warning statement had been attached to the contract as required by s 366(1).

3. Because that judgment was not a ``final judgment'' (Carr v Finance Corporation of Australia Ltd (No 1) (1981) 147 CLR 246), it was necessary for the appellant, challenging the judgment, to seek leave to appeal (s 118(3) District Court of Queensland Act 1967 (Qld)). Because the construction of the statutory provision has not yet been settled at appellate level, and the determination of this case may have a significant impact on contracts for the sale of residential property, the court granted leave to appeal.

4. The critical provision, s 366, is in these terms:

> ``366 Warning statement to be attached to relevant contract
>
> (1) A relevant contract must have attached, as its first or top sheet, a statement in the approved form (`warning statement') containing the information mentioned in subsection (3).
> (2) The seller of the property or a person acting for the seller who prepared a relevant contract commits an offence if the seller or person prepares a contract that does not comply with subsection (1).
> Maximum penalty — 200 penalty units.

(3) The warning statement for a relevant contract must state the following information —

(a) the contract is subject to a cooling-off period;
(b) when the cooling-off period starts and ends;
(c) a recommendation that the buyer seek independent legal advice about the contract before the cooling-off period ends;
(d) what will happen if the buyer terminates the contract before the cooling- off period ends;
(e) the amount or the percentage of the purchase price that will not be refunded from the deposit if the contract is terminated before the cooling-off period ends;
(f) a recommendation that the buyer seek an independent valuation of the property before the cooling-off period ends;
(g) if the seller under the contract is a property developer, that a person who suffers financial loss because of, or arising out of, the person's dealings with a property developer or the property developer's employees can not make a claim against the claim fund.

(4) A statement purporting to be a warning statement is of no effect unless —

(a) before the contract is signed by the buyer, the statement is signed and dated by the buyer; and
(b) the words on the statement are presented in substantially the same way as the words are presented on the approved form.
Example for paragraph (b) —
If words on the approved form are presented in 14 point form, the words on the warning statement must also be presented in 14 point form.''

5. The purchaser's right to terminate is established by s 367, as follows:

``367 Buyer's right if warning statement not given

(1) This section applies to a contract to which a warning statement must be attached.

(2) If a warning statement is not attached to the contract or is of no effect under section 366(4), the buyer under the contract may terminate the contract at any time before the contract settles by giving signed, dated notice of termination to the seller or the seller's agent.

(3) The notice of termination must state that the contract is terminated under this section.

(4) If the contract is terminated, the seller must, within 14 days after the termination, refund any deposit paid under the contract to the buyer.

Maximum penalty — 200 penalty units

(5) If the seller, acting under subsection (4), instructs a licensee acting for the seller to refund the deposit paid under the contract to the buyer, the licensee must immediately refund the deposit to the buyer.

Maximum penalty — 200 penalty units

(6) If the contract is terminated, the seller and the person acting for the seller who prepared the contract are liable to the buyer for the buyer's reasonable legal and other expenses incurred by the buyer in relation to the contract after the buyer signed the contract.

(7) If more than 1 person is liable to reimburse the buyer, the liability of the persons is joint and several.

(8) An amount payable to the buyer under this section is recoverable as a debt.''

6. The respondent contended before the learned primary Judge that the attachment of the warning statement to the front of the contract arose in the following circumstances. On 26 May 2003, the respondent's agent sent to the appellant a continuous — ie single extended sheet, fax, comprising, in this order, a cover sheet/ letter; a form 27b (``Selling Agent's Disclosure to Buyer'' — s 138(1)); a form 30c (``Warning Statement''), the second page of which was headed ``important information you should read before you sign this warning statement and the attached contract''; then the contract. The appellant's director signed the disclosure statement, the warning statement and the contract, in that order, and faxed the executed documents back to the respondent's agent. The appellant's director separately sent the original documents back to the agent. The respondent then executed the original contract. There was apparent compliance with s 366(4): the issue agitated in the District Court was whether the warning statement was ``attached'' to the contract, ``as its first or top sheet''. While as[sic] s 366(1) and s 367(2) refer to a concluded contract, other references in those provisions to a ``contract'' must be read as referring to a draft contract (eg s 366(2), s 366(4)(a)).

7. The learned Judge set out, in his reasons for judgment, the following observations of Muir J in MP Management (Aust) Pty Ltd v Churven & Anor (2003) Q ConvR ¶54-581; [2002] QSC 320:

> ``20. The word `attached', in its less restrictive sense, may mean `accompanying' or `associated' (Bosaid v Andrey [1963] VR 465 at 473) and, in that sense of the word, one thing may be `attached' to another without physical joinder. (Elliott Common School District No. 48 v Country Board of School Trustees Tex Civ App, 76 SW 2d 786, 780.)
> 21. In its more restrictive sense and, I rather think, every day sense, `attached' connotes some form of joinder, fastening or affixation. There is nothing in the context of s 366 or s 367 which would tend to indicate that the word should be construed broadly, quite the contrary. The aim of the sections appears to be to give prominence to the warning statement by ensuring that not only is it inseparable from the contract proper but that it is the first document to be seen by a prospective purchaser when perusing the contract.
> 22. Subsection (1), by requiring a contract to `have attached' the warning statement `as its first or top sheet', suggests that more than the mere placing of the warning statement on the contract or providing it in a folder together with the contract is required and that some form of physical joinder or incorporation is necessary.
> 23. It may be that the requirements of s 366(1) could be complied with without the warning statement being stapled, pinned to or bound up with a contract. For example, if the warning statement was the first of a number of loose sheets placed together in a folder and numbered or otherwise identified as the first sheet of the bundle, it may be arguable that the warning statement was `attached' to the other documents...''

8. The primary Judge then reasoned as follows:

> ``Where a contract for the sale of land involves facsimile transmission between the parties, the more restrictive sense of the word `attached', as identified by Muir J, will obviously not be applicable. In these circumstances it is the order in which the documents are transmitted that is important rather than the means by which they are affixed...
> In the present case, it should be remembered, the Warning Statement was placed immediately in front of the Contract in a continuous facsimile transmission. In my view, the Warning Statement was, therefore, `attached' to the Contract as its first or top sheet, thus satisfying the requirement in s 366(1) of the Act.''

9. At the hearing of the appeal, we drew attention to the parties' and the court's focus below on the facsimile transmission in May, rather than the pleaded concluded contract of 10 June. The relevant statutory requirement relates to the concluded contract (s 366(1)), as does the provision according the right of termination (s 367(2)). While the evidence below did not address the physical configuration of that concluded contract, and that remains so, we were asked by both parties to express our conclusions as to the issue of statutory construction. There is utility in our doing so, even though — on my approach — the matter would have to be sent to trial. That is because while I believe the learned Judge erred in his construction of the statutory provisions, the relevant factual situation was not established clearly by the evidence, or addressed. For that reason, summary judgment could not have been, and could not now be, entered.

10. I turn now to the question of statutory construction.

11. Counsel for the appellant submitted ``that the warning statement [must] be attached to the contract as the first or top sheet (by binding, stapling, pinning, clipping or other form of attachment), and not merely associated with it (such as by mere physical closeness, internal cross references or the like)."

12. Counsel for the respondent submitted that the legislature could not have intended to exclude the exchange of contracts for the sale of residential property by electronic means, including facsimile transmission. Because physical attachment of a warning statement to a contract is impossible in that medium, something falling short of actual attachment must have been contemplated. Accordingly, it was submitted, it sufficed, for there to be attachment within the scope of s 366(1), that the warning statement formed part of a single continuous facsimile transmission, with the statement immediately preceding the contract.

13. Under its primary meaning, you ``attach" one document to another by ``fastening, affixing, joining or connecting" (Macquarie Dictionary) the two together. The related meaning offered in the Shorter Oxford English Dictionary is ``to tack on; to fasten or join (to) by tacking, tying, sticking etc". As Muir J observed, this would require ``some form of physical joinder or incorporation".

The respondent supports a construction which will maintain the availability of facsimile transmissions to facilitate the making of agreements of this character, and refers to the specific provision for facsimile transmission in s 365:

> ``365 When parties are bound under a relevant contract
> (1) The buyer and the seller under a relevant contract are bound for all purposes by the contract when the buyer or the buyer's agent receives a copy of the contract signed by the buyer and the seller.
> (2) For subsection (1) and without limiting how the buyer or the buyer's agent may receive a copy of the signed contract, the buyer or the buyer's agent may receive the copy by fax."

15. It is however significant that that section deals only with copies.

16. The context of the requirement set up by s 366 tells against a liberal interpretation of that requirement. Chapter 11 of the Act, in which s 366 occurs, contains a detailed set of technical requirements plainly directed to ensuring a form of consumer protection for purchasers of residential property. One of the objects of the Act, stated in its preamble, is ``to protect consumers against particular undesirable practices". That protection extends, in cases like these, to giving a purchaser a right to terminate even for quite technical contraventions, and whether or not the purchaser has suffered any material disadvantage. See, for example, s 366(4)(a), s 366(4)(b) (including the example) and s 367(2).

17. In Sidbent P/L & Anor v Reinisch [2003] QSC 203, White J suggested that because a failure to attach attracts criminal sanctions (s 366(2)), a broad interpretation of what amounts to attachment might be favoured. But if the natural construction of this remedial provision is clear, then that should be adopted. While a particular statutory construction may sometimes produce inconvenience, that does not justify departure from that construction if it is clear (cf. Horinack v Suncorp Metway Insurance Ltd (2001) 2 Qd R 266, 267, 269).

18. My view is that on the factual basis adopted below, this warning statement was not attached to the contract, as its first or top sheet. That ``factual basis" assumed the concluded contract was in the facsimile form discussed by the primary Judge, which may or may not prove to be correct. But accepting that assumption for the present, the pages of the warning statement appeared in the midst of a series of pages comprising a different form, the relevant statement, the contract and the directors' guarantee. The legislature intended that a purchaser, picking up the contract, would necessarily have first to confront the warning statement. That is achieved by adopting here the ordinary concept of ``attach", which I am satisfied was plainly the legislature's intent. One could not reasonably say this statement was attached to the contract, as its first or top page, where the only physical relationship between the documents, within the continuous fax, was that where the warning statement ended, the separate contract began.

19. While on this scenario it may be said that this warning statement was ``attached'' to this contract, being adjacent in that same continuous stream of paper, it was not attached as the first or top sheet of the contract. For that to occur, in order to satisfy the intention of the legislature as I comprehend it, the seller must present the two documents, one on top of the other, with the former physically confronting the reader as he or she sets about perusing the latter, being the contract. The rather fortuitous connection between the warning statement and contract, as presented here, could not fulfil that stipulation, a stipulation obviously directed to consumer protection, not the convenience of vendors of residential property.

20. It would be an exaggeration to suggest that construction would frustrate commercial dealings. In the first place, the convenience of commercial dealings is, implicitly, only subsidiary. Of primary importance is the protection of purchasers of residential property. Also, this approach would in no way impede negotiations by fax. But it would mean the act of contracting must be done by the exchange of original documents, a course probably reflected by s 365, and a course most contracting parties, even in this electronic age, would favour anyway, to ensure the security of their binding dealings.

21. Finally, had the parliament intended to sanction a situation like this, it would have done so by using language less prescriptive than, ``as its first or top sheet''. It is those terms which to my mind compellingly exclude the respondent's position. The legislature has considered an exacting obligation justified to secure the goal of consumer protection.

22. But in the end, because the relevant issue was not addressed, and not capable of being addressed because the relevant facts were not clearly established, the matter was not susceptible of summary determination, and that remains the position.

23. I would make the following orders:

1. grant leave to appeal;
2. dismiss the appeal;
3. order the appellant to pay the respondent's costs of and incidental to the appeal to be assessed.

Williams JA: After the close of pleadings the appellant (plaintiff) sought summary judgment of its claim for a declaration that it had validly terminated a contract dated 10 June 2003 for the purchase of a residential property from the respondent. The application was dismissed and the appellant has appealed.

25. Both the application for summary judgment and the statement of claim refer to a written agreement dated 10 June 2003 (``the contract'') between the respondent as seller and the appellant as purchaser for a purchase price of $1.25 million. That allegation was admitted in the defence and it was also not in dispute that the contract was for the sale of ``residential property'' within the meaning of that term as defined in the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 (Qld) (``the Act''). It was further agreed that the deposit was paid on 11 June 2003, and all calculations of time appear clearly to be based on a contract dated 10 June 2003.

26. The contention of the appellant is that there was a failure to comply with s 366 of the Act (which is fully set out in the reasons for judgment of the Chief Justice) and that in consequence it was entitled to terminate the contract pursuant to s 367 of the Act (again set out in the reasons for judgment of the Chief Justice) and did so on 24 May 2004, being a date prior to settlement.

27. The provisions of the Act in question are badly drafted; the reference in s 366(1) should not be to a ``contract'' but to documents submitted to an intending purchaser. (The possible ways in which the section may be applied discussed by McMurdo J in his reasons highlight other deficiencies in the drafting.)

28. A contract required to be in writing, as is the case here because it is concerned with real property, comes into existence when the document is duly executed by each party thereto. Until such execution there is no contract.

29. What the legislature to my mind clearly intended to say, but did not, was that the documents presented to a potential purchaser for execution, and which would result in a relevant contract coming into existence, must have attached as the first or top sheet a warning statement. That would have the desired consequence of bringing to the potential purchaser's attention prior to execution of the contract the contents of the warning statement. The sequence would then be, as provided by s 366(4), that the warning statement would be executed prior to execution of the contractual documents; thus prior to the relevant contract coming into existence the potential purchaser would have been duly warned and would have duly signed the warning statement.

30. The obligation is on the party who prepares the contractual documents (and it is not unheard of for that to be the purchaser) to ensure that the documents submitted to the purchaser for execution comprise the necessary contractual documents to which is attached as the first or top sheet the approved warning statement. In the present case it seems clear that the documents were prepared by the respondent and in consequence there was an obligation on the respondent to present the documents to the appellant for execution in that form.

31. The critical question to be determined in deciding whether or not the appellant had its asserted right of termination is whether or not the documents as presented for execution by the appellant complied with that statutory requirement.

32. Unfortunately the facts of the case are far from clear.

33. Paragraph 6 of the statement of claim alleges that on or about 26 May 2003 the appellant was sent for signature and return documents (which it is now agreed) were in the form of a continuous fax. The agreed order in that continuous fax was:

(i) Form 27(b) — selling agent's disclosure to the buyer pursuant to s 138(1) of the Act;
(ii) Form 30c being the warning statement referred to in s 366 of the Act;
(iii) REIQ Contract for House and Land.

34. It appears to be agreed that the appellant executed the documents where necessary and returned them, in the same order, to the respondent by fax. Further, it appears to be agreed that some executed documents were returned to the respondent by some other means. It is not clear whether what was involved was returning the original facsimile executed by the appellant, or some other form of the documents.

36. Various affidavits filed on the hearing of the application for summary judgment exhibit a great deal of correspondence, but there is nothing which amounts to a covering letter with respect to sending out a further set of documents for execution by the appellant on 10 June 2003. Further, the material is silent as to how on that date the relevant documents were ``sent''. More importantly there is nothing to indicate the form in which those documents were sent, that is the order in which the documents appeared, and nothing to indicate what documents, if any, were bound together in some way.

37. The material from either side is so vague and uncertain that it is not clear whether a set of documents was executed on or about 26 May 2003 and another set on or about 10 June 2003; the material is clearly open to that conclusion. If there were two sets of documents executed by the parties then it is clear from the pleadings that the operative documents were those executed on or about 10 June 2003.

38. All that one can say with respect to documents sent out for execution by the appellant on 10 June is that it is alleged in the statement of claim and admitted in the defence that the documents were ``in the following order'' whatever that means; that order being:

(i) Form 27(b) signed by the appellant on 26 May 2003;
(ii) Form 30c signed by the appellant on 26 May 2003; and
(iii) REIQ contract for house and land.

39. If that be accurate then what was sent out for execution as alleged in paragraph 7 must only have been the REIQ contract — the other documents already being signed on 26 May. That would appear to be the case as paragraph 7 goes on to allege that the appellant then ``executed... the original contract of sale referred to in paragraph 3 herein'' and sent back to the agent the documents in the following order: Form 27(b) signed by the appellant 26 May 2003, Form 30c signed by the appellant on 26 May 2003 and REIQ contract for house and land signed by the appellant on or about 10 June 2003. All of that is admitted in the defence.

40. On the application for summary judgment, notwithstanding what was said in the pleadings, the concentration was on the documents sent out by continuous facsimile on 26 May. Given the state of the material there was a clear factual issue as to whether or not the signing of the documents sent by facsimile on 26 May was the operative act of the appellant in the sense that it was that execution which, after execution by the respondent, brought the contract into existence. If the relevant execution was of documents sent out on or about 10 June then the relevant enquiry for purposes of s 366 and s 367 of the Act would have been with respect to those documents.

41. It is clear in the circumstances that the first question to be determined is what set of documents constituted the relevant contract for purposes of s 366 and s 367. For all this court knows at this stage when the documents were sent out on 10 June to have the REIQ form of contract executed by the appellant the Form 30c could have been ``attached'' as the top sheet of that REIQ form.

42. Once the facts relating to the formation of the relevant contract are established it will probably be relatively easy to determine whether or not there has been a breach of the requirements of s 366 of the Act entitling the appellant to terminate the contract.

43. The learned judge at first instance was asked to determine the matter on the basis of documents executed on or about 26 May when ultimately that may not prove to be the relevant question.

44. For the reasons given by the Chief Justice I agree that if the relevant documentation is the continuous fax forwarded to the appellant on 26 May then s 366 of the Act was breached; given the nature of the continuous fax it cannot be said that the warning statement was attached to the contractual document as the first or top sheet thereof. To that extent the reasoning of the learned District Court judge at first instance must be rejected.

45. In my view s 365 of the Act is not an indication that the documents prepared for execution can be forwarded by fax. That section is dealing with the forwarding of a copy of the executed contract to the purchaser, a step required by the Act. It would be unusual to have as the original contract documents forwarded by facsimile and there is no hardship in requiring the documents prepared for execution being submitted to the intending purchaser in a way which complies with the statutory requirements.

46. The consequence of dismissing the application for summary judgment is that the matter will have to proceed to trial. For the reasons given above that is obviously the only appropriate course open. Though the learned judge at first instance erred in his reasoning in arriving at the conclusion that the application for summary judgment should be dismissed, the appropriate order for this court to make is that the appeal be dismissed; as noted, that means the matter will go to trial.

47. Because the relevant facts were so unclear it ought to have been obvious to the appellant that an appeal was doomed to fail. The appellant should pay the respondent's costs of the appeal to be assessed.

48. The orders should therefore be:

(i) Grant leave to appeal;
(ii) Appeal dismissed;
(iii) Order the appellant to pay the respondent's costs of and incidental to the appeal to be assessed.

McMurdo J: I agree that the appeal should be dismissed and with the other orders proposed by Williams JA.

50. As the judgments of the Chief Justice and Williams JA discuss, the factual basis upon which the case was argued before the learned primary judge did not correspond with the facts which are common ground on the pleadings. According to the pleaded facts, it is possible that the requirements of s 366 were satisfied by the attachment of a warning statement to the relevant contract document, if it was not attached by the transmission of facsimile copies as occurred on 26 May 2003. That possibility is indicated by the pleadings, but more facts than those which are pleaded would have to be found before the question of ultimate compliance with s 366(1) could be determined. At the hearing in this court, the parties were asked to agree, if possible, upon such further facts as would enable this court to determine the question. The parties cannot agree, and the facts must be found at a trial.

51. There are several potential questions as to the interpretation of s 366 and s 367 which could arise in this case. Some discussion of them is necessary in order to explain why the facts must be investigated at a trial.

52. Section 366(1) provides that a relevant contract must have attached, as its first or top sheet, a warning statement. A relevant contract means a contract for the sale of residential property in Queensland, other than a contract formed upon a sale by auction.[1] In the context of s 366, the term relevant contract refers to a document which is intended to evidence and define the contractual relationship. That relationship commences, that is the parties are contractually bound, only when the buyer, or the buyer's agent, receives a copy of the contract signed by the buyer and the seller: s 365(1). But at what point in the dealings must the warning statement be attached to the contract document?

53. The legislation does not expressly answer that question. Section 366(2) might indicate an answer, by providing that the seller or a person acting for the seller who prepares a relevant contract commits an offence if the seller or person prepares a contract that does not comply with s 366(1). But at what point is that offence committed? Is an offence committed if no contract is formed? It is far from clear that it is intended that a seller, or his estate agent or solicitor, should be caught by the offence provision if the relevant document remains but a draft. Otherwise, for example, an agent might commit an offence simply by faxing the draft contract and warning statement (as occurred here), assuming for the moment that the documents are not thereby attached. The offence is committed by the preparation of a document but only a document meeting the description of ``a relevant contract'', and at least on one view, a document is not of that description unless and until it does record a contractual relationship. If that is correct, s 366(2) does not strongly indicate that the warning statement must be attached before the buyer receives the draft contract.

54. Section 366(4) requires the warning statement to be signed by the buyer before the contract is signed by that party. But it does not provide that the warning statement is to be attached to the contract when either the warning statement, or in turn the contract, is signed by the buyer. Nor does s 367 stipulate the point by which the statement must be attached. Plainly it must be attached by the time there is a concluded agreement for, on any view, the document is by that time ``a relevant contract''.

55. It would be logical to require the warning statement to be attached when the prospective buyer receives the (draft) contract. That might enhance the prospects of the buyer's signing the warning statement before signing the contract. But there is no clear implication that the statement must be attached by that point in time. An alternative interpretation is that the statement must be attached by the time the buyer signs the contract. That interpretation would make the warning equally effective but it would allow for some greater convenience and expedition. Assuming for the moment that a statement is not attached to the contract by a buyer receiving copies by facsimile transmission, this alternative interpretation would permit the buyer's copies, as printed from the fax machine, to be signed by the buyer.

56. A further alternative interpretation is that the warning statement must be attached to the contract document by the time the parties become bound. That would still provide a warning consistently with the purposes expressed in s 363. It would still require the warning to be signed and dated by the buyer before the buyer signs the contract. And the attachment of the warning to the front of the contract would serve an important purpose, although the attachment was not made until the buyer or the buyer's agent was sent a copy of the contract, signed by the buyer and the seller. That is because the cooling-off period only begins when the parties become bound. The content of a warning statement, as prescribed by s 366(3), seems largely to be designed to assist the buyer to decide whether to opt out during the cooling-off period. Of course, it is also relevant for the buyer's decision to sign the contract, for otherwise the section would not require the warning statement to be signed prior to the contract being signed. But the subsequent attachment of the warning statement serves a substantial purpose in informing purchasers during the cooling-off period. The benefit of the cooling-off period is enhanced by the prominence of the warning as to what the purchaser should or could do within that period. Indeed, that was the purpose of the warning statement which is identified by Professor W D Duncan, in his report which was laid before the Legislative Assembly before the enactment of this Act.[2]

57. It is unnecessary to determine on this appeal which of these interpretations is correct. Nor is it necessary to determine whether the primary judge was correct in holding that the statement was sufficiently attached by the facsimile transmission to the plaintiff of 26 May 2003. Those questions are related, because if there can be no attachment by faxing copies of the document, or by e-mailing them, then the argument for the attachment being required at a point subsequent to the buyer's receipt of the documents becomes more persuasive. That argument is also supported by the fact that, as Williams JA has noted, sometimes the contract document is compiled by the buyer's side.

58. According to the pleadings and the present evidence, it is impossible to say whether what ultimately became the contract document had attached a warning statement, and if so, when that attachment was made. Possibly the warning statement signed by the plaintiff on 26 May was attached to the draft form of contract if, as is agreed on the present pleadings, those documents were sent to the plaintiff on or about 10 June 2003. Unless s 366 requires the warning statement to be attached to the contract prior to the statement itself being signed, that would represent compliance with the section. It is at least strongly arguable that those facts would constitute compliance and there is some potential, even from that factual possibility alone, for the defendant to succeed if the learned primary judge's view as to attachment by fax is incorrect.

59. Therefore I agree with Williams JA that not only should the appeal be dismissed but that there must be a trial. I also agree with his Honour's proposal that the appellant pay the respondent's costs of this appeal. Each of the parties approached the hearing of this appeal on the basis that it involved only the attachment by fax point, and overlooking what their own pleadings say was the contract document. But the appeal was, of course, instituted by the appellant and its costs should follow the event.

Community titles — Body corporate — Application for reconfiguration by subdivision of a lot in a community titles scheme — Adverse submitter appeal against Council's approval of reconfiguration — Whether consent of body corporate required for reconfiguration — Whether proposed development conflicts with legislative provisions Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld), s 54, 55 and 56, Integrated Planning Act 1997 (Qld), s 1.3.2

The co-respondent (B) purchased a block of land (lot 1) in a community titles scheme to subdivide and on which to build two houses. The respondent Council approved B's application for a development permit for reconfiguration of the lot. The proposed reconfiguration was development as defined in the Integrated Planning Act 1997 (Qld) (the IPA).

Lot 1 had street frontage, unlike other lots in the community titles scheme, with street access via the common property. Under the co-respondent's proposed development, access for one of the two new parcels of land would be via the common property.

In an appeal by the applicant (F) it was asserted that the "proposed development" conflicted with the provisions of s 54, 55 and 56 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld). F asserted that consent had not been given to record a new community management statement for the body corporate and that B had not sought an amendment to the current community management statement before seeking permission for subdivision from the Council. F was the owner of lot 2 and previously owned lot 1, at which time he tentatively supported its subdivision.

B and the respondent Council submitted that the body corporate had consented to the proposed reconfiguration. The respondent Council also submitted that the body corporate's consent to the proposed reconfiguration was not actually required.

Held: for the respondents

1. The respondent Council's task, by reference to the IPA, was to assess the application for reconfiguration. There was no indication in the IPA that reference need be made by the Council as assessment manager to the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld).
2. The subdivision of lot 1 would trigger obligations in respect of changing the community management statement. However, it did not follow that the Council should delay in deciding an application for reconfiguration until those obligations were attended to in whole or in part.
3. F was entitled to expect that his views and interest would be considered in the submission process, which they were.

Appellant and co-respondent self represented.

KR Johnson (instructed by Brisbane City Council Legal Practice) for the respondent.

Full text of judgment below

Robin QC DCJ:

1. Mr Falconer (self-represented) appeals "against the decision of the Brisbane City Council (Respondent) to approve the application by Diann Buck (Co-Respondent) for a development permit for making a material change of use and for the reconfiguration of a lot subject to conditions in respect of land situated at 11C Scenic Rd, Kenmore, Queensland and described as lot 1 on SP145009 and common property CTS30012, Parish of Indooroopilly." The Respondent was capably represented by Miss Johnston, for whose expert guidance the other parties and the court are grateful. Ms Buck was self-represented, with some assistance from a "McKenzie friend[1] ", Mr Ian Gordon. Her development application was for reconfiguration only, so that considerations relevant to any material change of use presently have no part to play.

The Land

2. Lot 6 on RP 87134 Parish of Indooroopilly, County of Stanley was an axe-head shaped parcel of land whose street frontage to the northern side of Scenic Rd, Kenmore was represented by the narrow haft end. In 2002 the lot was cancelled, and there was registered a plan of lots 1-8 and common property. Lots 3-7 (whose areas ranged from 734 square metres to 781 square metres, except for lot 7 (1103 square metres)) lie side-by-side along the rear (northern) boundary of the original parcel. They are accessed via a cul-de-sac in the shape of a "T" whose stem extends to Scenic Rd, the cul-de-sac being common property for purposes of the group title arrangements established under the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997. The balance of the Scenic Rd frontage is occupied by lot 1, that is Ms Buck's property, which contains 1637m^2. Across the common property access described above is lot 8 (1282m^2), which is roughly triangular in shape, any "frontage" it may have to Scenic Rd being limited to a point of the triangle. Lot 1 adjoins lot 2 (1929m^2) for the full length of the latter's northern boundary. Only lot 1 has any practical possibility of direct access to Scenic Rd. The reconfiguration under appeal divides it into its northern half (lot 10) and its southern half (lot 11) of which only the latter will enjoy any possibility of direct access to Scenic Rd. Lot 10's access, like that of lots 2-8, will be via the common property. It may be observed that lot 1 would appear to be no less entitled to use common property for access than lots 2-8.

Issues in the Appeal

3. The notice of appeal asserts that the "proposed development" conflicts with the Body Corporate and Community Management Act and sets out the terms of s 54(2), s 55(1) and s 56(1). It is asserted that "no consent has been given to record a new community management statement from the Scenic Pocket Body Corporate" and (correctly, as a matter of fact) that "the co-respondent has not sought an amendment to the current community management statement before seeking permission for subdivision from the Respondent." On 8 July 2005 Judge Rackemann ordered that the issues in dispute be identified as those outlined in attachment "A":

> "Council has an obligation to consider the opinion of the other owners before approving the subdivision of a lot in a community title scheme.
> Council failed to give due consideration to all the information before it before granting approval. In particular council did not give proper consideration to an objection to the proposed subdivision which indicated that the other owners were unanimously opposed to the subdivision."

The issue seems to resolve into whether the Council could give its approval to the proposed reconfiguration only if the Body Corporate consented and, if so, whether the Body Corporate had consented. Ms Johnston and Ms Buck (contrary to Mr Falconer) submitted that the second aspect was satisfied (whether or not there was any necessity that it be). Ms Johnston submitted that no consent was required.

4. The Body Corporate has taken no part in the appeal. Mr Falconer was not able to assert that he spoke for it (although he appears to be a committee member). For that matter, Mr Falconer established no entitlement to speak for any other lot owner, even lot owners who, like him, had lodged with the Council submissions in opposition to the proposed reconfiguration, but who took no part in the appeal.

5. Ms Johnston's approach may seem inconsistent with that advised to Ms Buck's agent on receipt of the Form 1 Development Application IDAS contained in the Council's letter of 5 July 2004:

> "Thank you for your development application lodged 30 June 2004. I wish to advise that the Council is unable to acknowledge this application as the common property was not included in the description of the land on Form 1A nor was resolution of the Body Corporate consenting to the lodging of the application submitted. As a consequence, the application will be held in abeyance until this information is submitted."

The first requisition was responded to by the provision of a replacement part A of the Form 1 development application adding to the original description of the land as set out in the Notice of Appeal "and common property of 'Scenic Pocket' Body Corporate CTS30012." The requisition may have been made out of awareness of Australian International Language College Pty Ltd v Gold Coast City Council [1994] QPLR 102, in which the Appellant had argued that since no reference was made to common property over which rights of access would have to be exercised by those resorting to a particular unit, the application was defective. Judge Quirk considered that a "Pioneer" point about non-inclusion of all land within a development proposal was unsound. Also, he declined to require that the application be accompanied by the written authority of all the co-owners of the common property, considering that relevant provisions of the Building Units and Group

Titles Act 1980 made it clear that common property did not exist as a separate and a distinct legal entity, but was appurtenant to the lots, and held by all proprietors as tenants in common. His Honour considered that provision of the written authority of the registered proprietor of the relevant lot was sufficient for purposes of s 4.1(2)(d) of that Act, the written authority of all the co-owners of the common property being unnecessary, as the proposed use did not involve an exercise of rights beyond those ordinarily appurtenant to the rights of ownership of that lot. It was not shown that his Honour's views would not apply under the current legislation.

6. The Council's second requisition contained in its letter was responded to by provision under cover of a letter of 8 July 2004 of a copy of minutes of the AGM of the Body Corporate held on 19 February 2004 (which the evidence shows were confirmed in due course at a subsequent meeting of the Body Corporate). Those minutes contained the following:

> "MOTION No 10 SUB DIVISION OF A LOT RESOLVED that the body corporate discuss the possibility of allowing the sub division of Lot 1 to create two separate titles within the scheme. Should the meeting consent to this the owner of Lot 1 will need > to undertake all legal requirements at that owners cost to be lodged with the Dept of Titles. The prepared paperwork will need to be presented to the owners for final consent.
> Whilst this was an item of discussion a vote was taken from the floor and as all lots were represented no person was disadvantaged. The persons holding proxies determined that the proxies would not be used and as such were recorded as an abstaining vote.
> The meeting as such voted on allowing consent to Lot 1 to sub divide. The meeting also determined that a By-Law should be drafted and conditions set out in place as to the style, construction and development of the two lots to ensure that the completed fixtures are within keeping with the scheme and do not in any way detract from the overall intent of the scheme. Any proposed construction of development is to be placed before the committee for review as that will be defined within the proposed By-Law and conditions.
> By Ordinary Resolution
> VOTE FOR ALL PERSONS VOTE WITHOUT LOT 1 DUE TO THE AN INTEREST
> 4 YES 3 YES
> 2 NO 2 NO
> 2 ABSTAIN 2 ABSTAIN
> NOTE: The vote would be carried based on both circumstances" At the time of that meeting, Mr Falconer was the proponent of the notion of subdivision of lot 1 and also the owner of lot 1. He is presently the owner of lot 2, which had been retained by the developer, Intech Properties Pty Ltd. There has been an exchange of their lots by Intech Properties Pty Ltd and Mr Falconer.

The Co-Respondent becomes involved

7. About March 2004, Ms Buck was looking to purchase a block of land "to subdivide and build two houses on. One to live in and the other to sell." It is clear that she purchased lot 1 from Intech Properties Pty Ltd. Her solicitor's search made shortly after the 14 day contract dated 17 March 2004 revealed that the property was registered at the time of search in the names of Mr Falconer and another. Ms Buck had been provided with a copy of the minutes of the AGM of 19 February 2004, obviously to provide her with assurance that her plans could be implemented in relation to lot 1. While different interpretations might be placed upon Mr Falconer's apparent change of stance from apparently favouring subdivision of lot 1 to now opposing it, there is no basis shown for implicating him consciously in any scheme to deceive Ms Buck. He told the court that his own tentative proposals for lot 1 had proved (for financial reasons) not to be feasible.

8. Like others concerned, Mr Falconer received notice of Ms Buck's development application. Like a couple of other owners (Mr and Mrs Searls and also Mr Patten and Ms Abbondanza), he lodged an objection to the proposal with the Council, writing on 23 August 2004:

"I am of the understanding, as are all the neighbours I have spoken to and the other members of the affected Community Title Development (Scenic Pocket CTS 30012) that the original subdivision (in 2002) of 11 Scenic Road into 8 lots was granted subject to the condition that the blocks that adjoined Scenic Road were to be retained as large blocks so that the character of the area would be maintained (see copy of attached plan). Permitting the subdivision is contrary to the intention and outcomes of retaining the larger blocks. I believe that allowing this development will have a significant impact on the aesthetic and visual amenity of the original development and of the neighbourhood in general.

Approval of the subdivision will also have a negative impact on the property values of the existing blocks. Are financial impacts taken into consideration when council assesses an application? Most importantly the block in question is, as previously noted, a part of a community title development and the subdivision is not supported by the Body Corporate. I have spoken to Landmark Consulting and they were under the impression that the owners of the block had the support of the Body Corporate. I informed them of their misunderstanding and suggested they or the owner that they are representing contact the Body Corporate Manager (Peter Veal, at R. Jackson Pty. Ltd. 3862 1868) to clarify the matter. They are yet to contact Mr. Veal.

The confusion regarding the position of the Body Corporate has arisen from the minutes of a meeting held on 19/2/04. At that time I was the owner of 11C Scenic Road and I wanted to clarify the position of the other members of the Body Corp regarding subdivision of the lot. What was resolved by vote was that the issue of subdivision be discussed, which it was. The minutes are perhaps poorly worded as it gives the impression a vote was taken to allow consent to the subdivision whereas what was decided was that consent would be considered given a significant range of conditions. I felt that it would not be possible for me to satisfy these conditions and therefore sold the block and purchased another in the development.

I have also spoken to a solicitor who said the new owners of 11C would need to seek their own consent from the Body Corporate, and as far as I am aware they have made no attempt to discuss their proposal with the Body Corporate.

I would have thought that a formal letter from the Body Corporate supporting the existing owner's proposal would be required by Council as part of the development application."

9. The planning report prepared by the Council's officer contains the following:

"PLANNING SCHEME AND PLANNING SCHEME POLICIES Emerging Community Area

The intent of Emerging Community Area is to provide for residential development at some time in the future. The sites have scenic or environmental values and/or infrastructure requirements that may limit or influence the extent of development that is possible on the site.

The development comprises infill development within an established residential subdivision all matters concerning infrastructure and environmental value have been previously investigated. This decision does not compromise the achievement of the desired environmental outcomes of the Emerging Community Area and it has been demonstrated that there are sufficient planning grounds to justify this decision.

Subdivision Code

It is considered that the development meets the performance solutions of the Code with respect to road design, provision of pedestrian and public transport, size of the lot and infrastructure provisions.

Secondary Codes

Council engineer undertook assessment of servicing requirements and has assessed the conditioned compliance with relevant secondary codes relating to services, stormwater and access.

With the original subdivision no structure plan was requested and none appears to exist over the subject land. Given low-density residential nature of locality and established pattern of surrounding development a structure plan was not required to assess this subdivision's suitability.

SUBMISSIONS, REPRESENTATIONS AND PUBLIC CONSULTATION

The Notice of Compliance has been submitted and 3 properly made and 1 late submission has been received.

Summary of Submissions

Objections/Concerns Response

1. Request that current building covenant and body corporate rules to be adhered to

This is a matter for the existing Body Corporate to administer.

2. New driveway should be via Scenic Rd

Driveway will only be allowed via existing common road. This strict requirement will be conditioned for vehicle safety.

3. Request that the positioning of new dwellings faces south

Dwelling position is not controlled by subdivisional approach but via Building Approval.

4. Open fencing or no fencing at all.

Not an issue identified in original subdivision, nor relevant to this application. Surrounding residential development has standard timber fencing.

5. Driveway not to be directly opposite existing driveway to avoid collisions.

To be investigated by Council officers during driveway permit application.

6. Building envelope for Lot 11 to be 12m from front.

No envelope required. Trees conditioned to be retained. Setbacks administered via Building Approval.

7. Building envelope for Lot 10 to be 6m from front.

Setbacks to road controlled by Building Approval.

8. All costs to be incurred by the developer.

This requirement is standard and will be conditioned.

9. Blocks to issued with half a body corporate vote.

This is a matter for the existing Body Corporate to administer.

10. Modification of letter boxes at cost to developer.

Existing letter box numbers will be retained.

11. Developer to proceed only when all properties have individual water meters.

New meters to new lots, will be conditioned to be installed at cost to developer.

12. Proposal will destroy street appeal.

The area is of post 1970 development with large brick housing. The addition of a single house within a recent subdivision will not destroy the streetscape of Scenic Road. Existing trees have been conditioned to be retained.

13. Cause traffic issues One new dwelling unit will not cause traffic issues onto Scenic Road.

14. Cause environmental issues.

Retention of existing trees on site. No significant environmental issues are apparent.

15. Existing services can't cope with increases in use & consumption.

All services existing to cope with service requirements.

16. Decrease value of land.

Not a valid planning issue.

17. Owner consent has not been obtained. Misunderstanding with Body Corporate Minutes.

Owner consent has been obtained by an ordinary resolution of the body corporate.

10. Whether or not the officer's responses to the objections are wise or open to challenge, it appears that due consideration was given to the interests involved in the adverse submitter points, as required by Bartlett v Brisbane City Council (2003) 133 LGERA 340; [2003] QCA 494, whose headnote indicates what was decided:

> "(1) The purpose of s 3.2.1 of the IPA was limited. It simply identified the requirements for the first stage of the Integrated development Assessment System (IDAS) process referred to in Chapter 3 of that Act.
> (2) The respondents' proposal was very significant to the use of the subject lot (Lot 28) but had no significance whatsoever to the use of the other lots. Each owner of the other lots would continue to have the same interest in the land constituted by the lot, and the same interest in the common property as that owner had prior to the application.
> (3) Any concerns on the part of another lot owner about the change in amenity or the integrity or aesthetics of the building were simply matters to be agitated in the decision process. They were not factors of use which determined the identification of the land.
> (4) To adopt the construction contended for by the Appellants would, in practice, have the effect of a lot owner in a large development rarely, if ever, being able to make a development application. One could not conclude that the legislature intended such a result.
> (5) Moreover, such a construction was only arrived at by a technical and strained application of the terms of the legislation with an undue focus on interests allied to lot ownership rather than the purpose of identifying the land itself.
> (6) The other lot holders and the body corporate each had the opportunity to have their respective interests considered through the submission process provided for by s 3.4.9 of the IPA.
> (7) The approach of the respondents of simply applying to the terms of s 3.2.1 the ordinary meaning of the words as contemplated by the statutory definitions, gave rise to no real difficulty. By this > approach a construction of the section was arrived at which was functional and which did not interfere with the generally accepted rights of the owners of lots in a community title scheme.
> (8) This was so whether one was considering the position of the lot owner as an applicant for a development approval or as an owner entitled to notification. (9) There was no warrant for construing the terms of s 3.2.1 of the IPA as requiring the consent of other lot holders."
>
> In the leading judgment, Jones J said:
>
> "[13] The second point is raised in support of that contention, by highlighting one of the characteristics of group or community titles schemes. Section 35 (formerly s 37) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 provides that "(1) Common property for a community titles scheme is owned by the owners of the lots included in the scheme, as tenants in common,..." and that "(3) An owner's interest in a lot is inseparable from the owner's interest in the common property". Counsel for the appellant argues that, as a consequence, all owners have an interest in the maintenance of the appearance and in the integrity of the whole building with the result that all the lots fall within the scope of the land the subject of the application and this is why all the lot owners are, to use his words, "legally connected".
> [14] The purpose of this section of BCCM is not to bring about a connection between separate lots of the scheme or between owners of such lots. Its function is to create interests in common property and to tie the ownership of those interests to the ownership of lots so as to make the interests indisseverable. Whilst this has the effect of linking those interests it does not, in my view, create interests for other lot owners in the lot of an individual owner. No part of the common property was involved in or impacted upon by the respondents' proposal."

11. Within the Body Corporate, steps have been taken with a view to ensuring that Motion 10 is not taken as a consent of the Body Corporate to subdivision of lot 1. The Body Corporate's professional manager has generated correspondence, some of which went to the Council, asserting that Motion 10 embodies only discussion, no consent. A new motion was proposed for an EGM on 12 November 2004 as follows:

"MOTION No 2 NO APPROVAL FOR SUBDIVISION

Person Proposing: Committee

Lot No: Not Applicable

Resolution Required: Ordinary Resolution

That the body corporate clarify that Motion 10 of Annual General Minutes dated 19/02/04 does not give approval for subdivision of lot 1. This motion was out of order and not able to be approved as all owners were not given the legislative requirement of 21 days to consider their voting options."

Purportedly Motion No. 2 was passed; its validity may be doubted, given that Ms Buck (who took the point immediately) seems able to demonstrate that the requisite 21 days' notice was not given in respect of Motion No. 2. It does not seem necessary or even appropriate at present to canvass the validity of Body Corporate resolutions, which is, one would think, something best resolved under the arrangements established by the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997.

The Need for Body Corporate Consent

12. The authorities mentioned above, to which the court was taken by Ms Johnston, are suggestive that no consent of the Body Corporate or of the members of it is required. The proposed reconfiguration is development as defined in s 1.3.2 of the Integrated Planning Act 1997 (IPA), (d) of which is "reconfiguring a lot". There is a definition of "lot" in s 1.3.5 as including "(a) a lot under the Land Title Act 1994", schedule 2 of which, as noted in the IPA, provides:

"Lot means a separate, distinct parcel of land created on – (a) the registration of a plan of subdivision; or (b) the recording of particulars of an instrument; and includes a lot under the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980."

It appears that the Council's task, by reference to the IPA, is to assess the application for reconfiguration. There is no indication in the IPA that reference need be made by Council as assessment manager to the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, notwithstanding that it contains in part 6 Community Management Statements provisions that may have to be complied with in respect of subdivisions affecting a lot in, or the common property for a scheme. See s 56 in particular, and other references to subdivision, for example in s 57 and s 62. I set out in an appendix ss 55, 56, 57, 62 and 63, the last couple of which draw attention to the important matter of the costs of preparation and recording of a new community management statement, which subdivision of a lot may require. The members of the Body Corporate may wish to revise Motion No. 10 to fix Ms Buck with responsibility for certain costs. The ultimate incidence of such costs and other issues, such as the formulation of a new community management statement, which must deal with significant matters such as lot entitlements, may create real issues in a context like the present one. The court was told that the present lots are a single consumer of water. Unless there is separate metering introduced, there may be issues to do with the share of water charges to be borne by lots 10 and 11, as to whether they must pay one or two shares. The dispute resolution procedures included in the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 may or may not be available to achieve resolution of issues here. The decision the court makes, however, is that there is no requirement that prior consent to subdivision of a lot be given by the Body Corporate or by the members of it.

It is clear that subdivision of lot 1 will trigger obligations in respect of changing the community management statement. It does not follow that the Council should delay deciding on an application for reconfiguration until those obligations are wholly or partly attended to. There is no proscription against the Council's granting approval in the absence of consent of the kind that is found in s 58 of the Standard Building Regulation 1993, for example.

13. Mr Falconer did not present any argument that any statutory requirement existed that consent of the Body Corporate or any of its members be forthcoming. It seemed he may have been relying on some kind of legitimate expectation of the kind described in Halsbury's Laws of Australia in the section devoted to Administrative Law in [10-1880] and [10-1883]:

> "[10-1880] Legitimate expectation: representations In special circumstances, a legitimate expectation may be generated by an administrator's having given an undertaking, which good administration requires ought to be honoured, provided that honouring the undertaking is not inconsistent with the administrator's statutory duty."
> "[10-1883] Legitimate expectations: regular practices and government policies As an extension of the notion that a representation may generate a legitimate expectation, the existence of a regular practice which the person affected could reasonably expect to continue may also give rise to a legitimate expectation that the practice will continue, or in any event that it will not be discontinued without the person affected being given a hearing."

(downloaded from www.lexisnexis.com on 22/07/2005). Authorities cited in Halsbury include Haoucher v Minister for State for Immigration and Ethnic Affairs (1990) 169 CLR 648. Although the court inquired, nothing was forthcoming to suggest that the Council has any relevant general practice. There is, however, specifically directed to the present development application, the Council's letter of 5 July 2004. It was addressed to Ms Buck (or her agent); it is difficult to see how it could give rise to any legitimate expectation on the part of Mr Falconer. He was entitled to expect (and he got it) that his views and interests would be considered in the submission process. I am quite unable to see how the Council's letter, by making a requisition that appears on examination to be without warrant (although doubtless made in a well intentioned attempt to discover the Body Corporate's attitude), could place some additional hurdle in the way of Ms Buck's development application.

14. I repeat an observation made during the hearing of the appeal, that, while the informality of Motion No 10, which seems to represent no more than a "straw poll", may be noted, it would be undesirable for the Council to be required, where some expression of a Body Corporate's views is called for, in circumstances like the present, to adopt any strict, legalistic approach, where a clear attitude is found apparently expressed. Doing so might compel inconveniences such as the holding of new meetings to achieve a resolution in some technically correct way. As for contests about such matters, they are surely better handled using the provisions and processes of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997.

APPENDIX

55 Requirements for motion to change community management statement

(1) Subject to subsection (2), a motion proposing to change an existing community management statement for a community titles scheme may be submitted by only —

(a) the committee for the body corporate; or
(b) the owner of a lot included in the scheme; or (c) the body corporate manager.

(2) The body corporate manager may submit the motion if the body corporate manager may, under the regulation module applying to the scheme, submit the motion.

56 New statements and subsequent plans of subdivision

(1) A request to record a new community management statement for a community titles scheme must be lodged when a new plan of subdivision affecting the scheme (including affecting a lot in, or the common property for, the scheme) is lodged.

(2) A request to record a new community management statement for a community titles scheme may be lodged, and the new statement may be recorded for the scheme, even though a plan of subdivision is not lodged, if all plans of subdivision relating to the scheme, and the new statement, will still be consistent after the new statement is recorded.

57 Other matters about new statements for schemes developed progressively

(1) This section applies —

(a) only to a community titles scheme intended to be developed progressively; and

Examples for paragraph (a) —
1. The subdivision of scheme land to create further lots for the scheme or to establish a subsidiary scheme.
2. The excision of a lot from, or the addition of a lot to, scheme land.

(b) if the circumstances stated in subsection (2) or (3) also apply to the scheme.

(2) For subsection (1)(b), the circumstances are —

(a) a new plan of subdivision proposed to be lodged for the scheme —

(i) is consistent with all statements about proposed future subdivision contained in the existing community management statement for the scheme; or
(ii) is inconsistent with the existing community management statement only to the extent the development of a stage is to be done out of order; and

(b) the difference between the existing statement and a new community management statement required under section 56(1) is limited to ensuring that, after registration of the new plan of subdivision and recording of the new statement, the scheme's community management statement will —

(i) be consistent with all plans of subdivision for the scheme that are registered under the Land Title Act; and
(ii) contain the statements about proposed future subdivision that are contained in the existing statement, changed only to the extent necessary to take account of the registration of the new plan of subdivision.

(3) Alternatively, for subsection (1)(b), the circumstances are that a new plan of subdivision proposed to be lodged for the development is inconsistent with the existing community management statement for the scheme because the plan changes the scheme in a way that affects the nature of the development or 1 or more stages of the development.

Examples of changes affecting the nature of a development for subsection (3) —
1. A development for a scheme intended to be a resort is changed to a development comprising only standard format lots for residential purposes.

2. A stage of a development comprising standard format lots for residential purposes and a marina is changed to a stage comprising only standard format lots for residential purposes.

(4) For subsection (2)(a)(ii), the development of a stage is done out of order if it is not consistent with the order of the development of the stages stated in the development approval or existing community management statement for the scheme.

(5) The developer must —

(a) prepare the new community management statement required under section 56(1) for the scheme; and
(b) give the new statement to the body corporate.

(6) The body corporate must, within 30 days after receiving the new statement, endorse its consent on the statement. Maximum penalty — 50 penalty units.

(7) However, if this section applies because of the circumstances stated in subsection (3), the body corporate is not required to endorse its consent on the statement unless —

(a) the developer has —

(i) given the body corporate a notice as required under section 29(2)(a); and
(ii) obtained development approval for the changed scheme; and

(b) the new community management statement is consistent with the development approval for the changed scheme; and
(c) the local government has endorsed a community management statement notation on the new community management statement.

(8) The developer must, within 30 days after receiving the endorsed statement, lodge a request to record the statement. Maximum penalty for subsection (8) — 300 penalty units.

(9) Within 14 days after the new statement is recorded, the developer must give to the body corporate —

(a) a copy of the new statement; and
(b) evidence of its recording. Maximum penalty for subsection (9) — 300 penalty units.

(10) The developer is responsible for the costs of preparing and recording the new community management statement.

62 Body corporate to consent to recording of new statement

(1) This section provides for the form of the consent of the body corporate for a community titles scheme to the recording of a new community management statement for the scheme in the place of the existing statement for the scheme.

(2) The consent must be in the form of a resolution without dissent.

(3) However, the consent may be in the form of a special resolution if the difference between the existing statement and the new statement is limited to the following —

(a) differences in the by-laws (other than a difference in exclusive use by-laws);
(b) the identification of a different regulation module to apply to the scheme.

(4) The consent to the recording of a new community management statement need not be in the form of a resolution without dissent or special resolution if the new statement is different from the existing statement only to the extent necessary for 1 or more of the following —

(a) compliance with a provision of this Act under which the body corporate is required to lodge a request to record a new statement for a purpose stated in the provision;
(b) compliance with the order of an adjudicator or the District Court made under this Act for the lodging of a request for the recording of the new statement;
(c) changing the community titles scheme to give effect to an approved reinstatement process;
(d) changing the community titles scheme to reflect a formal acquisition affecting the scheme;
(e) recording the details of allocations of common property or body corporate assets made under an exclusive use bylaw;
(f) implementation of development proposed under the existing statement or under the provisions of a community management statement to which the existing statement is subject;
(g) showing the location of a service easement for the community titles scheme by including a services location diagram;

(h) amalgamating or subdividing lots included in the community titles scheme;
(i) reproducing the existing statement without any change of substance.

(5) However, subsection (4)(h) applies only if the associated plan of subdivision —

(a) does not affect the common property; and
(b) does not change —

(i) the contribution schedule lot entitlements, or interest schedule lot entitlements, for lots included in the scheme (other than the lots being amalgamated or subdivided under the plan); or
(ii) the total of the contribution schedule lot entitlements for the lots included in the scheme; or
(iii) the total of the interest schedule lot entitlements for the lots included in the scheme.

(6) Also, the consent to the recording of a new community management statement need not be in the form of a resolution without dissent or special resolution if the consent is required to be endorsed under section 57.

(7) A consent to which subsection (4) or (6) applies must be given by ordinary resolution if, under the regulation module applying to the scheme, the body corporate has engaged a body corporate manager to carry out the functions of a committee, and the executive members of a committee, for a body corporate.

(8) In this section —

"associated plan of subdivision", for a proposed new community management statement, means the plan of subdivision proposed to be lodged with the request to record the statement.

63 Responsibility for preparing, and for costs of preparing, new statement

(1) This section applies if the body corporate for a community titles scheme consents to a new community management statement, other than a statement to which section 57 applies, being recorded for the scheme.

(2) The new community management statement must be prepared by —

(a) if the body corporate manager may, under the body corporate manager's engagement, prepare the statement — the body corporate manager; or
(b) if paragraph (a) does not apply to the scheme — the committee for the body corporate.

(3) The body corporate is responsible for the costs of preparing and recording the new community management statement, unless this Act provides otherwise.

(4) Despite subsections (2) and (3), if the difference between the new community management statement and the existing statement is limited to changes to reflect a formal acquisition affecting the scheme, the constructing authority for the acquisition —

(a) must prepare the new statement; and
(b) is responsible for the costs of preparing and recording the new statement.

Community titles scheme — Contribution lot entitlement under registered community management scheme — Application to adjust lot entitlement schedule — Whether it would be just and equitable in the circumstances to adjust the schedule — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, s 46– 49

The applicant was the registered owner of lot 4 in a community titles scheme in a harbour development. Lot 4 contained four unfinished penthouse apartments, and the first community management statement dated 16 December 2002 allocated a contribution lot entitlement to it of seven one hundredths. The other three community titles schemes in the harbour development were allocated the remaining contribution lot entitlements. The contribution lot entitlements were calculated or assessed by reference to the respective lot areas.

The applicant commenced proceedings under s 48 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 Qld (the Act) to have the lot entitlement schedule adjusted so that its contribution to the scheme would be decreased. The Act was amended in respect of that part relevant to lot entitlements with effect from early 2003 by the Body Corporate and Community Management and Other Legislation Amendment Act 2003 (Qld) (the amending Act).

Subsection 46(1) of the Act provided that it was not a requirement for a community management statement for a community titles scheme that the contribution schedule be equal for each lot. Subsection 46(2) of the Act provided that an owner could apply for an order for the adjustment of a lot entitlement schedule. Subsection 46(4) of the Act provided that "the respective lot entitlements should be equal except to the extent to which it is just and equitable in the circumstances for them not to be equal".

The amending Act reversed the emphasis in respect of a lot entitlement contribution schedule and spelt out clearly in s 49 the "criteria for deciding just and equitable circumstances" if an adjustment was to be made. The applicant submitted that because its four penthouse apartments were unoccupied, unfinished and were likely to remain in such a condition in the near future if not indefinitely, it should not be obliged to pay a contribution factor of seven one hundredths. In this respect the applicant submitted that lot 4 made no demand on the services and amenities for which the body corporate was responsible.

The applicant submitted that, applying the "just and equitable" principle, the contribution factor should be reduced to somewhere between one and seven to reflect the lack of demand by lot 4 on the services and amenities provided.

The respondent submitted that the applicant had failed to adduce any evidence about what the lot entitlement contribution schedule for the scheme should be, and thus the application should be dismissed.

Held: contribution lot entitlement for lot 4 adjusted to a figure of three one hundredths

1. While the Act is silent with respect to the criteria upon which lot contributions should be assessed, commonsense dictates that some enterprises or uses to be conducted on a lot will place a heavier demand for services and amenities on a body corporate than others and therefore should bear a higher or lower, as the case may be, proportion of contribution for those demands.
2. If those demands on services and amenities are less than what might be described as the functioning optimum then logically and reasonably the body corporate's expenditure for the those services and amenities will be correspondingly less.
3. Where a particular building is not operating to its optimum capacity because it is unfinished, certain expenditure by the body corporate cannot be avoided. Thus, it would be quite reasonable for there to be levied some lot entitlement contribution for lot 4 to cover the demand on some services and amenities.
4. If it was considered "just and equitable" to have a contribution lot entitlement assessed at seven as being the "most appropriate" when the penthouses were to be fully functional, then it is reasonable for the contribution lot entitlement for them to be less than that figure when they are not fully functional.

1. This is an application under s 48 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 ("the Act") by the owner of four (4) unfinished penthouse apartments contained in the Raby Bay Harbour Community Titles Scheme 30942 to have the lot entitlement schedule adjusted so that the applicant's contribution to that scheme is less than that currently allocated to the lot in the contribution schedule which is seven (7).[1]

2. The applicant is the registered owner of Lot 4 on SP 147266 in respect of which the first community management statement dated 16 December 2002 allocates a contribution lot entitlement to the Lot of seven (7) with the other three community titles schemes comprising this part of the Raby Bay Harbour development being allotted respective entitlements to make an aggregate contribution lot entitlement of one hundred (100).

3. Lot 4 is part of building number 3 ("Building 3") referred to in Exhibit "KMB4" to the affidavit of Kent Milton Beal filed on behalf of the applicant on 27 February 2005 and which also comprises predominantly commercial offices and a function room. The remainder of Building 3 together with Buildings 1 and 2 which comprise apartments and commercial businesses have been allocated an aggregate contribution lot entitlement of seventy-seven (77) while Building 4 comprising the villa-style apartments has been allocated a contribution lot entitlement of sixteen (16).

4. The Act was amended in respect of that part relevant to lot entitlements with effect from 4 March 2003 by the Body Corporate and Community Management and Other Legislation Amendment Act 2003 (Qld) in that s 46(1) of the former Act stated that "it is not a requirement for a community management statement for a community titles scheme that the contribution schedule be equal for each lot …" with provision under s 46(2) thereof for an owner to apply "… for an order for the adjustment of a lot entitlement schedule" and further under s 46(4) that "the respective lot entitlements should be equal except to the extent to which it is just and equitable in the circumstances for them not to be equal". Under the Act as amended s 46(7) specifically provides that the contribution schedule for the respective lots "… must be equal except to the extent to which it is just and equitable in the circumstances for them not to be equal". The amending Act therefore reversed the emphasis in respect of a lot entitlement contribution schedule and spells out clearly in s 49 the "criteria for deciding just and equitable circumstances" if adjustment is to be made.

5. The evidence in this matter is that the lot entitlement contribution for this community titles scheme was originally calculated or assessed by reference to the respective lot areas ("volumetric apportionment")[2] by which a figure of 7.15% was reached for Lot 4 which was reduced to the whole number 7 out of 100 being the aggregate for the building as a whole.

6. It is upon this basis that the contribution lot entitlement for Lot 4 has been levied by the body corporate to date.

7. The applicant therefore comes to this court seeking an adjustment in contribution which is lower than that which currently applies, but with the added dimension that the basis for any such adjustment must now be under the "new" rules, as it were, even though the original lot contribution was determined on a different basis.[3]

Legislation

8. Part 5 of the Act defines "lot entitlements" as follows:

> "46 Lot entitlements
> (1) A lot entitlement, for a lot included in a community titles scheme, means the number allocated to the lot in the contribution schedule or interest schedule in the community management statement."

9. The term "contribution schedule" is also defined as follows:

> "(2) The contribution schedule is the schedule in a community management statement containing each lot's contribution schedule lot entitlement."

10. Section 46(6) of the Act provides that "a lot entitlement must be a whole number, but must not be 0" and as stated in paragraph [4] above s 46(7) provides that "… the respective lot entitlements must be equal, except to the extent to which it is just and equitable in the circumstances for them not to be equal".

Section 47(2) of the Act provides:

> "(2) The contribution schedule lot entitlement for a lot is the basis for calculating —
> (a) the lot owner's share of amounts levied by the body corporate, unless the extent of the lot owner's obligation to contribute to a levy for a particular purpose is specifically otherwise provided for in this Act; and
> (b) the value of the lot owner's vote for voting on an ordinary resolution if a poll is conducted for voting on the resolution."

12. Section 48 of the Act provides the mechanism for a lot owner to apply to the court

> "… for an order for the adjustment of a lot entitlement schedule". It is also repeated in s 48(5) that "… for the contribution schedule, the respective lot entitlements should be equal, except to the extent to which it is just and equitable in the circumstances for them not to be equal."

13. Section 49 "… sets out matters to which the court … may, and may not, have regard for deciding —

> (a) for a contribution schedule — if it is just and equitable in the circumstances for the respective lot entitlements not to be equal" — and they include:
> "(a) how the community titles scheme is structured; and
> (b) the nature, features and characteristics of the lots included in the scheme; and
> (c) the purposes for which the lots are used".[4]

14. The purpose of having a contribution schedule in a community management statement containing each lot's contribution to the body corporate is that the body corporate must administer, manage and control the common property and body corporate assets reasonably and for the benefit of all lot owners. The body corporate has specific responsibilities and obligations under the Act in respect of the building to which the community titles scheme relates some of which are referred to in the affidavit of Donald Alexander Saunders filed on behalf of the respondent on 4 April 2005.[5]

Applicant's Submissions

15. The applicant's basic submission is that because the four penthouse apartments (Lot 4) are unoccupied, unfinished and are likely to remain in such a condition in the near future if not indefinitely, the applicant should not be obliged to pay a contribution factor of seven one-hundredths (7/100) of the body corporate levies to cover the expenditure for which it is responsible in respect of Building 3 as Lot 4 makes no demand on the services and amenities for which the body corporate is responsible in respect of that building. Therefore by applying the "just and equitable" principle the contribution factor should be reduced to somewhere between 1 and 7 to reflect the lack of demand by Lot 4 on the services and amenities provided.

Respondent's Submissions

16. The respondent's submission is essentially that "the applicant has failed to adduce any evidence about what the contribution schedule lot entitlements for the scheme should be …" and therefore the application should be dismissed.

17. It is submitted the starting point is that under s 48(5) of the Act the contributions by each lot "… should be equal except to the extent to which it is just and equitable in the circumstances for them not to be equal". There is no evidence before the court for it to be able to make a decision that the respective lot contribution schedules under the scheme should be unequal and therefore the applicant has failed to discharge its onus to receive the benefit of the order sought. The respondent sets out the background of the "scheme"; the relevant lot entitlements schedule; the body corporate expenses and responsibilities for the scheme and the respective suggested methods by which a body corporate lot contribution should be assessed.

Contribution Lot Entitlements

18. The evidence is that at the time of registration of the community management statement for the Raby Bay Harbour Community Titles Scheme 30942 on 16 December 2002 the lot entitlement contribution allocation for the respective buildings contained in the statement was as follows[6] :

[140463]

SCHEDULE OF LOT ENTITLEMENTS

Lot on Plan	Contribution	Interest
Raby Bay Harbour Villas Community Titles Scheme	16	16
Raby Bay Harbour Apartments Community Titles Scheme	28	28
Raby Bay Harbour Commercial Centre Community Titles Scheme	49	49

19. Obviously the respective contribution lot entitlements are not "equal" because when they were calculated by Landmark White in the manner set out in that company's letter of 22 May 2002[7] and attachments, it was considered that the above assessments were the "most appropriate" and by implication the "just and equitable" determinations to be made for each of the lot entitlements for the reasons set out in the Landmark White letter commensurate with their respective demands on the services and amenities to be provided by the body corporate to the buildings and enterprises contained therein. While the former Act was silent in respect of the "criteria" upon which lot contributions should be assessed, common sense would dictate that some enterprises or uses to be conducted on a lot would place a heavier demand for services and amenities on a body corporate than others and therefore should bear a higher or lower, as the case may be, proportion of contribution for those demands or services. This would seem to be the view adopted by the Court of Appeal in Fischer & Ors v Body Corporate for Centrepoint Community Titles Scheme 7779 [2004] QCA 214 where Chesterman J, with whom McPherson JA and Atkinson J agreed, stated:

> "…that question, whether a schedule should be adjusted, is to be answered with regard to the demand made on the services and amenities provided by a body corporate to the respective apartments, or their contribution to the costs incurred by the body corporate. More general considerations of amenity, value or history are to be disregarded. What is at issue is the 'equitable' distribution of the costs".[8]

20. Again it would seem reasonable and logical that the respective contribution lot entitlement would reflect the demand for the body corporate's expenses for those services and amenities when those buildings within the scheme were functional and capable of being used and/or operated to their optimum capacity as this would reflect the optimum demand on those services and amenities for which the body corporate is responsible.

21. It follows therefore that if those demands on services and amenities are less than what might be described as the functioning optimum then logically and reasonably the body corporate's expenditure for the those services and amenities would be correspondingly less.

22. It must be accepted however that even where a particular building is not operating to its optimum capacity because it is unfinished certain expenditure by the body corporate cannot be avoided so that it would be quite reasonable for there to be levied some lot entitlement contribution to cover its demand on some services and amenities, for example, administration services, fire protection equipment, general insurances, maintenance of external walls and/or building facade, roof maintenance and the like.

23. The court has had the benefit of a view in respect of this application and the decrepit nature of the unfinished penthouses is obvious. They are clearly unfinished and access to them in a practical sense is sealed off as there is no purpose in their being accessible.

24. Notwithstanding their dysfunctional state they would place some demand on body corporate expenditure for some services and amenities referred to in paragraph [22] above but considerably less demand than if they were capable of being used and/or operating to optimum capacity.

25. I am not persuaded that it is necessary for the applicant to adduce expert evidence before the court can decide this application for the reason that the empirical evidence speaks for itself. If it was considered "just and equitable" to have a lot entitlement contribution assessed at 7 as being the "most appropriate" when the penthouses were to be fully functional then it seems reasonable to me that the lot entitlement contribution for them now should be less than that figure.

26. In all the circumstances I find that the lot entitlement contribution for Lot 4 on SP 147266 should be adjusted to a figure of three (3) instead of seven (7) as contained in the registered community management statement for Raby Bay Harbour Community Titles Scheme No 30942 to represent three one-hundredths (3/100) of the aggregate contribution on the basis that for the reasons set out above it is just and equitable to do so.

27. In accordance with s 48(2)(c) of the Act I make no order as to costs.

Order

28. The court's order will therefore be as follows:

> 1. That the lot entitlement contribution for Lot 4 on SP 147266 be adjusted to a figure of three (3) instead of seven (7) as contained in the registered community management statement for the Raby Bay Harbour Community Titles Scheme No 30942; and > 2. No order as to costs.

9 September 2005

Community titles — Body corporate — Exercise of voting rights — Veto by majority lot holders of motions proposed at annual general meeting of body corporate — Whether exercise of voting rights could be overturned — Matter submitted for decision of adjudicator — Whether adjudicator observed natural justice — Whether adjudicator properly investigated application — Whether trial judge erred in dismissing appeal — Whether leave to appeal should be granted — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld), s 267, 269 and 271

The applicants held the majority of lots in a community titles scheme. The applicants exercised their controlling vote in respect of a number of motions proposed at the annual general meeting of the body corporate, which they did not attend. The motions concerned proposals put by lot owners other than the applicants.

An adjudicator was appointed under s 267 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) (the Act). The adjudicator's decision effectively overrode the exercise by the applicants of their controlling vote in respect of these motions. A subsequent appeal by the applicants was dismissed by the trial Judge and the applicants sought leave to appeal this decision.

The respondents, who were co-owners of other lots in the community titles scheme, submitted that the applicants would suffer no actual prejudice if their application for leave to appeal was refused. The applicants did not dispute this submission but claimed that the purpose of the appeal was to obtain a precedent decision to the effect that an adjudicator must investigate an application with fair and proper consideration and, in doing so, must observe natural justice as required by s 269 of the Act. In this respect, the applicants argued that the adjudicator did not request a copy of the submissions forwarded by them to the annual general meeting to explain why they would be voting against the relevant motions. The applicants further argued that the adjudicator should have informed them that he would decide the matter against them if he did not receive their submissions.

The applicants complained generally about the procedure adopted by the adjudicator to gather material on which to base his decision. The applicants claimed that in effect the adjudicator failed to undertake any investigation at all. The applicants also claimed that the adjudicator made a decision that was not just and equitable in the circumstances.

Held: application for leave to appeal dismissed.

Per Keane JA (with whom Cullinane J agreed)

1. The applicants did not identify any practical utility in the Court's resolving the issues which they sought to agitate. That was sufficient to warrant the refusal of the application for leave to appeal.
2. The applicants did not demonstrate a sufficient basis for concluding that the adjudicator failed to observe natural justice as required by s 269 of the Act when investigating the application that was referred to him.
3. The applicants were afforded an opportunity to be heard before a decision was made. The applicants were invited to make submissions and the adjudicator was not required to do more than that.
4. The mere circumstance that voting rights of the owners of lots in a scheme were overridden by a decision, could not, of itself, render the decision something other than "just and equitable".

Jerrard JA:

1. In this application I have had the advantage of reading the reasons for judgment of Keane JA, and the orders proposed by His Honour. I agree with what he has written, and with the orders he proposes.

Provisions of the Act

2. The Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) ("the Act") provides in Chapter 6 thereof for the resolution of disputes such as those underlying this application, namely disputes between the owners or occupiers of lots included in a Community Titles Scheme.[1] The Commissioner for Body Corporate and Community Management[2] has a responsibility for providing a dispute resolution service[3] and persons who are parties to, or directly concerned with, any dispute as defined in the Act may make application in the approved form to the Commissioner for the outcome sought by the applicant.[4] The application must state, in detail, the grounds on which the outcome is sought.

3. The Commissioner may require an applicant to give further information after receiving the application, and is obliged to give written notice of the application to the Body Corporate, which in turn must give a copy of that notice to each person whose name appears on the roll as the owner of a lot included in the scheme. That notice must invite each person given a copy of it to make written submissions to the Commissioner about the application.[5] Where one or more persons are invited to make submissions, the original applicant may apply to the Commissioner to inspect those submissions, and can make a written reply to them. Additionally, any person affected by the application may inspect it, the submissions made about it, and the applicant's reply to those submissions.[6]

4. Those provisions of the Act allow each lot owner to make a written submission about an application to the Commissioner, which application must set out in detail the grounds on which that outcome is sought. After receiving the application and written submissions, the Commissioner may make 1 or more dispute resolution recommendations, as defined in s 248 of the Act; it appears that in this matter the Commissioner recommended a Department adjudication. Part 9 of Chapter 6 makes general provisions about adjudication, including the powers granted to an Adjudicator, obliging her or him to investigate the application to decide whether it would be appropriate to make an order on it; and when investigating, to observe natural justice and act as quickly as possible, and with as little formality and technicality as is consistent with a fair and proper consideration of the application. Section 276 empowers an Adjudicator to whom an application is referred to make an order that is just and equitable in the circumstances about, inter alia, the exercise of rights under the Act.

5. Division 4 of Chapter 3, which chapter deals with the management of Community Titles Schemes, makes provision for Body Corporate meetings and counting of votes. The various forms of the 1997 Regulation have provisions giving the right to lot owners to vote at general meetings.[7] Section 276 explicitly provides that an Adjudicator may make an order mentioned in Schedule 5 of the Act; those approved orders include, for example, orders giving effect to a motion considered by a general meeting of the Body Corporate, in which a resolution required to be without dissent was not passed because of opposition that the Adjudicator considered was unreasonable in the circumstances. I agree with the Adjudicator that the act of voting at the Annual General Meeting ("AGM") is an exercise of a right under the Act by a lot owner, and it was intended by the Parliament that an Adjudicator be able to review votes cast by owners on an application to overturn a negative vote on a resolution.

Background facts

6. The judgment of the District Court dated 13 May 2005, from which Mr and Mrs Hablethwaite seek leave to appeal, was given on their appeal under s 289(2) of the Act from a decision of an Adjudicator given on 2 December 2003. That Adjudicator's decision records that altogether there were three applications made to the Commissioner under s 238, all arising out of the AGM of the Body Corporate of the Maria Creek Estate Community Titles Scheme, Scheme No 25253. One application, reference number 377 of 2003, was by the respondents to this application for leave to appeal, those respondents being respectively the co-owners of lots 1, 4, and 5, in the 9 lot Maria Creek Estate. The present applicants, Peter and Maria Hablethwaite, are the co-owners of Lots 3, 6, 7, 8, and 9; and accordingly have a majority of votes at any meeting in which they cast votes.

7. The Hablethwaites did not attend in person at the AGM held on 29 May 2003, but had forwarded a voting paper to the Administrator for the scheme, which scheme the Adjudicator's decision under appeal to the District Court described as having a dysfunctional history. That voting paper indicated how they wished to vote with respect to each of the motions for determination at that AGM. The judgment of the District Court records that the Hablethwaites also forwarded to the Administrator a written submission which included their response to each of the motions, and records that those documents set out their objections to each of the motions that they voted against; although there was some dispute before the District Court Judge as to whether the submission was actually received by the Administrator.

8. The Hablethwaites' five votes out of the nine possible votes resulted in the resolutions numbered 11, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 27, 28, and 29, being defeated. After that the present respondents, the co-owners of Lots 1, 4, and 5, made application number 377 of 2003 to the Commissioner under s 238, asking as an outcome that the "no" vote of the Hablethwaites be declared void and each of those resolutions be deemed to have been carried. The adjudication on that application, which was the adjudication appealed to the District Court and from which decision of that Court there is now this application for leave to appeal, shows that an application (number 379 of 2003) was also made to the Commissioner in the name of the Body Corporate – presumably by the Administrator – seeking an order declaring that the resolutions numbered 5, 6, 7, 9, and 10 held at that AGM be declared void; and the Hablethwaites also made their own application, number 433 of 2003, seeking orders invalidating the AGM entirely, the removal of the Administrator, and the appointment of a registered liquidator or chartered accountant instead of that Administrator.

9. The Adjudicator's decision in reference 377 shows that the Adjudicator accepted the Hablethwaites' submission that their application number 433 of 2003 should be determined first, and the Adjudicator dismissed their applications. His reasons for so doing are not repeated in his decision number 377 of 2003, and the Hablethwaites did not pursue an appeal they lodged in the District Court about those reasons in number 433 and that dismissal of their application. The Adjudicator's reasons in 377 of 2003 do not reveal precisely what happened on the Body Corporate's application to the Commissioner, number 379, but the Hablethwaites originally appealed the result in that adjudication too, and then did not pursue that appeal.

10. In application 377 of 2003 the Adjudicator recorded that of the 18 motions submitted by the owners, 3 were carried (14, 18, and 26), and the rest were defeated, presumably on the votes of the Hablethwaites. The Adjudicator's decision in application 377, which was referred to the Adjudicator by the Commissioner as was application 433 of 2003, records that the applicants in number 377 had submitted a statement explaining the basis of their request for their orders in respect of each of the 15 disallowed motions the subject of that application to the Commissioner. Those statements would have been submitted in accordance with s 239 of the Act. The Adjudicator in number 377 records that the Hablethwaites, the named respondents in number 377, were fully aware of those reasons (that is, the detailed grounds on which the applicants in number 377 sought the overturning of the "no" vote to each resolution), as a result of the submission process. The submission process referred to is the process set out in s 239 and s 243 of the Act.

11. That finding by the Adjudicator, that the Hablethwaites were fully aware of the minority lot owners' reasons for challenging the "no" vote for each resolution, was not challenged at all in the proceedings before the learned District Court Judge. Nor was the further finding, that notwithstanding that the minority lot holders had specifically addressed each of the separate motions they sought to have validated in those lot holders' grounds for their application, the Hablethwaites had not responded in like manner, and that their submission in response had been limited to the subject matter of motion number 13. That was a motion about a "gate entrance", and about which the Hablethwaites did make a written submission to the Commissioner.

12. The Adjudicator's decision in number 377 recorded that:

> "The Hablethwaites do not take issues [sic] with the other 14 of [sic] so motions the subject of this application. I conclude from this that the Hablethwaites do not have specific objections to the proposals contained in all other motions, but rather have simply voted "no" to each of the motions as technically they are entitled to do. The scenario is such however that the "no" vote of the Hablethwaites is determinative of the outcome of each of the motions. In this context, the other owners are alleging that the "no" by the Hablethwaites is unreasonable and should be reversed. This is the question to consider in respect of each of the motions in dispute, and I now intend to consider each motion in turn."[8]

13. The Adjudicator then did that, considering in turn each motion, and for all except motions numbered 13 and 28 concluded that because all other owners excepting the Hablethwaites had voted in favour of the proposals, that suggested that the proposal was a reasonable one in the mind of all other owners. He then concluded that the Hablethwaites had raised no specific objection to the proposals to explain or justify their "no" vote; in the circumstances the Adjudicator regarded the "no" votes as unreasonable and considered they should be reversed. The Hablethwaites did not challenge the logic of that approach in the District Court, and do not do so on this application. Nor do they argue that the Adjudicator could not, by order, declare their "no" votes void, and that the resolution(s) be deemed to be carried. What they contend is that the Adjudicator ought to have been alerted, in application number 433 of 2003, the one made by the Hablethwaites and decided first by the Adjudicator, to the fact that they had made written submissions to the Administrator, intended for consideration at the AGM, and explaining the grounds of their opposition to each of the motions they had opposed. The Adjudicator should have been so alerted because the Adjudicator's reasons for dismissing application number 433 (those reasons are only reproduced in part in the appeal record)[9] included the observation that there was a hand written note at the end of their voting paper submitted to the Administrator for the AGM, which stated:

> "We also vote yes to the motions included in our submission to the Administrator."

14. The Hablethwaites contend that as a matter of law the Adjudicator did not investigate the application number 377, as the Adjudicator was obliged to do to decide whether it would be appropriate to make the order that those applicants sought. The failure to investigate in application number 377 was evidenced by the failure to inquire further about the submission to the Administrator referred to in application number 433. They also argue that the Adjudicator had not observed natural justice, as he was also obliged to do, when the Adjudicator simply relied on the written submissions those applicants had made to the Commissioner and the limited written response the Hablethwaites had given the Commissioner in application number 377. The Hablethwaites argue that once the Adjudicator was alerted to the possibility that there were submissions to the Administrator for the purpose of that AGM, the Adjudicator should have investigated further to find out if that was so. They say the Adjudicator should have asked for a copy of those submissions from the Administrator, or asked if they had one. After all, the Hablethwaites argue, the issue was whether or not they had provided reasons for their "no" vote at the AGM, not whether they made a submission to the Commissioner or Adjudicator.

15. In further support of that argument on this application for leave, the Hablethwaites argue that they had made a substantial submission in writing in application number 379 of 2003, the one lodged by the Administrator, which had included a dozen or more documents; and also lodged eight pages of submissions under the heading "grounds" in support of their own application number 433 of 2003. (Their written argument to this Court does not say whether those submissions in application numbers 379 or 433 of 2003 did explain their grounds for opposition to any of the motions other than motion 13, although Mr Hablethwaite seemed to suggest in his oral argument that they did. There is no evidence either way.) The Hablethwaites argue in the alternative that the Adjudicator made an order which was not just and equitable, contrary to the obligation imposed by s 276, and the injustice resulted from the Adjudicator's failure to properly investigate application number 377.

16. The learned District Court Judge hearing their appeal held that the Hablethwaites were clearly put on notice that the onus was on them to place any relevant submission before the Adjudicator, and, substituting "Commissioner" for "Adjudicator", I respectfully agree with that. The judge also held that it was unreasonable for the Hablethwaites to assume that their written submissions forwarded to the Administrator would be considered by the Adjudicator in the absence of their having provided the Adjudicator (I substitute "Commissioner") with a copy, and I agree with that conclusion too. The judge also held the Hablethwaites could not assume that the Administrator would provide a copy of their submissions to the Adjudicator (I substitute "Commissioner"), and I agree with that as well. Likewise I agree with the learned judge that the Hablethwaites were well aware that each of the applications was being investigated, and would be determined separately, even if by the same Adjudicator.

17. The learned judge held that an Adjudicator is not obliged to seek clarification or further information from a party once that party has responded, apparently sensibly, to an invitation to make submissions to the Adjudicator (I substitute "Commissioner"); and that it was entirely reasonable for the Adjudicator to limit investigations "to inviting interested parties to make written submissions". I observe, with great respect to the learned judge, that the Adjudicator did not invite anyone to make written submissions, and simply relied on those given to the Commissioner. However, I agree that was a reasonable approach for the Adjudicator to take in the circumstances, since the written submissions that were made by the applicants in number 377, and the response to those by the Hablethwaites, did not suggest that any inspection of the premises, or of other documents, or photographs, was necessary or desirable before deciding the application; or that there was any reason why it would be unsatisfactory to decide those applications on the written material already received.

18. The learned judge held that the Adjudicator was not under any obligation to seek out a copy of, or make investigations regarding, any such written submissions. That was because it had been made plain to the Hablethwaites that they could make written submissions to the Commissioner on the matters raised in application number 377, and because they did forward submissions that related to only one of those contested motions.

19. I sympathise with the Hablethwaites' complaint that their written submissions to the Administrator were apparently not considered at the AGM, because the Administrator did not admit receiving those; and with the Hablethwaites' complaint that they have been treated as if they did not provide written reasons for objection to most of the motions at that meeting, when they say they did, and their complaint that they had not realised that the Adjudicator did not have a copy of those written submissions. However, the Hablethwaites' argument really says that the Adjudicator was obliged to investigate their response to the minority lot holders' application number 377, and that is not so. The Adjudicator was obliged to investigate the application, not the response. The Hablethwaites do not suggest that their written submissions, in any of the three applications, referred to the fact that they had made written submissions to the Administrator for the AGM. In those circumstances I agree with the learned trial judge that the Adjudicator was not obliged by s 269 to make investigations regarding those written submissions, and agree with the learned judge that the Adjudicator satisfied the duty to investigate the application by relying on the written submissions made to the Commissioner. The circumstances do not identify any other matters, which as a matter of law, the investigator was required to do. That being so, I agree with the decision of the learned trial judge dismissing the appeal to the District Court, and agree with Keane JA that this application for leave should be refused, and would order that the applicants pay the first and second respondents' costs of the application to this Court, to be assessed on the standard basis.

Keane JA:

20. The applicants seek leave to appeal to this Court from the decision of Bradley DCJ, given on 13 May 2005, whereby her Honour dismissed the appeal by the applicants against the decision of an adjudicator appointed pursuant to s 267 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) ("the Act").[10] The adjudicator's decision was given on 2 December 2003. In effect, it overrode the exercise by the applicants of their controlling vote in respect of a number of motions proposed on 29 May 2003 at the annual general meeting of the body corporate of the Maria Creek Estate, a subdivision scheme of nine lots registered under the Act. The motions concerned proposals put by lot owners other than the applicants. The applicants held the majority of lots in the scheme.

21. The applicants require leave to pursue their appeal in this Court by reason of s 118(3) of the District Court of Queensland Act 1967 (Qld). It is well established by decisions of this Court that leave will not be granted pursuant to this section unless an applicant is able to demonstrate a reasonably arguable case of error on the part of the District Court and that some substantial prejudice will be suffered by the applicant if that error is not corrected.[11] These restrictions on the availability of an appeal serve to ensure that this Court's limited time and resources are not taken up by cases which have already had two hearings and in which no evident injustice has been caused to the litigant who seeks to have a third hearing of his or her arguments.[12]

22. The first and second respondents, through their counsel, submitted that the decision of the adjudicator which was upheld by Bradley DCJ related to resolutions of the body corporate in respect of its affairs as they were in May 2003. These resolutions are said to be no longer in issue between the parties. They are said either to have been overtaken by time and events, or to be resolutions which have not been and will not be pursued by the respondents. As a result, the respondents submit that the applicants will suffer no actual prejudice if their application for leave to appeal was refused.

23. The applicants did not dispute that submission. Rather, the applicants submit in reply that "[t]he material purpose of this appeal is to ask the Court for a precedent decision that the adjudicator must investigate an application with fair and proper consideration and in doing so, must observe natural justice as required by [the Act] s 269 and not simply write to interested parties inviting them to make a submission, which Judge Bradley … ruled was entirely adequate".

24. This submission by the applicants is in the nature of a request for an advisory opinion from the Court rather than for an order resolving a dispute with real consequences for the parties. The general propositions that an adjudicator must act fairly and give proper consideration to the dispute referred to him, and observe natural justice in doing so, are plainly correct. The Act says as much; and to repeat the Act's prescriptions is not to elucidate them. Whether the statutorily prescribed standards have been observed in any particular case will depend on the circumstances of that particular case. To warrant the intervention of the Court, there must be an actual controversy requiring resolution. It is no part of the function of the

Court to speculate how the law might apply to circumstances which may, or may not, eventuate.[13]

25. In this case, the applicants do not identify any practical utility in this Court's resolving the issues which the applicants seek to agitate. That is sufficient, in my opinion, to warrant the refusal of the application for leave to appeal.

26. In any event, the applicants have not demonstrated a sufficient basis for concluding that the adjudicator failed "to observe natural justice" as required by s 269 of the Act when investigating the application which had been referred to him. There is no suggestion by the applicants that they sought to make submissions to the adjudicator but were denied the opportunity to do so. The applicants' complaint is two-fold. First, it is said that the adjudicator did not request a copy of the submissions forwarded by them to the annual general meeting to explain why they would be voting against the relevant motions. Secondly, it is said that the adjudicator should have informed the applicants he would decide the matter against them if he received no submissions from them.

27. In this regard, the adjudicator noted that the other lot owners had submitted a statement explaining the basis for their request to have the dissenting votes of the applicants at the annual general meeting declared void. The applicants were invited to make a written submission that would be considered by the adjudicator. It is not entirely clear whether this invitation was made directly by the adjudicator or by the Body Corporate and Community Management Commissioner on his behalf but, in any event, the applicants conceded they had been afforded the opportunity to make submissions to the adjudicator in the course of the following exchange during the hearing before Bradley DCJ:

> "HER HONOUR: So your argument is that despite the fact that the adjudicator invited you to make submissions to him in writing, as he did invite all the parties, that despite that, he nevertheless should have gone beyond that and made his own inquiries?
> APPELLANT P HABLETHWAITE: Absolutely."

It was reasonable for the adjudicator to expect that the applicants would take this opportunity to put forward submissions, whether or not those submissions were the same as those advanced at the annual general meeting, as to why their dissenting votes should be upheld.

28. The applicants did not make any specific response to the submissions of the other lot owners, save in relation to one motion where a specific response was provided. The adjudicator then considered each motion in turn and concluded that, with the exception of two motions, the "no" vote of the applicants was unreasonable. In choosing to make no submission beyond that which they made, the applicants themselves determined the extent to which they sought to be heard by the adjudicator. As the learned District Court judge held, the applicants' argument "misconceives the concepts of a fair hearing, due process and natural justice".[14] It is a rule of natural justice that a person should be afforded the opportunity to be heard before a decision is made against him or her[15] but such an opportunity was obviously afforded to the applicants in the present case when they were invited to make submissions. The adjudicator was not required to do anything more.

29. In addition, and apart from the specific complaint about the failure to accord natural justice, the applicants also complain generally in their submissions about the procedure adopted by the adjudicator to gather material on which to base his decision. The applicants draw attention to s 269(1) of the Act which provides that: "(1) The adjudicator must investigate the application to decide whether it would be appropriate to make an order on the application."

30. The submission made by the applicants is that the adjudicator failed to fulfil this obligation by only seeking submissions from the parties as to what decision should be made and that to only go so far amounted, in effect, to a failure to undertake any investigation at all. This submission cannot stand in light of s 271(1) of the Act which provides that:

> "(1) When investigating the application, the adjudicator may do all or any of the following—
> (a) require a party to the application, or someone else the adjudicator considers may be able to help resolve issues raised by the application -
> (i) to obtain, and give to the adjudicator, a report or other information; or > (ii) to be present to be interviewed, after reasonable notice is given of the time and place of interview; or > (iii) to give information in the form of a statutory declaration;
> (b) require a body corporate manager, service contractor or letting agent who is a party to the application to give to the adjudicator a record held by the person and relating to a dispute about a service provided by the person;
>
> (c) invite persons the adjudicator considers may be able to help resolve issues raised by the application to make written submissions to the adjudicator within a stated time;
>
> (d) inspect, or enter and inspect —
> (i) a body corporate asset or record or other document of the body corporate; or > (ii) common property (including common property the subject of an exclusive use by-law); or > (iii) a lot included in the community title scheme concerned."

31. Two things may be said about this provision. The first is that s 271(1)(c) makes clear that seeking information from the parties to the application was a valid means for the adjudicator to pursue the investigation he was required to carry out under the Act. The second is that, while the adjudicator had other powers at his disposal, the introductory words to the provision stating that an adjudicator "may do all or any of the following" mean that the adjudicator was not required to make use of any more of these powers that he considered were necessary in order to carry out an effective investigation. The applicants' submission that the adjudicator's investigation was flawed because it was limited to considering submissions obtained from the parties must therefore fail.

32. Further, to the extent that the applicants now seek to agitate again the complaint that, contrary to s 276 of the Act, the adjudicator made an order which was not "just and equitable in the circumstances", no error is demonstrated in the decisions below.

The effect of the adjudicator's conclusion, which was upheld on appeal to the District Court, was that the applicants did not demonstrate that they would be adversely affected in the use and enjoyment of their rights as lot owners (other than their voting rights) by the nullification of their voting rights on the motions in question. The adjudicator's statutory powers extend to making orders resolving disputes about the exercise of voting rights by lot owners.[16] The statutory conferral of power upon the adjudicator to make an order which is "just and equitable in the circumstances" necessarily contemplates a decision by the adjudicator which may be "just and equitable in the circumstances" even though it overrides the exercise of voting rights by a scheme member.

34. Accordingly, the mere circumstance that voting rights of the owner of a lot in a scheme are overridden by a decision cannot, of itself, render the decision something other than "just and equitable". Insofar as the rights of a lot owner, other than voting rights, are not affected by the adjudicator's decision, it is impossible to see how the lot owner can be prejudiced in a way which could not be "just and equitable" simply by a decision to nullify his or her voting rights. As I have already noted, the applicants did not seek to demonstrate to the adjudicator that the enjoyment of their other rights as lot owners would be adversely affected by the nullification of their voting rights. As a result, there was no basis on which the applicants could seek to demonstrate that the adjudicator had erred in reaching his decision so as to entitle them to succeed on appeal to the District Court on a question of law.[17]

Conclusions and orders

35. For these reasons, I would dismiss the application for leave to appeal and order the applicants to pay the costs of the first and second respondents of the application to be assessed on the standard basis. The third respondent did not take any part in the application; and I would, therefore, not make any order for costs in his favour.

Cullinane J:

36. I agree with the reasons of Keane JA in this matter and the orders he proposes.

19 May 2006

Strata and community titles — Community titles scheme — Dispute resolution procedure — Whether adjudicator's jurisdiction exclusive — Body corporate's responsibility for repairs to common property — Late application to defend — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, s 229, s 276, s 281 — Uniform Civil Procedure Rules, r 7, r 16, r 144.

The plaintiff owned a ground floor unit. A roof above an external area of the plaintiff's lot formed an extension of the balcony of the unit above. On 15 March 2005, the plaintiff made an application for dispute resolution concerning maintenance and repairs required in relation to the balcony slab and damage to the unit below. On 11 November 2005, an adjudicator gave notice of the following orders:

> "I hereby order that the body corporate shall, at its expense, and in a reasonable time, undertake and complete all necessary structural and other repairs to the balcony slab of unit 2A so as to protect or maintain the structural integrity of the balcony slab and to prevent water ingress to lot 1, and thereafter to reinstate improvements necessary to be removed to undertake the necessary repairs (the work) PROVIDED THAT the owner of lot 1, Sail Isle Pty Ltd as Trustee, shall allow access to the body corporate, its contractors or tradespersons during reasonable times so that the work might be undertaken.
> I further order that the application by the owner of lot 1, Sail Isle Pty Ltd as Trustee, for an order that the body corporate pay to it the sum of $9,537.00 for reimbursement for repairs carried out to the unit by the owner and costs of carrying out temporary measures to avoid further damage to the unit, is dismissed.
> I further order that within one (1) calendar month of the date of this order, the body corporate shall pay to the owner of lot 1, Sail Isle Pty Ltd as Trustee, the sum of $1,553.20 for reimbursement of the reasonable value of repairs carried out to the property by the owner in consequence of the damage caused by water ingress."

The plaintiff had in fact already done the work some months before the adjudicator's orders were made. In the proceedings brought before the District Court at Southport, in a claim for $47,955.87 plus interest and costs, the plaintiff sought reimbursement on the basis that the plaintiff had discharged the body corporate's obligation on its behalf (though not at its request).

The defendant body corporate was granted relief under r 16 of the Uniform Civil Procedure Rules, even though its application under r 144(3) was filed late. The body corporate's defence was based on the assertion that the dispute was one which could be resolved by the orders of an adjudicator under the statutory dispute resolution process under s 229 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (BCCM Act), which excluded the jurisdiction of the court where the dispute was one which came within the adjudicator's powers.

Mr Barlow, on behalf of the plaintiff, argued that the dispute was not capable of being resolved within s 276 of the BCCM Act, which sets out the orders an adjudicator may make. He pointed to s 281, which deals with damage to an applicant's property, offering in terms the prospect of an order for payment on account of repairs "carried out", and contended that the absence of equivalent provision in respect of common property means that an adjudicator has no jurisdiction or power to make an equivalent order where the repairs are to common property.

Held: Section 276 of the BCCM Act did cover the plaintiff's claim, with the consequence that the District Court lacked jurisdiction to entertain it.

1. Robin QC DCJ quoted at length from James v Body Corporate Aarons Community Title Scheme 11476 (2004) LQCS ¶90-122; [2004] 1 Qd R 386 as authority in the Supreme Court of Queensland that its jurisdiction is excluded by the predecessor of s 229.

2. After ordering that "the defendant should have the relief sought in its application, which includes costs", Robin QC DCJ went on to say:

> "Subject to special considerations such as failure to meet a time limit and to reservations of the kind alluded to in para [6] [of the decision], the defendant will hardly be in a position to dispute the adjudicator's jurisdiction, having asserted it here. One would not expect the adjudicator to decline jurisdiction. It is unfortunate that the Act contains no clear power for an adjudicator to deal with issues that arise from the working out of an order made by him or her."

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

Mr Barlow (instructed by Home Wilkinson Lowry) for the plaintiff

Ms Moody (instructed by Herd Law) for the defendant

Before: Robin DCJ

Robin DCJ:

1. This issue is whether an adjudicator under the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 has exclusive jurisdiction in respect of the subject matter of the plaintiff's claim which seeks a declaration of the defendant Body Corporate's liability for "structural repairs pursuant to the order dated 11 November 2005" under chapter 9 of the Act, $47,955.87, interest and costs. Mr Barlow informed the Court that the declaration is no longer sought.

2. On 22 March 2006 the Body Corporate filed a conditional notice of intention to defend under rule 144(1) of the Uniform Civil Procedure Rules, asserting that there was a "dispute" within s 227 of the Act, which "may be resolved by a dispute resolution process." The words quoted come from s 229 of the Act:

> "229 Exclusivity of dispute resolution provisions
>
> (1) Subsection (2) applies to a dispute if it may be resolved under this chapter by a dispute resolution process.
> (2) The only remedy for the dispute is—
> (a) the resolution of the dispute by a dispute resolution process; or > (b) an order of the District Court on appeal from an adjudicator on a question of law.
>
> (3) However, subsection (2) does not apply to a dispute if—
>
> (a) an application is made to the commissioner; and > (b) the commissioner dismisses the application under part 5.
> (4) Also, subsection (2) does not apply to a dispute about the adjustment of a lot entitlement schedule."

3. The defendant was a day late in filing the application required under rule 144(3) if it was to avoid its notice being treated as an unconditional one under sub-rule (4). Indeed, by way of acknowledging sub-rule (5), a defence was filed on 10 May 2006. Ms Moody, for the defendant, sought an extension of time under rule 7. While in an appropriate case, retrospective relief of that kind may well be available, no particular circumstances of sympathy (apart from one's natural reluctance to penalise such a minimal delay) appear. In my opinion, the defendant's ability to apply as it has done under rule 16(a) and (e) is not lost because of the "late" filing of the application. It seems unnecessary to have recourse to rule 7.

The underlying differences between the parties relate to the plaintiff's ground floor unit in the relevant building, specifically to where the responsibility lies for the upkeep of a roof above an external area of the plaintiff's lot which forms (although the Court was told it is not used as) an extension of the balcony of the unit above.

5. An adjudicator brought in by the plaintiff's Dispute Resolution Application dated 15 March 2005, under the Act, gave notice dated 11 November 2005 of the following order:

> "I hereby order that the body corporate shall, at its expense, and in a reasonable time, undertake and complete all necessary structural and other repairs to the balcony slab of unit 2A so as to protect or maintain the structural integrity of the balcony slab and to prevent water ingress to lot 1, and thereafter to reinstate improvements necessary to be removed to undertake the necessary repairs (the work) PROVIDED THAT the owner of lot 1, Sail Isle Pty Ltd as Trustee, shall allow access to the body corporate, its contractors or tradespersons during reasonable times so that the work might be undertaken.
> I further order that the application by the owner of lot 1, Sail Isle Pty Ltd as Trustee for an order that the body corporate pay to it the sum of $9537.00 for reimbursement for repairs carried out to the unit by the owner and costs of carrying out temporary measures to avoid further damage to the unit, is dismissed.

I further order that within one (1) calendar month of the date of this order, the body corporate shall pay to the owner of lot 1, Sail Isle Pty Ltd as Trustee the sum of $1553.20 for reimbursement of the reasonable value of repairs carried out to the property by the owner in consequence of the damage caused by water ingress."

6. Some months before the order was made, and presumably without any advice to the adjudicator, the work had already been done by the plaintiff, which, accordingly, seeks reimbursement. Mr Barlow, on its behalf, describes the claim as one for restitution, based on unjust enrichment. The idea is that the Body Corporate has had its obligation discharged by the plaintiff. It is not suggested that the Body Corporate in any way requested that this occur. For present purposes, there is no need to examine contentions the Body Corporate may wish to make, as foreshadowed by Ms Moody, about the extent, quality or cost of work done, whether all was to "common property" as opposed to the higher lot, and other possible complications to do with insurance, the processes to be gone through before the Body Corporate could lawfully have the work done, and the like.

7. There is authority in the Supreme Court of Queensland that its jurisdiction is excluded by the predecessor of s 229: James v Body Corporate Aarons Community Title Scheme 11476 – BC 200207018, affirmed [2004] 1 Qd R 386. Unfortunately, although there may be no relevant changes in the substance (as opposed to the precise wording) of the legislation, there has been wholesale renumbering of sections. Section 229 was formerly s 184. Section 223 has become s 276 and s 227 has become s 281. Enforcement of an adjudicator's order occurs through registration in the Magistrates Court: s 286 (formerly s 232).

8. At first instance in James, Holmes J said:

"[17] Chapter 6, as already outlined, creates the positions of commissioner, adjudicators and mediators, and provides for case management and for management and adjudication in such a way as to constitute, in my view, a comprehensive code for dispute resolution. The existence of such a code for dealing with the subject matter is at least an indication of exclusivity. As Lunn AJ observed in Hemruth Advertising v Karafotias:

> 'The efficient operation of a specialist tribunal with powers to conciliate and to resolve disputes in an expeditious and inexpensive way would be partly defeated if parties to such a dispute could resort to other courts as they saw fit.'

The combined functions of commissioner, mediator and arbitrator under chapter 6 constitute a specialised mechanism peculiarly suited to speedy, cheap and relatively informal resolution of community titles scheme disputes.

[18] The conclusion that exclusivity is intended in respect of the disputes to which s184(2) applies is reinforced by the existence of provisions which have the effect of allowing recourse to other remedies (including court orders) in specified situations: subs184(3), which removes the dispute from the purview of s184(2) if the commissioner dismisses the application, and s201(2), which entitles the commissioner to dismiss an application if he or she is satisfied that it should be dealt with in a court of competent jurisdiction.

[19] S184(2) has, I conclude, the effect of confining those remedies which may be given in disputes to which it applies to those available from an adjudicator under the chapter. Other orders or declarations — for example as to the jurisdiction of the commissioner, or of an adjudicator — are unaffected; but any order such as that sought in the present case, designed to resolve a dispute which can equally be resolved by an adjudicator's order under s223, is unavailable. It follows that the jurisdiction of the court to provide any remedy in respect of this dispute is excluded by s184."

9. Upon appeal, Davies JA, Jerrard JA and Mackenzie J concurring, said:

"[11] This was plainly a dispute in respect of which an adjudicator may make an order under ch. 6 within the meaning of s. 184. It was, at the very least, both a dispute between the body corporate and the owner of a lot included in the scheme and a dispute between the body corporate and a letting agent for the scheme. In the end, the only questions in issue in this appeal are whether the order which an adjudicator may make to resolve this dispute is one pursuant to s. 223 or one pursuant to s. 227; or whether the adjudicator may make such an order under either section.

[12] Section 184 does not speak in terms, specifically, of jurisdiction to hear and decide but in terms of providing a remedy. However I think its plain intention is that the adjudicator is to have exclusive jurisdiction to make orders of the kind which the Act prescribes, relevantly in s. 223 and s. 227, in disputes of the kind to which s. 182 refers, subject to any statutory exception or limitation. Mr Savage S.C., for the appellants did not argue to the contrary.

[13] It was submitted by Mr Savage S.C. that s. 227, at least indirectly, provided such a limitation which effectively excluded the adjudicator's jurisdiction in this case. The submission was that this case came within s. 227(1) but, because the cost of carrying out repairs to the common property was substantially more than $75,000, the adjudicator had no jurisdiction to make such order. It was submitted that even if this case also came within s. 223, it was subject to the limitation in s. 227(2). Accordingly, it was submitted, the court had jurisdiction in the matter.

[14] The critical question, on the appellants' argument, is whether the relief which the appellants seek, which is, effectively as Mr Savage S.C. concedes, an order that the respondent repair the roof membrane, is an order of a kind which, subject to the exception contained in s. 227(2), an adjudicator could make under s. 227. That question, in turn, depends on whether "damage to property" in s. 227(1) includes, where the applicant is a lot owner, damage to the roof membrane.

[15] Section 227 was not necessary to enable the adjudicator to order a body corporate to have repairs to the roof membrane carried out. Section 87(1) of the Act and s. 108(1) and s. 108(2)(a)(iii) of the Regulation required a body corporate to maintain it in good condition; and an order requiring the body corporate to have repairs carried out, in compliance with that obligation, was an order which the adjudicator was empowered to make, under s. 223(3)(c), in any dispute coming within s. 184. So much was accepted by Mr Savage S.C. However he submitted that an order requiring the body corporate to repair the roof membrane would also be an order made under s. 227 and consequently that it would be subject to the limitation contained in s. 227(2).

[16] There can be no doubt that s. 227 confers jurisdiction on an adjudicator to make an order to carry out stated repairs or to pay compensation which would not be an order of a kind which could be made under s. 223(3)(c). An example of such an order is given in the example contained in s. 227(1) which is in the following terms:

> 'A waterproofing membrane in the roof of a building in the scheme leaks and there is damage to wallpaper and carpets in a lot included in the scheme. The membrane is part of the common property and the leak results from a failure on the part of the body corporate to maintain it in good order and condition, the adjudicator could, on the application of the lot's owner, order the body corporate to have the damage repaired or to pay appropriate compensation.'

The damage referred to in the example is plainly the damage to the wallpaper and carpets in the lot. Mr Savage S.C. did not contend that an order of the kind envisaged in the example could be made under s. 223(3)(c).

[17] If Mr Savage S.C.'s submission is correct, s. 227 would apply, not only in the case of damage to the separate property of a lot owner or of the occupier of a lot, but to damage to the common property falling within the power to order repair already conferred by s. 223(3)(c). It would also, on that submission, both expand that power (by the power to order compensation for damage in s. 227(1)(b)) and limit it (by s. 227(2)). And it would do so without any reference to s. 223(3)(c). In my opinion that would be a surprising result.

[18] It would be surprising for two reasons. The first is that when, in an Act, a section confers power to do an act, which at the same time in this case also confers jurisdiction, it would be surprising to find, in a later section, the conferral of the same power, albeit together with the conferral of another power. And the second is that it would be even more surprising to find, in the later section, that the power conferred by the earlier section is not only conferred once again but also expanded in one way and limited in another. If s. 227 can be given a sensible construction which does not have those effects I think it should be given that construction.

[19] In my opinion s. 227 can be given such sensible construction, having as its purpose the conferral on an adjudicator of a limited power, additional to those already conferred, to provide remedies, including one of compensation, to a lot owner or occupier whose property has been damaged by a contravention of the Act or the community management statement. So, in a case like the present where the breach is alleged to consist in the failure of the body corporate to maintain the roof membrane in good condition, s. 227 confers a power in the adjudicator, additional to the power already conferred to order repair of the membrane, to require the body corporate to make repairs to or to pay compensation in respect of damage to property of the owner or occupier in consequence of that failure. But in my opinion, reading s. 223(3)(c) and s. 227 together requires the conclusion that, just as damage to the property of a lot owner or occupier could not be the subject of an order made under s. 223(3)(c), damage to the common property could not be the subject of an order for repair or compensation under s. 227.

[20] It was submitted by Mr Savage S.C. that such a construction would have the curious result of conferring on an adjudicator under s. 223(3)(c) a power to make an order, unlike other orders of the kind which can be made under s. 223(3), which may involve expenditure of substantial money, as it seems in this case; whereas orders which can be made under s. 227 are limited in amount to $75,000 for repairs and $10,000 for compensation. I do not find that curious. Orders of the kind which the adjudicator is given power to make by s. 223(3) are all orders with respect to matters which might be expected to arise in the administration of the affairs of the body corporate including the obligation of the body corporate to maintain the common property in good condition. Orders which the adjudicator is given power to make under s. 227 are orders of a quite different kind. They are orders to remedy a civil wrong causing damage to property where that wrong arises out of a contravention of the Act or the community management statement. In this respect they trespass into the field ordinarily occupied by the common law. It is therefore unsurprising, it seems to me, that the power which is conferred on an adjudicator to make orders of that kind should be limited in amount."

10. Mr Barlow is correct that James concerned repairs, not a claim like the present, whether characterised as compensation, reimbursement, restitution, etc. His argument is that the "dispute" which, for purposes of the Act, he conceded exists, is not capable of being resolved within s 276:

> "(1) An adjudicator to whom the application is referred may make an order that is just and equitable in the circumstances (including a declaratory order) to resolve a dispute, in the context of a community titles scheme, about—
> (a) a claimed or anticipated contravention of this Act or the community management statement; or
> (b) the exercise of rights or powers, or the performance of duties, under this Act or the community management statement; or > (c) a claimed or anticipated contractual matter about—
> (i) the engagement of a person as a body corporate manager or service contractor for a community titles scheme; or
> (ii) the authorisation of a person as a letting agent for a community titles scheme.
> (2) An order may require a person to act, or prohibit a person from acting, in a way stated in the order.
> (3) Without limiting subsections (1) and (2), the adjudicator may make an order mentioned in schedule 5.
> (4) An order appointing an administrator—
> (a) may be the only order the adjudicator makes for an application; or

(b) may be made to assist the enforcement of another order made for the application.

(5) If the adjudicator makes an order in a form agreed to by the parties to the application following mediation or conciliation, the order—

(a) may include only matters that may be dealt with under this Act; and
(b) must not include matters that are inconsistent with this Act or another Act."

11. It was conceded that subsection (2) extends to an order to pay money. It would appear correct that (subject to whatever subsection (3) may add), there must be something under (1)(a),(b) or (c) – here (a) or (b). Mr Barlow submits there is not. He points to s 281:

"(1) If the adjudicator is satisfied that the applicant has suffered damage to property because of a contravention of this Act or the community management statement, the adjudicator may order the person who the adjudicator believes, on reasonable grounds, to be responsible for the contravention—

(a) to carry out stated repairs, or have stated repairs carried out, to the damaged property; or (b)to pay the applicant an amount fixed by the adjudicator as reimbursement for repairs carried out to the property by the applicant.

Example—

A waterproofing membrane in the roof of a building in the scheme leaks and there is damage to wallpaper and carpets in a lot included in the scheme. The membrane is part of the common property and the leak results from a failure on the part of the body corporate to maintain it in good order and condition, the adjudicator could, on application of the lot's owner, order the body corporate to have the damage repaired or to pay an appropriate amount as reimbursement for amounts incurred by the owner in repairing the property.

(2) The order can not be made if—

(a)for an order under subsection (1)(a)—the cost of carrying out the repairs is more than $75000; or

(b)for an order made under subsection (1)(b)—the amount fixed by the adjudicator would be more than $10000."

which deals with damage to an applicant's property, offering in terms the prospect of an order for payment on account of repairs "carried out," and contends that the absence of equivalent provision in respect of common property means an adjudicator has no jurisdiction or power to make an equivalent order where the repairs are to common property. The underlying notion is the correct one that an adjudicator may do no more than the Act allows.

12. In my opinion, s 276 does cover the plaintiff's claim, with the consequence that this Court lacks jurisdiction to entertain it. The extension of s 276 might be noted, including from Schedule 5:

"4. An order requiring the body corporate … to have repairs carried out."

s 152(1):

"(1) The body corporate for a community titles scheme must –

(a) administer, manage and control the common property and body corporate assets reasonably and for the benefit of lot owners; and
(b) comply with the obligations with regard to common property and body corporate assets imposed under the regulation module applying to the scheme."

and s 108 of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 1997:

"(1) The body corporate must maintain common property in good condition, including to the extent that common property is structural in nature, in a structurally sound condition.
(2) To the extent that lots included in the scheme are created under a building format plan of subdivision, the body corporate must –

(a) maintain in good condition –

(i) railings, parapets and balustrades on (whether precisely, or for all practical purposes) the boundary of a lot and common property; and
(ii) doors, windows and associated fittings situated in a boundary wall separating a lot from common property; and
(iii) roofing membranes that are not common property but that provide protection for lots or common property; and

(b) maintain the following elements of a scheme land that are not common property in a structurally sound condition –

(i) foundation structures;
(ii) roofing structures providing protection;
(iii) essential supporting framework, including load-bearing walls.

13. Acknowledging the strange chronology of events here, whereby the plaintiff had taken upon itself to do "repairs" before the adjudicator made his order, I think we are dealing with a "claimed contravention" by the Body Corporate, namely failure to look after the relevant roof or "membrane" (however it is to be described). Section 288, imposing penalties for contravention of an order of an adjudicator, has the effect of creating a duty and requirement that such an order be complied with. Cf Kelly v Alford [1988] 1 Qd R 404, 408. It would be an odd (and inconvenient) situation that an adjudicator might make orders that repairs be carried out, which identify how the cost should be borne, but (even where the adjudicator has previously ordered the particular repairs) may not make an order about how the costs should ultimately be borne. It occurs to me that there may be emergency situations (it was not suggested the present is one) in which, for practical reasons, it is imperative that an owner (like the plaintiff) have urgent repair work done, leaving for later determination (on the "just and equitable" basis) the question of who should bear the cost. I do not think it should matter whether the contractor carrying out the work has been paid or not.

14. The Court of Appeal's approach in James acknowledges that an adjudicator may be brought in under more than one section to resolve a particular dispute, with some financial limits applicable in one scenario but not in another. (Here, Mr Barlow made it clear that the limits in s 281 create no problem.) In the circumstances, s 281 does not appeal to me as a reason for reading down s 276.

15. The defendant should have the relief sought in its application, which includes costs.

16. If my decision is wrong, nevertheless, as a determination binding on the parties, it must, one would think, be accepted by the adjudicator, if one is asked to resolve the dispute. Subject to special considerations such as failure to meet a time limit, and to reservations of the kind alluded to in para [6] above, the defendant will hardly be in a position to dispute the adjudicator's jurisdiction, having asserted it here. One would not expect the adjudicator to decline jurisdiction. It is unfortunate that the Act contains no clear power for an adjudicator to deal with issues that arise from the working out of an order made by him or her.

New South Wales Court of Appeal

Strata titles — Practice and procedure — Standing of owners corporation to sue in negligence with respect to defects in common property — Application and scope of s 227 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 — Whether an owners corporation entitled to sue in representative capacity for loss suffered by lot owners — Whether owners corporation entitled to sue on own behalf as legal owner of common property — Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW), s 226(1); 227 — Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1973 (NSW), s 20; 24.

The appellant was constituted as an owners corporation under s 11 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW) (``the Management Act'') and, accordingly, was a body corporate for the purposes of the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1973 (NSW) (``the Freehold Development Act''). The building in question was a 10-storey residential building in Sydney, New South Wales, which the respondent had built. Upon registration of the strata plan in 1993, the common property in the strata plan vested in the appellant. The appellant claimed that the respondent had been negligent in and about the construction of the building.

There were 52 lots in the strata plan. Twenty-nine of the 52 lots were sold after 2 November 1994, when at least some of the alleged defects in the building had become manifest. The respondent had argued successfully before Master Macready that the appellant had no standing to institute proceedings (2004) NSW Titles Cases ¶80-082; (2004) LQCS ¶ 90-124. The respondent's case was that the lot owners who acquired their lots after 2 November 1994 had no relevant cause of action against the builder and that, therefore, the appellant had no cause of action.

The appellant relied on the express statutory right to sue found in s 227 of the Management Act which provides:

> ``(1) This section applies to proceedings in relation to common property.
> (2) If the owners of the lots in a strata scheme are jointly entitled to take proceedings against any person or are liable to have proceedings taken against them jointly, the proceedings may be taken by or against the owners corporation.
> (3) Any judgment or order given or made in favour of or against the owners corporation in any such proceedings has effect as if it were a judgment or order given or made in favour of or against the owners.
> (4) A contribution required to be made by an owner of a lot to another owner in relation to such a judgment debt is to bear the same proportion to the judgment debt as the unit entitlement of the contributing owner bears to the aggregate unit entitlement.''

Master Macready had rejected the appellant's case on the basis that the words ``jointly entitled'' in subs 227(2) require all lot owners to have the right to take the relevant proceedings.

On appeal, the appellant submitted that s 227 of the Management Act encompassed a joint entitlement, which did not require all lot owners to have the same cause of action. The appellant invoked the principle of statutory interpretation that the plural includes the singular and referred to s 8 of the Interpretation Act 1987 (NSW).

Alternatively, the appellant submitted that it was entitled to sue without relying on s 227 of the Management Act. This proposition was based on two alternative approaches. First, the appellant asserted it was entitled to sue in a representative capacity for loss suffered by the owners of the lots. Secondly, it asserted that it was entitled to sue on its own behalf for loss suffered by the owners corporation as the legal owner of the common property. In relation to the first approach, the respondent had successfully argued before Master Macready that, as an ``agent'', the owners corporation was not entitled to sue on behalf of a disclosed principal.

Section 20 of the Freehold Development Act provides:

> ``The estate or interest of a body corporate in common property vested in it or acquired by it shall be held by the body corporate as agent:
> > (a) where the same person or persons is or are the proprietor or proprietors of all of the lots the subject of the strata scheme concerned — for that proprietor or those proprietors, or
> > (b) where different persons are proprietors of each of two or more of the lots the subject of the strata scheme concerned — for those proprietors as tenants in common in shares proportional to the unit entitlements of their respective lots.''

Section 24 of the Freehold Development Act provides:

> > ``(1) In any dealing or caveat relating to a lot, a reference to that lot includes a reference to any estate or interest in common property which is vested in the body corporate as agent for the proprietor of that lot

without express reference to the common property and without that dealing or caveat being recorded in the folio of the Register comprising the common property.
(2) The beneficial interest of a proprietor of a lot in the estate or interest in the common property, if any, held by the body corporate as agent for that proprietor shall not be capable of being severed from, or dealt with except in conjunction with, the lot.''

Subsection 226(1) of the Management Act provides:

> ``Nothing in this Act derogates from any rights or remedies that... an owners corporation... may have in relation to... the common property apart from this Act.''

Held: leave to appeal granted and appeal allowed.

Per Spigelman CJ (with whom Ipp and McColl JJA agreed)

Section 227 of the Management Act

1. Section 227 of the Management Act does not confer standing on the owners corporation to sue in its own right in the circumstances of the case.

2. Section 227 of the Management Act only applies where all of the owners of all lots have a common interest.

3. With respect to the enforcement of any judgment in favour of the owners corporation, subs 227(3) gives it the effect of a judgment in favour of ``the owners''. This is clearly a reference back to the phrase ``the owners of the lots'' in subs 227(2).

4. Subsection 227(4) operates on the assumption that all lot owners are the subject of the relevant judgment debt.

Claimed entitlement to sue in representative capacity

1. The word ``agent'' in s 20 and 24 of the Freehold Development Act is not used in the technical sense of the law of agency. The characterisation of the relationship for purposes of determining standing to sue turns on an assessment of the whole statutory scheme, including the powers and duties with respect to common property. There is a tension between the use of the word ``agent'' and of the words ``beneficial interest'' in subs 24(2). The fact that the statute vests title in the owners corporation is particularly significant.

2. It is not appropriate to characterise the statutory role of an owners corporation solely in terms of an agency at common law.

3. Inability to sue in contract does not determine whether the legal owner of property can sue with respect to damage to property. In this regard, the statutory scheme does not suggest that the appellant suffered from any incapacity. The appellant should be treated as a trustee would be treated in this respect. Subsection 226(1) preserves any such right, including the right of a trustee to sue in tort for damage to trust property.

Claimed entitlement to sue by the owners corporation on its own behalf

As the legal owner, the owners corporation may sue in its own right.

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

F Corsaro SC with Mr Young (instructed by Andreones Pty Ltd Lawyers) for the appellant.

M Pembroke SC with R Dubler (instructed by Corrs Chambers Westgarth) for the respondent

Before: Spigelman CJ, Ipp and McColl JJA.

Spigelman CJ: The Appellant seeks leave to appeal from a judgment of Master Macready on a separate question in proceedings instituted in the Technology and Construction List of the Supreme Court. As will presently appear, significant questions of law arise and leave to appeal should be granted.

2. The Appellant is constituted as an owners corporation under s 11 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (``the Management Act'') and, accordingly, is a body corporate for purposes of the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1973 (``the Freehold Development Act''). Upon registration of Strata Plan No 43551 on 30 March 1993, the ``common property'' in the strata plan vested in the Appellant pursuant to the sections I will hereinafter set out.

3. The Appellant is the owners corporation of a ten storey residential building in Bondi Junction, Sydney. The Respondent was the builder and, according to the statement of claim issued by the Appellant, was guilty of negligence in and about the construction of the building.

4. There are 52 lots in the strata plan. Twenty-nine of the 52 lots were sold after 2 November 1994, when at least some of the alleged defects had become manifest. The Respondent's case is that the lot owners who acquired their lots after this date have no relevant cause of action against the builder and that, therefore, the Appellant has no cause of action.

5. The Respondent argued, successfully, before the Master that the Appellant had no standing to institute the proceedings.

6. On the pleadings, the Respondent put in issue the Appellant's standing. Under Pt 31 r 2 of the Supreme Court Rules, the Court ordered, in accordance with the Respondent's Notice of Motion, that certain paragraphs of the Defence be separately determined. The Master identified the issue to be:

> ``Does the plaintiff, as an owners corporation, have standing to sue in its own name in respect of the alleged defects to the common property?''

7. Although this summary was not criticised on the appeal, it is pertinent to set out the particular paragraphs of the defence that were separated by Court order, adding par [14] by way of introduction:

> ``[14] Further and in answer to the whole of the Plaintiff's claim the Defendant says:
>
> [15] By s 18(1) of the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1973 (NSW) (the Strata Schemes Act) the common property in strata plan no: 43551 (the Strata Plan) was vested in the Plaintiff upon registration of the Strata Plan pursuant to the terms of the Strata Schemes Act.
>
> [16] By s 21 of the Strata Schemes Act the Plaintiff is only capable of dealing with the common property the subject of the Strata Plan in accordance with the provisions of the Strata Schemes Act.
>
> [17] By s 20 of the Strata Schemes Act the estate or interest of the Plaintiff in the common property the subject of the Strata Plan vested in it pursuant to s 18(1) is to be held by the Plaintiff as agent for the proprietors of each of the lots the subject of the Strata Plan as tenants in common in shares proportional to the unit entitlements of their respective lots (the Statutory Agency).
>
> [18] By virtue of s 227 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW) (the Strata Schemes Management Act) the
>
> Plaintiff only has standing pursuant to the Statutory Agency to bring proceedings in respect of the common property the subject of the Strata Plan on behalf of the proprietors of the lots in the Strata Plan (the Proprietors) where all of the proprietors of the lots are jointly entitled to take proceedings against the person whom the Plaintiff proposes to take proceedings.
>
> [19] Some or all of the alleged defects the subject of the Plaintiff's notice of contentions were in existence prior to the Proprietors' purchase of the lots in the Strata Plan.
>
> [20] The Proprietors are not the original proprietors of the lots in the Strata Plan.
> [21] The Proprietors have purchased their lots at different times.
>
> [22] Accordingly, the Proprietors do not share a common interest in the alleged cause of action pleaded against the Defendant in respect of the common property the subject of the Strata Plan in that each Proprietor's entitlement to take proceedings against the Defendant in negligence is severally dependent upon:
> (a) a duty of care arising between the Defendant and each Proprietor;
> (b) each Proprietor demonstrating he, she or it relied on the Defendant at the time of a duty of care arising between the Defendant and the Proprietor;
> (c) each Proprietor purchasing the lot or lots without knowledge of the defects the subject of the Statement of Claim or such defects not being reasonably discoverable at the time of purchase.
> [23] In the premises, the Defendant says that the Proprietors are not jointly entitled to take proceedings on the cause of action pleaded against the Defendant.

[24] Accordingly, by virtue of the provisions of the Strata Schemes Act and the Strata Schemes Management Act pleaded above, the Plaintiff does not have standing to bring the current proceedings on behalf of the Proprietors against the Defendant.

[25] The Defendant says that some or all of the Proprietors have purchased their lots with knowledge of the defects the subject of the Statement of Claim or at a time when such defects were reasonably discoverable and/or without relying upon the Defendant's care or still as building, and hence would not have a cause of action in tort against the Defendant in respect of such defects.

[26] In the premises, the Plaintiff is not entitled pursuant to the Statutory Agency to bring proceedings on behalf of such Proprietors to recover damages in tort as pleaded in the Statement of Claim herein in respect of their interest in the common property in the Strata Plan."

8. Two issues arise on this pleading:

(i) joint entitlement.
(ii) statutory agency.

In each case, the pleading concludes with an assertion that the Appellant cannot bring proceedings on behalf of the owners.

9. However, the statement of claim does not assert a right to bring proceedings on behalf of the owners. It asserts an ability on the part of the Appellant to proceed in its own right:

``6. In carrying out the works the defendant had in contemplation that:

a. on registration of the strata plan the common property of the Building would be vested in the plaintiff; and
b. in the event that the construction works were not carried out in a proper and workmanlike manner the plaintiff would be a member of a class of person who would suffer loss and damage as a consequence.

7. As a consequence of the matters pleaded in paragraph 5. above, and all the circumstances of the case, including, without limitation:

[140427]

(a) the fact that the defendant, in its capacity as a builder of a strata development, would, or ought to, have been aware of the implications of the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1973 (NSW) in that, upon registration, the plaintiff, as owners' corporation, would become the owner of the common property and would thereby suffer loss and damage as a result of defective works;
(b) reliance by the plaintiff on the defendant;

(c) the fact that the plaintiff was in no position to protect itself against the defendant's default; and
(d) the fact that, as between the parties, the building works were entirely within the defendant's control, the defendant owed the plaintiff a duty to exercise reasonable care in carrying out the construction works."

10. The statement of claim goes on to allege breach of duty and consequential loss. The Respondent denies duty, breach and that loss was caused by breach of duty. However, these paragraphs of the Defence were not the subject of the order for separate determination. This is of significance with respect to some of the submissions made by the Respondent in this Court.

The statutory right to sue

11. The Appellant relies on the express statutory right to sue found in s 227 of the Management Act which provides:

``227(1) This section applies to proceedings in relation to common property.

(2) If the owners of the lots in a strata scheme are jointly entitled to take proceedings against any person or are liable to have proceedings taken against them jointly, the proceedings may be taken by or against the owners corporation.

(3) Any judgment or order given or made in favour of or against the owners corporation in any such proceedings has effect as if it were a judgment or order given or made in favour of or against the owners.

(4) A contribution required to be made by an owner of a lot to another owner in relation to such a judgment debt is to bear the same proportion to the judgment debt as the unit entitlement of the contributing owner bears to the aggregate unit entitlement."

12. The Master rejected the Appellant's case on s 227 on the basis that the words ``jointly entitled'' in s 227(2) require all lot owners to have the right to take the relevant proceedings. He referred to the judgment of the Singapore Court of Appeal in Management Corporation Strata Title Plan No 1938 v Goodview Property Pty Limited (2000) 4 SLR 576; see (2001) 75 ALJ 217, but noted that the relevant section of the Singapore statute differed from that of New South Wales, by providing that:

13. The Appellant submitted that the New South Wales section should be understood in the same way, so that it encompassed a joint entitlement which did not require all lot owners to have the same cause of action. The Appellant also invoked the principle of statutory interpretation that the plural includes the singular and referred to s 8 of the Interpretation Act 1987. However, there are indicators in s 227, and in the statutory scheme of which it forms part, that the Appellant's contentions are incorrect including, so far as it is necessary to do so, a contrary indication for purposes of the application of s 8 of the Interpretation Act 1987.

14. First, there is the repetition of the definite article in s 227(2) which commences with the words ``if the owners of the lots...''. If the terminology had been ``if owners of lots'' or even ``if the owners of lots'', then there may have been a suggestion that an indeterminate number of owners in any combination could be represented by the owners corporation. The repetition of the definite article in the two places identified indicates that the section applies only in the circumstances where all the owners of all lots have a common interest.

15. Furthermore, with respect to the enforcement of any judgment in favour of the owners corporation, s 227(3) gives it the effect of a judgment in favour of ``the owners''. This is clearly a reference back to the phrase ``the owners of the lots'' in s 227(2). This third deployment of the definite article reinforces my conclusion.

The second reason for reaching this conclusion is the express provision contained in s 227(4) as set out above. That subsection is concerned with the situation in which a judgment is made against the owners corporation and, by force of subs (3), has effect as if it were made against ``the owners''. The successful plaintiff in such proceeding would have an order enforceable, it appears, against all or any of the owners of the lots. If enforcement action is taken against some only of the owners that would give rise to a right of contribution by those owners against other owners.

17. Subsection (4) indicates that any such contribution is to be made on the basis of the proportion that the ``unit entitlement of the contributing owner'' bears to the ``aggregate unit entitlement''. The phrase ``aggregate unit entitlement'' is defined in Pt 1 of the dictionary as:

``aggregate unit entitlement of lots subject of a strata scheme means the sum of the unit entitlements of those lots.''

18. This definition refers to the ``lots'' in the ``strata scheme'' as a whole. Section 227(4) does not refer to the sum of the ``unit entitlements'' of the lot owners seeking contribution and of the lot owners from whom contribution is sought. Subsection (4), accordingly, operates on the assumption that all lot owners are the subject of the relevant judgment debt.

19. The final reason for concluding that s 227 applies only to action on behalf of all of the owners is the fact that, by subs(1), the section applies only to proceedings in relation to common property. This is usually a matter in which all owners of lots have an identical interest. Subsection (2) applies not only where owners assert a ``joint entitlement'' to take proceedings but also where a third party can take proceedings against owners ``jointly''. Although the present case is of the former character, it is difficult to envisage circumstances in which a third person can take proceedings in relation to common property that does not affect all owners of lots in the strata scheme.

20. For these reasons, in my opinion, s 227 does not confer standing on the owners corporation to sue in its own right in the circumstances of this case.

Statutory ``Agency''

21. Alternatively the Appellant submits that it is entitled to sue without relying on s 227 of the Management Act. This proposition was based on two alternative approaches. First, the Appellant asserts it is entitled to sue in a representative capacity for loss suffered by the owners of the lots. Secondly, it asserts that it is entitled to sue on its own behalf for loss suffered by the owners corporation as the legal owner of the common property.

22. I have set out above, pars [25] and [26] of the Defence that relate to this matter. They appear to me to give rise to only the first of the ways in which the Appellant asserts a right to sue. Paragraph [26] of the Defence refers only to the ``statutory agency''.

23. In this regard it is relevant to note that s 226(1) of the Management Act provides:

> ``226(1) Nothing in this Act derogates from any rights or remedies that... an owners corporation... may have in relation to... the common property apart from this Act.''

24. The nature of the relationship between the owners corporation and the owners of the lots is set out in the following provisions of the two Acts.

25. Section 11(1) of the Management Act provides:

> ``11(1) The owners of the lots from time to time in a strata scheme constitute a body corporate under the name `The Owners- Strata Plan No X' (X being the registered number of the strata plan to which that strata scheme relates).''

26. The relevant sections of the Freehold Development Act are s 18(1), s 20 and s 24:

> ``18(1) Upon registration of a strata plan any common property in that plan vests in the body corporate for the estate or interest evidenced by the folio of the Register comprising the land the subject of that plan but freed and discharged from any mortgage, charge, covenant charge, lease, writ or caveat affecting that land immediately before registration of that plan.''
> [140429]
>
> ``20 The estate or interest of a body corporate in common property vested in it or acquired by it shall be held by the body corporate as agent:
> (a) where the same person or persons is or are the proprietor or proprietors of all of the lots the subject of the strata scheme concerned — for that proprietor or those proprietors, or
> (b) where different persons are proprietors of each of two or more of the lots the subject of the strata scheme concerned — for those proprietors as tenants in common in shares proportional to the unit entitlements of their respective lots.''
>
> ``24(1) In any dealing or caveat relating to a lot, a reference to that lot includes a reference to any estate or interest in common property which is vested in the body corporate as agent for the proprietor of that lot without express reference to the common property and without that dealing or caveat being recorded in the folio of the Register comprising the common property.

(2) The beneficial interest of a proprietor of a lot in the estate or interest in the common property, if any, held by the body corporate as agent for that proprietor shall not be capable of being severed from, or dealt with except in conjunction with, the lot."

27. The special nature of an owners corporation, and the need to identify its role within the parameters of the Freehold Development Act and the Management Act, is emphasised by s 110(3) of the Management Act which provides that s 50(1)(d) of the Interpretation Act 1987 does not apply to an owners corporation. The significance of this exclusion, and of the applicable paragraphs of s 50(1), is manifest in the terms of s 50 which are:

``50(1) A statutory corporation:

(a) has perpetual succession,
(b) shall have a seal,
(c) may take proceedings and be proceeded against in its corporate name,
(d) may, for the purpose of enabling it to exercise its functions, purchase, exchange, take on lease, hold, dispose of and otherwise deal with property, and
(e) may do and suffer all other things that bodies corporate may, by law, do and suffer and that are necessary for, or incidental to, the exercise of its functions."

28. An owners corporation has functions and powers conferred by the two Acts. Of particular significance are the functions relating to common property.

29. First, s 21 of the Freehold Development Act provides:

``21 Common property shall not be capable of being dealt with except in accordance with the provisions of this Act."

30. It is also relevant to note certain provisions of Ch 3, which is headed Key Management Areas.

31. Section 61(1) provides:

``61(1) An owners corporation has for the benefit of the owners:

(a) the management and control of the use of the common property of the strata scheme concerned, and
(b) the administration of the strata scheme concerned.

(2) The owners corporation has responsibility for the following:

(a) maintaining and repairing the common property of the strata scheme as provided by Part 2,

32. In Pt 2 appears s 62 which provides:

``62(1) An owners corporation must properly maintain and keep in a state of good and serviceable repair the common property and any personal property vested in the owners corporation.

(2) An owners corporation must renew or replace any fixtures or fittings comprised in the common property and any personal property vested in the owners corporation.

(3) This clause does not apply to a particular item of property if the owners corporation determines by special resolution that:

(a) it is inappropriate to maintain, renew, replace or repair the property, and
(b) its decision will not affect the safety of any building, structure or common property in the strata scheme or detract from the appearance of any property in the strata scheme."

Part 3 of Ch 3 is concerned with the finances of a strata scheme. Sections 66 and 69 impose obligations upon an owners corporation to establish, respectively, an administrative fund and a sinking fund.

34. Section 75 makes provision for levies on owners. By ss 67(1)(a) and 70(a) contributions levied on and paid by owners for payment into the respective funds must be paid into the funds. Section 68 and s 71 state that moneys must not be paid out of either of the funds save for the purposes specified, respectively, in the two sections.

35. The pleading in the Defence which gives rise to what the Respondent calls a ``statutory agency'' is based on the reference in s 20 and s 24 of the Freehold Development Act, quoted above, to the fact that the owners corporation holds the common property ``as agent'' for proprietors.

36. The Respondent's contention, which succeeded before the Master, was that, as an ``agent'', the owners corporation was not entitled to sue on behalf of a disclosed principal. The Appellant's case was that the owners corporation under the statutory regime was analogous to the situation of a trustee who can act on behalf of beneficiaries.

37. The Master accepted the Respondent's contentions in the following passage:

> ``[15] In support of the proposition that in the case of a disclosed principal an agent cannot sue on behalf of his principal reference was made to the principles referred to in Bowstead and Reynolds on Agency in art. 99. This dealt with the situation in contract. Reference was also made to `Parties to an Action' by AV Dicey where under rule 83 it was pointed out that a servant cannot sue for a mere injury to a master. The general rule on enforcement of a contract by an agent is that the agency can only bring an action to enforce the contract in the name of the principal with the consent of the principal. The agent himself has no cause of action and no interest in the subject matter of the suit. See Campbell v Pye (1954) 54 SR (NSW) 308 at 309. The person whose right has been violated is the most appropriate person to bring the suit. See Gray v Pearson (1870) LR5CP568 at 574-576. An exception will arise where the agent is expressly authorised in the agency agreement to bring an action in his or her name in which case the agent can bring the action and be named as plaintiff. See Netage Pty Ltd v Cantley (1985) 6 IPR 200 at 212.
> [16] The cause of action in the present case is for economic loss being any diminution in the value of the lot holders undivided interest as tenants in common in the common property. Prima facie it is hard to see how, unless there is any special exception, an agent can sue for the benefit of loss claimed by a disclosed principle whether in tort or contract.
> [17] The very inclusion in the Act of section 227, confirms the basic underlying principle to which I refer. Section 227, in the case where on the face of the Act there is a clear agency relationship, creates an exception in respect of the common property. Section 228, which deals with a situation (damage to property comprised in a unit where there is danger to the support of other units) in which the other provisions of the Act do not provide for agency, creates the agency and provides the exception allowing the Owners Corporation to take proceedings.''

38. The Master gave weight to the inclusion of s 227 in the Management Act. Notwithstanding the preservation of other rights by s 226(1), the Master characterised the section as ``an exception in respect of the common property'' in the context of a ``clear agency relationship''.

39. Although an owners corporation suing as a trustee may not require the additional power conferred by s 227(2), nor indeed may a person choosing to sue the legal owner of title require statutory authority, it cannot be said that the matter covered by s 227(3) is unnecessary. That subsection has the effect of making a judgment or order enforceable against the owners, together with the provision in subs(4) for contribution between owners. This is a modification of the position at law.

40. Section 227 creates a specific statutory regime establishing a system of interconnected mutual rights and obligations, some of which would not exist at law. The inclusion of s 227 in the statutory scheme is not a basis for an inference that none of the matters to which it refers could exist at law.

41. The use of the word ``agent'' in s 20 is not of itself determinative of the nature of the relationship. As Lord Herschell observed in Kennedy v de Trafford [1897] AC 180 at 188: ``No word is more commonly and constantly abused than the word `agent'.'' This aphorism is frequently referred to with approval. (See the authorities collected in Pinkstone v R [2004] HCA 23 at footnote 34.)

42. In my opinion, the word ``agent'' in s 20 and s 24 is not used in the technical sense of the law of agency. The characterisation of the relationship for purposes of determining standing to sue turns on an assessment of the whole statutory scheme, including the powers and duties with respect to common property set out above. There is a tension between the use of the word ``agent'' and of the words ``beneficial interest'' in s 24(2). The fact that the statute vests title in the owners corporation is particularly significant.

In Carre v Owners Corporation — Strata Plan 53020 [2003] NSWSC 397; (2003) 58 Barrett J referred to the words ``beneficial interest'' in s 24(2) and said:

> ``[28]...The statute seems clearly enough to proceed on the footing that each proprietor of a lot is to be regarded as the equitable owner of an undivided interest as one of several tenants in common in the estate or interest of which the owners corporation is the legal owner....
> [29] It is clear from the statutory scheme that an owners corporation is in no sense the beneficial owner of common property. Its ownership is always in a representative capacity identified by the Act as that of `agent', with the lot proprietors, as the owners in equity of undivided interest of tenants in common, each identified as having a `beneficial interest'. The restrictions upon alienation and other dealings and the provisions with respect to repair, renewal and replacement proceed on the assumption that common property exists for the benefit of the lot proprietors as a general body.... As was observed in Houghton v Immer (No 55) Pty Ltd (1997) 44 NSWLR 46, by Handley JA (with whom Mason P and Beazley JA concurred), a provision that vests this common property in an owners corporation as `agent' for lot proprietors makes the proprietors equitable tenants in common.''

44. Gzell J said in Lin v The Owners — Strata Plan No 50276 [2004] NSWSC 88:

> ``[7] The notion of an agency in this context is odd. If common property is vested in the owners corporation for the benefit of the lot owners, one would expect the relationship to be that of trustee and beneficiary rather than that of agent and principal. That something more than the relationship of principal and agent was intended by the legislation was clear from the terms of the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1973, s 24(2) which spoke of the beneficial interest of a proprietor of a lot in the estate or interest in the common property held by the body corporate as agent for that proprietor.
> [8] It is not surprising, then, that the nature of the interest of a lot owner in the common property has been described as an equitable interest as a tenant in common with other lot owners (Houghton v Immer (No 155) Pty Ltd (1997) 44 NSWLR 46 at 56) and as a proprietary right (Young v Owners — Strata Plan No 3529 (2001) 54 NSWLR 60 at 46).''

45. I agree with these observations of Barrett J and Gzell J. It is not appropriate to characterise the statutory role of an owners' corporation solely in terms of an agency at common law.

46. The institutions of trust and agency are not mutually exclusive. It is a distinguishing characteristic of the former that a trustee, unlike an agent, must have trust property vested in it. Where an agent has actual title to property, then the agent will be a trustee, albeit one who is bound to follow the directions of the principal with respect to the property. (See Scott on Trusts (4th ed) Vol 1 p 95; Jacobs Law of Trusts in Australia (6th ed) 1997 par 210; Ford and Lee Principles of the Law of Trusts par 1200.)

47. The doctrine upon which the Respondent successfully relied before the Master is a rule applicable to contracts and is to the effect that, in the case of a disclosed principal, an agent cannot sue a third party on the contract. The Master applied this rule to the case of a tort on the basis that the cause of action was one for ``the diminution in the value of the lotholders undivided interest as tenant in common in the common property''. This does not accurately reflect the Appellant's pleading which particularises its loss as ``The diminution in value of the building and/or the cost of rectifying defects''.

48. In any event, inability to sue in contract does not determine whether the legal owner of property can sue with respect to damage to the property. In this regard, the statutory scheme does not suggest that the Appellant suffers from any incapacity. In my opinion, it should be treated as a trustee would be treated in this respect. Section 226(1) preserves any such right (see also Margiz Pty Ltd v Proprietors Strata Plan No 30234 (1993) 30 NSWLR 364 at 372), including the right of a trustee to sue in tort for damage to trust property. (See the authorities referred to in Young v Murphy [1996] 1 VR 279 at 290-291.)

49. As the legal owner, the owners corporation may sue in its own right. This was determined by Needham J in Proprietors of Strata Plan No 6522 v Furney (1976) 1 NSWLR 413 a decision under the Strata Titles Act 1973. Although s 147 (the equivalent of s 227) did not apply, the owners corporation nevertheless had standing to seek a declaration as legal owners of the common property on the basis of s 146 (now s 226). His Honour said at 414, after concluding that s 147 was not applicable:

> ``However, s 146(1) says: `Nothing in this Act derogates from any rights or remedies that a proprietor or mortgagee of a lot or body corporate may have in relation to any lot or the common property apart from this Act'. Under the Act the common property is vested in the body corporate by s 18 `for the estate or interest evidenced by the folio of the Register comprising the land the subject of that plan immediately before its registration'. Section 18(2) requires the Registrar-General to issue in the name of the body corporate a certificate of title of any common property in that strata plan.
> It seems to me that, as registered proprietor of the common property, the body corporate would have rights equivalent to the rights of any other registered proprietor to protect its interests or to have the Court declare the extent of its interest, the extent of its powers and liabilities. I think that s 146 protects the ordinary incidents which attach to the ownership of land registered under the Real Property Act 1900. One of those rights, it seems to me, is a right to approach the Court to make declarations under s 75 of the Supreme Court Act, 1970. Accordingly, I am of the opinion that these proceedings are competent, and that the Court is entitled to make orders which would declare the rights and responsibilities and liabilities of the plaintiff under its strata plan and under the Act.''

50. The Master distinguished this case on the basis that it was an application for a declaration. This does not appear to me to be a material point of distinction. Indeed, Needham J, as quoted, expressly referred to the right to a declaration as ``one of those rights'' which are an ordinary incident of ownership. The Appellant's pleading of duty, breach and damage, manifests another such incident.

51. The Respondent does not seek to uphold this aspect of the Master's reasons. The Respondent relied on the authorities on recovery for economic loss, particularly Bryan v Maloney [1995] HCA 17; (1995) 182 CLR 604 and Woolcock Street Investments Pty Ltd v CDG Pty Ltd [2004] HCA 16; (2004) 75 ALJR 628, for the propositions that the proprietors who purchased after the defects became manifest had no right of action and that the Appellant has suffered no loss. However, such issues as arise in this regard do so under the Respondent's denial of duty, breach and damage. They do not arise under the paragraphs ordered to be separately determined.

52. I propose the following orders:

1. Leave to appeal granted.
2. Appeal allowed.
3. The Respondent to pay the Appellant's costs of the separate question and the appeal.

(2004) LQCS ¶90-1221

Supreme Court of Queensland Court of Appeal

Judgment delivered 1 August 2003

Strata and Community titles — Community titles scheme Damage to common property — Statutory powers impacting upon repair work orders Jurisdiction of adjudicator Whether relief sought by lot owners was of a kind that an adjudicator could make Body Corporate Management Act 1997 (Qld), sec 87, 184, 223 and 227.

The appellants were the owners of a lot in a community titles scheme for a holiday unit complex at Surfers Paradise, Queensland. Under the scheme, the appellants held site management and letting rights for the complex. The respondent was the body corporate constituted under the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (the Act).

Before the trial Judge the appellants had sought:

> 1. A declaration that the respondent must, in compliance with its obligations under see 87(1) of the Act and the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 1997:
>
> > (a) maintain the roofing membrane and other external surfaces of the buildings of the body corporate so as to prevent the ingress of water into the premises of the body corporate;
> > (b) maintain the parapets along the boundary of the body corporate in good condition.
> 2. An injunction requiring the body corporate to forthwith carry out such work as was necessary to comply with its obligations under the declaration that was sought.

There was independent evidence that the building was in disrepair. In particular, there was evidence of water leaking in through the top of the building penetrating into some units and parts of the common property affecting, among other things, electrical fittings. The appellants, together with the owners of other lots in the scheme, were tenants in common in the common property including that part of it that was damaged. The appellants claimed that unfavourable publicity about the damage and the continuing problems caused by leaks and dampness had caused their business as on-site letting agents to suffer. They also asserted that, because the value of the building had declined, so had the value of their lot. An estimate, by an independent expert, of the total cost of putting the building in repair, including but not limited to remedying the water penetration, was $659,280.

The trial Judge dismissed the originating application for a declaration and an injunction against the respondent. The trial Judge concluded that she did not have jurisdiction to make either of the orders sought because, she held, an adjudicator appointed under Chapter 6 of the Act had exclusive jurisdiction to decide and grant a remedy in a dispute of the kind for which the application sought remedies.

Section 184 of the Act provided that:

> "(1) Subsection (2) applies to a dispute if an adjudicator may, under this chapter, make an order to resolve it.
> (2) The only remedy for the dispute is an order of
>
> > (a) an adjudicator; or
> > (b) a District Court on appeal from an adjudicator on a question of law.
> ..."

A dispute for the purpose of sec 184 was relevantly defined in subsec 182(1) as a dispute between the body corporate and the owner or occupier of a lot, a dispute between the body corporate and a service contractor for the scheme who is also a letting agent for the scheme or a dispute between the body corporate and a letting agent for the scheme. On at least two of those bases, this dispute was a dispute within the meaning of sec 184.

Section 223 of the Act provided that:

> ``(1) An adjudicator to whom the application for an order of an adjudicator is referred may make an order that is just and equitable in the circumstances (including a declaratory order) to resolve a dispute, in the context of a community titles scheme, about —
>
> > (a) a claimed or anticipated contravention of this Act or the community management statement;
> > ...
>
> (2) An order may require a person to act... in a way stated in the order.
>
> (3) Without limiting subsection (1) and (2), the adjudicator may, for example —
>
> > ...
> > (c) order the body corporate... to have repairs carried out;
> > ..."

Section 227 of the Act provided that:

``(1) If the adjudicator is satisfied that the applicant for the order has suffered damage to property because of a contravention of this Act or the community management statement, the adjudicator may order the person who the adjudicator believes, on reasonable grounds, to be responsible for the contravention —

(a) to carry out stated repairs, or have stated repairs carried out, to the damaged property; or
(b) to pay compensation of an amount fixed by the adjudicator.

(2) The order cannot be made if —

(a) for an order under subsection (1)(a) — the cost of carrying out the repairs is more than $75,000;
(b) for an order made under subsection (1)(b) — the amount of the compensation is more than $10,000."

The question before the Court on appeal was the principal question before the trial Judge; that is, whether the application sought remedies for a dispute of a kind the granting of remedies for which were within the exclusive jurisdiction of an adjudicator under the Act.

The appellants submitted that this case came within subsec 227(1) but, because the cost of carrying out repairs to the common property was substantially more than $75,000, the adjudicator had no jurisdiction to make such an order. The appellants also submitted that even if this case fell within the ambit of sec 223 of the Act, it was subject to the monetary limitation in subsec 227(2).

Held: appeal dismissed.

1. When in an Act a section confers power to do an act, which at the same time in this case also confers jurisdiction, it would be surprising to find in a later section the conferral of the same power, albeit together with the conferral of another power. It would be even more surprising to find, in the later section, that the power conferred by the earlier section is not only conferred once again but also expanded in one way and limited in another.

2. Where a breach is alleged to consist in the failure of the body corporate to maintain the roof membrane in good condition, sec 227 of the Act confers a power in the adjudicator, additional to the power already conferred to order repair of the membrane, to require the body corporate to make repairs to or to pay compensation in respect of damage to property of the owner or occupier in consequence of that failure. However, reading subsec 223(3)(c) and sec 227 together requires the conclusion that, just as damage to the property of a lot owner or occupier could not be the subject of an order made under subsec 223(3)(c), damage to the common property could not be the subject of an order for repair or compensation under sec 227.

3. Orders of the kind which the adjudicator is given power to make by subsec 223(3) are all orders with respect to matters which might be expected to arise in the administration of the affairs of the body corporate, including the obligation of the body corporate to maintain the common property in good condition. Orders which the adjudicator is given power to make under sec 227 are orders of a quite different kind. They are orders to remedy a civil wrong causing damage to property where that wrong arises out of a contravention of the Act or the community management statement. It is therefore unsurprising that the power conferred on an adjudicator to make orders of that kind should be limited.

Before: Davies, Jerrard and Mackenzie JJA.

Davies JA:

The application and appeal

1. This is an appeal against an order of a judge of the trial division on 25 November 2002 dismissing an originating application for a declaration and an injunction against the respondent. The respondent is the body corporate, constituted under the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (``the Act'') of a community titles scheme for a holiday unit complex at Surfers Paradise. The appellants are the owners of a lot in that community titles scheme and also, pursuant to the scheme, hold site management and letting rights for the complex. It is common ground that the Act in question in this appeal is the Act in the form in which it was prior to its amendment on 4 March 2003. The references herein to sections are references to the sections of the Act in that form.

2. The application to the learned primary judge sought:

> 1. a declaration that the respondent body corporate must in compliance with its obligations under s 87(1) of the Act and s 108 of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Accommodation Module) Regulation 1997 (``the Regulation''):

(a) maintain the roofing membrane and other external surfaces of the buildings of the body corporate so as to prevent the ingress of water into the premises of the body corporate;

(b) maintain the parapets along the boundary of the body corporate in good condition.

2. An injunction requiring the body corporate to forthwith carry out such work as is necessary to comply with its obligations under the declaration at 1 above.

3. The learned primary judge concluded that she did not have jurisdiction to make either of the orders sought because, she held, an adjudicator appointed under Chapter 6 of the Act had exclusive jurisdiction to decide and grant a remedy in a dispute of the kind for which the application sought remedies. Alternatively her Honour declined to proceed with the application because she held that the injunctive relief sought was of indefinite duration and imprecise as to its requirements such that a court would be loathe to supervise. Accordingly she dismissed the application.

4. The question before this Court, which was the principal question before her Honour, is whether the application sought remedies for a dispute of a kind the granting of remedies for which were within the exclusive jurisdiction of an adjudicator under the Act. In this Court the respondent did not seek to support her Honour's obiter conclusion, in the alternative, that there were, in any event, discretionary factors which would effectively preclude the court from granting the relief sought. Before turning to the above question, it is necessary to say something about the context in which it arose.

The relevant context

5. There is some independent evidence that the building is in some disrepair. In particular there is evidence of water leaking in through the top of the building penetrating into some units and parts of the common property affecting, amongst other things, electrical fittings. Whilst

I do not understand the appellants to assert that their unit was damaged they assert, correctly, that they are, together with the owners of other lots in the scheme, tenants in common in the common property including that part of it which was damaged.[1] They also assert that unfavourable publicity about the damage and the continuing problems caused by leaks and dampness has caused their business as on-site letting agents to suffer. And they assert that, because the value of the building has declined, so has the value of their lot. An estimate of the total cost of putting the building in repair, including but not limited to remedying the water penetration, by an independent expert is $659,280.

Relevant statutory provisions

6. Section 87(1)(c) of the Act requires the body corporate for a community titles scheme to carry out functions given to it under the Act and the community management statement. Subsection (2) requires it to act reasonably in anything it does under subsection (1). Section 108 of the Regulation provides:

``(1) The body corporate must maintain common property in good condition, including, to the extent that common property is structural in nature, in a structurally sound condition.

(2) To the extent that lots included in the scheme are created under a building format plan of subdivision, the body corporate must —

(a) maintain in good condition —

(i) railings, parapets and balustrades on (whether precisely, or for all practical purposes) the boundary of a lot and common property; and

(ii) doors, windows and associated fittings situated in a boundary wall separating a lot from common property; and

(iii) roofing membranes that are not common property but that provide protection for lots or common property; and

(b) maintain the following elements of scheme land that are not common property in a structurally sound condition —

(i) foundation structures;
(ii) roofing or other covering structures providing protection;
(iii) essential supporting framework, including load-bearing walls.

(3) Despite anything in subsections (1) and (2) —

(a) the body corporate is not responsible for maintaining fixtures or fittings installed by the occupier of a lot if they were installed for the occupier's own benefit; and
(b) the owner of the lot is responsible for maintaining utility infrastructure in good order and condition, to the extent that the utility infrastructure —

(i) relates only to supplying utility services to a particular lot; and
(ii) is 1 of the following types —

- hot-water systems
- washing machines
- clothes dryers
- another device providing a utility service of a domestic nature to a lot.

(4) To avoid doubt, it is declared that, despite an obligation the body corporate may have under subsection (2) to maintain a part of a lot in good condition or in a structurally sound condition, the body corporate is not prevented from recovering an amount of damages from a person (whether or not the owner of the lot) whose actions cause or contribute to damage or deterioration of the part of the lot."

7. Section 184 of the Act headed ``Exclusivity of dispute resolution provisions",[2] relevantly provides:

``(1) Subsection (2) applies to a dispute if an adjudicator may, under this chapter, make an order to resolve it.

(2) The only remedy for the dispute is an order of —

(a) an adjudicator; or
(b) a District Court on appeal from an adjudicator on a question of law.

..."

8. A dispute for the purposes of s 184 is relevantly defined in s 182(1) as a dispute between the body corporate and the owner or occupier of a lot, a dispute between the body corporate and a service contractor for the scheme who is also a letting agent for the scheme or a dispute between the body corporate and a letting agent for the scheme. It is plain that, at least on two of those bases, this dispute is a dispute within the meaning of s 184.

9. Among the orders which an adjudicator may make to resolve a dispute pursuant to Chapter 6 of the Act, the Chapter referred to in s 184, are those in s 223 and s 227. Section 223 relevantly provides:

``(1) An adjudicator to whom the application for an order of an adjudicator is referred may make an order that is just and equitable in the circumstances (including a declaratory order) to resolve a dispute, in the context of a community titles scheme, about —

(a) a claimed or anticipated contravention of this Act or the community management statement;

(2) An order may require a person to act... in a way stated in the order.

(3) Without limiting subsections (1) and (2), the adjudicator may, for example —

(c) order the body corporate... to have repairs carried out;
..."

10. Section 227 provides:

``(1) If the adjudicator is satisfied that the applicant for the order has suffered damage to property because of a contravention of this Act or the community management statement, the adjudicator may order the person who the adjudicator believes, on reasonable grounds, to be responsible for the contravention —

(a) to carry out stated repairs, or have stated repairs carried out, to the damaged property; or
(b) to pay compensation of an amount fixed by the adjudicator.

(2) The order cannot be made if —

(a) for an order under subsection (1)(a) — the cost of carrying out the repairs is more than $75 000; or
(b) for an order made under subsection (1)(b) — the amount of the compensation is more than $10 000.''

Whether the Act, on its face, gives the adjudicator exclusive jurisdiction to resolve this dispute

11. This was plainly a dispute in respect of which an adjudicator may make an order under Chapter 6 within the meaning of s 184. It was, at the very least, both a dispute between the body corporate and the owner of a lot included in the scheme and a dispute between the body corporate and a letting agent for the scheme. In the end, the only questions in issue in this appeal are whether the order which an adjudicator may make to resolve this dispute is one pursuant to s 223 or one pursuant to s 227; or whether the adjudicator may make such an order under either section.

12. Section 184 does not speak in terms, specifically, of jurisdiction to hear and decide but in terms of providing a remedy. However I think its plain intention[3] is that the adjudicator is to have exclusive jurisdiction to make orders of the kind which the Act prescribes, relevantly in s 223 and s 227, in disputes of the kind to which s 182 refers, subject to any statutory exception or limitation.[4] Mr Savage SC, for the appellants did not argue to the contrary.

13. It was submitted by Mr Savage SC that s 227, at least indirectly, provided such a limitation which effectively excluded the adjudicator's jurisdiction in this case. The submission was that this case came within s 227(1) but, because the cost of carrying out repairs to the common property was substantially more than $75,000, the adjudicator had no jurisdiction to make such order. It was submitted that even if this case also came within s 223, it was subject to the limitation in s 227(2). Accordingly, it was submitted, the court had jurisdiction in the matter.

14. The critical question, on the appellants' argument, is whether the relief which the appellants seek, which is, effectively as Mr Savage SC concedes, an order that the respondent repair the roof membrane, is an order of a kind which, subject to the exception contained in s 227(2), an adjudicator could make under s 227. That question, in turn, depends on whether ``damage to property'' in s 227(1) includes, where the applicant is a lot owner, damage to the roof membrane.

15. Section 227 was not necessary to enable the adjudicator to order a body corporate to have repairs to the roof membrane carried out. Section 87(1) of the Act and s 108(1) and s

108(2)(a)(iii) of the Regulation required a body corporate to maintain it in good condition; and an order requiring the body corporate to have repairs carried out, in compliance with that obligation, was an order which the adjudicator was empowered to make, under s 223(3)(c), in any dispute coming within s 184. So much was accepted by Mr Savage SC. However he submitted that an order requiring the body corporate to repair the roof membrane would also be an order made under s 227 and consequently that it would be subject to the limitation contained in s 227(2).

16. There can be no doubt that s 227 confers jurisdiction on an adjudicator to make an order to carry out stated repairs or to pay compensation which would not be an order of a kind which could be made under s 223(3)(c). An example of such an order is given in the example contained in s 227(1)[5] which is in the following terms:

> ``A waterproofing membrane in the roof of a building in the scheme leaks and there is damage to wallpaper and carpets in a lot included in the scheme. The membrane is part of the common property and the leak results from a failure on the part of the body corporate to maintain it in good order and condition, the adjudicator could, on the application of the lot's owner, order the body corporate to have the damage repaired or to pay appropriate compensation."

The damage referred to in the example is plainly the damage to the wallpaper and carpets in the lot. Mr Savage SC did not contend that an order of the kind envisaged in the example could be made under s 223(3)(c).

17. If Mr Savage SC's submission is correct, s 227 would apply, not only in the case of damage to the separate property of a lot owner or of the occupier of a lot, but to damage to the common property falling within the power to order repair already conferred by s 223(3)(c). It would also, on that submission, both expand that power (by the power to order compensation for damage in s 227(1)(b)) and limit it (by s 227(2)). And it would do so without any reference to s 223(3)(c). In my opinion that would be a surprising result.

18. It would be surprising for two reasons. The first is that when, in an Act, a section confers power to do an act, which at the same time in this case also confers jurisdiction, it would be surprising to find, in a later section, the conferral of the same power, albeit together with the conferral of another power. And the second is that it would be even more surprising to find, in the later section, that the power conferred by the earlier section is not only conferred once again but also expanded in one way and limited in another. If s 227 can be given a sensible construction which does not have those effects I think it should be given that construction.

19. In my opinion s 227 can be given such sensible construction, having as its purpose the conferral on an adjudicator of a limited power, additional to those already conferred, to provide remedies, including one of compensation, to a lot owner or occupier whose property has been damaged by a contravention of the Act or the community management statement. So, in a case like the present where the breach is alleged to consist in the failure of the body corporate to maintain the roof membrane in good condition, s 227 confers a power in the adjudicator, additional to the power already conferred to order repair of the membrane, to require the body corporate to make repairs to or to pay compensation in respect of damage to property of the owner or occupier in consequence of that failure. But in my opinion, reading s 223(3)(c) and s 227 together requires the conclusion that, just as damage to the property of a lot owner or occupier could not be the subject of an order made under s 223(3)(c), damage to the common property could not be the subject of an order for repair or compensation under s 227.

20. It was submitted by Mr Savage SC that such a construction would have the curious result of conferring on an adjudicator under s 223(3)(c) a power to make an order, unlike other orders of the kind which can be made under s 223(3), which may involve expenditure of substantial money, as it seems in this case; whereas orders which can be made under s 227 are limited in amount to $75,000 for repairs and $10,000 for compensation. I do not find that curious. Orders of the kind which the adjudicator is given power to make by s 223(3) are all orders with respect to matters which might be expected to arise in the administration of the affairs of the body corporate including the obligation of the body corporate to maintain the common property in good condition. Orders which the adjudicator is given power to make under s 227 are orders of a quite different kind. They are orders to remedy a civil wrong causing damage to property where that wrong arises out of a contravention of the Act or the community management statement. In this respect they trespass into the field ordinarily occupied by the common law. It is therefore unsurprising, it seems to me, that the power which is conferred on an adjudicator to make orders of that kind should be limited in amount.

21. As I understand his submissions, Mr Savage SC did not contend that, if s 227(1) did not also permit the making of an order to repair the roof membrane, of the kind which could be made under s 223(3)(c), s 227(2) would apply to limit any such order. Nor do I think that any such contention would be open. Section 227(2), in terms, refers to an order made under s 227(1).

2. For those reasons, in my opinion, the learned primary judge was correct in making the order which she did and this appeal must be dismissed.

Orders

1. Appeal dismissed.

2. That the appellants pay the respondent its costs of the appeal to be assessed.

Jerrard JA: I have read the reasons for judgment of Davies JA and the orders he proposes and I respectfully agree with those.

Supreme Court of New South Wales

Judgment delivered 28 October 2003

Strata titles — Appeal from adjudicator's decision — Appeal from interim Tribunal decision — Admissibility of further evidence — Relevance of admissibility issue to question before Tribunal — Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW), sec 140, 181 and 186.

The defendants were the owners of a lot in a strata plan comprising 64 lots and they wished to make alterations to their lot. The question of the making of the proposed alterations was considered at an Extraordinary General Meeting of the plaintiff owners corporation and the motion was overwhelmingly defeated. The end result was that it was not specially resolved to make the proposed additional by-law. This was treated as a refusal of consent to the proposed alterations.

Subsequently, an adjudication took place under the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW) (the Act). The defendants put before the adjudicator certain expert material (four documents) that came into being after the meeting. Three of those documents did not come to the attention of the plaintiff until after the adjudicator had made his decision. Accordingly, the plaintiff was not afforded an opportunity to put its case in relation to that material. It was not in dispute between the parties that the adjudicator took this material into account in reaching his decision.

The adjudicator found that the refusal of the plaintiff to the defendant's proposal was unreasonable. He then made orders pursuant to sec 140 of the Act. Under sec 140(1) of the Act, an adjudicator can order an owners corporation to consent to work proposed to be carried out by an owner if the adjudicator considers that the owners corporation has unreasonably refused its consent.

The plaintiff appealed and the Consumer, Trader and Tenancy Tribunal was asked to set aside the decision that was made by the adjudicator. This relief was sought on grounds that asserted that the plaintiff did not unreasonably refuse consent.

The plaintiff sought directions for the filing of two expert reports that were not available at the time the plaintiff refused the defendants' alteration application. The defendants opposed the admissibility of such expert evidence and the Tribunal made an interim finding to the effect that there could not be reliance upon this additional expert evidence.

The plaintiff commenced proceedings in the Supreme Court of New South Wales seeking to appeal against the Tribunal's interim finding. However, the plaintiff could not bring an appeal unless leave to do so was first granted.

In relation to the expert evidence, the plaintiff relied upon sec 181 of the Act that enables a Tribunal to admit new evidence. The plaintiff also relied upon sec 186(2) of the Act that provides:

> ``In any such investigation or in any proceedings before it for an order, the Tribunal:
> (a) is not bound by the rules of evidence and may inform itself on any matter in such manner as it thinks fit, and
> (b) must act according to equity, good conscience and the substantial merits of the case without regard to technicalities or legal forms."

The plaintiff contended that the jurisdiction of the Tribunal was to conduct a review on the merits of the question of whether the defendants should be allowed to carry out the proposed alterations. The defendants argued that the appeal was limited to the question that was before the adjudicator.

Held: application for leave to appeal refused.

1. What is before the Tribunal is an appeal from the adjudication. The relief sought by the plaintiff in the appeal was the setting aside of the decision of the adjudicator. The relief was sought on the basis that the plaintiff did not unreasonably refuse its consent.

2. The plaintiff may well have a good case for the setting aside of the adjudicator's decision on the basis that he took into account extraneous material and that he did not afford procedural fairness. These matters remain for determination by the Tribunal.

3. The additional expert evidence sought to be relied on by the plaintiff was not relevant to the question before the Tribunal. Accordingly, the plaintiff failed to satisfy the Court that there was error made in respect to the interim finding. This decision means that the appeal must fail. Therefore, it would be futile to grant leave to appeal.

Malpass M: These proceedings were commenced by Summons filed on 9 May 2003. The plaintiff seeks to bring an appeal against an interim finding made by the Consumer, Trader and Tenancy Tribunal (the Tribunal). The finding was as follows:

> ``1. The applicant is not entitled to rely on additional expert evidence which was not available to the owners corporation at the time of it refusing the respondent's application to carry out certain alterations to the common property."

The finding was made at a directions hearing held in an appeal brought to the Tribunal against an order made by an adjudicator. The plaintiff had sought directions for the filing of two expert reports which were then being obtained. The defendants opposed the admissibility of such expert evidence.

2. It is common ground that an appeal lies by way of leave where there is error of law. By consent, the application for leave and the appeal itself were heard together.

3. The defendants are the owners of Lot 14 in the relevant Strata Plan. There are 64 lots. The building is known as Gainsborough. It is at Kirribilli.

4. The defendants wish to make alterations to their lot. The question of the making of the proposed alterations was considered at an Extraordinary General Meeting of the plaintiff held on 7 August 2002. The motion was overwhelmingly defeated. The end result was that it was not specially resolved to make the proposed additional by-law. This has been treated as a refusal of consent to the proposed alterations.

5. A request was made for an order by an adjudicator pursuant to Pt 4 Div 1 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (the Act), (which is headed ``General power of Adjudicator to make orders") and subsequently an adjudication took place.

6. The defendants put before the adjudicator certain expert material (four documents) which came into being after the meeting. Three of those documents did not come to the attention of the plaintiff until after the adjudicator had made his decision. Accordingly, it was not afforded an opportunity to put its case in relation to that material. It is not in dispute between the parties that the adjudicator took this material into account in reaching his decision.

7. The adjudicator found that the refusal of the plaintiff to the defendant's proposal was unreasonable. He then made orders pursuant to s 140 of the Act.

8. The plaintiff then brought an appeal pursuant to Pt 4 Div 12 of the Act (which is headed ``Appeals against orders of Adjudicator"). The Tribunal was asked to set aside the decision that was made by the adjudicator. This relief was sought on grounds which asserted that the plaintiff did not unreasonably refuse consent.

9. Subsequent to the making of the interim finding in that appeal, the plaintiff brought the proceedings in this Court. The plaintiff cannot bring an appeal unless leave to do so is first granted.

10. Before determining whether or not leave should be granted, it is convenient to first look at the question of the merits of the proposed appeal. This is a question that has been argued at some length and has seen the court being taken to various provisions of the Act and certain decided cases (including Paris v The Owners Strata Plan 16973 [1998] NSWSSB 12; Chomyn v Owners Corporation SP 14801 [2001] NSWRT 194 and McCann v The Owners SP 11318 [1998] NSWSSB 44).

11. The orders that may be made by an adjudicator in relation to property are set forth in s 140. For present purposes subs (1) thereof is the relevant provision. It enables an adjudicator to order an Owners Corporation to consent to work proposed to be carried out by an owner if the adjudicator considers that the Owners Corporation has unreasonably refused its consent.

12. In my view, this provision makes it clear that the question for determination by the adjudicator in the present case was whether or not he considered that the Owners Corporation had unreasonably refused its consent.

13. It seems to me that that is a question which falls to be determined having regard to the state of affairs in existence at the time of the refusal of consent. In considering that question, regard should not be had to material that came subsequently into existence. The taking into account of the subsequent material would involve the adjudicator in embarking on a fresh consideration in the light of material that was not before the decision maker. The adjudicator would not then be addressing the relevant question.

14. It is common ground that appeals against orders made by the Tribunal are governed by Part 5 Division 3 of the Act and not the appellate provisions contained in the Consumer, Trader and Tenancy Tribunal Act 2001.

15. For present purposes, the plaintiff places stress on provisions contained in ss 181 and 186 of the Act. Section 181 enables the Tribunal to admit new evidence. Section 186 contains inter alia the following provisions:

> ``186. Investigations and proceedings before the Tribunal
> (1) Before making an order (except an order for a stay of proceedings), the Tribunal must
> [140394]
>
> [140394]
> investigate the application for the order or, in the case of an appeal, the grounds for the appeal.
> (2) In any such investigation or in any proceedings before it for an order, the Tribunal:
>
> (a) is not bound by the rules of evidence and may inform itself on any matter in such manner as it thinks fit, and
> (b) must act according to equity, good conscience and the substantial merits of the case without regard to technicalities or legal forms.
> (3) The Tribunal need not hold a hearing in order to decide an application or appeal unless there is an appearance by a person entitled or required to appear before it.
> (4) A hearing need not be formal."

16. Considerable argument has been devoted to questions touching on the nature of the appeal before the Tribunal. For the purposes of this case, it does not seem to me to be necessary to embark on a determination of all these matters.

17. It is common ground that it is an appeal de novo. What that means may be the subject of debate. The plaintiff sees this appeal as being wider in scope than the adjudication. It contends that the jurisdiction of the Tribunal is to conduct a review on the merits of the question of whether or not the defendants should be allowed to carry out the proposed alterations. The defendants say that this appeal is limited to the question that was before the adjudicator.

18. In my view, the latter approach is the correct one. What is before the Tribunal is an appeal from the adjudication. The relief sought by the plaintiff in the appeal was the setting aside of the decision of the adjudicator. This relief was sought on the basis that the plaintiff did not unreasonably refuse its consent.

19. It seems to me that the question which is the subject of the appeal in this case is determinative of the ambit of the evidence that may be placed before the Tribunal.

20. The Tribunal has a discretionary power to admit new evidence. This is a power exercised having regard to the issues that are before it and the other particular circumstances of the case.

21. Appellate and reviewing bodies usually have a power to admit further evidence (either expressly or by implication). There is a body of case law dealing with the question of what may be received.

22. The plaintiff relies on observations to be found in McCann. They relate inter alia to the provisions of s 186. They were said to reflect a change in approach to that taken in the earlier decisions of Paris and Chomyn (which had been followed by the Tribunal).

23. It does not seem to me that such is the case. Be that as it may, the provisions of s 186 make it clear that investigation must take place before the making of an order and that a hearing must be had where there is the requisite appearance.

24. Subsection (2) of s 186 enunciates how the Tribunal may or must apply itself in the course of dealing with the appeal before it.

25. The defendants concede that the fresh material should not have been placed before the adjudicator and that to such extent his decision is thereby flawed. The plaintiff may well have a good case for the setting aside of the adjudicator's decision on the basis that he took into account extraneous material and that he did not afford procedural fairness. I say no more on these matters as they remain for determination by the Tribunal.

26. As earlier said, I am of the view that the additional expert evidence sought to be relied on by the plaintiff was not relevant to the question before the Tribunal. Accordingly, the plaintiff has failed to satisfy the court that there was error made in respect to the interim finding.

27. This decision means that the appeal must fail. Therefore, it would be futile to grant leave.

28. The prospects of the granting of leave are also beset by other problems. The finding made by the Tribunal came at an early stage in the appellate process and was restricted to a question of the admissibility of evidence. Instead of bringing the present proceedings, it was open to the plaintiff to bring an appeal on all grounds after the Tribunal had made its final decision.

29. A large body of appellate work comes to this Court both from the Tribunal and other bodies. It is experiencing great difficulty in handling the present volume of work. The volume has been increasing and is expected to continue to do so unless legislative changes are made. In this context, the court is loath to exacerbate these problems by granting leave to appeal on interim questions or questions concerning rulings on the admissibility of evidence during the conduct of an appeal.

30. The application for leave is refused. The Summons is dismissed. The plaintiff is to pay the costs of the proceedings. The Exhibit may be returned.

THE OWNER — STRATA PLAN NO 43551 v WALTER CONSTRUCTION GROUP LTD

Court citation: [2003] NSWSC 1177

Supreme Court of New South Wales

Judgment delivered 12 December 2003

Strata titles — Practice and procedure— Owners corporations — Limitations on owners corporations' standing to sue for defects in common property — Application and scope of sec 62 and 227 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996.

The plaintiff was the owners corporation in respect of a building in Sydney, New South Wales, that was constituted in 1993 upon registration of a strata plan. The common property in that plan vested in the plaintiff as agent for the lot owners as tenants in common. There were 52 lots in the strata plan.

The plaintiff claimed that the defendant builder carried out the construction works of the building under a contract with the developer. The plaintiff further claimed that the defendant builder owed it, as holder of the common property, a duty to exercise reasonable care in the carrying out of the construction works. The plaintiff claimed that the defendant builder breached the said duty of care by failing to carry out the construction works in a proper and workman-like manner. The plaintiff claimed that as a consequence of such breach it had suffered and continued to suffer loss and damage, being the diminution in value of the building and/or the cost of rectifying the defects.

By 2 November 1994 at the latest, at least some of the defects had become manifest and made the subject of demands by the plaintiff's solicitor (acting at that stage for all the lot owners as well) on the defendant builder and the then Building Services Corporation. Of the 52 lots in the strata, 29 were sold after 2 November 1994. By its judgment of 5 November 2001, the Fair Trading Tribunal ruled that the remaining pleaded defects (with the exception of recently pleaded defects in respect of fire services) related to those notified on or before 2 November 1994.

Section 62(1) of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW) (the Management Act) provides that:

> ``An owners corporation must properly maintain and keep in a state of good and serviceable repair the common property and any personal property vested in the owners corporation.''

Section 226(1) of the Management Act provides that:

> ``Nothing in this Act derogates from any rights or remedies that an owner, mortgagee or chargee of a lot or an owners corporation or covenant chargee may have in relation to any lot or the common property apart from this Act.''

Section 227(2) of the Management Act provides:

> ``If the owners of the lots in a strata scheme are jointly entitled to take proceedings against any person or are liable to have proceedings taken against them jointly, the proceedings may be taken by or against the owners corporation.''

The defendant builder submitted that the owners corporation holds the common property as agent for individual lot holders and, unless there is some special provision providing to the contrary, the lot holders as disclosed principals are the only persons entitled to sue for damage to the interest of the lot holder in the common property.

An owners corporation of a strata scheme, according to the defendant builder's submissions, can only bring proceedings in respect of the common property where all lot owners of the strata scheme are jointly entitled to take the proceedings. The defendant builder's submissions pointed to the fact that 29 lot owners would not have a cause of action (assuming a duty) against it because they purchased their lots after the defects had become manifest. The defendant builder further submitted that a special exception did not apply and that the owners corporation was not the proper plaintiff.

The plaintiff submitted that the owners corporation has both standing and power to bring proceedings in respect of damage to the common property in its own name outside sec 227 of the Management Act. Alternatively, the plaintiff submitted that sec 227 of the Management Act did not require all lot owners to be jointly entitled in order for the owners corporation to have standing to bring proceedings in respect of a lesser number of the owners.

The plaintiff submitted that, according to the rules of statutory interpretation, the reference to ``owners of the lots'' could be taken as a reference to the singular ``lot owner'' and submitted that it is sufficient for one lot owner to be entitled, or two or more to be entitled jointly, to bring an action.

The plaintiff submitted that the obligations to maintain and repair the common property of the strata scheme included, if necessary, the commencement of proceedings against the builder of the strata plan in respect of building defects in the common property of the strata scheme. Thus, the plaintiff submitted that the owners corporation's duty under sec 62 of the Management Act to maintain the common property of the strata scheme meant that the owners corporation suffered economic loss by way of the cost of rectification of defective common property as a result of the defendant builder's breach of duty of care.

Held: the lot holders are necessary parties for the purposes of the proceedings.

1. The relevant lot holders are necessary parties and will need to be joined as plaintiffs to the extent that they wish to make a claim.

2. The cause of action was for economic loss being any diminution in the value of the lot holders' undivided interest as tenants in common in the common property. Prima facie it is hard to see how, unless there is any special exception, an agent can sue for the benefit of loss claimed by a disclosed principal whether in tort or contract. The very inclusion in the Management Act of sec 227 confirms this basic underlying principle.

3. Section 227 of the Management Act seems to be specifically aimed at allowing owners corporations to take proceedings when in accordance with the general law they would not normally be so entitled.

4. The plantiff's submission that the the reference to ``owners of the lots'' in section 227 of the Management Act can be taken as a reference to the singular ``lot owner'' was not supported.

5. An owners corporation has a variety of powers to raise funds or use existing funds for the purpose of complying with its duty under sec 62 of the Management Act to maintain the common property in good repair. Given its ability to fund repairs in different ways, it is hard to see how it suffers economic loss as a result of its duty to repair.

6. The lot holders are the disclosed principals and are necessary parties to sue in respect of damage to their individual beneficial interest in the common property.

Macready M: This is the hearing of a separate question in these proceedings. A judge of the court has referred to me the hearing of the separate question which is the issue pleaded in paragraphs 15 to 26 of the amended defence the statement of claim. Shortly described the issue is:

> ``Does the plaintiff, as an owners Corporation, have standing to sue in its own name in respect of the alleged defects to the common property?''

The nature of the proceedings

2. The defendant's submissions that I will adopt with some alterations conveniently summarise the proceedings.

3. The plaintiff is the Owners Corporation in respect of the building 17-25 Spring Street Bondi, New South Wales (the Building). It was constituted on 30 March 1993 upon registration of the Strata Plan No. 43551 (the ``Strata Plan''). By ss 18(1) and 20 of the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development ) Act (the ``Development Act''), upon registration of the Strata Plan, the common property in that plan vests in the plaintiff as agent for the lot owners as tenants in common.

4. The plaintiff pleads that the defendant carried out the construction works of the Building pursuant to a contract with San Kuei Pty Limited (the Developer). It is further pleaded that the defendant owed the plaintiff, as ``holder'' of the common property under the strata legislation, a duty to exercise reasonable care in the carrying out of the construction works. It is alleged that the defendant breached the said duty of care by failing to carry out the construction works, inter alia, in a proper and workmanlike manner.

5. It is then pleaded that as a consequence of such breach the plaintiff has suffered and continues to suffer loss and damage, being the diminution in value of the Building and/or the cost of rectifying the defects.

6. Accordingly, the case is one of an alleged duty to take care said to be owed by a builder to an owners corporation as ``holder'' of the common property to prevent economic loss in respect of alleged defective building work where no contract exists between the parties.

7. The evidence discloses the following:

(a) There are 52 lots in the Strata Plan;
(b) By 2 November 1994, at the latest, (the defendant contending for an earlier date in respect of its statute of limitations defence) at least some of the defects pleaded had become manifest and made the subject of demands by the plaintiff's solicitor (acting at that stage for all the lot owners as well) on the defendant and the then Building Services Corporation;

(c) By its judgment of 5 November 2001, the Fair Trading Tribunal ruled that the remaining pleaded defects (with the exception of recently pleaded defects in respect of fire services) related to those notified on or before 2 November 1994.
(d) 29 of the 52 lots have been sold since 2 November 1994.

The principal submissions

8. The defendant's submissions were that the Owners Corporation holds the common property as agent for the individual Lot holders. Unless there is some special provision providing to the contrary, the lot holders as disclosed principals are the only persons entitled to sue for damage to the interest of the lot holder in the common property.

9. The only provision to the contrary is section 227 of the Strata Scheme Management Act 1996 (``the Management Act''). The section is in the following terms:

``227 Owners Corporation may represent owners in certain proceedings

(1) This section applies to proceedings in relation to common property.
(2) If the owners of the lots in a strata scheme are jointly entitled to take proceedings against any person or are liable to have proceedings taken against them jointly, the proceedings may be taken by or against the Owners Corporation.
(3) Any judgment or order given or made in favour of or against the owners corporation in any such proceeding has effect as if it were a judgment or order given or made in favour of or against the owners.''

10. An Owners Corporation of the strata scheme, according to the defendant's submissions, can thus only bring proceedings in respect of the common property where all lot owners of the strata scheme are jointly entitled to take the proceedings.

11. The defendant's submissions point to the fact that the 29 lot owners will not have a cause of action (assuming a duty) against the builder because they have purchased their lots after the defects have become manifest — ie reasonably discoverable on inspection. See Bryan v Maloney (1995) 182 CLR 609 at 630 and 665; Woollahra Municipal Council v Sved (1996) 40 NSWLR 101 at 139; Goulding v Kirby [2002] NSWCA 393 at para [19] and [21] and Proprietors Unit Plan No 95198 v Jiniess Pty Ltd [2000] NTSC 89 at 116-123.

12. It follows in the defendant's submissions that therefore the special exception does not apply and that the Owners Corporation is not the proper plaintiff.

13. The plaintiff's submissions were that the Owners Corporation has both standing and power to bring proceedings in respect of damage to the common property in its own name outside section 227 of the Management Act. Alternatively it says that section 227 of the Management Act does not require all lot owners to be jointly entitled in order for the Owners Corporation to have standing to bring proceedings in respect of a lesser number of the owners.

The owners Corporation as agent for the Lot holders

14. This requires a consideration of the Development Act and the Management Act. In Carre v Owners Corporation — SP 53020 (2003) NSW Titles Cases ¶80-079; (2003) NSW SC 397 Barrett J had to consider whether the Owners Corporation was a necessary party to proceedings. He conveniently and felicitously spelt out the various provisions of the act that indicated the agency between the Owners Corporation and the Lot holders. In paragraphs 28 and 29 he described the relationship in these terms:

``28 At this point, I pause to examine more closely the scheme of the strata titles legislation. I have already mentioned s. 11(1) of the Strata Schemes Management Act which causes the owners of the lots from time to time in a strata scheme to constitute a body corporate and s.18(1) of the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act which causes common property in a strata plan to vest in the body corporate upon the registration of the plan. I have not, however, referred to the way in which an owners corporation holds common property. In a case such as the present, where different persons are the proprietors of lots, the estate or interest in common property vested in the owners corporation is held by it `as agent... for those proprietors as tenants in common in shares proportional to the unit entitlements of their respective lots': s.20(b). Each such proprietor accordingly has what s.24(2) calls a `beneficial interest' in the estate or interest of the Owners Corporation in the common property. The statute seems clearly enough to proceed on the footing that each proprietor of a lot is to be regarded as the equitable owner of an undivided interest as one of several tenants in common in the estate or interest of which the Owners Corporation is the legal owner. Section 21 renders common property incapable of being dealt with except in accordance with the Act. Section 24(2) makes a lot proprietor's beneficial interest in the estate or interest in common property held by the Owners Corporation incapable of being `severed from, or dealt with except in conjunction with, the lot'. The Owners Corporation has a limited power to deal with common property in certain ways pursuant to a `special resolution' passed at a general meeting of the Owners Corporation, but only in the circumstances expressly provided: see ss.25, 26 and 27. Under s.62 of the Strata Schemes Management Act, an Owners Corporation is obliged to maintain common property, to keep it in repair and to renew or replace `any fixtures or fittings comprised in the common property'.

29 It is clear from this statutory scheme that an Owners Corporation is in no sense the beneficial owner of common property. Its ownership is always in a representative capacity identified by the Act as that of `agent', with the lot proprietors, as the owners in equity of undivided interests as tenants in common, each identified as having a `beneficial interest'. The restrictions upon alienation and other dealings and the provisions with respect to repair, renewal and replacement proceed on the assumption that common property exists for the benefit of the lot proprietors as a general body. While the legislation makes provision for a particular lot proprietor to be granted special rights in relation to common property, there is no suggestion in the present case that Ms Carre has been granted any such rights in respect to so much of the common property as is said to form part of the air conditioning system serving her lot. As was observed in Houghton v Immer (No 55) Pty Ltd (1998) NSW Titles Cases ¶ 80-048; (1997) 44 NSWLR 46 by Handley JA (with whom Mason P and Beazley JA concurred), a provision that vests common property in an Owners Corporation as `agent' for lot proprietors makes the proprietors equitable tenants in common."

15. In support of the proposition that in the case of a disclosed principal an agent cannot sue on behalf of his principal reference was made to the principles referred to in Bowsted and Reynolds on Agency in art. 99. This dealt with the situation in contract. Reference was also made to ``Parties to an Action" by A V Dicey where under rule 83 it was pointed out that a servant cannot sue for a mere injury to master. The general rule on enforcement of a contract by an agent is that the agent can only bring an action to enforce the contract in the name of the principal with the consent of the principal. The agent himself has no cause of action and no interest in the subject matter of the suit. See Campbell v Pye (1954) 54 SR (NSW) 308 at 309. The person whose right has been violated is the most appropriate person to bring the suit. See Gray v Pearson (1870) LR5CP568 at 574 & 576. An exception will arise where the agent is expressly authorised in the agency agreement to bring an action in his or her name in which case the agent can bring the action and be named as plaintiff. See Netage Pty Ltd v Cantley (1985) 6 IPR 200 at 212.

16. The cause of action in the present case is for economic loss being any diminution in the value of the lot holders undivided interest as tenant in common in the common property. Prima facie it is hard to see how, unless there is any special exception, an agent can sue for the benefit of loss claimed by a disclosed principal whether in tort or contract.

17. The very inclusion in the Act of section 227, confirms the basic underlying principle to which I refer. Section 227, in the case where on the face of the Act there is a clear agency relationship, creates an exception in respect of the common property. Section 228, which deals with a situation (damage to property comprised in a unit where there is danger to the support of other units) in which the other provisions of the Act do not provide for agency, creates the agency and provides the exception allowing the Owners Corporation to take proceedings.

The exception in section 227 of the Management Act

18. It is immediately noticeable upon a consideration of section 227 that it is expressed to apply to proceedings in relation to common property. As has been pointed out above the beneficial ownership of the common property resides in the Lot holders. The section seems to be specifically aimed at allowing the Owners Corporation to take proceedings when in accordance with the general law they would not normally be so entitled.

19. Unfortunately in New South Wales the provisions and its predecessor, section 147 in the Strata Titles Act 1973, contain a specific limitation on power. That limitation on its face is very clear and it is only where all the owners of the lots are jointly entitled to take proceedings that the Owners Corporation may take proceedings for them.

20. The plaintiff submits that, according to the rules of statutory interpretation, the reference to ``lot owners'' can be taken as a reference to the singular ``lot owner'' and submits that the correct reading of the section is that it is sufficient for one lot owner to be entitled, or two or more to be entitled jointly, to bring an action. Such rules are subject to any express contrary intention. The plaintiff relies on the decision in Singapore in Management Corporation Strata Title Plan No 1938 v Goodview Properties P/L [2000] 4 SLR 576.

21. The decision in that case was, relevantly, that it was not necessary for all of the proprietors to act jointly for there to be a valid action brought against the developers for defective work to common property. 24 of the 615 proprietors were entitled to sue and wished to proceed; the Singaporean Court of Appeal found that number to be sufficient. The statutory provisions relevant to that decision, while similar to section 227 and with, I think, the same intention, differ in an important way from the NSW legislation. While section 227 provides that the Owners Corporation may bring an action ``if the owners of the lots are jointly entitled to bring proceedings'', the Singaporean provision (s 116 of the Land Titles

(Strata) Act (Cap 158, 1999 Ed) is that the ``management corporation'' may bring an action ``where all or some of the subsidiary proprietors of the lots... are jointly entitled'' (my emphasis). (See also Disa Sim, Expanding tort claims in construction cases: Time to contract?, (2003) 11 Tort L Rev 38 at 38-39). The words ``all or some'' are not in the NSW legislation and the Singaporean decision does not support the construction for which the plaintiff contends.

22. Of interest is the court's description of the procedural nature of the section. It said at p 8:

> ``The conclusion we have reached here does not detract from or qualify in any way what this court decided in Ocean Front. As this court held (at p 121 C-E), the purpose of s 116(1) is to enable a management corporation to bring an action on behalf of all or some of the subsidiary proprietors, as the case may be, against a third party, and also to enable a third party to bring an action against a management corporation representing all or some of the subsidiary proprietors. The action may be in contract or in tort, depending on the circumstances. That section provides a procedural mechanism for the management corporation to sue or to be sued as representing all or some of the subsidiary proprietors. The management corporation represents the subsidiary proprietors, whether they be the plaintiffs or the defendants, and it is the subsidiary proprietors who are the substantive party, although the proceedings are instituted by or against the management corporation. The section simplifies the procedural aspect of the proceedings [*32] so as to avoid naming all or some of the subsidiary proprietors who are involved in the proceedings as the plaintiffs or as the defendants, as the case may be. Apart from we have said, the only requirement imposed by the section is that the proceedings must relate to the common property.''

23. Also of interest in the case is that the court held that the corporation should only recover proportionately abated damages in respect of the 24 proprietors.

24. The reference to the statutory rules of construction does not assist the plaintiff because the use of the word ``jointly'' is a clear contrary intention.

25. The obvious difficulties caused by the limitation will vary from case to case. At some stage it will have to be determined at what time the section speaks. Is it to be the commencement of proceedings, judgment or the commencement of the cause of action? These difficulties led to substantial emphasis in oral submissions upon the plaintiff's argument that there was power for the Owners Corporation to sue outside the terms of section 227 of the Management Act.

The plaintiff's ability to sue outside section 227 of the Management Act

26. The plaintiff's submissions founded upon the fact that the Owners Corporation has legal title to the common property, its other duties under provisions of the Act and noted section 226 (1) of the Management Act which provided as follows:

> ``(1) Nothing in this act derogates from any rights or remedies that an owner, mortgagee or chargee of a lot or an Owners Corporation or covenant chargee may have in relation to any lot or the common property apart from this act.''

27. With regard to the powers of the Owners Corporation it should be noted that section 110 (3) of the Management Act provides that section 50 (1) (d) of the Interpretation Act does not apply to an Owners Corporation. Section 50 of the Interpretation Act facilitates the powers of a statutory corporation and section 50 (1) is in the following terms:

> ``50. Statutory corporations
> (1) A statutory corporation:
>
> (a) has perpetual succession,
> (b) shall have a seal,
> (c) may take proceedings and be proceeded against in its corporate name,
> (d) may, for the purpose of enabling it to exercise its functions, purchase, exchange, take on lease, hold, dispose of and otherwise deal with property, and
> (e) may do and suffer all other things that bodies corporate may, by law, do and suffer and that are necessary for, or incidental to, the exercise of its functions.''

[140401]

28. Importantly an Owners Corporation has power to do such things as are necessary for, or incidental to, the exercise of its functions.

29. The key management areas for a strata scheme are dealt with in section 61 of the Management Act. That section is in the following terms:

> ``61. What are the key management areas for a strata scheme?
>
> (1) An Owners Corporation has, for the benefit of the owners:
>
> (a) the management and control of the use of the common property of the strata scheme concerned, and
> (b) the administration of the strata scheme concerned.
>
> (2) The Owners Corporation has responsibility for the following:
>
> (a) maintaining and repairing the common property of the strata scheme as provided by Part 2,
> (b) managing the finances of the strata scheme as provided by Part 3,
> (c) taking out insurance for the strata scheme as provided by Part 4, > (d) keeping accounts and records for the strata scheme as provided by Part 5.
> (3) Other functions of an Owners Corporation are included in Part 6.''

30. The key management area of maintenance and repairs is dealt with in Part 2 of chapter 3. Importantly there is a duty on the Owners Corporation to maintain and repair the common property. That obligation arises from section 62 which is in the following terms:

``62. What are the duties of an Owners Corporation to maintain and repair property?

(1) An owners corporation must properly maintain and keep in a state of good and serviceable repair the common property and any personal property vested in the Owners Corporation.
(2) An Owners Corporation must renew or replace any fixtures or fittings comprised in the common property and any personal property vested in the owners corporation.
(3) This clause does not apply to a particular item of property if the Owners Corporation determines by special resolution that:

(a) it is inappropriate to maintain, renew, replace or repair the property, and
(b) its decision will not affect the safety of any building, structure or common property in the strata scheme or detract from the appearance of any property in the strata scheme."

31. Under the succeeding sections the Owners Corporation has a variety of remedies in respect of recovering the cost of such work. However, apart from special circumstances, which do not apply in this case, it can only raise levies to pay for the work. Such levies under sections 76 and 78 must be made on the owners of the lots at the time of the levy and in proportion to their unit entitlement.

32. The plaintiff relied on three decisions at first instance in this court. The first one was Proprietors of Strata Plan No 6522 v Furney (1976) 1 NSWLR 412. In that case Mr Justice Needham was dealing with a claim for a declaration that the body corporate had power to carry out repairs arising as a result of defects in construction of the units and levy the proprietors to cover the cost of the repairs. At page 414-15 his Honour said:

``However, the Strata Titles Act, 1973 does make provision with respect to legal proceedings. Section 147 (1) provides, so far as relevant, as follows: `Where the proprietors of the lots the subject of a strata scheme are jointly entitled to take proceedings against any person or are liable to have proceedings taken against them jointly (any such proceedings being proceedings for or with respect to common property), the proceedings may be taken by or against the body corporate.' Again, there seems some doubt to me as to whether s. 147 would justify the body corporate taking proceedings for declarations as to its rights or obligations, because I do not think such proceedings can be described as proceedings against any person. If these proceedings were said to be proceedings against Mr. and Mrs. Furney, then they would not be proceedings under which the proprietors of the lots were jointly entitled to take such proceedings, because Mr. and Mrs. Furney could hardly take proceedings against themselves. However, s. 146 (1) says:

`Nothing in this Act derogates from any rights or remedies that a proprietor or mortgagee of a lot or body corporate may have in relation to any lot or the common property apart from this Act.' Under the Act the common property is vested in the body corporate by s. 18 `for the estate or interest evidenced by the folio of the Register comprising the land the subject of that plan immediately before its registration'. Section 18 (2) requires the Registrar-General to issue in the name of the body corporate a certificate of title for any common property in that strata plan.

It seems to me that, as registered proprietor of the common property, the body corporate would have rights equivalent to the rights of any other registered proprietor to protect its interest or to have the Court declare the extent of its interest, the extent of its powers and liabilities. I think that s. 146 protects the ordinary incidents which attach to the ownership of land registered under the Real Property Act, 1900. One of those rights, it seems to me, is a right to approach the Court to make declarations under s. 75 of the Supreme Court Act, 1970. Accordingly, I am of the opinion that these proceedings are competent, and that the Court is entitled to make orders C which would declare the rights and responsibilities and liabilities of the plaintiff under its strata plan and under the Act."

33. It can be seen that his Honour relied upon section 146, which was the then equivalent of section 226 in the Management Act. However it must be noted that his Honour was only concerned with a somewhat limited right namely a right to apply to the court for declarations. His Honour did not have to explore the basis of section 147.

34. The plaintiff also relied upon Margiz Pty Ltd v Proprietors of Strata Plan No 30234 BC9303923. There Powell J said the following:

``I am quite unable to accept that... the Body Corporate, when dealing with the common property vested in it, has only such powers as are expressly vested in it by the provisions of the Act... if one were to proceed upon such a basis, one would be obliged to treat as nugatory, and totally devoid of content, many provisions of the Act, the existence of which are clearly at the heart of, and critical to the effective operation of, the concept of strata title legislation. A simple sample will suffice - unless it is to be implied from such provisions as s 54(3), s 68(1)(a), s 68(1)(b), s 68(1)(c), the Act does not confer upon a Body Corporate a power to repair, yet, without such a power, the imposition on the Body Corporate of a duty to repair would be an exercise in futility...

I regard such provisions as those contained in s 68 as carrying with them an implied grant to the relevant Body Corporate of power to do all things reasonably necessary to enable the relevant Body Corporate to perform the several duties cast upon it..."

35. He does not seem to be doing more than deciding what would already be provided for in section 50 of the Interpretation Act.

36. The plaintiff relied upon Carre v Owners Corporation SP 53020 to which I have earlier referred. In that case the plaintiff was suing for damages caused by the faulty installation of an air-conditioning system which of its nature passed through and affected the common property. To that extent she was seeking damages in respect of the air-conditioning system part of which was part of the common property because of the installation. The defendant companies had pleaded that as a result the unit holder had no standing to sue to the extent that it was part of the common property.

37. His Honour considered the right to bring proceedings on behalf of the company under the rule in Foss v Harbottle. In paragraph 25 his Honour concluded that the rule applied to an Owners Corporation. His Honour does not seem to have been directed to the question of whether or not principles of agency would make any difference as to who suffered the loss. At paragraph 46 he seems to assume that the Owners Corporation would suffer a nominal or modest loss in its representative capacity. In paragraph 49 he concluded that he would order the joinder so that the Owners Corporation could assert such ``claims as it may have in relation to that air conditioning system''. He did not decide on a final basis that it was a necessary party. Ultimately in his decision, relying upon the fifth exception to the rule in Foss v Harbottle, he added the Owners Corporation as a plaintiff subject to various indemnities being given by the original plaintiff. Given that the plaintiff had been locked out of the Owners Corporation it was not unnatural for the argument before his Honour to take the course that it did. Agency was not of immediate concern as the lot holder was already a party to the action. His Honour did not have to decide whether the lot holder was a necessary party, only whether it was appropriate to join the Owners Corporation to avoid a possible procedural difficulty.

38. It was the plaintiff's submission that the obligations to maintain and repair the common property of the strata scheme includes, if necessary, the commencement of proceedings against the builder of the strata plan in respect of building defects in the common property of strata scheme. Put another way the plaintiff submitted that the Owners Corporation's duty pursuant to section 62 of the Management Act to maintain the common property of the strata scheme means that the Owners Corporation suffers economic loss by way of the cost of rectification of defective common property as a result of the defendant's breach of duty of care.

39. In connection with this argument it should be noted that the Owners Corporation has a variety of powers to raise funds or use existing funds for the purpose of complying with its duty to maintain the common property in good repair. It can raise levies upon the then existing lot holders at the time the levy is raised. It need not necessarily sue the original builder to recover the damages being the cost of rectification of the faulty workmanship.

40. Given its ability to fund the repairs in different way it is hard to see how it suffers economic loss as a result of its duty to repair.

41. There are many practical problems that will occur in the management of the strata scheme if the lot owners are necessary plaintiffs. Some may not wish to be a party to the litigation. If they are then once they receive the proceeds of their claim they may not proceed with the repairs. This does not mean that they will not be entitled to recover damages. See SAS v Scott Carver [2003] NSWSC 1097. The practicalities of the work may mean that they are not able to do the work themselves.

42. If the Owners Corporation does the repair work is it entitled to recoup from the lot proprietors the amount they received by way of damages? I would have thought that they would not as it has no power to do so. The Owners Corporation can levy to cover the cost of the work and the lot holder's cause of action gives him or her some relief from the liability which he or she will have for levies imposed by the Owners Corporation.

43. The whole problem with this aspect of the matter is that the submission runs headlong into s 227 of the Act. It is apparent that the limited rights given are available only in very restricted circumstances where the practical problems which arise in this case are not present.

44. We are here dealing with a particular cause of action which is a tortious claim for economic loss as a result of the diminution in value of the common property. Whether or not reliance will play a part in the resolution of that claim is not relevant at the moment as I am concerned with the procedural aspects of who are proper and necessary parties. Plainly the lot holders are the disclosed principals and are in my view necessary parties to sue in respect of damage to their individual beneficial interest in the common property. Leaving aside agency, the ownership of the common property is divided under the legislation between the Owners Corporation and the lot holder. The Owners Corporation has the legal estate and the lot holders the whole equitable estate in the common property. In an action by a home owner for a similar cause of action where the title was old system, I would think that the mortgagee would not be a necessary party. There may, however, be other reasons, such as the fact that the common property exists for the benefit of the lot proprietor as a general body, which would indicate the appropriateness of the Owners Corporation remaining as a plaintiff.

45. The difficulties I have identified should be the subject of consideration by the appropriate authorities with a view to further amendment of the Management Act and I will bring these matters to their notice.

46. In my view the answer to the separate question is that the relevant lot holders are necessary parties. They will need to be joined as plaintiffs to the extent that they wish to make a claim.

47. The parties should bring in short minutes and deal with costs. I will make any necessary procedural directions to keep the matter on track for its next hearing.

Court citation: [2004] QSC 024

Supreme Court of Queensland

Judgment delivered on 26 February 2004

Real property — Put & call options — Whether correct warning statement was attached to contract for sale — Validity of purported termination of contract for sale — Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act, sec 366(1) — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, sec 213(6)

A buyer purported to terminate four contracts for failure by the seller to attach the most up-to-date warning statements and information sheets required under the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 (``PAMDA'') and Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (``BCCMA'') respectively.

The contracts resulted from the terms of put and call option agreements that had been signed by the buyer and seller nine months earlier. Attached to the option agreements were the sale contracts together with the then correct warning statements under PAMDA and the BCCMA.

Under the option agreements:

- the buyer granted to the seller a put option to require the buyer to complete the contracts;
- the buyer signed the contracts and returned the signed copies to the seller; and
- the seller held the contracts in escrow and could not sign the contracts until the seller exercised its put option.

Legislation amended before option exercised

Before the seller exercised its put option, the relevant warning statement under PAMDA was amended. In addition, the BCCMA was also amended to require an information statement to be attached to relevant contracts.

Under both pieces of legislation, if the required statements were not attached to relevant contracts, the buyer could rescind the contract.

The seller exercised its put options by signing the contracts that had been executed by the buyer nine months earlier.

The buyer purported to rescind the contracts on the basis that the most recent warning statements and information sheets approved under PAMDA and the BCCMA were not attached to the contracts. The buyer argued that contracts did not come into existence until the seller exercised the option and signed the contracts. That was the relevant time for applying the provisions of PAMDA and the BCCM. Therefore, the most up-to-date statements should have been attached to the contracts.

The seller sought a declaration that the buyer had improperly rescinded the contract.

Held: Helman J held that the seller was entitled to declaratory relief.

His Honour found that the date that the buyer signed the contracts was the relevant date for giving the statements under PAMDA and the BCCMA. The buyer became bound by the proposed sale contracts on signing subject to the exercise of the seller's put option. His Honour concluded that this ``contention appears to me to be consistent with the contemplated sequence of events. The Act contemplates that the seller or the seller's agent will prepare the contract (s. 366(2)) and then, before signing the contract the buyer will sign the warning statement (s. 366(4)(a)).''

Helman J: This application concerns four put and call option agreements entered into between the applicant company and the respondent. Three of the agreements were executed on 24 August 2001. Those three agreements concerned lots 3006, 3106, and 3206 in a proposed residential apartment building called ``River City Apartments''. Another put and call option agreement, executed on 23 January 2002, had as its subject lot 2906 in the same building. The survey plan upon which all four lots appeared was no. 139730. In each case the first two digits of the lot number showed the level in the building in which the apartment was situated. The option agreements were all executed at a time before the applicant as vendor had completed the building. Each option agreement had attached to it a sale contract of the relevant lot showing the applicant as vendor and the respondent as purchaser. The option agreements were in identical terms.

2. Each contract document was signed by the respondent and had attached to it the notices then required by the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 and the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000. On 23 January 2002, by deed, the parties varied the option agreements concerning lots 3006, 3106, and 3206. New contract documents were signed by the respondent and in each case the notices then required by the two statutes I have mentioned were attached to the new contract documents.

3. In each case cl 2.1 of the option agreement provided that the agreement was not binding on the applicant until and unless the respondent returned to the applicant inter alia two copies of a warning statement under the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act signed by the respondent and two copies of the contract document signed by the respondent. Under cl 2.2 of the option agreement the applicant was required to hold the contract document received under cl 2.1 in escrow and was forbidden to sign it until and unless either option was exercised.

4. In each case cl 3.1 of the option agreement provided that the respondent granted to the applicant the right to require the respondent to enter into the sale contract for the acquisition of the lot in question on the terms and conditions specified in the contract document. Clause 5.2 of the option agreement provided that the applicant was required immediately to notify the respondent when certain conditions precedent referred to in cl 3.1 of the proposed sale contract were satisfied. Clause 5.3 provided that if the applicant had not given notice to the respondent that those conditions precedent were satisfied by 31 July 2004, or by an extended date fixed in accordance with the relevant clause of the proposed sale contract, either party might terminate the option agreement. Clause 6.3 provided that the sale contract would come into existence on the date determined under s. 365 of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act and the applicant was authorized to insert that date into the contract document as the contract date. Section 365, as it was on 23 January 2002, defined when the buyer was bound under a relevant contract (defined in s 364, the definitions section for Chapter 11 (Residential Property Sales) as ``a contract for the sale of residential property in Queensland, other than a contract formed on a sale by auction'') providing that a buyer was bound under a relevant contract when the buyer gave the seller under the contract or the seller's agent:

> (a) a copy of the contract signed by both the buyer and the seller; and
> (b) a notice in the approved form signed and dated by the seller declaring the date on which the seller signed the contract.

5. The applicant, having notified the respondent on 15 August 2003 that the conditions precedent the subject of cl 3.1 of the proposed sale contract had been satisfied, exercised its put option on 25 September 2003. The contracts were signed on its behalf, and it required that settlement take place on 9 October 2003. On 8 October 2003 transfer documents for all lots were sent from the applicant to the respondent. On 9 October 2003 the respondent purported to elect to terminate the contracts, relying on the applicant's failure to comply with the provisions of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act and the Body Corporate and Community Management Act as to warning statements and information sheets in the approved forms then current.

6. The letter dated 9 October 2003 from the respondent's solicitors to the applicant's solicitors purporting to terminate the contracts was, formal parts omitted, as follows:

> ``Timbs proposed purchase from Devine Limited
> [140406]
>
> [140406]
> Lots 2906, 3006, 3106 and 3206 `River City Apartments' (the `Lots')
> We act for Patrick Timbs who is the purchaser of Lots 2906, 3006, 3106 and 3206 `River City Apartments' from Devine Limited pursuant to contracts dated 29 September 2003 (`the Sales Contracts') in respect of which settlement is scheduled to take place on 9 October 2003.
>
> The Sales Contracts for the Lots comprise:
> 1. PAMD Form 30a Warning dated 17 January 2002;

2. BCCM Act 1997 Contract Warning;
3. PAMD Form 31a Declaration by Seller unsigned and undated;
4. PAMD Form 32a Lawyers Certifications dated 21 January 2002;
5. Sale Contract (including Annexure `A' dated 25 September 2003.

The Sales Contracts came into existence on 25 September 2003 following your client's exercise of the Put Option contained in the Put and Call Option Agreement dated 24 August 2001 as amended by the Deed of Variation dated 23 January 2002.

We are instructed to inform you that the Sales Contracts do not contain a warning statement in the form approved pursuant to the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 (`the Act').

Section 366(1) of the Act provides that a relevant contract must have attached a statement in the approved form (`Warning Statement') containing the information mentioned in subsection (3). The current approved form is substantially different from that used in the Sales Contracts.

Section 367(2) of the Act provides that if a Warning Statement is of no effect under section 366(4) the buyer may terminate the contract at any time before the contract settles.

We are instructed to terminate the Sales Contracts for the Lots in accordance with Section 367 of the Act on the basis that the Sales Contracts do not contain Warning Statements in the approved form.

We are also instructed to terminate the Sales Contracts for the lots pursuant to Section 213(6) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 on the basis that the Sales Contracts do not include Information Sheets in the approved form.

Accordingly, could you please make arrangements for my client's Deposit Bonds submitted in respect of the Lots to be returned to my office within fourteen (14) days."

7. The applicant's solicitors' response in a letter dated 14 October 2003 to the respondent's solicitors was, formal parts omitted, as follows:

``Devine Limited sale to Timbs — Lots 2906, 3006, 3106 and 3206, River City Apartments

We refer to your letters of 9 October regarding these four matters.

After considering the arguments raised by you on behalf of your client, Mr Timbs, our client, Devine Limited, has formed the opinion that the arguments are unmeritorious and that Mr Timbs' purported termination of the four Contracts in reliance upon his entitlements under the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act and the Body Corporate and Community Management Act were unjustified.

As a result, Devine Limited does not accept that the purported termination of the four Contracts on behalf of Mr Timbs was effective, nor does Devine Limited accept that Mr Timbs is entitled to a refund of the deposits, nor to the return of the four deposit bonds in relation to these Contracts.

Nevertheless, Mr Timbs' purported termination of the four Contracts amounts to a wrongful repudiation of contracts. Devine Limited accepts the repudiation of the Contracts which are now at an end. As the repudiation was wrongful, Mr Timbs is in breach under each Contract. Devine Limited declares each deposit forfeited and reserves its rights under each Contract to pursue Mr Timbs for damages arising from the breach.

In the alternative, Devine Limited was, on the due date for settlement of each Contract, ready and willing and able to complete and Mr Timbs failed to tender settlement of any of the four Contracts. As a result, Mr Timbs is in breach of his obligations under each Contract and Devine Limited, in the alternative, terminates each Contract on the basis of that breach. Once again, Devine Limited declares each deposit forfeited, and reserves its rights regarding any damages that may flow from the breach of any of the Contracts.

Your separate correspondence of 9 October raising dispute in relation to each deposit is noted. We are instructed to call up each deposit bond but, when the proceeds of each bond are received, funds will be held in our trust account in accordance with the relevant legislation and your notice of dispute."

8. It is not in issue that the sale contracts have been terminated. The issue between the parties concerns the deposits. The applicant seeks declarations that the respondent's purported termination of the sale contracts by his solicitors' letter dated 9 October 2003 was invalid, that its termination by its solicitors' letter dated 14 October was valid, and that it is entitled to demand payment under the deposit bond lodged as the deposit under each contract. It is not in issue that the forms attached to the contract documents were those required on 23 January 2002 nor is it in issue that by 25 September 2003 new forms had been approved.

9. At the heart of the dispute between the parties is the question what date is relevant for the application of the provisions of the two statutes: is it, as contended on behalf of the applicant, the date of execution of the option agreement in each case (23 January 2002, after the execution of the deed of variation in relation to lots 3006, 3106, and 3206), or is it, as contended on behalf of the respondent, 25 September 2003 when the put options were exercised and the applicant signed the contract documents it had held in escrow? If the former, the applicant must succeed on this application because it will follow that the respondent had no valid ground for terminating the contracts; if the latter the applicant must fail unless an argument based on a contention of substantial compliance with the provisions of the statutes succeeds.

10. Among the objects of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act is consumer protection. Section 10(2) provides that a significant object of the Act ``is to provide a way of protecting consumers against particular undesirable practices associated with the promotion of residential property''. The purposes of Chapter 11 are three, as s. 363 provides:

> The purposes of this chapter are —
> > (a) to give persons who enter into relevant contracts a cooling-off period; and
> > (b) to require all relevant contracts for the sale of residential property in Queensland to include consumer protection information, including a statement that the contract is subject to a cooling-off period; and
> > (c) to enhance consumer protection for buyers of residential property by ensuring, as far as practicable, the independence of lawyers acting for buyers.''

Section 366(1) provides that a ``relevant contract'' must have attached, as its first or top sheet, a warning statement in the approved form containing the information mentioned in s. 366(3). Section 366(2) provides that the seller of the property or a person acting for the seller who prepares a relevant contract commits an offence if the seller or person prepares a contract that does not comply with s. 366(1). Section 366(4), as it was on 23 January 2002, provided as follows:

> ``(4) A statement purporting to be a warning statement is of no effect unless —
> > (a) before the contract is signed by the buyer, the statement is signed and dated before a witness by the buyer; and
> > (b) the words on the statement are presented in substantially the same way as the words are presented on the approved form.''

(On 1 July 2002 s. 366(4)(a) was amended by omitting the words ``before a witness'': s. 99 of the Tourism, Racing and Fair Trading (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 2002, but there was no issue before me on that subject.)

Section 367(2) provides that if a warning statement is not attached to a contract to which a warning statement must be attached or is of no effect under s. 366(4), the buyer under the contract may terminate the contract at any time before the contract settles by giving signed, dated notice of termination to the seller or the seller's agent.

11. The argument for the respondent rested on the proposition that since the contracts did not come into existence until 25 September 2003 it was only then that there was in each case a relevant contract to which the provisions of the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act could apply. While that proposition may be accepted, it does not necessarily resolve the issue before me in favour of the respondent, because what is contemplated in the Act is a sequence of events culminating in the coming into existence of a relevant contract.

12. On behalf of the applicant it was argued that the date of signature by the respondent was the relevant one because it was then that, pursuant to the option agreement, the respondent became bound by the terms of the proposed sale contract subject only to the exercise by the applicant of its put option. That contention appears to me to be consistent with the contemplated sequence of events. The Act contemplates that the seller or the seller's agent will prepare the contract (s. 366(2)) and then, before signing the contract the buyer will sign the warning statement (s. 366(4)(a)). (The word ``contract'' is there used to mean the document which the buyer signs whereby the buyer becomes contractually bound: cf Nguyen v Taylor [1993] ANZ ConvR 260; (1992) 27 NSWLR 48 at p. 53 per Kirby P.) That sequence suggests that the relevant warning statement will be one in the form approved at the time when the buyer signs the contract document.

13. I am therefore persuaded that the argument advanced on behalf of the applicant is correct. If it is not, a buyer in the position of the respondent would be bound by the terms of a contract document of the kind in question in this case for a lengthy period without having the benefit of a warning statement. That does not appear to be what was intended in a régime that contemplates the buyer's receiving the notice and signing it before signing the document. Furthermore, to construe the provisions of the Act as contended on behalf of the applicant would best achieve the consumer-protection purpose of the Act: see s. 14A(1) of the Acts Interpretation Act 1954.

14. Section 2 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act provides that the primary object of that Act is to provide for flexible and contemporary communally-based arrangements for the use of freehold land, having regard to the secondary objects of the Act. Among the secondary objects is the provision of ``an appropriate level of consumer protection for owners and intended buyers of lots included in community titles schemes'': s. 4(f). Section 213(1) of Part 2 (Proposed lots) of Chapter 5 (Sale of lots) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act so far as it is relevant, provides that ``[b]efore a contract is entered into'' by a seller with a buyer for the sale to the buyer of a proposed lot intended to come into existence as a lot included in a community titles scheme when the scheme is established the seller must give the buyer a ``first statement'' complying with s. 213(2) to (4). Section 213(5) provides that the seller must attach an information sheet in the approved form to the contract:

> ``(5) The seller must attach an information sheet (the `information sheet') in the approved form to the contract —
> (a) as the first or top sheet; or
> (b) if the proposed lot is residential property under the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act 2000 — immediately beneath the warning statement that must be attached as the first or top sheet of the contract under section 366 of that Act.''

15. Those provisions are those appearing in the Act as it is now and as it was on 25 September 2003. On 23 January 2002 the provisions, so far as they are relevant, were the same, except that s. 213 bore the number 170 then and subsection (5) was as follows:

> ``(5) The seller must attach to the contract, as a first or top sheet, an information sheet (the `information sheet') in the approved form.''

On this application nothing turns on the discrepancy between the two versions of subsection (5).

16. The considerations relevant to the warning statements required under the Property Agents and Motor Dealers Act (the sequence of events contemplated, and — above all — the consumer-protection purpose of the Act) apply to the provisions of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act and lead me to conclude that the date of the signature by the respondent was the relevant one.

17. It is not necessary for me to consider the argument concerning substantial compliance.

18. It follows that the applicant is entitled to the relief it seeks. I shall invite further submissions on the form of the orders to be made and costs.

Judgment delivered 7 April 2004

Strata and community titles — Unpaid body corporate fees — Costs incurred in recovering unpaid body corporate fees — Court order — Costs of body corporate incurred in recovering unpaid body corporate fees to be assessed by registrar — Whether such an order could be made — Whether important question of law involved — Queensland Law Society Act 1952, Pt 4A — Uniform Civil Procedure Rules, rule 684.

The applicants in these leave to appeal proceedings were the owners of a lot in a Community Titles Scheme. The respondent body corporate had previously brought a claim in the Magistrates Court against the applicants for unpaid body corporate fees, penalty interest and costs.

By-law 12 of the respondent body corporate's Community Management Scheme provided that:

> ``An owner shall pay on demand the whole of the body corporate's costs and expenses (including solicitor and own client costs) incurred in recovering moneys and levies duly levied upon the owner of the body corporate pursuant to the Act, such amount deemed to be a liquidated debt..."

The applicants subsequently paid the outstanding body corporate fees and a small additional amount. The Magistrate gave summary judgment in favour of the body corporate in the following terms:

> ``The whole of the body corporate costs and expenses (including solicitor and own client costs), incurred in recovering levies and moneys duly levied upon the owner of the body corporate pursuant to the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 to be assessed by the Registrar pursuant to Rule 684 of the Uniform Civil Procedure Rules, plus interest in accordance with the Supreme Court Act 1995. Costs of the assessment to the [body corporate] in any event."

The Registrar assessed the respondent body corporate's costs in an amount of $944.45.

The applicant applied for leave to appeal to a District Court judge against the Magistrate's decision, leave being necessary because the judgment sum was less than $2,000. The District Court dismissed that application with costs to be assessed.

The District Court judge observed that the form of the judgment was unusual in the Magistrates Court in that it did not identify a specific monetary sum but left all matters of quantification to the Registrar. The District Court judge expressed concern that there not be duplication between the costs levied under by-law 12 and the costs order made in respect of the action but considered there was no reason to expect duplication from the terms of the order made.

The applicants sought leave to appeal from the decision of the District Court judge. The applicants submitted that the Magistrate's ordering of costs under by-law 12 of the respondent body corporate's Community Title Scheme was in excess of jurisdiction. The applicants submitted that the Magistrate was not authorised to order, nor the Registrar authorised to assess, such costs as costs of the proceeding in the Magistrates Court. The applicants submitted that such costs were the respondent body corporate's claimed damages not the costs of the proceeding contemplated by the Uniform Civil Procedures Rules 1999 (``UCPR"). The applicants also submitted that by-law 12 was inconsistent with Pt 4A of the Queensland Law Society Act 1952 (Qld), which dealt with client agreements as to costs.

Held: application for leave to appeal refused; costs to be assessed

McMurdo P (with whom Williams JA and Holmes J agreed)

1. The application did not raise an important question of law or of public importance.

2. The decision at first instance, which involved only a relatively modest amount, did not appear to be manifestly unjust.

3. The applicants failed to establish any ground warranting the granting of leave to appeal.

4. There was nothing to suggest that there had been any duplication of costs in the assessment of the $944.45 or that any sum beyond the respondent body corporate's entitlement under by-law 12 was included in that assessment.

5. Part 4A of the Queensland Law Society Act 1952 was not necessarily relevant to or inconsistent with by-law 12.

Before McMurdo P, Williams JA and Holmes J.

Judgment in full below

McMurdo P: The three applicants are owners of a lot in Buon Vista Community Titles Scheme 14325. The respondent brought a claim in the Brisbane Magistrates Court against the applicants for unpaid body corporate fees, penalty interest and costs. The applicants subsequently paid the outstanding body corporate fees and a small additional amount.

On 14 December 2001 a Magistrate gave summary judgment in favour of the respondent/ plaintiff in the following terms:

> ``The whole of the body corporate costs and expenses (including solicitor and own client costs), incurred in recovering levies and moneys duly levied upon the owner of the body corporate pursuant to the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 to be assessed by the Registrar pursuant to Rule 684 of the Uniform Civil Procedure Rules, plus interest in accordance with the Supreme Court Act 1995. Costs of the assessment to the plaintiff in any event."

It seems that the applicants, one of whom is a solicitor practising on her own account, are aggrieved that, now having paid the levies of the body corporate in full, they should also be required to pay the respondent's legal costs, especially on an indemnity basis.

The applicant applied for leave to appeal to a District Court Judge against the Magistrate's decision, leave being necessary because, on any view, the judgment sum was less than $2,000. On 20 February 2002 a District Court Judge dismissed that application with costs to be assessed on the standard basis and on the basis that the matter had been concluded before lunch that day, because the respondent was responsible for wasting a half day's costs. The applicants now seek leave to appeal from that decision, their application for leave to appeal being filed on 18 March 2002. The significant delay in progressing this application has been no fault of the Court.

The applicants have an onerous task in demonstrating why they should be granted leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal of the Supreme Court of Queensland over an amount of effectively only $944.45 when they have already had a hearing in the Magistrates Court and had been refused leave to appeal in the District Court, in circumstances where the learned primary Judge gave consideration to the matters which the applicant again seeks to raise on an appeal before this Court.

They contend that their proposed appeal relates to an important point of law: the Magistrate's order was in excess of jurisdiction in ordering costs under by-law 12 of the respondent's Community Management Scheme. The Magistrate was not authorised to order, nor the Registrar authorised to assess, such costs as costs of the proceeding in the Magistrates Court; such costs are the respondent's claimed damages not the costs of the proceeding contemplated by the UCPR; UCPR rr 690(3) and (4) have the effect that Magistrates can only order those costs under those sub-rules.

By-law 12 is in the following terms:

> ``An owner shall pay on demand the whole of the body corporate's costs and expenses (including solicitor and own client costs) incurred in recovering moneys and levies duly levied upon the owner of the body corporate pursuant to the Act, such amount
> [140411]
> [140411]
> deemed to be a liquidated debt in that this by-law be recorded on the CMS statement and lodged with the Department of Natural Resources."

The learned primary Judge observed that the form of the judgment was unusual in the Magistrates Court in that it did not identify a specific monetary sum but left all matters of quantification to the Registrar; there did not, however, seem to be any reason why such an order could not be made. His Honour expressed concern that there not be duplication between the costs levied under by-law 12 and the costs order made in respect of the action but considered there was no reason to expect duplication from the terms of the order made. The learned primary Judge also noted that the Magistrate ordered only the lower rate of interest under s 47 of the Supreme Court Act 1995 (Qld) rather than any higher penalty rate of interest claimed by the respondent.

The order made is clearly intended to convey that the Registrar assess the costs which the respondent incurred in recovering moneys owed by the applicants under the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld).

The respondent's solicitor has filed affidavit material which demonstrates a registrar of the Brisbane Magistrates Court has assessed the respondent's costs in the amount of $944.45. There is nothing before this Court to suggest there has been any duplication of costs in that assessment or that any sum beyond the respondent's entitlement under by-law 12 was included in that assessment; indeed the assessment if anything appears to have been modest. The applicants' application for a review of that assessment was dismissed with costs on 15 March 2004. The order made does not appear to be plainly unjust.

The applicants also contend that an important matter of law is that by-law 12 is inconsistent with part 4A Queensland Law Society Act 1952 (Qld) which deals with client agreements as to costs. Section 180 Body Corporate and Community Management Act specifically provides that where there is an inconsistency between a by-law and the principal Act or another Act the by-law is invalid to the extent of the inconsistency.

I cannot see that part 4A of the Queensland Law Society Act is necessarily relevant to or inconsistent with by-laws such as by-law 12 made under the Body Corporate and Community Management Act. The respondent was only entitled to recover the Body Corporate's costs and expenses properly incurred, that is, subject to section 48I Queensland Law Society Act. In any event, the position has since been clarified by regulation 99(1)(c) of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Standard Module) Regulation 1997.

The application does not raise an important question of law or of public importance; nor does the decision at first instance, which involves only a very modest amount, appear to be manifestly unjust; nor does the significant delay in progressing this appeal assist the applicants. The applicants have failed to establish any ground warranting the granting of leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal of the Supreme Court of Queensland. I would refuse the application for leave to appeal with costs to be assessed.

Williams JA: I agree.

Holmes J: I agree.

The President: That is the order of the Court.

FISCHER and ORS v BODY CORPORATE FOR CENTREPOINT COMMUNITY TITLE SCHEME 7779

Court citation: [2004] QCA 214

Judgment delivered 25 June 2004

Strata and community titles — Contribution schedule lot entitlement — Whether schedule just and equitable — Whether schedule should be varied — Matters which should be taken into account in determining whether a variation should be made — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, sec 47; 48 and 49.

The applicants for leave to appeal were owners of lots in an apartment building known as Centrepoint. It consisted of two towers, all the lots in which were residential. One tower contains 20 apartments and the other 31. As well there was underground car parking. Most of the apartments had two bedrooms, but some had three bedrooms and others had one bedroom. The smallest apartment was 81 square metres and the largest apartment was 241 square metres in size. The common area contained a number of amenities for owners and their guests.

The respondent, the body corporate for Centrepoint, was originally incorporated under the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 (Qld) and titles to the lots in the buildings were granted pursuant to that Act. The owner of the realty comprising a residential lot had an entitlement to ``lots'', which determined the proportionate share of the owner to the common property and to the contributions to be paid for the costs of maintaining and providing services to the building.

The Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 was repealed in 1997 and replaced by the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) (``the Act''), which provided that there should be two sets of ``lot entitlements'' for each apartment in a community title scheme, formerly a building units plan. The two sets were ``contribution schedule lots'' and ``interest schedule lots''. The former was the means by which the respective contributions of the apartment owners to the maintenance cost of the building could be determined. The interest schedule was the means by which the respective owners' interests in the common property was determined. In each case there was a schedule of lot entitlements which consisted of a whole number allocated to each apartment.

To determine the amount of an apartment owner's contribution to expenses the total of body corporate expenses was divided by the total number of contribution lots. The quotient was then multiplied by the number of contribution lots in respect of each apartment to arrive at the respective amounts to be paid. The respondent, having been incorporated under the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980, had only one schedule of lot entitlements. That schedule was taken to be both the contribution schedule lot entitlement and the interest schedule lot entitlement for the purposes of the Act.

Subsection 47(2) of the Act provided:

> ``The contribution schedule lot entitlement... is the basis for calculating—
>
> (a) the lot owner's share of amounts levied by the body corporate, unless the extent of the lot owner's obligation to contribute to a levy for a particular purpose is specifically otherwise provided for in this Act;...''

Section 48 of the Act provided:

> ``(1) The owner of a lot... may apply—
>
> (a) to the District Court for an order for the adjustment of a lot entitlement schedule;
>
> ...
>
> (4) The order of the court... must be consistent with—
>
> (a) if the order is about the contribution schedule — the principle stated in subsection (5);
>
> ...
>
> (5) For the contribution schedule, the respective lot entitlements should be equal, except to the extent to which it is just and equitable in the circumstances for them not to be equal.
>
> ...''

Section 49 provided:

> ``(1) This section applies if an application is made for an order... for the adjustment of a lot entitlement schedule.
>

[140413]

(a) for a contribution schedule — if it is just and equitable in the circumstances for the respective lot entitlements not to be equal

...

(3) However, the matters the court... may have regard to... are not limited to the matters stated in this section.

(4) The court... may have regard to—

(a) how the community titles scheme is structured; and
(b) the nature, features and characteristics of the lots included in the scheme; and
(c) the purposes for which the lots are used.

(5) The court... may not have regard to any knowledge or understanding the applicant had, or any lack of knowledge or misunderstanding on the part of the applicant, at the relevant time, about—

(a) the lot entitlement for the subject lot or other lots included in the... scheme; or
(b) the purposes for which a lot entitlement is used.

The applicants commenced proceedings seeking an order varying the contribution entitlement schedule of the respondent. The applicants and the respondent respectively called witnesses who were knowledgeable about the types of costs incurred by building owners and bodies corporate in maintaining and providing services to those who inhabit the buildings and the means by which those costs might be allocated between apartment owners. There was little difference in the evidence given by the respective experts. To a large extent they performed a mechanical exercise: identifying the relevant costs, categorising them and then allocating them among the lot owners at Centrepoint.

The experts, in reaching their conclusion that the existing contribution lot entitlement schedule was not ``just and equitable'' and that it would not be ``just and equitable'' to make the lot entitlements in respect of all apartments equal, had regard only to the expenses incurred by the respondent in operating and maintaining its buildings and the extent to which the apartments ``consume'' those expenses differentially. The exercise undertaken, and the basis for the opinions as to the proper allocation of lot entitlements, did not go beyond identifying and classifying the extent to which different apartments plead greater financial burden on the body corporate than other apartments.

The trial judge concluded that this approach was too narrow. The trial judge considered that a determination of lot entitlements among apartment owners could take other factors into account. Having considered other factors the trial judge concluded that it was just and equitable to depart from the principle that all apartment owners should contribute equally to the expenses.

The trial judge found that even though there was no evidence how the original lot entitlements were established, the existing lot entitlements reflected a differentiation between the lots based on the size of the lot, number of bedrooms and location of the lot in the building. The trial judge was of the view that an adjustment to the lot schedule would probably have an effect on the value of the apartments. The trial judge concluded that under subsec 49(4) it was appropriate to consider the application by reference to the effect of a change on the value of the apartments and the amenity of the apartments. The application was dismissed.

The applicants appealed and submitted that the Act was concerned with the just and equitable distribution of body corporate expenses among apartment owners and that in making an adjustment of a lot entitlement schedule, the Court must pay regard only to the origin and allocation of body corporate expenditure.

Held: leave to appeal granted and appeal allowed.

Per Chesterman J (with whom McPherson JA and Atkinson J agreed)

1. The evidence showed that there was a degree of arbitrariness in the original allocation of lot entitlements. There was no distinct pattern though it could be said that, generally speaking, the higher an apartment was in the buildings the greater its entitlement. This probably reflected a connection between the value of the units and their lot entitlements.

2. The point in issue was a narrow one. It was whether in determining an application for the adjustment of a contribution lot entitlement schedule and, in particular, in determining the extent to which it is just and equitable that respective lot entitlements not be equal, the enquiry is at large (save for the matter described in subsec 49(5)) or whether it is limited to matters which show how apartments differently affect the cost of running and maintaining a community title scheme.

3. Although the Act gives no clear indication one way or the other, the preferable view is that a contribution schedule should provide for equal contributions by apartment owners, except insofar as some apartments can be shown to give rise to particular costs to the body corporate which other apartments do not. That question, whether a schedule should be adjusted, is to be answered with regard to the demand made on the services and amenities provided by a body corporate to the respective apartments, or their contribution to the costs incurred by the body corporate. More general considerations of amenity, value or history are to be disregarded.

4. The Act is intended to produce a contribution lot entitlement schedule that divides body corporate expenses equally except to the extent that the apartments disproportionately give rise to those expenses or disproportionately consume services. That determination can only be made by reference to factors that have a financial impact or consequence on the body corporate. It cannot be affected by factors that go to an apartment's value or amenity.

5. The nature of a contribution lot entitlement schedule itself suggests that the allocation of lot entitlements is to be made on the basis of the impact that individual apartments make upon the costs of operating and running a community titles scheme. Contribution lot entitlements determine the apartment's share of the outgoings. The starting point is that the entitlements should be equal. A departure from that principle is allowable only where it is just, or fair, to recognise inequality. The departure must take as its reference point the proposition, from which it departs, that apartment owners should contribute equally to the costs of the building. The focus of the inquiry is the extent to which an apartment unequally causes costs to the body corporate. If this principle is not the applicable one then there is no basis on which applications for adjustment of a contribution lot entitlement schedules could consistently be made.

6. Section 49 of the Act, and in particular subsec (4), should be construed as meaning that those identified matters to which a court may have regard are to be regarded only to the extent, if any, that they affect the cost of operating a community title scheme.

7. The evidence adduced by both parties established that:

- The present lot entitlement schedule was not equal.
- The present lot entitlement schedule was not just and equitable.
- An equal contribution lot entitlement schedule would not be just and equitable.
- A contribution lot entitlement schedule in the terms compiled by the applicant's and respondent's experts would be just and equitable.

Judgment in full below

McPherson JA: I agree with the reasons of Chesterman J, which I have had the advantage of reading.

2. The appeal should be allowed with costs; the order of the District Court should be set aside; instead, the lot entitlement contribution schedule should be ordered to be adjusted as set out in the reasons of Chesterman J.

Chesterman J: The applicants for leave to appeal are owners of lots in an apartment building known as Centrepoint which is located at 69 Leichhardt Street, Spring Hill. Centrepoint consists of two towers, all the lots in which are residential. One tower contains 20 apartments and the other 31. As well there are three levels of underground car parks. Of the 51 apartments, six have one bedroom, 28 have two and 17 are three bedroomed. They vary in size. The smallest is 81 square metres in extent, and the largest, 241 square metres. The common area contains a number of amenities for lot owners and their guests. These include a sauna, a swimming pool and a games room. The respondent, the body corporate for Centrepoint, was originally incorporated pursuant to the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 (Qld) and titles to the lots in the buildings were granted pursuant to that Act. It provided that the owners of the realty comprising the residential lot had an entitlement to ``lots'' which determined the proportionate share of the lot owner to the common property and to the contributions to be paid for the costs of maintaining and providing services to the building.

4. To avoid confusion in use of the word ``lot'' — which means both the real property represented by the residential unit and the designated number representing the obligation to contribute to body corporate expenses — I will use the word ``apartment'' to refer to the former use and the word ``lot'' to refer to numbers in the contribution schedule, which will be described shortly.

5. The Building Units and Group Titles Act was repealed in 1997 and replaced by the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld) (``the Act''), which provides that there should be two sets of ``lot entitlements'' for each apartment in a community title scheme, formerly a building units plan. The two sets were ``contribution schedule lots'' and ``interest schedule lots''. The former is the means by which the respective contributions of the apartment owners to the maintenance cost of the building are determined.

The interest schedule is the means by which the respective owners' interests in the common property are determined. In each case there is a schedule of lot entitlements which consists of a whole number allocated to each apartment.

6. To determine the amount of an apartment owner's contribution to expenses the total of body corporate expenses is divided by the total number of contribution lots. The quotient is then multiplied by the number of contribution lots in respect of each apartment to arrive at the respective amounts to be paid.

7. The respondent, having been incorporated under the Building Units and Group Titles Act, has only one schedule of lot entitlements. That schedule is taken to be both the contribution schedule lot entitlement and the interest schedule lot entitlement for the purposes of the Act.

8. Section 48 of the Act provides that the owner of a lot may apply to the District Court for an order for the adjustment of a lot entitlement schedule.

9. By an application dated 10 February 2003 the applicants applied for an order varying the contribution entitlement schedule of the respondent. The application was heard on 28 and 29 January 2004 and dismissed on 13 February 2004. The applicants seek leave to appeal against the dismissal of their application.

10. The Act was amended by the Body Corporate and Community Management and Other Legislation Amendment Act 2003 (Qld) (``the 2003 Act''), which came into effect on 4 March 2003. It was thus the Act as amended which contained the relevant law when the District Court came to decide the application. This is not controversial but some of the amendments made are referred to as assisting in the proper construction of the Act.

11. Section 47 of the Act provides:

> ``(1) This section states the general principles for the application of lot entitlements to a community titles scheme, but has effect subject to provisions of this Act providing more specifically for the application of lot entitlements.
>
> (2) The contribution schedule lot entitlement... is the basis for calculating —
>
> > (a) the lot owner's share of amounts levied by the body corporate, unless the extent of the lot owner's obligation to contribute to a levy for a particular purpose is specifically otherwise provided for in this Act; and
> > (b) the value of the lot owner's vote for voting on an ordinary resolution if a poll is conducted for voting on the resolution.
>
> (3) The interest schedule lot entitlement... is the basis for calculating —
>
> > (a) the lot owner's share of common property; and
>
> [140416]
> [140416]
> > (b) the lot owner's interest on termination of the scheme, including... body corporate assets...; and
> > (c) the unimproved value... for the purpose of a... rate or [land] tax...
>
> (4) Neither the contribution schedule lot entitlement nor the interest schedule lot entitlement... is used for the calculation of the liability of the owner... of the lot for the supply of a utility service... if the amount of the... service supplied... is capable of separate measurement, and the owner... is billed directly.''

12. Section 48 provides:

> ``(1) The owner of a lot... may apply —
>
> > (a) to the District Court for an order for the adjustment of a lot entitlement schedule; or > > (b)...
> (4) The order of the court... must be consistent with —

(a) if the order is about the contribution schedule — the principle stated in subsection (5); or
(b)...

(5) For the contribution schedule, the respective lot entitlements should be equal, except to the extent to which it is just and equitable in the circumstances for them not to be equal."

13. Section 49 provides relevantly:

``(1) This section applies if an application is made for an order... for the adjustment of a lot entitlement schedule.

(2) This section sets out matters to which the court... may, and may not, have regard for deciding —

(a) for a contribution schedule — if it is just and equitable in the circumstances for the respective lot entitlements not to be equal; and
(b)...

(3) However, the matters the court... may have regard to... are not limited to the matters stated in this section.

(4) The court... may have regard to —

(a) how the community titles scheme is structured; and
(b) the nature, features and characteristics of the lots included in the scheme; and
(c) the purposes for which the lots are used.

(5) The court... may not have regard to any knowledge or understanding the applicant had, or any lack of knowledge or misunderstanding on the part of the applicant, at the relevant time, about —

(a) the lot entitlement for the subject lot or other lots included in the... scheme; or
(b) the purposes for which a lot entitlement is used."

The ``relevant time'' is that at which an applicant contracted to buy his lot which is designated the ``subject lot''.

14. The applicants and the respondent respectively called a witness who was knowledgeable about the types of costs incurred by building owners and bodies corporate in maintaining and providing services to those who inhabit the buildings and the means by which those costs might be allocated between apartment owners. There was little difference in the evidence given by the respective experts. To a large extent they performed a mechanical exercise: identifying the relevant costs, categorising them and then allocating them among the lot owners at Centrepoint.

15. It was common ground that the existing lot entitlements, deriving as they do from the Building Units and Group Titles Act, are not equal. There is a degree of arbitrariness between the allocation of lot entitlements to the various apartments. Both experts agreed that the present allocation of lots, and therefore the percentage of burden of contributing to maintenance, is not ``just and equitable''. The approach taken by both experts was identical in methodology and varied in result in only one particular.

16. The approach taken to the allocation of lot entitlements appears from the report of Mr Sheehan who gave evidence on behalf of the applicants. At pages 8 and 9 of his report he wrote:

``Certain administrative and sinking fund items should not be shared on an equal basis amongst all lots... Certain lots within the scheme place a greater demand for the underlying service then [sic] other lots...

8.1 Method 1 — Costs shared equally

There are certain administrative and sinking fund items that should be shared amongst all lots on an equal basis. These items of expense either are directly proportional to the number of lots in the scheme (eg body corporate administration contract) or are fixed without reference to the number of lots (eg fee for preparation of a tax return). No particular lot places any greater or lesser demand on the underlying services.

8.2 Method 2 — Support and shelter costs

The purpose of the structure of the building is to provide support and shelter to the lots.... The nature of the construction makes it appropriate to share the support and shelter costs based on the area of the lot in proportion to the total area of all lots. Intuitively, if lot A is twice as big as lot B then it requires twice the support and shelter.

8.3 Method 3 — Potential accommodation factor (bedrooms)

Some costs are directly related to the use of the common property. The use of the common property depends on —... the number of people who are resident... The most logical determinant of the number of residents... is the number of bedrooms,...

8.4 Method 4 — Lift Costs

The lift costs deserve unique treatment as the 2 towers benefit in different ways from the existence of the lifts. The costs associated with the provision of a working lift should be shared equally between the 2 towers and then equally between the lots in those towers.

8.5 Method 5 — Lattice Costs

... only [some] lots have lattice.... I have allocated the costs of the lattice only to these lots.''

17. The result of Mr Sheehan's examination of the expenditure of the respondent body corporate, and his categorisation of that expenditure in accordance with the quoted description, produced a table which showed what percentage of the total costs should be allocated to each category. From this analysis Mr Sheehan was able to arrive at a table of appropriate lot entitlements for each lot. The precise mechanism by which this was done was not explained and was not necessary.

18. Mr Linkhorn, who gave expert evidence for the respondent, adopted the same methodology. He differed only in that he allocated the costs of operating and maintaining the lifts separately between the apartments in each tower, though equally between the apartments in each. This produced a different set of lot entitlements but the difference is quite small.

19. In reaching their conclusion that the existing contribution lot entitlement schedule is not ``just and equitable'', and that it would not be ``just and equitable'' to make the lot entitlements in respect of all apartments equal, both Mr Sheehan and Mr Linkhorn had regard only to the expenses incurred by the respondent in operating and maintaining its buildings and the extent to which the apartments ``consume'' those expenses differentially. The exercise undertaken, and the basis for the opinions as to the proper allocation of lot entitlements, did not go beyond identifying and classifying the extent to which different apartments plead greater financial burden on the body corporate than other apartments.

20. The learned District Court judge thought that this approach was too narrow. His Honour considered that a determination of lot entitlements among apartment owners could take other factors into account. Having considered other factors his Honour concluded that it was just and equitable to depart from the principle that all apartment owners should contribute equally to the expenses. He rejected the proposition, advanced by the experts, that any departure from the principle of equality should be determined only by ascertaining the extent to which the apartments differed in the consumption, and therefore cost of services, or the extent to which they gave rise to differing levels of expenditure by the body corporate.

21. His Honour said [at 25-26]:

``[48] Even though there was no evidence how the original lot entitlements were established, I am satisfied that the existing lot entitlements reflect a differentiation between the lots based on the size of the lot, number of bedrooms... and location of the lot in the building. Further, this differentiation has been in existence since the Scheme's inception....

[50] [E]ven though Mr Sheehan and Mr Linkhorn used the size of a lot and the number of bedrooms in the lot, no weight appears to have been given... to the location of a particular lot. In my opinion the nature, features and characteristics of a lot which is one of the matters the Court may have regard to when deciding just and equitable circumstances is wide enough to include the location of a lot.... [T]here are two aspects... These two aspects are the position of the lot in the building as in what level the lot is on and secondly the aspect that might be enjoyed by that particular lot.... [B]y definition Mr Sheehan and Mr Linkhorn have approached their task by considering the money required to fund the Body corporate's expenses and have sought to determine the costs incurred because of a particular lot.... I do not accept the Act demands the application of the user pays approach particularly when the application of size of the lot and number of bedrooms in the lot produces little by way of differentiation between the lots. That is I do not accept the approach taken by Mr Sheehan or Mr Linkhorn gives any weight to the location of a particular lot... having regard to both aspects of location..."

22. The first observation is not entirely accurate. The evidence showed that there was a degree of arbitrariness in the original allocation of lot entitlements. There was no distinct pattern though it could be said that, generally speaking, the higher an apartment was in the buildings the greater its entitlement. This probably reflects a connection between the value of the units and their lot entitlements.

23. The learned judge also pointed out that an adjustment to the schedule of lot entitlements would probably have an effect on the value of apartments. No valuation had in fact been conducted, but an indicative approach to valuation put before his Honour showed that if apartments were valued by reference to rental income only, an increase in contributions to body corporate expenses would result in a loss of value, assuming that the required rate of return on investment remained the same.

24. The point in issue is a narrow one. It is whether in determining an application for the adjustment of a contribution lot entitlement schedule and, in particular, in determining the extent to which it is just and equitable that respective lot entitlements not be equal, the enquiry is at large (save for the matter described in s 49(5)) or whether it is limited to matters which show how apartments differently effect the cost of running and maintaining a community title scheme. The learned trial Judge took the first view and thought it appropriate to consider the application by reference to the affect of the change on the value of apartments, and the amenity of the apartments. His Honour did so because of the terms of s 49(4), which provides that the court may have regard to the structure of the community titles scheme and the nature, features and characteristics of the apartments in the scheme. His Honour took the view, not unnaturally, that amenity and location were features or characteristics of apartments.

25. The submission for the applicants is that this Part of the Act is concerned with the just and equitable distribution of body corporate expenses among apartment owners and that in making an adjustment of a lot entitlement schedule the court must pay regard only to the origin and allocation of body corporate expenditure.

26. Although the Act gives no clear indication one way or the other, the preferable view is that a contribution schedule should provide for equal contributions by apartment owners, except insofar as some apartments can be shown to give rise to particular costs to the body corporate which other apartments do not. That question, whether a schedule should be adjusted, is to be answered with regard to the demand made on the services and amenities provided by a body corporate to the respective apartments, or their contribution to the costs incurred by the body corporate. More general considerations of amenity, value or history are to be disregarded. What is at issue is the ``equitable'' distribution of the costs.

27. There are a number of reasons for this conclusion. The first is to be found in the terms of the Explanatory Notes which accompanied the 2003 Act and the content of the second reading speech when the Bill for it was debated. Because the meaning of the Act is unclear it is permissible to consult these materials.

28. Section 10 of the 2003 Act inserted s 46(7) which is in these terms:

``(7) For the contribution schedule for a scheme for which development approval is given after the commencement of this subsection, the respective lot entitlements must be equal, except to the extent to which it is just and equitable in the circumstances for them not to be equal."

This replaced an earlier provision, which was repealed by the 2003 Act, to the effect that upon registration a community titles scheme did not have to provide for equal contribution lot entitlements. Explaining the change the Note said:

> ``The change is intended to reinforce the concept that usually all lot owners are equally responsible for the cost of upkeep of common property and for the running costs of the community titles scheme. However, it is recognised that there are many valid instances where the contribution schedules do not have to be equal. The amendment provides that usually the numbers in this schedule are equal, unless it can be demonstrated that it is just and equitable for there to be inequality.
>
> The need for difference is best shown by examples.
>
> Example 3 In a basic scheme, if all the lots are residential lots ranging in size from a small lot to a penthouse, the contribution schedule lot entitlements generally would be equal. However, the contribution schedule may be different if the penthouse has its own swimming pool and private lift. The contribution schedule should recognise this type of difference. The other lots in the scheme despite being of differing size or aspect would be expected to have equal contribution schedule lot entitlements.''

29. In the Second Reading Speech it was said:

30. These materials make it tolerably plain that the Act is intended to produce a contribution lot entitlement schedule which divides body corporate expenses equally except to the extent that the apartments disproportionately give rise to those expenses, or disproportionately consume services. That determination can only be made by reference to factors which have a financial impact or consequence on the body corporate. It cannot be affected by factors which go to an apartment's value or amenity.

31. Secondly, the nature of a contribution lot entitlement schedule itself suggests that the allocation of lot entitlements is to be made on the basis of the impact that individual apartments make upon the costs of operating and running a community titles scheme. Contribution lot entitlements determine the apartment's share of the outgoings. The starting point is that the entitlements should be equal. A departure from that principle is allowable only where it is just, or fair, to recognise inequality. The departure must take as its reference point the proposition, from which it departs, that apartment owners should contribute equally to the costs of the building. The focus of the inquiry is the extent to which an apartment unequally causes costs to the body corporate.

32. The third consideration is that if this principle not be the applicable one then there is no basis on which applications for adjustment of a contribution lot entitlement schedules can consistently be made. As the evidence in this application shows, if the inquiry is limited to the extent to which an apartment creates costs, or consumes services, above or below the average, one can readily determine what the contribution lot entitlement should be. The high degree of similarity in the reports of Mr Sheehan and Mr Linkhorn demonstrates this. If the inquiry be wider and include such nebulous criteria as the structure of the scheme, or the nature, features and characteristics of the apartments in the scheme, and the purposes for which they are used, there is no intelligible basis on which there could be a consistent and coherent determination of applications for adjustment of lot entitlements. Each case would be determined idiosyncratically and a vast variety of circumstances might be relied upon to depart from, and therefore erode, the principle said to be paramount, that there should be an equality of entitlements.

33. Accordingly I would construe s 49 of the Act, and in particular subsection (4), as meaning that those identified matters to which a court may have regard are to be regarded only to the extent, if any, that they affect the cost of operating a community title scheme.

34. The evidence adduced by both parties proceeded on this basis. It established that:

- The present lot entitlement schedule is not equal
- The present lot entitlement schedule is not just and equitable
- An equal contribution lot entitlement schedule would not be just and equitable
- A contribution lot entitlement schedule in the terms compiled by Mr Sheehan or Mr Linkhorn would be just and equitable.

35. The applicants indicated that they would accept an adjustment to the schedule to be in the terms appearing in the reports of either Mr Sheehan or Mr Linkhorn, or so that the lot entitlements were equal. I think it appropriate to order the adjustment to be in accordance with Mr Linkhorn's schedule. The differences are small but his approach adjusted for the cost of the lifts with greater precision than did Mr Sheehan's. As well the order will affect existing rights so that it is appropriate to make the least adjustment necessary to give effect to the principles required by the Act. By adopting the proposal advanced by the respondent's witness this principle is respected.

36. I would propose that the application for leave to appeal be granted and that the appeal be allowed. I would set aside the order of the District Court and instead order that the lot entitlement contribution schedule for Centrepoint CTS 7779 be adjusted so that the respective contribution lot entitlements recorded in the community management scheme be as follows:

New South Wales Court of Appeal

Judgment delivered 27/11/2002

Tort — Negligence — Duty of care — Existence — Breach — Personal injury — Misfeasance — Nonfeasance — Plaintiff victim of crime — Assault occurring on common property — Application of principle in Modbury Triangle Shopping Centre Pty Ltd v Anzil (2001) 205 CLR 254.

From 1983, Ms Drakulic owned Unit 1 in a building, 105 High Street, Mascot. The first defendant was the body corporate which owned the building and its members were the proprietors of the units. The second defendant was the manager of the building. At all material times the principal of the second defendant was Mr Warren Platt, its only other employee being his step-daughter. The foyer was common property owned by the defendant Strata Plan Proprietors and was fitted with a door of lockable design. On 3 May 1993 Mr Platt requested a locksmith to disarm the locking mechanisms. On 6 May 1993, this was done by removing the knobs from the handles and the internal locking mechanisms. On 9 September 1993 at 2.45 am the plaintiff returned from work, parked her car, came through the front door and was attacked by a male intruder who robbed her of her handbag and injured her badly. The plaintiff sued the defendants for negligence seeking damages for personal injury. The defendants appealed from a judgment by Nash DCJ on 15 June 2001 in favour of the Ms Drakulic.

The defendants submitted that ``the unpredictable criminal behaviour of the intruder'' was not reasonably foreseeable; that even if the intruder's behaviour was reasonably foreseeable, there was no duty of care owed to Ms Drakulic in relation to it, because the case did not fall within the limited category of circumstances in which the law of negligence imposed liability for omissions to prevent harm caused by third parties. There had been no ``high level of recurrent, predictable criminal behaviour'' in the language of Gleeson CJ in Modbury Triangle Shopping Centre Pty Ltd v Anzil (2000) 205 CLR 254 at 33 apart from evidence of two or perhaps more break-ins from the plaintiff's balcony into her unit: she was vague as to the precise number. Though there had been break-ins, there had been nothing to put the defendants on notice of any criminal conduct in the common areas. While the trial judge appeared to infer that the defendants had assumed control for the safety of occupants and their visitors by reason of the fact that until 6 May 1993 there had been a locked door (since he assumed that his conclusions would have been different if there had never been a lock), and by reason of the fact that on his characterisation, the building was a ``security building'', that inference was unsound. At no relevant time had the door been kept securely locked, and no relevant person ever regarded the block as a security block. Even if there was a duty of care, it had been discharged by measures short of locking the premises and providing security intercoms, such as external lighting. Even if there had been a breach of a duty of care, it was not causative of the plaintiff's injuries. If the door were locked permanently as the trial judge said it should have been, that fact would become known to any would-be assailant, who in consequence would either take one of the above steps to gain entry or would attack victims as they approached the door from the driveway.

Ms Drakulic's submissions relied on the trial judge's reasoning. First, the risk of the criminal conduct of third parties within the common property was reasonably foreseeable since they could gain entry merely by turning the handle of the door and pushing it open. Secondly, ``Having regard to the special relationship which existed between the plaintiff and the defendants — that is as a unit proprietor and occupier and the owner and manager of the common property of the building — the law did impose on the proprietors a duty to prevent harm to the plaintiff from the criminal conduct of a third party.'' In that regard Ms Drakulic relied on the trial judge's conclusion that ``The building can properly be described as a `security building'.'' Thirdly, the duty to prevent harm was breached by the disarming of the lock, since it created an increased risk of unauthorised entry. That act was not consented to by the members of the body corporate. It should not have been carried out unless a reasonably alternative safe system such as chimes or an intercom system was installed at the same time. Fourthly, Ms Drakulic's injury was caused by the breach because a locked door is a line of resistance to an intruder, the disarming of the lock created an increased risk of unauthorised entry, the assault would not have happened if the door had been locked and probably would not have happened if it had been capable of being locked, and the illegal entry followed by the assault on Ms Drakulic was the very kind of occurrence which could happen by reason of the proprietors' acts.

The defendants submitted that it could not be said that the door probably would have been locked on 9 September had it not been disarmed on 6 May. It was submitted that ``a more accurate finding would have been that the locking mechanism before May 1993 was on some nights effective and on some nights left unlocked.''

The defendants criticised the trial judge for never analysing the issue of whether a relevant duty existed. Two possibilities were left open in the Modbury case for liability outside existing categories, but according to the defendants neither applied. These were based on (a) criminal conduct attended by such a high degree of foreseeability, and predictability, that it was possible to argue that the case would be taken out of the operation of the general principle so as to impose a duty to take reasonable steps to prevent it; or (b) a duty to control the criminal conduct of others where the complaint that was made by the plaintiff was not about the occupier failing to control access to or continued presence on the premises. Nor did it warrant recognition of a duty of care on grounds of a special relationship or special circumstances. The defendants submitted that the contemplated ``exception'' should not be recognised in this case because it would not be a true exception: it would be contrary to the principle itself. The principle itself rested on the capacity of a defendant to control a third party, but the present defendants were not in a position to control access to premises by persons seeking to carry out erratic, antisocial, unpredictable, irrational and criminal behaviour.

The defendants submitted that the essential basis of the Modbury doctrine was that defendants were not to be made liable for failure to act; these defendants were not made liable for failure to act but for their positive action in interfering with a viable system of security.

Held: appeal allowed

1. On balance the proprietors are correct in contending that the evidence casts great doubt on the trial judge's finding that the door ``was probably locked on most nights although on occasions it probably was not''. The frequency of its not being locked appears to have been much greater than the trial judge found. It was often not locked.

2. In view of past incidents and in view of the general risk of robbery late at night, there was a risk that an assault might occur. The risk was real and not far-fetched. Hence it is hard to avoid the conclusion that it was reasonably foreseeable. But while reasonable foreseeability is a necessary condition for liability in negligence, it is not sufficient. That is particularly so where the cause of injury is the criminal act of a third party.

3. Leaving aside contractual cases, it was only in exceptional categories — employer/ employee, school/pupil, bailor/bailee, parent and person whom the parent's child might injure — that defendants owe a duty to plaintiffs to prevent injury by reason of the criminal conduct of third parties. The facts did not fall within any of these categories. Indeed, the position advanced by Ms Drakulic was inconsistent with many key elements in the majority reasoning in the Modbury case.

4. Ms Drakulic did not rely on the proprietor to ensure that the foyer door was locked. She knew it was not locked.

5. The defendants did not assume any responsibility for keeping the door locked. They deliberately unlocked it.

6. The defendants did not have any particular control over third parties who might commit crimes. They had no special knowledge about them. They did not assume any particular responsibility. Ms Drakulic had no special vulnerability within the building which exceeded her vulnerability just before crossing the outside boundary of the land on which it was built or just after crossing that boundary but before entering the front door of the building.

7. The present case did not fall within either of the two possible exceptions to the Modbury doctrine, nor did it warrant recognition of a duty of care on grounds of a special relationship or special circumstances.

8. Misfeasance: it had not been demonstrated that any harm suffered by Ms Drakulic would have been averted by taking the measures said to be required.

9. Nonfeasance: even if there were a duty to provide a more effective security system, failure to meet the possible requirements of that duty could not have caused the injury sued for.

Full text of judgment below

Mason P: I agree with the orders proposed by Heydon JA whose reasons I have had the benefit of reading. Subject to what follows, I agree with his reasons.

2. I prefer not to base my conclusion upon a finding as to causation. My first reason is the difficulty of determining the extent to which Mr Islam's evidence was accepted in light of the general acceptance of the plaintiff coupled with the failure to address the critical discrepancies between the plaintiff's and Mr Islam's evidence. Secondly, I am troubled about addressing the causation issue through the medium of asking, inter alia, whether the assailant might have got at the plaintiff by alternative means (such as waiting in the garden) if barred from entry into the vestibule. It is unclear to me whether that is a relevant inquiry to be made or whether the causation question should not remain focussed exclusively on the linkage between the actual assault and the defaults alleged against the defendants.

3. I base my decision upon absence of duty of care.

4. I am grateful to adopt Heydon JA's exposition of the principles and the authorities.

5. For reasons more fully expounded by Heydon JA, there was no special relationship between the defendants and the plaintiff sufficient to trigger a duty of care that extended to taking safety measures to protect the plaintiff from the risks of injury at the hands of outside assailants. No contractual or other assumption of such responsibility had occurred. Foreseeability of the possibility of injury at the hands of a criminal assailant was not enough to trigger a duty of such scope. Nor was there special vulnerability or (known) reliance on the plaintiff's part. The plaintiff knew that the foyer door was not locked. The fact that some steps in providing safety lighting had been taken did not mean that the defendants thereby placed themselves in a relationship generating the requisite special duty. It was neither reasonable nor just to place such a duty of care on the defendants' shoulders.

6. In other words, the case falls within the general principles discussed in Modbury Triangle Shopping Centre Pty Ltd v Anzil (2000) 205 CLR 254. And it does not attract the possible exceptions discussed therein, relating to (1) ``a high level of recurrent, predictable, criminal behaviour'' (per Gleeson CJ at [30]. See also Hayne J at [117]. Cf Callinan J at [143], citing WD & HO Wills (Australia) Ltd v State Rail Authority of New South Wales (1998) 43 NSWLR 338 at 359); and (2) to occupiers who fail to control access to or continued presence on the premises (per Hayne J at [117]). I agree with Heydon JA's comments about these two possibilities and their inapplicability to the facts of the present case.

7. It remains for me to address the argument suggesting that the Modbury principles do not apply to the defendants' ``misfeasance'', using that term in the sense discussed by Heydon JA. In my view, the present case does not fall within any such qualification. There was no contractual or other assumption of binding responsibility on the part of the defendants that the earlier locking system would be kept in place. The locking system was withdrawn, either with or without the formal authority of the body corporate, but in circumstances which put the plaintiff fully on notice.

8. If and to the extent that there was some irregularity or lack of authority in the dealings of the body corporate and its agents regarding the lock, this cannot be invoked in the realm of duty of care. Whether the lock should or should not be disarmed was a matter of controversy on which different views were held by various residents. ``Cost'' factors played their part, in two related senses. First, to some residents the burden of having to come out from the units to open the front door of the vestibule outweighed the perceived benefit of the added protection of keeping it locked. Second, it would be costly to all to have to install an intercom system together with a facility for residents to cause the outer door to be opened to admit intended guests.

9. In these respects, the position was similar to that discussed in WD & HO Wills, where the shared cost of maintaining security at the outer perimeter of the rail terminal was one which some occupiers were not prepared to pay. Earlier security arrangements were therefore deliberately withdrawn by the State Rail Authority, with the full knowledge of the occupants, some of whom (like the plaintiff) were unhappy and protested. This left the several occupants to make their own arrangements for internal security. Such action, deliberate though it was on the part of the State Rail Authority, did not mean that an extended duty of care sprang up (see at 355. See also Modbury at 302 [147] per Callinan J.)

Heydon JA: This is an appeal from a judgment and verdict for $298,349 given by Nash DCJ on 15 June 2001 in favour of the plaintiff. He also ordered the defendants to pay the plaintiff's costs of the action (including costs on an indemnity basis from 31 March 2000). Judgment was reserved after a trial on 1-4 May 2001. Initially on 7 June a long and careful oral judgment was delivered and orders were pronounced on that day. The orders were revised on 15 June 2001.

11. The defendants appeal on both liability and damages.

Background

12. From 1983, the plaintiff owned Unit 1 in a building, 105 High Street, Mascot. That building comprised fifteen units on three floors above garages at ground level. The first defendant was the body corporate owning the building and its members were the proprietors of the units. The second defendant was the manager of the building. At all material times the principal of the second defendant was Mr Warren Platt, its only other employee being his step-daughter, Mrs Beverly McKeown.

13. The trial judge described the building thus.

> ``The building comprised fifteen units on three floors, there being a number of garages at ground level off a common driveway between it and 103 High Street. There were also some open car parking spaces at the rear of the building, one of which was available for and used by the plaintiff. The building had two entrances from doors into foyers and upstairs and landings to the units. The first entry from the street, off the driveway, was to units 1 to 6 comprising three floors with two units per floor and the second entry was to units 7 to 15. There was no way a person could get from inside the building from units 1 to 6 to units 7 to 15 and vice versa."

14. The trial judge made the following findings about the entry doors to the building.

``The building was constructed somewhere about the late 1950s to mid-1960s. When constructed, the entry doors were lockable from the inside by pressing a knob or button on a circular handle which contained a lock. Egress was obtained by turning the circular knob handle which, if it was locked, would automatically unlock the door which would be pulled open. If it was then closed without touching the knob in the middle of the handle it would not lock. If that knob was pressed before it was closed the door was locked on closing. To gain entry, if the door was not locked, the handle merely had to be turned and the door pushed open. If it was locked a key had to be used. After gaining entry the door could be locked by pressing the knob in the handle. If this was not done the door remained unlocked. Consequently, the only time a key was needed to open the door was to gain entry if it had been locked from inside by pressing the knob on the handle; this being either on entry to or egress from the building.

I infer that, when the units were originally sold, the owner of each unit was provided with at least one key to the door giving entry to the foyer for that particular unit and, on leasing or re-sale of any unit, it was expected the key or keys would be provided to the tenant or purchaser in the same way as a key to the particular unit itself would be provided. On her purchase of unit 1 the plaintiff was provided with at least one key to the foyer door which she still has."

15. On 3 May 1993 Mr Platt requested a locksmith to disarm the locking mechanisms. On 6 May 1993 this was done by removing the knobs from the handles and the internal locking mechanisms.

16. From 1987 the plaintiff was employed in a bookbinding business. She worked in the afternoon shift and often did overtime. On those nights she habitually returned as late as 2.30-2.45am. On 9 September 1993 at 2.45am the plaintiff returned from work, parked her car, came through the front door and was attacked by a very tall and strong male intruder with considerable brutality. He came down the stairs as she began to go up them. He was wearing a dark stocking over his face. He had a cloth in his hand smelling of ``something similar to methylated spirits", which the plaintiff also described as ``some rag with some poison", and which police documents suggest was ammonia. He put the rag on her mouth and this made her dizzy. He had a large knife with which he threatened her and which cut her hand in the course of the struggle. He robbed her of her handbag and injured her badly.

The trial judge's reasoning

17. The trial judge considered the evidence in detail. He stated that the plaintiff was a credible and reliable witness, though mistaken on some aspects; that Mr Platt was not generally credible or reliable; and that Mr Islam, the occupier of Unit 2, was credible but in some respects unreliable. He then made certain findings of fact about hotly contested questions.

18. The trial judge found that the plaintiff telephoned the office of the second defendant at least a few times between May and September 1993 to complain about the fact, as she perceived it, that the lock was broken and to seek to have it fixed; that Mrs McKeown told her that Mr Platt was unavailable and that she would give him the message; that Mrs McKeown gave the messages to Mr Platt; but that he did not contact the plaintiff or do anything about the complaints before the plaintiff was assaulted. The trial judge said that the plaintiff saw Mr Platt and asked him to send someone to fix the door, and that he said they were going to make it a security door: but in fact this incident took place a couple of months after the attack, not before it.

19. The trial judge also found that there was a notice near the entry door to the plaintiff's part of the building purporting to be from Mr Platt stating that the door was to be locked from 9pm.

20. The trial judge found that the entry door was probably locked on most nights before 6 May 1993, although on occasions it probably was not. The accuracy of this important finding was challenged by the defendants in a significant way.

21. Finally, the trial judge found that no meeting of the body corporate or its executive committee ever took place at which a decision to disarm the lock was made. The decision had been made by Mr Platt and Mr Cavar, the occupant of Unit 5, who had complained to Mr Platt that the main entrance door lock was defective in that on occasion it stuck and would not turn, thus preventing entry.

22. The trial judge then set out what he called ``important facts".

> ``At all times prior to 6 May 1993 the building was what can properly be described as a `security building' because the entry door, for which all six occupiers of the relevant part of the building could have been provided with keys and for which the plaintiff had and used keys, was lockable. Admittedly, if it was locked all the time, this would cause some inconvenience for some of the occupants who had visitors because there was no direct contact available from outside the building to the various units.
> [140325]
> [140325]
>
> This, however, could have been eliminated completely, at reasonable expense, by the installation of a radio-controlled chimes system to each unit where the cost for chimes locks and keys was in the vicinity of four hundred dollars for those six units.
>
> At all relevant times this system was known to Platt who referred to it at the AGM of the Body Corporate held on 21 September 1993; that is only twelve days after this assault on the plaintiff and which caused Platt to raise it at that meeting. A number (not known on the evidence) of the proprietors of units and Platt, the one who managed the building, did not have a key to the entry door. However, all of them should have and this should have been insisted upon by the first and second defendants.
>
> On 6 May 1993, without authorisation of a general meeting of the Body Corporate or its executive committee, but by arrangement between Cavar, the proprietor of unit 5 on the top floor of the building, and Platt, who contacted the locksmith, the lock to the entry door was disarmed so that it was impossible for it to be locked. A number (unknown) of proprietors were apparently not unduly concerned about intruders entering the building through an unlocked door, probably because they felt secure in their units and did not give thought to what could have happened as a result of the entry door being unlocked; that is people gaining entry to the building and knocking on unit doors to see if anyone was home or with a person such as the one who assaulted the plaintiff, if the door to a unit happened to be answered, forcing his way in and the consequences of course could be grave for any occupant.
> The assault upon the plaintiff occurred inside the building. It could not have happened if the entry door had been locked and would probably not have happened if, as it would probably have been prior to 6 May 1993, the door had been capable of being locked and particularly after 9pm in accordance with the notice near the door. It also could not have happened if the chimes system had been installed; even if only as a cheap temporary measure before an intercom system as was later installed.
> I am convinced that the lock to the entry door ought not to have been disarmed and rendered useless unless a reasonably safe alternative system such as the chimes or intercom system was installed at the time. I am also convinced that, as later happened, any alteration to the building, especially affecting security to the occupants and their guests, should be an agenda matter on a notice of the meeting so that all unit proprietors, or their proxies, who are interested in that particular item, can take part in discussions and any decision relating thereto and the defendants, that is the Body Corporate and manager, would only act on a resolution of such a meeting.
> The disarming of the lock to the entry door was such a matter and ought not to have happened without such consideration and decision. It was not in the category of urgent repair or maintenance within the discretion of the manager.It having happened, urgent attention should have been given to rectifying that situation, particularly after receiving complaints from the plaintiff about it. These complaints ought not to have been ignored as they were, no doubt because Platt realised he should not have arranged for the lock to be disarmed and hoped nothing, such as the assault on the plaintiff or any vandalism to the common property inside the entry door, would happen."

23. The trial judge then analysed the judgments in Modbury Triangle Shopping Centre Pty Ltd v Anzil (2000) 205 CLR 254. The first plaintiff in that case was the employee-manager of a video shop conducted by a tenant in a shopping centre owned by the defendant. The second was his wife. On leaving at about 10.30pm, the first plaintiff was attacked by three men in the shopping centre car park, the lights to which had been turned out no later than 10pm. The majority of the High Court held that there was in general no duty on occupiers to prevent harm to lawful visitors from criminals unless there was some special relationship; that there was no such relationship in this case; that there was no sufficient forewarning of the attack being likely; and that the failure to have the lights on had not caused loss. In the course of the trial judge's analysis of the Modbury case, he indicated that the causation difficulties in that case did not arise in this, because he considered that if the entry door had been locked the plaintiff would not have been injured. He also said, after drawing attention to the stress in that case on control as a factor leading to liability, that a locked entry door would have enabled control of the assailant.

24. The trial judge then expressed his conclusions as follows.

> ``Home unit occupation has been an integral part of living in our society for many years. Indeed, this building was probably built about forty years ago.For a long time it has been common knowledge that a desirable feature of home unit buildings is for access to them to be secure and this has been virtually taken for granted. The reason is obvious. There has also, for a long time unfortunately, been in our community a real fear that intruders, usually bent on some form of criminal activity including assaults, robberies, break enter and steal and the like upon occupiers and/or their guests and/or their property could gain access to the common property of the building and also even one or more of the units by forcing open the door to such unit or, as I have previously mentioned, merely by knocking on the door or ringing the door bell and, when it is opened, gaining entry to it. It is also well known that mere vandalism to parts of the common property can occur if such entry is available generally.
> Consequently, there can be no doubt that, if an intruder can gain entry to a block of home units such as the building in this case merely by turning the handle on the door and pushing it open, there is a foreseeable risk that, if the occasion arose, such an intruder would assault a person such as the plaintiff who is lawfully on the common property.
>
> Having regard to all the relevant principles I am satisfied, as owner and manager of the building, each of the defendants owed a duty of care to the plaintiff. To comply with this duty they must avoid acts and/or omissions which they can reasonably foresee would be likely to cause injury to the plaintiff. In the circumstances of this case, having regard to the special relationship which existed between the plaintiff and the defendants — that is as a unit proprietor and occupier and the owner and manager of the common property of the building — the law does impose on the defendants a duty to prevent harm to the plaintiffs from the criminal conduct of a third party, particularly within the common property of the building where a risk of such conduct is reasonably foreseeable.
>
> The defendants did give consideration to and acted upon their duty to the occupiers as far as they reasonably could by installing Vandalites and ensuring that the outside lighting was in reasonable condition. This would not only assist the occupiers in seeing any danger, such as a defect in the pathway or driveway or if there was some obstruction such as a ball left by a child which could result in injury to any of them and could also deter unauthorised persons from trespassing thereon or waiting outside the building to attack someone such as the plaintiff on returning to it from work or an outing, particularly at night. But the defendants did not give proper or any consideration, other than of convenience, to the risk of an intruder unlawfully entering the building, as happened here, and attacking an occupant lawfully returning to his or her unit or indeed, any of the guests of such an occupant.
> If the criminal conduct had occurred outside the building there would probably be no claim against the defendant for such an assault. This may also be the case if there had been no means of locking the entry door at any time and no suggestion that there should have been, but that is not the situation here. The act of arranging for the disarming of the lock to the entry door of the building was no doubt a matter of convenience to some of the occupiers, but it also made them all, including the plaintiff, vulnerable to the attack which did occur to her. The mere fact that there is no evidence of such an assault occurring previously is irrelevant. There should have been no such assault in the first instance and, if the entry door was locked — as it probably would have been — the assault on the plaintiff would not have happened.

The plain fact is that between 6 May 1993 and 9 September 1993 the door could not be locked because of the act of the defendants in immobilising the locking device on the entry door in circumstances where, prior to that, there was a system in place that could, and in fact at times did, prevent entry of persons, especially unauthorised persons, into the building. The entry of the intruder and the assault on the plaintiff was the very kind of occurrence which could happen by reason of the acts of the defendant. The immobilisation of the lock and/or the failure to put in place a safe alternative system, such as the chime system which could be cheaply obtained, left the occupants, including the plaintiff and their guests, vulnerable to what in fact happened to her. This constituted a breach by the defendants of its duty of care to the plaintiff, allowed the intruder to gain entry to the stairwell of the common property of the building and caused the intruder to gain access to the building which he could not have done if the defendants had not breached their duty of care to the plaintiff.

In the circumstances the defendants were negligent as alleged and there will be a verdict for the plaintiff against them."

25. In its references to a ``special relationship'' and to the irrelevance of there having been no evidence of any earlier assaults, the passage is plainly written with the reasoning in Modbury Triangle Shopping Centre Pty Ltd v Anzil in mind.

Preliminary analysis of the trial judge's reasoning

26. The plaintiff's case was put in two ways in the Statement of Claim. The first way concerned various failures to act. The second way concerned a wrongful positive act.

27. The alleged failures to act were described thus:

``(a) Failed to take any or any adequate or effective action or precaution to ensure that the foyer door was locked.

(b) Having been made aware, prior to the time and date of the attack, of the requirement for an effective lock to be placed on the foyer door failed to ensure that such a lock was so placed.

(d) Failed to take all reasonable measures to ensure the safety of the Plaintiff.

(e) Failed to take all reasonable measures to avoid damage to the Plaintiff.

...

(g) Failed to repair or adequately repair the common property of the Proprietor's building.

(h) Failed to maintain or adequately maintain the common property of the Proprietor's building.

(i) Failed to protect the Plaintiff by ensuring that the entrance door of the Proprietor's building was secure and relevantly locked.''

These allegations are wide enough to encompass contentions that the defendant had a duty to devise and install a better system of security than had existed either before or after May 1993.

28. The wrongful act relied on was described thus:

``(c) Caused and/or permitted to cause the lock mechanism on the foyer door to be inoperative by reason of the removal of a locking pin device which rendered the lock mechanism ineffective and non-operational.''

That, in focussing on a single positive act, naturally raises causation inquiries as to whether the retention of a lock mechanism in place would have saved the plaintiff from injury.

29. These two different ways in which the plaintiff's case was pleaded correspond with two separate strands in the trial judge's reasoning.

30. At times the trial judge proceeded on the basis that the case before him should be treated as a case like the Modbury case, namely a case posing the issue: ``Are the defendants liable for failing to install a satisfactory security system after 6 May 1993 and before 9 September 1993?'' It is convenient to call this the ``non feasance'' basis.

31. At other times the trial judge proceeded on the basis that the case was different from the Modbury case, and was a case posing the issue: ``Are the defendants liable for interfering on 6 May 1993 with a security system which was satisfactory up to that date?'' It is convenient to call this the ``misfeasance'' basis.

32. The indications that the trial judge was proceeding on the non-feasance basis include passages in which he describes the relationship between the plaintiff and the defendants as ``special'' in the Modbury sense of ``special relationship''. They also include the trial judge's quotation of passages in which Hayne J posed and left open the question whether a failure to control entry by criminals onto premises creates liability: the trial judge answered that question affirmatively.

33. The indications that the trial judge was proceeding on the misfeasance basis include passages such as the following:

``... The lock to the entry door ought not to have been disarmed and rendered useless unless a reasonably safe alternative system such as the chimes or intercom system was installed at the time....

The immobilisation of the lock and/or the failure to put in place a safe alternative system, such as the chimes system which could be cheaply obtained, left the occupants, including the plaintiff and their guests, vulnerable to what in fact happened to her....

... if there had been no lock at any time on the entry door handle and no suggestion that there should have been, there probably would have been no liability in the present case....

[There may have been no claim against the defendants] if there had been no means of locking the entry door at any time and no suggestion that there should have been, but that is not the situation here....

... The immobilisation of the lock and/or the failure to put in place a safe alternative system, such as the chimes system which could be cheaply obtained, left the occupants, including the plaintiff and their guests, vulnerable to what in fact happened to her.''

34. The third and fourth of these passages, in particular, contradict the non feasance case, and suggest that the heart of the trial judge's reasoning turns on a narrow point — namely, the proposition that if there had never been a locking system the defendants would not have been liable, but that to interfere with a workable locking system without providing a substitute generated liability. The trial judge himself does not appear to have been conscious of the two possible paths to liability or of their tendency, as expounded by him, to conflict.

The defendants' arguments to this Court in outline

35. It is convenient to take the defendants' submissions in a different order from that in which they were advanced.

36. First, the defendants submitted that ``the unpredictable criminal behaviour of the intruder'' was not reasonably foreseeable.

37. Secondly, the defendants submitted that even if the intruder's behaviour was reasonably foreseeable, there was no duty of care owed to the plaintiff in relation to it, because the case did not fall within the limited category of circumstances in which the law of negligence imposed liability for omissions to prevent harm caused by third parties. There had been no ``high level of recurrent, predictable criminal behaviour'' in the language of Gleeson CJ in Modbury Triangle Shopping Centre Pty Ltd v Anzil (2000) 205 CLR 254 at [33]. In that case, there had been a break in to a restaurant near the car park, two attempts to break into an automatic teller machine and the break in of the window of a car parked in the car park. There was no equivalent in the present case, apart from evidence of two or perhaps more breakins from the plaintiff's balcony into her unit: she was vague as to the precise number. Though there had been break ins, there had been nothing to put the defendants on notice of any criminal conduct in the common areas. While the trial judge appeared to infer that the defendants had assumed control for the safety of occupants and their visitors by reason of the fact that until 6 May 1993 there had been a locked door (since he assumed that his conclusions would have been different if there had never been a lock), and by reason of the fact that on his characterisation, the building was a ``security building'', that inference was unsound. Whatever the position had been soon after the building was constructed, at no relevant time had the door been kept securely locked, and no relevant person ever regarded the block as a security block.

38. Thirdly, even if there was a duty of care, it had been discharged by measures short of locking the premises and providing security intercoms, such as external lighting.

39. Fourthly, even if there had been a breach of a duty of care, it was not causative of the plaintiff's injuries. The only evidence was that when the plaintiff entered the building the intruder was on the stairs above her coming down. The intruder, seeking to avoid being seen in the hallway, may have gained entry by other means, such as an unlocked window or a balcony, as intruders had before. Even if the door had been locked, the lock could have been picked, or the door forced open in some way, or the door could have been left open by an occupant stepping outside for a short time, or the door could have been left ajar so that a lawful visitor might gain entry, or the assailant could have walked in behind an occupier who had opened the door. If the door were locked permanently as the trial judge said it should have been, that fact would become known to any would-be assailant, who in consequence would either take one of the above steps to gain entry or would attack victims as they approached the door from the driveway. If the duty was as high as the plaintiff said, it could only be met by the provision of a fulltime security officer at the door at all times, and this technique had not been investigated at the trial.

The plaintiff's arguments to this Court in outline

40. The plaintiff's written submissions did not advance independent arguments for the dismissal of the appeal. Instead they relied on the trial judge's reasoning, relevant parts of which may be set out in the following order.

41. First, the risk of the criminal conduct of third parties within the common property was reasonably foreseeable since they could gain entry merely by turning the handle of the door and pushing it open.

42. Secondly, ``having regard to the special relationship which existed between the plaintiff and the defendants — that is as a unit proprietor and occupier and the owner and manager of the common property of the building — the law does impose on the defendants a duty to prevent harm to the plaintiff from the criminal conduct of a third party.'' In that regard the plaintiff relied on the trial judge's conclusion that ``The building can properly be described as a `security building' because the entry door, for which all six occupiers of the relevant part of the building could have been provided with keys and [for] which the respondent had and used keys was lockable [up to May 1993]....''

43. Thirdly, the duty to prevent harm was breached by the disarming of the lock, since it created an increased risk of unauthorised entry. That act was not consented to by the members of the first defendant. It should not have been carried out unless a reasonably alternative safe system such as chimes or an intercom system was installed at the same time.

44. Fourthly, the plaintiff's injury was caused by the breach because a locked door is a line of resistance to an intruder, the disarming of the lock created an increased risk of unauthorised entry, the assault would not have happened if the door had been locked and probably would not have happened if it had been capable of being locked, and the illegal entry followed by the assault on the plaintiff was the very kind of occurrence which could happen by reason of the defendants' acts.

45. The plaintiff concluded:

> ``The respondent submits that his Honour's findings and conclusions were open to him on the evidence. There was a clear breach of duty. As Dixon J pointed out in Betts v Whittingslowe (1945) 71 CLR 637 at 649:
> > `breach of duty coupled with an accident of the kind that might thereby be caused is enough to justify an inference, in the absence of any sufficient reason to the contrary, that in fact the accident did occur owing to the act or omission amounting to the breach'."

The defendants in effect retorted that there were ``sufficient'' reasons to the contrary to rebut the allegation of causation.

Preliminary factual disputes

46. Before turning to the legal arguments for the parties, it is convenient to deal with various factual controversies raised in the appeal.

How often did the entry door lock at night before it was disarmed?

47. The trial judge said:

> ``On all the evidence I find it was probably locked on most nights although on occasions it probably was not. Any occupant returning after 9pm would probably have locked it but may not. For a long time after 6 May 1993 it could not be locked and this could lead anyone to forget that there were many times before then that it was locked."

A related finding appeared later:

> ``The plain fact is that between 6 May 1993 and 9 September 1993 the door could not be locked because of the act of the defendants in immobilising the locking device on the entry door in circumstances where, prior to that, there was a system in place that could,
> [140330]
> [140330]
> and in fact at times did, prevent entry of persons, especially unauthorised persons, into the building."

The trial judge also said:

> ``if the entry door, as it was, was capable of being locked and if it was locked, as it probably would have been, the crime would not have been committed."

48. The defendants submitted that ``a more accurate finding would have been that the locking mechanism before May 1993 was on some nights effective and on some nights left unlocked." They then submitted that it could not be said that the door probably would have been locked on 9 September had it not been disarmed on 6 May. The submission was made for the following reasons.

> (a) In chief Mr Platt said that before May 1993 he went to the premises at least five times and could get access even though he did not have a key. While the trial judge was critical of Mr Platt's evidence generally, he did not specifically reject that evidence.
> (b) Mr Islam, an occupant of a unit in the building, said in chief that he had no key and never locked the door. He never observed any occupant to be using a key. He had moved through the door without impediment. In about one week in four he would arrive at the units at 11pm or later and obtain access without a key. The trial judge said he lacked reliability in minor respects, but did not specifically criticise that part of his evidence.

(c) While the plaintiff always used her key, it would not have been possible for her to detect whether or not the door was in fact locked.

49. Counsel for the plaintiff submitted that Mr Platt and Mr Islam had not been believed. He submitted that the plaintiff unquestionably had a key and unquestionably used it. Further, once the locking mechanism had been deactivated, she complained about it, thinking it was broken. Hence it could be inferred that her usage of the key revealed that the door was normally locked.

50. What is to be made of Mr Platt's evidence? He adhered in cross-examination to his examination-in-chief and indeed said ``On the occasions that I visited the building frequently.... Yes, frequently, the door was never locked and I was never requested for a key by the owners.'' Under the heading ``Undisputed Facts'' the trial judge said:

> ``Strange as it may seem Platt did not have a key to the entry door. The entry door was not always locked but, particularly at night, it was at least sometimes locked. To get keys cut cost no more than five dollars each.''

Under the same heading the trial judge said:

> ``He agreed it was obvious from Cavar's complaints that the entry door had been locked, at least during the night, prior to 6 May 1993. He did not know if the occupants had a key or keys to the entry door prior to May 1993 but his belief was that there were no keys to this particular lock held by any of the occupants.''

It does not seem easy to ignore this evidence, but perhaps counsel for the plaintiff was correct in saying it was rejected by reason of the following words of the trial judge:

> ``I find that Platt was not generally credible or reliable. His evidence was, in many aspects, clearly wrong particularly when compared with objective documentary material. As I have said, he gave his evidence more in the nature of an advocate for the defendants and tailored it to endeavour to support their case and to discredit the plaintiff's evidence.''

Let Mr Platt, then, whose position was in various respects a difficult one, be put on one side.

51. Let it also be assumed that the plaintiff did believe the door was locked on many occasions and indeed that it was. There can be no doubt that it was if only because Mr Cavar complained about it.

52. It is not easy to put aside Mr Islam's evidence. Not only was it very strong in chief, but it remained so in cross-examination. One passage is as follows:

> ``Q. Well you didn't have any problems during the period that the lock worked properly did you?
>
> A. There wasn't any lock.
>
> ...
>
> Q. And from time to time the front door was locked up until about 6 May 1993, is that right?
>
> [140331]
> [140331]
>
> A. When I, in — when I was in a unit, when I moved in, I didn't have any key for the lock, I didn't have to open any, any time to get in.
>
> Q. We'll come to that. But up until 6 May 1993, from time to time the front door was locked wasn't it?
>
> A. That's what I'm saying like, when I moved in I didn't —
>
> HIS HONOUR: Q. No, you're not being asked that, whether or not you had a key, were there occasions on which the front door was locked?
>
> A. I don't remember.
>
> DUPREE: Q. You don't remember?
> A. No.

Q. But it's possible from time to time, up until 6 May 1993, from the time you moved in, it's possible that from time to time the front door was locked?

OBJECTION

A. I haven't seen any, any time."

53. Another passage was:

``Q. In 105, you purchased a unit?

A. Right.

Q. And when you bought your unit you were given a number of keys, is that right?

A. Yeah.

Q. And how many keys were you given?

A. I don't remember how many keys.

Q. A number was it?

A. A number of keys, yeah.

Q. And it may well be that one of those keys fitted the front door?

OBJECTION. QUESTION WITHDRAWN.

Q. Is it possible that one of those keys was a key to the front door?

OBJECTION. QUESTION PRESSED. QUESTION ALLOWED.

A. We never needed a key for the front door. Only one abnormal key was there, I remember that was after the outside door there was a storeroom, big storeroom, there was a key for that, I remember because it's a big room and later Solid Strata took that key from me and other people to make that area as a meeting place.

Q. But when you purchased the property you were given a number of keys?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And is it possible that one of those keys that you were given was a key to the front door?

A. Of course it might [be] possible, but I never, I never had to open the door with the key or anything.

Q. And it's quite clear isn't it, in your mind, that there was a locking device on that front door from the time when you moved in to at least 6 May 1993?

A. Whether there is a locking device or not, I don't remember, because never needed.

Q. Just have a look at photo 10 in exhibit C?

A. Yes, but I never needed it, that's why I didn't notice.

Q. You see that is photo 10 in exhibit C — just have a look on the back of it Mr Islam?

A. Yeah. You're talking about the knob?

HIS HONOUR: Yes that's what he's talking about.

WITNESS: Or this top, the top lock.

HIS HONOUR: Q. Show me?

A. There's a lock.

Q. He's talking about the bottom one?

A. The bottom one?

Q. The top one's the new one isn't it?

A. Yeah.

Q. The old one is the bottom one?

A. Yeah, the bottom one looks like a key slot there, yeah.

DUPREE: Q. And that key slot was there from the time when you moved in throughout the period to when you moved out, that's right isn't it? A. Now I can notice the thing, but I never, I never had to open with the key."

54. The trial judge said of Mr Islam:

``Generally speaking Islam was a credible witness but was lacking in reliability on some aspects which I consider he regarded as minor, no doubt because he was endeavouring to recall matters which did not really concern him, at short notice, from a long time previously. However he did demonstrate a recollection of some matters which were discussed at meetings attended by him but did not give specific details of any such discussions."

55. It is difficult to believe that when the trial judge said that, he was treating as a ``minor'' matter the question whether Mr Islam could gain access without a key. It was potentially a major matter. After the trial judge made the finding that the entry door was probably locked on most nights, he said that for a long time after 6 May 1993 it could not be locked ``and this could lead anyone to forget that there were many times before then that it was locked''. But it is difficult to believe this was an oblique rejection of Mr Islam's evidence about his ability to enter without a key, particularly after 11pm a quarter of the time. If Mr Islam's evidence on a potentially major matter was to be rejected, one would have expected this to have been done specifically, and with reasons. Further, earlier in the reasons for judgment, under the heading ``Undisputed Facts'', the trial judge said:

``Not all occupants of the building had front door keys. Indeed Mr Islam, whose family comprised himself, his wife and two children, did not use a key to the front door and no-one complained to him about not having a key. He occupied unit 2, on the same floor as the plaintiff's unit, from about June or July 1992 until about 1997. Islam worked during the relevant period and occasionally on late shift, about quarter of the time, he returned home about 11pm."

Further, although Mr Islam was cross-examined about his use of a key, he was not cross- examined about having come home around 11pm one quarter of the time. It was perhaps for that reason that the trial judge treated Mr Islam's evidence about never using a key and about gaining entry without it at 11pm a quarter of the time as establishing ``Undisputed Facts''. In short, it is not possible to regard the trial judge's findings about the frequency with which the door was left unlocked as credit- based in a manner preventing this Court from reaching conclusions of its own on the strength of the underlying evidence.

56. On balance the defendants are correct in contending that Mr Islam's evidence cast great doubt on the trial judge's finding that the door ``was probably locked on most nights although on occasions it probably was not''. The frequency of its not being locked appears to have been much greater than the trial judge found. It was often not locked.

Was the building a ``security'' building?

57. The trial judge characterised the building as a ``security building''. The defendants submitted that it was not, or if it was it was only so in the limited sense that its door had a locking mechanism on its knob. This point was said to go only to the question whether the existence of a ``security building'' founded some expectation that security might be maintained. The point is of no significance. The trial judge indicated the sense in which he used the expression: ``The entry door, for which all six occupiers of the relevant part of the building could have been provided with keys and for which the plaintiff had and used keys, was lockable.'' The term itself was not decisive in relation to any material step in the trial judge's reasoning.

Modes of entry

58. The defendants criticised the following statement of the trial judge:

``The assault upon the plaintiff occurred inside the building. It could not have happened if the entry door had been locked and would probably not have happened if, as it would probably have been prior to 6 May 1993, the door had been capable of being locked and particularly after 9pm in accordance with the notice near the door. It also could not have happened if the chimes system had been installed; even if only as a cheap temporary measure before an intercom system as was later installed."

59. The defendants said the passage contained the following errors. Their criticisms are in similar vein to their causation arguments.

(a) It assumed that the front door was the only possible point of entry, whereas there had earlier been two and possibly more entries through the plaintiff's balcony: her windows were barred but her balcony was not, and the intruders broke through the balcony door. Once an intruder got into a unit through a balcony, he could leave the unit and enter the hallway: there was no evidence that the units had deadlocks.

(b) The passage assumed that the person who attacked the plaintiff could not have entered via the front door with, or immediately following, another entrant even if the door had been locked.

(c) The passage assumed that the person who attacked the plaintiff was already in the building, in a unit or hidden elsewhere, when she entered. A masked armed bandit prepared to inflict the injuries on the plaintiff which the assailant had inflicted was not a person behaving according to normal standards of behaviour, and may have taken special steps to become familiar with the plaintiff's movements in coming home at 2 or 2.30am to an empty unit accessible from the street.

(d) The passage, in using the word ``probably'', failed to make allowance for the occasions when the door was unlocked — which it always was at 11pm on the twenty-five percent of occasions when Mr Islam tested the point, and hence which indicated that it was unlocked more often than not.

(e) The passage, in referring to a chimes system, did not make it plain what was meant, whether a chimes system was to operate in conjunction with the locked door, and how a chimes system could overcome criminals who gave some apparently plausible reason why the door should be open (for example that they were from the police, or were tradesmen, or were delivering groceries).

60. The difficulty with several of these criticisms is that they have to be applied to persons who obtained or wished to obtain illicit entry at 2am and in that context lack realism. Further, to some degree they are far-fetched. The actual slackness in the way the door was left unlocked before May 1993 remains a potentially important point.

Was the assault reasonably foreseeable?

61. In view of past incidents and in view of the general risk of robbery late at night, there was a risk that an assault might occur. The risk was real and not far-fetched. Hence it is hard to avoid the conclusion that it was reasonably foreseeable. But while reasonable foreseeability is a necessary condition for liability in negligence, it is not sufficient: Sullivan v Moody (2001) 183 ALR 404. That is particularly so where the cause of injury is the criminal act of a third party: Modbury Triangle Shopping Centre Pty Ltd v Anzil (2000) 205 CLR 254 at [34] note 21, [35] and [143].

Did the defendants owe the plaintiff a duty of care?

62. The defendants submitted that, leaving aside contractual cases, it was only in exceptional categories — employer/employee, school/pupil, bailor/bailee, parent and person whom the parent's child might injure — that defendants owe a duty to plaintiffs to prevent injury by reason of the criminal conduct of third parties; that the present facts did not fall within any of these categories; and that no new exceptional category should be created to cover the present facts. The relationship of occupier and lawful entrant alone did not suffice. Nor did the relationship between the owner of the home unit on the one hand and the body corporate or the building manager on the other. Whatever might be the position if the locking system had been secretly deactivated, in fact all the unit holders knew it had been deactivated or was not working months before the assault, and the plaintiff had complained of this. The defendants criticised the trial judge for never analysing the issue of whether a relevant duty existed.

63. Two possibilities were left open in the Modbury case for liability outside existing categories, but according to the defendants neither applied. The first was raised thus by Gleeson CJ at [30]-[34] (see also Hayne J at [117]):

> ``There may be circumstances in which, not only is there a foreseeable risk of harm from criminal conduct by a third party, but, in addition, the criminal conduct is attended by such a high degree of foreseeability, and predictability, that it is possible to argue that the case would be taken out of the operation of the general principle and the law may impose a duty to take reasonable steps to prevent it. The possibility that knowledge of previous, preventable, criminal conduct, or of threats of such conduct, could arguably give rise to an exceptional duty, appears to have been suggested in Smith v Littlewoods Ltd. It also appears to be the basis upon which United States decisions relating to the
> [140334]
> [140334]
>
> liability of occupiers have proceeded. A leading American textbook states that:
>
> > The duty to take precautions against the negligence of others... involves merely the usual process of multiplying the probability that such negligence will occur by the magnitude of the harm likely to result if it does, and weighing the result against the burden upon the defendant of exercising such care.
>
> There is normally much less reason to anticipate acts on the part of others which are malicious and intentionally damaging than those which are merely negligent; and this is all the more true where, as is usually the case, such acts are criminal. Under all ordinary and normal circumstances, in the absence of any reason to expect the contrary, the actor may reasonably proceed upon the assumption that others will obey the criminal law.
>
> That does not represent an accurate statement of the common law in Australia.
>
> The factor most commonly taken into account in the United States in determining whether criminal activity was reasonably foreseeable is knowledge on the part of the occupier of land of previous incidents of criminality.
>
> It could not reasonably be argued that the present is such a case. There had been illegal behaviour in the area. A restaurant near the car park had been broken into. During a period of a year before the incident in question, there had been two attempts to break into an automatic teller machine. About a year before the incident, the car window of an employee of the video shop had been smashed. This does not indicate a high level of recurrent, predictable criminal behaviour.
> It is unnecessary to express a concluded opinion as to whether foreseeability and predictability of criminal behaviour could ever exist in such a degree that, even in the absence of some special relationship, Australian law would impose a duty to take reasonable care to prevent harm to another from such behaviour. It suffices to say two things: first, as a matter of principle, such a result would be difficult to reconcile with the general rule that one person has no legal duty to rescue another; and secondly, as a matter of fact, the present case is nowhere near the situation postulated."

64. Even if Gleeson CJ's doubts about reconciling recovery even where there was a high degree of foreseeability and predictability of criminal behaviour with the absence of a legal duty on one person to rescue another are put on one side, together with Callinan J's similar doubts at [143], in the present case the foreseeability and predictability of the assault was not of a high order. There had been two, or perhaps more, prior break ins through the balcony of the plaintiff's unit, but not through the front door. There had not been ``a high level of recurrent, predictable criminal behaviour".

65. The other possibility left open in the Modbury case was put thus by Hayne J at [117]:

> ``Established principle provides the answer to the present problem because it reveals that there is no duty to control the criminal conduct of others except in very restricted circumstances. Being an occupier of land should not be added to those exceptional cases, at least where the complaint that is made by the plaintiff is not about the occupier failing to control access to or continued presence on the premises. I would wish to reserve for consideration in a case in which they are raised the questions that are presented by a complaint of that last kind."

66. Here the plaintiff's complaint does not turn on the defendants' failure to control the assailant's continued presence on the premises. In one sense it does turn on their failure to control the assailant's access to the premises. However, the defendants submitted that the contemplated ``exception'' should not be recognised in this case because it would not be a true exception: it would be contrary to the principle itself. The principle itself rests on the capacity of a defendant to control a third party, but the present defendants were not in a position to control access to premises by persons seeking to carry out erratic, antisocial, unpredictable, irrational and criminal behaviour.

67. Counsel for the plaintiff argued that the last two paragraphs quoted from the trial judge's reasons for judgment in [13] above, and the passages quoted in [15] above, constituted a satisfactory analysis of whether and why there was a duty of care. In effect the trial judge held that the system of locking the door was effective to ensure that it was locked on most nights. That system was terminated by a positive act, an act of commission, not a mere omission, and the defendants ignored the plaintiff's complaints. That created a reasonably foreseeable risk of entry by a criminal through the unlocked door.

68. Counsel for the plaintiff submitted that the Modbury case was not adverse to the conclusion of a duty of care based on those circumstances. He submitted that the essential basis of the Modbury doctrine was that defendants were not to be made liable for failure to act; these defendants were not made liable for failure to act but for their positive action in interfering with a viable system of security. He submitted that the occupier owed a duty to take reasonable care to avoid a reasonably foreseeable risk of injury to the plaintiff arising out of the physical condition of the premises, and the plaintiff's injury arose from the defendants'change in the physical condition of the premises.

Conclusion on duty of care

69. It is convenient to deal first with the non feasance case.

The difficulties created by the Modbury doctrine

70. The argument advanced on behalf of the plaintiff, and the reasons for judgment of the trial judge, did not face up sufficiently to the difficulties created by the Modbury case.

71. It is true that one theme in the majority reasoning, particularly as expounded by Gleeson CJ, turns on the undesirability of imposing on occupiers of land a positive duty to act to prevent criminals causing harm. That aspect of the case will be dealt with in considering the plaintiff's arguments so far as they rest on the positive act of disarming the lock on 6 May 1993.

72. But there are many other key elements in the majority reasoning. One part, while acknowledging that criminal conduct is very often reasonably foreseeable, rests on the unpredictability, wantonness and randomness of criminal behaviour, and the corresponding difficulty of eliminating it or greatly reducing the risk of it: see particularly Callinan J at [136]. The reasoning rests on the lack of knowledge which the occupier is likely to have about that behaviour. It rests on the lack of control which occupiers have over criminal third parties, which stands in particular contrast to the control they have over the capacity of the physical condition of the premises to cause physical injury to visitors. Thus at [114] Hayne J said:

``I have emphasised the inability of the appellant to control the conduct of the assailants who injured the first respondent because a duty to take steps to control that conduct should not be found if the person said to owe the duty has not the capacity to fulfil it."

The Modbury reasoning also rests on the irrationality of making a defendant liable for not preventing conduct which the efforts of society as a whole through the legislature, the police force and the criminal courts are directed to preventing. Thus at [113] Hayne J said that the conduct which injured the first plaintiff in that case:

> ``... occurs despite society devoting its resources to deterring and preventing it through the work of police forces and the punishment of those offenders who are caught. That is, such conduct occurs despite the efforts of society as a whole to prevent it. Yet the respondents' contention is that a particular member of that society should be held liable for not preventing it.''

The Modbury doctrine further turns on the relatively minor role of civil defendants in contributing to the loss suffered by plaintiffs at the hands of criminals. Thus at [115] Hayne J said:

> ``The injuries which the first respondent suffered were caused by the wrongful acts of others. If those others could be identified and had sufficient assets to meet a judgment, the first respondent would have full compensation for his injuries. The present action is brought against a party who, if sued with the assailants, would be found liable to contribute little, if anything, to the damages awarded to the first respondent. Yet because the appellant was sued alone, it is said that it is liable for all the damage.''

Hayne J continued by pointing out that to impose liability on the appellant in that case was not only to hold it responsible for conduct it could not control, but to impose liability on a party whose contribution to the injury, compared with that of the assailants, was negligible. The law of tort depends on deterrence and individual responsibility. The imposition of a duty of care on the appellant ``does nothing to deter wrongdoing by the appellant or other occupiers. Further, it would shift financial responsibility for the consequences of crime from the wrongdoer to individual members of society who have little or no capacity to influence the behaviour which caused injury.'' Finally, the Modbury doctrine depends on the highly exceptional character of those cases in which a duty of care to avoid harm from the criminal acts of third parties is recognised in earlier authority.

73. In the case under appeal, like the many others falling outside the areas where there is liability for the criminal acts of third parties, one finds unpredictable, wanton and random criminal behaviour; a lack of knowledge by the defendants about the incidence of that behaviour; a lack of control over those responsible for that behaviour on the part of the defendants; irrationality in holding the defendants civilly liable for what the State has not been able to prevent despite intense efforts to do so and severe criminal sanctions; no more than a relatively minor contribution on the part of the defendants to the loss suffered by the plaintiff in comparison to the role of a criminal; and a lack of analogy between the present case and the standard relationships and circumstances which operate as exceptions to the general rule of non-liability.

Control

74. It is necessary to say something about the issue of ``lack of control'' in view of certain observations of the trial judge. The trial judge said ``the defendants did have control and failed to exercise that control by the act of disarming the lock without installing some other satisfactory means of locking the door''. He also said ``a locked entry door would have controlled the assailant''. And he said ``a lockable and locked door would control'' criminal conduct.

75. To some extent those conclusions are relevant to the avenue of liability left open by Hayne J which is based on controlling the access of persons to the premises, which is considered below. However, for other purposes those conclusions are questionable in several senses. First, for reasons given in more detail later, they are questionable if read as referring to the issue of ``control in fact''. The locked door could not have controlled the assailant so far as he chose to attack persons connected with the units outside the building, or after following them in, or after breaking the door. Secondly, the trial judge's conclusions are questionable as a matter of characterisation. At some parts of the majority judgments in the Modbury case, the word ``control'' is used to refer not to ``control in fact'', but ``right to control''. The defendants lacked ``control'' over the assailant, because he was not in the same position as a child in the care of a parent, or a prisoner who might attack another prisoner. A parent controls a child even if the child is behaving badly, because the parent has a right to control the child, and, as Hayne J said at [111], is ``expected to be able to control the child." That is what Dixon J meant in Smith v Leurs (1945) 70 CLR 256 at 262, quoted by Gleeson CJ at [20], when he said:

> ``it is incumbent upon a parent who maintains control over a young child to take reasonable care so to exercise that control as to avoid conduct on his part exposing the person or property of others to unreasonable danger.''

Officers in charge of Borstal boys have ``control'' of them even if the boys escape. That is what Lord Morris of Borth-y-Gest meant in Dorset Yacht Co Ltd v Home Office [1970] AC 1004 at 1038-1039, referred to with approval by Gleeson CJ at [21], when he said, after quoting the relevant passage from Dixon J's judgment in Smith v Leurs:

> ``In the present case there was... a special relation of this nature.
> There was a special relation in that the officers were entitled to exercise control over boys who to the knowledge of the officers might wish to take their departure and who might well do some damage to property near at hand.''

A gaoler has control over prisoners even if those prisoners are running amok and injuring the plaintiff, because the gaoler has the right to control the dangerous prisoners. As Hayne J said at [111], if the gaoler in those circumstances owes a duty of care ``it is because the gaoler can assert authority over those other prisoners''. And, as Hayne J said at [110], an employer:

> ``may owe an employee a duty to take reasonable care to prevent the employee
> [140337]
> being robbed. If that is so, however, it is because the employer can prevent the employee going in harm's way. The employer has the capacity to control the situation by controlling the employee and the system of work that is followed. The duty which the employer breaks in such a case is not a duty to control the conduct of others. It is a duty to provide a safe system of work and ensure that reasonable care is taken''.

In none of these senses can it be said that the defendants here had control over the assailant: they had no power to assert control over him, they could not assert authority over him, they were not expected to be able to control him as of right.

76. Thirdly, the trial judge's assertions are questionable if they are meant to be taken into account in relation to the non feasance basis of liability as distinct from the misfeasance basis. If, in considering the non feasance case, it is right to say that the defendants had control over the assailant because a locked entry door would have controlled him, it would have been equally right to say that the defendant in the Modbury case had control over the criminals because a system of denying unauthorised access to the car park could have controlled them. The High Court, which analysed the Modbury case as a non-feasance case, did not regard that latter possibility as a relevant form of control. So here, considering the instant case as a non feasance case, the possibility of returning to a locking door after 6 May 1993 is not a relevant form of control. The present discussion concerns the issue whether the defendants were liable for failing to act at some time after 6 May 1993 by reason of not installing some security system. Later the separate question, probably central to the trial judge's reasoning, of whether the positive interference on 6 May 1993 was actionable, will be considered. The trial judge's assertion that control is to be found in the existence of the lock is irrelevant to the present inquiry, which examines whether there is liability in not having any lock.

77. Fourthly, the trial judge's reasoning in this context also begs the question to be decided. The question is whether there is a duty to provide a locked door. The proffered answer is affirmative, because there is control. But whence does control come? From the ability to provide a locked door. It cannot be right to infer a duty to do something merely from the fact that it is possible to do it.

Similarities between the present circumstances and the circumstances pointing against the existence of a duty in the Modbury case

78. In the Modbury case at [17] and [29], Gleeson CJ pointed out that if a duty were owed by the defendant shopping centre owner to the employee of one of its tenants who was attacked in the shopping centre car park, it would also have been owed to other employees of tenants, visitors to the shopping centre (including customers of tenants and users of the automatic teller machines) and perhaps any member of the public using the car park at any time for any lawful purpose. If a duty were owed in the instant case by either of the defendants to the plaintiff, it must also have been owed to persons leasing or licensing units from unit holders. And it must also have been owed to lawful visitors of the plaintiff, lawful visitors of other unit holders and lawful visitors of their lessees or licensees — members of their families, friends, and other lawful visitors such as persons calling to deliver goods, supply services, attract business and solicit support for charitable, sporting, artistic or other activities. The trial judge accepted that among the objects of the relevant duty were not only the occupiers but also their ``guests''.

79. A further key matter mentioned by Gleeson CJ in the Modbury case at [29] was that if there were a duty on the defendant to prevent a physical attack on the plaintiff, the duty would have extended also to a duty to prevent criminal damage to property and to prevent the stealing of property. Similarly, Hayne J said at [109] that if the defendant owed the plaintiff a duty, ``it was to take whatever steps were reasonable in all the circumstances to hinder or prevent any criminal conduct of third persons which injured the first respondent or any person lawfully on the premises'' [emphasis in original]. So here, if there was a duty on the defendants to take reasonable steps to have a security system to hinder or prevent physical attacks on potential plaintiffs, there would also be a duty to have one to hinder or prevent criminal damage to the units and their contents and to hinder or prevent the stealing of their contents.

80. Indeed, if the defendants had a duty to prevent criminals entering via the front door to commit crimes, they must have had a duty to prevent criminals entering units through their balcony or window and thence moving into the common area of the building.

81. On the other hand, in the Modbury case it was accepted that the shopping centre owner could not be liable for criminal conduct occurring outside the premises it owned. In the instant case there would be no liability for criminal conduct outside the area of land owned by the body corporate on which the plaintiff's building stood. (The trial judge went further and said that if the criminal conduct had occurred outside the building but on the land owned by the body corporate, ``there would probably be no claim'': but if, as he thought, there was a duty relating to the inside of the building, that is questionable.)

Reliance as a possible source of duty

82 In the Modbury case at [22] Gleeson CJ pointed out that in that case the first plaintiff could not be said to have relied on the defendant to take security measures, and hence the duty contended for in that case could not be based on reliance. The same is true here. The plaintiff did not rely on the defendants to ensure that the foyer door was locked. She knew it was not locked. The trial judge found that at all times between the disarming of the lock on 6 May 1993 and the time of her assault, the plaintiff thought that the lock had been broken by the removal of the locking mechanism. The trial judge concluded that the plaintiff might have been mistaken in her evidence that she asked Mr Islam to complain about the broken lock. He said that she may have contacted Mr Cavar, but that he was unlikely to have acted on any request to complain. The trial judge found:

> ``that the plaintiff did telephone, at least a few times, the office of the second defendant to complain about the lock being broken and to have it fixed; that she spoke to Platt's secretary, Mrs McKeown about it; that she was, at all such times, informed by Mrs McKeown that Platt was unavailable but she would give him the message. In accordance with her usual procedure, Mrs McKeown handed the message to Platt but, for whatever reason, he did not contact the plaintiff or do anything about the complaints between May 1993 and 9 September 1993, when the plaintiff was assaulted.''

The sense of concern which the plaintiff experienced cannot have been alleviated, in view of the trial judge's finding that Mr Platt did not contact the plaintiff or do anything about the complaints before the assault. This pattern of complaints by the plaintiff which were not responded to is matched in the Modbury case, where the co-manager of the video shop whose other manager was the injured first plaintiff had made unanswered complaints about the parking area lights not being kept on until after the video shop closed: see at [6] and [53].

Assumption of responsibility as a possible source of duty

83. In the Modbury case at [23]-[25] Gleeson CJ rejected the proposition that in that case the defendant had assumed any responsibility for the illumination of the car park. It was capable of effecting illumination of various kinds, but it did not take on any obligation to supply it.

84. Similarly, for the reasons just given, the defendants here did not assume any responsibility for keeping the door locked. They deliberately unlocked it. That it was unlocked, or, as the plaintiff perceived it, broken, was well known to the plaintiff. It was also apparent to the plaintiff that the defendants had failed to take steps to ensure that it was locked, and it was for that reason that she complained a few times about the matter.

Special vulnerability/special knowledge/ assumption of responsibility as possible sources of duty

85. In the Modbury case, Gaudron J said at [43]:

> ``There are situations in which there is a duty of care to warn or take other positive steps to protect another against harm from third parties. Usually, a duty of care of that kind arises because of special vulnerability, on the one hand, and on the other, special knowledge, the assumption of a responsibility or a combination of both. Those situations aside, however, the law is, and in my view should be, slow to impose a duty of care on a person with respect to the actions of third parties over whom he or she has no control.''

Thus the employment relationship as a source of duty to protect employees against the criminal conduct of third parties exhibits special vulnerability on the part of the employee; and control on the part of the employer. Where chattels are bailed by a bailor to a bailee, the bailor has special vulnerability because of loss of possession, the bailee has special knowledge in relation to protection of the goods, the bailee has assumed special responsibility for the goods, and the bailee has control over the goods. Though children who may cause injury cannot be readily controlled by persons who are not their parents, their parents are supposed to be able to control them. Where gaolers owe duties to protect prisoners from being injured by the crimes of other prisoners, liability depends on the special vulnerability of the prisoners to be protected, the special knowledge which the authorities have or ought to have of the risks of injury, the assumption of responsibility by the authorities as part of the process of punishment they are administering, and the control which the authorities have.

86. Here the defendants did not have any particular control over third parties who might commit crimes. They had no special knowledge about them. The plaintiff had no special vulnerability within the building which exceeded her vulnerability just before crossing the outside boundary of the land on which it was built or just after crossing that boundary but before entering the front door of the building. And, as already discussed, the defendants did not assume any particular responsibility.

Should a special relationship or the existence of special circumstances be recognised?

87. It is plain that the relationship of unit owner and body corporate, and the relationship of unit owner and manager, are not relationships of the type recognised as ``special'' under the existing case law. The trial judge asserted that they were ``special'', but without any attempt to explain why, or to cite prior authority for that conclusion, or to state a principle underlying some analogous prior authority which supported it. To this extent, at least, the defendants' criticism of the trial judge for failing to analyse whether a duty existed is sound. In holding that there was, under the existing law, a ``special relationship'' the trial judge was simply not correct. The question then arises: should those relationships be recognised as ``special'' by this Court?

88. In searching for a special relationship as an exception to the principle that an occupier does not owe a duty to take reasonable care to prevent or hinder harm to persons lawfully present from the criminal behaviour of third parties, it is necessary to remember what Gleeson CJ said in the Modbury case at [35]:

> ``The principle cannot be negated by listing all the particular facts of the case and applying to the sum of them the question- begging characterisation that they are special. There was nothing special about the relationship between the appellant and the first respondent. There was nothing about the relationship which relevantly distinguished him from large numbers of members of the public who might have business at the centre, or might otherwise lawfully use the car park. Most of the facts said to make the case special are, upon analysis, no more than evidence that the risk of harm to the first respondent was foreseeable.''

Callinan J required ``something special in the circumstances, or the nature of the relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant'' (at [ 147]). The search is for some defined relationship like employer-employee or bailor- bailee, or for circumstances which are ``special''.

89. If new categories of ``special'' relationship are to be created within which a defendant is to be liable for the criminal acts of third parties, the step is not merely factual. It would involve a matter of law — indeed a change in the law. A change in the law of that order of significance is not something which this Court should undertake. It is a matter for the High Court. That conclusion is fortified by the fact that Gleeson CJ was not prepared, because it was not necessary to do so, ``to express a concluded opinion as to whether foreseeability and predictability of criminal behaviour could ever exist in such a degree that, even in the absence of some special relationship, Australian law would impose a duty to take reasonable care to prevent harm to another from such behaviour'': at [34]. It is also fortified by the fact that Hayne J specifically left the matter open: at [117]. And it is fortified by Hayne J's decision to reserve consideration of a different question, namely whether an occupier owes a duty of care to control the criminal conduct of third parties by failing to control their access to or continued presence on the premises: [at 117]. When judges of the High Court decide to leave matters open for consideration in future cases, they do so because of a consciousness that to create an exception to the principle precluding recovery for the criminal acts of third parties is to take an important step not to be embarked on without careful consideration in a particular case requiring the step. The making of significant changes in the law by taking steps of that kind is, if not beyond the competence of intermediate appellate courts, something not to be done lightly. It is better for these matters to be left open for the consideration of the High Court.

90. There is one type of ``special'' relationship which may in future call for examination — the fiduciary relationship. In Pyrenees Shire Council v Day (1998) 192 CLR 330 at [102] McHugh J said:

> ``In the absence of a contract, fiduciary relationship or statutory obligation, the common law makes a person liable in damages for the failure to act only when some special relationship exists between the person harmed and the person who fails to act.''

In this passage McHugh J treated fiduciary relationships as not being ``special relationships''. But whether they are to be treated as a potential source of liability separate from special relationships or as an example of them, it is not necessary to consider whether the relationship between a unit owner and the body corporate, or between a unit owner and the manager of the building in which unit owners own units and the body corporate owns common areas is a fiduciary relationship. The Statement of Claim did not plead that these relationships created fiduciary duties, the plaintiff did not argue either at trial or on appeal that they did, and the relevant factual and legislative background was not examined.

91. The plaintiff cited Ashrafi Persian Trading Co Pty Ltd v Ashrafinia (2002) Aust Torts Reports ¶81-636, and in particular [57], [60], [62], [63], [66], [70] and [82]. Among other things, those paragraphs were said to support the conclusion that in the present case there was a special relationship. Nothing said either in those places or elsewhere supports that proposition or any other part of the plaintiff's case. Like the Modbury case, the Ashrafi case is wholly against the plaintiff's entitlement to recover.

High degree of foreseeability

92. Does a high degree of foreseeability of harm suffice for the recognition of a duty of care? The question was left open by two judges in the Modbury case. Each of them used language which would make that standard difficult to meet. Gleeson CJ spoke of ``a high degree of foreseeability, and predictability'' (at [ 30]) and ``a high level of recurrent, predictable, criminal behaviour''. Hayne J spoke of ``a high degree of certainty that harm will follow'' (at [117]). In WD & HO Wills (Australia) Ltd v State Rail Authority of New South Wales (1998) 43 NSWLR 338, Mason P, with whom Priestley JA and Beazley JA agreed, said that he had difficulty in seeing that the existence of a duty of care turned upon the level of the probability that harm would ensue. ``There may be a very high probability that criminal activity causing harm may take place in certain areas of Sydney, but non constat that the occupier or adjacent neighbour has a duty of care to those who suffer. The mechanism of foreseeability is ultimately an unsatisfactory touchstone of the duty of care in this area....'' In the Modbury case at [34] note 1 Gleeson CJ (with whom Gaudron J and Hayne J agreed) said that the reasons of which that passage in Mason P's judgment formed part were ``cogent''. Callinan J applied the passage at [143]. Even if the tests formulated by Gleeson CJ and Hayne J were the law, which they expressly declined to decide, the evidence here would not permit a conclusion that they were met. There was no evidence of earlier assaults in the hallway. There had been a small number of break ins, but only to the units from balconies. Mr Platt denied that the common property had ever been damaged. He also denied that the neighbourhood was ``susceptible to unlawful activity''. Mr Islam said that though there were unsavoury characters in the park next door to the units, even before the Vandalites were installed ``we didn't have much problem in there''.

The relationship between the content of an appropriate duty and the propriety of its recognition

93. The trial judge held that the content of the relevant duty owed by the defendants was to avoid acts or omissions which they could reasonably foresee would be likely to cause injury to the plaintiff, and included ``a duty to prevent harm to the [plaintiff] from the criminal conduct of a third party''. A duty to prevent harm is a duty embodying an extremely high standard. There would be no way of fulfilling that duty short of engaging armed guards. However, the trial judge's formulation of the duty, assuming one existed, must be wrong. The duty of a landlord of residential premises is only to take such steps as are reasonable in the circumstances, it is not to make the premises as safe for residential use as reasonable care and skill on the part of anyone can make them: Jones v Bartlett (2000) 205 CLR 166 at [90] and [92] per Gaudron J. Similarly, if there is a duty in relation to criminals, it is only a duty to take those steps to prevent harm from criminals which are reasonable in the circumstances, not an absolute duty to prevent harm. The circumstances relevant to reasonableness are those which control the response of a reasonable man to the risk: he would consider the magnitude of the risk; the degree of probability of its occurrence; the expense, difficulty and inconvenience of taking alleviating action; and any other responsibilities which the defendant may have. The outcome of that process of consideration might be that no response was called for.

94. But when assessing the response of the reasonable man, what goal is the court to take as the object of the response? What is the goal to be aimed at in defining a standard of care in particular circumstances? Sometimes it is described as eliminating the risk of harm: Overseas Tankship (UK) Ltd v The Miller Steamship Co Pty (The ``Wagon Mound'') (No 2) [1967] 1 AC 617 at 642. Sometimes it is described as ``alleviating'' the risk: Wyong Shire Council v Shirt (1980) 146 CLR 40 at 47. The latter approach is sounder, since a contention that reasonable precautions have been taken is not invalidated by showing that if some other course of action had been followed the harm would not have occurred: Bressington v Commissioner for Railways (New South Wales) (1947) 75 CLR 339 at 348. Hence Fleming, The Law of Torts (9th ed, 1998) p 130, formulated the goal as deciding upon precautions or alternatives ``that might eliminate or minimise the danger''. But the goal of minimisation cannot be taken literally. As Callinan J said in the Modbury case at [136] at 162, ``To require minimisation would literally be to require reduction in risk to the point almost of elimination''. That will often be an impractical goal. Hence there is some attraction in Hayne J's view in the Modbury case at [109] that, at least in the present context, the inquiry into the content of the duty must be influenced by a search for reasonable steps to ``hinder or prevent'' injurious criminal conduct.

95. The verb to ``hinder'' has in various other contexts been construed to mean ``to affect to an appropriate extent the ease'' of conduct: Tennants (Lancashire) Ltd v CS Wilson and Co Ltd [1917] AC 495 at 514 per Lord Dunedin; Devonish v Jewel Food Stores Pty Ltd (1991) 172 CLR 32 at 45-46 per Mason J (the judgment was a dissenting one, but apparently not in this respect); The Australian Builders' Labourers' Federated Union of Workers — Western Australia Branch v J-Corp Pty Ltd (1993) ATPR ¶41-245 at 41,307-41,308 per Lockhart and Gummow JJ. ``Hinder'' can also mean ``interposing obstacles which it would be really difficult to overcome''; or making an outcome ``more or less difficult, but not impossible''; or interference with an outcome short of preventing it: Tennants (Lancashire) Ltd v CS Wilson and Co Ltd at 510, 518 and 522 per Lords Loreburn, Atkinson and Shaw of Dunfermline respectively. The goal of the reasonable man, then, is to consider how to eliminate the risk of harm or how to hinder the occurrence of the risk in the sense of significantly or substantially reducing it.

96. In assessing whether a duty of care should be recognised, which is the enterprise which the plaintiff requests the court to carry out, it must be relevant to inquire whether the content of the duty to be recognised would, if complied with, hinder harm in the sense of reducing, significantly or substantially, the chance of harm, even if compliance would not wholly eliminate the chance of harm. A precaution which significantly or substantially reduced the chance of harm would be a precaution which, depending on all other relevant factors, would be valuable. A precaution which only minimally reduced the risk of harm would not be worthwhile. At least in areas like the present, where it is controversial whether or not to take the step of creating a duty of care, if compliance will not reduce substantially the chance of the harm, what is the point of recognising the duty?

97. It is futile to recognise a duty of care where compliance would not at least reduce the risk of harm significantly or substantially. This requires consideration of the question whether having a door lockable in the way the door was locked before 6 May 1993 was enough, or whether some superior means of obtaining security should have been employed.

98. The evidence establishes that before 6 May 1993 the door was not always locked, and indeed that it was often not locked. It is highly questionable whether it would have significantly or substantially reduced the risk of the plaintiff suffering the injury which she in fact suffered, particularly since on one week in every month Mr Islam found the door open late at night, the time when the plaintiff was attacked.

99. Even if the door had always been locked, it is questionable whether it would have significantly or substantially reduced the risk of injury. One may leave out of account relatively far-fetched possibilities raised by the defendants, namely that a determined criminal could have obtained entry through the plaintiff's balcony or someone else's balcony to a unit and thence to the hallway, or obtained entry through the front door with a lawful entrant equipped with a key: these are not plausible events late at night, while the occupants of units were in all probability asleep, and at a time when it would not be easy to provide a lawful entrant with some apparently legitimate excuse for entering the building. But a determined criminal — and a tall strong man wearing a face mask, possessing cloth impregnated with a substance which appeared to be poisonous or to smell like methylated spirits or to be ammonia, and armed with a knife, who had somehow obtained entry onto the stairwell and lay in wait for the plaintiff was a determined criminal — could have waited outside the body corporate's land on which the building stood. While the plaintiff returned home on the night in question by car, so that she could not have been attacked off the premises, an attack on a person in the position of the plaintiff returning home late on foot, or after alighting from a taxi, could not possibly have created liability in the defendants if it took place off the premises, but the areas surrounding the premises may have offered suitable places to wait. Another possibility is that the assailant could have waited inside the land on which the building stood but outside the door — he could have waited inside the recessed part of the building in front of the door, and on hearing the plaintiff's approaching footsteps have coerced her inside the building through the door. Indeed, he could have waited in the garage and attacked persons in the position of the plaintiff returning by car from there or from parking areas to the rear of the building, or attacked persons in the position of the plaintiff approaching the front door on foot from there. If the movements of any potential victim were too fast and enabled the closing of the door before the criminal entered, he could have broken the glass in the door and followed the victim.

100. Of course, each of these possibilities carries potential dangers for the criminal. An attack carried out outside the premises, and an attack on the premises but outside the door, might be seen by a passer-by, but these would have been very few in number at 2.45am. An attack inside the garage might have been visible, but persons moving about the premises would have been even fewer in number than passers-by outside them. To follow the plaintiff through the door might cause noise, but no more noise than the criminal was prepared to risk in any event when he attacked the plaintiff by coming down the stairs. To break the glass and follow the plaintiff would cause noise, but the criminal's modus operandi obviously depended on speed — the speedy administration of some noxious substance or the speedy procurement of cooperation by the use of the knife. Even after the assailant departed, the plaintiff's screams and attempts to get assistance by knocking on unit doors did not, unsurprisingly, elicit immediate responses from the other unit holders. The difficulties facing her in that respect had no doubt been taken into account by the criminal. In these circumstances, if the duty to be recognised is one which would eliminate the risk of the type of harm which the plaintiff suffered, or substantially or significantly reduce it, what steps could satisfy it? The substitution of a door without glass and with a foolproof locking system would not significantly reduce the risk. The only remedy which would do so would be the employment of a night watchman, perhaps armed. Though the matter was not investigated at the trial, it seems safe to conclude that to engage a night watchman seven nights a week would cost significant sums of money — at least $20,000 per annum. The sum might be much greater. But if the duty is to take reasonable steps significantly to reduce the risk of criminal conduct, the duty would extend to taking appropriate measures in the daytime as well.

Though no doubt in daylight the risk of armed robbery outside the building, in the garage, or on the stairs, might be reduced, it would not necessarily be reduced significantly. There would also arise new risks: many more people would be likely to pass through the building between the early morning and the early evening than would be likely to at 2.45am; the temptation to criminals to carry out burglaries by posing as lawful entrants would increase; the chances of break ins to units while their occupiers were out at work or engaged in other daytime activities away from the building would rise. A determined attempt to deal with all relevant risks — risks of injury to persons, risks flowing from malicious damage to property, risks flowing from offences of dishonesty in relation to property, would call for much more than simply restoring the locked door. It might call for twenty-four hour guards, at an expense likely to be well beyond the capacity of a body corporate and the fifteen unit owners, many of them no doubt not enjoying high incomes, to pay.

101. In the United States the courts have declined in general to recognise a duty to provide ``armed, visible security guards to deter criminal acts of third parties''. That is a duty to provide police protection, which is the duty of the State: to compel defendants to supply police protection is to compel a safer regime on the occupier's premises than the beneficiaries of the duty would experience in the community at large: Nivens v Hoagy's Corner 943 P 2d 286 (1997). In Ann M v Pacific Plaza Shopping Centre 863 2d 207 (1993) at [13]-[14] it was said that the duty to have security guards only arose if there was a ``high degree of foreseeability'', because of their cost, because it was difficult to assess how many patrols were sufficient to deter, and because ``the social costs of imposing a duty on landowners to have private police forces are... not insignificant''. This reasoning has little application in Australia. In the United States the threshold which must be passed before a duty is created is low, and the courts are understandably reluctant to hold that in the wide range of cases where there is a duty its content generally calls for the provision of guards. In Australia it is very difficult to pass the threshold which lies before a finding of duty; but once it is passed there is no point in having done so unless the content of the duty, if complied with, would eliminate or significantly or substantially reduce the risk of harm.

102. Further, the consequences of recognising a duty to take reasonable steps to eliminate or substantially or significantly reduce the risk of harm being caused by criminals might call for even more expense. It might call for the inspection of the totality of the premises by an expert in home security. It might call for the fortification of all external windows and all balcony doors: the sole past experience of criminal conduct had been of criminal entries through balcony doors. Yet the effectuation of such fortifications would not only cost more, but would raise aesthetic problems. It would also collide with the desires of any particular unit owner to preserve his or her property unchanged. See generally Jones v Bartlett (2000) 205 CLR 166 at [15], [19] and [23]-[25].

103. In Sullivan v Moody (2001) 183 ALR 404 at [42] Gleeson CJ, Gaudron, McHugh, Hayne and Callinan JJ said that reasonable foreseeability of harm was not the sole condition for the recognition of a duty of care.

> ``If it were otherwise, at least two consequences would follow. First, the law would subject citizens to an intolerable burden of potential liability, and constrain their freedom of action in a gross manner. Secondly, the tort of negligence would subvert many other principles of law, and statutory provisions, which strike a balance of rights and obligations, duties and freedoms."

104. The recognition here of a duty to eliminate or substantially reduce the risk of harm flowing from criminal conduct outside existing criteria for the recognition of duties of that kind might be said to subject the defendants, and behind them the unit holders, to ``an intolerable burden of potential liability" if they did not take appropriate measures, and ``constrain their freedom of action in a gross manner" by reason of the large expenditures called for if they did take appropriate measures. It might also be said to subvert statutory provisions ``which strike a balance of rights and obligations, duties and freedoms". The legislation which permits citizens to own strata units balances the rights and freedoms of each unit owner to deal with his or her unit as desired with the obligations and duties to conform to decisions of relevant organs of the body corporate. If the imposition of a tortious duty would compel the overriding of the balance which would otherwise exist, or expose the body corporate to liabilities which it could not avert because it could not compel unit holders to cooperate, these consequences point against the conclusion that the law recognises the existence of that duty.

105. Under the Strata Titles Act 1973, in force in 1993, a ``lot" was a cubic space designated as such on a strata plan. Which parts of the building were common property, over which the body corporate had a duty and a power to effectuate changes to improve security pursuant to s 68(1)(b) of the Act, and which were ``lots", over which only the relevant unit holder had that power? That is not a question on which the evidence throws light, because it was not a question seen as relevant at the trial. The strata plan designating the units is not in evidence. After the assault on the plaintiff, a question arose at an annual general meeting of unit holders as to whether the plaintiff had received permission from an earlier manager to install security bars blocking outside access to her unit. This implies a view by those present either that the outside of the plaintiff's unit was not part of her lot or that even if it was the body corporate could control what was done on it. But there is no other material casting light on the correctness of that view, apart from the not necessarily well instructed understanding of Mr Platt that the volume inside the coat of paint covering the walls of a unit was the unit holder's property, while what was outside that coat of paint was common property.

106. However, the lack of material evidence does not matter for present purposes. If security measures required attention to the windows and doors and balconies of individual units, and those windows and doors and balconies were part of each lot, the body corporate could not compel work to be done to them. If they were part of the common property, it could, but only if a majority of unit holders voted that way in a meeting of the body corporate or some other relevant organ of the body corporate reached a decision to that effect, which decision would require, from a practical point of view, some unit holder support. The courts should be reluctant to impose legal duties which would either collide with unit holder autonomy, or create a topic of dissension amongst unit holders.

``Control" issues

107. So far as the Modbury doctrine rests on the necessity for control, the defendants in one sense had little control over criminals; in another sense they had the potential for significant control depending on what measures they were prepared to take. So far as they had little actual control just beforeSeptember, they can take advantage of the principle of non- liability. They could have achieved control by the expenditure of money, perhaps substantial sums of money, and the obstacle to liability created by the absence of control would go. But the tort of negligence ultimately rests on criteria of reasonableness. As Gleeson CJ said in Tame v New South Wales [2002] HCA 35 at [8], the essential concept in the process of defining a duty of care is reasonableness. ``What is the extent of concern for the interests of others which it is reasonable to require as a matter of legal obligation, breach of which will sound in damages?" It is probable that what would have to be spent to put the defendants in a position of control goes well beyond what the criteria of reasonableness would call for.

Failure to control access to the premises

108. In the Modbury case at [117] Hayne J reserved for consideration the question whether an occupier of land who failed to control access to or continued presence on the premises on the part of a criminal was liable for that criminal's conduct. He prefaced his reservation of the question by saying at [106]:

> ``The complaint made by the respondents in this case was that the first respondent suffered personal injury because the appellant did not leave the car park lights on when he was leaving the shop where he worked. The complaint was not that the appellant should have, but did not, control access by the assailants to the premises it occupied. It is important, then, to appreciate that the allegation of breach (and, by necessary implication, the scope of he duty alleged) concerned the state of the premises. It was not about third parties coming on to, or remaining on, the premises."

At [112] he said:

> ``The occupier of land has power to control who enters and remains on the land and has power to control the state or condition of the land."

[140345]

He went on to say that those powers of control established the relationship between occupier and entrant which sufficed to create a duty of care.

109. Counsel for the plaintiff did not seek to rely on Hayne J's reservation at [117], being content to argue that the facts of this case fell literally outside the Modbury prohibition on liability because the defendants were responsible for wrongs of commission in relation to the physical state of the premises, not mere omission. However, the trial judge appeared to rely on what Hayne J said, and to arrive at an answer to Hayne J's question favourable to the plaintiff. The trial judge quoted the passage just quoted from [106] and said:

> ``in this case the allegation is about a third party coming onto and remaining on the premises when he ought not to have been permitted to do so. There seems to me, therefore, to be a real connection between the state of the lock to the entry door and the assault by the assailant on the plaintiff."

110. It is therefore necessary to deal with the trial judge's reliance on what Hayne J said, or at least on one answer to the issue which he posed.

111. At the point in his reasoning where he reserved the question of whether a failure to control access to or continued presence on the premises, Hayne J referred to two cases which give guidance as to what he had in mind. These were Chordas v Bryant (Wellington) Pty Ltd (1988) 20 FCR 91 and Public Transport Corporation v Sartori [1997] 1 VR 168.

112. Sartori's case concerned the duty of an employer to an employee to prevent the employee from being injured on premises which were supposed to be closed so as to exclude members of the public. It was only in that sense that the case was about ``the occupier failing to control access to" the premises. The case involved the well-established ``special relationship", namely that of employer- employee. It does not illustrate any wider or more novel proposition about failure to control access.

113. Cases like the Chordas case are remote from present circumstances. They deal with a special factual position. They recognise that the duty to take reasonable care to avoid a reasonably foreseeable risk of injury to lawful visitors owed by the occupier or person in control of a restaurant or other outlet for the on- site consumption of alcohol extends to the injuries caused by tortious or criminal acts of other lawful visitors. A justification for this is that it is highly foreseeable that some patrons may either arrive intoxicated or become intoxicated, and a segment of these may become violent. Hayne J suggests that justification lies in a duty of the publican to supervise the behaviour of patrons, to desist from serving them while intoxicated, and in the last resort to eject them. In most jurisdictions there is usually a statutory duty to eject intoxicated persons, and there is usually a statutory defence to criminal prosecution and tortious proceedings if no more than reasonable force is used. In the Chordas case at 99 Davies, Kelly and Neaves JJ said:

> ``Particularly in the case of an hotel, which provides a facility pursuant to a licence authorising the provision of liquor and pursuant to Acts and regulations which require or imply that the facility be open to the public, it is necessary to keep in mind that the licensee may have no control over his patrons save the power to eject them for good cause. As we have said, the manager of an hotel, like the manager of other facilities, must take reasonable care for his patrons and, if cause is shown which requires that a patron be closely supervised or ejected or that another patron be warned, the manager should take whatever may be the appropriate step in the interests of the safety of his patrons. However, what is the appropriate course in a particular case obviously depends upon the circumstances of the case."

See also Oxlade v Gosbridge Pty Ltd (NSWCA, unrep, 18 December 1998).

114. Normally the duty is owed to one patron to prevent injury caused by another: eg Wormald v Robertson (1992) Aust Torts Reports ¶81-180; Guildford Rugby League Football and Recreational Club Ltd [2001] NSWCA 139. One case which is arguably an extension of the principle is Club Italia (Geelong) Inc v Ritchie (2001) 3 VR 447, in which a police officer injured in a drunken brawl at a social club was held entitled to recover from the club. The Victorian Court of Appeal, however, at [45] treated the case not as being of the Chordas type or as suggesting any particular answer to the question reserved by

Hayne J, but as one involving a ``special relationship" between the club and the officer. At [44] the Court of Appeal also raised an interesting possibility of characterising the case not as one of harm arising from criminal conduct, but rather as one of:

> ``harm arising from disorder — a commotion, a human eruption or convulsion or conflagration — not to be analysed in terms of the particular criminal acts which injured the plaintiff but to be viewed more broadly as a state of affairs, and as one created by the club. On this approach, the plaintiff was injured as a result of that state of affairs, the actual criminal kicks and blows being no more than the particular vehicles of injury. On this analysis, the club's position, as regards duty of care, might be no different if, instead of being attacked by a trouble-making ruffian, the plaintiff had been unintentionally struck by a peaceable patron defending himself against an assault, or accidentally knocked to the ground by non-violent patrons trying to avoid the melee. We think there is much to be said for this approach; but we need not pursue the question."

115. The duty of those who run establishments serving alcohol to avoid injury being caused by drunken patrons to other patrons (and perhaps other persons such as police officers, if that solution to Ritchie's case, not in terms adopted by the Victorian Court of Appeal, is available) has not in this State been widened into a duty to avoid injury being caused to drunken patrons by reason of their drunkenness: South Tweed Heads Rugby League Football Club Ltd v Cole [2002] NSWCA 205.

116. The authorities referred to by Hayne J do not point to any body of law which would make it right for this Court to answer the question he reserved in a manner favourable to the interests of the plaintiff in this case. To do so would be to change the law, and the law at least in this particular field should only be changed by the High Court.

Conventional occupiers' liability

117. There was an attempt on behalf of the plaintiff to fit her case into the general law of occupiers' liability, which imposes a duty to take reasonable care to avoid a reasonably foreseeable risk of injury to plaintiffs arising out of the physical condition of premises. That is a disingenuous attempt to sidestep the Modbury doctrine, and it must fail. In the Modbury case Hayne J said at [106] that the alleged breach of duty concerned the ``state of the premises". The absence of a locking system from a door in this case was in a sense an aspect of the physical condition of the premises, but only in the same sense as the lighting system in the Modbury case. Despite the fact that the lighting system was capable of characterisation as being part of the ``state of the premises", the High Court was not prevented from declining to recognise liability by that circumstance. It did not treat the harm caused by the criminals, which the lighting system would supposedly have prevented, as being equivalent to harm caused by some defect in the surface of the car park. In argument Gleeson CJ asked, at 256:

> ``What is the difference between saying that a council that owns and controls a public park is bound to take care that people do not trip and break their legs and saying that the council is bound to take reasonable care that people walking through the park do not get hit over the head with a baseball bat?"

The answer is that in the second instance the harm is caused by crime. The real issue is not whether there is an aspect of the physical condition of the premises complained of, but of what type of harm that physical condition might have caused or averted. Thus at [29] Gleeson CJ said:

> ``The control and knowledge which form the basis of an occupier's liability in relation to the physical state or condition of land are absent when one considers the possibility of criminal behaviour on the land by a stranger. The principle involved cannot be ignored by pointing to the facts of the particular case and saying (or speculating) that the simple expedient of leaving the car park light on for an extra half hour would have prevented the attack on the first respondent."

Similarly here, the principle involved cannot be ignored by saying that the simple expedient of placing a locking mechanism on the door after May 1993 or introducing some other security system would have prevented the attack on the plaintiff. The issue is not one of the physical condition of the premises in the sense in which that is relevant in conventional occupiers' cases.

The misfeasance case

118. In one sense the failure on 6 May 1993 to employ some alternative security system was only non feasance — a failure to act. But it was not pure non feasance, because it was coupled with the positive act of deactivating the lock. Similarly, failure to brake while driving a car is not non feasance, because it is coupled with positive acts which put the car into motion: Pyrenees Shire Council v Day (1998) 192 CLR 330 at [102] per McHugh J.

119. While in a general sense the distinction between liability for failure to act and liability for positive acts, and the distinction between duties to abstain from causing harm and duties to carry out positive acts which will prevent harm can be important, it is difficult to see much merit in them in the particular circumstances of this case. If there had never been a locking system before or after 6 May 1993, but the plaintiff had complained about its absence a few times before 9 September 1993, she would have been injured in the same way as she was. If there had been a locking system up to 6 May 1993, but it wore out or broke on that day and the defendants failed to repair it, which the plaintiff thought had actually happened, she would have been injured in the same way as she was. It would be a reproach to the law if she could not recover in either of those two cases but could recover merely because the defendants had deliberately deactivated the locking system. It might make a difference if they deactivated it without the plaintiff becoming aware that the system had ceased to work, because the plaintiff might then have been able to mount a negligence case based on reliance: but in fact she knew that the system no longer worked and did not rely on it working. Counsel for the plaintiff attempted to negate the above argument by refusing to concede that there would have been liability if there had never been a locking system but the plaintiff had requested one. It would not follow from a mere request that the duty urged existed. Counsel for the plaintiff also contended that if the locking system had simply worn out or broken there would have been a statutory duty on the body corporate to have it repaired. He referred to s 68(1)(b) which imposed on the body corporate a duty ``properly [to] maintain and keep in a state of good and serviceable repair... the common property..." However, the cause of action would not have been in negligence. No attempt was made to demonstrate that a cause of action for breach of statutory duty would have lain, nor that any other identifiable cause of action would have lain.

120. A further anomaly is that counsel for the plaintiff conceded that if there had never been a locking system and no requirement by unit holders that there be one had ever been made, there would be no duty; yet counsel for the plaintiff said that if at some point in the period a locking system was installed, and at a later time removed, there was a duty not to remove it. It is anomalous that the defendants are not liable if they do nothing, but are liable if they do something and then reverse what they did. Counsel for the plaintiff said there was no anomaly, because the plaintiff relied on the existence of the locking system. She may have until the point of time after 6 May 1993 when she concluded that it was not working, but after that time there was no reliance.

121. Yet a further difficulty in the misfeasance case is that it depends in an adventitious way on the point of time selected. If the plaintiff had been injured by a criminal attack immediately after the system was deactivated, the matter could be characterised as a piece of misfeasance on the part of the defendants. But as time passed after 6 May 1993, and as the plaintiff made her successive complaints without effective response, the conduct of the defendants is more to be characterised as non feasance: assuming all other matters in the plaintiff's favour, the defendants had a duty to respond to her requests but they did not respond to them. It would be a further reproach to the law if the plaintiff could recover in relation to an assault soon after 6 May 1993, but not some months after.

122. While Gleeson CJ in particular stressed that one reason why the plaintiff should fail in the Modbury case was that the law does not favour the creation of positive duties to act, and while Gaudron J and Hayne J agreed with his reasons for judgment, there were many other elements in his reasoning and the reasoning of Hayne J and Callinan J adverse to the plaintiff's success — lack of a high degree of foreseeability, lack of control, lack of reliance, lack of an assumption of responsibility, and absence of any general duty to prevent harm to plaintiffs arising from the crimes of third parties whether one element in the harm was non feasance by the defendant or misfeasance by the defendant.

123. What Gleeson CJ actually said about non feasance and misfeasance was:

> ``the general rule that there is no duty to prevent a third party from harming another is based in part upon a more fundamental principle, which is that the common law does not ordinarily impose liability for omissions.''

It does not ordinarily impose liability for omissions, but it may do. There is nothing in the Modbury case which says that where a defendant is responsible for acts of commission and in consequence the plaintiff suffers harm from criminals, all the other objections to allowing recovery dissolve. In particular, where the law does not impose liability for particular omissions, it is hard to see why it should impose liability for positive conduct coupled with omissions where all other material considerations are the same.

124. Further, if the proposition that even though there might be no liability for pure non feasance there was liability for misfeasance by interfering with the existing system were sound, and if it were the only bar to relief in the Modbury case, the plaintiffs ought to have won that case. But they did not. Their case was that if the lights had been on at 10.30pm on 18 July 1993 when the male plaintiff approached his car, instead of being turned off at 10pm or perhaps earlier, his attackers would have been deterred from attacking him. The factual position was not that the landlord's system had always been to turn the lights off at 10pm. Rather it was described thus by Gleeson CJ at [6]:

Allowing for the fact that in the Modbury case what was in issue was a system pursuant to which lighting automatically went off by reason of the operation of timing devices, while what is in issue in the present case is a physical locking system, these facts reveal a close parallel with the present case. Until July 1992 the system conformed to what, according to the plaintiffs in the Modbury case, the defendant's duty of care required and to what would have averted the injury. It then changed, more than once, but it never took a form which would have complied with the plaintiffs' contention as to the defendant's duty. If the difference between the defendant in the Modbury case being liable and not liable turns on a difference between a failure to ensure that the lights were on and a positive act of changing the system with the result of the lighting being turned off earlier, the defendant ought to have lost. It was not the case that the defendant had simply failed to guard against the harm. At one stage it had guarded against the harm, but it engaged in positive conduct to change that so that thereafter it ceased to guard against the harm.

125. Though one strand in the reasoning in the Modbury case turns on the law's dislike of compelling positive conduct by defendants to prevent harm to plaintiffs, that was not a decisive part of the reasoning. The reasoning which caused the plaintiffs in the Modbury case to lose and which stands in the path of the plaintiff in this case is reasoning which applies as much to misfeasance as non feasance.

126. The matters mentioned in [109]-[116] indicate difficulties in the plaintiff's argument. See also WD & HO Wills (Australia) Ltd v State Rail Authority of New South Wales (1998) 43 NSWLR 338 at 355. However, it is not necessary to decide conclusively whether a duty of care was owed in relation to misfeasance, because it is possible to decide the misfeasance case on causation grounds, and reject it for the reasons given in [121]-[134] below. Since it is not necessary to decide whether a duty of care was owed in relation to misfeasance, it is desirable not to attempt to decide that difficult question.

United States authorities

127. There has been a significant degree of successful litigation in the United States of America brought against landlords in relation to injuries caused by criminals to tenants in apartments or in areas of tenanted buildings owned by the landlord; or brought by the owners of condominiums against the equivalent of the body corporate in relation to injuries caused to the owners either in their condominiums or on the common property. The test is reasonable foreseeability, and that may flow from knowledge of prior crimes, even if they are rather different from the crime sued on (eg Sturbridge Partners Pty Ltd v Walker 482 SE 2d 339 (1997)). See also Kline v 1500 Massachusetts Ave Apartment Corp 439 F 2d 477 (1970); O'Hara v Western Seven Trees Corporation Intercoast Management 142 Cal Rptr 487 (1978); Holley v Mt Zion Apartments Inc 382 So 2d 98 (1980); and Frances T v Village Green Owners Association 723 P 2d 573 (1986). In the Modbury case, a case on the liability of a commercial landlord, Gleeson CJ referred to Kline's case, Holley's case and Sturbridge's case as authorities on the United States law; he declined to treat them as accurate statements of Australian law on the general question of an occupier's liability for third party criminal activities, which suggests that they are not to be treated as accurate statements of Australian law in the specific context with which they in the present case are concerned. The same follows from Callinan J's handling of the Sturbridge and Holley cases. Kirby J (dissenting) distinguished Kline's case and Holley's case by saying that the Modbury case ``was not a case about the liability of an absentee landlord responsible for common areas in an apartment or like building'': at [47]. In all the circumstances it is not open to this Court to apply the American authorities even if it considered them sound in principle.

Conclusion on duty

128. For the above reasons the trial judge erred in concluding that the defendants owed the plaintiff a duty of care to prevent harm to her from the assailant.

Breach

129. The defendants accepted that if there were a relevant duty, there was little that could be said for the proposition that it had not been breached. In fact nothing was said.

Causation

Misfeasance

130. If the duty breached was a duty not to deactivate the locking system without replacing it with an equally effective, but not necessarily more effective, security system, the plaintiff has not demonstrated that the harm she suffered would have been averted. That is because before 6 May 1993 the locking system was ineffective and the door was often open, particularly, to Mr Islam's observation, late at night at the time when the plaintiff was injured.

131. If the duty breached was a duty to have a more effective security system in place by 9 September 1993 than that which existed before 6 May 1993, whether the breach of duty caused the plaintiff's loss depends on precisely what the unperformed duty required.

132. If the duty were merely to have a chimes system or an intercom, it is questionable whether this would have prevented the assailant from doing what he did. What the trial judge meant by the ``chimes'' system arose thus. One defect in the pre 6 May 1993 system was that if the door was kept locked all the time, it was inconvenient for occupants who had visitors, because persons outside the building could not contact particular units. ``This, however, could have been eliminated completely, at reasonable expense, by the installation of a radio- controlled chimes system for each unit where the cost for chimes locks and keys was in the vicinity of four hundred dollars for those six units.'' Another system of the same kind, though somewhat more expensive, was an intercom system: those who arrived at the front door could contact the occupants of the unit they desired to visit; if no response was received, in theory the visitor could not obtain entry.

133. Either a ``chimes'' system or an intercom system, coupled with a door that could only be opened from the outside by a person in possession of a key and from the inside by a unit occupant who triggered the opening of the door would prevent the type of entry which the plaintiff's assailant effected if he came through the disarmed front door, provided that any given occupant of a unit declined to let strangers into the building and let in only persons who desired to visit that particular occupant.

134. That theory assumes the following:

> (a) that no occupant would let in a visitor from outside unless that visitor advanced an incontestably sound justification for entry;
> (b) that no lawful visitor let in from outside would permit another person to enter at the same time;
>
> [140350]
> [140350]
> (c) that no would-be assailant would attempt to accompany an intended victim into the building;
> (d) that no would-be assailant, seeing an intended victim entering the building, would abstain from breaking the glass door and gaining entry in that fashion;
> (e) that no would-be assailant desiring to rob someone moving towards the building late at night, would effectuate the robbery just outside the front door, or in the garage, or wherever else in the common property outside the door seemed convenient.

135. Even if assumption (a) is sound in many instances, it is not likely to be universally true. Assumption (b) is likely to be true in many, but fewer, instances: it is harder for a visitor gaining entry to prevent another person coming in than for a unit occupant to refuse entry to that other person. The occasions when assumptions (a) and (b) will not apply are likely to be daylight or early evening occasions, since persons without keys attempting to gain entry from unit holders late at night are not likely to be numerous, and if they lack sound justification, are not likely to succeed in their attempts. Assumptions (c)-(e) are much more likely to be falsified late at night: the chances of daylight attacks are lower than night time attacks because more people are likely to be about in the daytime than late at night. Each of assumptions (c), (d) and (e) is unlikely to be universally true, depending on the determination of the assailant and depending on his perception of the best way in the particular circumstances to effectuate his desires.

136. The person who attacked the plaintiff was professional and determined: he had already gained entry, he was disguised, he was equipped with a means of subduing victims (the cloth smelling of something like methylated spirits), and he was armed with a dangerous weapon.

137. Even if the door were locked, it is probable that the assailant would have waited outside in a dark place and attacked there, or adopt one of the other methods described above of achieving his goal. In the Modbury case at [152] Callinan J said:

``What strikes me as very likely, and at least as likely as the competing inference, is that the assailants, having brought their bat with them to commit an assault, would not take it home without first using it for that purpose, lighting or not. In short, in my opinion, the respondents' case should have failed on the issue of causation as well as the issue of duty of care.''

So here, the plaintiff's attacker, having brought his mask, cloth and knife to commit a robbery, would not have gone away without using them, locked door or no locked door, chimes or intercom or no chimes or intercom. The trial judge did not make findings excluding the possibility of an assailant finding some dark area in the garage or elsewhere on the premises or near them in which to wait until a victim came in sight. Nor was that possibility excluded by the evidence.

138. The plaintiff argued that breach of duty coupled with harm of the type that might flow from it was enough to justify an inference of causation, ``in the absence of any sufficient reason to the contrary'', in the words of Dixon J in Betts v Whittingslowe (1945) 71 CLR 637 at 649. The present discussion proceeds on the assumption that there was a breach of duty of the type described by the trial judge, and that the attack which occurred was of the kind which might flow from that breach. However, there are sufficient reasons to conclude that the breach did not cause the harm. Those reasons, in a nutshell, turn on the feeble nature of the measures prescribed by the trial judge when measured against the evident determination and skill of the assailant.

139. The plaintiff has not demonstrated that the measures which the trial judge held would satisfy the defendants' duty of care would, on the balance of probabilities, have prevented the attack.

140. One strand in the trial judge's reasoning on breach was that the defendants had a duty to give consideration to the interests of the occupiers and visitors so far as physical safety from attack by criminals was concerned and act on that consideration. The trial judge found that this duty of consideration and action was performed in part but not in whole. The defendants performed it by considering whether to install, and installing Vandalites and considering whether to maintain, and maintaining, outside lighting in reasonable condition. These measures inter alia served to deter criminals from waiting to attack persons on their way into the building. But according to the trial judge the defendants did not perform their duty of consideration in relation to the risk of an intruder unlawfully entering the building and attacking an occupant or other lawful visitor. They should have extended the consideration to the point of deciding upon the introduction of chimes or an intercom.

141. There is force in the view that if the defendants owed a duty of care, it required compliance with a duty of consideration entailing a general survey of security problems, perhaps with expert assistance, since security measures sufficient to overcome the skills of determined criminals are not necessarily obvious to lay people or to managers such as Mr Platt. There was no evidence of what an expert would have recommended or what a general survey would have suggested as desirable. However, in view of the determination and skill of the assailant, the wide range of potential victims, the wide range of interests of potential victims which might be damaged by an assailant, and the real possibility of damage being caused before the victim ever passed through the front door, it cannot be said that the plaintiff has shown on the balance of probabilities that compliance with a duty of consideration would exclude much wider safety measures than chimes or an intercom, and in particular that it would exclude security guards.

142. Further, if there was a duty to have carried out a survey of security measures resulting in the maintenance of a locked door together with chimes or an intercom, the duty would probably extend more widely. See Jones v Bartlett (2000) 205 CLR 166 at [15] and [19]. The duty of consideration and the survey of problems would include a search for other reasonably foreseeable risks of harm caused by criminals intruding into the building or criminals attacking persons near the building. Indeed, the trial judge appeared to accept that the duty extended as far as criminals operating near the building, because of his acceptance that the relevant duty was fulfilled by installing Vandalites and maintaining outside lighting. That appears to be why he said that if the criminal conduct had occurred outside the building there would probably be no claim against the defendants. That the duty of consideration extends to the position of the guests of occupiers outside the building as well as occupiers flows from the trial judge's application of the duty to the guests of occupiers inside the building.

143. But why should the duty of consideration and expert survey stop there? If the defendants owed a duty of care to persons in the common areas who might be injured by assailants coming through the front door, why is there not a duty owed to persons in those areas who might be injured by assailants gaining entry through the units? The duty of consideration and expert survey would thus extend to an examination of windows, balconies, the doors to units, the area outside the front door, the drive, and the garage. If the standard of care required is to take measures which will prevent or substantially eliminate a risk of injury, guards at least at night time and probably all the time would be called for. That would call for considerable expenditure, and the level of that expenditure would make it unlikely that a failure to provide guards would be a breach of duty. In that event the breach of duty, and in particular the breach of duty found by the trial judge, would probably not have prevented the attack.

Conclusion

144. The appellants' criticisms of the trial judge's reasoning in relation to liability are sound and the appeal on liability should be allowed. That makes it unnecessary to consider the correctness of the appellants'challenges to the trial judge's reasoning on damages.

Orders

145. The following orders are proposed.

1. The appeal is allowed.
2. The orders of the trial judge are set aside.
3. Judgment is entered for the appellants.
4. The respondent is to pay the appellants'costs of the trial.
5. The respondent is to pay the appellants'costs of the appeal and is to have a certificate under the Suitors Fund Act 1951 if qualified.

Hodgson JA: I agree with the orders proposed by Heydon JA and with his reasons concerning the non feasance case. As regards the misfeasance case, I also would prefer to rest my decision on the question of causation.

147. In the light of the primary judge's acceptance of Mr. Islam's evidence that the front door was always unlocked on those occasions when he entered the premises about 11pm, being one week in four, a finding that, but for the appellants' interference with the front door lock, it would more probably than not have been locked on the night of the assault, would be an unreasonable finding. If the door had been locked on average as often as one night in two, it is improbable in the extreme that Mr. Islam would always have found it unlocked on one night in four or five.

148. Furthermore, even if the front door had been locked on that night, it is for reasons given by Heydon JA far from certain that this would have prevented the assault; and accordingly, in my opinion, a marginal preponderance of probability that the door would have been locked (even if this had been established) would not have been enough to establish on the balance of probabilities that, but for the interference with the lock, the assault would not have occurred.

149. Accordingly, the finding that the assault was relevantly caused by the interference with the lock was wrong and should be overturned.

150. If the evidence had established that an existing security system, on the balance of probabilities, had been consistently used and would have prevented the assault, the question would then have arisen whether removal of that system breached a duty to the respondent. I would prefer not to decide that question. I think it does raise different issues from the non feasance case. I think it also raises different issues from those decided in Modbury: although in one sense, the change from leaving lights on until 11pm to turning them off at 10pm was a positive act, it can also be regarded as non feasance in not paying the extra cost of keeping the lights on for the additional hour.

(2003) NSW Conv R ¶90-119

Court citation: [2003] NSWSC 397

New South Wales Supreme Court

Judgment delivered 14 May 2003

Strata title — Real property — Strata title — Derivative claims by strata proprietors — Plaintiff sought damages in respect of air conditioning system serving her lot in strata plan — Air conditioning system constituted common property to strata plan — Whether plaintiff entitled to bring derivative action on behalf of owners corporation as exception to proper plaintiff rule — Corporations Act 2001 (Cth), Pt 2F.1A — District Court Rules 1973, Part 7 rule 8 — Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW), sec 11; 62 — Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1996 (NSW), sec 18; 21; 24; 25; 26; 27.

The plaintiff (``Ms Carre'') was the registered proprietor of a lot in a strata plan (``the strata plan'') which related to a residential flat building. The second defendant (``Mr Johnson'') and the third defendant (``Ms Johnson'') were the other two registered proprietors of the lots on the strata plan. The schedule of unit entitlements provided Mr and Ms Johnson an entitlement of 25 and Ms Carre an entitlement of 50. Ms Carre, Mr Johnson and Ms Johnson thus constituted the whole of the membership of the first defendant, the owners corporation (``the owners corporation'') of the strata plan for the purposes of sec 11 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW).

Ms Carre commenced proceedings in the District Court of New South Wales seeking damages for alleged defects in the air conditioning system serving her lot (``the District Court proceedings''). Mr and Ms Johnson were joined as defendants to the District Court proceedings because they had developed the building the subject of the strata plan and had acted as vendors to Ms Carre. In that context, claims in contract, for negligent misstatement and under the Fair Trading Act were made against Mr and Ms Johnson. Subsequently in the District Court proceedings, Mr and Ms Johnson pleaded that the parts of the air conditioning system serving Ms Carre's lot formed part of the ``common property'' as defined by the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1996 (NSW). Pursuant to sec 18 of the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act, that common property was said to have vested in the owners corporation upon registration of the strata plan.

In response, Ms Carre convened a meeting of the owners corporation and sought to have passed a resolution providing that it consent to be joined as a co-plaintiff in the District Court proceedings. Because Mr and Ms Johnson both voted against that resolution, it was not carried. Subsequently, Ms Carre filed a motion in the District Court proceedings seeking an order that the owners corporation be joined as a defendant pursuant to Pt 7 r 8 of the District Court Rules 1973. That motion was opposed by Mr and Ms Johnson and it was dismissed. It was held that because no cause of action was pleaded against the owners corporation no joinder could be effected.

Ms Carre then commenced proceedings in the Supreme Court seeking a declaration that she was entitled to commence or continue the District Court proceedings in the name of the owners corporation against the named defendants. Such declaratory relief relied on two assumptions: that the ``proper plaintiff rule'', or rule in Foss v Harbottle (1843) 2 Hare 461, applied to the owners corporation created by the Strata Schemes Management Act; and, second, that the Court could grant relief that overcame the effect of that rule by allowing Ms Carre to pursue the claims in the District Court proceedings that she thought that the owners corporation had against the named defendants. On the assumption that the Court could grant such discretionary relief (essentially through the ``justice'' exception to the rule in Foss v Harbottle), Ms Carre contended that the particular circumstances of the case compelled the exercise of that discretion in her favour. In that context, she submitted that she was put to expense and loss and suffered inconvenience, discomfort and diminution in the value of her property because the air conditioning unit in question had been inoperative.

On behalf of Mr and Ms Johnson and the owners corporation it was submitted that, if the Court had discretion to grant the relief sought, that discretion should be exercised against Ms Carre. The main contention in this respect was that the proceedings were an abuse of process. This was said to arise because: Ms Carre was seeking to re-open a decision already made by the District Court; the relief sought would entail the imposition of a jurisdiction upon the District Court which it did not enjoy; and the District Court's dismissal of the motion gave rise to a form of issue estoppel or res judicata. It was also claimed that the defects asserted to exist in the air conditioning system were latent and therefore statute barred.

Held: granting the relief sought.

1. The claims Ms Carre considered the owners corporation to have in the District Court proceedings were maintainable only by the owners corporation, unless Ms Carre was recognised as having attained a position from which she could act for it or in its place. Without the active assent of the owners corporation, Ms Carre could be put into such a position only by court order.

2. It was clear from the Strata Schemes Management Act that the owners corporation was not the beneficial owner of any common property. Its ownership was always in a representative capacity which was identified by the Strata Schemes Management Act as that of ``agent'', with each of the lot proprietors, as the owners in equity of undivided interests as tenants in common, identified as having a ``beneficial interest''.

3. The claim for relief Ms Carre made would entail an exception to the rule in Foss v Harbottle to which the Court's comprehensive equitable jurisdiction extended.

4. The case was not likely to be one in which the owners corporation was shown to have suffered other than nominal or modest loss through any negligence or other legal wrong that attended the development and construction of the building and the air conditioning system servicing Ms Carre's lot.

5. In the circumstances of the integrated nature and functions of the air conditioning system, any real loss would only accrue to Ms Carre as that lot's registered proprietor. Ms Carre therefore had a special interest in the assertion by the owners corporation of rights of action it had in relation to defects in the common property.

6. Because the owners corporation, which occupied a representative position qua the common property held by it as ``agent'', had refused to act, the Court was able to exercise its general equitable jurisdiction to recognise and give effect to an equity in Ms Carre to sue in the District Court proceedings in the name of the owners corporation to the extent that that was necessary.

7. Although the District Court's limited equitable jurisdiction did not permit it to recognise and give effect to the exceptions to the proper plaintiff rule, the equitable jurisdiction of the Supreme Court could be invoked in an auxiliary fashion.

8. No question of issue estoppel or res judicata arose because the application was merely procedural and interlocutory in nature.

9. Any argument that the claims were time barred would most appropriately be pursued in the District Court.

10. Discretionary considerations therefore did not compel refusing the equitable relief Ms Carre sought.

11. If the owners corporation was to become a plaintiff in the District Court proceedings, it would be exposed to the possibility of an adverse costs order. Accordingly, relief was to be framed so as to require Ms Carre to indemnify the owners corporation against all costs and expenses of, and incidental to, its participation as plaintiff in the District Court proceedings.

Full text of judgment below

Barrett J: In these proceedings, the registered proprietor of a lot in a strata plan claims a declaration that she is entitled to commence or continue certain District Court proceedings in the name of the relevant owners corporation constituted under s.11(1) of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996.

2. The plaintiff, Ms Carre, and the second and third defendants, Mr Johnson and Ms Johnson (father and daughter), constitute the whole of the membership of the first defendant, Owners Corporation — Strata Plan 53020. The three individuals, together with two companies (Lipman Pty Limited and Positive Air Services Pty Limited), are also parties to proceedings in the District Court in which Ms Carre sues the other four. To avoid what might be confusing references to various defendants, it is desirable that I refer to all parties by their names, with Lipman Pty Limited abbreviated to ``Lipman'', and Positive Air Services Pty Limited to ``Positive Air''; and with Owners Corporation — Strata Plan 53020 referred to simply as ``the owners corporation''. Mr Johnson and Ms Johnson will sometimes be referred [to] as ``the Johnsons''.

3. Ms Carre, Mr Johnson and Ms Johnson are the respective registered proprietors of lots 3, 1 and 2 in Strata Plan 53020 which relates to a residential flat building on the waterfront at Cremorne Point. There are no other lots in the strata plan. The building consists of only three residential flats. According to the schedule of unit entitlements endorsed on the strata plan, the entitlement of each of lots 1 and 2 is 25 and the entitlement of lot 3 is 50. Under current ownership, therefore, the entitlements of the Johnsons together equal the entitlement of Ms Carre.

4. In July 2001, Ms Carre commenced proceedings in the District Court seeking damages in respect of alleged defects in the air conditioning system serving lot 3. She sued Mr Johnson as first defendant, Ms Johnson as second defendant, Lipman as third defendant and Positive Air as fourth defendant. The causes of action asserted against the Johnsons were referable to the fact that they developed the property by construction of the present building and strata subdivision and were the vendors of lot 3 to Ms Carre. Ms Carre alleged a duty of care in negligence on the part of the Johnsons as developers towards Ms Carre as a successor to the owner of the premises. In their capacity as vendors, the Johnsons were subjected to claims in contract, for negligent misstatement and under the Fair Trading Act. The claims against Lipman arose from its having constructed the building and were claims in negligence. The claims against Positive Air were connected with design and installation work it did on the air conditioning system in the course of the construction of the building and work subsequently done at the request of Ms Carre once she had become the owner of lot 3. These were claims in negligence and, as to the subsequent work, also claims in contract. I should mention here that Ms Carre's purchase of lot 3 from the Johnsons was by contract dated 13 December 1996 and that completion took place on 3 February 1997, the strata plan having been registered in September 1996.

5. Several heads of damage were asserted by Ms Carre in her original statement of claim in the District Court proceedings. She claimed for the cost of rectification works, the payments she made for remedial works and inconvenience, discomfort, vexation and distress.

The role of the owners corporation is raised

6. On 26 November 2001, that is, four months after commencement of Ms Carre's District Court proceedings, the Johnsons filed an amended defence in which they pleaded for the first time that parts of the total air conditioning system serving Ms Carre's unit formed part of the ``common property'', as defined by the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1996, in relation to the strata scheme. The implications of that added element of the Johnsons' defence were spelled out in a letter of 14 December 2001 from the Johnsons' solicitors to Ms Carre's solicitors:

> ``In summary, [the Johnsons] plead in paragraphs 42 to 45 of their Amended Defence that components of the subject air conditioning system became part of the common property (`System Common Property') on registration of the strata plan and, at the time of registration, vested in the Owners Corporation in accordance with the Development Act. Hence the person or entity with standing to take action in respect of the System Common Property is the Owners Corporation, not your client.''

This is a reflection of the operation of s.18 of the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act by which common property vests in the relevant owners corporation upon registration of a strata plan.

7. Further correspondence between the solicitors established which parts of the overall air conditioning system are said by the Johnsons to constitute part of the common property. These are, for the most part, fans, vents, grilles and ducting in and above the ceiling of Ms Carre's unit, as well as certain pipes. Other components of the system (that is, items not identified by the Johnsons' solicitors as the subject of their clients' assertion as to common property) include compressors and other items of machinery. Both groups of components together make up the air conditioning system. Neither group, it seems, can operate in any meaningful way without the other. Furthermore, I understand it to be common ground that the air conditioning system in question — that is, the totality made up of the two groups of components — provides air conditioning exclusively to lot 3, there being a separate system (or separate systems) providing air conditioning to lot 1 and lot 2.

8. On 24 January 2002, Lipman filed a defence in the District Court in which it is said that Ms Carre lacked standing to commence proceedings against Lipman because the system comprises common property; also that, for that reason, Ms Carre suffered no damage. In subsequent correspondence, Lipman's solicitors said that claims for rectification of common property can only be pursued by the owners corporation and that any loss attributable to defective common property must be regarded as loss suffered by the owners corporation as distinct from Ms Carre.

The plaintiff's attempts to involve the owners corporation

9. From December 2001, Ms Carre made attempts to have convened a general meeting of the owners corporation. Such a meeting took place on 17 January 2003, having been requisitioned by Ms Carre for the purpose of considering and, if thought fit, passing the following resolution:

``That the Owners Corporation of Strata Plan 53020 consent to be joined as a co- plaintiff in District Court proceedings No 7626 of 2001, and that such consent be evidenced in writing.''

10. Ms Carre and Ms Johnson were present at the meeting, the latter in her own right and as proxy for Mr Johnson. In attendance were Ms Carre's husband and Mr Sachs as the strata manager. Mr Sachs acted as chairman. Ms Carre's husband spoke briefly to the motion which was then put to a vote. Ms Carre voted in favour. Ms Johnson, both for herself and for Mr Johnson, voted against. Mr Sachs declared the motion not carried — or, as the minutes subsequently put it:

``The motion was put and NOT RESOLVED to be a co-plaintiff. (Two votes against one in favour.)''

11. On 30 January 2003, Ms Carre filed in the District Court proceedings a notice of motion by which she sought

(a) an order that the owners corporation be joined as a defendant pursuant to Part 7 rule 8 of the District Court Rules 1973; and
(b) leave to file an amended statement of claim in the form attached to the notice of motion.

12. The form of amended statement of claim added the owners corporation as fifth defendant and referred to and denied the allegations of the Johnsons and Lipman that part of the air conditioning system servicing unit 3 constitutes part of the common property. It then went on to allege that the Johnsons (or either of them) owed to the proprietors of lots in the strata plan (including, presumably, themselves) and to the owners corporation a duty of care with respect to the construction of the building as a whole, which duty was breached. The claims against the Johnsons as vendors of lot 3 remained in their original form. In relation to Lipman, there was added an allegation that it owed to the proprietors of lots in the strata plan and to the owners corporation a duty of care in relation to the carrying out of the work involved in the construction of the building, plus breach of that duty. A claim similar in concept against Positive Air was added in relation to the design and installation of the air conditioning system and the carrying out of subsequent remedial work. Ms Carre, as plaintiff, then claimed orders that damages be paid by the respective defendants to the proprietors of the lots ``and/ or'' the owners corporation.

13. The amended statement of claim also expanded the heads of claim, adding claims in respect of loss of opportunity of negotiating a purchase price commensurate with the true market value of the property in its defective state, diminution in the market value and the cost of relocation while rectification works were carried out.

14. Ms Carre's notice of motion came on for hearing before the District Court on 14 February 2003 and was dismissed. No transcript of the District Court proceedings has been tendered; nor has any copy of reasons for judgment. The following account is given in an affidavit of Ms Given, Ms Carre's solicitor:

``On 14 February 2003, I attended at the hearing of the plaintiff's Joinder Motion with Gregory Sirtes of counsel, who appeared on behalf of the plaintiff before his Honour Acting Justice Bowden of the District Court of New South Wales.

At the hearing of the Joinder Motion referred to in paragraph 14 above, the Joinder Motion was opposed by the Johnsons and Lipman and the Court dismissed the Joinder Motion with costs, on the basis that no cause of action was pleaded against the Owners Corporation and such joinder could not be effected under Part 7 Rule 8 of the District Court Rules 1973.''

15. Part 7 rule 8 of the District Court Rules is in virtually the same form as Part 8 rule 8 of the Supreme Court Rules. It reads as follows:

``(1) Where a person who is not a party to an action:

(a) ought to have been joined as a party, or
(b) is a person whose joinder as a party is necessary to ensure that all matters in dispute in the action may be effectually and completely determined and adjudicated upon, the Court, on application by him or by any party or of its own motion, may, on terms, order that he be added as a party and make orders for the further conduct of the action.

(2) A person shall not be added as a plaintiff unless he has consented in writing to be so added."

16. In light of the approach taken in the form of amended statement of claim, it is, in one sense, understandable that the motion to join the owners corporation as a defendant should have been unsuccessful. No claim for relief against the owners corporation was included in the proposed amended statement of claim, its role in the proceedings being confined to that of what might best be described as a non-plaintiff recipient of damages sued for by Ms Carre. The owners corporation was, in truth and in substance, put forward by Ms Carre as effectively co-plaintiff so that the objection raised by the Johnsons and Lipton [sic] might be overcome. But joinder as a plaintiff would have required, under Part 7 rule 8(2), its active consent — which consent, of course, Ms Carre had failed to secure at the general meeting of the owners corporation held on 17 January 2003.

17. It should be noted at this point that the approach taken in the amended statement of claim was that traditionally regarded as appropriate when a derivative claim is advanced by a shareholder suing in reliance upon some claim vested in his or her company. Speaking of one such situation (where a minority shareholder sues in circumstances where the majority are attempting to appropriate property or advantages which belong to the company or to shareholders as a body), McPherson JA (with whom Williams JA and Wilson J agreed) said in Metyor Inc v Queensland Electronic Switching Pty Ltd (2002) 42 ACSR 398:

> ``Proceedings of that kind for fraud on the minority were required to be brought in representative form on behalf of all members and were contingent on the company being joined as a co-defendant, so that any judgment for relief or recovery that might be given would both bind and operate in favour of the company found to have been wronged: see Spokes v Grosvenor Hotel Co Ltd (1897) 1 QB 124; at 128-129. Otherwise the practical effect of the judgment would be to transfer property of the company to individual members and, to that extent, result in an unauthorised dividend or distribution of corporate assets to shareholders."

Relief sought by the plaintiff in this court

18. Having failed to persuade the District Court to allow her action to be reformulated in that way, Ms Carre's next move was to institute the present proceedings. The substantive sought by her statement of claim filed in this court on 4 March 2003 is:

> ``A declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to commence or continue proceedings in the name of the Owners Corporation of Strata Plan 53020 in proceedings number 7626 of 2001 in the District Court of New South Wales (Construction List), against the first to fourth defendants."

19. Implicit in Ms Carre's claim are two assumptions: first, that the ``proper plaintiff rule", or rule in Foss v Harbottle (1843) 2 Hare 461, applies to the species of corporation created by the Strata Schemes Management Act; and, second, that this court may grant relief that overcomes the effect of that rule in her District Court proceedings by allowing her to pursue the claims that she considers that corporation to have against the parties who are the defendants in those proceedings. I interpolate here, that, in view of s.11(2) of the Strata Schemes Management Act, it is clear that the statutory derivative action created by Part 2F.1A of the Corporations Act 2001 (Cth) is not available in this case.

Does the rule in Foss v Harbottle apply to an owners corporation?

20. The first of the assumptions to which I have referred as implicit in Ms Carre's claim is, in my view, well-founded. Foss v Harbottle itself concerned a company incorporated by statute, two members of which filed a bill against the directors and others charging them with a variety of fraudulent and illegal acts by which the company's property was wasted. The members sought orders that the defendants make good to the company the losses complained of. A demurrer was upheld, the court answering adversely to the plaintiffs the question:

> ``... whether the facts alleged in this case justify a departure form [sic] the rule which, prima facie, would require that the corporation should sue in its own name and in its corporate character, or in the name of someone whom the law has appointed to be its representative."

21. This ``proper plaintiff rule" was said by the English Court of Appeal in Prudential Assurance Co Ltd v Newman Industries Ltd (No 2) (1982) Ch 204 to be based on

> ``... the elementary principle that A cannot, as a general rule, bring an action against B to recover damages or secure other relief on behalf of C for an injury done by B to C. C is the proper plaintiff because C is the party injured, and, therefore, the person in whom the cause of action is vested."

22. In Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Co v Johnson (1938) 60 CLR 189, Dixon J said (at p 223):

> ``The company itself is, prima facie, the proper plaintiff in an action to enforce rights vested, not in the shareholders, but in the company. An action cannot be maintained by a shareholder for the purpose of securing the enforcement of rights against others,
>
> [140358]
> vested not in himself but in the company, unless, speaking broadly, the failure of the company itself to pursue its alleged rights is attributable to an attempt on the part of the directors to further some interest at the expense of the company's or to some other mala-fide, fraudulent or ultra-vires conduct on their part or on the part of members of the company in a position to exercise control (See per James L.J. in Gray v. Lewis (1873) 8 Ch App 1035, at p. 1050 and in MacDougall v. Gardiner [1875] 1 ChD 13, at p. 21, and per Lord Davey in Burland v. Earle [FN80])."

23. The capacity of a corporation, as a person distinct from its members, to sue and be sued in its corporate name is one of the central incidents of corporate status. That capacity must be taken to be possessed by an owners corporation created by s.11(1) of the Strata Schemes Management Act, given the explicit statement that it is ``a body corporate". At the same time, however, the occasions on which and circumstances in which the capacity may be exercised will be circumscribed by the provisions of the Act: Humphries v The Proprietors ``Surfers Palms North" Group Titles Plan 1955 (1994) 179 CLR 597.

24. The application of the proper plaintiff rule in relation to the kind of body corporate created by analogous Queensland strata titles legislation was confirmed by Macrossan CJ and McPherson JA in Dynevor Pty Ltd v The Proprietors Centrepoint Building Units Plan No 4327 (Unreported, QCA, 12 May 1995). Their Honours there said:

> ``In the area of company law the existence of an action to recover dispositions of corporate property that are ultra vires or otherwise improper, or to restrain an illegitimate exercise of corporate power that seeks to do so, is well established. It is available as one of the exceptions to the rule in Foss v Harbottle (1843) 2 Hare 461, that, apart from those exceptions, the corporation is the only competent plaintiff for redress in proceedings of that kind. See Hawkesbury Development Co Ltd v Landmark Finance Pty Ltd (1969) 92 WN (NSW) 199, 213. The exceptions permitting such actions to be brought are closely controlled. A suit to recover corporate property is considered as derivative, in the sense that, although instituted in the name of the plaintiff, it is regarded as brought for the benefit of the corporation, in whose favour any restitutionary relief to be granted must in the end be made. At the same time, a plaintiff employing this form of action must make out a title to do so as a member of the corporation whose claims or interests it is sought to protect.
>
> The defendant is the corporate creature of a statute, and the rule has been held to apply to statutory corporations capable of suing in their own names: Hodgson v National Local and Government Officers Association [1972] 1 WLR 130, 139. The principle underlying it is appropriate to the case of a corporation of this kind. For a wrong done to a corporation like the defendant, the body corporate is prima facie the only proper plaintiff in an action claiming to redress that wrong, unless the person claiming to sue in the corporate interest comes within one or more of the recognised exceptions to the rule. No such question arose in Humphries because it was the defendant body corporate itself that relied on ultra vires in answer to the claim of the plaintiffs to enforce the agreement which was held by the High Court to be beyond power."

25. These observations apply with equal force to an owners corporation brought into existence and governed by the Strata Schemes Management Act. It follows that the claims Ms Carre considers the owners corporation for strata plan 53020 to have against the Johnsons, Lipman and Positive Air may be pursued in the District Court only by that owners corporation, unless Ms Carre is recognised as having attained a position from which she can act for it or in its place. Without the active assent of the owners corporation, Ms Carre can be put into such a position only by court order. She asserts an entitlement to such an order on the basis of an exception to the proper plaintiff rule.

Jurisdiction of this court to grant appropriate relief

26. That leads to a consideration of the second assumption implicit in Ms Carre's initiation of the present proceedings, namely, that this court is able to grant relief that will have the effect she desires in relation to the District Court proceedings. It is, to my mind, clear that the claim Ms Carre makes in this court is one to which the court's comprehensive equitable jurisdiction extends. She seeks to rely on an exception to the proper plaintiff rule. In doing so, she says that, in the particular circumstances, the rule operates to produce an injustice so that, in granting an order of the kind she claims, the court will, in the words of Lord Davey in Burland v Earle [1902] AC 83 at 93, ``give a remedy for a wrong which would otherwise escape redress''. Correction and avoidance of such injustices are the province of equity. The role of courts of equity in the present context was referred to by Browne- Wilkinson LJ in Nurcombe v Nurcombe [1984] BCLC 557 at 565:

> ``Since the wrong complained of is a wrong to the company, not to the shareholder, in the ordinary way the only competent plaintiff in an action to redress the wrong would be the company itself. But, where such a technicality would lead to manifest injustice, the courts of equity permitted a person interested to bring an action to enforce the company's claim. The case is analogous to that in which equity permits a beneficiary under a trust to sue as plaintiff to enforce a legal right vested in trustees (which right the trustees will not themselves enforce), the trustees being joined as defendants. Since the bringing of such an action requires the exercise of the equitable jurisdiction of the court on the grounds that the interests of justice require it, the court will not allow such an action to be used in an inequitable manner so as to produce an injustice.''

27. It is thus clear that, in these proceedings, Ms Carre seeks to invoke general equitable jurisdiction. The District Court's limited and specific equitable jurisdiction is created by express statutory prescription the boundaries of which are not always easy to identify: see Commonwealth Bank of Australia v Hadfield (2001) 53 NSWLR 614. It is not necessary to decide whether the present claim falls within that jurisdiction. It is not clear whether the issue of equitable jurisdiction and the power of the District Court to make, on equitable grounds, the orders unsuccessfully sought by Ms Carre was debated when her notice of motion was before the District Court on 14 February 2003. The limited evidence available suggests that it was not and that the matter was approached solely by reference to the District Court Rules. It is, I think, safe to assume that the District Court did not consider itself to have any relevant jurisdiction in relation to the subject matter of the notice of motion over and above that arising from Part 7 rule 8, so that any assertion that the claim could have been (or should now be) pursued there rather than here cannot confidently be made. It is therefore appropriate that I proceed to the merits of the claim.

28. At this point, I pause to examine more closely the scheme of the strata titles legislation. I have already mentioned s.11(1) of the Strata Schemes Management Act which causes the owners of the lots from time to time in a strata scheme to constitute a body corporate and s.18(1) of the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act which causes common property in a strata plan to vest in the body corporate upon the registration of the plan. I have not, however, referred to the way in which an owners corporation holds common property. In a case such as the present, where different persons are the proprietors of lots, the estate or interest in common property vested in the owners corporation is held by it ``as agent... for those proprietors as tenants in common in shares proportional to the unit entitlements of their respective lots'':

s.20(b). Each such proprietor accordingly has what s.24(2) calls a ``beneficial interest'' in the estate or interest of the owners corporation in the common property. The statute seems clearly enough to proceed on the footing that each proprietor of a lot is to be regarded as the equitable owner of an undivided interest as one of several tenants in common in the estate or interest of which the owners corporation is the legal owner. Section 21 renders common property incapable of being dealt with except in accordance with the Act. Section 24(2) makes a lot proprietor's beneficial interest in the estate or interest in common property held by the owners corporation incapable of being ``severed from, or dealt with except in conjunction with, the lot''. The owners corporation has a limited power to deal with common property in certain ways pursuant to a ``special resolution'' passed at a general meeting of the owners corporation, but only in the circumstances expressly provided: see ss.25, 26 and 27. Under s.62 of the Strata Schemes Management Act, an owners corporation is obliged to maintain common property, to keep it in repair and to renew or replace ``any fixtures or fittings comprised in the common property''.

29. It is clear from this statutory scheme that an owners corporation is in no sense the beneficial owner of common property. Its ownership is always in a representative capacity identified by the Act as that of ``agent'', with the lot proprietors, as the owners in equity of undivided interests as tenants in common, each identified as having a ``beneficial interest''. The restrictions upon alienation and other dealings and the provisions with respect to repair, renewal and replacement proceed on the assumption that common property exists for the benefit of the lot proprietors as a general body. While the legislation makes provision for a particular lot proprietor to be granted special rights in relation to common property, there is no suggestion in the present case that Ms Carre has been granted any such rights in respect to so much of the common property as is said to form part of the air conditioning system serving her lot. As was observed in Houghton v Immer (No 55) Pty Ltd (1997) 44 NSWLR 46 by Handley JA (with whom Mason P and Beazley JA concurred), a provision that vests common property in an owners corporation as ``agent'' for lot proprietors makes the proprietors equitable tenants in common.

30. It is also relevant to look at the way in which an owners corporation is structured. Its members are the ``owners'' from time to time of the lots in the strata scheme. This, as already noticed, is the effect of s.11(1) of the Strata Schemes Management Act. Having regard to the definition of ``owner'', the persons who are the members, in the case of a freehold scheme such as this, are the registered proprietors of the lots unless, in the case of a particular lot, some other person is recorded in the strata roll pursuant to s.98. Under clause 18 of Schedule 2, voting at general meetings of an owners corporation is on the basis that, in general, each person voting has one vote for each lot in respect of which the person is entitled to vote; but if a poll is demanded or the legislation requires a special resolution, the voting power of a person entitled to vote in respect of a particular lot is the unit entitlement of that lot.

The ``justice'' exception to the rule in Foss v Harbottle

31. I proceed now to the question whether the present case is one in which a departure from the proper plaintiff rule should be allowed. Mr Sirtes of counsel, who appeared for Ms Carre, did not seek to bring the present case within any of the four uncontroversial exceptions to the proper plaintiff rule, being (as described at p.732 of Meagher Gummow & Lehane's ``Equity Doctrines & Remedies'' (4th edition, 2002, by Meagher, Heydon and Leeming):

> ``(a) actions where the plaintiff alleges that the company is acting, or is about to act, ultra vires; (b) actions where the act in question would only be valid if passed by more than a simple majority vote of shareholders, and it has not been so passed; (c) where the plaintiff complains that his personal rights have been infringed; (d) where the directors are exercising their powers as a fraud on the minority.''

32. Mr Sirtes' contention is, rather, that the case is within a fifth exception described by the same authors as:

> ``(e) in any other case where justice requires it.''

33. Mr Butler of counsel for the Johnsons conceded the existence of this fifth — or ``justice'' — exception but submitted that it must be regarded as narrow; indeed, too narrow to cover the present case.

34. It is, in my opinion, too late to argue the non-existence of the ``justice'' exception. The proper plaintiff rule has never applied rigidly. In Foss v Harbottle itself, Sir James Wigram V- C contemplated that:

> ``[i]f a case should arise of injury to a corporation by some of its members, for which no adequate remedy remained, except that of a suit by individual corporators... the claims of justice would be found superior to any difficulties arising out of technical rules respecting the mode in which corporations are required to sue.''

In Russell v Wakefield Waterworks Co (1875) LR 5 Eq 474, Sir George Jessel MR referred to the proper plaintiff rule and said:

> ``But that is not a universal rule; that is, it is a rule subject to exceptions, and the exceptions depend very much on the necessity of the case; that is, the necessity for the Court doing justice.''

35. In a real sense, therefore, there is only one exception to the proper plaintiff rule, being a comprehensive ``justice'' exception. This has always been recognised and the four specifically defined classes of exception traditionally referred to are but particular examples of it. It is nevertheless necessary to consider the cases from which an exception beyond the established four may be seen to have been recognised.

36. In Biala Pty Ltd v Mallina Holdings Ltd (1993) 13 WAR 11, Ipp J [reviewed the then state of Australian judicial statements on the question of the existence of a fifth ``justice'' exception. I quote as follows from his Honour's judgment at p.69 and following:

> ``In this State Malcolm CJ has indicated views contrary to the existence of the fifth exception. In Eromanga Hydrocarbons NL v Australis Mining NL (1988) 13 ACLR 804; 14 ACLR 486; the learned Chief Justice said at 910: `In my opinion, in the present circumstances, I am not persuaded that the fifth exception ought to be recognised as having been established.'
>
> Again, however, the mode of expression employed by the learned Chief Justice (and in particular the reference to not `being persuaded' in `the present circumstances') does not, with respect, suggest a firm and final view.
>
> In Scarel Pty Ltd v City Loan and Credit Corporation Pty Ltd (No 2) (1988) 12 ACLR 730; 6 ACLC 219 Gummow J reviewed many of the authorities on this issue without coming to a firm conclusion. One of the cases which he mentioned was Campbell v Kitchen & Sons Ltd and Brisbane Soap Company Ltd (1910) 12 CLR 515. He discussed it in the following terms:
>
> > `In that case, half of the shares of company B were owned by company A or its nominees. Company A brought an action against company B and recovered judgment in its favour. The directors of company B were equally divided in opinion on the question of whether an appeal should be brought to the High Court. The other half of the shares in company B were held by C or his nominees. In the High Court, leave was given to C to appeal on behalf of himself and all other members of the company B, Griffith CJ saying (at p 514):
> >
> > > ``Under these circumstances there must be some remedy, and I think we ought to apply the analogy of the practice of the Court of Chancery, which is now adopted by the Supreme Court of Judicature, and give leave to some person who is substantially interested to come in and institute the appeal.''
> >
> > Counsel had cited Foss v Harbottle and such decisions as Burland v Earle [1902] AC 83. The case does not appear to fall clearly within any of the four recognised exceptions to the rule in Foss v Harbottle.'
>
> In Hawkesbury Development Company Ltd v Landmark Finance Pty Ltd [1969] 2 NSWR 782 Street J discussed the issue at 789 and said:
> > `It is, perhaps, a useful door to be left open lest in some extremely unusual circumstances injustice would result from applying the rule. No exhaustive or even descriptive statement > of such circumstances has been propounded... It is the absence of definition or example of such exception that, no doubt, underlies such observations as are to be found to the effect that there is in truth no admissible ground for further exception. It would, however, be regrettable if the difficulty of foreseeing a possible need for allowing any further exception were to be elevated to an anticipatory refusal to recognise any future case as being justly treated as an exception.

> For the purposes of the present judgment I am prepared to accept the existence of a further exception to the rule in Foss v Harbottle where justice so requires.'

I note that the learned authors of Equity, Doctrine and Remedies 3rd ed Meagher, Gummow and Lehane at paras 21-30 accept that apart from the four recognised exceptions to the rule in Foss v Harbottle there is a further exception `in any other case where justice requires it'."

37. Ipp J continued:

``In coming to a conclusion on this particularly difficult question I have been particularly persuaded by the sentiments expressed by Sir Robert Megarry V-C in Estmanco (Kilner House) Ltd v Greater London Council [1982] 1 WLR 2 at 11-12 where he said:

> `Plainly there must be some limit to the power of the majority to pass resolutions which they believe to be in the best interests of the company and yet remain
> [140362]
> immune from interference by the courts. It may be in the best interests of the company to deprive the minority of some of their rights or some of their property, yet I do not think that this gives the majority an unrestricted right to do this, however unjust it may be, and however much it may harm shareholders whose rights as a class differ from those of the majority. If a case falls within one of the exceptions from Foss v Harbottle I cannot see why the right of the minority to sue under that exception should be taken away from them merely because the majority of the company reasonably believe it to be in the best interests of the company that this should be done. This is particularly so if the exception from the rule falls under the rubric of ``fraud on a minority".'

Although Sir Robert Megarry made express reference to `fraud on a minority', his views equally justify the existence of a fifth exception so as to protect minority shareholders in those rare cases where they are unable to bring themselves within the recognised exceptions and where a serious injustice would arise if they were precluded from pursuing a derivative action.

I take into account further that as Gummow J said in Scarel Pty Ltd v City Loan and Credit Corporation Pty Ltd (No 2) at 223:

> `(T)he rule in Foss v Harbottle and its exceptions have generally been considered part of the powers and procedures of modern courts of equity...'

Equity is concerned with substance and not form, and it seems to me to be contrary to principle to require wronged minority shareholders to bring themselves within the boundaries of the well recognised exceptions and to deny jurisdiction to a court of equity even where an unjust or unconscionable result may otherwise ensue."

38. His Honour upheld the plaintiffs' argument ``that the court may allow a derivative action by shareholders in circumstances whenever the justice of the case so requires". He then went on to consider the particular case the facts of which were not analogous with those before me. In Mesenberg v Cord Industrial Recruiters Pty Ltd (1996) 39 NSWLR 128, Young J referred to Hawkesbury Development Co Ltd v Landmark Finance Pty Ltd (1969) 92 WN (NSW) 199 and Scarel Pty Ltd v City Loan & Credit Corp Pty Ltd (1988) 17 FCR 344 (mentioned by Ipp J) and expressed the opinion that the law of Western Australia expressed in Biala ``appears to be the same as the law of New South Wales as tentatively accepted by Street J in the Hawkesbury Development case". In Cadwallader v Bajco Pty Ltd ((2001) 189 ALR 270), Austin J said:

``... although the matter is still open to some doubt at appellate level, Mesenberg's case is authority for the proposition that the fifth exception is part of the law of New South Wales, and I am happy to adopt his Honour's analysis of the cases..."

Austin J held that the fifth exception was applicable to the case before him, a conclusion that was apparently not challenged upon the subsequent appeal and cross-appeal: see Cadwallader v Bajco Pty Ltd (2002) NSWCA 328.

39. Reference must also be made to the decision of the High Court in Campbell v Kitchen & Sons Ltd and Brisbane Soap Co Ltd (1910) 12 CLR 513. The judgment of Griffith CJ (in which O'Connor, Isaacs and Higgins JJ concurred) may be quoted in full:

``This is a case in which judgment was given in the Supreme Court of Queensland in an action between parties involving an amount over £300. This Court has jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from that judgment, but, owing to the curious circumstances of the case, it cannot be instituted because those who would be respondents have an equal voice in the company which would be appellants. Under these circumstances there must be some remedy, and I think we ought to apply the analogy of the practice of the Court of Chancery, which is now adopted by the Supreme Court of Judicature, and give leave to some person who is substantially interested to come in and institute the appeal. I therefore think that leave should be given to the applicant to appeal from the judgment on behalf of himself and all other members of the defendant company. Of course the defendant company must be made a respondent. If the judgment is to be regarded as being interlocutory, the leave we now give will cover that also."

40. One of the important themes running through the cases in this area is the reluctance of the courts to interfere in a situation that is capable of being resolved by an appropriate resolution of the members of a company. Where an individual shareholder seeks to assert a claim of the company in relation to some supposed cause of action and the company declines to proceed, the court will be reluctant to assist or to play any role at all unless and until it is seen that the matter cannot be resolved by a resolution of shareholders. The rationale was explained thus by Lawrence Collins J in Konamaneni v Rolls Royce (India) Ltd (2002) 1 WLR 1269 at 1277-1278:

``Where what has been done amounts to a fraud and the wrongdoers are themselves in control of the company, the rule is relaxed in favour of the aggrieved minority who are allowed to bring a minority shareholders' action on behalf of themselves and all others. The reason for this is that if they were denied that right, their grievance would never reach the court because the wrongdoers themselves, being in control, would not allow the company to sue: Edwards v Halliwell [1950] 2 All ER 1064, 1067; the Prudential Assurance Co Ltd case [1982] Ch 204, 211. As Browne-Wilkinson LJ said in Nurcombe v Nurcombe [1985] 1 WLR 370, 378:

> `Since the wrong complained of is a wrong to the company, not to the shareholder, in the ordinary way the only competent plaintiff in an action to redress the wrong would be the company itself. But, where such a technicality would lead to manifest injustice, the courts of equity permitted a person interested to bring an action to enforce the company's claim.'"

Particular circumstances of this case

41. Many of the cases about the rule in Foss v Harbottle concentrate on wrongs done (or possibly done) by directors. Others (of which Johnson v Gore Wood & Co [2002] 2 AC 1 is an example) are concerned with distinctions between wrongs suffered by the company which reflect in diminution in share value and wrongs suffered by shareholders, whether directly or less directly because of impacts on the value of shares held by them. Particular features of the present circumstances make much of the thinking in those cases of limited relevance. In the first place, although the owners corporation is made up of persons who are regarded as its members, the present case does not involve any decision of a body or organ analogous to a board of directors. In relation to the relevant matters, the members alone are the decision-makers for the corporation. Second, the subject matter in issue in the District Court proceedings, being the air conditioning unit serving lot 3, is, regardless of the technicalities of ownership of the various components that make up the whole, intended to be enjoyed solely by whichever member of the corporation is for the time being the proprietor of lot 3. The unit as a whole and any parts of it included in the common property are irrelevant to the enjoyment by other lot proprietors of the rights they have as participants in the strata scheme.

42. If the air conditioning unit is faulty and inoperative, the corporation suffers no direct inconvenience although, to the extent that repairs may be needed in relation to any system components vested in it as common property, the corporation may incur a liability to effect repair, renewal or replacement under s.62 of the Strata Schemes Management Act — I say ``may'' because of the possibility that the particular components that are common property might, in a physical sense and when separately examined in their own right, be found to be perfectly sound even though they do not interact with the other components owned by the lot proprietor in such a way as to function as a fully operating air conditioning system. Importantly, any diminution in value suffered by reason of the system's being inoperative is diminution in the value of lot 3, not diminution in value of the common property.

The absence of acts of persons analogous with the directors of a company means that fiduciary duties are unlikely to be at work in a case such as the present. Members of the body corporate, being proprietors of lots, are not, in any obvious sense, charged with a duty to be attentive to the interests of a body of persons whose welfare is placed in their hands except as the statutes expressly require. Such members are, in a sense, co-venturers but, unlike partners and joint venturers (cf United Dominions Corporation Ltd v Brien Pty Ltd (1985) 157), they have not chosen to come together in order to pursue some common interest. The only bond between them is ownership of parts of a building. None chooses to become a member of the corporation because of its nature, its activities or the attributes of the other members. Membership is merely a statutory and compulsory by-product of a decision to acquire particular real property.

44. In these special circumstances (and where the owners corporation occupies, in relation to the relevant property, the purely representative position for which the strata titles legislation makes provision), analogies drawn from company law cases are limited and must be approached with care. Rather than attempting to fit the circumstances within (or to scrutinise them against) company law precedents, the court should deal with their own special reality.

45. Ms Carre says that she was put to expense and loss and suffered inconvenience, discomfort and diminution in the value of her property while the air conditioning unit in question was inoperative. She alleges that responsibility for its defective condition, in the form of legal liability, should be laid at the feet of the Johnsons, Lipman and Positive or some one or more of them. Her attempt to sheet home that perceived liability through proceedings in the District Court suffered a setback when first the Johnsons and then Lipman said that she is not technically the owner of some parts of the system and that her proceedings must fail unless the owners corporation becomes a party to the action and asserts its own claims in parallel with hers. She attempted to achieve that result by repleading her case and making the owners corporation a defendant so that she might assert the parallel claims on its behalf. That attempt failed. The full reasons are not known, but it should, I think, be inferred that the District Court was unwilling to accommodate or grant the form of equitable relief entailed in allowing proceedings to be reformulated in the way traditionally employed to recognise an exception to the proper plaintiff rule. Ms Carre then sought directly a decision, by resolution of its members, that the owners corporation should become a co-plaintiff. That decision was not forthcoming because the Johnsons, being persons the owners corporation would sue, decide that the owners corporation should not be allowed to initiate claims against them. They were in a position where they could decide conclusively whether or not someone else would sue them. Not surprisingly, their decision was against that person's making them the subject of an attack through litigation.

46. The case is not, it seems to me, likely to be one in which the owners corporation is shown to have suffered other than nominal or modest loss through any negligence or other legal wrong that attended the development and construction of the building and the air conditioning system servicing lot 3 or the design and installation of that air conditioning system. And to the extent that the owners corporation may be shown to have suffered loss, that loss will have been incurred by it in the representative capacity that is the only capacity it has in relation to common property. The real loss attributable to any such wrong done in relation to common property will, in the circumstances of the integrated nature and functions of the air conditioning system, accrue to Ms Carre as the proprietor of lot 3.

In these circumstances, there is to my mind, some analogy to be drawn with the case where a trustee holds trust property for the benefit of a cestui que trust but will not take action to protect that property. According to s.24(2) of the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act, Ms Carre has a beneficial interest in the common property vested in the owners corporation, including such of it as consists of components of the air conditioning system servicing lot 3. Each of Mr Johnson and Ms Johnson also has a beneficial interest in the common property although in circumstances where, as I have said, those components are useful only to Ms Carre as the proprietor of lot 3. Ms Carre therefore has a special interest in the assertion by the owners corporation of rights of action it may have in relation to defects in the common property. The owners corporation, by the votes of the Johnsons (two of the persons against whom the rights of action on the part of the owners corporation are seen as lying), has declined to become party to the proceedings in which the rights of action will be asserted in company with the parallel right vested in Ms Carre alone. The owners corporation, which occupies a representative position qua the common property held by it as ``agent'', has refused to act. The following passage in the judgment of Sir WM James in Sharpe v San Paulo Railway Co (1873) LR 8 therefore becomes relevant:

> ``Is it to be permitted that every one of the persons who has an interest in a thing assigned to a trustee... should file a distinct bill in a distinct branch of this Court against the debtors to the estate? I had lately occasion to consider that question, and I came to the conclusion, very clearly, that a person interested in an estate or a trust fund could not sue a debtor to that trust fund, or sue for that trust fund, merely on the allegation that the trustee would not sue; but that if there was any difficulty of that kind, if the trustee would not take the proper steps to enforce the claim, the remedy of the cestui que trust was to file his bill against the trustee for the execution of the trust, or for the realization of the trust fund, and then to obtain the proper order for using the trustee's name, or for obtaining a receiver to use the trustee's name, who would, on behalf of the whole estate, institute the proper action, or the proper suit in this Court. That view I still adhere to, and I say it would be monstrous to hold that wherever there is a fund payable to trustees for the purpose of distribution amongst a great number of persons, every one of those persons could file a separate bill in equity, merely on the allegation that the trustee would not sue.''

48. In Ramage v Waclaw (1988) 12 NSWLR 84, Powell J surveyed the cases in which courts of equity have recognised special circumstances allowing a beneficiary to sue in his own name in equity or in the trustee's name at law when the trustee fails to institute proceedings. One such case is where ``the relation between the executors and the surviving partners is such as to present a substantial impediment to the prosecution by the executors of the rights of the parties interested in the estate against the surviving partners'': Travis v Milne; Milne v Milne (1851) 9 Hare 141. In the present case, it is the relation between the Johnsons and the owners corporation, represented by their majority voting power, that has presented a substantial impediment to the prosecution by the owners corporation of the rights of the lot proprietors interested in the common property against the Johnsons and others.

Relief warranted unless discretionary considerations otherwise indicate

49. My conclusion on the special and unusual facts of this case is that, subject to anything to the contrary arising from the considerations of a discretionary kind referred to by Mr Butler in opposing the grant of the relief sought by Ms Carre (which I shall consider presently), this court should, in the exercise of its general equitable jurisdiction, recognise and give effect to an equity of Ms Carre to sue in the District Court in the name of the owners corporation to the extent that it is necessary for the owners corporation to be joined as a plaintiff to permit the claims that Ms Carre wishes to prosecute in relation to the air conditioning unit serving lot 3 alone to be fully and effectively constituted through presence of the owners corporation as a party and assertion of such like claims as it may have in relation to that air conditioning system. Such orders will, in my judgment, be justified on the basis of the fifth ``justice'' exception to the rule in Foss v Harbottle and by reference to the principles I have just mentioned relevant to actions by a beneficiary in the name of his or her trustee, assuming always that none of the discretionary disqualifying factors asserted on behalf of the Johnsons is found to operate. It is to those factors that I now turn.

Submissions on discretionary considerations

50. Mr Butler's first submission is that Ms Carre's present application is an abuse of process because it does no more than to seek to re-open a decision already made by the District Court. For reasons I have given, the District Court, on the evidence before me, was apparently not invited to exercise the equitable jurisdiction that is involved in a claim to pursue a derivative action; nor is it clear that it possesses that jurisdiction. In those circumstances, the principle that might cause a subsequent application which is effectively a re- run of an earlier unsuccessful one to be regarded as an abuse of process cannot be applicable here, even if such a principle exists: see Nominal Defendant v Manning (2000) 50 NSWLR 139.

51. As part of the abuse of process submission, it was said on behalf of the Johnsons:

> ``[I]f the plaintiff's contention is that the District Court does not have jurisdiction to hear a derivative action then the declaration sought in the summons is nonsensical: the
> [140366]
> [140366]
> Supreme Court cannot make a declaration that the plaintiff be allowed to commence proceedings in the District Court, if the District Court does not have jurisdiction.''

52. The plaintiff's contention is not, as I understand it, that the District Court does not have jurisdiction to hear a derivative action. It is, rather, that the District Court's limited equitable jurisdiction does not permit it to recognise and give effect to the exceptions to the proper plaintiff rule. That does not mean that that rule must be left to apply immutably and inflexibly in District Court actions; merely that, if advantage is to be taken of an exception and grounds can be shown, the equitable jurisdiction of this court must be invoked in an auxiliary fashion.

53. An alternative version of the abuse of process submission was based on the existence within the strata titles legislation of dispute resolution mechanisms which ultimately devolve upon the Consumer, Trader and Tenancy Tribunal. I must confess that I cannot see how this is so. Mr Butler did not take me through the relevant provisions of the legislation. These provisions are in Chapter 5 of the Strata Schemes Management Act. The most the provisions could achieve, it seems to me, is to impose some regime upon lot owners and a body corporate in relation to matters relevant to functions in relation to the strata scheme or the operation, administration or management of the scheme. No submission has been made which identifies how any such regime would or could achieve the results Ms Carre seeks in relation to the District Court proceedings.

54. It was also submitted on behalf of the Johnsons that the dismissal of Ms Carre's notice of motion in the District Court gave rise to some form of issue estoppel or res judicata. This seems to me to overlook the reality that the application was merely procedural and, as I have said, there is no reason why one interlocutory application, if unsuccessful, should not be followed by another — although successive applications obviously entail increased risk of an adverse exercise of judicial discretion.

55. Mr Butler next says that the relief Ms Carre seeks from this court should be refused because the claims she wishes to have the owners corporation pursue are statute barred. Mr Sirtes makes several points in response. He says that any such argument might be met by an assertion that any defect was a latent defect not discovered until late 1997. Also, the claims against the builder (Lipman) is a claim in tort (presumably on the basis of Bryan v Maloney (1995) 182 CLR 609) so that the cause of action does not arise until damage has been suffered: Christopoulos v Angelos (1996) 41 NSWLR 700. Determining the start of a limitation period is, in any event, a fact driven exercise and, as Mr Sirtes submitted, this court is not really in a position to make relevant findings of fact in the present proceedings. Any argument that the claims by the owners corporation were time barred would most appropriately be pursued in the District Court.

56. The matters advanced on behalf of the Johnsons provide no basis on which the court's discretion should be exercised against the grant of relief to the effect Ms Carre seeks.

Form of relief

57. It remains to consider the form of relief. If the proceedings in question were proceedings in this court, the appropriate course would be as described in Metyor Inc v Queensland Electronic Switching Pty Ltd (above): Ms Carre would be required to join the owners corporation as a defendant so that it would be bound by and have the benefit of any judgment obtained through efforts made by Ms Carre on its behalf. The same approach was referred to by Griffith CJ in Campbell's case (above): ``Of course, the defendant company must be made a respondent''.

58. Here, however, it has already been determined by the District Court that, having regard to the District Court Rules, the owners corporation may not be made a defendant in connection with moves by Ms Carre to advance claims on its behalf. Furthermore, joinder of the owners corporation as a plaintiff without its written consent would be contrary to the District Court Rules. This court will not make orders that cannot be implemented consistently with the District Court Rules. The relief it grants to vindicate Ms Carre's equity to set the owners corporation in motion must therefore be framed in a way that causes the owners corporation to become a plaintiff, rather than a defendant; moreover this must be done in a way that conforms with the requirement of the District Court Rules as to written consent.

59. If the owners corporation becomes a plaintiff in the District Court proceedings, it will be exposed to the possibility of an adverse costs order. Measures to counter that are necessary. The likelihood is that, if Ms Carre is successful in the District Court, it will be she rather than the owners corporation that reaps the whole (or substantially the whole) of the resultant benefit and reward. As the price of having the owners corporation added as a co-plaintiff, she should indemnify the owners corporation against all costs and expenses of and incidental to its participation as plaintiff including, but not limited to, costs ordered to be paid in the District Court proceedings by the owners corporation. The possibility that the owners corporation might, in the fullness of time, derive some separate benefit from the District Court proceedings warranting some contribution by it to costs thus cast upon Ms Carre may be accommodated by liberty to apply in these proceedings.

Orders

60. The orders I consider appropriate are as follows:

1. Order that the first defendant execute and deliver to the plaintiff a consent in writing to be added as a plaintiff in District Court proceedings 7626 of 2001, such consent being pursuant to Part 7 rule 8(2) of the District Court Rules.
2. Order that the plaintiff be at liberty

(a) to apply to the District Court for an order that the first defendant be added as a plaintiff in District Court proceedings 7626 of 2001;
(b) to tender in support of that application the consent in writing executed and delivered in accordance with order 1; and
(c) to prosecute on behalf of the first defendant as a plaintiff in District Court proceedings 7626 of 2001 claims by the first defendant substantially as set out in the form of amended ordinary statement of claim which is the annexure ``A'' to the plaintiff's notice of motion filed in the District Court proceedings on 30 January 2003.

3. Order that the second and third defendants consent to the making by the District Court of any order for joinder applied for by the plaintiff in exercise of the liberty granted by order 2(a).
4. Order that, if the plaintiff exercises the liberty granted by order 2, the plaintiff shall, except to the extent (if any) that the court hereafter otherwise orders, indemnify and hold harmless the first defendant from and against (and promptly pay and discharge for the first defendant) all such costs and expenses [th] at shall be incurred by the first defendant (or to which it shall be subjected) by reason of its being a party to District Court proceedings 7626 of 2001 including but not limited to any and all costs ordered by the District Court to be paid by the first defendant.

5. Grant to the plaintiff liberty to apply to the Duty Judge in the Equity Division on fourteen days notice for any order of the kind referred to in order 4.

61. The first defendant (owners corporation) did not file a defence in these proceedings. The second and third defendants (the Johnsons) did file a defence and were represented by Mr Butler in opposing the grant of the relief sought. The orders I have enunciated, although not in the form sought in the plaintiff's statement of claim filed on 4 March 2003, achieve for her in substance the position sought. The plaintiff is therefore entitled to costs against the second and third defendants. The statement of claim seeks costs on the indemnity basis but, having regard to the novelty of the application and the issues involved, I am not at all persuaded that the resistance of the second and third defendants was so devoid of merit that such an order is warranted. The order will be that the second and third defendants pay the plaintiff's costs on the party and party basis.

Court citation: [2003] NSWSC 451

New South Wales Supreme Court

Judgment delivered 28 May 2003

Strata title — Real property — Contracts — Variation of contracts relating to interest in land — Specific performance — Plaintiff entered into contract to purchase strata unit from defendant — Performance of contract conditional upon defendant completing certain work and finishes — Whether contract orally varied in respect of work required to be completed — Whether finishes installed by defendant of equivalent or greater quality to those specified in contract — Whether defendant entitled to terminate contract — Whether plaintiff entitled to specific performance.

The plaintiff (``Mr Parker'') entered into a contract (``the contract'') to purchase from the defendant (``Bravo'') a strata title property (``the property'') which Bravo was to construct. Pursuant to the contract, the vendor was obliged to obtain registration of the strata plan to which the property pertained. By clause 7 of the contract, Mr Parker was permitted to make claims with respect to the property before completion but if the total amount claimed exceeded 1% of the contract price Bravo was entitled to rescind. Clause 37 of the contract provided that Mr Parker could provide Bravo with a list of substantial defects within three months of completion which Bravo was obliged to rectify. The date of completion was specified by clause 53 of the contract, which also provided that either party could serve on the other a notice to complete in the event that completion did not take place on the specified date. Clause 65 dealt with Bravo's obligations with respect to the finishes applicable to the property; however, clause 66 permitted it to alter any such finish or related item to one of equivalent or higher quality. The Schedule of Finishes detailed the type of kitchen that was to be installed in the property. Certain works were required by clause 70 to be carried out by Bravo at the cost of Mr Parker. Those works included the installation of an ensuite skylight, a laundry door, and an external garage door (``the works'').

At the time Bravo gave Mr Parker notice of registration of the strata plan, the works required by clause 70 of the contract had not been carried out. Additionally, the kitchen installed was not in accordance with the Schedule of Finishes. Mr Parker accordingly provided to Bravo a list of defects. Bravo then served upon him a notice to complete on a specified date. When completion did not occur on that date, Bravo purported to terminate the contract. Bravo subsequently claimed that the list of defects provided by Mr Parker amounted to a claim for compensation that exceeded 1% of the contract price thus giving it a right to rescind pursuant to clause 7. Mr Parker contended that the list of defects did not fall within clause 7 but that if it did then he would reduce the claims to 1% of the contract price.

Proceedings were subsequently commenced by Mr Parker seeking specific performance of the contract. He submitted that Bravo had not validly terminated the contract because the defects that he had listed pertained to Bravo's obligations pursuant to clause 70 and with respect to the finishes. In reply, Bravo contended that it had validly terminated the contract because it had met its contractual obligations at the specified time of completion. More specifically, it submitted that it had exercised its right to vary the Finishes as contemplated by clause 66 and that the works provided for by clause 70 had been the subject of an oral variation between the parties. In particular, it was argued that Mr Parker had orally agreed that an ensuite skylight was not required, that certain kitchen tiles and bathroom door handles were satisfactory, and that the laundry and garage doors were unnecessary.

Held: granting specific performance.

1. It was not possible to accept that there was agreement for deletion of the ensuite skylight or in relation to the kitchen tiles or bathroom door handles. Moreover, it was to be accepted that the plaintiff insisted on the laundry and garage doors.

2. Even if clause 70 had been subject to an oral agreement to vary it, that variation was not enforceable. That followed because it was not severable from the contract which related to an interest in land. In those circumstances, writing was required for any relevant variation.

3. Bravo was not entitled to rely on clause 66 of the contract to vary the finishes relating to the kitchen. It had not adduced evidence to demonstrate that it had compared what was supposed to be provided pursuant to the Schedule of Finishes with what was in fact installed.

4. Accordingly, because Bravo had not fulfilled its obligations under the contract at the relevant time it was not entitled to give a notice to complete. Following from that, because Mr Parker was ready, willing and able to fulfil his obligations under the contract he was entitled to an order in the nature of specific performance.

5. The list of defects given by Mr Parker to Bravo did not amount to a claim within the meaning of clause 7 of the contract.

Windeyer J:

Outline

1. The plaintiff seeks an order for specific performance of a contract for the sale by the defendant company to him of a strata title property. The defendant claims to have terminated the contract after the plaintiff failed to comply with a notice to complete.

Facts

2. By contract 1 May 2001 the plaintiff, Mr Parker, agreed to purchase from Bravo Building Pty Ltd (Bravo) a property which could be described as a townhouse and garage which was part of a strata title development to be constructed by Bravo in Kumbardang Avenue, Miranda.

3. The building work had not progressed far, if it had progressed at all, at the date of the contract. The contract itself is a most unsatisfactory document. It is clear that no proper attention could have been given to it. What the parties obviously intended was to enter into a contract for the sale and purchase of a townhouse property to become a lot in the strata plan in a development to be constructed in accordance with a development consent of the Sutherland Shire Council. That consent document is annexed to the contract. There is no term requiring the building to be completed in accordance with the consent and approved plans. There are two clauses as to the vendor's obligations to obtain registration of the strata plan. The special conditions are in no sensible order and appear clearly to be some sort of cut and paste job. The lack of attention given to the contract can be shown by setting out clause 52 which is as follows:

> ``52. BENEFITS TO ENSURE [SIC]
> The parties hereby acknowledge that the benefit of the obligations warranties covenants and contracts contained in this contract having application after the date of completion shall ensure [sic] notwithstanding the completion of this contract."

4. There are many other ridiculous provisions. Clause 39 provides that requisitions under printed clause 5.1, must be the form of attached requisitions. And if that were not bad enough, no form is attached. There is little to be gained by setting out other examples of poor draftsmanship. It is hardly surprising that this sort of contract results in litigation.

5. The following clauses are included in the contract:

> ``7 Claims by purchaser
>
> The purchaser can make a claim (including a claim under clause 6) before completion only by serving it with a statement of the amount claimed, and if the purchaser makes one or more claims before completion —
>
> 7.1 the vendor can rescind if in the case of claims that are not claims for delay —
>
> 7.1.1. the total amount claimed exceeds 5% of the price;
> 7.1.2 the vendor serves notice of intention to rescind; and
>
> [140370]
> [140370]
>
> 7.1.3 the purchaser does not serve notice waiving the claims within 14 days after that service; and
>
> 7.2 if the vendor does not rescind, the parties must complete and if this contract is completed —
>
> 7.2.1 the lesser of the total amount claimed and 10% of the price must be paid out of the price to and held by the depositholder until the claims are finalised or lapse;
> 7.2.2 the amount held is to be invested in accordance with clause 3.1;

7.2.3 the claims must be finalised by an arbitrator appointed by the parties or, if no appointment is made within 1 month after completion, by an arbitrator appointed by the President of the Law Society at the request of a party;
7.2.3 the purchaser is not entitled, in respect of the claims, to more than the total amount claimed;
7.2.5 any net interest on the amount held must be paid to the parties in the same proportion as the amount held is to be paid; and 7.2.6 if the parties do not appoint an arbitrator and neither party requests the President to appoint an arbitrator within 3 months after completion, the claims lapse.

(By Clause 30.1.10 5% is substituted for 1%.)

37. Building Defects

37.1 Within three (3) months after the completion date the Purchaser shall conduct an inspection and be entitled to provide to the Vendor a list of substantial defects due to faulty materials or faulty workmanship which apply to the Property and the Vendor shall rectify such defects as soon as practicable after the vendor has agreed that the items in the list of defects are defects falling with clause 37.1. The rectification may be done after the date of completion. (This last sentence results from an unthought out amendment to the first line.)
37.2 The Vendor has the right to reasonably object to any of the items in the list of defects.
37.3 The Vendor, its tradespeople and representative, shall have access to repair and make good any of the items in the list of defects.

53. COMPLETION

(a) Completion of this contract shall take place on the later of:

(i) forty-two (42) days from the date of this Agreement; and
(ii) twenty-one (21) days after the date on which the Vendor serves written notice on the Purchaser or the Purchaser's solicitor that the Strata Plan is registered at the Land Titles Office.

(b) This contract must be completed by 2.00 pm on the completion date.
(c) If completion does not take place by the time and date set out in paragraph (a) and (b) of this clause then either party may serve on the other party at any time after that time and date a notice stipulating a date for completion being not less than 14 days after the date of service of the notice and stipulating that time is of the essence in respect of the time and date specified in the notice.

65. FINISHES

65.1 The Purchaser acknowledges that the Purchaser must accept the finishes as applicable to the Property and identified in the Schedule of Finishes and may not request the Vendor to vary the finishes to any alternative scheme.

65.2 The Vendor shall cause the items specified in the Schedule of Finishes to be installed in a proper and workmanlike manner in the Property and the Common Property.

66. ALTERATIONS TO FINISHES

66.1 The Vendor reserves the right to:

66.1.1 alter any finish specified in the Schedule of Finishes to another finish of equivalent or higher quality; and

[140371]

66.1.2 alter any item specified in the Schedule of Finishes to another item of equivalent or higher quality.

66.2 The Purchaser cannot make a claim or objection or requisition or rescind or terminate in respect of any alteration referred to in clause 66.

70. The Vendor acknowledges that both the Purchaser and the Builder have agreed to carry out the following works (Works) at the cost of the Purchaser:

1. Supply and install skylights to en suite and above stairwell at the cost of $2,000.00 to the Purchaser;
2. Supply and install additional TV outlets to bedrooms two and three at the cost of $130.00 to the Purchaser;
3. Supply and install additional double power outlets to bedrooms two and three at the cost of $90.00 to the Purchaser;
4. Supply and install an additional telephone outlet to the master bedroom at no cost to the Purchaser.
5. Supply and install a laundry door to the courtyard in lieu of a window at the cost of $80.00 to the purchaser;
6. Supply and install an external door from the garage to the courtyard at the cost of $175.00 to the purchaser;
7. Supply and install a gas log fire in the lounge room as per drawing supplied by Mr Afroz Ali. There is to be a 200mm wide hearth supplied and fixed by the builder with tiles to match the entry floor tiles. The fire box, insert and glue are to be supplied by the purchaser at the cost of $1,500.00 to the purchaser.

The Vendor agrees that the completion of this Contract is conditional upon the works completed by the Builder unless the carrying out of the Works has not been completed prior to the Completion Date due to any breaches by the Purchaser of this agreement with the Builder."

6. The Schedule of Finishes is somewhat strange. In one part it sets out ``PC items'' with a description of items and prime cost sums. Quite what is intended by the price indicators is not apparent. Under the heading ``kitchen'' and above some typewritten material is written ``kitchen to be completed in accordance with the enclosed selection sheet provided by Nobby Kitchens''. The selection sheet provides for a Bordeaux style kitchen, colour: white woodgrain; benchtop colour: Paradiso; kickplate: white; benchtop edge: chamfered edge. There is then a note: ``If granite not acceptable, Laminex gloss Canyon Black Wilsonart 1755-1''.

7. Under item B ``Internal, Floors & Walls'', all typed words are deleted and the following substituted ``tiling to be completed in accordance with the enclosed quotation of `Tiles & More'.

C'Bon Carpet 469 Mandarin Cut Pile installed throughout the property wall to wall.''

A quite detailed quotation from Tiles & More is attached to the contract.

8. The vendor's solicitor gave notice of registration of the strata plan on 2 July 2002. At that time and up to the present time certain works required by Clause 70 to be completed as a condition of contract completion had not been carried out. They have not yet been carried out. Those works are the installation of a skylight in the en suite bathroom, the installation of a laundry door to the courtyard and a door from the garage to the courtyard. In addition the kitchen installed was not a Nobby's Bordeaux kitchen. The tiling was not that as specified in the Tiles & More quotation and the door handles were not of the lever type also specified in that quotation.

9. On 5 August 2002, the plaintiff provided to the defendant a list of defects. On 5 September 2002, the defendant served a notice requiring completion by 2.00 pm on 25 September 2002. That did not take place and probably later that day the defendant served a notice purporting to terminate the contract.

10. By two notices in February 2003, much to the same effect, the second one being served because there was some doubt expressed as to service of the first, Bravo claimed that the plaintiff had made a claim for compensation exceeding 1% of the purchase price and stating that it would rescind unless the notice was withdrawn. The plaintiff responded that the notice of defects did not fall within clause 7 of the contract, but if it did then it would reduce its claim to 1% of the price and withdraw any claim over and above that amount.

Issues

11. The question is whether the vendor has validly terminated the contract and if not whether an order for specific performance of the contract or like order should be made.

12. The purchaser says that the notice was not a valid notice because: (1) the vendor had not carried out the work required by clause 70; (2) the vendor has not installed the items required by clause 65. In response to this the vendor relies upon clause 66 of the contract and its rights to alter the finishes. This appears to be claimed in respect of the clause 70 obligations as well as the finishes. In addition the vendor says that so far as clause 70 is concerned there was an agreement to vary the contract by deleting the requirement for the en suite skylight and the doors from the laundry and garage to the courtyard and in respect of the skylight substituting a skylight in the kitchen. An agreement for variation is also said to have been made for the tiles and the doorknobs.

13. By cross-claim the defendant seeks a declaration that it has validly terminated the contract and in the alternative a declaration that if it has not done so the plaintiff has made a claim for compensation within clause 7 of the contract and that this has either been waived or is reduced to 1% of the purchase price.

Was there an agreement for variation?

14. The plaintiff was a regular visitor to the property during construction. It was of significance to him as it was to be his retirement home.

15. Mr Anthony Lazzaro, who is a director of the defendant at the present time, and who, with a Mr Joe Leto, appear to have been the directors in charge of the project, gave evidence to the effect that he had a meeting in September or October 2001 with the plaintiff which was attended by the plaintiff, Mr Doug Anderson, who is a cousin of the plaintiff and who had assisted him with the purchase details, Mr Robert Casaceli, who was the real estate agent for the vendors on the sale, a Mrs Barbuto, a friend of Mr Anderson, and his father Mr Frank Lazzaro and Mr Leto. He said that they first went into the kitchen when it was arranged that the window would be eliminated to make room for the kitchen which the plaintiff required. He said there was discussion about light into the kitchen. Mr Lazzaro gave evidence that he had said that a skylight could probably be put in the ceiling and that: ``on the subject of skylights we will leave the skylight in the hallway as proposed and eliminate the skylight in the en suite as there is no sense in having the skylight there as there is sufficient light there. You do not really need a skylight in the en suite because there is a window there already". He said that he then went upstairs with the plaintiff, who agreed that a skylight was not required in the en suite. Mr Lazzaro said that they next went into the laundry and Mr Anderson questioned the lack of the laundry door leading to the courtyard. Mr Lazzaro gave evidence that he said that in view of the size of the laundry and the washer and the dryer and the sink there would be no room for a door. He said that Mr Anderson raised the question of demolishing the wall between the laundry and the toilet which would give room for the door and that he, Mr Lazzaro, said that this was not possible due to a structural beam, to which Mr Parker made no response. His evidence that the party then went into the garage where Mr Anderson questioned the lack of a door from the garage into the courtyard. He said that he had explained that the wall had to be moved to avoid being built on top of a Water Board manhole, so that it was not possible to put the door where it had been proposed. According to Mr Lazzaro Mr Anderson had said that he was not happy and there was no further conversation.

16. So far as the tiles were concerned, Mr Lazzaro said that about one month later the plaintiff and one of his sons had come to the site with a case of beer for the workers, and that he had taken the plaintiff into the garage of unit no 4 and had shown him some tiles which were to be used. He said that the plaintiff had accepted these by saying after inspecting them ``Yes, that is not a problem, I like it. I cannot wait to move in." He said that the tiles which had been shown to the plaintiff were fitted to unit 5 apart from the kitchen floor tiles. He said that he then went to a container to get a specimen door handle and met the plaintiff and his son outside unit 5 where he had shown him the door handle. There was discussion about the carpet. There was discussion about tiles on the kitchen floor. He said that there was discussion about getting tiles to match the carpet and the plaintiff had said ``Ok, I will leave it up to you.'' He said that he had shown the plaintiff and his son some chrome door handles which he had said could be used instead of the door handles selected. He said that the plaintiff had agreed to this saying, ``Ok, fantastic thanks for that.''

17. Mr Lazzaro said that about a month after the second meeting the plaintiff had gone into the laundry and said that the tiles were not the tiles quoted, to which he had responded that they were the ones agreed to on the previous occasion. There was the same discussion about the kitchen tiles, Mr Lazzaro saying that they were better quality and had been made in Italy. There was some discussion about the bathroom tiles which I do not think to be significant.

18. Mr Frank Lazzaro gave some evidence which was somewhat different from that of his son, but he did say that the staircase was in place at the time of the first inspection. He said he did not go into the laundry or the garage.

19. So far as these alleged conversations are concerned the plaintiff and all his witnesses denied that any agreement for alteration had been made. Mr Anderson, who had assisted Mr Parker through all the negotiations with the present defendant and the previous owner, denied there was ever any conversation about deleting the skylight from the en suite bathroom. He said that this had been an important requirement in negotiations with the original developer and had remained so. He said that there was no stairway access to the first floor at the time of the inspection in question. Mrs Barbuto gave the same evidence as to lack of a staircase, although it is fair to say that she was not available for cross-examination. The plaintiff denied there was a staircase and denied any conversation about deleting the skylight.

20. According to Mr Anderson, whose evidence I accept, the conversation about the door from the laundry to the courtyard ended with either Mr Leto or Mr Frank Lazzaro saying, ``Look, if that's what you want we will have to organize council approval.'' So far as the door from the garage is concerned he said that the plaintiff was not present during the beginning of the conversation. It seems that he accepted that it would not be possible to put the door into the courtyard area but it would have been possible to put in an external door giving access to the common property. The evidence of Mrs Barbuto as to the access doors was similar to that of Mr Anderson. The evidence of Mr Parker was to much the same effect. Two of the persons who were present at these meetings and could have been expected to have been called by the defendant were not called. The persons were Mr Joe Leto and the agent, Mr Casaceli. There was some explanation given for the failure to call Mr Leto, in that he and Mr Anthony Lazzaro have fallen out and he is no longer a director of the defendant company. There is, however, no reason to think that he would give false evidence just because of this falling out and as some of the conversations were attributed to him the fact that he was not called does, I think, give rise to a reasonable inference that his evidence would not assist the defendant. It is also significant that the agent for the vendor was not called, he being present throughout the vital inspection. The same inference can be drawn. In any event I find that there was no staircase access from the ground floor to the first floor at the time of the first inspection. On that basis it is not possible to accept there was agreement for deletion of the en suite skylight. I do not accept the evidence of Mr Lazzaro and his father as to this. I accept the evidence of the plaintiff and his witnesses that there was insistence on the requirement of the doors from the laundry and the garage and there was discussion about the necessity to obtain council approval for this. Whatever the position, even as put by the defendants' evidence of the conversations, apart from the skylight, those words would not amount to agreement to vary the terms of clause 70 of the contract. I should add that, apart from the exchange of skylights, there was no consideration for the claimed agreement to delete the doors. It could, however, be thought that deletion of the PC cost would be the consideration, although the solicitor for Bravo, perhaps in error, claimed in correspondence it was payable in any event.

21. So far as the tiles and door handles are concerned I do not accept the evidence of Mr Anthony Lazzaro as to any agreement with Mr Parker. The evidence of Mr Parker's son as to what happened on the second occasion, which I accept, is against any such agreement having been made. Both he and his father said there was no discussion in Unit 4. It is clear that the plaintiff went to considerable trouble to select his tiles and door handles, the door handles being selected to overcome or help overcome a particular problem that he has with his hands. Lever type handles were far more convenient for him than knob type handles. I accept the plaintiff's evidence that the defendant was warned, through the agent, that the tiles were not correct. Bravo made no contact with Tiles & More. It is not suggested there was any agreement to change the type of kitchen. A further reason to reject the claim of variation is that in correspondence about contract requirements over more than three months the defendant's solicitors gave many reasons for non-compliance, but restricted any claim about variation to the skylight variation. What appears to have happened is that the builder was determined to go ahead regardless. However, whether it could or not depends upon the terms of the contract.

If an oral agreement for variation were made is it enforceable?

22. The answer to this question depends upon whether or not the contract in question consists of two parts, one of which is not referable to an interest in land and is severable from the contract relating to an interest in land with a separate consideration attached to it. Counsel for Bravo relied on the passage from Stonham: Vendor and Purchaser p 35 para 46.

46. If the contract relates to matters partly within and partly outside the provisions of the Statute, and the consideration for the promise is an entire one, the contract is unenforceable unless the Statute is complied with. But, where the consideration and promise relating to the part of the contract, which is within the section, can be severed from the consideration and promise relating to that part not within the section, so that the promises are severable, and really two separate contracts, one within the section and one outside the section, the latter can be enforced, though not evidenced in writing.

23. The cases cited by the learned author in support of that passage — none of which was referred to by counsel — for the most part relate to collateral agreements separately enforceable very different from the contract here under consideration. In this case there is certainly a separate consideration for the skylight and for the doors provided for in clause 70 under its rather extraordinary wording. On the other hand provision of those items is a condition of completion of the contract and the contract was for the sale and purchase of the land and the particular townhouse building to be erected upon it to become part of the land. The purchaser was entitled to have what he contracted to buy. In those circumstances I have come to the conclusion that clause 70 is not severable as argued by the defendant. In those circumstances writing is required: Tallerman & Co Pty Ltd v Nathans Merchandise (Victoria) Pty Ltd (1957) 98 CLR 93 at 113. I would reach the same conclusion for the tiling. It is not claimed there was a variation agreement about the kitchen.

Kitchen tiles and door handles — changes to finishes

24. So far as the kitchen is concerned it is not suggested that there was ever any discussion about the change. Bravo just put in the kitchen which it decided to put in without consultation. So far as the tiles and the door handles are concerned I have rejected the question of any agreement.

25. The question then is whether or not clause 66.1 of the contract can be relied upon by the vendor so far as the change of finishes is concerned.

26. So far as the kitchen is concerned it is not a Nobby's kitchen and it is not a Nobby's Bordeaux kitchen. It has different colouring, different items, the bench top is not granite, the edges are not chamfered edge. The bench top is not the alternative of Laminex gloss Canyon Black Wilsonart 1755-1. There is no breakfast bar as there is with a Nobby's kitchen. The evidence of Mr Parks, who gave evidence for the defendant included the following:

> ``In my opinion the kitchen installed in the premises is a good quality kitchen, satisfactorily installed. The kitchen installed is of equivalent quality to a Nobby Kitchen, Bordeaux kitchen taking into account: the limited information in the selection sheet; the room space available (including the rear window); the selection of material for the overhead cupboards, under bench cupboard, bench top and fridge enclosure; and the standard of workmanship. The difference between the kitchen installed and a Nobby Kitchen Bordeaux kitchen is a [sic] aesthetic difference. In my experience Nobby Kitchens supplies kitchens in the low- middle economic range."

27. As was elicited from Mr Parks in cross- examination, this opinion was given on the basis of the selection sheet and not on the basis of what was included in a Bordeaux kitchen. He accepted that a kitchen with a breakfast bar would be one of a higher quality than one without a breakfast bar. His evidence does not really compare the elements and finishes in a Nobby's kitchen with those which were used. What has been done is to compare what is there with the selection sheet and to relate this to the opinion of Mr Parks that what has been installed is a good quality kitchen. I do not consider that this fulfils the requirements of clause 66.1. So far as the tiles are concerned, the evidence of Mr Parks is more limited. In essence he says that good quality floor and wall tiles have been installed to a satisfactory standard of workmanship. This in no way compares them with those specified in the Tiles & More quotation. The contract in clause 65.2 required the vendor to cause the specified items in the Schedule of Finishes to be installed in a proper and workmanlike manner in the property. It has not done so. As it was not entitled to the benefit of clause 66.1, it has not performed its obligations under the contract.

Was the vendor entitled to give a notice to complete?

28. It follows from my conclusions as to the breach of clause 70 and the breach of clause 65.2 that the vendor was not entitled to give a notice to complete as it had not fulfilled its obligations under the contract at the time the notice was given, nor at the time when it purported to terminate. The failures were matters of substance. It follows from this that as the purchaser has established that he is ready, willing and able to fulfil his obligations under the contract he is entitled to an order in the nature of specific performance.

29. In dealing with finishes I have not dealt with the question of shower roses in the bathrooms, nor the Porto door handles, both of which were specified in the Tiles & More quotation. There is no evidence that would support the view that alternative items, fulfilling the requirements of clause 66.1 have been furnished. Therefore, in the same way, breach of contract by the vendor applies. I should add that after the notice to complete was given, but not before objections were made, the solicitor for the plaintiff, by letters of 8 November, 15 November 2001 and 27 January 2002 made complaints in respect of the kitchen, the tiling and the skylight and apparently about the lack of the laundry door. The first response to this was that all items were covered by clause 66 of the contract and at a later stage there was a response that the council would not approve the laundry door. The evidence was that it had not been asked to. There was later a suggestion by the vendor's solicitors that alterations in accordance with a list were made at the request of the purchaser and that a further $40,326 was payable for those alterations. There was no possible basis for that assertion. The correspondence continues up to July and August 2002. One letter included a demand for the additional amounts provided for by clause 70, even though the external doors had not been fitted.

Claim about defects

30. On 5 August 2002, the solicitor for the purchaser sent to the solicitor for the vendor the list of defects and ``items of non-compliance with the contract''. After these proceedings had been commenced, and an affidavit of Mr John French filed, the solicitors for the vendor claimed that the claim for damages concerning the property had been quantified by that affidavit that the amount claimed was $40,763.60, not including the kitchen, and that as that exceeded 1% of the contract purchase price notice was given that the vendor would rescind the contract unless the claim was withdrawn. There was a response to this by the plaintiff's solicitors stating that it was not a claim under the contract, but that if it was, the claim was withdrawn insofar as it exceeded 1%. There was another contention by the plaintiff's solicitors that as the vendor had purported to elect to exercise a right to terminate the contract, it could not thereafter rescind it. It does not seem to me to be necessary to discuss that matter. The claim as to defects was never a claim for compensation. The fact that Mr French set out various figures for costs of rectification does not turn it into a clause 7 claim. Most of the items were items which in the normal case would have been within clause 37 of the contract. Clause 37.1 was amended so that the list of defects was to be provided after the completion date. It is possible that some doubt arose because ``completion date'' is defined in the contract in the events which happened as being 21 days after the date on which the vendor served notice of registration of the strata plan. It would be an extraordinary construction of clause 37 if it meant that if, at the date of registration of the strata plan, a lot of the work required by the contract had not been completed by the vendor, then nevertheless the list of defects had to be given by that date. It seems to me that the only sensible way in which the contract could be interpreted is that for the purposes of clause 37 completion date means, in the case when it is the vendor's fault that completion has not taken place, the actual date of completion. In any event that does not matter because no claim has been made within the meaning of clause 7.

31. It may be that if it does turn out that the vendor is unable to provide what it contracted to provide, because it cannot get the necessary approvals for the external doors, then there could be some claim for compensation. That is not a matter which needs to be considered at the present time. In the same way if it is not possible to provide for a door from the garage to the courtyard as a result of changes requires in construction to access a water mains manhole, that can be determined on further consideration. The vendor would not be required to substitute access if it became impossible to fulfil a particular term.

Proposed orders

32. I will hear argument on the form of orders but set out proposed orders for consideration:

1. Declare that the defendant is in breach of its obligations under the contract so far as its provision for a kitchen, tiling and handles are concerned.
2. Order the defendant to perform such obligations.
3. Declare that the defendant is in breach of the requirement under clause 70(1) as to an ensuite skylight and 70(5) and 70(6) of the contract and is bound by its obligations so far as clause 70(1) is concerned and is bound to take all steps necessary to obtain approvals to enable it to comply with its obligations under clause 70(5) and (6) and subject to obtaining such approvals is bound by its obligations under the said provisions of the contract.
4. Order the defendant to perform the said obligations.
5. Order the cross-claim be dismissed.
6. Order the defendant to pay the plaintiff's costs of the proceedings up to the date of these declarations and orders.
7. Further consideration reserved.

(2003) NSW Conv R ¶90-121

Court citation: [2003] NSWSC 592

New South Wales Supreme Court

Judgment delivered 2 July 2003

Strata title — Rescission — Specific performance — Plaintiffs entered contracts off-the- plan to buy units in proposed development site — Contracts contained clauses requiring vendor to exercise due expedition to lodge plan for registration — Separate contractual provision gave either party option to rescind if plan not registered within 24 months — Problems encountered in excavation and shoring meant that development could not be completed in estimated period — Vendor exercised option to rescind — Whether contract imposed a form of non-delegable duty on the vendor to comply with its contractual obligations regardless of the circumstances — Whether plaintiffs entitled to specific performance.

The plaintiffs were all off-the-plan purchasers of strata units in a 28-unit development. That development was to be constructed upon land in respect of which Pilot Developments Pty Limited (``Pilot'') was registered as proprietor. Each of the plaintiffs entered into a contract with Pilot before it contracted a builder for the development's construction. Those contracts contained a special condition (``clause 10.7'') requiring Pilot to proceed with all due expedition to complete the subdivision and comply with Randwick Council's (``the Council'') conditions of approval in respect of it. Pilot was also required to obtain the consent of the Council to the plan and thereafter lodge it for registration. A separate special provision ("clause 10.8") in each of the contracts allowed each party to rescind the contract if the plan had not been registered within

The strata plan was not registered within 24 months of any of the contracts' execution. Although Pilot entered into a building contract that envisaged completion of the work within 46 weeks of its commencement, difficulties in construction and logistical complexities made that impossible. More specifically, the process of excavating and shoring up the development site encountered significant and protracted problems. It took approximately 38 weeks of the 46 week building contract period for the site to be properly stabilised. This arose not because the relevant contractors were not qualified, competent, or diligent, but as a consequence of natural factors like the amount of sand requiring removal and vibrations and movement causing damage to adjoining buildings. For its part, Pilot did a great deal to assist the development's completion. It engaged the services of a qualified geo-technical engineer, civil and construction engineers, mechanical engineers, hydraulic engineers and acoustic engineers. It also provided progress payments to the builder each fortnight, rather than each month, to assist with funding and obtaining materials. Arrangements were additionally made for work to be done on the site on Saturdays, during the Olympic games period and over Christmas. Moreover, Pilot did give consideration to finding a different builder but the pre- Olympic Games building boom made that option unviable.

Subsequently, Pilot exercised its right to rescind pursuant to clause 10.8. However, the plaintiffs refused to accept that rescission as valid. They contended that clause 10.7 imposed a form of non-delegable duty on the vendor to comply with its obligations regardless of the circumstances. That is, the plaintiffs submitted that Pilot was responsible for the deficiencies of its contractors regardless of the reasons or circumstances. In this context, it was contended that Pilot should have removed the builder and appointed a different one.

Held: claims dismissed.

1. Clauses 10.7 and 10.8 could not be taken as amounting to an admission by Pilot that it would proceed with all due expedition to complete the work required to obtain registration of the strata plan within 24 months.

2. Pilot made a great effort to push the project forward and exerted whatever pressure it could on the contracted builders. The fact that Pilot continued to press the builder after rescission demonstrated that it did not obviously slow down the project to bring about the right to rescind and then speed it up thereafter.

3. Clause 10.7 did not place some form of absolute non-delegable obligation on Pilot. It could not be suggested that it had not taken proper steps in the engagement of the builder or the engineering specialists. It also could not be contended that Pilot should have continued working on the site when to do so was unsafe.

4. Constant interference and chivvying of the builder on Pilot's part would not have produced a better result. Nor was it possible in the circumstances to engage a different builder.

Outline

1. The question for decision in all of these actions is whether the defendant company was entitled to rescind a contract under which it agreed to sell a particular apartment or home unit at Clovelly to the plaintiff purchaser. If it was entitled to do so the claims fail. If not then the plaintiffs seek specific performance or in some cases damages.

2. An order was made at an earlier stage that the actions be heard together, the evidence in one being evidence in the others so far as is relevant. Apart from one of the actions where there is an additional estoppel claim and apart from evidence as to values in the actions where the claim is for damages rather than specific performance, all of the evidence is relevant to all of the actions.

Facts

3. Pilot Developments Pty Limited (Pilot) was registered as proprietor of a substantial area of land at 2-6 Walker Street and 44-46 Melrose Parade, Clovelly (the property). A number of smaller residential properties had been erected on this land when it was purchased by Pilot. Pilot intended to construct on the land a 28 unit home unit development. The average sale price of a unit was over $500,000 so that it was a substantial project.

4. Development approval was granted by Randwick Council on 14 October 1998. Building approval was obtained on 23 July 1999. In the months of March and April 1999 contracts were entered into between Pilot and each of the various plaintiffs for a sale and purchase of one of the units to be constructed on the property. In other words these were what is generally called contracts for sale and purchase off the plan. All of these contracts were entered into by the vendor before a contract with the builder was signed.

5. Each of the contracts included the following special conditions:

> ``9. WORK
>
> 9.1 Without prejudice to any other express or implied condition of this Contract, before completion the Vendor will use its best endeavours to cause the following work to be done in a property [sic] and workmanlike manner. The work comprises the construction of a building generally in accordance with the draft strata plan annexed and marked `C', the requirements of all relevant authorities and the schedule of finishes (annexed and marked `SF').
>
> ...
>
> 10. REGISTRATION OF STRATA PLAN
>
>
> 10.7 The Vendor shall proceed with all due expedition to complete the subdivision and comply with all Council's conditions of approval in respect of the subdivision and the Purchaser shall not raise any objection or requisition or make any claim for compensation in respect of any work carried out by the Vendor or its agents pursuant to the said conditions of approval and the Vendor shall obtain the consent of the Council to the plan and thereafter to lodge the same for registration.
>
> 10.8 In the event that the plan shall not have been registered within twenty-four (24) months of the date hereof or within such further period as the parties may mutually agree upon in writing, either party may thereafter rescind this Contract whereupon the provision of clause 19 hereof shall apply.
> ..."

6. The strata plan was not registered within twenty four months of the date on which any of the contracts were signed. On 9 March 2001 the vendor's solicitor wrote to the solicitor for each of the purchasers stating that as the strata plan would not be able to be registered within the two year period from the date [of the] contract, the vendor would exercise its rights to rescind. When the two year period expired in respect of each contract then the vendor purported to exercise its rights. The question is whether or not it was entitled to do so.

7. Most of the plaintiffs refuse to accept the notice rescission as valid and claim specific performance. Two claim that the issue of the notice amounted to a repudiation which they accepted and those plaintiffs claim damages.

Plaintiffs' claims

8. By their further amended statement of claim each of the plaintiffs plead as follows:

``4A. There was an express term of the contract that the defendant would proceed with all due expedition to complete the work required to obtain registration of the strata plan within 24 months.

Particulars

Special Condition 10.7

5. There was an implied term of the contract that the Defendant would use all reasonable endeavours to ensure that the strata plan was registered within 24 months.

6A. The Defendant admitted that if the work for the development, including construction work, proceeded with all due expedition, it was quite feasible to complete the work and register the strata plan before 16 March 2001, as was the fact.

Particulars

[140379]

The admission is to be inferred from contract special condition 10.7 and 10.8.

7. The strata plan for the development was not registered within 24 months of the contract.

8. By letter dated 20 March 2001, the Defendant purported to rescind the contract on the grounds that the strata plan had not been registered within 24 months of the date of the contract.

9. The purported rescission of the contract by the Defendant was ineffective as a rescission of the contract in that the failure to complete the works and register the strata plan before 16 March 2001, resulted from the Defendant's failure to perform its contractual obligations.''

Particulars

(i) The Defendant had not proceeded with all due expedition or used all reasonable endeavours to ensure that the strata plan was registered within 24 months of the contract.
(ii) The Defendant was in breach of the terms referred to in paragraphs 4A and 5 above, and this arises as a matter of implication and conclusion from the admissions referred to in paragraph 6A above and from the Expert Reports of Malcolm Paul Woods dated 4 April 2003, Andrew Peter Box dated 4 April 2003, John Frederick Poiner dated 2 April 2003 and Robert Bendeich (Evans and Peck) dated 4 April 2003, filed and served on behalf of the Plaintiffs in these proceedings.

13. If the Defendant had proceeded with all due expedition and used all reasonable endeavours to construct the development and obtain registration of the strata plan, the strata plan would have been registered within 24 months of the contract and the Defendant would not have been entitled to rely on Special Condition 10.8 of the contract.

14. The failure of the defendant to proceed with all due expedition and use all reasonable endeavours to construct the development and obtain registration of the strata plan was a breach of the defendant's obligations under the contract, and caused the plaintiffs to suffer loss, which is continuing.

Particulars

The plaintiffs will give particulars of the loss prior to the hearing.

9. The plaintiffs seeking specific performance claim by way of relief specific performance on the ground that there was no right to rescind or in the pleading on the alternative ground that it was unconscionable to rely on the rescission clause.

Comment

10. The express term pleaded in paragraph 4A of the further amended statement of claim is not a term of the contract. Clause 10.7 is quite clear. It was the obligation of vendor and purchaser to so act so far as possible as to enable the other to have the benefit of the agreement. The pleaded implied term in paragraph 5 ``to take all reasonable endeavours to ensure the registration of the plan within 24 months'' is not a necessary implication and is not made out. Special conditions 10.7 and 10.8 do not amount to some sort of admission as pleaded by the plaintiffs. Completion within a two year period was expected, not admitted, whatever is meant by that.

11. In the long run no reliance was placed on special condition 9.1 of the contract. The case of the plaintiffs was based on special condition 10.7. If the vendor had not performed its obligations under that clause it was in breach. If it was in breach, and the breach brought about failure to obtain registration within 24 months, it was not entitled to rely upon the right given by 10.8. This was not in dispute. What was in dispute was whether or not Pilot had ``proceeded with all due expedition to complete the sub-division (meaning the strata sub- division) and comply with council conditions of approval in respect of the sub-division''. Completing the sub-division required completion of the development in accordance with clause 9.1 and registration of the strata plan of sub-division.

Further facts

12. Pilot appointed Melocco and Moore as architects for the project in April 1998. It also obtained a geo-technical report on the site from SMEC Testing Services at that time. The site was a difficult one as it consisted of fine sand to a considerable depth, which it was agreed would require stabilisation and shoring, both to enable the building in accordance with the proposed plans to be constructed and to protect properties above the property from damage from movement caused as the result of excavation of the site. Conditions 26 and 53 of the Development Approval are as follows:

> ``26. There shall be no loss of support to the Council's footpath area as a result of the excavation within the site. Details of how this support will be maintained during construction shall be submitted for approval with the Local Approval Application.
> 53. A report shall be prepared by a professional engineer and submitted to Council with the Local Approval application, detailing the proposed methods of excavation, shoring or pile construction, including details of vibration emissions and possible damage to adjoining premises.''

13. On 6 May 1999 Pilot entered into a building contract with G & N Developments Pty Limited, trading as RMA Design and Constructions (RMA) for the construction of the building. The contract provided for completion within forty-six weeks of the commencement date of the work, the date of commencement being determined in a way defined by the contract and in fact being 9 June 1999. The contract provided the normal provisions for extension of time upon certain events. Had all gone well the date for practical completion was 26 April 2000 subject to this being extended by accepted extension of time claims. The evidence establishes an occupation certificate was not issued until 4 September 2002 and the strata plan was registered on 19 November 2002. Building contracts seem to assume that it will never rain. But even allowing for claims dealt with as at April 2002 the agreed extended date for practical completion was 5 February 2001.

14. There had been other builders tender for construction work, but the RMA tender was the lowest. Pilot asked Mr Melocco to make some checks about the builder and its work, which he did, reporting that two projects at Strathfield built by RMA were of a high standard of construction.

15. It was I think accepted that an efficient builder would have completed the project within the two year period. However Pilot was not the builder and it is necessary to give some attention to the periods of delay and to the actions of Pilot during the period of construction up to termination.

16. Apart from the architect and builder, Pilot engaged the services of a qualified geo- technical engineer, civil and construction engineers, mechanical engineers, hydraulic engineers and acoustic engineers. It is not suggested these people were not competent.

17. The first problem in construction arose during shoring. Messrs James Taylor and Associates were originally engaged as structural engineers, although they were later replaced. They were consulted by the architect about conditions 26 and 53 of the development consent. They said contiguous piling was proposed which would support the footpath along Melrose Street and that temporary shoring along Walker Street could be achieved by contiguous steel shoring. So far as condition 53 was concerned they said that the perimeter would be supported by contiguous piling and anchoring as required.

18. There is some confusion about the shoring. The building contract included some details of the builder's quotation. Under item 3 — Excavation, — piling and shoring is not mentioned. Under item 6 — Piers to depth of 8 metres, — there is reference to sheet piling at a cost of $123,675. Engineering drawings of Ibrahim Consulting Group, who took over from James Taylor and Associates as consulting structural engineer for the project, refer to a sheet retention system, but this was otherwise unexplained. The specifications relating to excavation appear at page 2167 of Exhibit B and item 306 refers to shoring and includes the following:

> ``All shoring to be designed and certified by the supplier's engineer. These certificates to be supplied to the structural engineer prior to any further work.''

19. The shoring and excavation work was sub-contracted by the builder to a company Emanon Pty Limited, which did engage its own engineers to design the work. Considerable difficulties were encountered with the excavation and the shoring. Some of the problems were caused because the sheet shoring was not sufficiently strong to resist the pressures, some seem to have been caused by the amount of sand above the rock requiring removal, and some by vibration and movement during excavation causing damage to adjoining buildings. Threats of legal proceedings by adjoining property owners and risk of injury to workers on the property from collapse caused the building site to be closed for some time. It was necessary to redesign the shoring works, more contiguous piling was required, and this required some redesign of the building. Numerous consultants were engaged during this period including the original geo-technical engineer, the consulting engineer for RMA and various engineers engaged by Emanon. Eventually shoring designed by Dr Ring, an engineer engaged by Emanon, was installed. The excavation and shoring were commenced early in July 1999. The first collapse occurred a few weeks later and the first damage to the adjoining property before the end of July 1999. There was some spasmodic starting and stopping, and the shoring and piling as designed by Dr Ring was not completed until March 2000. While it was possible to proceed with some construction on the southern end of the property, about thirty-eight weeks of the forty- six weeks contract period had been taken up by the time the site was properly stabilised.

20. Mr Hansen was a director of Pilot as was a Mr Whitten. They controlled the project although Mr Hansen seems to have taken the lead role so far as Pilot was concerned. Pilot appointed various project managers for this development, namely Mr Bernasconi from early 1998 for about 12 months, then a Miss Lewis for about 15 months with an assistant, Mr Cusack for some of that time and in April 2000 a Mr Bonus who was both an architect and project manager. It was not suggested that these people were not well qualified nor that they did not work diligently towards progression of building works. Shortly after Mr Bonus was appointed consideration was given to termination of the contract with the builder. It was decided to do so for a number of reasons, including a question of whether there was ground for termination and the possibility of legal proceedings arising from this, the very busy pre-Olympic Games building period, during which there was great difficulty obtaining builders and tradesmen, and the fact that, according to the evidence, there would be a delay of about six months in engaging a new builder to take over the works and a considerable increase in the costs of the works.

21. Mr Bonus reported to Pilot that he thought RMA needed planning and organisational assistance to progress the works more satisfactorily. Pilot agreed and a company Solid Support Pty Limited was engaged to provide a programme which if adhered to would have resulted in the project being completed by December 2000. In fact RMA immediately slipped behind in performance under that programme. In October 2000, Solid Support provided a further programme which if adhered to would have resulted in practical completion by the end of February 2001.

22. Regular meetings were held on site, usually attended by Mr Hansen, Mr Melocco, Mr Rahme, the builder, Mr Bonus and from time to time other consultants. At the commencement these were held each fortnight and later, when the construction was obviously falling behind schedule, every week. I am satisfied that great effort was made to push the project forward and that whatever pressure could be exerted on the builders was exerted. To assist the builder in the funding and obtaining the necessary materials, progress payments were made each fortnight rather than each month. Arrangements were made for the work to be carried [out] on Saturdays, during the Olympic period, and over the Christmas period.

23. In September, October and November 2000 substantial delays were incurred as a result of acoustic requirements and plumbing or hydraulic problems. So far as the hydraulic problems were concerned this, for the most part appears to have arisen from deficient work undertaken by the plumber sub-contracted to the project by RMA. In November the hydraulics engineer resigned and a new hydraulics engineer was appointed. In spite of all this even in early January 2001, RMA advised that practical completion would be achieved by the end of January, although I do not understand how that could have been thought possible.

24. There is little purpose in setting out the events which took place after the rescission. There is also little purpose in going into the correspondence with the builder alleging breach of contract in February 2001. There were ongoing problems with the project right up to the end. Pilot and RMA finally entered into an agreement on 6 June 2002 which brought their association to an end. The fact that Pilot continued to press the builder after rescission without much success is only relevant to show that it did not obviously slow down the project to bring about the right to rescind and then speed it up thereafter.

25. I have not set out a complete history of the events as this is unnecessary. The history is recounted in some detail in the evidence of Mr Hansen, Mr Bonus and Mr Melocco to which there was no serious challenge. The minutes of the project site meetings support their evidence.

Plaintiffs' contentions

26. The main argument of the plaintiffs was based on special condition 10.7 of the contract for sale. I have already dealt with the implied terms. It is of course apparent that clause 10.7 is tied to clause 9.1 as delay in 9.1 obligations would run over to 10.7 obligations. There is no doubt the builder was slow even taking into account the site difficulties. To a large extent the evidence of the plaintiffs' expert witnesses can be discounted because they were dealing with the project in an abstract manner without having regard to the particular difficulties involved with this contract or with the site. That was accepted by counsel for the plaintiffs. At May 2000 Mr Bonus thought progress was unsatisfactory and the site minutes confirm this. Limited extensions of time granted against the claimed extensions also show delay on the part of the builder. Mr Hansen agreed with this. The question though is whether or not this can be sheeted home to the vendor so as to be a breach of special condition 10.7. The purchaser plaintiffs knew that Pilot was not the builder. They knew that pursuant to clause 9.1 Pilot was to cause the building work to be done.

27. The question is whether clause 10.7 places some absolute non-delegable obligation on the vendor. I do not consider that could be so. It was not suggested or argued that Pilot did not take proper steps in selecting RMA as a builder. It was not suggested that it did not engage the appropriate engineering specialists. It could not be and was not suggested that it should have continued working on the project site at times when the safety of adjoining buildings or of persons working on the site was not assured or when a stop work order was placed on the project.

28. Provisions of contract clauses similar to those at issue here have been considered in a number of cases by judges in the Equity Division of this Court and by the Court of Appeal. There is some conflict in those decisions. In question is the view of Hodgson CJ in Eq (as his Honour then was) in Masters v Belpate Pty Limited [2001] NSWSC 169 that while a vendor required by contract to do everything reasonably necessary to bring about registration of a plan within a certain time is responsible for work done by agents the responsibility does not extend to work which a developer would reasonably leave to independent contractors such as architects, engineers or builders. Bryson J in Hawes & Ors v Cuzeno Pty Limited [1999] NSWSC 1167 was of a different view to which he adhered in Hardy v Wardy [2001] NSWSC 1141. In those cases he was considering wording of contracts which required the vendor to do everything required to have the plan registered within a certain period. He considered that the vendor was responsible for deficiency of his contractors. The Court of Appeal in Hardy v Wardy [2002] NSWCA 215 on appeal from Bryson J did not really resolve this difference of opinion but upheld the decision of Bryson J on the basis of the wording of the particular clause under decision. While the matter is not easily resolved it seems to me that there are different obligations in different factual situations. What is clear is that the contract wording is of paramount importance. A vendor has obligations in selecting contractors; a vendor who can see that delays are occurring must overcome them if they can be overcome: for instance, a surveyor who delays should be replaced by a surveyor undertaking to perform within a fixed time; a project manager not following matters through should be replaced. If a builder in default can be replaced so as to fulfil the contractual obligations that should be done.

29. The particular contract terms 10.7 and 10.8 do not require the vendor to proceed with all due expedition to complete the sub-division within two years, although of course the expectation is that will be done. Failure to complete within two years triggered the right to rescind if the vendor was not in default of its obligations under clause 10.7 and the default was the cause of the failure to complete within time. The requirement for causal connection was discussed by Powell JA in Mitchell v Pattern Holdings Pty Limited [2002] NSWCA 212 in reasoning which, although obiter there, I consider convincing and which I follow. Proceeding with all due expedition could not have required the vendor to do the building work itself. Apart from anything else it would not have had the licence to do so. The clause requires the vendor to do what it can do. While the decisions are difficult to reconcile I do not consider the Court of Appeal decision in Hardy requires a finding that fault on the part of any contractor must be laid at the feet of the vendor under the contractual provisions I am considering. I have come to the view that there is no absolute obligation.

30. The question then is whether Pilot was in breach of its obligations under clause 10.7. I have already set out relevant matters as to the action taken by Pilot to try to keep the project moving. In the long run counsel for the plaintiffs really relied on two matters. First he said that the builder should have been removed in about June 2000 and a new builder appointed. I accept the evidence of Mr Bonus and Mr Hansen as to the difficulties with this and reasons why it was not done, if in fact Pilot would have been entitled to do so under the contract. It is to be remembered that Mr Bonus, the builder and Solid Support all thought that the programme of works produced by Solid Support was one which could be adhered to and which could result in completion within the two year period. Counsel for the plaintiffs also argued that Pilot could have done more to force the project forward and to monitor it more closely. In essence he argued that there should be daily monitoring and daily presence on the site. The evidence of Mr Hansen was that this would have been unproductive and that it was necessary to agree with the builder prior to entry upon the site. While that is not quite correct on the contract terms, I am not satisfied that constant interference and chivvying of the builder would have produced a better result. There was very regular contact and there was very regular monitoring. Although counsel for the plaintiff argued that Pilot should have done so it is important to understand Pilot had no right to have a day by day and trade by trade monitoring role if that involved real interference with the builder. The strongest argument for the plaintiff was that the builder should have been dismissed by the end of June with all the risks that entailed; that it was in breach not doing so. For the reasons given I do not consider this correct. And even had it been correct the necessary causal connection would not have been established because dismissal would not have brought about completion within the 2 year period. I should add that although the arguments put forward for the plaintiffs do not necessarily accept the requirement for cause paragraph 13 of the statement of claim appears to do so.

31. It follows from this the plaintiffs' claims fail based on breach of contract. No separate argument was addressed to the claim based on unconscionability.

32. It is necessary to deal with the claim of Mr Glover based on estoppel. Mr Glover claimed 3 representations as to completion date. Neither the first nor the second turned out to be in accordance with the facts. But as to the third he claimed that Hansen said to him at a meeting at the offices of the architects on 17 October 2000, ``I give you my assurance that the development will be completed in January 2001.'' He said he relied on this, sold his house at Newtown and paid $330 to install special wiring for a sound system in the unit he was purchasing.

33. Mr Hansen denied the words. He said he had said the builder expected to complete in January or February. Mr Melocco did not remember the words claimed by Mr Glover. Mr Glover asked the agent to confirm that ``completion and therefore settlement, is expected for the end of January 2001.'' It thus seems unlikely he relied upon the representation if it were made as it was alleged. I am not satisfied it was. But if it were there are other problems for the plaintiff. The house that was sold was not in his name. Despite the evidence of joint ownership far more convincing evidence of the way ownership was dealt with including evidence of taxation returns would be needed. In any event no loss was established as a result of the sale. Mr Glover and Mr Hanbidge were successful dealers in real estate. If there was a loss it was limited to $330. On no basis could it be thought that equity required the representation be made good so as to make it unconscionable to exercise the right of rescission. In the long run the claim for damages was limited to the $330, but that was not made out.

34. These cases are unfortunate. There was no fault on the part of the plaintiffs who are entitled to feel dissatisfied that they will not get the unit they reasonably expected would be theirs. On the other hand Pilot may have suffered loss as a result of the delay. In a case where neither vendor nor purchaser is in breach, reliance upon a contractual provision giving a right of rescission is neither unreasonable nor unconscionable.

[140384]

Orders in each case

35. The plaintiff's or plaintiffs' claim be dismissed.

36. The plaintiffs pay the costs of the defendant.

37. The exhibits may be returned.

New South Wales Supreme Court

Judgment delivered 11 December 2001

Strata titles — Exclusive-use by-law foreshadowed which would deprive non-residential lot owners of previous right to use common property including swimming pool and leave it exclusively with residential lot owners — Validity of by-law under sec 52(1)(a) of Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW) — Whether challengeable as fraud on minority and as expropriation under Gambotto principles — Strata Titles (Freehold Development) Act 1973 (NSW), sec 20; Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW), sec 52(1)(a).

From April 1993, Young and Solenko (``the plaintiffs'') were registered proprietors of 37 Wolsely Road, Point Piper, and also of Lot 27 of Strata Plan 3529. The latter confers the right to two car-parking spaces in 45 Wolsely Road, Point Piper, an adjoining property but not to any residential rights. However, by virtue of their ownership of Lot 27, the plaintiffs also have an interest in the common property of Strata Plan 3529 which presently confers use of a swimming pool upon the plaintiffs.

The present proceedings follow the plaintiffs' strata titling of Lot 37 into three lots. They are directed at precluding an ``exclusive use'' by-law foreshadowed by the Owners' Corporation (``the first defendant''). If passed, that by-law would deny to the plaintiffs, and the other purchasers of the new strata-titled lots, any entitlement to the common property and thus to use of the swimming pool.

The first defendant first foreshadowed passing the exclusive-use by-law by letter dated 28 April 1999. This occurred just two hours before the advertised time for auction of one of the new lots (Lot 2), and according to the plaintiffs led to the cancellation of the auction. The effect of the foreshadowed by-law would be to limit the use of that swimming pool and common property exclusively to those who owned residential lots in the strata title development on 45 Wolsely Road. This would exclude the plaintiffs who merely have the parking lot entitlement and no residential entitlement.

The plaintiffs contended that the foreshadowed exclusive-use by-law was invalid or otherwise challengeable if passed without the plaintiffs' consent on one or other of the following contended bases:

> (a) that such a by-law contravenes sec 52(1)(a) of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW) (``the Act''), for lack of ``written consent'' from the plaintiffs;
> (b) that under principles of Corporations Law it is a fraud on the minority; or > (c) that it is an expropriation which offends the principles regulating the entitlement of a majority to use its power under the Articles of Association to expropriate minorities, as enunciated by the High Court in Gambotto v WCP Limited & Anor (1995) 182 CLR 432 at 444-5 (``Gambotto'').

Held: for the plaintiffs, declaration that by-law cannot be validly passed without written consent of plaintiffs.

Whether proposed by-law contravenes sec 52(1)(a) of the Act

1. For an exclusive-use by-law to be capable of depriving the plaintiffs of a pre-existing use right in relation to the common property, sec 52(1)(a) of the Act, requires the written consent of the plaintiffs as owners of Lot 27.

2. His Honour stated that: ``... if a valid by-law were sought to be passed depriving the plaintiffs of a pre-existing right of exclusive use and enjoyment of that part of the common property as consisted of the swimming pool, first that by-law would need to specify both lots to be conferred with the right of exclusive use and enjoyment of the relevant part of the common property and second, the lots to be deprived of use and enjoyment of the relevant part of the common property. Then consent of the owner deprived (as well as owners benefited) becomes an essential requirement for such by-law to take effect.''

Whether proposed by-law constitutes fraud on the minority or a contravention of the Gambotto principles

3. Section 20 of the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1973 provides that the relevant rights of the plaintiffs in the common property are proprietary; they are rights owned by them beneficially as tenants in common in the common property.

4. The doctrine of fraud on the power can apply to the exercise by an owners corporation and its members of their by-law making power. This was resolved by the Court of Appeal in Hougton & Anor v Immer (155) Pty Ltd (1997) 44 NSWLR 46 at 53. That case also resolved that the principles governing the expropriation of minority shareholders in Gambotto were capable of application to the operation of a strata title body. The majority in Gambotto described its principles as applying to ``an actual or effective expropriation of shares or a valuable proprietary right attaching to shares'' (at CLR 444).

5. ``In circumstances where no written consent has been sought or foreshadowed in the relevant correspondence, the doctrine of fraud on the minority is capable of application in relation to the contemplated expropriation of the plaintiffs' minority rights to a shared use of the relevant part of the common property. Such a use of a by-law prima facie would be a fraud on the power being for an improper purpose, on the assumption that such power existed."

Judgment, in full, below

Santow J:

Introduction

1. Can a strata titles ``exclusive use'' by-law validly take away a right to share in the use of common property, without the consent of those so deprived? This is a question posing important issues both under strata titles legislation and by reference to Corporations Law principles of fraud on the minority and under the Gambotto doctrine. It arises in the following circumstances.

2. From April 1993, the Plaintiffs were registered proprietors of 37 Wolsely Road Point Piper and also of Lot 27 of Strata Plan 3529. The latter confers the right to two car parking spaces in 45 Wolsely Road Point Piper, an adjoining property but not to any residential rights. However, by virtue of their ownership of Lot 27, the Plaintiffs also have an interest in the common property of Strata Plan 3529 which presently confers use of a swimming pool upon the Plaintiffs. The present proceedings follow the Plaintiffs' strata titling of Lot 37 into three lots. They are directed at precluding an ``exclusive use'' by-law foreshadowed by the Owners' Corporation (the First Defendant). If passed, that by-law would deny to the Plaintiffs, and the other purchasers of the new strata titled lots, any entitlement to the common property and thus to use the swimming pool.

3. The First Defendant first foreshadowed passing that exclusive use by-law by letter dated 28 April 1999. This was just two hours before the advertised time for auction of one of the new lots (Lot 2), and according to the Plaintiffs led to the cancellation of the auction. The effect of the foreshadowed by-law would be to limit the use of that swimming pool and common property exclusively to those who owned residential lots in the Strata Title development on 45 Wolsely Road. That excludes the Plaintiffs who merely have the parking lot entitlement and no residential entitlement.

4. The questions for resolution are set out below. The parties have agreed that these questions should be answered first. Then, depending on those answers, the question of damages, if any, should be separately determined by a Master.

Questions for resolution

5. I start with the central question to be determined, followed by the remaining questions. The answers to the latter are in varying degrees affected by resolution of that central question.

6. Question 1: Validity of exclusive use by- law passed without consent: ``Is a by-law invalid or otherwise challengeable which purports to deprive the Plaintiffs, as non- residential lot-owners, of the right to use common property particularly as regards the swimming pool, by conferring exclusive use on only the residential lot-owners, when this is done without the Plaintiffs' consent''? This is on one or other of the following contended bases:

> (a) that such a by-law contravenes s 52(1)(a) of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW) (``the Act''), for lack of ``written consent'' from the Plaintiffs as ``owner or owners of the lot or lots concerned'', that is to say if and insofar as they come within that statutory description in the Act;

(b) that under principles of Corporations Law, it is a fraud on the minority, constituted by the proposed purported exercise by an Owners' Corporation and its members of its by-law making power for a purpose said to be foreign to the power, namely expropriating the Plaintiffs' share in, or right to enjoyment of, the common property, or
(c) that it is an expropriation of what is said to be the Plaintiffs' right to a share of the common property or the right to its enjoyment, being (it is said) a proprietary and not merely contractual right, which expropriation is said to offend the principles regulating the entitlement of a majority to use its power under the Articles of Association to expropriate minorities, as enunciated by the High Court in Gambotto v WCP Limited & Anor (1995) 13 ACLC 342 at p 348-349; (1995) 182 CLR 432 at 444-5.

7. Question 2: Slander of Title: Having regard to the answer to Question 1 above, did the letter of 28 April 1999 on behalf of the First Defendant convey representations, either expressly or by implication, which constituted a slander of the Plaintiffs' title, giving rise to damage by reason of the Plaintiffs' auction of Lot 37 having to be aborted with consequent loss of the commercial opportunity to effect a sale on that evening?

8. Question 3: Declaration: Despite absence of malice as an element of actionable slander of title, are the Plaintiffs nonetheless entitled to a declaration that their rights are not liable to extinction in the fashion asserted by the First Defendant in that letter of 28 April 1999?

9. Question 4: Fair Trading Act: Having regard to the answer to Question 1, were there representations in the letter of 28 April 1999 in breach of s 42 of the Fair Trading Act 1987(NSW) which were:

(i) conduct in trade or commerce;
(ii) false in the respects asserted by the Plaintiffs, and hence
(iii) misleading and deceptive?

10. Question 5: Relief: Having regard to the answers to the foregoing questions, can and should relief nonetheless be refused on discretionary grounds advanced by the Defendants, namely:

(i) prematurity of the dispute;
(ii) availability of relief through the Strata Schemes Adjudicator;
(iii) grant of relief sought would preclude the Owners' Corporation from testing the reasonableness of any refusal by the Plaintiffs to provide consent to the proposed exclusive use by-law, were such consent required, contrary to the First Defendant's submission; and
(iv) so far as injunctive relief is concerned the Plaintiffs by letter dated 17 November 2000 wrote asking that an extraordinary general meeting be held to deal with the passing of the proposed by-law which was refused, such that the Plaintiffs are said to have sought both to ``approbate and reprobate'', taking into account a further letter of 12 April 2001 concerning possible mediation.

11. I turn now to Question 1

Question 1: Validity of exclusive use by-law passed without consent.

12. Before turning to the legislative scheme now contained in the 1996 legislation (The Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW) (``the Act''), there is an anterior question. It concerns the proper classification of the

Plaintiffs' current entitlement in relation to the common property; is it a proprietary or merely contractual right? The First Defendant contends that the protection or enforceability of such entitlement is denied by reason of the statutory provisions and their application to what it contends is a mere contractual right.

13. The Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1973, s 20 provides as follows:

``20 Body corporate to hold common property as agent for proprietors

The estate or interest of a body corporate in common property vested in it or acquired by it shall be held by the body corporate as agent:

(a) where the same person or persons is or are the proprietor or proprietors of all of the lots the subject of the strata scheme concerned — for that proprietor or those proprietors, or
(b) where different persons are proprietors of each of two or more of the lots the subject of a strata scheme concerned — for those proprietors as tenants in common in shares proportional to the unit entitlements of their respective lots."

14. It follows from the statutory provision that the relevant rights of the Plaintiffs in the common property are proprietary; they are rights owned by them beneficially as tenants in common in the common property.

15. It is true that the rights which flow from the estate or interest in the common property so held are delineated by the by-laws. These define the nature of its use and enjoyment, any constraints upon it and any conditions applicable such as payment for maintenance and the like. That flows from the statutory scheme under the companion legislation namely the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 to which I now turn. The relevant rights nonetheless remain proprietary in nature, though their detailed articulation stems from the by-laws.

16. This analysis bears on whether the doctrine of fraud on the power applies to the exercise by an owners corporation and its members of their by-law making power. That this doctrine is capable of so applying in the context of a strata scheme was resolved by the Court of Appeal in Hougton & Anor v Immer (155) Pty Ltd (1997) 44 NSWLR 46 at 53. That case also resolved that the principles governing the expropriation of minority shareholders in Gambotto v WCP Limited & Anor (supra) were capable of application to the operation of a strata title body. The majority in Gambotto described its principles as applying to ``an actual or effective expropriation of shares or a valuable proprietary right attaching to shares'' (at ACLC 348; CLR 444). The present right to exclusive possession can properly be described as a valuable proprietary right in relation to a share in the common property. It is, at the least, proprietary in character, though its delineation be the subject of by-laws pursuant to statute.

17. The First Defendant sought to argue that rights the subject of such exclusive use or special privilege by-laws operated merely in contract, citing North Wind Pty Limited v The Proprietors Strata Plan No. 3143 (1981) 2 NSWLR 809 at 813 to 814 and s 44 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 whereby owners corporation and owners are bound to comply with by-laws.

18. As I have explained I do not accept that the proper characterisation of the legal nature of the Plaintiffs' right in the common property is to equate it merely to the contractual right of a lot-holder entitled to exclusive use of common property. That is the position discussed in North Wind and addressed by s 44 of the Act. It is true that s 44 renders the by-laws binding upon the owners corporation and the owners (as well as upon any mortgagee or covenant chargee in possession or lessee or occupier). But that does not, of itself, override the proprietary character of the estate or interest held in common property through the body corporate as agent for the relevant proprietors.

19. I turn next to the statutory scheme itself. This is for what light it throws upon the proper construction of those provisions of the current Act (ss 51 and 54 in particular quoted in 26 below) which bear upon whether an exclusive use by-law is capable of depriving a lot owner of a pre-existing interest in common property without his or her consent. The interpretation favoured by the Defendants is that the statutory scheme does go so far as to permit a by-law to be passed which, without the lot owner's consent, took away entirely any exclusive right to use the common property or any shared right of that character; even where, unlike the position here, the owner so deprived is still required to contribute to the proper maintenance of the relevant facility within the common property. I deliberately state the matter at its extreme for that oppressive result is the consequence of the Defendants' interpretation. I do so having regard to the ordinary legislative presumption that a statute could not be intended to take away or alienate vested proprietary interests without adequate compensation. That proposition has been confirmed in a long line of cases commencing with Clissold v Perry (1904) 1 CLR 363. There a person, whose only title to land was ten years adverse possession, was held entitled to compensation on acquisition. Griffith CJ at 373 said: ``In considering this matter it is necessary to bear in mind that it is a general rule to be followed in the construction of statutes such as that with which we are now dealing, that they are not to be construed as interfering with vested interests unless that intention is manifest." See generally the authorities cited in Pearce and Geddes, ``Statutory Interpretation in Australia" 4th edition at 5.1 to 5.13.

20. However, that principle is not unqualified and the Defendants seek to distinguish its application from the present circumstances. In particular the presumption against interference with vested proprietary interests may not, as the authors point out, be applicable to rights which are the creature of statute. Since the rights of an owner of common property is a creature of statute, it may be said that that which the Legislature has given, it may take away. The intention of the legislation in dealing with rights so created by statute must therefore be derived from the legislation itself, without recourse to such a presumption against that deprivation; compare Penney v Penney [1965] NSWR 495 at 498.

21. Whether or not that presumption can be called in aid, for the reasons which I develop below I consider that the Statute does not have the effect that the Defendants contend for. In particular I have concluded, for reasons developed below, that the statute does require the consent of the Plaintiffs before a new by- law can deprive them of their right to share in the exclusive use of the common property relevantly as regards the swimming pool. I so conclude, notwithstanding that the Statute does provide a mechanism for subsequent appeal to the strata schemes adjudicator (s 157) with the adjudicator able thereafter to make an order declaring a by-law to be invalid and for appeal against that order to the Supreme Court (see ss 158 and 159 of the Act). I do not consider the legislature, by conferring such an appeal mechanism, thereby evinced a legislative intention to render such proprietary rights liable to extinction, though it may render a regime said to do so marginally less oppressive.

Legislative history

22. It is convenient that I start with the legislative history of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996. Its current version is first recognisable in the amendments to the 1973 Strata Titles Act effective in 1987 but now appearing in the 1996 legislation in rearranged form from the 1987 version.

23. The Strata Titles Act in 1973, the predecessor legislation to the 1996 legislation provided in s 58(7) as follows:

> ``58(7) [Exclusive use by-laws] Without limiting the generality of any other provision of this section, a body corporate may, with the consent in writing of the proprietor of a lot pursuant to a unanimous resolution make a by-law in respect of that lot conferring on that proprietor the exclusive use and enjoyment of, or special privileges in respect of, the common property or any part thereof upon such terms and conditions (including the proper maintaining and keeping in a state of good and serviceable repair of the common property or that part of the common property, as the case may be, and the payment of money by that proprietor to the body corporate) as may be specified in the by-law and may, pursuant to a unanimous resolution, make a by-law amending, adding to or repealing any by-law made under this subsection if the proprietor of the lot at the time the by-law is made to effect the amendment, addition or repeal has given written consent to its being made."

24. In 1987, that legislation was amended in two significant respects. The 1973 version of s 58(7) required unanimity of all lot-holders in the passing of the resolution, and in addition the written consent only of the lot-holder expressly stipulated to have benefited from the proposed by-law. However, the 1987 amendment removed that unanimity requirement and substituted the passing of a special resolution. It then however removed the express reference limiting written consent to the lot-holder benefited by such by-law. That latter requirement was replaced in favour of what I consider to be a more comprehensive requirement, that of written consent from ``the proprietor or proprietors of the lot or lots concerned". The question then becomes, are those deprived of a (shared) exclusive use included in that expression as proprietor or proprietors of ``lots concerned", or is that expression still limited only to those benefited, despite the changed and wider wording? It would, prima facie, be surprising indeed if those injured by the deprivation were omitted from the need for consent, whilst those benefiting — and only those — were covered by that safeguard of consent.

25. The Plaintiffs correctly point out that had the legislature intended that there be thereafter no protection at all for disenfranchised lot holders (disenfranchised in the sense that unanimity was no longer required), it would have been open to have kept the express terminology employed in the 1973 version (s 58(7)). The 1973 legislation limited the need for written consent only to lot holders benefited, or benefited with a reciprocal obligation to contribute to proper maintenance. Instead, the legislature discarded that terminology in favour of a more comprehensive category of ``the proprietor or proprietors of the lot or lots concerned''. That reference to lot(s) concerned includes reference to their proprietors. That suggests that the phrase ``lot or lots concerned'' was intended to cover comprehensively all those affected by the new by-law, whether beneficially or otherwise.

26. The later 1996 legislation, apart from some rearrangement of the relevant provisions from the 1987 version, produced the following corresponding provisions, namely ss 51 and 52. I shall also quote the immediately contextual s 53 and s 54(1), the latter of which is strongly relied upon by the Defendants.

``Division 4 Special provisions for by-laws conferring certain rights or privileges

51. Application of Division

(1) This Division applies to a by-law conferring on the owner of a lot specified in the by-law, or the owners of several lots so specified:

> (a) a right of exclusive use and enjoyment of the whole or any specified part of the common property, or > (b) special privileges in respect of the whole or any specified part of the common property, and to a by-law that amends or repeals such a by-law.

(2) This Division does not prevent an owners corporation making a by-law in accordance with section 54 of the Community Land Management Act 1989

52. How does an owners corporation make, amend or repeal by-laws conferring certain rights or privileges?

(1) An owners corporation may make, amend or repeal a by-law to which this Division applies, but only:

> (a) with the written consent of the owner or owners of the lot or lots concerned and, in the case of a strata leasehold scheme, the lessor of the scheme, and
> (b) in accordance with a special resolution.

(2) A by-law to which this Division applies may be made even though the person on whom the right of exclusive use and enjoyment or the special privileges are to be conferred had that exclusive use or enjoyment or enjoyed those special privileges before the making of the by-law.

(3) After 2 years from the making, or purported making, of a by-law to which this Division applies, it is conclusively presumed that all conditions and preliminary steps precedent to the making of the by-law were complied with and performed

53. Can a by-law contain conditions?

A by-law to which this Division applies may confer rights or special privileges subject to such conditions as may be specified in the by-law (for example, a condition requiring the payment of money by the owner or owners of the lot or lots concerned, at specific times or as determined by the owners corporation.

54. By-law must provide for maintenance of property

(1) A by-law to which this Division applies must:

> (a) provide that the owners corporation is to continue to be responsible for the proper maintenance of, and keeping in a > state of good and serviceable repair, the common property or the relevant part of it, or

[140237]

(b) impose on the owner or owners concerned the responsibility for that maintenance and upkeep...."

27. The Defendants contend that no consent is required from the lot owner whose prior rights are to be extinguished but only from those lot owners who are to acquire exclusive use. Such a construction, ex facie, would deny the right to consent to those most adversely affected and confer it on those who are thereby benefited. A conclusion so absurd and unreasonable in effect invites a very careful reading of the legislation to see if it is compelled by its plain words. The onerousness of such a result, if it indeed is the legislative consequence of the plain words used, would not be sufficiently mitigated by the fact that the deprived lot owner was relieved thereafter from any associated maintenance obligation, as may or may not occur. Here it is true the Plaintiffs will henceforth be released from the costs of maintenance of the relevant common property, though correctly described by the Defendants in their submissions as microscopic. As I have said, the construction contended for by the Defendants must as a matter of logic apply equally to the situation where there were no extinguishment of the obligation to contribute to maintenance, an even more oppressive result. On the Defendant's contention, that would leave the deprived lot owner with only such rights of a limited kind to object (and appeal) after the event as are allowed by the statute. Those rights are to seek revocation of the amendment of the orders by recourse to ss 157 to 159 of the Act to which I have earlier made reference. It is well-settled that a construction of legislation that leads to a manifestly absurd result is not to be adopted unless compelled by sufficiently clear language which leaves no room for an interpretation that avoids such consequence.

28. The Defendants urge that the process of interpretation should be informed also by recourse to the Minister's second reading speech introducing the 1987 amendments to the 1973 Strata Titles Act. The Defendants contend that recourse thereto throws light on the legislative scheme that was then repeated in the 1996 Act (subject to some minor re- arrangement of the relevant sections). The particular passage relied upon by the Defendants is underlined and I have quoted it along with its immediate context as that context bears upon the remedial purpose as well.

``These amending bills arise from the most recent recommendations of this committee and reflect the Government's desire to simplify the management provisions of the Strata Titles Act by removing unnecessary regulation. They also reflect the Government's determination to keep the Strata Titles Act in step with industry practices, thus providing bodies corporate with the means to equitably manage more complex schemes such as mixed commercial-residential strata schemes. In this latter area the major proposals, which are contained in schedule 1 of the bill, seek to remedy an increasing problem whereby special services are being provided to only some proprietors — for example, an airconditioning system servicing a ground floor shopping arcade — are being paid for by all proprietors. This is because of the management provisions of the Act which require that all of the proprietors have to contribute to the cost of operating and maintaining a service if it is located on common property.

This is clearly inequitable and it is proposed to introduce the concept of limited common property to enable the body corporate to charge those who use the service its cost in proportion to the benefit they derive from it. This will be achieved by allowing a developer or body corporate to make a limited common property by-law granting exclusive use of part of the common property to certain proprietors. The by-law would contain all necessary details to ensure the effective upkeep and maintenance of the common property. The developers or original proprietors would be able to make such by-laws at the time of registration of the strata scheme, thus allowing them to provide in advance for the equitable operation of special services. Also, consumers buying into a strata scheme would be able to clearly establish their responsibility for the operating and maintenance costs of any service provided from common property. Bodies corporate will be able to make such by -laws in the same manner s they can for any general by- law.

The proposals also include a number of measures to protect the interests of both individual proprietors and bodies corporate. The first is that for such a by-law to be valid, the body corporate must first obtain the written consent of the proprietors who will be given the exclusive use of the common property.

This provides a proprietor with a safeguard against unknowingly being given responsibility for the maintenance of part of the common property. For example, a proprietor absent on vacation might otherwise return to find that he had been granted exclusive use of the roof of the building with attached responsibilities for its upkeep and maintenance. The other measures centre around the ability of the body corporate or a proprietor to apply to the Strata Titles Board for a determination if either the body corporate has unreasonably refused to make a limited common property by-law, a proprietor has unreasonably withheld his or her consent to the by-law, or a dispute arises over the method of determining contributions towards the upkeep of the common property."

[emphasis added]

29. The Defendants rely upon the emphasised passages as supporting strongly a reading that would treat as the exclusive remedial purpose elimination of the requirement of unanimous consent. Its purpose (it is said) is then to substitute a regime where written consent is only required of the owner or owners of the lot or lots ``concerned''; that is to say, concerned in the limited sense of receiving the benefit of exclusive use but not in the sense of deprived of a pre-existing exclusive shared use. The justification for what must prima facie be an entirely paradoxical result is said to be that the Minister in that second reading speech is dealing only with the circumstances where exclusive use is conferred over common property accompanied by an obligation for effective upkeep and maintenance of that common property, thus reciprocally burdening those who are thereby to be benefited. It is said that it would be quite unreasonable for such persons to be so burdened without their having first to give written consent.

30. One may readily accede to that last proposition as an example of where consent should be required. This is without acceding to the supposed consequence that this is the exclusive ambit of the regime which replaced the requirement for unanimous consent. It appears moreover that the Defendants would also treat the new regime as covering, as a matter of logic, the situation where the lot owner was given exclusive use of the common property with no obligation to contribute to its upkeep, further emphasising the absurdity and anomaly of such a regime.

31. Moreover there is a difficulty in the way of that regime being compatible with what the Minister says elsewhere in her second reading speech. She refers to what is said to be ``an increasing problem whereby special services are being provided to only some proprietors — for example an airconditioning servicing a ground floor shopping arcade'', which are being paid for by all proprietors. It is said that this legislation will remedy that inequity by allowing a developer or body corporate to make a limited common property by-law grounding exclusive use of part of the common property to certain proprietors, such a by-law containing all necessary details to ensure effective upkeep and maintenance of the common property, presumably only by those proprietors that are granted the exclusive use.

32. Significantly, it is then said by the Minister that this would enable the developers or original proprietors ``to make such by-laws at the time of registration of the strata scheme''. However, this would be a circumstance where no-one would be yet the owner of a lot and thus there would be no-one who would be deprived of a pre-existing user right. That emphasises that the Minister would have been conscious that thereafter depriving any existing lot owner of a pre-existing user right, exclusive or not, could work an inequity if it was without consent. That would hardly be expected in remedial legislation having the purpose described by the Minister of effectuating ``the Government's desire to simplify the management provisions of the Strata Titles Act''.

33. In any event, that the Minister chose to highlight one circumstances in which written consent would be required is hardly to justify the conclusion that this is the only circumstances contemplated by the legislation as requiring such consent, when construing the words ``the owner or owners of the lot or lots concerned'' who by s 52(1)(a) are required to give written consent.

34. In any event, there has been repeated judicial cautioning against drawing general conclusions from the limited exposition possible in a second reading speech; see, for example, Mahoney JA, on appeal at Metal Manufacturers Limited v Lewis (1988) 6 ACLC 725 at 734; (1988) 13 NSWLR 315 at 326 and Palmer J in Southern Cross Interiors Pty Ltd (in liq) v DCT (2001) 39 ACSR 305 at 329. Thus in Monier v Szabo (1992)

28 NSWLR 53 at 61-2 per Kirby JA (as he then was), noted that there was often a disharmony between the words of a statute and that of a second reading speech, and that the court's ultimate loyalty was to ``the purpose of Parliament as expressed in the legislative language'', citing Mason CJ, Wilson and Dawson JJ in Re Boulton; ex parte Bean (1987) 162 CLR 514 at 518.

35. Turning now to the other arguments put by the Defendants related to the specific text of the 1996 legislation and its predecessor amendments of 1987, I find that none of these compel that interpretation contended for, with its manifestly oppressive result.

36. Perhaps the strongest argument which the Defendants mount is that s 54(1)(b), in using similar language to the reference in s 52(1)(a) to ``the owner or owners of the lot or lots concerned'' (compare ``the owner or owners concerned'') could not have intended a different sense to that phrase. Furthermore, if s 54(1)(b) were capable of applying not only to the owner or owners granted exclusive use but also to the owner or owners who are thereby deprived of pre-existing use rights, this would enable a by- law to impose on the deprived owner who has suffered the injury of deprivation, the further injury of being made responsible for maintenance and upkeep, though having no further use rights of that which had to be maintained.

37. There is however a short answer to that argument. The language used in s 52(1)(a) flows from that in s 54(1)(b) in a way which could justify a narrower reading of the ambit of s 54(1)(b) in terms of what it denotes. Thus s 52(1)(a) connects the word ``concerned'' to the expression ``the lot or lots'' whereas in s 54 ``concern'' qualifies ``the owner or owners''. It would be perfectly logical for s 52(1)(a) to refer in a broad sense to the ``lot or lots concerned'' with ``concerned'' having the dictionary sense of ``involved''. ``Involved'' is a word of wide denotation, capable of embracing both those benefited and those injured by the relevant law. ``Lots'' as inanimate objects are hardly to be thought of as having the alternative dictionary meaning of ``interested'', or ``troubled or anxious''. It is true that the ultimate connection is back to the owners. They alone have the capacity to use and enjoy the specified part of the common property or suffer its deprivation, or to enjoy special privileges or suffer their deprivation. But the language of ``concerned'' in s 52(1)(a) is still apt to pick up both categories, namely those upon whom is conferred the right of exclusive use and enjoyment of the special privilege, and those who are deprived of that use, exclusive or otherwise, of the relevant special privilege. Such an interpretation avoids the absurdity and anomaly to which I have earlier made reference.

38. Thus I consider that when it comes to s 54(1)(b), the focus is more narrowly upon the owner or owners concerned in the subject matter of maintenance and upkeep to which s 54(1)(b) is alone directed. It precludes the by- law leaving no one responsible for maintenance and upkeep. The owner would cease to be ``concerned'' in maintenance and upkeep if by the by-law that owner were henceforth released from that responsibility, with the owners corporation taking it over. Whereas that owner would remain ``concerned'' if the by-law continued to impose that obligation on the owner(s) concerned. That suggests, in its context, that the instances denoted by the word in s 54(1)(b) are narrower in scope than those covered by s 52(1)(a). That said ``concerned'' in each of s 54(1)(b) and s 52(1)(a) still has the same essential connotation of defining features.

39. To sum up. While one would not ordinarily expect to find a different meaning given to the same phrase in adjacent legislative provisions, first the language and context here is sufficiently different to justify what is a difference only in denotation, not connotation or essential meaning. Second, that difference in denotation is the more readily justified where not to make it would produce its own manifest absurdity in that context.

40. The Plaintiffs' construction of s 58(7) of the 1987 Act and s 52(1) of the 1996 Act still permits a relaxation of the management provisions of the Act and the removal of unnecessary regulation as identified in the Minister's second reading speech. A principal vice of the 1973 version of s 58(7) was no doubt that owners who had no interest at all in relation to the making of an exclusive use by- law, such as owners who never had an exclusive or other use and would not acquire that use by virtue of the by-law, were still able to frustrate the making of such by-laws by denying the consent required for a unanimous resolution. The possibility for such capricious behaviour was removed by the twofold amendment effected by the 1987 Act. That required only the passing of a special resolution and, sensibly, the written consent of the owners ``concerned''. This is either in the sense of those who are to receive the benefit of exclusive use, with the possibility of an accompanying burden, and those who are deprived of pre- existing use rights. Each are ``concerned'', not just the former.

41. The fact that the 1987 amendments permit the owners corporation to determine who ``owner or owners of the lot or lots concerned'' might be, in place of the unanimous consent requirement, is an important de-regulation. It liberates owner corporations of the veto power of the vexatious lot holder. In the vast majority of cases, it is not difficult to determine whether a lot-holder might be an ``owner of a lot concerned''. It will be readily apparent whether existing rights are threatened or an economic burden created, or for that matter even where a privilege is conferred with no economic burden, since some owners may not wish that for themselves for whatever reason, unusual as that may be. In each case, the relevant lot is ``concerned''. For the small percentage of cases where some complexity may attach, that does not diminish the value of the intended reform or lead to the conclusion that the language does not have the meaning which its words are capable of bearing and which avoids the anomalies earlier identified.

Summing up

42. Section 52(1)(a) of the Act requires the written consent of the owner or owners of Lot 27 for a by-law to be capable of depriving such owner or owners of a pre-existing use right in relation to the common property, whether or not that deprivation were accompanied by release from any further obligations in relation to maintenance and upkeep. In particular, the Plaintiffs who would be in that position as owners ``concerned'' are not reduced to persuading an adjudicator or court that such a by-law should be subsequently revoked, following the procedure first of adjudication and then of appeal to the Supreme Court pursuant to the provisions of ss 157 to 159 of the Act. The proposed by-law foreshadowed in the faxed letter of 28 August 1999 could not therefore be passed so as to be rendered valid and effective in the absence of written consent from the Plaintiffs. Nor would such a by-law escape the requirement of written consent, merely because the by-law specified only the lots which were to be granted the right of exclusive use and enjoyment and made no express mention of the lots to be thereby deprived of such use and enjoyment. I view s 51(1) as enabling such a by-law to be passed and being part of a code which states exhaustively the statutory basis which alone permits such a by-law. Put simply, if a valid by- law were sought to be passed depriving the Plaintiffs of a pre-existing right of exclusive use and enjoyment of that part of the common property as consisted of the swimming pool, first that by-law would need to specify both lots to be conferred with the right of exclusive use and enjoyment of the relevant part of the common property and second, the lots to be deprived of use and enjoyment of the relevant part of the common property. Then consent of the owner deprived (as well as owners benefited) becomes an essential requirement for such by-law to take effect.

Fraud on the minority and expropriation

43. It is convenient that I deal with both these bases of challenge together, though my earlier conclusion means that it is not strictly necessary to consider these alternative bases of attack.

44. I have already identified the nature of the proprietary interest conferred by the relevant legislation, albeit by-laws may bring about its delineation. The Plaintiffs' right as a tenant in common of the common properties is sufficient to permit them to lodge a caveat had they so chosen to prevent the registration of any by-law affecting common property alleged to be invalid; see Mulwala & District Services Club Ltd v Owners Strata Plan 37724 (2001) NSW ConvR ¶55-962; (2000) 50 NSWLR 458, implying that such a right must be an interest in land and accordingly a property right.

45. But in any event, the doctrine of fraud on the minority is capable of application in the present circumstances, save insofar as statute precludes that. In circumstances where no written consent has been sought or foreshadowed in the relevant correspondence, the doctrine of fraud on the minority is capable of application in relation to the contemplated expropriation of the Plaintiffs' minority rights to a shared use of the relevant part of the common property. Such a use of a by-law prima facie would be a fraud on the power being for an improper purpose, on the assumption that such power existed. As I have earlier concluded, such statutory power does not exist, absent written consent. If I were wrong, the exercise of that power could be restrained as I explain.

46. The Defendant attempts to avoid this consequence by contending that the rights held by the Plaintiffs are undeserved, or somehow unnatural, or are inadequately paid for in terms of a contribution to maintenance charges. Those contentions are quite beside the point. Even if it were in some sense true that the rights were morally undeserved and unduly generous having regard to the miniscule contribution made by the Plaintiffs, the fact remains that they have those use rights legitimately (presumably reflected in what they paid to buy Lot 37 limited Lot 27 by Deed). The proposed by-law would extinguish them. Indeed the disparity between their cost and their worth emphasises the extent of the foreshadowed deprivation.

47. It is true that in Gambotto the majority considered that the exercise by members of their power to alter the constitution of the company to expropriate the shares of a minority would still be capable of being exercised for a proper purpose and indeed only be so capable of being exercised, if it were to remove a detriment to the company.

> ``(i) It is exercisable for a proper purpose; and (ii) its exercise will not operate oppressively in relation to minority shareholders. In other words, an expropriation may be justified where it is reasonably apprehended that the continued shareholding of the minority is detrimental to the company, its undertaking of the conduct of its affairs — resulting in detriment to the interest of the existing shareholders generally — and expropriation is a reasonable means of eliminating or mitigating that detriment.
> Accordingly, if it appears that the substantial purpose of the alteration is to secure the company from significant detriment or harm, the alteration would be valid if it is not oppressive to the minority shareholders'' at 445.
> ``The majority emphasised that an expropriation merely to advance the interests of the company as a legal and commercial entity or those of the majority, albeit the great majority, would be insufficient justification'' at 446.

48. It is impossible to conclude from the facts in the present case that the Plaintiffs' use rights, which in practice merely adds a further family to the two families in the duplex previously constituted by Lot 27 as users of the pool, constitutes a material detriment in the sense used in Gambotto. Nor could it be said that the relatively miniscule contribution for that use is itself detrimental to the owners corporation, its undertaking or the conduct of its affairs as used by the majority in Gambotto. This is because it is clear that ``detriment'' is not demonstrated merely by showing that the proposed expropriation would advance the interests of the company as a legal and commercial entity or those of the majority. Moreover given the willingness of the Plaintiffs to submit to an order calling for a more proportional contribution, even such detriment as its absence bespeaks will be removed.

49. It is nothing to the point for the Defendants contend that the only natural use of common property by the car parking spaces is to walk or drive to and from Wolsely Road on the western boundary of the land to the car parking spaces and there to park. Nor that the use made of the rear pool and garden area is an entirely unnatural one (whatever that may mean) since this too misses the point. Speculation as to why the miniscule contribution to maintenance was arrived at add nothing either.

50. As to detriment, though the Plaintiffs do not concede that they are obliged to do so, they have indicated that if imposed, they would not object to a condition of relief being the requirement to make a reasonable contribution to maintenance. Moreover, in the events that have happened, subject to consideration of the matters pertaining to relief to be discussed latter, my earlier conclusion concerning the need for, and lack of, consent under the Statute means that the Plaintiffs are not required to resort to common law or equitable remedy in any event.

51. Finally, it is simply nonsense to say that in considering reasonableness, the loss of any right to use the physically remote pool and garden is counter-balanced by the foreshadowed provision which places the financial burden of maintenance and upkeep on the residential lots. The fact of the matter is that the Plaintiffs' contribution is miniscule in relation to that cost. Whether that be reasonable or not, that is the valuable right which the First Defendant intends to extinguish by the foreshadowed by-law.

52. It remains to consider in relation to the Gambotto principles whether ``expropriation'' comprehends extinction of rights as distinct from the compulsory taking of another's property to oneself by way of transfer. The Court of Appeal in Heydon v NRMA (2001) Aust Torts Reports ¶81-588; (2001) 36 ACSR 462 provided differing interpretations as to the meaning of ``expropriation''. Clearly enough were the statutory scheme to have been followed by obtaining written consent, the issue of expropriation would not arise. But it not having been followed, there is the question whether the view expressed by Malcolm AJA, defining ``expropriation'' as limited to the transferring of another's property to oneself (at 516-8) should be accepted. While the view expressed by Malcolm CJ is to be treated with respect, I prefer the reasoning of Ormiston AJA who rejected the submission that Gambotto does not apply to the mere removal of rights by way of their compulsory destruction in the following passage (para 577):

> ``Thus I would conclude that, although the word `expropriation' is ordinarily wide enough to comprehend not merely compulsory acquisition but also compulsory destruction of rights, the High Court in Gambotto was concerned primarily with amendments to articles which have the effect of destroying the minority's shareholding or other membership rights or of placing those rights in the hands of the majority shareholders, even if the amendments are not necessarily intended principally to give the majority the financial advantages attaching to those shares but are more directed to excluding the minority from continuing to exercise membership or other related rights in the corporation.''

53. The limited view of expropriation suffers from its preference for form (legitimate compulsory extinction artificially distinguished from illegitimate compulsory transfer) over substance. To work a compulsory extinction is just as much a deprivation or expropriation as a compulsory transfer. Extinction leaves the remainder to ``inherit the earth'' just as they would if beneficiaries of a compulsory transfer.

54. There is nothing in the judgment of McPherson AJA to the contrary of that view.

Conclusion

55. Unless I were wrong in my earlier conclusion that written consent is required to effect an extinction of the rights of the Plaintiffs in the manner contemplated by the proposed by-law, pursuant to s 52 of that Act, the absence of such consent would make the extinction not only invalid under the Act but also successfully challengeable as either a fraud on the minority or a contravention of the Gambotto principles, as constituting an expropriation of the Plaintiffs' rights, being rights which are more than merely contractual but have a proprietary basis or character.

Question 2: Slander of Title and Question 3: Declaration

56. It is convenient to deal with these questions together. The Plaintiffs' contentions start with the proposition that the letter of 28 April 1999 from Mr Le Page, solicitor for the Defendants, to the auctioneer on the day of the proposed auction of 37A Wolsely Road, Point Piper, upon its proper construction, conveyed to the auctioneer the following representations,

> ``(a) The Defendant was entitled to make a by-law extinguishing the plaintiffs' right to use of the swimming pool and other common property of SP 3529.
> (b) That the defendant intended and would in due course make such a by-law.
> (c) That owners of Lot 27, including purchasers of any interest in Lot 27 would consequently not be entitled to enjoy use of the swimming pool and other common property of SP 3529.''

57. I agree with that first proposition. There is no suggestion that the letter contemplated any written consent. Rather it contemplates, as a matter of sufficiently formed intention as would require warning to potential buyers, that the by- law would be passed extinguishing the Plaintiffs' right to use the swimming pool. This is with the clear implication that this would be done without seeking the Plaintiffs' consent. It is disingenuous for the Defendants to suggest that the Owners' Corporation could in any event appeal any lack of written consent from the Plaintiffs (s 158(1)(b) of the Act), when there is no suggestion that the Owners' Corporation intended to seek the written consent in the first place.

58. The elements in the action for slander of title are set out in Halsbury's Laws of England, 4th edition (Vol. 28) at para 276. The Plaintiffs must prove:

(i) falsity;
(ii) publication and disparagement of the Plaintiffs' title;
(iii) malice; and where necessary,
(iv) special damage to the Plaintiffs.

59. The Plaintiffs then contend that malice in the requisite sense might be inferred, in the present case in the following circumstances:

(i) the letter of 28 April 1999 was sent only several hours prior to the auction;
(ii) the letter was sent to the auctioneer without notice to the Plaintiffs;
(iii) on the evidence of the Defendants' witness, Mr Notley, stopping the Plaintiffs or their successors in title making use of the swimming pool facility had been considered by members of the First Defendant for many months beforehand;
(iv) although the Defendants' executive committee had obtained legal advice, it appears that the advice contained at least the proviso that any decision by a special majority under the Act might be liable to challenge before the appropriate tribunal under the legislation (see Notley affidavit, para 6);
(v) letter of 28 April 1999 made no reference to the entitlement to challenge before the appropriate tribunal;
(vi) after causing the auction to abort the First Defendant and its members failed to properly follow up and respond to the Plaintiffs' request for explanation regarding their threat (see affidavit of Plaintiff Mr Young sworn 13 August 1999); and
(vii) after aborting the auction the First Defendant's members promptly abandoned the proposal to immediately pass the by-law, once faced with the threat of legal action.

60. It is then contended that it may be concluded from the above facts that the most probable explanation of the letter of 28 April 1999 was the desire of the First Defendants and its members to inconvenience the Plaintiffs in their attempt to sell the property, in the hope this would give a tactical advantage, perhaps a settlement upon favourable terms.

61. It is then said (and I would accept) that the 28 April 1999 letter was the cause of the auction aborting on that date, and that the Plaintiffs lost the commercial opportunity to effect the sale that evening. It is then contended that there is no difficulty in the present instance in the Plaintiffs establishing special damage, for example the loss of an opportunity, although the prospective opportunity is to be determined as a separate issue; see Sellars v Adelaide Petroleum NL (1994) ATPR ¶41-301; (1994) 179 CLR 332. Any action for damage, if otherwise available, still depends on whether that loss of opportunity actually gave rise to damage taking into account any subsequent increase (if such there were) in the value of the property.

62. Hence it can be said that the gravamen of the Plaintiffs' case is that there is an implied false representation that the by-law could be passed without the requirement of first obtaining written consent, even if the absence of such consent could itself be the subject of proceedings brought pursuant to s 158(1)(b) of the Act, based on such consent being unreasonably refused. Further, that this involves a published disparagement of the Plaintiffs' title, so far as it impliedly represents that the title is defeasible in that way, that is defeasible without obtaining written consent.

63. While I accept that a representation was made broadly to the effect stated, more precisely it is a representation as to the effect of a by-law but not a representation as to title itself. In that sense, the potential extinction of the Plaintiffs' title still presupposes that the title exists. What is false is the suggestion that it can be defeated by a by-law without obtaining the requisite consent either voluntarily or pursuant to the procedures in s 158 being successfully pursued. To my mind that is not a disparagement of the title itself.

64. If I were wrong in that, I would nonetheless conclude that the relevant disparagement did not occur with the necessary malice but represented more likely a genuinely held view as to the entitlement of the Defendants to pass a by-law without requirement for written consent, even if, as I have concluded, that view was misconceived. Failure to refer to the other matters identified by the Plaintiffs (see para 30 of the Plaintiffs' written submissions of 26 July 2001) does not sufficiently support an allegation of malice.

65. Assuming in the Plaintiffs' favour that there was nonetheless publication, on the basis that publication to a plaintiff's agent is publication (see Gately on Libel and Slander (Sweet & Maxwell) 9th ed, para 6.1 citing Duke of Brunswick v Harmer (1849) 14 QB 185 and the authorities and footnotes 45 to 50) nonetheless there is a further difficulty in the way of the Plaintiffs. As I have said, it has not yet been shown even in a general sense that loss of the economic opportunity to sell that evening would indeed have led to the Plaintiffs suffering special damage, as that depends upon whether or not the property increased in value thereafter. However, as damage has not been argued before me, it would be open to the Plaintiffs to remedy that omission should that aspect be pressed further.

66. As to the question of whether, absent malice on the part of the First Defendant, the Plaintiffs are nonetheless entitled to a declaration that their rights are not liable to extinguishment in the fashion that the First Defendant has asserted in his letter (see Loudon v Ryder (No. 2) [1953] 1 Ch 423), I do not need to reach any conclusion on that matter. This is because even if relief should be denied on discretionary grounds (as to which see Question 5 below) my answer to Question 1 confirming the requirement for statutory consent means that the Plaintiffs are entitled to such a declaration on that footing in any event.

Conclusion

67. The Plaintiffs' claim based on slander of title is not made out. The occasion for making a declaration based on slander of title does not arise, as such a declaration may sufficiently be made by reason of the answer to question 1, but subject to consideration of any relevant discretionary ground under question 5.

Question 4: Fair Trading Act

68. I have earlier concluded that there was an implied (false) representation that the First Defendant was entitled to make a by-law extinguishing the Plaintiffs right to use of the swimming pool and other common property of S/P 3529, without obtaining the Plaintiffs' written consent in circumstances where refusal of that consent might be the subject of challenge pursuant to s 158 of the Act. It follows that such representation, though implied, was misleading and deceptive. I do not accept the Defendants' contention that all the letter amounted to was a mere statement of future intention (see 76 and 77 below). Quite clearly the context in which the letter was written and the request in relation to the auction from the auctioneer was calculated in a misleading way to convey the probability of a future defeasance or extinction of the Plaintiffs' rights with respect to the common property. In that sense it was to influence the outcome of the auction if not to cause it to be aborted. It matters not whether or not the statements expressed and implied were made with malice so far as s 42 of the Fair Trading Act is concerned.

69. The remaining question is whether the conduct of the First Defendant in sending the letter was conduct ``in trade or commerce'' for the purposes of s 42 of the Fair Trading Act.

70. The Plaintiffs' argument is that although the letter was sent by Mr Le Page, solicitor, it was clearly sent on the instructions of the First Defendant; see the affidavit of Mr Notley sworn 12 November 1999. The First Defendant is a corporation formed for the management of S/P 3529. There are some ten proprietors who are members of the Corporation and who pay fees to the Corporation in exchange for the services associated with the management, repair and maintenance of the property. Thus it is clearly to be concluded that the First Defendant is itself engaged in trade and commerce, namely the business of managing a residential block of units.

However the Defendants contend that the letter merely foreshadowed an intention to pass a by-law; accordingly, that the communication of that intention fell short of the test for engagement ``in trade or commerce'' set forth in the joint judgment of Mason CJ, Deane, Dawson and Gaudron JJ in Concrete Constructions (NSW) Pty Limited v Nelson at 51,363-51,364; (1990) 169 CLR 594 at 602 to 605. Thus ``conduct in trade or commerce'' refers only to ``conduct which is itself an aspect or element of activities or transactions which, of their nature, bear a trading or commercial character. So construed... the words in `in trade or commerce' refer to the `central conception of trade or commerce' and not to the `immense field of activities' in which corporations may engage in the course of carrying on some overall trading or commercial business.'' (at 603) At 604 the court concluded: ``what the section is concerned with is the conduct of a corporation towards persons be they consumers or not, with whom it (or those whose interests it represents or is seeking to promote) has or may have dealings in the course of those activities or transactions which, of their nature, bear a trading or commercial character.''

[140245]

72. With some hesitation, I would conclude that the conduct of the First Defendant in writing the relevant letter was in the course of carrying on the business of managing a residential block of units in that central sense laid down by the High Court as prerequisite for s 42(or s 52) jurisdiction to be enlivened. To characterise a letter dealing with a proposed by- law as somehow peripheral to that central conception of trade or commerce could not ultimately be sustained once it is recognised that the writing of such a letter would be very much a core activity of the management of the residential property being itself trade or commerce. In that regard, the trade or commerce certainly need not be engaged in by the recipient of the letter being the auctioneer, though he was in any event also engaged in trade or commerce. In that regard, the observation of Toohey J in Concrete Constructions (NSW) Pty Limited v Nelson (supra) at 613 is pertinent, as explained by Hely J in Data Flow v Goodman (1999) 168 ALR 169 at 172. Toohey J held that for s 52 jurisdiction to be enlivened, conduct must be in trade or commerce, but not necessarily that of a person engaging in the relevant conduct. Examples of the application of this principle are usefully collected in Data Flow (supra) at 172 to 173.

Conclusion

73. Section 42 of the Fair Trading Act was contravened by the implied representation earlier identified, as constituting misleading and deceptive conduct in trade or commerce.

Question 5: Relief

74. The principle ground put by the Defendants for denying relief on discretionary grounds is prematurity. I agree with the Plaintiffs' contention that the construction of the letter of 28 August 1999 contended for by the First Defendant is not sustainable. That is, in seeking to reduce the impact of that letter upon a reader to a mere indication that strict compliance with the requirements of the 1996 Act was proposed by the First Defendant in making the proposed by-law, and that a democratic vote would determine the fate of the existing use right, such that the letter could be said to have contemplated the possibility of the by-law not being made.

75. In particular I agree with the Plaintiffs' contention that the clear words of the letter, particularly the last sentence of paragraph 3, exclude this construction. In paragraph 3 having indicated that the proposed by-law will confine the use of the swimming pool to residential owners, the last sentence provides that the by-law ``will exclude the owner of Lot 27'' from such entitlements and their responsibility from paying such entitlements; [emphasis added]. Moreover, the letter does not suggest that there is any doubt that the by-law will be passed and has no statement of any qualification upon the capacity so to pass it, in particular the essential qualification of obtaining written statutory consent.

76. Thus the reasonable meaning conveyed in the letter is that the First Defendant intended then and there to pass a by-law which had the effect of precluding the use of the swimming pool. That intention has never been withdrawn. On the contrary, the Defendants' actions including the vigorous and unyielding defence of the matter on this preliminary point make it clear that the Defendants intend to pass their by-law which (if valid) would have such effect if permitted to do so. Whether or not the by-law has been properly formulated is nothing to the point given the clear evincement of that intention. Indeed paragraph 8 of Mr Notley's affidavit of 12 November 1999 makes it perfectly clear that the intention of the Owners' Corporation was to pass an exclusive use by- law as quickly as possible.

77. That the First Defendant has still not passed the proposed by-law is not to the point given that it has not withdrawn the threat to do so. The Plaintiffs are entitled to have that threat removed by vindication of the actions they have brought in the present proceedings. They are likewise entitled to have removed the blight upon their future sale prospects from this continuing threat. It is nothing to the point to say that until the by-law has been made, no rights under ss 157 or 158 accrue, since the non-consenting Plaintiffs' rights do not depend on ss 157 or 158. That consent is a fundamental integer of the validity and efficacy of any by- law passed pursuant to s 52 of the Act. In those circumstances, it could not properly be said that the dispute is not at a sufficiently advanced stage so as to render the Plaintiffs' proceedings premature or in any way hypothetical. The Plaintiffs still wish to sell the remaining lot; see para 57 of the Plaintiffs' affidavit of 13 August 1999, though Lot 37A has been sold.

78. The foregoing deals with the second discretionary ground relied upon by the Defendants, namely the availability of relief from the Strata Scheme's adjudicator pursuant to ss 158 and 159 of the Act. Given that consent has not been sought, the Defendants are not in a position to argue that by bringing the action in the way the Plaintiffs have done they are precluding the Owners' Corporation from testing the reasonableness of any refusal to provide consent to the proposed by-law.

79. Finally, there is said to be conduct by the Plaintiffs which should preclude any injunctive relief. That conduct is first that the First Defendant has made an offer which is said to be unreasonably refused by the Plaintiffs. However, that offer contained in DX7 would exclude the Plaintiffs' entitlement to any damages whatsoever or any costs whatsoever.

80. Then it is said that by letter dated 17 November 2000 the Plaintiffs' solicitor wrote asking that an extraordinary general meeting be held to deal with the passing of a proposed by- law, which was subsequently refused. It is then said that the Plaintiffs would thereby be both approbating and reprobating were they permitted to obtain injunctive relief.

81. However the refusal by the First Defendant to call the proposed meeting made it impossible for the Plaintiffs to have even the possibility of any relief under the Act. The Plaintiffs were then left in a position where no relief was available and the threat to pass the by-law remained. I fully agree with the Plaintiffs' contention that persisting with these proceedings became the only practical vehicle by which the dispute might be resolved in a cost effective manner.

82. Finally, a letter of 12 April 2001 is relied upon by the Defendants (DX3) as betraying a misleading and deceitful attitude to mediation that had been suggested by the Court at the pre- trial conference. However, not having been cross-examined on that letter, it is not now for the Defendants belatedly to rely upon the apparent breakdown of any mediation and the other allegations made in the Defendants' written submissions at para 49 as their basis for denial of discretionary relief, even if such contention otherwise had any validity, as must be dubious.

Overall conclusion and costs

83. The Plaintiffs succeed in relation to each of the questions posed under Question 1 and Question 4 and are not denied relief on any of the discretionary grounds in Question 5. The Defendants succeed in relation to Question 2 but the Plaintiffs are entitled to a declaration that in the absence of written consent from the Plaintiffs the by-law cannot be validly passed. In that regard I note that the issue of the reasonableness of the Plaintiffs' contribution may be a relevant factor should any application be made pursuant to ss 157 and 158 of the Act in the event that such written consent is sought and declined.

84. As to any damage, if it be pressed, that claim will need to be separately determined.

85. The parties are directed to submit orders giving effect to this judgment as soon as possible and in any event by 14 December 2001. Costs, prima facie, should follow the event but the parties may address me on costs if they wish.

(2002) LQCS ¶90-113

Court citation: [2001] QCA 560

Supreme Court of Queensland, Court of Appeal

Judgment delivered 14 December 2001

Building Units and Group Titles — Body corporate — Appeal against determination that body corporate liable in damages for repudiation of caretaking agreement — Whether agreement ultra vires — Whether body corporate required to authorise by by-law the assumption of an obligation to pay for cleaning service with respect to reception area — Whether respondents required to provide cleaning and maintenance services at appellant's expense with respect to common areas over which it enjoyed exclusive use — Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 (Qld), sec 30, sec 37 and sec 50.

The respondents (``Sattel'') instituted an action in the Supreme Court in which they sought declarations relating to a caretaking agreement as well as damages for breach of contract and other relief. The appellant (``Be Bees'') was sued as a body corporate constituted under the provisions of the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 (Qld). The complaint Sattel made against Be Bees was that it had wrongfully repudiated certain agreements said to have been made between the two parties.

The learned judge held that the agreement was in two respects ultra vires the appellant, although he went on to hold that those provisions could be severed from the rest of the agreement. He concluded that the communication of the appellant's resolution of 3 April 1997 amounted to the appellant's repudiation of the contract, which the respondents accepted, effectually terminating the contract and entitling the respondents to damages in respect of any consequent loss. He then remitted the assessment of damages to the District Court, and ordered the appellant to pay the respondents' costs: (2002) NSW Titles Cases ¶80-065.

The appellant challenges the trial judge's findings as to the validity of the agreement. The appellant submitted that the caretaking agreement was beyond the powers of the appellant.

Held: appeal dismissed.

By-law authorising payment for cleaning of reception area

1. Section 30(7) provides that a body corporate may make a by-law conferring, upon the proprietor of a lot, the right to the exclusive use and enjoyment of all or part of the common property. Such a by-law was made in this case, with the proprietor of Lot 1 being given such rights in relation to common property areas, including the reception area, adjacent to four other lots.

2. Section 30(7A) requires that a by-law deal with the question of who carries the financial burden of providing services in relation to areas of common property over which proprietors have been given rights of exclusive use and enjoyment. This applies only where the provision of the relevant services is a duty imposed upon the body corporate by sec 37(1)(b) and (c).

3. As the services were not activities which sec 37(1)(c) compels a body corporate to undertake, the payment for these services did not have to be the subject of a by-law. Section 30(7A), being tied to sec 37(1), does not operate to cast onto the respondents any financial burden associated with the maintenance of the reception area.

Acceptance of repudiation

4. The Court unanimously held that the appellant's conduct was repudiatory, in that it evinced in clear, express terms an intention not to be bound by the caretaking agreement.

Judgment, in full, below

de Jersey CJ: The body corporate appeals against declarations and orders made by the learned primary judge which effectively determined that it is liable to the respondents in damages. The damages, to be assessed in the District Court, would reflect any loss sustained by the respondents (their managers) consequent upon acceptance of what the judge held to be the appellant's repudiation of a caretaking agreement. That agreement related to Be Bee's Tropical Apartments, a relatively small, motel style holiday resort in suburban Cairns.

[2] The resort is subject to a building units plan registered on 21 January 1994. The plan provides for 10 lots, with lot 1 as the caretaker's residence and office. On 22 August 1994 the appellant entered into the subject caretaking agreement with the original proprietors of lot 1. (The original proprietors are not parties to the appeal.) On 8 May 1995 those original proprietors sold their interest in lot 1 and assigned the caretaking agreement to the respondents, the sale and assignment being completed on 26 May 1995. At an extraordinary general meeting on 9 February 1996, the appellant resolved that, the caretaking agreement ``being void and unenforceable'', payment of remuneration under the agreement should cease, with no further performance under that agreement being required of the respondents. The respondents had been obliged to act as resident caretaker for the body corporate for a consideration of $11,000 per annum (subject to annual adjustment).

[3] The respondents in fact then ceased duties, but in March 1996 commenced court proceedings for the specific performance of the agreement. Those proceedings were practically overtaken by the appellant's further resolution on 3 April 1997, at another extraordinary general meeting, that ``without prejudice to the contention... that the caretaking agreement... is ultra vires... or alternatively has been discharged...'', the caretaking agreement be terminated by the appellant ``pursuant to s 50(9) of the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980''. By their solicitors' letter of 4 July 1997 to the appellant, the respondents accepted what they contended amounted thereby to the appellant's repudiation of the caretaking agreement.

[4] Before the learned judge, the appellants submitted that because of a number of features, the appellant had lacked the power to enter into this particular caretaking agreement. Determining those issues involved consideration of the precise terms of the agreement, the appellant's by-laws and the Act. unfortunately the determination of the appeal has involved consideration of issues not properly raised below.

[5] The learned judge held that the agreement was in two respects ultra vires the appellant, although he went on to hold that those provisions could be severed from the rest of the agreement. He concluded that the communication of the appellant's resolution of 3 April 1997 amounted to the appellant's repudiation of the contract, which the respondents accepted, effectually terminating the contract and entitling the respondents to damages in respect of any consequent loss. He then remitted the assessment of damages to the District Court, and ordered the appellant to pay the respondents' costs.

[6] It may for the record be noted at once that the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, which commenced on 13 July 1997, has no relevant application to the circumstances of this case.

[7] The appellant challenges the learned judge's findings as to the validity of the agreement. Those findings should logically be considered first. The appellant submitted that the caretaking agreement was, in five respects, beyond the powers of the appellant. I deal with them in turn.

1. Reception area: location, payment for cleaning

The appellant's first contention was that contrary to the apparent scheme of the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980, the body corporate did, by this agreement, undertake a responsibility to remunerate the respondents for carrying out services in relation to their own unit, lot 1. The point was raised in these terms in the amended defence:

> ``[B]y the first schedule to the Agreement (service (i)) the (respondents) are required to provide services to clean and maintain Lot 1 in building units plan 71593 at the expense of (the appellant).''

[8] It may for present purposes be accepted that the Act generally assumes that it falls to a proprietor to meet the cost of providing such services to the proprietor's own unit, the body corporate ordinarily being responsible for defraying the cost of maintaining only the common property. [9] The issue arises because the schedule to the caretaking agreement, in specifying the services to be provided by the respondents, includes cleaning the ``reception area''. (The matter was raised and developed by reference specifically to the reception area.) As consideration for the provision of the range of services specified in schedule 1, the appellant is required to pay the respondents $11,000 per annum (subject to annual adjustment) (clause 4.1).

[10] The caretaking agreement does not specify any location for the reception area. To develop its pleaded contention, the appellant sought recourse to extrinsic evidence. That evidence established that the original caretaker, from whom the respondents took an assignment of the agreement, positioned the reception area within the boundaries of lot 1. But shortly after acquiring lot 1 and the caretaking rights, the respondents moved the reception area, as the learned judge found, ``to an outside passageway which was part of the common area under the control of (the appellant)''.

[11] In view of the way the matter was pleaded and developed before his Honour, the critical point is however that the appellant did not enter into an agreement which provided for a reception area within the caretaker's own private lot. That being so, the contention could not be sustained on the pleadings.

[12] Mr Savage SC, who appeared for the appellant, submitted nevertheless that having found that the reception area was on the common property, with the respondents entitled to be paid by the appellant for cleaning it (via the annual fee), the judge should have held the agreement in conflict with s 30(7AA) of the Act. He submitted that the effect of that provision, because of the absence of a by-law authorising such payment by the appellant, is that the burden remained with the respondents, as proprietors of lot 1.

[13] Although this contention was not pleaded, as it should have been were it to be pursued, the court should, consistently with authority, determine its validity unless its not having been raised led to the respondents' not calling relevant evidence (cf. Water Board v Moustakos (1988) 180 CLR 491,497).

[14] While the positioning of the reception area was plainly established, it is possible, had this point been taken below, that the respondents would have led evidence relevant to the possibility of severance.

[15] That evidence may have concerned the extent of the cleaning required and the cost of providing it. The extent may conceivably have been small, and the cost minimal, warranting a conclusion that no significant part of the $11,000 lump sum annual fee should rationally have been attributed to the provision of that service.

[16] But that is speculative, and one would hesitate before determining the appeal on that basis. That matter aside, it is questionable whether the body corporate's assuming an obligation to pay for that cleaning service, via the first schedule and the annual fee, necessitated any authorising by-law.

[17] The arguable need for a by-law authorising payment by the body corporate arises from s 30(7) and s (7A). Subsection 7 provides that a body corporate may in certain circumstances make a by-law conferring, upon the proprietor of a lot, the right to the exclusive use and enjoyment of all or part of the common property. Such a by-law was made here, with the proprietor of lot 1 being given such rights in relation to common property areas adjacent to four other lots. The reception area was located within that area.

[18] I set out s 30(7):

> ``(7) With the written consent of the proprietor or proprietors of the lot or lots concerned, a body corporate may, pursuant to a resolution without dissent make a by- law—
>
> (a) conferring on the proprietor of a lot specified in the by-law, or on the proprietors of the several lots so specified—
>
> (i) the exclusive use and enjoyment of; or > (ii) special privileges in respect of; > the whole or any part of the common property, upon conditions (including the payment of money at specified times or as required by the body corporate, by the proprietor or proprietors of the lot or several lots) specified in the by-law;''
>

[140250]

[19] Such a by-law may specify conditions. In this case, the condition was that the proprietor might use the space for:

``... receiving the proprietors or occupiers of Lots and their licensees and for the purposes referred to in Clause 33(a) hereof on the proviso that he or his licensees shall keep such area in a clean and tidy condition and not litter the same or use the same as to create a nuisance or eye sore.''

[20] Accordingly, in the first schedule to the caretaking agreement, which specifies the services to be provided by the caretaker, being the proprietor of lot 1, there is reference to work to be carried out by the caretaker in relation to the reception area. The relevant provisions follow:

``A: The Resident Caretaker covenants with the Body Corporate to perform the following services and to carry out the following obligations on a daily basis or as and when required:

...
(ii) RECEPTION AREA
Clean floors and walls
Empty ash trays and wipe clean
Empty rubbish receptacles and wipe clean
Wipe down all counter tops, furniture and facings
Remove obvious rubbish. Tidy brochures and magazines
Clean inside and out entry doors
Sweep and mop with detergent and or disinfectant
Clean mirrors
Replace any blown light globes
Spray area with room freshener
...

B. The Resident Caretaker covenants with the Body Corporate to perform the following services and to carry out the following obligation on a weekly basis or as and when required:

(i) RECEPTION AREA
Clean all windows
Water plants, remove any dead fall, wipe clean all planters and spray leaves lightly with white oil as necessary
Wipe clean all wallpaper frames and door frames
Wipe clean all exit and lift indicator lights
Dust and wipe clean all furniture pieces''

[21] Because of clause 4.1 of the caretaking agreement, the lump sum remuneration provided for by the third schedule is payable by the body corporate annually for the range of services specified in the first schedule. The by- laws contain no express authority for the body corporate to assume such an obligation in relation, as presently relevant, to the cleaning and tidying of the reception area. Need such authority have been accorded through the by- laws?

[22] Section 30(7A) requires that a by-law deal with the question of who is to carry the financial burden of providing services in relation to areas of common property over which proprietors have been given rights of exclusive use and enjoyment. That only applies, however, where providing the relevant services is a duty imposed upon the body corporate by s 37(1)(b) and (c). In the absence of such provision in the by-laws, in relation to such duties, the responsibility for carrying out the duties falls upon the proprietor, at that proprietor's own expense.

[23] I set out subsections (7A) and (7AA):

``(7A) A by-law referred to in subsection (7) shall either provide that—

(a) the body corporate shall continue to be responsible to carry out its duties pursuant to section 37(1)(b) and (c), at its own expense; or
(b) the proprietor or proprietors of the lot or lots concerned shall be responsible for, at the proprietor's or proprietors' expense, the performance of the duties of the body corporate referred to in paragraph (a);

and in the case of a by-law that confers rights or privileges on more than 1 proprietor, any money payable by virtue of the by-law by the proprietors concerned—

(c) to the body corporate; or
(d) to any person for or towards the maintenance or upkeep of any common property; shall, except to the extent that the by-law otherwise provides, be payable by the proprietors concerned proportionately according to the relevant proportions of their respective lot entitlements.

[140251]

(7AA) If a by-law does not provide as required by section (7A)(a) or (b), the proprietor or proprietors shall be responsible at his, her or their own expense, for the duties of the body corporate referred to in subsection (7A(a)).''

[24] It is necessary now to turn to the terms of s 37(1):

``37.(1) A body corporate shall—

...
(c) subject to section 37A, properly maintain and keep in a state of good and serviceable repair (including, where reasonably necessary, renew or replace the whole or part thereof)—

(i) the common property;
(ii) any fixture or fitting (including any pipe, pole, wire, cable or duct) comprised on the common property or within any wall, floor or ceiling the centre of which forms a boundary of a lot;
(iii) any fixture or fitting (including any pipe, pole, wire, cable or duct) which is comprised within a lot and which is intended to be used for the servicing or enjoyment of any other lot or of the common property;
(iv) each door, window and other permanent cover over openings in walls where a side of the door, window or cover is part of the common property;
(v) any personal property vested in the body corporate:''

Section 37A has no particular relevance to this case.

[25] These by-laws apparently do not comply with s 30(7A), with the consequence that the respondents would be responsible, at their own expense, for carrying out the duties otherwise falling upon the body corporate under s 37(1)(b) and (c) in relation to the areas of common property over which the respondents have been given the right of exclusive use and enjoyment. For the purpose of determining this case, the ultimate question is whether the attenuated cleaning and tidying obligation imposed upon the respondents falls within the maintenance and repair obligation of the body corporate under s 37(1)(c). If it does, then the proprietor of lot 1 should bear the cost of it. Otherwise, it fell, in my view, within the body corporate's powers itself to pay for the provision of that service, through the caretaking agreement, having regard to the body corporate's general responsibility for maintenance and administration of the common property for the benefit of the proprietors (s 37(1)(a)), in respect of which it may disburse moneys (s 38(3)(b)).

[26] My conclusion is that this cleaning and tidying activity does not fall within s 37(1)(c). The obligation under that provision to ``maintain and keep in a state of good and serviceable repair (including, where reasonably necessary, renew(al) or replace(ment) (of) the whole or part'', is quite different in kind from mere cleaning and tidying. It centres on the preservation of the fabric of the premises. Section 30(7A), being tied to s 37(1)(c), does not therefore operate to cast onto the respondents any financial burden associated with that cleaning and tidying requirement. It fell within the authority of the body corporate to include the provision of that service within the range of services specified in schedule 1, attracting the annual lump sum payment from the body corporate as provided by clause 4.1 of the caretaking agreement.

[27] For these reasons, the challenge to the agreement on this account, even as developed on appeal, should not be upheld.

2. Payment for cleaning of restaurant

The second contention was pleaded by the appellant in these terms:

> ``[B]y clause 11(3) of the Agreement the (respondents) are required to provide services to clean and maintain areas of common property of which the (respondents) have exclusive use at the expense of the (appellant).''

Clause 11(3) provides:

> ``The Resident Caretaker shall at all times ensure that the restaurant and outdoor dining area are maintained in a clear and tidy condition clear of rubbish and vermin and shall ensure that such areas are regularly and thoroughly cleared.''

[140252]

Clause 11(1) authorised the caretaker to conduct a restaurant, but did not oblige the caretaker to do so.

[28] The scheme of the agreement is, as I have said, that the remuneration of $11,000 per annum, subject to adjustment, is payable for the provision of the range of services specified in the first schedule (clause 4.1). That schedule does not mention a restaurant, although it does specify ``barbecue (sic) area'', an aspect to which I will come.

[29] The agreement does not provide separately for the appellant to remunerate the caretaker for the performance of the particular obligation under clause 11(3), an obligation which, as I have said, is not mentioned in the first schedule. The learned judge pointed out that the respondents were not obliged to conduct a restaurant business, by way of contrast with other schedule 1 services. Differential treatment of who should bear the cleaning costs may not therefore have been surprising.

[30] In fact, as the judge found, the respondents at no stage claimed or were paid anything for the performance of the work required of them under clause 11(3).

[31] The learned judge correctly, with respect, determined this point against the appellant, essentially on the ground that the only services attracting a right to compensation were those listed in the first schedule, the matter of the maintenance of the restaurant area being the subject of quite separate provision in clause 11(3), provision which did not extend to obliging the body corporate to pay for it. It fell to the respondents to meet the costs associated with the restaurant maintenance, and they did so.

[32] Under the first schedule, the respondents were obliged to clean the barbeque area, for which they would notionally be recompensed from the annual fee. Mr Savage contended in argument that the ``restaurant and outside dining area'' referred to in cl 11(3) were likely the same as the barbeque area referred to in the first schedule. But there was no evidence to which he could point establishing that. The issue was not pleaded on that basis, nor was it argued in that way before the learned judge — as is apparent from his reasons. This avenue cannot therefore at this stage lead to a successful outcome for the appellant in relation to this issue.

3. Payment for provision of PABX

The third contention concerns the respondent's obligation under the first schedule ``to provide day and night PABX answering services''.

[33] The appellant's submission before the learned judge was that requiring the respondents to provide such a service was not authorised by the by-laws, and conflicted with s 37(2)(a) of the Act. The judge held, however, that by-law 33(a)(xii) provided sufficient justification for this aspect of the agreement, because ``the provision of the PABX service (was) part of the business activities of the (respondents)''. Under that by-law, the proprietor of lot 1 was entitled to carry on a range of activities from lot 1 or any other area over which it had been granted rights of exclusive use. Those specified activities included the hiring of television sets, the conduct of the business of selling and letting the lots provided for in the plan, the business of providing service to ``partners'' (sic) in respect of the lots, and, under subclause (xii), ``any other related service or activity''. His Honour, in my view, reasonably observed that providing the PABX answering service ``would be of particular importance to the letting business''.

[34] Reference was made to s 37(2)(a) of the Act which empowers a body corporate to enter into an agreement with a proprietor of a lot for the provision of services by the body corporate to the lot or to the proprietor. But that provision was inapplicable here. That is because the provision of this service was potentially more broadly beneficial, to all proprietors. The provision of the agreement establishing the requirement was consistent with the by-law, on the basis expressed by his Honour.

[35] On the hearing of the appeal, the appellant again sought to advance a different case: not that the PABX service was not an activity authorised by the by-law, but that there was no by-law authorising its being paid for by the appellant. That case was not pleaded, and was not argued before the learned judge — as may be gathered from his reasons. I doubt it should be entertained for the first time on appeal. The by-law in terms authorises the body corporate to enter into reasonable agreements governing the provision of such services, and evidence may have borne on the reasonableness of a provision for recompense by the body corporate.

[36] In any case, the learned judge held, alternatively, that the provision, if invalid, could be severed. Mr Owen, whose evidence the judge in other respects accepted, said that had this provision become problematic, the respondents would not have quarrelled with its deletion (p 30). The finding of severability was in those circumstances, and in the alternative, justified (see para 41 below), so that this aspect of the appellant's challenge should also fail.

4. Granting of ``special privileges'' without authority/severance

The fourth and fifth contentions concern clauses 9.2 and 9.5 of the caretaking agreement, said to offend against s 30(7) of the Act. That subsection provides that in certain circumstances a body corporate may make a by- law conferring, on the proprietor of a lot, ``special privileges in respect of the whole or any part of the common property...''. These two provisions of the agreement had that effect.

[37] Clause 9.2 of the agreement is in these terms:

> ``The Body Corporate will not interfere with, hinder or compete with the Resident Caretaker in the running or operation of the Resident Caretaker's Business or any part thereof and without limiting the generality of the foregoing the Body Corporate will not lease, agree to lease, grant a licence or agree to grant a licence in respect of any part of the Common Property and will not enter into any agreement with or permit any person (other than the Resident Caretaker) to provide for any service or activity which the Resident Caretaker may or is obliged to perform under this Agreement.''

[38] Clause 9.5 says:

> ``The Body Corporate covenants with the Resident Caretaker that should any person other than the Resident Caretaker use or attempt to use any part of the building for the purpose of conducting a business or rendering a service in the nature of the Resident Caretaker's Business (or any part thereof) or in competition with the Resident Caretaker in respect of any service or activity provided under this Agreement then it will at its own expense take all practicable steps to bring about the immediate termination of that use.''

[39] Contrary to the requirement of s 30(7), there was not, at any material time, a by-law which would authorise the body corporate to grant such ``special privileges''. So much was common ground. The learned judge held, however, that the provisions could be severed from the agreement, leaving the balance enforceable.

[40] His Honour made the following findings:

> ``Mr Owen, giving evidence on behalf of the (respondents), regarded these privileges as of no moment. The letting of the lots other than Lot 1 was to tourists on short stay, typically let for a period less than one week. The likelihood of business competition in a resort of only nine units, to quote Mr Owen, was `irrelevant' and `immaterial'. Naturally, the privilege expressed in clause 9.5 was similarly regarded.

> Clauses 9.2 and 9.5 appear to me to have little relevance to the situation that existed at these premises. In larger resorts such a clause may have some importance and for that reason has probably become a standard provision in agreements of this kind."

[41] The learned judge referred to Humphries & Anor v The Proprietors of ``Surfers Palms North'' Group Title Plan 1955 (1992-4) 179 CLR 597, and McHugh J's reference to the general test for severability laid down by Jordan CJ in McFarlane v Daniell (1938) 38 SR (NSW) 337, and additionally, as particularly relevant, to the observation by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Carney v Herbert (1985) AC 301, 310 that in the case of ``an ancillary provision which is illegal but exists for the exclusive benefit of the plaintiff'', ``the court may and probably will, if the justice of the case so requires, and there is no public policy objection, permit the plaintiff if he so wishes to enforce the contract without the illegal provision''.

[42] As his Honour concluded:

> ``Clauses 9.2 and 9.5 are clearly for the exclusive benefit of the (respondents). But the (respondents) see no worth in either clause and none was expressly identified by the (appellant). The severing of these clauses would make no perceptible change to the general nature of the agreement.
>
> In conclusion, with clauses 9.2 and 9.5 deleted I have come to the view that the caretaking agreement is enforceable."

[140254]

[43] That reasoning is, with respect, unexceptionable. The respondents alternatively contended, on the appeal, that the appellant is estopped from raising the unlawfulness of the agreement in those respects. But because of the view I take on subsequent issues, there is no need for me to express any conclusion about that.

[44] Acceptance of repudiation.

The appellant's challenge proceeded to the learned judge's finding that the appellant repudiated the agreement, the respondents' acceptance of that repudiation effectually terminating the agreement. Relying on DTR Nominees Pty Ltd v Mona Homes Pty Ltd (1977-8) 138 CLR 423, 431-2, the appellant submitted that the respondents' contention that the agreement was valid in its entirety precluded their terminating the agreement, its having been found partly invalid, in reliance on any repudiatory conduct on the part of the appellant: the respondents, it was submitted, were, by holding to that position, themselves in breach, with the consequence that they could not rely on the appellant's contention that the agreement was wholly invalid, as amounting to repudiation.

[45] It is trite law that a party who is not ready willing and able to perform a contract is not entitled to terminate for the other party's breach (DTR, supra, p 433; Foran v Wight (1989) NSW ConvR ¶55-491; (1989) 168 CLR 385, 398-402, 451; Segacious Pty Ltd v Fabrellas [1991] 1 QdR 471, 478).

[46] On any reasonable view, the appellant's conduct was repudiatory, in that it evinced in clear, express terms an intention not to be bound by the caretaking agreement. The contrary position maintained by the respondents was marginally in error, in light of the learned judge's conclusions. But especially in view of the evidence of Mr Owen which the judge accepted, there is no reason for not thinking that had the unlawfulness of clauses 9.2 and 9.5 been established prior to the appellant's repudiation, the respondents would readily have conceded that position in the interests of maintaining the balance of the agreement in which they had a real interest. So far as the respondents were concerned, the case comfortably falls within the following situation as described by the High Court in DTR (p 432):

> ``... there are other cases in which a party, though asserting a wrong view of a contract because he believes it to be correct, is willing to perform the contract according to its tenor. He may be willing to recognise his heresy once the true doctrine is enunciated or he may be willing to accept an authoritative exposition of the correct interpretation. In either event an intention to repudiate the contract could not be attributed to him."

The position with the appellant was, by contrast, plainly repudiatory.

[47] Termination under s 50(9) Building Units and Group Titles Act.

The appellant's resolution of 3 April 1997 was in terms that the caretaking agreement be terminated ``pursuant to s 50(9) of the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980''. That subsection provides:

> ``Notwithstanding any agreement between a body corporate and a body corporate manager, there shall be implied in the agreement or instrument of appointment of a body corporate manager appointed pursuant to this section who is the body corporate manager at the expiration of a period of 3 years from the date of the first annual general meeting of the body corporate a term that the body corporate, within 30 days after the expiration of that period, may terminate the body corporate manager's appointment as body corporate manager.''

[48] The first annual general meeting of the body corporate was held on 7 March 1994. The appellant accordingly submitted that it was entitled to terminate within 30 days after the third anniversary of that meeting, and that it did so.

[49] The learned judge declined to entertain this argument, in view of the way the case had been conducted. He made the following observations:

> ``Counsel, on behalf of the body corporate, submitted (presumably seeking a finding from me) that... the body corporate was entitled to terminate the agreement without penalty and without giving reasons 30 days after the third anniversary of the original meeting on 7 March, 1994. That is not a matter which was raised on the pleadings nor in the statement of issues which was presented to me by consent at the commencement of the trial. The factual question of whether this agreement was
>
> [140255]
>
> [140255]
> indeed one which came within the purview of s. 50 was not canvassed in the evidence. In those circumstances it would not be appropriate for me to make a determination on that issue first raised in addresses. I do however note the consideration by the Court of Appeal of a similar argument in Humphries...''

[50] While the issue was mentioned during addresses, it was not mentioned in the context of any acceptance by the learned judge that it was an issue truly arising in the case. Counsel for the appellant submitted on appeal that the issue was raised in precise terms in the pleadings. The only reference to the section in the pleadings is to be found in paragraph 21 of the amended statement of claim, where the respondents pleaded the terms of the resolution of 3 April 1997. That was insufficient to raise the matter for determination. It fell to the appellant to plead this matter distinctly by way of defence, if it wished to rely upon it. There was no application before his Honour for leave to amend. The important question whether the caretaking agreement fell within s 50, in view of the Court of Appeal's analysis in Humphries, Appeal 105/1992, 29 October 1992, unreported, was not canvassed before his Honour, and embraced factual as well as legal considerations. No ground has been shown which would warrant departing from the learned judge's approach to this aspect of the matter.

[51] I may add that it seems highly unlikely that this caretaking agreement fell within the purview of s 50, which concerns agreements between bodies corporate and body corporate managers, characterised by the delegation to the body corporate manager of the body corporate's powers. On the hearing of the appeal, we were taken to evidence (p 650) of a resolution, apparently as contemplated by s 50(1), authorising an agreement between the body corporate and another entity as ``body corporate manager'', an agreement which subsisted throughout the period of this caretaking agreement.

[52] I set out the terms of that resolution:

> ``That Cairns Strata Management (herein called `the manager') be appointed as the Body Corporate Manager of the Body Corporate `Be-Bees Tropical Apartments' in Building Units Plan No 71593 and that the common seal be affixed to an instrument in writing pursuant to the provisions of Section 50(1) of the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980-1990 appointing the manager and delegating all the powers authorities, duties and functions of the Body Corporate and its committee and the chairman, secretary and treasurer of the committee and of the Body Corporate, other than the power to make a decision on a restricted matter within the meaning of Section 46 and the power to make a delegation under Section 50(1) at a cost of $1,300.00 per annum in the first year for a period of three years from 7th March 1994 as per the attached agreement."

[53] That strongly suggests this caretaking agreement was of a different species, with s 50 inapplicable.

Damages

[54] There was separate challenge to his Honour's not having made findings in relation to damages. The judge remitted the assessment of damages to the District Court. He made clear from the outset that he would follow that course. What loss can be established will fall for determination in the District Court. It was not necessary for his Honour to make further findings in that area.

[55] Mr Savage submitted that because certain matters of principle may have to be resolved as part of that process, it was not properly styled an ``assessment of damage''. Assessments not uncommonly, indeed usually, involve determination of both factual and legal issues, passing beyond mere arithmetic computation. His Honour's course was in my view appropriate, even though another judge may have felt it expeditious to resolve the whole matter, comprehensively, at once.

Costs

[56] There is no ground on which this court should interfere with his Honour's exercise of discretion in relation to costs. It was appropriate that the costs of determining these issues, concerning the validity of this agreement and its termination, follow the event. As pointed out by Mr Carrigan, who appeared for the respondents, the learned judge effectively determined the issue of liability separately from and in advance of any determination on issues of quantum. His determination concluded the proceedings in this court. There is no reason why those costs need not have followed the event. The determination of who should bear those costs need not in my view have awaited the outcome on damages, or been substantially influenced by the quantum of any damages awarded.

[57] We were informed that when the learned judge pronounced his judgment on 23 March 2000, which included the costs order, the parties made further submissions in writing in relation to costs. Mr Savage informed us that the judge did not subsequently communicate with the parties. If that is so, it would obviously have been better had the parties been expressly informed of the outcome. But it must be taken that having considered the further submissions, the judge determined not to vary the costs order made on 23 March. It fell to the solicitors for the appellant to make inquiry of the judge's associate if in doubt as to whether the judge had considered the further material, or as to the outcome.

Orders

[58] I would order that the appeal be dismissed, with costs to be assessed. I would also order, as sought by Mr Carrigan pursuant to s 124 of the Act, that the costs so payable by the appellant be paid only by the proprietors of lots 2-10 inclusive.

Chesterman J: I agree with the Chief Justice that, for the reasons given by his Honour, the appeal should be dismissed. I wish to add some brief observations on one point.

[60] The distinction drawn by the Chief Justice between the obligation found in s 37(1) of the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 (``the Act'') to:

> ``... properly maintain and keep in a state of good and serviceable repair (including, where reasonably necessary, renew or replace the whole or part thereof)—
>
> (1) the common property;
> (2) any fixture or fitting... on the common property...'' and the obligation imposed on the respondents by the care-taking agreement to clean walls and surfaces and to remove rubbish, is correct.

[61] An understanding of what is meant by maintaining and keeping the common property, its fixtures and fittings, in a state of good and serviceable repair is assisted by s 38(4), (5) and (6) and s 38A(2) of the Act.

These first mentioned provisions oblige a body corporate to establish and maintain a sinking fund the money in which may be used to discharge the liabilities referred to in s 38A(2). These are:

> ``(a) painting or treating of any part of the common property which is a structure... for the preservation and appearance of the common property; and
> (b)...
>
> (c)...
> (d) the renewal or replacement pursuant to s 37 of parts of the... common property, fixtures and fittings which the body corporate is required... to maintain and keep in good and reasonable repair..."

There is obvious duplication between some of the activities in (a) and in (d).

[62] The Act contemplates that as part of maintaining the common property and keeping it in good repair a body corporate will have to renew or replace parts of it. There is a reference to such activity both in s 37(1)(c) as well as s 38A(2). This activity is to be funded inter alia from contributions paid regularly by the proprietors of lots. The repair and maintenance referred to in s 37 is clearly a more substantial operation than cleaning and tidying.

[63] The Concise Commercial Dictionary by Osborne & Grandage relevantly defines maintenance as:

> ``The keeping of fixed assets in good order to enable them to discharge the function for which they are required, eg premises plant and machinery."

An Engineering Contract Dictionary by Powell- Smith, Chappell & Simmonds define it as:

> ``The carrying on of or keeping up to a particular standard. In relation to civil engineering works, for example, the word may refer to the resurfacing of roads, in mechanical engineering works it would include the repair and possible replacement of pipe work and fittings over a period of time..."

The same work defines ``maintenance period", a term which appears in standard form building and engineering contracts, as the time after works are complete during which the contractor is to make good defects which appear in the newly built structure.

The underlying notion is that the function of maintenance of plant or equipment is to avert or remove defects which would prevent their functioning as intended.

[64] There is a passage in a judgment by Jessel MR in Sevenoaks Maidstone and Tunbridge Railway Co v London Chatham and Dover Railway Co (1879) 11 Ch D 625 at 634-5 which is to the same effect. The passage is lengthy but worth quoting in full because it gives flavour to the concept.

> ``It is very difficult to define what works of maintenance are. It is a very large term, and useful or reasonable ameliorations are not excluded by it. For instance, if a company had power to maintain the banks of a river which were faced in a particular way, could it be supposed that they were restricted under the words of maintenance to keeping up the banks in precisely the same way, when the mode which might have been very good when the banks were originally formed had been very much improved on by the subsequent advance of science? So where a railway company have to maintain a railway, I should not at all doubt that in maintaining it they might use any reasonable improvement. If, for instance, the railway were originally fenced with wooden palings, and it were sought when they decayed to replace them by an iron fence, I should say that was fully within their powers. If the railway originally was made in a deep cutting, and it was thought desirable to face the cutting with brick to make it more secure, I should say that was fair maintenance. And if a railway station were found inconvenient, and it was desirable when it required repairs to alter the arrangement of the rooms, or to alter the access or form of access, and so to ameliorate it at the same time that it was put in repair, I should say all that was within the powers of maintenance given by the Legislature; that is, you may maintain by keeping in the same state, or you may maintain by keeping the same state and improving the state, always bearing in mind that it must be maintenance as distinguished from alteration of purpose."

[65] Maintenance, so understood, is different in kind and degree from the services which the respondents had to perform in and about the reception area. Those services were concerned with the appearance of that part of the common property. They are not the activities which s 37(1)(c) of the Act compels a body corporate to undertake. Those activities are concerned to preserve the integrity of the physical structure of the common property. Accordingly payment for the services by the body corporate did not have to be the subject of a by-law. There is no substance in the appellant's point. The appeal should be dismissed.

Atkinson J: I agree with the orders proposed by de Jersey CJ and with His Honour's reasons.

Court citation: [2002] NSWSC 122

New South Wales Supreme Court

Judgment delivered 6 March 2002

Conveyancing — Contract for sale of land — Sale off-the-plan of unit in proposed Strata Plan — Special condition gave vendor right of rescission if Strata Plan not registered by specified date — Strata plan registered after specified date in contract — Whether vendor was entitled to rescind contract — Whether purchaser entitled to have contract for sale of land specifically performed.

By a contract for sale (``contract'') dated 8 October 1999 the vendor (``defendant'') agreed to sell and the purchasers (``plaintiffs'') agreed to buy a home unit for $720,000 in Sydney, NSW. The plaintiffs paid a deposit of $36,000. The home unit was described as Lot 3 in an unregistered plan, and incorporated a garage. The contract was on the 1996 edition contract form but Printed cl. 28 was deleted. Building plans were annexed.

Special Condition 37 provided, among other things:

> 37. REGISTRATION OF THE STRATA PLAN
> 37.1 Completion of this contract is conditional on and subject to registration of the Strata Plan with the Land Titles Office.
>
> [140258]
>
> [140258]
> 37.2 The vendor undertakes to use its reasonable endeavours to have the Strata Plan, registered. However, in the event that the Strata Plan is not registered by the expiration of the period specified in Schedule 1, then either party may, by notice in writing to the other, rescind this contract and the provisions of clause 19 will apply.

The period specified in Schedule 1 and referred to in cl. 37.2 was ``Date: 24 months from the date of this contract''.

The Strata Plan was not registered on or before 8 October 2001, and on 17 October 2001 Mr Luke McKenzie, the principal and the only director of the defendant, delivered a written notice of rescission to the plaintiffs. According to the terms of the notice, the deposit and all moneys paid to the defendant on account of variations made to the property at the plaintiff's request were to be repaid to the plaintiffs. It was an agreed fact that the Strata Plan was registered on 5 November 2001.

Work on the home units were sufficiently advanced by 14 June 2001 for Mr Surveyor Paul Keen to then complete and certify a Strata Plan, and on 3 July 2001 the defendant applied to Pittwater Council for development consent for development consisting of subdivision of the building into strata units in accordance with the plan. There were two applications, or so the application was treated: for approval of the Strata Plan and for subdivision. These events show that very little building work can have remained to be performed as of 3 July 2001. However an Occupation Certificate had not been issued, which was required by Council before it could give development consent relating to the Strata Plan. Early in July 2001 Mr McKenzie told Mr Munro, the second plaintiff, ``The building is ready to occupy. It may take a few weeks to get the Strata Plan registered. You can move in under licence and pay $200 a week rent until completion''.

With the permission of the defendant they moved belongings to Unit 3 on 19 July 2001, and they took up occupation of Unit 3 on 25 July 2001. The defendant and the plaintiffs made an agreement in writing on 25 July 2001 under which the defendant agreed to allow the plaintiffs to have possession before completion for residential purposes for the weekly licence fee of $1000, but the licensor to accept $200 per week if completion took place on or before the completion date set out in the contract.

On 1 August 2001 Mr Dunbar, an officer of Pittwater Council, telephoned Mr McKenzie and said to the effect that Mr Dunbar required the final Occupation Certificate to be submitted for consideration, and required the restriction on occupation to persons over 55 years and disabled persons to go on the title. The Occupation Certificate was sent to the Council on 13 August 2001, by which time it appears that the restriction had been created.

Mr McKenzie sent a message to Council on 3 August 2001 setting out the proposed restrictive covenant. A Council officer made a note on this message on 3 August saying ``Covenant needs to be approved by Council and incorporated into the Strata Plan prior to its submission to Registrar General, Land Titles for registration, all of which will only take place once occupation has been issued''.

On 29 August 2001, Mr Dunbar told Mr McKenzie that the council had problems with the applications as the roof over townhouse No. 1 was 220mm higher than provided for on the plan and that air-conditioning units placed in the gardens of some of the townhouses reduce the area of landscaping described in the approved plans. Mr McKenzie said to the effect that Council could presume that development had been constructed in accordance with the plans when an Occupation Certificate had been issued and Mr Dunbar said to the effect that Council was thinking of getting legal advice relating to the effect of an Occupation Certificate. Later, on 4 September 2001, Mr Dunbar informed Mr McKenzie that Council was considering refusing the applications on the above grounds and that the matter should go back to the Land and Environment Court where the plans were originally approved. Mr McKenzie argued that in the face of an Occupation Certificate Council should approve the application.

On 10 September, Mr McKenzie met with the plaintiffs and two other purchasers. Mr McKenzie informed them that the Council would not approve the Strata Plan and of the Council's reasons. He raised the difficulties of going back to the Land and Environment Court and the time and expense that that would involve and asked the purchasers to settle without strata title. He reminded the purchasers of his right to rescind the contracts if the Strata Plan was not registered by 8 October 2001. He offered to waive this right if the purchasers agreed to an immediate settlement.

The plaintiff's solicitors on 12 September 2001 declined the above proposal and stated that any attempt to rescind the contract would be resisted and that the plaintiffs expected the defendant to fulfil its obligations under the contract by taking all legal steps necessary to have the plan registered.

On 14 September 2001, the Mr McKenzie was informed that the Council was no longer concerned about the height issue but has problems with the planter box and landscaping issue. The defendant could lodge a bond to cover the construction of the planter box and additional planting around the aircon units that might allow the expedition of the approval of the Strata Plan.

Mr McKenzie first became aware that PhD Building Services had decided not to construct the planter box at the end of July 2001. On 18 September 2001, PhD Building Services paid the Council $3000 by bank cheque accompanied by a letter saying that that amount represented ``Bonds for additional landscaping required at the townhouse complex at the above address. We understand that the bond will be released once the additional planter box is in place. I trust that this will facilitate the early release of the strata title plan".

Construction of the planter box commenced on 3 October 2001 and was completed on the morning of 5 October 2001. Mr McKenzie also made arrangements for Mr Payne of BCA Logic to inspect the planter box which he did on the afternoon of 8 October 2001; then on 9 October 2001 he completed a certificate showing approval. Mr McKenzie collected the certificate on 10 October and Council's Development Consent for Development Application for Strata Plan subdivisions was dated 16 October 2001. The approval of the Strata Plan was collected on 17 October 2001. Thereafter Mr McKenzie arranged for its registration which (as earlier stated) took place on 5 November 2001.

On 17 October 2001, the defendant served on the plaintiffs two documents; a notice of rescission of the agreement for sale and a notice of rescission of the licence agreement.

On 25 October 2001, the plaintiffs claimed that they were entitled to have the agreement for sale of land specifically performed, and declarations establishing that the defendant failed to use reasonable endeavours to have the Strata Plan registered, that the defendant was not entitled to rescind the contract and that the notice of rescission was of no effect.

Held: for the plaintiffs; order for specific performance of the contract

1. The principle of restricting the right of rescission would prevent the defendant from exercising the right of rescission if breach of the undertaking to use reasonable endeavours to have the strata plan registered caused the strata plan not to be registered within the specified time: Plumor Pty Ltd v Handley (1996) 41 NSWLR 30.

2. The defendant's responsibility lay not with failures of the builder within the scope of his independence as a contractor but with the fulfilment of the defendant's own contractual duties under cl. 40.1 and cl. 37.2 to obtain performance by the builder of the work the builder was contracted to do.

3. The defendant also had a contractual obligation to the plaintiffs in Special Condition 40.1 to ensure the building was constructed in accordance with the building plan and in a good and workmanlike manner. If the defendant had complied with this Special Condition, the building would have been completed to the correct height before the application for development consent was made on 3 July 2001.

[140260]

4. The Strata Plan not being registered within the specified time was caused by breaches by the defendant of contractual obligations to the plaintiffs. As such, it was unreasonable of the defendant to exercise the purported right of rescission, and that right should be prevented by ordering specific performance of the contract.

Judgment in full below

Bryson J: The purchasers (the plaintiffs) challenge an exercise by the vendor (the defendant) of a right of rescission of a contract for the sale ``Off-the-Plan'' of a home unit where the Strata Plan was not registered within the period for which the contract provided.

2. By Contract dated 8 October 1999 the vendor agreed to sell and the purchasers agreed to buy home unit 3 at 2 Myola Street, Newport, for $720,000; and the purchasers then paid the agreed deposit of $36,000. The home unit was described as Lot 3 in an unregistered plan, and incorporated a garage. A building containing 5 units was to be built on part of Lot 24 Deposited Plan 7424, an irregularly shaped parcel at the northern intersection of Ross Street and Myola Street where there had formerly been a dwelling which was to be wholly redeveloped. The contract was on the 1996 edition contract form but Printed cl. 28 was deleted. Building plans were annexed.

3. Special Condition 40.1 provided:

``40. CONSTRUCTION OF BUILDING AND DEFECTS LIABILITY

40.1 The vendor will cause the Building to be constructed in accordance with the Building Plans and in a good and workmanlike manner and in accordance with all approvals, consents and requirements of all relevant Authorities.''

4. Special Condition 37 provided, among other things:

``37. REGISTRATION OF THE STRATA PLAN

37.1 Completion of this contract is conditional on and subject to registration of the Strata Plan with the Land Titles Office.

37.2 The vendor undertakes to use its reasonable endeavours to have the Strata Plan, registered. However, in the event that the Strata Plan is not registered by the expiration of the period specified in Schedule 1, then either party may, by notice in writing to the other, rescind this contract and the provisions of clause 19 will apply.''

5. The period specified in Schedule 1 and referred to in cl. 37.2 is ``Date: 24 months from the date of this contract''. Clause 37.3 contained the following subcl. (a):

> (a) The vendor reserves to itself the right to alter the dimensions, the position of the property, the unit entitlement of any lot or lots or the lot number of any lot or lots set out in the Building Plans, as is considered desirable by the vendor or as is required by any Authority.

Subclauses (b), (c) and (d) went on to limit the purchasers' remedies if there were alterations and to give the purchasers a qualified right of rescission (and there has been no attempt by the purchasers to rescind).

6. Clause 38 provided:

``38. COMPLETION DATE

Completion of this contract will take place on the later to occur of:

> (a) 42 days from the date of this contract; or
> (b) 14 days after the purchaser is notified in writing by the vendor that the Strata Plan has been registered with the Land Title [sic]Office.''

7. Printed cl. 21 relates to time limits in the provisions of the contract and includes the following:

``21.1 If the time for something to be done or to happen is not stated in these provisions, it is a reasonable time

...

21.6 Normally, the time by which something must be done is fixed but not essential.''

8. The requirement relating to a reasonable time in cl. 21.1 applies to the vendor's obligations to cause the building to be constructed (cl. 40.1) and to use reasonable endeavours to have the Strata Plan registered (cl. 37.2).

9. The Strata Plan was not registered on or before 8 October 2001, and on 17 October 2001 Mr Luke McKenzie, the principal and the only director of the defendant, delivered a written notice of rescission to the purchasers. According to the terms of the notice, the deposit and all moneys paid to the vendor on account of variations made to the property at the purchasers' request were to be repaid to the purchasers. It was an agreed fact that the Strata Plan was registered on 5 November 2001.

10. In the Summons issued on 25 October 2001 the purchasers claim a declaration that they were entitled to have the agreement for sale of land specifically performed and an order for specific performance, and declarations establishing that the defendant failed to use reasonable endeavours to have the Strata Plan registered, that the defendant was not entitled to rescind the contract and that the notice of rescission is of no effect. The purchasers claimed other relief: relief against forfeiture of their interest in the land and an injunction restraining interference with their actual possession of the home unit and ancillary orders. There were no pleadings and the issues appear from the parties' affidavits and from submissions at the hearing.

11. The vendor applied to Pittwater Council for approval of its Development Application late in 2000 and appealed to the Land and Environment Court when Pittwater Council had not determined the application. The Court approved the Development Application subject to conditions by its order of 22 February 2000. The conditions included the following:

> ``A(i) This consent is not an approval to commence building work and these works can only commence following the issue of a Construction Certificate.
>
> (ii) The use or occupation of this building shall not commence until an Occupation Certificate has been issued."

12. General Condition B was as follows:

> ``The development shall be carried out generally in accordance with plans numbered 99016, dated July 99, prepared by Marchese & Partners Architects Pty Ltd as amended in red in Court or as modified by any condition of this consent, the landscape plans prepared by N. Sonter and an amendment as contained in Exhibit S."

13. The plan referred to in General Condition B is the same plan as the building plan annexed to the Agreement for Sale of Land, although it had been amended in the course of the Court proceedings.

14. Condition C included the following:

> ``C6 A 1.2 m wide footpath is to be provided from the site along Ross Street to Bramley Avenue, giving access to shops and services and installed at the expense of the applicant.
> C7. A covenant is to be placed on the title of the property restricting occupation to persons who are over 55 years or disabled."

15. Condition F entitled ``Compliance Certificate" set out a number of conditions which must be complied with by the time of issue of the Compliance Certificate and one of which was:

> ``(8) A Survey Certificate prepared by a Registered Surveyor is to be submitted, confirming that the roof ridge complies with the levels shown on the approved plans. A copy of this Certificate is to be forwarded to the accredited certifier or Council, prior to installation of the roofing material (see copy of form available from Council)."

16. Condition G entitled ``Issue of Certificate of Occupation" stated many conditions which must be complied with by the issue of the Occupation Certificate including:

> ``G13 A restriction on use of the land is to be created on the title of any new lots, the terms of which burden the said lots, benefit Council and restrict the occupancy of the lot to persons defined in State Environment Planning Policy No. 5 as `older people' or `people with a disability'. All matters relating to this restriction on use of the land are to be finalised prior to release of the Occupation Certificate.
>
> G15 The building is not to be occupied or used until an Occupation Certificate has been issued, confirming that the project complies with the relevant standards and the conditions of development consent. The request for an Occupation Certificate is to be accompanied by a copy of all of the Compliance Certificates required by the > conditions of development consent (see copy of form available from Council)."

17. Condition D6 required submission of a detailed landscape plan before release of the Construction Certificate showing compliance with Council landscape policy, and Condition G8 required, as a condition for the issue of the Occupation Certificate, certification that site landscaping had been completed in accordance with the details shown in the approved landscape plan.

18. Condition J stated a number of supplementary conditions one of which was:

> ``J1 A footpath shall be constructed along the northern side of Ross Street from a point directly opposite the Ross Street driveway to the intersection of Ross Street and Bramley Lane. A kerb ramp is to be provided on Ross Street directly opposite the Ross Street driveway. These works are to be completed to Council's normal footpath and ramp specification prior to the issuance of a Certificate of Completion."

19. On 24 July 2000 BCA Logic Pty Ltd, Building Regulation and Fire Safety Engineers, by letter informed Pittwater Council that Stuart Boyce of that company had been engaged by Mr Luke McKenzie of the vendor to act as Accredited Certifying Authority to issue the Construction Certificate for the development and to act in the role of Principal Certifying Authority. The letter stated that all conditions of the Court Order that needed to be satisfied prior to the issue of the Construction Certificate had then been met, and enclosed [the] Construction Certificate.

20. Construction then proceeded, but there is little evidence establishing the rate of progress or the dates of particular events until what can be understood from a fax message dated 23 April 2001 from PhD Building Services, the vendor's builder, to BCA Logic, asking for review of a proposed location of the Ross Street footpath referred to in Condition J1. PhD Building Services set out some details of the proposed construction of footpath and said ``Time is running out and I need to build it. Please investigate and confirm ASAP."

21. The footpath so required by Condition J1 was not on the development site but was on land dedicated as a road and owned by Pittwater Council, on the opposite side of Ross Street. This raised some question about the authority of the Private Certifier to deal with that part of the works. Whatever difficulties existed, they were overcome and the construction of the footpath proceeded.

22. The concerns raised on 24 April 2001 seem to show that the progress of work on the development was well advanced. The evidence of Mr Luke McKenzie is that at April 2001 the works had not reached practical completion and several major items of work and numerous other miscellaneous items had not been completed.

23. Work was sufficiently advanced by 14 June 2001 for Surveyor Mr Paul Keen to then complete and certify a Strata Plan, and on 3 July 2001 the vendor applied to Pittwater Council for development consent for development consisting of subdivision of the building into strata units in accordance with the plan. There were two applications, or so the application was treated: for approval of the Strata Plan and for subdivision. These events show that very little building work can have remained to be performed as of 3 July 2001. However an Occupation Certificate had not been issued, and Mr McKenzie knew that Council would require an Occupation Certificate before it could give development consent relating to the Strata Plan. Early in July 2001 Mr McKenzie told Mr Munro, the second plaintiff, ``The building is ready to occupy. It may take a few weeks to get the Strata Plan registered. You can move in under licence and pay $200 a week rent until completion." Mr Munro replied ``We will agree to that". On 16 July the vendor's solicitor told the purchaser's solicitor in answer to enquiry that the Strata Plan would be registered perhaps late in August.

24. The purchasers previously lived in a home unit in Narrabeen; they entered into an agreement to sell that home unit on 24 May 2001 and came under an obligation to settle that sale on 23 July 2001; they in fact completed the sale on that day. With the permission of the vendor they moved belongings to Unit 3 on 19 July 2001, and they took up occupation of Unit 3 on 25 July 2001. The vendor and the purchasers made an agreement in writing on 25 July 2001 under which the vendor agreed to allow the purchasers to have possession before completion for residential purposes for the weekly licence fee of $1000, but the licensor to accept $200 per week if completion took place on or before the completion date set out in the contract. It is doubtful whether the licence agreement had any legal effect as there was no Occupation Certificate and occupation was a breach of Condition G15 of development consent; however no question of illegality was in issue before me and the vendor terminated the licence on 17 October 2001. There can have been very little work remaining to be done, if there was any, when the vendor was prepared to license the purchasers to go into possession.

25. During July Mr McKenzie made many attempts to speak by telephone to Mr Trevor Dunbar, an officer of Pittwater Council, about the application. On 1 August 2001 Mr Dunbar telephoned him and said to the effect that Mr Dunbar required the final Occupation Certificate to be submitted for consideration, and required the restriction on occupation to persons over 55 years and disabled persons to go on the title. Mr McKenzie said to the effect that he expected the Occupation Certificate to be completed soon and ``I will send it to you today or tomorrow.'' He also said that he would get the s. 88B instrument to Mr Dunbar straight away. (The s. 88B instrument would when registered create the restrictive covenant required by Conditions C7 and G13.) In fact the Occupation Certificate was sent to the Council by BCA Logic on 13 August 2001, by which time it appears that the restriction under s. 88B had been created.

26. The vendor sent a message to Council on 3 August 2001 setting out the proposed restrictive covenant. Mr Ross Payne, a Council officer made a note on this message on 3 August saying ``Covenant needs to be approved by Council and incorporated into the Strata Plan prior to its submission to Registrar General, Land Titles for registration, all of which will only take place once occupation has been issued. The above addresses Condition C7 of the original Land and Environment Court Order No. 10743 of 1999.''

27. No evidence deals in detail with events in bringing the s. 88B instrument into existence and registering it but insofar as the vendor's evidence can be understood, these events happened between 1 and 13 August 2001. No evidence suggested there was ever any difficulty in creating the restriction, or explains why its creation was not attended to until prompted by Mr Dunbar although it was a necessary condition for issue of the Occupation Certificate which in turn was a necessary condition for development consent for the Strata Plan. In my finding the preparation of the s. 88B instrument and its registration could have been attended to before 3 July when the application for development consent was lodged, just as the Strata Plan was prepared before then, or could have been attended to at about that time when the need presented itself to obtain an Occupation Certificate to support the application for development consent.

28. The Newport Progress Association wrote to Council on 17 August seeking information about the Development. However the next event in Council's consideration of which evidence speaks is a conversation between Mr Dunbar and Mr McKenzie about 29 August 2001. Mr Dunbar said to Mr McKenzie, among other things, to the following effect: ``Council has difficulties with the applications. The roof over townhouse No. 1 is 220mm higher than provided for on the plan. This is identified in the material supplied with the Occupation Certificate by BCA Logic to Council. Also the air-conditioning units placed in the gardens of some of the townhouses reduce the area of landscaping described in the approved plans. '' Mr McKenzie said to the effect that Council could presume that development had been constructed in accordance with the plans when an Occupation Certificate had been issued and Mr Dunbar said to the effect that Council was thinking of getting legal advice relating to the effect of an Occupation Certificate.

29. The problem relating to the height of the roof became known to the vendor about March 2001 as a result of a survey of the partly built building as required by Condition F8; this was pointed out to BCA Logic, apparently by the builder, and BCA Logic said that it should be indicated within one or two weeks that it would not prevent a Certificate of Occupation. BCA Logic specifically addressed the non- compliance in the height of the roof, referred to it in an attachment to the Occupation Certificate and must be taken to have decided that the non- compliance was not significant. (This is the position that Council officers eventually reached, and it appears to be a reasonable position.) The problem was not inherently important, but it was a cause of delay, and if the building had been constructed in accordance with the plan there would not have been any such problem.

30. After 29 August Mr McKenzie endeavoured to further Council's obtaining legal advice about the effect of the Occupation Certificate, and over some days he had conversations with Council officers and the Council's solicitor. In one of these conversations, on 4 September 2001, Mr Dunbar said to Mr McKenzie to this effect ``The Council is considering refusing the application because of the roof issue and the landscaping issue. The Council officers feel the matter should go back to the Land and Environment Court for resolution because the plans were approved by the Court and in the circumstances where there is a departure from those plans that should be dealt with by the Court''. Mr McKenzie again put his view that in the face of an Occupation Certificate Council should approve the application.

31. Mr McKenzie also retained Mr David Tow, a Consultant Town Planner to represent the vendor in negotiations with Pittwater Council to get the applications approved. Mr Tow gave some attention to those negotiations on and after 4 September, speaking to Council officers and also to solicitors who had earlier acted for the vendor in the Land and Environment Court proceedings; Mr McKenzie did not favour proceedings in the Land and Environment Court which would involve some months' delay and also significant expense. Mr Tow spoke to Mr Lindsay Dyce who was Pittwater Council's Manager, Planning and Assessment.

32. On 10 September a meeting with Mr McKenzie took place, which was attended by the purchasers Mr and Mrs Munro, by Mr and Mrs Williams who were the purchasers of Unit 2, and by Mr and Mrs Morgan, who were the purchasers of Unit 4. Mr McKenzie told them to the effect that he called the meeting to tell them that the Council would not approve the Strata Plan; he referred to Council's relying on the roof of Unit 1 being 220mm above the plan height and on the air-conditioning units taking up landscape space; he reviewed the difficulties of going back to the Land and Environment Court and the time and expense that that would involve and asked the purchasers to settle without strata title. He said ``I remind you all that under cl. 37 of the Contract I can rescind if the Strata Plan isn't registered within two years. However I will give this right up if there is an immediate settlement if you agree to settle now and make the cheques payable to National Australia Bank. I am not saying this as a threat but I will use this clause if necessary either to complete settlement or cancel the contracts.'' The Munros did not agree.

33. The vendor circulated to the various purchasers including the Munros an Information Memorandum dated 11 September 2001 reviewing the difficulties which Mr McKenzie then saw, stating that he would apply to the Land and Environment Court that week, referring to cl. 37 which he called ``a Sunset Clause'' and saying ``I will agree to the removal of the `Sunset Clause' from the contracts if you agree to settle now.'' He went on to say that he would create a company title structure and he would continue action to register the Strata Plan after which each townhouse would be converted from company title to strata title. He went on to discuss the stamp duty which this would incur and attendant difficulties. The purchasers' solicitors on 12 September 2001 declined his proposal and said among other things ``Any attempt by your client to rescind the contract would be resisted'' and ``Our clients expect the vendor to fulfil its obligations under the contract by taking all legal steps necessary to have the plan registered.''

34. In a conversation with Mr Dyce on 14 September 2001 Mr Dyce told Mr Tow to this effect: ``Council is no longer concerned about the height issue and accepts that it was a minor variation of little consequence. However, a new issue has come to light. This is the non construction of the planter box.'' Mr Dyce also said ``If Bodrex lodges a bond to cover the construction of the planter box and additional planting around the aircon units, I may be able to expedite the approval of the Strata Plan. You should speak to Trevor Dunbar, sort out the details of the bond and its payment.''

35. Mr Tow reported this conversation to Mr McKenzie who then, also on 14 September, telephoned Mr Dunbar and discussed the amount of the bond and means of payment. He said to the effect that it would cost $2,500 to build the planter box and that Bodrex would pay a bond of $3000 which Mr Dunbar said would be sufficient. Mr McKenzie reported this arrangement to Mr Munro, also on 14 September. Mr McKenzie's account of this conversation is that he said to this effect: ``Agreement has been reached with the Council to pay a bond for the construction of the planter box between townhouses 4 and 5. The Council said they would approve the Strata Plan if the bond is paid on Monday.'' Mr Munro's affidavit gives a different account, that Mr McKenzie said to the following effect: ``Council would issue the Strata Plan if we build a planter box between units 4 and 5. They offered me a bond but wanted all sorts of money which I was not prepared to pay. I said `I'll build it myself' and they said `If it were built we'd issue the plan on Monday'." Mr McKenzie's evidence is that it was not until about 27 or 28 September that he reported to Mr Munro to the effect that Council had agreed to approve the Strata Plan if Bodrex built the planter box between townhouses 4 and 5. The most significant point of difference in these two accounts is that, according to Mr Munro, Mr McKenzie was already speaking of a proposal actually to build the planter box on 14 September. Mr Munro's account is substantially supported by his contemporaneous diary note.

36. The omission of the planter box is explained in evidence only by a letter from PhD Building Services to BCA Logic dated 3 August 2001 in relation to the Occupation Certificate. The letter said ``With reference to planter box detail Unit 5 1st floor balcony above garage. Due to perceived structural and waterproofing problems in the long term with placing this particular planter box in the location indicated, it was decided that it would be more prudent to delete this item and replace it with planter boxes/pot plant in lieu of, to be supplied by purchasers at a later date."

37. Mr McKenzie first became aware that PhD Building Services had decided not to construct the planter box at the end of July 2001. It was Mr McKenzie's evidence that the absence of the planter box was drawn to Council's attention in documentation which accompanied the Occupation Certificate (t.11). Mr Dunbar told Mr McKenzie, at some time after 15 August, to the effect that Mr Dunbar and a Council officer concerned with landscaping had inspected the site and observed that the landscaping plan had not been adhered to. Although the attachments to the Occupation Certificate are not all in evidence, it was Mr McKenzie's belief that the Occupation Certificate did not point out this non- compliance.

38. By a letter dated 14 September 2000 Mr McKenzie writing for Bodrex Pty Ltd said to Mr Dyce ``... I am able to provide the following undertakings:

> (a) A planter box would be constructed on the decking above the garage of Unit 5, in accordance with plans approved by the Land and Environment Court;
> (b) Additional screen planting will be provided around air-conditioning units that have been placed in garden beds.
> These works will be completed within 1 week of this letter."

He went on to refer to the provision by the builder of $3000 to be held until the works outlined were complete and asked that Council issue a strata plan. Pittwater Council did not make a written response, and Mr McKenzie's evidence seems to show that he regarded himself as having an arrangement for Council to accept a deposit of $3000, and for Council then to issue the strata plan. The terms of the letter of 14 September assist acceptance of Mr Munro's account of what he says Mr McKenzie told him on 14 September.

39. As the undertaking which it was said in the letter of 14 September the vendor was in a position to give was not accepted, it did not have any standing as an undertaking, but the offer of an undertaking does admit and demonstrate that it was then possible to complete the work within a week. If it was possible to complete the work in a week then, it had been possible to complete the work within a week at earlier times.

40. I accept that Mr McKenzie was already considering and speaking to Mr Munro of a proposal actually to construct the planter box between units 4 and 5 as early as 14 September; he may well also have been speaking to a similar effect on 27 or 28 September. Although this difference in the evidence of the protagonists was treated at the hearing as if it was of considerable importance, I do not see it as important.

41. Mr McKenzie gave an explanation in oral evidence of his not having proceeded to carry out the works within one week of the letter of 14 September to the effect that Mr Tow and Mr McKenzie formed the view that having paid the bond was as good as having built the works and the application should go to Council on 8 October in that state. In my finding this is not a reasonable explanation for not proceeding to construct the planter box and provide the additional screen planting soon after 14 September; and indeed there has been no reasonable explanation for their not having been constructed long before that date as an ordinary part of the building process.

42. The builder PhD Building Services paid the Council $3000 by bank cheque accompanied by a letter of 18 September 2001 saying that that amount represented ``Bonds for additional landscaping required at the townhouse complex at the above address. We understand that the bond will be released once the additional planter box is in place. I trust that this will facilitate the early release of the strata title plan."

43. Mr Tow continued to seek to facilitate matters by communicating with Council officers. Mr McKenzie urged the purchasers including Mr and Mrs Munro to make representations for the Council in favour of approving the application. On 26 September Mr Dunbar made an internal report to Mr Lindsay Dyce; he said to the effect that there were two main areas of variation/departure from the court approved plan and development consent being the increase in the roof height and ``2. deficiencies in level of planting of approved landscape plan and omission of terrace planter box from Unit 5 (unit fronting Ross Street)". He reported that the increase in the overall roof height was considered acceptable and that it would be difficult to discern any appreciable impact of the increase in roof height. He also reported ``Item 2 is acceptable in terms of the number of plants provided being adequate and the prescribed/detailed number of plantings on the approved landscape plan being unachievable for the areas available. The omission of the planter to the 1st floor terrace of Unit 5 is not considered to be acceptable. The reasons provided for the omission of the planter are not considered justification for the omission. The provision of smaller planters in similar locations (decks over garages) has been undertaken for Units 2 & 3. It is considered appropriate that the planter detail upon the Court approved plans for the roof terrace of Unit 5 be provided." Mr Dunbar went on to report on the payment of the $3000 bond as an undertaking for the works to be completed.

44. Mr McKenzie had a conversation with Mr Dyce on 27 September. Mr Dyce was then unreceptive to arrangements involving a bond and said ``If the planter box is completed prior to 8 October 2001 the applications can proceed to the meeting of the Councillors on that day." On the following day 28 September Mr Tow spoke to Mr Dyce who said to the effect ``I am prepared to approve the application by way of delegation if the planter box is constructed and the additional planting around the air-condition units is done. The matter no longer needs to go before a Council meeting. Trevor Dunbar will not be able to approve the planter box and Bodrex's private certifier should do this. "

45. Mr McKenzie then arranged for construction of the planter box to be completed by PhD Building Services. In Mr McKenzie's evidence, his decision to move towards actually constructing the planter box was a response to a suggestion made by Mr Dyce on 27 September 2001 that an appropriate amount for a bond was $15,000 to $20,000. Construction of the planter box commenced on 3 October 2001, and although there is a conflict of evidence my finding is that it was completed on the morning of 5 October 2001. Mr McKenzie also made arrangements for Mr Payne of BCA Logic to inspect the planter box which it seems he did on the afternoon of 8 October 2001; then on 9 October 2001 he completed a certificate showing approval.

46. BCA Logic's letter of 9 October certified that the planter box originally proposed for the upper terrace to Unit 5, omitted from the original construction, together with the provision of screen planting adjacent to a number of pad-mounted air-conditioning units, installed late in the original construction program and located in the garden edge adjacent to each unit, had been inspected; the planter box was considered to have been constructed in accordance with the original proposal and to be structurally adequate and the planting when fully developed should provide an adequate screen to the units.

47. Mr McKenzie collected the certificate on 10 October and arranged for a further enquiry by Mr Dunbar relating to waterproofing the planter box to be answered by the builder. There were further communications. Council's Development Consent for Development Application for Strata Plan subdivisions was dated 16 October 2001. The approval of the Strata Plan was collected on 17 October 2001. Thereafter Mr McKenzie arranged for its registration which (as earlier stated) took place on 5 November 2001.

48. On 17 October 2001 Mr McKenzie served on Mr and Mrs Munro two documents; a notice of rescission of the agreement for sale and a notice of rescission of the licence agreement. The claim to rescind the agreement for sale led to the issue of the summons on 25 October.

49. Restrictions on exercise of rights of rescission recurringly come under consideration in contracts for the sale ``Off-the-Plan'' of dwellings in proposed strata developments. The contractual terms are the primary source of any supposed restriction, and an apparent right of rescission may be restricted by implied terms to be discerned on the whole view of the parties' contract, or by the application to them of implications arising under general contract law of kinds illustrated by the following passage in Peters (WA) Ltd v Petersville Ltd (2001) 75 ALJR 1385 at 1393 [36] ``The law already implies an obligation by the respondents to do all such things as are necessary on their part to enable Peters WA to have the benefit of those licence arrangements Butt v. McDonald (1896) 7 QLJ 68 at 70-71; Secured Income Real Estate (Australia) Ltd v St Martins Investments Pty Ltd (1979) 144 CLR 596 at 607-608. It is not now necessary to consider the basis of the implication. The law also implies a negative covenant not to hinder or prevent the fulfilment of the purpose of the express promises made in Art. 5 Shepherd v. Felt & Textile of Australia Ltd (1931) 45 CLR 359 at 378''.

50. Important statements about the principles involved were made in Plumor Pty Ltd v. Handley (1996) 41 NSWLR 30 (McLelland CJ in Eq). At 34C-E his Honour made observations showing the need for a sufficient causal relation between a breach by the party rescinding of a contractual obligation on that party and the happening of the event giving rise to a right of rescission, unless the parties' contract made performance of the obligation a condition of the exercise of the right of rescission. At 34E-G McLelland CJ in Eq said:

> ``The plaintiff's third submission is based on the proposition that in addition to the express obligation to apply for the requisite `consent' within twenty-four hours of the date of the contract, special condition 28 imposed on the defendant an implied obligation to take all reasonable steps available to him to obtain that `consent' within the stipulated fourteen day period. That proposition is undoubtedly correct: see, eg, Butts v O'Dwyer (1952) 87 CLR 267 at 279-280. If the failure by the defendant to obtain `consent' within the fourteen day period resulted from any default by him in the performance of either his express or implied obligations, then the defendant was not entitled to exercise the right of rescission of the contract otherwise available to him under special condition 28: see Suttor v Gundowda Pty Ltd (1950) 81 CLR 418 at 440-443 applying New Zealand Shipping Co Ltd v Societe des Ateliers et Chantiers de France [1919] AC 1. This is an application of the principle that a party to a contract is not entitled, as against the other party, to rely on an event resulting from the first party's wrongful act. The history of that principle was, in New Zealand Shipping Co (at 7-8 and 12), traced back to a passage in Coke Upon Littleton (at par 206b): see also Alghussein Establishment v Eton College [1988] 1 WLR 587 at 591-594.''

51. In my opinion this statement of the law is applicable to the rights of the vendor to rescind under Special Condition 37.2. The principle referred to in the passage cited prevents the vendor from exercising the right of rescission if breach of the undertaking to use reasonable endeavours to have the strata plan registered caused the strata plan not to be registered within the specified time. So too, if breach of the vendor's obligation in cl. 40.1 to cause the building to be constructed and to do so in a reasonable time caused the strata plan not to be registered within the specified time. So too would any other breach of the vendor's contractual obligations which caused that result.

52. Another important subject dealt with in the same judgment is the onus of proof; see in Plumor v Handley p. 35A to 36B, particularly the concluding observation at 36 ``... the onus of proof on the issue of whether the non- obtaining of the requisite consent or advice within the period stipulated in special condition 28 resulted from a breach by the defendant of his contractual obligations, rests on the plaintiff''. In other words, the relevant principle can be briefly formulated as: ``Non-fulfilment of a condition will justify rescission unless it is proved to be self-induced'', rather than as: ``Non-fulfilment of the condition will not justify a rescission unless it is proved not to be self-induced''.

53. In Hunyor & Anor v. Tilelli (1997) 8 BPR [97667] 15,629 at 15,631 McLelland CJ in Eq referred to this passage and also said ``It is necessary however to bear in mind that all evidence is to be weighed according to the proof which it was reasonably within the means of one party to produce or of the other to contradict. This has particular significance in respect of evidentiary facts which are peculiarly within the knowledge of one party rather than the other, see eg: Apollo Shower Screens Pty Ltd & Anor v. Building and Construction Industry Longer Service Payments Corporation (1985) 1 NSWLR 561 at 565-6".

54. McLelland CJ in Eq on p 15,631 stated a further important matter frequently calling for consideration as follows: ``For the purpose of considering the question of the defendant's default, the knowledge, acts and omissions of the defendant's solicitors or other agents, in that capacity, are to be attributed to the defendant (see CSS Investments Pty Ltd v Lopiron Pty Ltd [1987] 76 ALR 463 at 474-5), although the knowledge, acts and omissions of independent contractors otherwise than in the capacity of agents for the defendant are not to be so attributed: see Woodcock v. Parlby Investments Pty Ltd (1988) 4 BPR 97301". In my opinion the vendor is not responsible for failures of the builder within the scope of his independence as a contractor but is responsible for the fulfilment of the vendor's own contractual duties in cl. 40.1 and cl. 37.2: these require the vendor to obtain performance by the builder of the work the builder has contracted to do.

55. In the present case then I am of the view that the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed if they discharge the onus of showing that the defendant was in breach of a contractual obligation, and that the breach caused the strata plan not to be registered within the contractual time.

56. The exercise of a right of rescission, even if authorised by the terms of the parties' contract, may be deprived of effect by equitable remedies referred to by Viscount Radcliffe speaking for the Judicial Committee in Selkirk v Romar Investments Ltd [1963] 1 WLR 1415 at 1422-3 in these terms:

> ``It does not appear to their Lordships, any more than it did to the judge who tried the action, that there is nay room for uncertainty as to the nature of the equitable principle that is invoked in these cases. It has frequently been analysed, and frequently applied, by Chancery judges, and, although the epithets that describe the vendor's offending action have shown some variety of expression, they are all related to the same underlying idea, and their variety is only due to the fact that, as each case is decided according to the whole context of its circumstances and the course of conduct of the vendor, one may illustrate more vividly than another some particular aspect of that idea. Thus, it has been said that a vendor, in seeking to rescind, must not act arbitrarily, or capriciously, or unreasonably. Much less can he act in bad faith. He may not use the power of rescission to get out of sale `brevi manu,' since by doing so he makes a nullity of the whole elaborate and protracted transaction. Above all, perhaps, he must not be guilty of `recklessness' in entering into his contract, a term frequently resorted to in discussions of the legal principle and which their Lordships understand to connote an unacceptable indifference to the situation of a purchaser who is allowed to enter into a contract with the expectation of obtaining a title which the vendor has no reasonable anticipation of being able to deliver. A vendor who has so acted is not allowed to call off the whole transaction by resorting to the contractual right of rescission: see In re Jackson and Haden's Contract [1906] 1 Ch. 412, C.A.; Baines v. Tweddle [1959] Ch. 679."

57. Part of the passage cited was referred to, evidently with approval, by Gibbs J in Pierce Bell Sales Pty Ltd v Frazer & Ors (1973) 130 CLR 575 at 590. See too Woodcock v Parlby Investments Pty Ltd (1988) 4 BPR [97301] 9568 (Young J).

58. The vendor's counsel contended that there was no breach of the vendor's obligation in Special Condition 37.2, or of any other obligations in this respect because General Condition B of the Conditions of the Court's Development consent required that development to be carried out generally in accordance with the plan, that this was complied with and that the issue of the Occupation Certificate shows this. Submissions by counsel for the vendor on the subject of reasonable endeavours addressed the subject as if what was under consideration was limited to responses to difficulties raised by Pittwater Council. This limited the subject in quite a wrong way; the ambit of reasonable endeavours included compliance with conditions of the earlier development consent in the course of construction, and compliance with the obligations of Special Condition 40.1; and if there had been such compliance, there would not have been any matters for Pittwater Council to raise.

59. In my view the vendor's obligations are not limited to complying with the development consent and negotiating a way through the approval process for any matter of detail of the construction of the building.

The vendor also had a contractual obligation to the purchasers in Special Condition 40.1, to cause the building to be constructed in accordance with the building plan and in a good and workmanlike manner. There was not a compliance with Special Condition 41 in the respect that the roof was built too high. The non-compliance was not of any real significance and it seems surprising that Pittwater Council gave attention to it, but if the vendor had complied with Special Condition 40.1 and caused the building to be constructed in accordance with the approved plans this difficulty would not have arisen. Delay caused or contributed to by the roof height was caused by breach by the vendor of Special Condition 40.1. If the vendor had complied with that Special Condition, the building would have been completed to the correct height as an ordinary part of the building process, before the application for development consent was made on 3 July 2001. This cause of delay continued until 14 September.

60. Not building the planter box between Unit 5 and Unit 4 was a failure to comply with the building plans, and a failure to comply with the contractual obligation to the purchasers to construct the building in accordance with the building plans. There was no less a breach by the vendor of its obligation in this respect because the builder wholly omitted to build the planter box, or because the builder offered the reason given in the builder's letter of 3 August 2001; the reasons offered by the builder were no reasons at all and could not be regarded by anyone responsible for certifying completion, or by the vendor, as excusing the entire omission of the planter box for which the building plans provided. (An incidental and unexplained mystery is that the Strata Plan certified by the surveyor on 14 June 2001 shows the planter box, although without any detail.) If there were any sufficient reason for the planter box's [sic] not having been erected earlier, the need to erect it became plain during the process of obtaining the Occupation Certificate early in August, when the builder's reasons were given in writing and their inadequacy was available to be clearly discerned.

61. The vendor's counsel contended that Pittwater Council was not entitled to go behind the Occupation Certificate in respect of the height of the building and (as I understood his position) in respect of the absence of the planter boxes or other matters because of the provisions of subs. 79C(4) of the Environmental Planning and Assessment Act 1979, which relates to Evaluation in relation to Development Assessment and to Procedures for Development that Needs Consent and provides:

> ``(4) Consent where an accreditation is in force.
> A consent authority must not refuse to grant consent to development on the ground that any component, process or design relating to the development is unsatisfactory if the component, process or design is accredited in accordance with the regulations."

62. In my view it is far from clear that Council was precluded by subs. (4) from refusing to grant consent to development consisting of the strata plan and strata subdivision by the existence of the Occupation Certificate from addressing and (it may be) refusing to grant consent on the ground that the planter boxes were simply not built at all, so that the conditions of the previous development and consent had not been complied with, or on the ground that the landscaping was not satisfactory, (a subject with which, so far as appears, the Occupation Certificate did not deal). The proposition is certainly not so clear that it was reasonable to proceed without attending to those matters on the basis that Council was precluded from having regard to them. In its dealings with Pittwater Council the vendor did not adhere to the position that attention by Council to these matters was precluded by the Occupation Certificate, and did not simply refuse to attend to the matters of the planter box and the landscaping. It would not have been the use of reasonable endeavours to take that line, and attending to the problems by doing the works, as was obviously required in the use of reasonable endeavours, was a measure which should reasonably have been taken long before it was taken.

63. Pittwater Council did not adopt the view that Council's inquiry or concern was precluded by the issue of the Occupation Certificate. It does not seem to me that inquiry or concern were so precluded. Even if inquiry and concern were so precluded, it was hardly to be expected that when Council came to consider a Development Application relating to the Strata Plan Council would not concern itself with whether the building had been finished or with the state of compliance with the conditions of development consent. When on 14 September it became clear that the absence of the planter box was regarded by Council as significant the vendor did not arrange to have the planter box erected. This was a simple enough task when it was finally addressed, and took only two or three days' work; no reasonable ground has been shown for not having done it in the course of earlier building work, and again no reasonable ground has been shown for not having done it shortly after Council's attitude that it was important was expressed on 14 September. More than two weeks passed before Mr McKenzie addressed actually having the work carried out, rather than pursuing the prospects of making some arrangement to lodge money as a bond to secure that it would be carried out at some future time.

64. No substantial reason had been shown either for not providing screening vegetation either before embarking on the application for consent to the Strata Plan or as soon as it appeared that Council officers regarded it as significant.

65. My conclusion on Mr McKenzie's evidence particularly the passage at t.11, l.41-43 is that Mr McKenzie made it his objective to achieve certification of the building work and did not give his attention to whether the building work required by the terms of the vendor's contract with the purchasers had all been carried out and the obligation in Special Condition 40.1 had been complied with. He did not know on 3 July that the planter boxes had not been constructed, and this came to his knowledge late in July. It should have been obvious that the builder could not dispense with some part of the building work indicated on the building plans, and that the omission was bound to lead to inquiry and could lead to delay. Learning of the omission did not prompt Mr McKenzie to take any action to have them constructed; his attention was directed to getting the Occupation Certificate and getting approvals from Council. It was not a large or difficult project actually to have the planter boxes constructed, either in the course of building work generally when other planter boxes were constructed, or soon after learning of their not having been constructed late in July, or soon after learning in mid-August that Council officers regarded their not having been constructed as a problem.

66. When he did encounter difficulties with Council officers Mr McKenzie's efforts were not well directed; he gave attention and energy to projects of getting Council to accept a bond or a deposit of money instead of constructing the planter boxes, and pursued a project of persuading these purchasers and the purchasers of other units to agree to accept company title, a very unattractive project involving considerable attention and expense, for stamp duty and otherwise, altogether out of scale with any difficulty of attending to the planter boxes and the landscaping.

67. In my finding the delays which led to the vendor having or appearing to have a right of rescission arose out of the vendor's own failures to comply with its contractual obligations to the purchasers. The matters which in fact were referred to by Council officers while they had the application under consideration were all matters which, in any reasonable course, should have been attended to while the building was being constructed and before the Development Application was lodged on 3 July. If they had been attended to then it is improbable that there would have been any great delay in Council's officers giving consent under delegated authority after the Occupation Certificate was available; this is improbable because the reasons for delay which they gave would not have existed. The time taken between lodging the application for Development Consent on 3 July and obtaining the Occupation Certificate and submitting it on 13 August is not really explained, bearing in mind that it was and must have been clearly seen that the Occupation Certificate was necessary for the approval. However that may be, the Occupation Certificate was available on

13 August, and if there had not been matters for Council officers to consider relating to the building work not being completed it is probable that Pittwater Council's consent would have been given under delegated authority within several weeks after 13 August and with ample time for the plan to be registered before 8 October. When the plan did become available on 17 October it was registered on 5 November, 19 days later.

68. It was Mr McKenzie's evidence (t.12) that on a few occasions throughout construction he was told by Council that if the vendor were [sic] to depart in any way from the plans it would need to go back to Court, as the Council's view was that Council took no part in further changes to the plans which the Court had referred to in its order. This was a strong indication to Mr McKenzie that he and the vendor should be very attentive to detail and not leave openings for contentions about departures from the plans. Mr McKenzie did not turn to actually building the planter boxes until the end of September, and he but used significant time pursuing Council approval on the basis of depositing money referred to as a bond to secure that the work would be done later. He gave no real explanation for failing to comply with the building plans and building a planter box either in the general course of construction, or as soon as their absence was drawn to his notice.

69. Mr McKenzie's evidence in cross- examination at t.18 and 19 shows that at the time the decision to rescind the contract was taken he, and the persons who controlled Bodrex, were aware that the value of Unit 3 was several hundred thousand dollars higher than the contract price of $720,000; counsel's advice was taken as to their rights, and as a result of the advice notice of rescission was given. I find that pursuit of the advantage of the increase in value was a dominating factor in the decision to rescind, as the decision was taken just at the time when the difficulties in the path of registering the strata plan had ended. The purchasers were already in occupation and had moved their goods into the unit, and they were unlikely to make delays about settlement. In the context of delay caused by failures of the vendor, this use of the right of rescission was unreasonable. It was unreasonable to make a precipitate rescission immediately after overcoming all substantial difficulties in the way of registration of the Strata Plan. However the rescission lacked effect for other reasons than those referred to in the passage cited from Selkirk v Romar Investments.

70. I conclude that the Strata Plan's not being registered within the time referred to in Special Condition 37.1 was caused by breaches by the vendor of contractual obligations. I also conclude that it was unreasonable of the vendor to exercise the purported right of rescission, and reliance on that right of rescission should be prevented by granting to the purchasers equitable remedies in enforcement of their rights as purchasers.

71. The plaintiff's counsel put forward as further grounds for relief a claim that rescission had brought about a forfeiture of the plaintiffs' equitable interest in the home-unit and that there are equitable grounds on which the plaintiffs should be relieved against that forfeiture. That case requires consideration only if the plaintiffs are not entitled to succeed having regard to the contractual relationship between the parties, and I will not address the equitable claim.

Orders

(1) Declaration in terms of Claim 2 in the Summons dated 25 October 2001.
(2) Injunction in terms of Claim 1.
(3) Order for specific performance of the Contract referred to in Declaration 1.
(4) Reserve further consideration of time, manner and conditions of specific performance, and of the claim for damages.
(5) Order that the defendant pay the plaintiffs' costs of the proceedings.

Court citation: [2002] NSWSC 123

New South Wales Supreme Court

Judgment delivered 6 March 2002

Conveyancing — Contract for sale of land — Sale off-the-plan of home unit in proposed Strata Plan of building not yet built — Special condition gave vendor right of rescission if Strata Plan not registered by specified date — Vendors power to extend specified date for delays — Whether vendor was entitled to rescind contract — Whether purchaser entitled to have contract for sale of land specifically performed.

The defendant (``vendor'') was formerly named The Satellite Group (Pyrmont) Pty Ltd. By a contract dated 26 June 1998, the vendor agreed to sell and the purchasers (``the plaintiffs'') agreed to buy Apartment 106 together with Car-parking space 120 in The Bauhaus Apartments, a building which had not then been constructed, at 209-221 Harris Street, Pyrmont (NSW). The agreed sale price was $420,000 and a deposit of $42,000 was payable in a scale of payments provided for by Special Condition 16; $5000 on exchange, $16,000 on or before 31 October 1998 and $21,000 on or before completion of the contract. The plaintiffs made payments totalling the whole deposit of $42,000 in or before October 1998.

The contract for sale was on the 1996 edition standard form, but Printed Clause 28 was deleted. Special Condition 1 contained definitions including a definition of ``development consent'' which showed that development consent had been obtained and that there were proposed modifications, a definition of ``building approval'' which showed that building approval was still to be obtained and a definition of ``building contract'' which showed that the building contract was still to be entered into. The vendors agreed to purchase the land on 20 February 1998. The development approval was granted on 3 September 1996. An application for a construction certificate (or building approval) was lodged with Sydney City Council on 6 February 1999.

Special Condition 2.3 stated that the vendor ``warrants that it will cause the Development including the Apartment and the Car Parking Space to be constructed with reasonable expedition''.

Special Condition 3 related to registration of strata plan, easements etc and provided:

> 3. REGISTRATION OF STRATA PLAN, EASEMENTS ETC.
> 3.1 The Purchaser expressly acknowledges to the Vendor that completion of this Contract cannot take place until beforehand:
>
> > (i) The Vendor has caused to be registered in the Land Titles Office the Strata Plan on which the Apartment together with the Car Parking Space to be acquired by the Purchaser will be shown collectively as one lot on the Strata Plan, subject nevertheless to any amendments thereto as may arise pursuant to Special Condition 2.2''

Special Condition 4 related to the completion date and included cl 4.2.

> 4.2 If the Strata Plan of Subdivision and any necessary easements which are referred to in Special Condition 3.1 above has not been registered by the Registrar General on or before 16 March 2001 or by any extension of this date pursuant to the terms of 4.3 hereunder, then either party may rescind this Contract whereupon the Purchaser shall be entitled to a refund of all monies paid but the Purchaser shall not otherwise be entitled to any claim or remedy against the Vendor for the payment of any damages, costs or expenses arising out of the fact that the Strata Plan together with any necessary Instrument(s) and/or easement(s) have not then been registered by the Registrar General.

Clause 4.3 enabled the vendor to extend the time provided for in cl.4.2 in one or more extensions which were not to exceed nine months, on the happening of various events and upon an architect's certificate relating to the delay.

The vendor sent to the plaintiffs a letter dated 25 January 1999 which stated, ``We are pleased to provide you with an update on your investment for your information'' and went on to say that Consolidated Constructions had been chosen as builder to undertake construction of The Bauhaus Apartments, described off-site work which the builder must undertake and said ``over the next four to six weeks you will begin to see machinery on-site which will be testing soil conditions.''

On 24 February 2000, solicitors representing the vendor advised the plaintiff's agents by letter that the date for registration of the strata plan in Special Condition 4.2 had been extended from 16 March 2001 to 21 August 2001 and forwarded an architect's certificate supporting the extension.

In July 2000, there were large changes in the affairs of the vendors. Finnbell Pty Ltd and Consolidated Byrnes Holdings Pty Ltd between them acquired all the shares in the vendors from The Satellite Group Ltd. Mr Ian Widdup became Managing Director, and Mr Widdup and a new group of individuals associated with the new shareholders took control of the vendors affairs, and proceeded to obtain its books, records and files, and to establish what had happened. Mr Widdup established that no Construction Contract had actually been entered into with Consolidated Constructions, although it appeared that the Early Works Contract had been carried out. Mr Widdup established that according to information available to him the Bauhaus land was worth $8,000,000 and was subject to six mortgages the total debts on which were greater than $15,000,000. The vendors received a statutory demand from Consolidated Constructions dated 31 July 2000 claiming $1,609,850 under the Early Works Contract and soon became engaged in litigation with one of the puisne mortgagees over an attempt to auction off the property.

On 28 March 2001, an in-principle finance agreement was reached for bank finance, and finance agreements with the ANZ Bank were executed in July 2001. Multiplex took possession of the site on 4 December 2000 and began building work; the building contract was not completed and signed until 28 March 2001, and the building contract was later renegotiated so as to involve a Multiplex subsidiary. The building contract provided for practical completion by 26 March 2002. Work proceeded continuously from 4 December 2000 onwards. At the time of the hearing on 6 February 2002 practical completion was expected in the immediate future.

Mr Christopher Heap, a consultant in the construction industry, acted as an in-house project or development manager for the vendors on the Bauhaus Development from about mid-August 2000. Upon review of the contracts of sale entered into by the vendors with various purchasers in early to mid-1998, he established that, in the case of the plaintiffs, the date for registration of the strata plan in contracts of sale was 16 March 2001 and had been extended to August 2001. He also formed the view, in August 2000 that the project could not be completed by August 2001.

Mr Heap said in evidence that following his review of the pre-sale contracts Mr Widdup and consultants made decisions in early 2001 as to which contracts the vendors should seek to rescind and which it should seek to extend and keep on foot. However a decision about Apartment 106 and the contract with the plaintiffs must have been taken earlier because the vendors entered into a contract for the sale of Apartment 106 and its related car-parking space for $480,000 to Richard Graham Bach and Christine Moira Witlock on 19 December 2000. On 10 April 2001, solicitors representing the vendors wrote to the plaintiff's conveyancing agents and said ``We have now received instructions from our clients that they do not intend proceeding with the sale to your clients and at the expiry of the sun-set clause date in August of this year will exercise their rights of rescission. Alternatively if your client wishes to rescind now rather than wait until August our client will consent to a mutual rescission immediately.''

The plaintiffs then retained solicitors who initiated correspondence challenging the proposed rescission. The vendor's solicitors did not reply, but on September 2001 wrote again to the plaintiffs' conveyancing agents referring to the right of rescission, stating that the strata plan had not been registered and that the vendor exercised its right to rescind pursuant to cl 4.2. The plaintiffs' solicitors again sent correspondence disputing entitlement to rescind and the effect of the purported rescission. The plaintiffs also lodged a caveat. The vendor then appointed new solicitors who stated the vendor's position fully on 12 November 2001, maintained the effectiveness of the rescission, acknowledged that the deposit had been paid and authorised its release to the plaintiffs, and called for withdrawal of the caveat. They forwarded a Lapsing Notice on 22 November 2001 and the purchasers initiated these proceedings on 12 December 2001. The plaintiffs claim a declaration that their contract is valid and subsisting, extension of their caveat, damages and ancillary orders.

Held: for the plaintiffs, order for specific performance of the contract.

1. The relevant principle is that a party to a contract is not entitled, as against the other party, to rely on an event resulting from the first party's wrongful act. If the failure by the rescinding party to obtain some relevant consent or registration within the contractual period resulted from any default by him in the performance of express or implied obligations, that party is not entitled to exercise a right of rescission otherwise available. The failure to obtain consent or registration by the wrongful act must be proved unless the terms of the contract make obtaining the consent or registration a condition for the exercise of the right of rescission: Plumor Pty Ltd v Handley (1996) 41 NSWLR 30 at 34 and 35 by McLelland CJ in Eq.

2. A further important principle is that the law implies an obligation of a contracting party to do all things necessary on that party's part to enable the other party to have the contracted benefit, and a negative covenant not to hinder or prevent the fulfilment of the purpose of the express promises: Peters (WA Ltd) v Petersville Ltd (2001) 75 ALJR 1385 at 1393. This is an obligation implied by law and is additional to the warranty of constructing the development with reasonable expedition in Special Condition 2.3, and breach of either the implied obligation or of the warranty, causing the strata plan not to be registered within the prescribed time disentitles the vendor from reliance on its right of rescission.

3. The facts of this matter indicate that the vendor had no economic strength, and had entered into commitments with the plaintiffs and others which could not be carried out with the vendor's own resources, and depended for execution on finding a builder which would design and construct the works and obtain financing. The delays arose from the vendor having made contractual commitments without having appropriate resources, and that with reasonable expedition on the vendor's part, the building would have been completed at the latest in the early months of 2001, and could well have been completed about six months earlier than that.

4. The vendor was, by July 2000, and thereafter always remained in breach of its warranty that the development would be constructed with reasonable expedition. This breach of warranty caused the strata plans not being registered by the extended date, and remaining unregistered at the date of the hearing. This breach precluded the vendor from reliance on or exercise of its right of rescission in Special Condition 4.2.

Judgment in full below

Bryson J: The purchasers (the plaintiffs) challenged an exercise by the vendor (the defendant) of a right of rescission of a contract for the sale ``Off-the-Plan'' of a home-unit where the strata plan has not been registered, and was not registered within the period for which the contract provided.

[140275]

2. The vendor was formerly named The Satellite Group (Pyrmont) Pty Ltd. I will use ``Satellite Pyrmont'' to refer to the vendor. By contract dated 26 June 1998 the vendor agreed to sell and the purchasers agreed to buy Apartment 106 together with Car-parking space 120 in The Bauhaus Apartments, a building which had not then been constructed, at 209-221 Harris Street, Pyrmont. The agreed sale price was $420,000 and a deposit of $42,000 was payable in a scale of payments provided for by Special Condition 16; $5000 on exchange, $16,000 on or before 31 October 1998 and $21,000 on or before completion of the contract. In fact the purchasers made payments totalling the whole deposit of $42,000 in or before October 1998. The description of the property sold in the contract showed that the Apartment and Car-parking space were shown in an unregistered plan, and a draft strata plan was attached to the contract. The draft strata plan showed Apartment 106 on Levels 9 and 10 and Carspace 120 on Parking level 3B-4A. The plan showed a proposed brick building of 18 levels on land generally rectangular with frontages to Harris Street, Gipps Street and Ada Place, with 137 lots and 219 car parking spaces. The units may not all have been dwelling units; at other places the number of dwelling units is spoken of as 132, increased by a redesign to 133. Special Condition 2.2 provided to the effect that the Apartment and Car-parking space were to be substantially the size and location as shown on the draft strata plan; and dealt with possible variations.

3. The contract for sale was on the 1996 edition standard form, but Printed Clause 28 was deleted. Special Condition 1 contained definitions including a definition of ``development consent'' which showed that development consent had been obtained and that there were proposed modifications, a definition of ``building approval'' which showed that building approval was still to be obtained and a definition of ``building contract'' which showed that the building contract was still to be entered into. Satellite Pyrmont agreed to purchase the land on 20 February 1998. The development approval was granted on 3 September 1996. An application for a construction certificate (or building approval) was lodged with Sydney City Council on 6 February 1999.

4. Special Condition 2.3 was as follows:

> The Vendor warrants that it will cause the Development including the Apartment and the Car Parking Space to be constructed with reasonable expedition and in a proper and workmanlike manner with good quality materials in accordance with the Development Consent and the Building Approval when obtained and in accordance with the standard of finishes and with the materials equipment and fittings as are set out in the Schedule of Finishes being Annexure ``B'' hereto subject nevertheless to the provisions of Special Condition 2.4 hereunder.

5. Special Conditions 2.4 and 2.5 dealt with and limited the remedies of the purchaser for any alteration in the standards set out in the Schedule of Finishes.

6. Special Condition 3 related to registration of strata plan, easements etc. and provided:

> 3. REGISTRATION OF STRATA PLAN, EASEMENTS ETC.
> 3.1 The Purchaser expressly acknowledges to the Vendor that completion of this Contract cannot take place until beforehand:
>
> > (i) The Vendor has caused to be registered in the Land Titles Office the Strata Plan on which the Apartment together with the Car Parking Space to be acquired by the Purchaser will be shown collectively as one lot on the Strata Plan, subject nevertheless to any amendments thereto as may arise pursuant to Special Condition 2.2
> > (ii) The Vendor has caused any necessary easement(s) and rights of way to be varied, granted and reserved whether by Instrument(s) under Section 88B of the Conveyancing Act or by other dealing(s), such that the proprietor of each of the lots in the Strata Plan shall be entitled to enjoy in common with the proprietors of all other lots those facilities of the Development which are to be shared in common and if necessary, for the provision of essential services for the Development or as may otherwise be required so as to comply or give effect to the Development Consent or any other condition of this Contract.

7. Special Condition 4 related to the completion date. It included cll 4.1 and 4.2

> 4.1 Subject nevertheless to the provisions of 4.3 hereunder, completion of the sale and purchase as provided by this Contract shall take place within fourteen (14) days after the solicitor for the Vendor serves written notice upon the Purchaser or the solicitor for the Purchaser (as shown on the front page of this Contract or as otherwise previously notified in writing by the Purchaser to the solicitor for the Vendor), that the Strata Plan and any other Instrument(s) or easement(s) as are referred to in Special Condition 3.1 have been registered by the Registrar General.
> 4.2 If the Strata Plan of Subdivision and any necessary easements which are referred to in Special Condition 3.1 above has not been registered by the Registrar General on or before 16 March 2001 or by any extension of this date pursuant to the terms of 4.3 hereunder, then either party may rescind this Contract whereupon the Purchaser shall be entitled to a refund of all monies paid but the Purchaser shall not otherwise be entitled to any claim or remedy against the Vendor for the payment of any damages, costs or expenses arising out of the fact that the Strata Plan together with any necessary Instrument(s) and/or easement(s) have not then been registered by the Registrar General.

8. Clause 4.3 enabled the vendor to extend the time provided for in cl 4.2 in one or more extensions which were not to exceed nine months, on the happening of various events and upon an architect's certificate relating to the delay. The events included damage by fire and other adverse events, proceedings involving adjoining or neighbouring owners, delay by public authorities, inclement weather or other matters beyond the control of the vendor.

9. The vendor sent to the purchaser a letter dated 25 January 1999 which said among other things ``We are pleased to provide you with an update on your investment for your information'' and went on to say that Consolidated Constructions had been chosen as builder to undertake construction of The Bauhaus Apartments, described off-site work which the builder must undertake and said ``... over the next four to six weeks you will begin to see machinery on-site which will be testing soil conditions.'' The letter also said ``Consolidated Constructions are already well into the design component of their Design and Construction Contract'' and ``We are therefore well on track to complete the project many months prior to the Sydney Olympics.'' The letter conveyed much further information on a strongly positive note, indications of satisfaction with the contract and strong expectations of a favourable outcome.

10. On 24 February 2000 solicitors representing the vendor advised the purchaser's agents by letter that the date for registration of the strata plan in Special Condition 4.2 had been extended from 16 March 2001 to 21 August 2001 and forwarded an architect's certificate supporting the extension.

11. The vendor entered into an Early Works Contract with Consolidated Construction Pty Ltd on 28 May 1999 which provided for construction of early works in the nature of preliminaries, with an early works construction period of 8 weeks and a contract sum of $2,172,200.00. The Early Works Contract was conditional on furnishing a bond and on building approval. Provisions of the agreement show that the parties contemplated entering into a Construction Contract which had not then been executed. A request for an early works building approval was made on 20 February 1999, the early works building approval was issued on 11 June 1999 and work commenced on 16 June 1999. The architect's certificate of 4 February 2000 shows that work under the Early Works Contract was then still proceeding. In February 2000 Consolidated Construction said that they were close to completing the Early Works Contract.

12. In 1998 Satellite Pyrmont was controlled, directly or ultimately, by The Satellite Group Ltd, which issued a prospectus dated 13 August 1999 for an offer of shares. This prospectus contained statements about the Bauhaus Apartments development including a table which said that there were 132 units, that 72% had been pre-sold, that the stage of development was ``site being cleared Construction commenced in June 1999'' and estimated completion was ``December 2000''.

13. In July 2000 there were large changes in the affairs of Satellite Pyrmont. Finnbell Pty Ltd and Consolidated Byrnes Holdings Pty Ltd between them acquired all the shares in Satellite Pyrmont from The Satellite Group Ltd; the purchasers are not related to The Satellite Group Ltd. Satellite Pyrmont was not involved in later events and financial difficulties which overtook The Satellite Group Ltd. Mr Ian Widdup became Managing Director, and Mr Widdup and a new group of individuals associated with the new shareholders took control of Satellite Pyrmont's affairs, and proceeded to obtain its books, records and files, and to establish what had happened. Mr Widdup established that no Construction Contract had actually been entered into with Consolidated Constructions, although it appeared that the Early Works Contract had been carried out. There was a dispute with Consolidated Constructions about the satisfaction of pre-conditions for some documentation of the proposed Construction Contract, and also about payments due under the Early Works Contract. The responsibilities which Consolidated Constructions was to undertake in the contemplated Construction Contract were very comprehensive, including design and construction, referred to as the turn- key project, and also responsibilities for financing. Mr Widdup established that according to information available to him the Bauhaus land was worth $8,000,000 and was subject to six mortgages the total debts on which were greater than $15,000,000. Satellite Pyrmont received a statutory demand from Consolidated Constructions dated 31 July 2000 claiming $1,609,850 under the Early Works Contract and soon became engaged in litigation with one of the puisne mortgagees over an attempt to auction off the property.

14. After the change in control a newsletter was issued by Mr Widdup as Managing Director of Bridge Street Developments. Among other things this document under the heading ``Bauhaus Renaissance'' said ``Good news! The delayed Bauhaus Project is now back on track and is scheduled for completion in late 2001.''

15. Mr Widdup's attention had to be directed to dealings with the mortgagees, negotiations with proposed builders and review of the pre- sale contracts which had been entered into under the previous control. The builders with whom he negotiated included Multiplex Constructions (NSW) P/L, which later became the contracted builder. After lengthy and very difficult negotiations and some litigation the fourth, fifth and sixth mortgagees compromised their debts and assigned their mortgages to Multiplex, and the third mortgagee assigned its mortgage to a nominee company associated with Satellite Pyrmont's solicitors which paid its claims, debts and costs, with funds most of which were contributed by Mr Widdup. Mr Widdup addressed further financing arrangements with banks. He carried on negotiations with ANZ Bank and BankWest and eventually achieved agreement for financing with ANZ Bank. By 28 March 2001 an in-principle finance agreement was reached for bank finance, and finance agreements with the ANZ Bank were executed in July 2001. Multiplex took possession of the site on 4 December 2000 and began building work; the building contract was not completed and signed until 28 March 2001, and the building contract was later renegotiated so as to involve a Multiplex subsidiary. The building contract provided for practical completion by 26 March 2002. Work proceeded continuously from 4 December 2000 onwards. At the time of the hearing on 6 February 2002 practical completion was expected in the immediate future.

16. Mr Christopher Heap, a consultant in the construction industry, acted as an in-house project or development manager for Satellite Pyrmont on the Bauhaus Development from about mid-August 2000. The many tasks he undertook including reviewing the contracts of sale entered into by Satellite Pyrmont with various purchasers in early to mid-1998. He established that, as in the case of the plaintiffs, the date for registration of the strata plan in contracts of sale was 16 March 2001 and had been extended to August 2001; and he also formed the view, in August 2000 that the project could not be completed by August 2001. The reasons for this view included:

1. Draft construction programs received from potential builders indicated a remaining construction period of at least 13 months;
2. Arrangements had to be made with the various mortgagees in connection with obtaining construction finance; and
3. No building contract had been entered into or builder engaged.

17. The terms of the pre-sale contracts and the task of obtaining finance were interrelated because financiers imposed conditions under which they would examine pre-sale contracts closely. As an example, an offer of finance by the Bank of Western Australia Ltd (BankWest) dated 13 February 2001 imposed among other conditions of the initial drawdown a condition requiring pre-sale contracts to a minimum of $30,000,000, which were to conform and to be certified by the bank's solicitors to conform with requirements including the sunset clause no earlier than 31 July 2002, 10% deposits, arm's-length contracts, negotiated purchase price at a minimum of 95% of the lender's valuation and other conditions, with detailed progress reports. The bank finance finally obtained was obtained from ANZ Bank, not BankWest. Multiplex was involved in the ANZ Bank finance. The first draw-down was in July 2001. The terms imposed by ANZ Bank on its finance included exacting conditions precedent to drawdowns. Mr Heap's view was that a number of the pre-sale contracts had issues which would make them unacceptable to a new financier including (1) the sales were not at arm's-length: (2) some included vendor finance provisions: (3) some included buy-back provisions: (4) some provided for 5% deposits, and (5) some were exchanged at prices considerably less than original list prices.

18. Mr Heap said in evidence that following his review of the pre-sale contracts Mr Widdup and consultants made decisions in early 2001 as to which contracts Satellite Pyrmont should seek to rescind and which it should seek to extend and keep on foot. However a decision about Apartment 106 and the contract with the plaintiffs must have been taken earlier because the defendant entered into a contract for the sale of Apartment 106 and its related car-parking space for $480,000 to Richard Graham Bach and Christine Moira Witlock on 19 December 2000. On 10 April 2001 solicitors representing Satellite Pyrmont wrote to the plaintiffs' conveyancing agents and said ``We have now received instructions from our clients that they do not intend proceeding with the sale to your clients and at the expiry of the sun-set clause date in August of this year will exercise their rights of rescission. Alternatively if your client wishes to rescind now rather than wait until August our client will consent to a mutual rescission immediately."

19. The plaintiffs then retained solicitors who initiated correspondence challenging the proposed rescission; Satellite Pyrmont's solicitors did not reply, but on September 2001 wrote again to the purchasers' conveyancing agents referring to the right of rescission, stating that the strata plan had not been registered and that the vendor exercised its right to rescind pursuant to cl 4.2; they went on to propose return of the deposit (without admitting that the deposit had been paid). The purchasers' solicitors again sent correspondence disputing entitlement to rescind and the effect of the purported rescission; the purchasers also lodged a caveat. The vendor then appointed new solicitors who stated the vendor's position fully on 12 November 2001, maintained the effectiveness of the rescission, acknowledged that the deposit had been paid and authorised its release to the purchasers, and called for withdrawal of the caveat. They forwarded a Lapsing Notice on 22 November 2001 and the purchasers initiated these proceedings on 12 December 2001; they have been heard with expedition. The plaintiffs claim a declaration that their contract is valid and subsisting, extension of their caveat, damages and ancillary orders.

20. Challenges to rescissions of ``Off-the- Plan" contracts for the sale of residential units which are yet to be constructed frequently come before the Equity Division. The primary matter for consideration is the rights of the parties under the terms, express and implied, of their contract of sale. In this case the standard form, Printed Clause 28, was excluded and the special conditions which the parties adopted establish their relationship. Each of many decisions in this field is a decision on the particular contract in question, but some recurringly important general principles, which are applicable in the present case, were stated in Plumor Pty Ltd v Handley (1997) Aust Contracts R ¶90-073; (1996) 41 NSWLR 30 at 34 and 35 by McLelland CJ in Eq. The principles there stated and now relevant are to the effect that a party to a contract is not entitled, as against the other party, to rely on an event resulting from the first party's wrongful act; that if the failure by the rescinding party to obtain some relevant consent or registration within the contractual period resulted from any default by him in the performance of express or implied obligations, that party is not entitled to exercise a right of rescission otherwise available; and that causation of the failure to obtain consent or registration by the wrongful act must be proved unless the terms of the contract make obtaining the consent or registration a condition for the exercise of the right of rescission. Another important principle, stated by McLelland CJ in Eq at pp 35 and 36, is that the plaintiff bears the onus of proof on the issue of whether not obtaining the requisite consent or registration within the period specified resulted from a breach by the rescinding party of contractual obligations. This principle must be taken with the qualification, expressed by McLelland CJ in Eq in Hunyor v Tilelli (1997) 8 BPR [97667] 15,629 at 15,631: ``It is necessary however to bear in mind that all evidence is to be weighed according to the proof which it was reasonably within the means of one party to produce or of the other to contradict. This has particular significance in respect of evidentiary facts which are peculiarly within the knowledge of one party rather than the other...'' (and McLelland CJ in Eq referred to authority).

21. A further important principle is that the law implies an obligation of a contracting party to do all things necessary on that party's part to enable the other party to have the contracted benefit, and a negative covenant not to hinder or prevent the fulfilment of the purpose of the express promises; see Peters (WA Ltd) v Petersville Ltd (2001) ATPR ¶41-830; (2001) 75 ALJR 1385 at 1393 [36]. The relevant operation of this implied obligation is that it was the obligation of the vendor to do all such things as are necessary on its part to bring about registration of the strata plan before the date stated in Special Condition 4.2 or any extension thereof, and there was a negative obligation not to hinder or prevent the fulfilment of the purpose of proceeding to completion of the sale. This is an obligation implied by law and is additional to the warranty of constructing the development with reasonable expedition in Special Condition 2.3, and breach of either the implied obligation or of the warranty, causing the strata plan not to be registered within the prescribed time disentitles the vendor from reliance on its right of rescission.

22. There are also circumstances in which the purchaser may be entitled to equitable relief against a rescission even though the rescission was made in accordance with the terms of the parties' contract. There are a number of grounds for equitable intervention. In summary the right of rescission must be exercised reasonably but this summary should not be substituted for the law as stated in Selkirk v Romar Investments Ltd [1963] 1 WLR 1415 at 1422; and see Woodcock v Parlby Investments Pty Ltd (1988) 4 BPR 9568 (Young J). Part of the passage in Selkirk was referred to and followed by Gibbs J in Pierce Bell Sales Pty Ltd v Frazer (1973) 130 CLR 575 at 590.

23. Predictions made by and on behalf of Satellite Pyrmont at about the time the contract was entered into and later, and the terms of the warranty in Special Condition 2.3, taken with the provisions of Special Condition 4 relating to the completion date, constitute admissions by Satellite Pyrmont that if work on the development including construction work proceeded with reasonable expedition it was quite feasible to complete the work and register the strata plan long before 16 March 2001. The defendant is no less bound by those admissions because there has been a change in its ultimate control and the individuals managing its affairs, and no evidence has been led to suggest that the admissions were wrong or that there were any reasons why reasonable expedition would not have produced the clearly contemplated outcome. Although the burden of proof of breach of the warranty is on the plaintiffs, regard has to be paid to the opportunity of each party to adduce relevant evidence dealing with this subject, and the plaintiffs are in no position to do more than rely on the admissions which I have referred to, whereas the defendant notwithstanding the change of control is in a position to establish any matter of fact which might explain delay. Indeed the defendant addressed the question of delay by obtaining the architect's certificate and justifying an extension of time to 15 August 2000.

24. No explanation has been given in evidence for the elapse of 29 months between Development Approval and Building Application, or for the time taken to perform the Early Works Contract, which took about eight months although the construction period provided for was eight weeks and the architects certified for an extension of 109 days. No explanation is forthcoming for not proceeding to make a Construction Contract, which the Early Works Contract shows was contemplated in May 1999. Correspondence from Consolidated Construction called attention to this need in February 2000, nothing significant had occurred at the time of the takeover of control in July 2000, no arrangement for any other builder to do work had effect until December 2000, and no building contract was made until March 2001. These unexplained delays are to be contrasted with predictions emanating from the defendant about the expected time of completion. There is no reason to think that the defendant was overcome or impeded by adverse circumstances; the only reasonable inference is the defendant did not have the resources or the capacity to carry the development forward at a reasonable rate of progress, and never acquired the resources or capacity until the new management had been in control for almost half a year.

25. The defendant's own correspondence in Exhibit 1 shows a number of matters bearing on delay. On 14 September 1998 the defendant informed Consolidated Construction that the defendant looked favourably towards formally appointing Consolidated Construction as the builder, required commencement on site in November and asked Consolidated Construction to expedite finalisation of funding. In March 1999 (Exhibit 1 p 66) Consolidated Construction received a finance proposal from its bank which contemplated first draw-down to finance construction no later than 31 May 1999 and the term of the loan of 90 weeks, suggesting completion in the early months of 2001. On 17 March 1999 (Exhibit 1, p 70) Satellite Pyrmont told Consolidated Construction that given the time frame it was imperative that Satellite Pyrmont now move to commence construction. On 30 June 1999 (Exhibit 1, p 78) Satellite Pyrmont stated ``We anticipate the finalisation of the building contract and associated finance facilities in the next few weeks'' and also said ``... we are approaching the final stages of documentation of this transaction...''. Communications with Consolidated Construction continued, inconclusively. On 23 May 2000 (Exhibit 1, p 86) Consolidated was predicting signing a contract by 1 June 2000 and achieving completion on 1 September 2001.

26. The correspondence throughout shows that the defendant had no economic strength, and had entered into commitments with the plaintiff and others which could not be carried out with the defendant's own resources, and depended for execution on finding a builder which would design and construct the works and obtain financing. The defendant's troubles and delays arose from having made contractual commitments without having appropriate resources. In my finding, with reasonable expedition the building would have been completed at the latest in the early months of 2001, and could well have been completed about six months earlier than that.

27. The burden of the evidence adduced by the defendant was directed to explaining events from the time of change of control in July 2000. By that time there had already been in my finding serious failures to observe reasonable expedition, as the defendant had been in a position to enter into the Early Works Contract in May 1999 for early works which according to the contract would take eight weeks, but by July 2000 the early works had been completed, no construction contract had been entered into, and early works had not been paid for which (if nothing else had done so) would have disrupted any expectation that Consolidated Construction would enter into a construction contract and carry out the proposed Design and Construct turn-key operation. Further the defendant had not by July 2000 made financing arrangements which could carry the construction project forward, but was involved in six mortgages, and in disputes, threats of a mortgagee sale and litigation which were resolved with extended negotiations and significant difficulty. Apart from the early works, construction did not start until 4 December 2000, almost 30 months after contracting with the plaintiffs, less than four months before the original date for strata plan registration and less than 10 months before the extended date, in a building project estimated to take 13 months.

28. In my finding then the vendor was, by July 2000, and thereafter always remained in breach of its warranty that it would cause the development to be constructed with reasonable expedition, and I also find that this breach of warranty caused the strata plan's not being registered by the extended date of 15 August 2001, and remaining unregistered at the date of the hearing. This breach disqualified the vendor from reliance on or exercise of its right of rescission in Special Condition 4.2.

29. The defendant led a considerable body of evidence which, as well as being directed to explaining events bearing on carrying out the Bauhaus Development and the use of time, was directed to explaining, insofar as it can be explained, the defendant's decision to rescind its contract with the plaintiffs and to enter into another contract for the sale of Apartment 106 at a higher price. The defendant's evidence was directed to showing that its new management acted under practical constraints relating to the availability of finance and the need to conform with requirements of financiers relating to pre- sale contracts. Evidence, particularly that of Mr Heap, was directed to showing that many of the pre-sale contracts preceding the change of control had features which would not be satisfactory to a financier, and that this explains the decision to rescind the plaintiff's contract and seek the commercial advantages available from sale to some other purchaser. Mr Heap listed in his affidavit some features which would make contracts unacceptable. These do not apply to the plaintiffs' contract. It was an arm's-length contract; or in any event there was no reason, either in facts shown by evidence or in facts shown to be known to the defendant, to think that it was not, or to think that there was some association between the plaintiffs and The Satellite Group which would place the matter in any doubt. The plaintiffs' contract included no vendor finance provision or buy-back provision, and provided for a 10% deposit; the effect of Special Condition 16 was that the purchasers could have deferred paying half the deposit until completion, but in fact they did not, but paid the full 10% deposit in or before October 1998. By paying the full deposit before they were contractually obliged to they gave an unusually strong indication that they were purchasers in earnest.

30. Another matter mentioned by Mr Heap was that contracts had been exchanged at prices considerably less than original list prices. He sought to maintain that this was true of the plaintiffs' contract. There were suggestions in documents preceding the exchange of contract that the price was below list price; the sales advice notice dated 19 June 1998 Exhibit 2 included a statement ``Exchange by Friday 26 June '98 at this price or price changes to list price'' and a letter from the defendant's solicitors to the plaintiffs' agents of 22 June 1998 Exhibit 3 stated ``We are instructed that contracts for sale must be exchanged by Friday 26 June 1998 failing which the purchase price of $420,000 shall revert to the higher list price.'' The second plaintiff Ms Lazzaro produced in evidence two price lists which were provided to the plaintiffs by sales representatives of the defendant in 1998; one dated 20 May 1998 showed the list price of Unit 106 at $420,000 and the other dated 18 August 1998 after the sale shows its list price as $490,000. There is no evidence that up to the time of exchange of contracts any other price list or list price for Apartment 106 ever existed. Cross-examination of Mr Heap showed that his reasons for the view that the sale to the plaintiffs was under list price related to consideration of the value of the unit, and of its value in relation to other units, after the change in control. Transcript t.5, l.20 apparently recording a concession by Ms Lazzaro the second plaintiff that the sale was at a discount is not accurate; the witness did not make that concession. The indications to the plaintiffs, in Exhibits 2 and 3 and otherwise, that the sale price was less than the list price have not been borne out by evidence of any price list which then existed, and the probability is that the suggestion that there was some discount was made to the plaintiffs as part of some puffing activity in support of effecting the sale.

31. Other matters on which ANZ Bank required to be satisfied, as set out in the bank's Terms Sheet, and not mentioned by Mr Heap among the issues which he considered, were not adverse to the plaintiffs' contract either; they were Australian residents, and they were not multiple buyers. They also had a right of rescission under clause 4.2 but there is no practical prospect of rescission by them.

32. It should be said, by the bye, that the matters listed by Mr Heap, and by Mr Byrnes who also dealt with this subject, or the requirements of a bank for finance in an arrangement made two years or so after entering into a contract of sale are not good grounds on which to decline to observe contractual arrangements, which are no less binding if they are not at arm's-length or are entered into with low deposits, or contain unusual special conditions, and so forth. It was plain from his evidence as a whole that Mr Byrne's view that the sale to the plaintiffs was under the market value [and] was based on his view of market values at the time when he addressed the question and not at the time of the contract more than two years earlier.

33. Mr Byrne's evidence showed that thedecision as to which of the pre-sale contracts were to be rescinded, and which were to be left to take effect was based on what he and others responsible for Satellite Pyrmont's affairs believed to be achievable prices at the time of decision in 2000 or 2001 and said ``Our motivation for rescinding that contract was that we felt we could achieve a higher price.'' Attempts in cross-examination to obtain estimates by Mr Byrnes of the times required for early stages in the development produced answers which did not deal with the subject in a concrete way.

34. I am satisfied that, although the conditions imposed by ANZ Bank and other financiers on the kinds of pre-sales which were acceptable to the financiers may well have influenced the decisions whether or not to rescind some pre-sale contracts or to leave them into effect, the requirements of financiers had no real impact on the decision to rescind the contract with the plaintiffs, which had no significant unsatisfactory feature. Mr Byrnes conceded that the predominant factor was the price; that the basis of the decision was ``simply dollars''. If any other matter such as the amount of deposit, or the sale not being at arm's-length, or the sale being discounted or at less than list price was taken into account, it was unreasonable to take it into account as it had no basis in fact. The plaintiffs' contract was not rescinded under the influence of some necessity to comply with the requirements of a financier. The rescission was not a response to any difficulty in Satellite Pyrmont's dealings with the purchasers, either a difficulty which existed in substance and reality or a difficulty which existed in the vendor's concept of what made a pre-sale contract eligible for rescission because of the need to satisfy the vendor's financiers. Long before the vendor rescinded or had any apparent right to rescind the vendor had chosen its course and acted on it by entering into a second pre-sale contract at a higher price. The pursuit of the higher price was the only thing which in reality moved the vendor to rescind. If the rescission had been otherwise effective, the vendor acted unreasonably and the purchasers would have been entitled to be relieved in equity against the rescission.

35. I find that the defendant rescinded its contract with the plaintiffs for the purpose of selling the unit at a higher price, and not for the purpose of escaping from any dilemma or difficulty encountered in endeavours to conform to its contractual obligations.

36. It was suggested that the plaintiffs were guilty of delay or failure to take steps at an appropriate time to challenge the threatened rescission from April 2001 onwards. The plaintiffs sought to uphold their position in that Ms Lazzaro had several telephone conversations in February and March 2001 with Mr Geoffrey Davey, a consultant engaged in the defendant's affairs. Mr Davey, after speaking to Mr Widdup, told her that the defendant considered that the Apartment was underpriced and would resell at a higher price; Mr Davey made some expressions of sympathy. Mr Davey was unable to give evidence in the proceedings because he had suffered a stroke and he was disabled. Ms Lazzaro then sought her solicitor's advice, tried to have a meeting with the director of the defendant and got no significant response. She also spoke to a solicitor then acting for Satellite Pyrmont seeking a Deed of Variation. The plaintiffs' solicitors were active in challenging the purported rescission by correspondence, some months passed before any reply was received which engaged with their contentions, and it was appropriate to deal with the matter by correspondence and a caveat until litigation was precipitated by the Lapsing Notice. In my finding the plaintiffs did everything that could reasonably be expected of them. In any event the activity or inactivity of the plaintiffs had no effect on the course taken by the defendant, which had decided to sell to someone else and had agreed to do so the previous December.

37. Orders:

(1) Declare that the Contract for the Sale of Land between the Plaintiffs and the Defendant dated 26 June 1998 of the land referred to in the Schedule to this Order is valid and subsisting.
(2) Liberty to apply with respect to

(a) Caveat 8089401
(b) Specific Performance of the Contract.
(c) Damages.

(3) Order that the Defendant pay the Plaintiffs' costs of the proceedings.

Schedule

The land is apartment 106 and car parking space 120 in the draft strata plan attached to the Contract for Sale being the draft strata plan submission of development to be erected or being erected on the property formerly Lot 2 Deposited Plan 217537 being the whole of the land comprised in Folio Identifier 2/217537 and now being Lot 22 in Deposited Plan 882825 and which is known as 209-221 Harris Street, Pyrmont.

New South Wales Supreme Court, Court of Appeal

Judgment delivered 15 July 2002

Conveyancing — Contract for purchase of strata unit ``off the plan'' — Vendor contracted to make all reasonable efforts to procure the registration of the Strata Plan — Whether strata plan ultimately registered substantially in accordance with draft strata plan — Whether vendor failed to use all reasonable efforts to secure registration of strata plan in accordance with draft strata plan — Whether vendor entitled to terminate the contract for sale.

[140283]

Pattern Holdings Pty Limited ("the respondent"), owned the property 6 Silva Street, Tamarama (NSW). There was a building on the property which the respondent planned to convert into four strata units. Council approval to the development was sought. Before approval had been given, the respondent began to develop the property and advertise the units for sale.

Mr Mitchell (``the appellant'') agreed to purchase Unit 2 from the respondent for $550,000. Contracts were exchanged on 26 July 1999. The contract contained a Special Condition under the heading ``Registration of Strata Plan'' that stated that ``completion of this contract is subject to and conditional on registration by the Registrar General of the Strata Plan''. ``The vendor must use all reasonable endeavours to procure the registration by the Registrar General of the Strata Plan'', and "if the strata plan is not registered within 12 months of the date of making this agreement either party may rescind".

On 20 September 2000, the Council consented to an application by the respondent for strata subdivision. This subdivision was based on a strata plan that was different from the strata plan annexed to the contract. The rooftop balcony, a feature of unit 4 on the plan, was reduced in depth from four metres to one and a half metres. The overall area of the balcony was reduced by approximately ten square metres from about 15.95 square metres to 5.98 square metres. The sequence of events that delayed the eventual grant of consent and resulted in the reduction in the size of the balcony is oulined below.

An application for development consent was first made on 23 December 1998 and was substantially in accordance with the strata plan annexed to the contract. In particular it included a rooftop balcony with a depth of four metres. After advising nearby residents of the application, the Council received 3 letters objecting to the application, all of which complained about the extension of the roof line of the building to incorporate the balcony.

On 21 July 1999, the Council's Development & Building Unit made a report on the development recommending a variation to the original conditions permitting a rooftop balcony of reduced depth. On 27 July 1999, the Council approved the request for variation with the limitation of the reduced balcony recommended by the Development & Building Unit. On 9 August 1999, the Council wrote to the respondent advising that Condition 5 was varied so as to read ``To reduce the impact on surrounding properties the roof balcony depth is to be reduced to a maximum of 1.8 metres''. The effect of this was to allow the other changes proposed to the roof area but to reduce the size of the balcony. Condition 8 was re- affirmed.

Trevor R Howse & Associates (``Howse''), an ``Accredited Certifier'', were engaged to deal with Condition of Consent No 10. They wrote to Council on 24 September 1999 seeking clarification on Condition 10. The Council responded on 25 October 1999 and on 2 November 1999. Howse issued a construction certificate that was dated 29 October 1999. The respondent continued to build a larger balcony in contravention of the condition of consent. The Council received a number of letters of complaint relating to this illegal building work. These complaints were referred to Howse who wrote to the respondent on 23 November 1999 requesting that the rooftop balcony be constructed in accordance with the Council's conditions and advising the company that failure to comply with the consent could result in orders being issued by the Council.

There were further complaints as the respondent continued to ignore the Council's condition. On 18 February 2000, Howse wrote to the respondent again advising that failure to comply could result in orders against the company and that Howse could not issue an occupation certificate on completion unless the building work complied with the Council's development consent. On 28 February 2000, the respondent applied to the Council for strata subdivision of the property. The Council's statutory planner then discovered that the plans used by Howse to support its construction certificate were incorrect in that dimensions of both the balcony and the rooftop room exceeded the conditions of consent. An undated internal note from the statutory planner stating ``[p]lease ensure a condition is placed on any consent (to application for strata subdivision) that requires an Occ. Cert. Being issued''. This note meant that the respondent could not obtain strata subdivision unless the development complied with the amended conditions of consent.

On 8 March 2000, the respondent wrote to Council objecting to Condition 5. This was not a formal application to modify consent and was not dealt with by Council as such. On 16 March 2000, the respondent lodged a part completed application to modify consent, dealing with Condition 5. On 21 March 2000, the Council's statutory planner called the respondent and informed them that there were four discrepancies in its application for strata subdivision in relation to the development consent: these included the incorrect balcony size. On 19 May 2000, the Council's statutory planner met with the respondent and informed them that the strata plan lodged needed modification, particularly with respect to the size of the balcony and modification of illegal work carried out.

On 6 June 2000, the respondent made a formal application to modify consent on a number of minor issues and the rooftop balcony. After again writing to residents of the area and receiving a number of complaints about the roof line, Council agreed to modify consent in respect of the minor ancillary works but not in respect of the balcony. The Council required rectification of the unauthorised work within 21 days. This decision was reached on 4 September 2000. On 20 September 2000, Council consented to the strata subdivision application, after the respondent had complied with the Condition of Consent No 5.

As the strata plan had not been registered within 12 months of the agreement, the respondent issued a notice of termination to the appellants on 11 August 2000. No point was taken that it was not a notice of rescission. The notice cited cl 2.4 of the contract in the covering letter which accompanied the Notice. The appellant sought an order for specific performance contending that the respondent was not entitled to issue the termination notice because it had not made all reasonable efforts to register the plan pursuant to cl 2.2 of the contract. The trial judge at first instance dismissed the proceedings and held that the respondent ``did make reasonable efforts to gain approval for its plan. Those efforts failed so that Condition 2 could not be fulfilled, thereby triggering the right to rescind''.

The grounds of this appeal are that the respondent breached its obligation to use all reasonable efforts to obtain the registration of the strata plan, substantially in accordance with the draft plans annexed to the contract and accordingly the respondent was not entitled to rely upon it notice of rescission under the contract

Per Powell JA (Stein JA and Rolfe AJA agreeing)

1. The Court held that the strata plan that was ultimately registered was not one substantially in accordance with the draft strata plan as a ``strata plan is not limited to depicting the `envelope' of the building or buildings to which it relates but must depict the lots to be created by the registration of the strata plan'' such as the common property, floor plan, and location plan.

2. ``In order that a party be held disentitled to exercise a right of rescission, it must appear that it was his default which brought about, or at least materially contributed to, the occurrence of the relevant event''. The Court agreed with the findings and decision of the trial judge that the respondent moved expeditiously to have the balcony issue (Condition 5) deleted from the Development Consent, and when the Council sought modifications, the respondent also sought to reach agreement on the modifications.

3. The Court held that the trial judge did not err in finding that the respondent made reasonable efforts to gain approval for the strata plan, and that the ``consent would never have been further modified even if Pattern [the respondent] had acted more expeditiously with its application.

Judgment in full below

Powell JA: This is an appeal from a Judgment delivered, and orders made, by Windeyer J on 26 March 2001, on which day his Honour dismissed with costs the proceedings which had been brought by the Appellant (``Mr. Mitchell'') against the Respondent (``Pattern'').

2. In those proceedings Mr. Mitchell had sought (inter alia) an order for specific performance of a contract made between himself as purchaser and Pattern as vendor for the sale of a strata unit to be created in a building at 6 Silva Street, Tamarama, which building was owned by Pattern and which building Pattern was then proposing to redevelop and to be made the subject of a strata subdivision.

3. Silva Street, Tamarama is a street which runs roughly from South to North. At a point along its length, Silva Street intersects Dellview Lane which runs roughly from West to East. The building known as No. 6 Silva Street was located on the North Eastern corner of Silva Street and Dellview Lane. The land upon which the building known as No. 6 Silva Street was erected falls from North to South on the frontage to Silva Street and from West to East along its depth.

4. In 1998, the relevance of which time will shortly appear, the building known as No. 6 Silva Street was a block of four two bedroom rental flats — two on each of what might be called the ground floor and first floor — and, in what might be described as a basement area two lock up garages, (see Combined AB 132-135) the building being described as ``of late 1920's vintage''(see Combined AB 103).

5. Although — since the building plans which are with the papers (Combined AB 132-135) appear to be incomplete — it is not possible to know with any certainty exactly what was involved in the planned redevelopment of the building, it would seem that, in the basement area, behind one of the garages, a number of internal walls were intended to be removed so as to create a laundry and storage area as well as a shower room, that area, together with the garage in front of it, to become part of one of the units on the ground floor; that, on the ground floor, a number of internal walls were to be removed and, rearranged and, in addition, cantilevered balconies were to be provided at the Eastern end of each unit; that, on the first floor, internal walls were to be removed and the internal space altered in what was to become Unit 3; that similar works were to be carried out in the other flat on the first floor, that flat to form part of Unit 4, another part of which — to incorporate a second bathroom, a second bedroom and a balcony some 4 metres in depth — to be built into what had previously been the roof void, the final part of that lot to be a car space in the open to the East of the building at the basement level.

6. According to a report (Exhibit D — Combined AB 189) prepared in December 2000 by a Mr. Ryan, a town planner and real estate valuer, on 23 December 1998 there were lodged on behalf of Pattern with the Waverley Council Development and Construction Certificate applications. That report contained the following (inter alia) (Combined AB 194):

[140286]

> ``DEVELOPMENT AND BUILDING WORKS
>
> The development and building works for which approval was formally sought were:
>
> parking for three cars > laundry and storage
> 4 x 2 bedroom apartments > addition of cantilevered balconies, and > addition of bedroom and bathroom within the roof area, with an area of 38.4m^2 (an increase of 7.96% on existing building area of 482.2m^2)
>
> The Description of Development in the Construction Certificate Application was `Rear balconies, roof attic conversion' and the Value of Work was stated as $65,000.00. The Value of Work is intended to reflect only the value of the work subject to the application — not the value of all renovation and fit-out works.

7. On 6 January 1999, the Council forwarded to residents in the vicinity of No. 6 Silva Street a letter advising of the lodgment of the application, of the availability at the Council for inspection and of the opportunity to make submissions in relation to them. That letter provoked three letters of objection from residents, the common ground of objection being the extension from the roof line, the roof top balcony and the consequential impact on privacy and views (Combined AB 195).

8. An assessment by Stephen Grubits & Associates, made with a view to assessing the application in terms of fire safety, which was provided to the Council in late February 1999, identified 17 matters in which insufficient detail was provided in the application for an assessment to be made, and in which compliance was required and 3 matters of non- compliance which were stated to be mostly as ``... a result of insufficient detail in the provided drawing", and detailed solutions to some at least of the matters which it had identified (Combined AB 195).

9. In his report (Combined AB 195), Mr. Ryan noted that the Council's records contained a Council's record of site inspection dated 29 March 1999 ``noting `... that illegal works have been carried out on the building before consent' detailing those works (as demolition of internal walls, new concrete floors, replacement of ceilings, new internal plumbing) & detailing incorrect plans compared to works carried out".

10. At its meeting on 8 May 1999, Council dealt with Pattern's Development Application and resolved that consent be granted to it subject to conditions. For present purposes, it is sufficient to note the following conditions to which that consent was made subject (Combined AB 237-238):

``1. Compliance in all respects with Plan No. A01 tables and documentation prepared by Glenn Gilsenan and Associates dated November 1998, submitted 23 December 1998 except where amended by the following conditions of consent.

4. To reduce the potential for noise generation and the loss of beach views from adjoining properties, the four balconies extending from the living areas shall be reduced in depth from 2100mm to 1200mm. Details shall be submitted prior to issue of the construction certificate.

5. To reduce impact on surrounding properties, the proposed changes to the roof including the installation of a room and balcony to be deleted from the application.

6. The third carspace allocated at the rear of the property shall be deleted as it impedes the manoeuvring area.

8. Pursuant to Section 94 of the Environmental Planning and Assessment Act, 1979 and having regard to Council's Housing policy and a result of the likely loss of rental housing for low to moderate income groups by the proposed development, the applicant/owner to contribute the sum of $56,064 to Council's Housing Trust Fund. This contribution to be paid prior to the issue of the Construction Certificate.

10. Inadequate details have been provided to allow proper assessment with regard to fire and life safety. In accordance with the report prepared by S. Grubits and Associates (ref 98/385-R1- dated Feb. 1998), engineering solutions are to be submitted together with amendments required by development consent conditions prior to the issue of the construction certificate.

[140287]

14. The building work must not be commenced until:

(a) a Construction Certificate has been obtained from Council or an Accredited Certifier in accordance with Section 81A(2) of the Environmental Planning & Assessment Act, 1979; and
(b) a Principal Certifying Authority has been appointed and Council has been notified of the appointment in accordance with Section 81A(2)(b) of the Environmental Planning & Assessment Act, 1979 and Form 7 of the Schedule 1 of the Regulations; and
(c) Council is given at least two days notice in writing of intention to commence the building works.

The owner/applicant may make application to Council or an Accredited Certifier for the issue of a Construction Certificate and to be the Principal Certifying Authority. Should Council be appointed the Principal Certifying Authority, the applicant/owner is to pay an inspection fee of $237.50 in accordance with Council's Pricing Policy prior to the commencement of any works."

11. Notification of that determination (Combined AB 236-240) appears to have been forwarded to Pattern on 19 May 1999.

12. On 11 June 1999, Pattern wrote to the General Manager of the Council, a letter which, so far as is relevant, was as follows (Combined AB 241):

``We are writing to Council to request a review of Councils (sic) consent LD.486/98 dated 19th May 1999, items No. 5 and No. 8.

Item No. 5

`To reduce impact on surrounding properties'. The proposed changes to the roof including the installation of a roof and balcony to be deleted from the application. Council officers have considered this under Merit Assessment DEP NO. 1 — Multi Unit Housing that, `the additional floor space is considered satisfactory in this regards' and Part (ii). The likely environmental, social or economic impacts of that development states that, `The development is unlikely to have a detrimental impact with regard to Environmental Impacts'.

The additional area within the roof has no effect upon the bulk or height of the building or physical effect upon the surrounding area. Council's planners considered that this was acceptable, with the addition of obscure glass to the window, which the applicant concedes.

The applicant therefore asks Council to consider these two items as the development will not have noticeable impact on surrounding properties from an environmental or social position."

13. It seems (Combined AB 42) to have been at about this time when, having seen, on the Internet, an advertisement (Combined AB 66) for the sale ``off the plan'' of proposed units in the property, Mr. Mitchell inspected the property in company with a Mr. Freund, an Associate Director of Elders Real Estate, Double Bay, which had been retained by Pattern as its agent. Following that inspection, and a later inspection with Mr. Freund and with a Mr. Hughes, a Director of Pattern, Mr. Mitchell negotiated to purchase the proposed Unit No. 2 — a price of $550,000.00 was then agreed upon.

14. On 21 July 1999, the Council's Development and Building Unit considered Pattern's request for a review of Conditions 5 and 8 of the Development Approval. The report which it made (Combined AB 244) contained the following (inter alia):

``PUBLIC SUBMISSIONS

The S82 application to review the determination was notified to previous objectors from June 21 — July 5. One submission was received objecting to the proposal from No. 1/45 Fletcher Street owner/ occupier. The concerns raised are in relation to a loss of privacy and potential for noise generation from the roof top balcony.

The existing roofline acts as a privacy screen for a depth of approximately 1.3 m. Beyond this, the deck extends a further 2.5m which is not screened. The reduction of the balcony by 1.5 m in depth would ensure privacy is retained and noise generation minimised. Otherwise the new room and balcony is considered satisfactory with regard to DCP No. 1 — Multi Unit Housing.

[140288]

DBU Assessment

The DBU examined the applicant's request and make the following comments:

Condition 5 — DBU were previously of the view that the proposed rooms within the roof space would not result in excess impacts on surrounding properties, particularly having regard to the rooms being generally contained wholly within the confines of the existing roof space. It is considered appropriate that the proposed balcony be reduced in size so as to reduce privacy concerns for surrounding properties. In this regard, a balcony depth of 1.5 m is considered appropriate.

…"

15. On 26 July 1999, contracts for the sale and purchase of Unit 2 were exchanged and a deposit of $82,500.00, being 15% of the agreed purchase price, paid. In the contract, the property was described as ``2/6 Silva Street, Tamarama''. In addition to the standard conditions contained in the 1996 edition of the contract for the sale of land, the contract contained the following (inter alia) Additional Conditions (Combined AB 153-154):

``1.1 Definitions

In these Additional Conditions, unless a contrary intention appears:

`Property' means the property described in this contract.

`Strata Plan' means the strata plan substantially in accordance with the draft strata plan (a copy of which is annexed hereto).

2. Registration of Strata Plan

2. Completion of this contract is subject to and conditional on registration by the Registrar General of the Strata Plan.

2.2 The vendor must use all reasonable endeavours to procure the registration by the Registrar General of the Strata Plan.

2.3 The purchaser acknowledges that:

> 2.3.1. The Strata Plan is provisional and subject to final approval by the vendor and any Authority;
> 2.3.2. The vendor reserves the right in its reasonable discretion and without reference to the purchaser to vary or amend the Strata Plan.
> 2.3.3. The vendor must not make any variations or amendments to the Strata Plan which substantially and detrimentally directly affect the property to an extent which is other than minor unless the variation or amendment is required or made by an Authority or the Registrar General.
> 2.3.4. If on registration of the Strata Plan there are any variations or amendments which substantially and detrimentally affect the property to an extent is (sic) other than minor, the purchaser may rescind this contract by written notice to the vendor whereupon the provisions of clause 19 shall apply. In this additional condition 2.3.4 a `minor' variation or amendment includes a variation of the area of the properly (sic) or the common property by not more than 10%.
> 2.3.5. The right of rescission under additional condition 2.3.4 must, to be effective, be exercised by the purchaser within 14 days after the purchaser receives written notice from the vendor that the Strata Plan has been registered.
> 2.3.6. If the purchaser does not exercise his right of rescission under additional condition 2.3.4 within the time required under additional condition 1.3.5(sic) the right of rescission conferred on the purchaser under additional condition 2.3.4 shall lapse and this contract shall remain binding in all respects.

2.4 If the Strata Plan is not registered within 12 months of the date of making this contract either party may rescind this contract in which event the provisions of Clause 19 shall apply.

…"

(The draft Strata Plan referred to is to be found at Combined AB 169 -170.)

16. On 27 July 1999 (Combined AB 197), Council resolved to adopt the recommendation of its Development and Building Unit to the extent to which it proposed the variation of Condition 5.

[140289]

17. Thereafter, on 9 August 1999, the Council's Building Services Manager wrote to Pattern a letter which, so far as is relevant, was as follows (Combined AB 243):

> I have to advise you that after considering your submission, Council has resolved as follows:
> 1. That condition No. 5 of Council's development consent determined on 8 May 1999, be deleted and the following condition be imposed:

`To reduce the impact on surrounding properties, the roof balcony depth is to be reduced to a maximum of 1.5 m.'
2. That Condition No. 8 of Council's Development Consent determined on 8 May 1999 be reaffirmed."

18. Mr. Ryan's report records the following matters which he ascertained upon an inspection of the Council's records (Combined AB 197):

(a) on 26 September 1999 Council received a letter dated September 24, 1999 from Trevor Howse & Associates Pty. Limited:

(i) advising of its engagement to assess the ``Construction Certificate Application'' (i.e. notifying of its appointment of ``Accredited Certifier'' — a status created by legislation to facilitate assessment of such applications by a building expert as an alternative to a Council officer) and
(ii) requesting clarification of Council's position on Condition of Consent No. 10, about fire safety;

(b) on October 25, 1999, Council wrote to Trevor Howse & Associates Pty. Ltd. clarifying its position on Condition of Consent No. 10, stating that information available on fire safety is acceptable;
(c) on October 26, 1999, payment was made to the Council by Pattern of s 94 levy, long service leave levy and damage deposit;
(d) on November 2, 1999, Council received Construction Certificate dated October 29, 1999 issued by Trevor R. Howse & Associates Pty. Ltd. as Accredited Certifier.

19. Meantime, so it would seem, Council had received from a neighbour a complaint that the roof top balcony was being built contrary to the conditions of consent which complaint appears then to have been referred to Trevor R. Howse & Associates Pty. Ltd (Combined AB 198).

20. On 17 November 1999, Trevor R. Howse & Associates Pty. Ltd. wrote to Pattern a letter (Combined AB 245) which letter, omitting formal parts, was as follows:

``RE: 6 SILVA STREET, TUMARAMA (SIC)

CONSTRUCTION CERTIFICATE

It has been brought to the attention of this office that the construction works are proceeding not in accordance with the plans approved by Waverley Council's Development Consent 486/98 determined on 8 May 1999.

The works relate to the balcony of Unit 4, which is larger than that approved by Council. Accordingly, you are requested to construct building works in accordance with the approved plans.

You are advised that failure to comply with Development Consent may result in orders being issued by Council under the provisions of the Environmental Planning and Assessment Act.

Should you wish to discuss any of the above, please do not hesitate to contact the undersigned or the representative of Waverley Council."

21. Notwithstanding the terms of that letter, further complaints were received by Council from neighbours concerning unauthorised works. Among those complaints was one dated February 14, 2000, from a Mr. and Mrs. Gasser who appear to have been the complainants living in 45 Fletcher Street referred to in the Development and Building Unit Report of July 1999 to which I have earlier (para. 14 (above)) referred. A note by a council officer appearing on that complaint (Combined AB 246) was in the following terms:

``Spoke to neighbour regarding the alleged work. At present there is no balustrading around the roof deck. Therefore we are unable to determine whether the applicant has carried out unauthorised work contrary to conditions. When a final is given or by insp. we take action."

[140290]

22. These further complaints appear to have been referred to Trevor R. Howse & Associates Pty. Ltd. which, on 18 February 2000, wrote to Pattern a further letter (Combined AB 247) which, omitting formal parts, was as follows:

``RE: 6 SILVA STREET, TUMARAMA (SIC)

NOTICE TO COMPLY WITH DEVELOPMENT CONSENT

Further to our correspondence in November 1999, it has been brought to the attention of this office that the construction works are not proceeding in accordance with the plans approved by Waverley Council's Development Consent 486/98 determined on 8 May 1999.

The works relate to the balcony of Unit 4, which is larger than that approved by Council.

Take Notice that under Sections 109L and 121H of the Environmental Planning and Assessment Act, that failure to comply with the Development Consent may result in orders being issued by Council.

It is the responsibility of this office to not issue an occupation certificate at completion unless the building work complies with the approval of Council. Should you wish to discuss any aspect of the above, please do not hesitate to contact the undersigned or the representative of Waverley Council."

23. Mr. Ryan's report (Combined AB 198-199) records that, on February 28, 2000, Pattern applied (DA 120 /00) to Council for strata subdivision, at which time the Council's Statutory Planner discovered that the plans used by Trevor R. Howse & Associates Pty. Ltd. to support its issue of a Construction Certificate on October 29, 1999, were incorrect, in that they showed:

(a) roof top balcony exceeded depth and area permitted by Conditions of Consent dated May 8, 1999;
(b) floor plan area of room in roof top exceeded conditions of consent;
(c) wall shape in roof top was different to (sic) that shown in previously submitted plans; and
(d) roof top void was in the wrong location to (sic) that shown in the previously submitted plans.

Council's Statutory Planner then apparently made a note:

``Please ensure a condition is placed on any consent (to application for strata subdivision) that requires an Occ. Cert. being issued."

Mr. Ryan noted in respect of the note by Council's Statutory Planner:

``This is a reminder of the need to:

1. not issue an unconditional approval to the strata subdivision application, and

2. to make any approval conditional upon prior completion of building works consistent with the Conditions of Development Consent to justify issue of an Occupation Certificate."

24. The letter from Trevor R. Howse & Associates Pty. Ltd. of 18 February 2000 (para. 22 (above)) appears to have provoked the letter (Combined AB 248-249) written by Mr. Hughes on behalf of Pattern to the Council dated 8 March 2000, which letter was as follows:

``RE: SECTION 96(1) OBJECTION

6 SILVA STREET, TAMARAMA

LD486/98 MR:BF

CONDITION NO. 5 OF COUNCILS (SIC) CONSENT

I refer to your letter dated 6 August 1999 stating that condition number 5 states `To reduce the impact on surrounding properties, the roof balcony depth is to be reduced to a maximum of 1.5 m'.

We wish to object to this condition as we believe that it will not deliver a realistic outcome as a useable balcony and that the condition is related to an objection by only one of many adjoining neighbours.

The condition requires the depth of the balcony be reduced to 1.5 m. This would give a railing height of 1.4m which would not allow an outlook from the bedroom and would create a confined atmosphere to the bedroom.

The objectors D & H Gasser has stated that there (sic) living area will be directly overlooked and that the balcony will create a high level of ambient noise which will both (sic) contribute to a low (sic) of the value of their unit.

[140291]

Firstly, the living room that they refer to in their letter is really an enclosed balcony which as far as records reveal was never formally approved and seems to be used as an office rather than a living room.

Prior to any redevelopment of No. 6 Silva Street, there were already balconies in the ajoining (sic) building no. 4 Silva Street, that are closer to the objectors and pose more of a concern.

The upper level balcony is completely open which would create less noise transmission than enclosed one (sic) which would create should reverberation through the roof (sic).

The upper level balcony can be seen from the street and for the following reasons is better open ie

(a) Sound building construction for the drainage of the balcony.
(b) The view from the balcony is in the complete opposite direction from the objectors (sic) unit.
(c) The open balcony will enhance the outlook from the upper level towards the south east and away from the objectors.

We therefore ask council to reconsider this condition and for the original design of fully open balcony to be approved.''

25. The letter from Pattern to the Council was not formalised as an ``Application to Modify a Consent'' and was not dealt with by the Council as such. However, it would appear that a partly completed Application to Modify a Consent seeking to modify the conditions in respect of the roof top balcony was lodged on 16 March 2000 (Combined AB 199).

26. A note made by the Council's Statutory Planner for the purposes of the Council's file relating to the application for strata subdivision and dated 19 May 2000 is as follows (Combined AB 250):

``Meeting with applicant and architect Glen Gilsenan. Indicated changes required to strata plans, Unit 2 size and balcony reduction. Also indicated that illegal work performed to Unit 4 would require a section 96 modification to be submitted and assessed by Council.''

27. That conference appears to have provoked the lodging of a formal Application to Modify Consent, which application appears to have been received by Council on 8 June 2000 (Combined AB 251).

28. In a report by the Council's Development and Building Unit dated 14 August 2000, the application was described as follows (Combined AB 251):

``The application is for a Section 96 modification requesting Council approval for internal alterations to the approved upper unit area including an increase to the bathroom size, relocation of void area plus modifications to size of balcony area to residential flat building currently undergoing alterations at 6 Silva Street, Tamarama.''

29. The application was notified to adjoining owners and occupiers, following which objections were received from the Body Corporate for the building known as 4 Silva Street, Tamarama, from one of the occupiers of Unit 4 in that building, from the Body Corporate for the building known as 45 Fletcher Street, Tamarama and from the occupiers of two of the units in that building, those occupiers including Mr. and Mrs. Gasser. In each case, the objection which was received related to the request for modification of Condition 5 in the Development Consent so as to increase the size of the proposed balcony area (Combined AB 255).

30. However, before the report by the Council's Development and Building Unit had been prepared, Pattern's solicitors, on 11 August 2000, wrote to Mr. Mitchell's solicitors, a letter in the following terms (Combined AB 67-68):

``RE: PATTERN HOLDINGS PTY. LIMITED SALE TO MITCHELL

PPTY: 2/6 SILVA STREET, TAMARAMA

We refer to your letter of 15 June 2000 and advise that this firm has now been instructed to act for Pattern Holdings Pty. Limited in relation to the above matter.

We note that the contract for sale was dated on 26 July 1999 and Clause 2.4 of the contract states;

`If the strata plan is not registered within 12 months of the date of making this agreement either party may rescind this contract in which event the provisions of Clause 19 shall apply.'

[140292]

[140292]

We note that the 12 months expired on 26 July 2000 and the Strata Plan is still not registered.

Contrary to your clients assertions as set out in your correspondence to C.P. Lucas & Co we are instructed that our client has diligently pursued strata approval with Waverley Council but has encountered enormous problems and is now faced with the prospect that the strata plan may not issue.

In this regard our client is now forced to look at alternatives, including company title.

Having regard to the above we are instructed to give a Notice of Termination of the contract dated 26 July 1999.

Our client will authorise the selling agent, Elders Double Bay, to refund the deposit plus all of the accrued interest and our client will refund the $4,000.00 paid by your client to our clients (sic) electrician for special lighting."

(A formal Notice of Termination (Combined AB 69) was enclosed with that letter.)

31. The Summary and Recommendation contained in the report of the Council's Development and Building Unit to which I have earlier referred (para. 28 (above)) were in the following terms (Combined AB 256):

``SUMMARY

The application has been assessed against the relevant provisions of Sections 79C and 96 of the Environmental Planning & Assessment Act 1979 (as amended); Council Codes and Policies had [sic] taken into account the submissions received. It is generally not considered that the proposed internal alterations will create any loss of amenities for adjoining residents. Located within the existing roof area, the proposed modifications are considered `hidden' and generally minor in nature.

The proposed increase in size to the balcony area is not considered acceptable. An increased length is considered will impact (sic) upon residential dwellings primarily to the north east of the site via increased overlooking and noise concerns. The retention of a 1.5m depth for the balcony from the bedroom wall is not considered unacceptable for users noting a 1.2m height allowed to its edge with the roof falling, allowing to view retention, solar access and ventilation.

The proposed modifications are therefore considered acceptable subject to the retention of the existing 1.5m balcony depth.

RECOMMENDATION

That Council as the consent authority grant Development Consent for the proposed modifications under Section 96 of the Environmental Planning and Assessment Act 1979 (as amended) for Development Application at 6 Silva Street, Tamarama subject to the following.

Condition 1 to be amended to read as follows:

1. The proposed development being carried out in accordance with the Development Application approved 8th May, 1999 review of conditions approved 9th August, 1999 and to conform with amended Plan Drawing No. A 01, dated November, 1998, prepared by Glen Gilsenan and Associates, received by Council on 6th June 2000.

That Condition No. 5 of Counsel's Development Consent (determined following a request for review of conditions, dated 9th August, 1999) be reaffirmed.

All other conditions of Development Consent 486/98 dated 8th May 2000 (sic) and REVIEW dated 9th August, 1999 are reaffirmed."

32. On 4 September 2000 Mr. Mitchell's solicitors forwarded to Pattern's solicitors by facsimile a letter (Combined AB 70) reading as follows:

``MITHCELL (sic) PURCHASE FROM PATTERN HOLDINGS PTY. LIMITED

PROPERTY: 2/6 SILVA STREET, TAMARAMA NSW.

We refer to your letter 11 August 2000.

We are instructed to advise that our client disputes that your client has diligently pursued approval of the Strata Plan of Sub- division under the Contract and we again confirm our clients (sic) advice and belief that your client has not used all reasonable endeavours to have the draft plan of sub - division under the Contract registered within 12 months of the date of making the Contract.

[140293]

It is on the above basis that our client disputes the validity of the Notice of Termination dated 11 August 2000.

We put both you and your client on notice that our client intends to pursue its (sic) claim and interest under the Contract and will take all necessary legal action to enforce its (sic) interest under this Contract."

33. On the same day, the Council's Manager Statutory Planning wrote to Pattern a letter (Combined AB 260) which was in the following terms:

``MODIFICATION OF DEVELOPMENT CONSENT LD 486/98

6 SILVA STREET, TAMARAMA

I refer to your application to Council for modification of Development Consent (LD 486/98 dated May 8, 1999) granted for the above property.

After considering all relevant issues, your application has been approved, subject to the following:

AMEND CONDITION NO. 1

At the end of this condition add... `No approval is expressed or implied to the proposed amendment to the roof balcony in terms of its depth of 2.5m when measured from the outer wall face of the bedroom 1'.

ADVISORY NOTE:

That the unauthorised work to the roof balcony, contrary to Condition C No. 5, resulting from a Review by Council is to be rectified to meet the intent of said condition No. 5 to within twenty-one (21) days from the date of the Notice of Determination.

ALL OTHER CONDITIONS FOR DEVELOPMENT CONSENT LD 486/98, DATED MAY 8, 1999 ARE REAFFIRMED.

Should you have any inquiries please do not hesitate to contact me on telephone 9369 8044."

34. A facsimile transmission, apparently sent on 13 September 2000 from Trevor R. Howse & Associates Pty. Ltd. to Mr. Hughes (Combined AB 261) was as follows:

``COMMENTS:

Reference is made to the telephone conversation today with John Hughes.

I have discussed the matter of he [sic] reduction of the balcony with Michael Buckley of Waverley Council with particular reference the installation of a planter box and the impacts of such in relation to the release of any strata plan.

Mr. Buckley advised that the proposal for the installation of the planter box to the (sic) considered during his recent discussions with yourselves and was subsequently put to the Councillor's (sic), however, it was not supported.

It is considered that a reasonable interpretation of the wording of the condition gives scope for the installation of a planter box, as the condition only calls for the reduction of the balcony and does not state the method of achieving such (e.g. the retention of the roof area). Mr. Buckley agrees that the wording of the condition does allow for scope in it's (sic) interpretation, however, Council is adamant that the roof must be reinstated. Whilst it may be possible to issue an Occupation Certificate for the building with a `planter box' reduction, Council remains responsible for the issue of the strata plan and accordingly, may refuse to do so. Therefore, the options that remain are for you to continue attempting to convince Council otherwise or comply with their requirements. It is considered that the latter is more likely to result in the expeditious release of the strata plan."

35. Subsequent events would indicate that that advice was accepted by Pattern.

36. On 20 September 2000, Council determined Pattern's application for strata subdivision. Insofar as is relevant, the Notice of Determination, was as follows (Combined AB 262-263):

``Your Development Application to strata subdivision of residential flat building containing 4 Units currently completed alterations and additions at 6 Silva Street, Tamarama has been determined by consent being granted subject to conditions itemised in Attachment 1.

[140294]

[140294]

CONDITIONS OF CONSENT

1. Compliance in all respects with Plan Surveyors Reference No. 5288B, Sheets 1 and 2, prepared by Christopher C. Robertson printed 22 February, 2000 and submitted with LD 120/00 received by Council on 13th September 2000.

2. A linen plan and six copies are to be submitted to Council's Planning and Environmental Services Department.

3. Prior to the registration of the linen plans a Subdivision Certificate must be obtained from Council or an accredited certifier in accordance with Section 109c(d)(sic) of the Environmental Planning and Assessment Act 1979."

(The plan referred to in condition 1 is to be found at Combined AB 130-131.)

37. Mr. Ryan's report records (Combined AB 200):

> (a) that on September 26, 2000 Pattern submitted building plans for final inspection and stamping;
> (b) that on 26 October 2000 Council issued ``linen plans'', which plans were collected by Pattern on October 30, 2000.

38. Meantime, the proceedings with which Windeyer J was concerned to deal [with] were commenced by a Statement of Claim filed on 11 October 2000 (RAB 1 -6).

39. Since the Council sealed the linen plans and issued them to Pattern, one can but assume that the linen plans were in the form of the plan which had been prepared by Mr. Robertson in February 2000 but amended so as to reduce the depth of the balcony adjoining ``bedroom 1'' to 1.5m. If this be so, then the differences between the draft strata plan included in the contract and the plan which, so one assumes, has since been registered, are as follows (Combined AB 208); > a. the Level 4 floor plan area is fundamentally different in configuration and plan area and the depth of the roof top balcony has been significantly reduced;

> b. the Level 4 ``void'' is now shown on the opposite side of the structure from its original position in the contract plan;
> c. the Level 3 common wall position at the Eastern end is reversed from that shown in the contract plan changing the Level 3 floor plan of both lots 3 and 4 by 10%;

d. the Level 1 store reveals a significantly larger plan area from that in the contract plan.

Of these differences, the only one which related to Lot 2 was that related to the Level 1 store which, together with Garage 2, was part of Lot 2.

40. The Strata Plan was registered as SP64230 on 6 November 2000 (Combined AB 185-186).

41. In the course of his cross-examination at trial, Mr. Ryan gave the following evidence (Combined AB 17-19):

``Q. Are you aware whether the plans lodged with the Council in respect of the roof top balcony provided for an area of 15.96 square metres?

A. I am not aware of the specific area that was provided in the original plans.

Q. I want you to assume that's what the building plans originally provided for; alright?

A. Yes.

Q. And if you assume that the review by the Council, limiting the depth of the top floor balcony to 1.5 metres resulted in an area of 5.98 square metres?

A. Right.

Q. That results in a loss of balcony area of 10 square metres?

A. sure.

Q. And that would in your experience as a town planner and no doubt having inspected many properties and indeed you were a valuer at one stage; were you not?

A. Yes.

Q. Would result in a substantial change of use in respect of that balcony?

A. In planning and valuation parlance, not a substantial change of use, a change of use. It is one part of the whole.

Q. I am directing your mind to this balcony at the moment?

A. Right.

Q. You have a balcony which was originally 15.96 square metres and it is now 5.98 square metres. Now, that would result in a substantial change in the use of that balcony; would it not?

[140295]

A. It remains a balcony. I don't know that, except for a change in the area of the balcony.

Q. That balcony of 4 metres in depth you would agree with me would have been a significant selling point in relation to that unit?

A. Yes I have.

Q. You could expect, could you not, that if the balcony in respect of that penthouse unit was reduced in size of the kind we have been talking about, would have an adverse impact in the selling price of that unit?

A. I would suggest that it would effect (sic) marketability, ease of sale, quickness of sale, more than it would measurable affect the price one could achieve.

Q. Are you suggesting that a balcony on the top floor of this building which is reduced in size from 15.96 square metres to 5.98 metres wouldn't materially adversely affect the selling price of that unit?

A. I didn't say it wouldn't materially affect it. I said it would affect marketability rather than being able to measure the exact amount in 10,000 or 5,000 or $50,000 terms.

Q. Leaving aside trying to work out the precise figures, it would have a material adverse effect on the selling price?

A. It would have a materially adverse effect, yes."

42. In the Statement of Claim which was filed on his behalf, Mr. Mitchell alleged (inter alia):

``4. On 26 July 1999, the defendant and the plaintiff made a contract (`the Contract') for the sale by the defendant to the plaintiff of unit number two in the Plan (`the Unit'), at a price of $550,000.00.

5. The following were terms of the Contract:

5.2 The defendant must use all reasonable endeavours to procure the registration by the Registrar General of a strata plan substantially in accordance with the Plan (`Special Condition 2.2').

5.3 If a strata plan substantially in accordance with the Plan was not registered within 12 months of the date of the Contract (that is, 27 July 2000) either party might rescind the Contract in which event the provisions of clause 19 of the printed form contained in the Contract would apply (`Special Condition 2.4').

5.4. The vendor could only rescind the Contract pursuant to Special Condition 2.4 if it had complied with its obligations under Special Condition 2.2.

7. On or about 11 August 2000 a notice purporting to terminate the Contract pursuant to section 2.4 of the Special Conditions (`the Notice') was sent by the defendant's solicitor to the then solicitor for the plaintiff.

8. As at the date of issue of the Notice, the defendant had not used all reasonable endeavours to procure the registration by the Registrar General of a strata plan substantially in accordance with the Plan.

9. By reason of the defendant's breach of its obligations under the Contract, the Notice was invalid.

10. Further, at all material times from July 1999 onwards, the defendant led the plaintiff to expect that:

(a) the Unit belonged to him; and
(b) the defendant would not rely upon Special Condition 2.4 to rescind the Contract.

11. In reliance on that expectation, the Plaintiff decorated and arranged for certain improvements to the Unit.

12. At all material times the defendant encouraged, or was aware of and did not prevent, the plaintiff from altering, taking delivery of or organising the installation of the decoration and the carrying out of those improvements.

13. By reason of the matters set out in paragraphs 10, 11 and 12 above, the defendant is estopped from treating the Notice as valid and effective to rescind the Contract.

[140296]

14. Further, the issue by the defendant was the Notice was:

(a) not bona fide;
(b) not in accordance with the terms of the Contract;
(c) not reasonable; and
(d) reckless,

and accordingly the defendant is not entitled to rely upon the Notice."

43. Save that in paragraph 2(b) of the Defence which was filed on its behalf, Pattern did not admit sub-paragraph 5.4 of the Statement of Claim, it is not necessary otherwise to record the terms of the Defence.

However, the following passage (Combined AB 5) in the course of discussion which took place at the commencement of the hearing before Windeyer J should be noted:

``WHITE: …

In relation to the four points that my friend raised, can I deal with them very quickly in this way? In relation to the implied term, he submitted should be incorporated into this contract. We do not dispute that such an implied term would be so imputed, indeed, the express term in the contract is to that effect.

HIS HONOUR: To make it quite clear, the term claimed in paragraph 5.4 of the statement of claim which was subject to a non-admission in the defence is now admitted; is that correct?

WHITE: Yes.

HIS HONOUR: It can be noted then that paragraph 5.4 of the statement of claim is now admitted."

Nor is it necessary to refer to the terms of the Cross-Claim which was filed on Pattern's behalf in January 2001 as, on the hearing before Windeyer J (Combined AB 4), his Honour, on Pattern's application, ordered that the Cross- Claim be dismissed and that Pattern pay Mr. Mitchell's costs of the Cross-Claim.

44. In the course of his Judgment, Windeyer J wrote (RAB 25):

``Issues

21. It is admitted that the vendor could only rescind pursuant to Special Condition 2.4 if it had complied with its obligation under Special Condition 2.2. The principal question is whether it had done so. The second issue was whether or not the defendant should be estopped from relying on Special Condition 2.4 because it had represented to the plaintiff the unit belonged to him and it would not do so and thereby it caused the plaintiff to assume the condition would not be relied upon so that in reliance on this he expended money on the improvements to the unit. The third claim of the plaintiff is that the issue of the Notice was not bone [sic] fide nor in accordance with the contract, nor reasonable, and was reckless so as to preclude the defendant from relying upon it.

The evidence

22. No affidavits were read by the defendant but certain documentary evidence was tendered by it. The main evidence of the plaintiff consisted of his affidavit sworn on 10 October 2000 and an expert's report of Mr. Ryan, a well qualified property consultant, experienced in Local Council planning and previously a valuer. The evidence of the plaintiff was directed toward his conversations with Mr. Adam Hughes and the part he took in planing the upgrading of Unit 2 and the moneys expended by him on the project. The report of Mr. Ryan was directed to the questions of delay in obtaining registration of the strata plan. It may be for this reason that the real defence to the plaintiff's claim was not apparent at least to me until Mr. Ryan was cross - examined. It then became apparent that the real question to be determined was whether or not the strata plan which was ultimately approved was one `substantially in accordance with the draft strata plan' annexed to the contract. I assume that while has caused me some surprise (sic) it did not surprise counsel for the plaintiff as no opportunity was sought to lead further evidence on this subject."

45. Later, under a heading ``The Strata Plan'' Windeyer J, after referring to the passage in Mr. Ryan's evidence which I have set out above (para 41(above)) wrote (RAB 26-29):

``26. It is clear from the material included in Mr. Ryan's report that the defendant expended a great deal of time an [sic] energy trying to build the large balcony, even to the point of carrying out illegal and unauthorised work. It is clear that, from the defendant's perspective, there was a substantial difference between the two balconies. This is important because while the Council's original conditions of consent prohibited any work on the rooftop bedroom and balcony, from the date of the amended consent, 27 July 1999, the smaller balcony was approved. Once Trevor R. Howse & Associates were engaged, the fire safety requirements met and levies paid, the defendant was in a position to finish the development and obtain approval for its strata plan. This all happened by October 1999. I accept it would have been unreasonable delay for the defendant not to have the strata plan registered in time unless it was entitled to pursue the large balcony. It was this pursuit that delayed the registration of the strata plan and took it beyond the contract period. If the defendant was in a position to register a strata plan within that period substantially in accordance with the draft, albeit with the smaller balcony, then it would be unreasonable of it to delay that registration. The question is whether a strata plan with the smaller balcony would be substantially in accordance with the draft strata plan. Mr. Ryan agreed that the defendant could not have convinced Council to consent to the larger balcony — that I think is clear.

27. I have come to the conclusion that the strata plan as approved is not substantially in accordance with that attached to the contract. Unit 4 is the most expensive unit in the development. I consider it reasonably obvious that a further 10 square metres of balcony with ocean views would substantially enhance its value. It was not unreasonable for the vendors (sic) to pursue this. The developer/vendor is entitled to rely on the draft strata plan in each of its sales and if that plan cannot be registered after proper efforts to obtain consent then it is not at fault. I have considered whether the absence of evidence from the defendant should bear on this so that without it I should conclude that there was no substantial difference. The question is one of objective fact: there is no evidence available other than inspection of the plan to show from the plaintiff's point of view the approved plan was substantially in accordance with the draft. The evidence of Mr. Ryan and that inspection leads me to determine this issue in favour of the defendant.

28. Mr. Ryan highlighted in his report a number of delays in the process of trying to modify the consent of Council. The fact is, however, that the consent was never modified and on the evidence never would be. If the Council's consent to subdivision on 20 September 2000 was consent to a large balcony and it could be shown that by hurrying its application process the defendant could have got that consent by July — which has not been shown — then the plaintiff would have had a strong case. But the 20 September consent was not to the draft plan annexed to the contract but to a plan that I have decided is not substantially in accordance with that plan. On this main issue the plaintiff fails.

29. This conclusion in some ways seem (sic) hard on the plaintiff, because so far as the unit he was purchasing is concerned, the plan as registered accords with the plan annexed to the contract. As against that, however, it is to be borne in mind that contract provisions are negotiated for the benefit of both vendor and purchaser. The vendor was entitled to look at the development as a whole. The terminating of the contract on its terms, presumably on the expectation of obtaining a higher price from another purchaser which might make up for a lower price than expected on the top unit, should not necessarily be looked upon askance."

46. Later, Windeyer J wrote (RAB 30-32):

``Paragraph 14 of the statement of claim

33. This paragraph claims the issue of the termination notice was not bona fide, not in accordance with the contract, not reasonable and reckless. The basis on which it was said not to be bona fide was that an agent has been asked to give an estimate of the value of Unit 2 prior to the date upon which termination was available. The evidence of the agent, which I accept, was that she had been asked to value Units 1 and 4 and while there [sic] was shown through Unit 2 and 3 and asked to give an estimate of their value, which she did. She said she had tried to obtain a sole agency agreement for these as a `try on' although she had been told they were not available. The defendant did not take any steps to sell Unit 2 prior to termination. The claim the issue of the notice was not bona fide presumably being for the improper purpose of enabling the defendant to proceed with some negotiations already in train, was not made out.

34. I have already found that the issue of notice was authorised by the contract and nothing further needs to be said on that. No particular argument was put forward on lack of reasonableness. If the plaintiff had an entitlement under the contract to rescind and did so pursuant to that entitlement, no question of reasonableness arises. The fact that so far as Unit 2 is concerned, this may enable the vendor to obtain a higher price does not mean it was not reasonable to issue the notice assuming for the moment that lack of reasonableness could be considered. Finally, recklessness could, as I understand it, go only for some recklessness in a vendor in seeking to include a clause which it knew it could not comply with. The clause in question is not of that sort. Had Council allowed the balcony sought, the time limits could have been complied with. None of these matters raised is established and none prevents the vendor from relying on the notice. In making his submissions on these matters counsel for the plaintiff relied upon the decision of Bryson J in Hawes v Cuzeno Pty Ltd (unreported 14 December 1999). His Honour said:

> `A vendor acting recklessly may lose a right to rescind: Woodcock v Parlby Investments Pty Ltd (1989) NSW ConvR ¶ 55-454. In that case there does not seem to have been any contractual provision corresponding with Printed clA6 or any express contractual condition for rescission. At 58,297 Young J noted ``... there is no promise by the vendor to build a building within a certain time in accordance with the particular standard of construction.'' When dealing with cl8 Young J cited earlier authorities which established, in case where there is no condition like Printed Condition A6, that there are limits on the availability of the right of rescission. The limits appear from passages in Gardiner v Orchard (1910) 10 CLR 722 there cited and from the judgment of Gibbs J in Pierce Bell Sales Pty Ltd v Frazer & Anor (1974) 130 CLR 575 at 590. Disabling circumstances referred to include the necessity for bona fides, that the cancellation must be reasonable, and that the vendor must not be guilty of recklessness in entering into the contract. The plaintiff's case does not rest on this principle, but on the terms of their contracts.'

35. The High Court cases referred to dealt with the right to rescind under the contract for sale of land where a vendor unable or unwilling to comply with a requisition on title could give notice to the purchaser accordingly and if the requisition were not waived could rescind. As was pointed out by Young J in Woodcock v Parlby Investments Pty. Ltd (1989) NSW ConvR ¶55-454 at 58,295-58,298 those circumstances are quite removed from the situation under consideration here. Finally, Mr. Parker argued that the defendant was in default because it could have tried harder earlier to get what it did not get even if these efforts would have produced no results. I consider the vendor did make reasonable efforts to gain approval for its plan. Those efforts failed so that Condition 2 could not be fulfilled, thereby triggering the right to rescind.''

47. In the result, therefore, as I have earlier recorded, Windeyer J dismissed the proceedings with costs. In addition, his Honour ordered that Mr. Mitchell withdraw the Caveat which appears to have been lodged on Mr. Mitchell's behalf.

48. Although, in the Notice of Appeal (RAB 33-35) which was filed on Mr. Mitchell's behalf, further grounds of appeal were taken, the only grounds which, on the hearing of the appeal, were relied upon (T.3) were the following:

> ``2. Further, his Honour ought to have held that the respondent had breached its obligation to use all reasonable endeavours to procure registration of a strata plan, substantially in accordance with the draft plans annexed to the contract and accordingly the respondent was disentitled from relying upon its notice of recision (sic) under the contract.
>
> [140299]
>
> [140299]
>
> 3. Further, his Honour ought to have held that the issue by the respondent of its notice of recision (sic) was a breach of the respondent's obligation to act reasonably and accordingly the respondent was disentitled under the contract from relying on the notice of recision (sic).
>
> 4. Further, his Honour ought to have held that the respondent had been reckless in entering into the contract and was thereby disentitled from relying on the notice of recision (sic).''

49. When the appeal was called on for hearing, Mr. T.G.R. Parker appeared for Mr. Mitchell, while Mr. B.A.J. Coles QC appeared with Mr. S. T. White and Ms. N. Obrant for Pattern.

50. Despite the facts — which were admitted (T.7-8) — that the Statement of Claim did not allege that the Strata Plan which was registered was substantially in accordance with the draft strata plan and that no evidence directed to that question was led on behalf of Mr. Mitchell at trial, Mr. Parker submitted that ground 2 in the Notice of Appeal had two aspects to it they being

> (a) that, upon the proper construction of clause 1.1 of the Special Conditions in the contract, the strata plan which was ultimately registered was a strata plan which was substantially in accordance with the draft strata plan annexed to the contract; and
> (b) that even if it not be so, the term of the contract which was pleaded in clause 5.4 of the Statement of Claim and which was admitted at trial, was a condition precedent to the exercise by Pattern of the right to rescind and, in the circumstances, as, so it was submitted, Pattern had failed to use all reasonable endeavours to procure the registration of a strata plan substantially in accordance with the draft strata plan annexed to the contract, it was not open to Pattern to exercise the right of rescission otherwise conferred on it by clause 2.4 of the contract.

51. In developing this ground, Mr. Parker submitted:

> (a) that upon its proper construction, clause 1.1 — and, thus, the obligation imposed upon Pattern by clause 2.2 — of the contract was concerned only with ``the envelope'' of the building, or alternatively, with ``the form and function'' of the various units within the proposed development. In this respect, so Mr. Parker submitted, ``the envelope'' of the building remained substantially the same, or, if the ``form and function'' of the various units in the development was what was required to be considered, Unit 4 remained a unit, the elements of which were to be found on three levels, but on the upper level of which was to be found a bedroom with attached bathroom and a verandah leading off the bedroom;
> (b) even if this be not so, it was not open to Pattern, in reliance on the provisions of clause 2.4 of the Special Conditions, to rescind the contract since the effect of the implied term in the contract — which was said to have been admitted — was that, unless — which it was submitted had not occurred — Pattern had used all reasonable endeavours to procure the registration of a strata plan substantially in accordance with the draft strata plan, the condition precedent to the exercise by Pattern of the right of rescission contained in clause 2.4 of the Special Conditions, would not have been fulfilled.

52. Even if, in the circumstances, the submission be open to him to argue, I am unable to accept Mr. Parker's submission that the strata plan which was ultimately registered was one substantially in accordance with the draft strata plan. In the first place, a strata plan is not limited to depicting the ``envelope'' of the building or buildings to which it relates but must depict the lots to be created by the registration of the strata plan, the common property, if any, and the like Strata Titles Act 1973 s 5(1) ``floor plan'', ``location plan'', ``lot'', s 8, Schedule 1A. Further, except to the extent to which a strata plan depicts lots and common property, a strata plan is not concerned with ``form and function''. Although both at trial and on the hearing of the appeal, most attention was directed toward the Council's rejection of the 4 metre deep balcony leading off the bedroom on the upper level of Lot 4 — reducing it in area by some 62.5% — there were other alterations required by the Council. Thus, the external car space — 13.75m^2 in area — which on the draft strata plan was to form part of Lot 4 was rejected, and the second garage in the basement which had been intended to form part of Lot 3 became part of

Lot 4. Further, the balconies leading off the living rooms of each of Lots 1-3 and the lower level of Lot 4 at the Eastern end of the building were required to be reduced in depth from 2100mm to 1200mm. In addition, there were the other differences which Mr. Ryan recorded in his report (see para. 38 (above)).

53. Although apparently accepting that, in the absence of a condition of the contract, the terms pleaded in para. 5.4 of the Statement of Claim and admitted by Pattern, it would have been incumbent on Mr. Mitchell to establish, first, that Pattern had failed to use all reasonable endeavours to procure the registration of a strata plan substantially in accordance with the draft strata plan, and, second, that it was Pattern's failure to use all reasonable endeavours so to do which led to the failure to have such a plan registered within 12 months of the date of the contract, Mr. Parker submitted that, given that the condition pleaded in para. 5.4 of the Statement of Claim was accepted as having been a condition in the contract, it was necessary for Mr. Mitchell to do no more than establish that Pattern had failed to use all reasonable endeavours to secure the registration of such a plan within 12 months from the date of the contract. For this submission, Mr. Parker relied upon the decision of Bryson J in Hawes v Cuzeno Pty Limited (1999) 10 BPR 97821.

54. Hawes v Cuzeno Pty Limited (supra) involved claims for specific performance by purchasers of home units in a development, the purchasers having agreed to buy those units ``off the plan'' before construction of the building began. So far as is relevant, Bryson J, in the course of his Judgment, said:

> ``4. The agreement was made conditional on registration of the strata plan by special condition 24 as follows:
>
> > `24. This Agreement and completion thereof is subject to and conditional upon the registration by the Registrar General of a Strata Plan pursuant to the Strata Titles Act, as amended, not less than twenty-four (24) months from the date hereof and in the event of such registration not being effected before or on the date than [sic] either party hereto shall have that right to rescind this Agreement by notice in writing to the other.'
>
> 5. Special condition 25 deals at length with the process of registering the strata plan and problems which may arise out of variations. Its provisions include: `The vendor will, as soon as possible, take steps to have the plan registered by the Land Titles Office.
>
> 6. These conditions operated with printed condition A6 which contains cll A6.1 and A6.2:
>
> A6 Unregistered plan
>
> If any of the properties described as a lot in an unregistered plan —
>
> > A6.1 The vendor must do everything reasonably necessary to have the plan registered within the plan registration time, with or without any minor alteration to the plan or any document to be lodged with the plan validly required or made by a statutory authority or the Registrar General.
> > A6.2 Normally, either party can rescind if the plan is not so registered.
>
> 7. The definitions in printed Cl1 include: `rescind' rescind this contract from the beginning.
>
> 8. The particulars on the first printed page say:`The plan registration time is 24 months after the date of this contract.'
>
> 9. In clA6.2 `normally' refers to what the vendor may do if the vendor complies with A6.1; the normal course is that contractual obligations are complied with. The right to rescind is conferred by printed condition A6. The reference in special condition 24 to `that right to rescind' is a cross reference to the right to rescind in printed condition A6. If the contract meant that that [sic] the vendor could commit a breach of cl A6.1 and then rescind there would be an absurdity because there would be no remedy for breach of A6.1. In the plain and ordinary meaning of these provisions, the right to rescind can only be exercised by the vendor in normal circumstances where the vendor has complied with cl A6.1.
>
> 10. If this result is not reached by the processes of construction or implication it is reached by the application of a principle of law referred to in Suttor v Gundowda Pty Ltd (1950) 81 CLR 418 at [140301]

> 441; see to Alghussein Establishment v Eton College [1988] 1 WLR 587.
>
> 11. The same result is reached by considering whether the terms of the contract impliedly make compliance by the vendor with printed condition A6.1 a condition of exercise of the right of rescission. If the tests for implication of a term referred to in Codelfa Construction Pty Ltd v State Rail Authority (NSW) (1982) 149 CLR 337 at 351-2, 404; 41 ALR 367 are applied this implication should be made, as the contract would lack business efficacy if the vendor could escape from it by delaying.
> 12. In my view printed cl A6 has both the character which appears from its express terms of a promise the breach of which would give rise to a liability for damages and also the character of a condition for the exercise of the vendor's right of rescission; breach of the promise is also failure of the condition in which the vendor can rescind.

13. The plaintiffs' counsel referred me to observations of McLelland CJ in Eq in Plumor Pty Ltd v Handley (1996) 41 NSWLR 30 at 34C-E; 7 BPR 14735. The operation of printed cl A6 as a condition made it inapplicable to the present case his Honour's observations which relate to the need to show a causal relationship. In any event there is in this case a causal relationship."

55. I must say that I have difficulty in accepting as correct the approach taken by Bryson J in Hawes v Cuzeno Pty Ltd (supra) both as to the construction accorded by his Honour to condition A6 and as to the appropriateness of implying into the contract thereunder consideration a term making compliance by the then vendor with condition A6.1, a condition of exercise of the right of rescission. In this regard, it is appropriate to note that both the decision of the High Court in Suttor v Gundowda Pty Ltd (supra) and the decision of the House of Lords in Alghussein Establishment v Eton College (supra) to which his Honour referred in paragraph 10 of his Judgment, involved the application, in each case, to the agreement then under consideration of what has been described as ``a rule of construction'' based upon a broad proposition that a party is not entitled to take advantage of his own default or wrong. In each of the cases to which his Honour referred reliance was placed upon the decision of the House of Lords in New Zealand Shipping Co Ltd v Societe des Ateiliers et Chantiers de France [1919] AC 1. Thus, in the speech of Lord Jauncey of Tullichettle, with whom Lord Bridge of Harwich, Lord Elwyn-Jones, Lord Ackner and Lord Goff of Chieveley agreed, in Alghussein Establishment v Eton College (supra) at 592-595 the following passages may be found:

> ``In the New Zealand Shipping case in the Court of Appeal [1917] 2 KB 717, Viscount Reading CJ said, at pp 723-724:
>
> > `Unless the language of the contract constrains the court to hold otherwise, the law of England never permits a party to take advantage of his own fault or wrong. In Malins v Freeman (1838) 4 Bing. N.C. 395, 399 Coltman J said: ``It is so contrary to justice that a party should avoid his own contract by his own wrong, that unless constrained, we should not adopt a construction favourable to such purpose.'' That appears to me to be the true underlying principle of the cases in which the word ``void'' has been construed as if it mean voidable. Unless there are clear words to the contrary, a clause making a contract void must be read subject to the condition that the party who is seeking to set up the invalidity is not himself in default.'
>
> And Scrutton LJ said, at p 724:
>
> > `... I think that clause 12 and all other clauses are to be read subject to an overriding condition or proviso that the party shall not take advantage of his own wrong and therefore is estopped from alleging invalidity of which his own breach of contract is the cause.'
>
> On appeal to this House, Lord Findlay LC said [1919] AC 1, 8:
>
> > `Questions of this sort have often arisen in case of provisions that a lease should be void on non-payment of rent or non performance of covenants by the lessee. It has always been held that the lessee could not take advantage of his own act or default to avoid the lease, and the expression generally employed has been
> >
> > [140302]
> >
> > [140302]
> >
> > that such proviso makes the lease voidable by the lessor, or void at the option of the lessor. The decisions on the point are uniform, and are really illustrations of the very old principle laid down by Lord Coke (Co. Litt. 206b) that a man shall not be allowed to take advantage of a condition which he himself brought about.'
>
> The speech of Lord Atkinson contained the following passage, at p 9:
>
> > `It is undoubtedly common for the two parties to a contract to stipulate by a clause in it that the contract shall be void upon the happening of an event over which neither of the parties shall have any control, cannot bring about, prevent or retard... But if the stipulation be that the contract shall be void on the happening of an event which one or either of them can by his own act or omission bring about, then the party, who by his own act or omission brings that event about, cannot be permitted either to insist upon the stipulation himself or to compel the other party, who is blameless, to insist upon it, because to permit the blameable party to do either would be to permit him to take advantage of his own wrong, in the one case directly, and in the other case indirectly in a round about way, but in either way putting an end to the contract....'

... Finally in Cheall v Association of Professional Executive Clerical and Computer Staff [1983] 2 AC 180, Lord Diplock referring to the New Zealand Shipping case said, at pp 188-189:

`In the course of the speeches, which are not entirely consistent with one another, reference was made by all their Lordships to the well known rule of construction that, except in the unlikely case that the contract contains clear express provisions to the contrary, it is to be presumed that it was not the intention of the parties that either party should be entitled to rely upon his own breaches of his primary obligations as bringing the contract to an end, i.e. as terminating any further primary obligations on his part then remaining unperformed. This rule of construction, which is paralleled by the rule of law that a contracting party cannot rely upon an event brought about by his own breach of contract as having terminated a contract by frustration is often expressed in broad language as ``A man cannot be permitted to take advantage of his own wrong".'

It only remains to refer to the respondent's argument that there is an absolute rule of law and morality which prevents a party taking advantage of his own wrong whatever the terms of the contract. My Lords I do not find it necessary to deal with this. For my part I have no doubt that the weight of authority favours the view that in general the principle is embodied in a rule of construction rather than in an absolute rule of law..."

56. Two things, as it seems to me, flow from the approach reflected in the Judgments to which Bryson J referred, they being:

(a) that, given that approach, there is no need for the implication of a term such as his Honour suggested; and
(b) that, in order that a party be held disentitled to exercise a right of rescission, it must appear that it was his default which brought about, or at least materially contributed to, the occurrence of the relevant event.

57. Support for the latter of these two propositions may be found in the Judgment of this Court in Nina's Bar Bistro Pty Ltd (formerly Mytcoona Pty Ltd) v MBE Corporation (Sydney) Pty Ltd [1984] 3 NSWLR 613 — a case involving a claim by a party, which was held to have failed to comply with a covenant to use its best endeavours to obtain the consent of a lessor to the assignment to it of a lease — in which it was held that, if non- compliance with a contractual obligation is to take away the defaulting party's right to terminate, there must be a direct causal relationship between the compliance and the failure to complete, the onus of proving which lies on the non-defaulting party, and there must be an absence of repudiation by the defaulting party prior to that time.

58. However, in the light of the admission by Pattern of the term pleaded in para. 5.4 of the Statement of Claim, it does not appear to be open to me to give effect to the views which I have set out above.

59. This notwithstanding, it remained incumbent upon Mr. Mitchell to establish that Pattern had in fact failed to comply with the obligation cast on it by additional condition 2.2 of the contract. The question thus is, whether it can properly be said that Pattern had failed to use all reasonable endeavours to procure the registration of a strata plan substantially in accordance with the draft strata plan, a question which is not concluded by the mere fact that no such plan was approved by the Council or registered by the Registrar General.

60. It is clear that, notwithstanding that, when it gave its original consent to the development application, Council required the deletion of the room in the roof void and the balcony, Pattern moved expeditiously to seek to have condition 5 deleted from that Development Consent. It is equally clear that, as the result of that action, Council, after the contract between Mr. Mitchell and Pattern had been entered into, acceded to modify the original condition 5. It is also clear that, albeit somewhat belatedly, Pattern then sought to have Council modify the substituted condition 5 with a view to increasing the size of the proposed balcony area, that further application not having been dealt with at the time when the Notice of Termination was forwarded to Mr. Mitchell's solicitors. It is equally clear, as Windeyer J found (para. 28 of his Judgment — see para. 45 (above)) that the consent would never have been further modified even if Pattern had acted more expeditiously with its application. This being so, it seems to me that Windeyer J did not fall into error when he held (para. 35 of his Judgment — see para. 46 (above)) that Pattern did make reasonable efforts to gain approval for its plan.

61. As Mr. Parker, on the hearing of the appeal, observed (T. 3), grounds of appeal 3 and 4 ``really go together''. That that is so is readily demonstrated by a reference to the speech of Viscount Radcliffe, when delivering the advice of the Judicial Committee in Selkirk v Romar Investments Limited [1963] 1 WLR 1415, 1422 -1424 a case which — in common with the decisions of the High Court in Godfrey Constructions Pty Limited v Kanangra Park Pty Limited (1972) 128 CLR 529 and Pierce Bell Sales Pty Limited v Fraser (1972-1973) 130 CLR 575 to which Mr. Parker also made reference in the course of his submissions — involved a purported rescission by a vendor of land in reliance upon a condition in the contract allowing the vendor to give notice of intention to rescind if ``unable or unwilling to satisfy or comply with'' a requisition. In the passage to which I have referred, his Lordship said:

> ``Now, on what can the appellant rest his claim to set aside the respondent's notice of rescission? It is plain enough that, so far as the terms of the contract go, the respondent is within its rights. Clause 3(3) is as much part of the various undertakings and stipulations that make up the total nexus of the parties' agreement as any other of its clauses, and it is in fact a stipulation that was included in the draft put forward by a purchaser. If a vendor, having stipulated for or been conceded such a right, is to be precluded from asserting it in any particular context, it must be by virtue of some equitable principle which enures for the protection of the purchaser; and it is not in dispute that courts of equity have on numerous occasions intervened to restrain or control the exercise of such a right of rescission in contracts for the sale of land, despite what, on the face of the contract, its terms seem to secure for the vendor.
>
> It does not appear to their Lordships, any more than it did to the judge who tried the action, that there is any room for uncertainty as to the nature of the equitable principle that is invoked in these cases. It has frequently been analysed, and frequently applied, by Chancery judges and, although the epithets that describe the vendor's offending action have shown some variety of expression, they are all related to the same underlying idea, and their variety is only due to the fact that, as each case is decided according to the whole context of its circumstances and the course of conduct of the vendor, one may illustrate more vividly than another some particular aspect of that idea. Thus, it has been said that a vendor, in seeking to rescind, must not act arbitrarily, or capriciously, or unreasonably. Much less can he act in bad faith. He may not use the power of rescission to get out of a sale `brevi manu' since by doing so he makes a nullity of the whole elaborate and protracted transaction. Above all, perhaps, he must not be guilty of `recklessness' in entering into
>
> [140304]
>
> [140304]
>
> his contract, a term frequently resorted to in discussions of the legal principle and which their Lordships understand connote an unacceptable indifference to the situation of a purchaser who is allowed to enter into a contract with the expectation of obtaining a title which the vendor has no reasonable anticipation of being able to deliver. A vendor who has so acted is not allowed to call off the whole transaction by resorting to the contractual right of rescission: see In re Jackson and Haden's Contracts ([1906] 1 Ch 412) Baines v Tweddle ([1959] Ch 679).
>
> Authorities or propositions of law which bear upon such situations have therefore no immediate relevance to what is now an issue, which is simply the question whether the respondent is to be held guilty of `recklessness' in the legal sense, in not warning the appellant before the contract was signed that there were certain evidential gaps in the proof of its title that it was unlikely to be able to fill up.

Their Lordships are satisfied that recklessness is not to be attributed to the respondent for this omission. While there have indeed been instances in which a vendor has been deprived of the right of rescission for entering into his contract in circumstances in which he had no reasonable assurance that he could convey the whole title for which he was contracting, his disqualification arises out of his carelessness or lack of prudence in the particular circumstances and not out of a mere failure to disclose the defect in title, much less the defect in the evidence of title, which rendered the title that he had to offer less than complete. Had the law been otherwise, the decision in Duddell v Simpson (1886) 2 Ch App 102) and In re Deighton and Harris' Contract ([1898] 1 Ch 458) could never have gone as they did, in favour of the vendor."

62. Even if — which, in the circumstances, I am prepared to do — one accepts that the principle described by Viscount Radcliffe is applicable to a case such as this, I am unable to accept Mr. Parker's submissions that, in entering into the contract with Mr. Mitchell, Pattern was guilty of ``recklessness'' and that, by reason of that fact, it was not entitled to rely upon the provisions contained in Additional Condition 2.4 of the contract. Although, at the time when the contract between Mr. Mitchell and Pattern was entered into, the Council, when granting consent to Pattern's Development Application, had imposed the original condition 5, the letter of 11 June 1999 requesting a review of (inter alia) that condition (see para. 12 (above)) would indicate that Council officers, when considering the merits of the original Development Application, had expressed a favourable view of it. Further, the application for review had by the time the contract was entered into been made and remained unresolved. Further still, as appears from what I have earlier recorded (paras. 16-17(above)), the application for review did lead to a variation to condition 5.

63. In seeking to support the submission that, in giving the Notice of Termination, Pattern had acted unreasonably and in bad faith, Mr. Parker sought to rely upon the Judgment of Gibbs J (as he then was) in Pierce Bell Sales Pty Limited v Fraser (supra) at 590 in which his Honour had prayed in aid the speech of Viscount Radcliffe in Selkirk v Romar Investments Ltd (supra) and also upon the Judgment of this Court in Alcatel Australia Ltd v Scarcella (1998) 44 NSWLR 349 and, in particular, on the Judgment of Sheller JA in the latter case where his Honour said (supra) at 368:

``If a contract confers power on a contracting party in terms wider than necessary for the protection of the legitimate interests of that party, the courts may interpret the power as not extending to the action proposed by the party in whom the power is vested or, alternatively, that the powers are being exercised in a capricious or arbitrary manner or for an extraneous purpose, which is another was (sic) of saying the same thing. Thus a vendor may not be allowed to exercise a contractual power where it would be unconscionable in the circumstances to do so: Pierce Bell Sales Pty Limited v Fraser (1973) 130 CLR 575 at 587."

and later supra at 369:

``The decisions in Renard Constructions and Hughes Brothers mean that in New South Wales a duty of good faith, both in performing obligations and exercising rights, may by implication be imposed upon parties as part of a contract. There is no reason why such a duty should not be implied as part of this lease. But it remains to decide whether the implication of that duty has any consequence in the resolution of the dispute the subject of this appeal."

[140305]

64. Even assuming — as, in the circumstances, I am prepared to do — that there was to be implied in the contract a term to the effect of that suggested by Sheller JA, it seems to me that the implication of such a duty had no consequence in the present case. I say this since, as Windeyer J recorded in para. 33 of his Judgment (see para. 46 (above)), the basis upon which, at trial, it was sought to demonstrate that the giving of the Notice of Termination was not bona fide was that an agent had been asked to give an estimate of the value of Unit 2 prior to the date upon which termination was available, an assertion which his Honour did not accept.

65. It follows, in my view, for the reasons which I have set out above, that the grounds of appeal sought to be advanced by Mr. Mitchell have not been made out.

66. This being so, I propose that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

68. Rolfe AJA: I agree with Powell JA.

OWNERS — STRATA PLAN NO 51487 v BROADSAND PTY LTD

(2002) LQCS ¶90-117

Court citation: [2002] NSWSC 770

New South Wales Supreme Court

Judgment delivered 29 August 2002

Contract — General contractual principles — Illegal and void contracts — Whether contracts illegal by statute — Nature of statutory prohibition — Whether entry into contract prohibited — Strata titles — Management and control — Managing agent must be licensed — Whether agreement appointed ``managing agent'' — Property Stock and Business Agents Act 1941 (NSW), sec 20(3); Strata Titles Act 1973 (NSW), sec 66(1), 68(1), 78(1) and (1AA).

These proceedings concerned a ``Management and Letting Services Agreement'' (``the agreement'' dated 11 January 1996 made between the Owners — Strata Plan No 51487 (``the plaintiff'') and Victoria Tower Management Pty Limited (``Victoria Tower''). The benefit of the agreement was assigned by Victoria Tower to an intermediate assignee which on 13 May 1998 by deed (``the deed of assignment'') assigned the agreement to Broadsand Pty Ltd (``the defendant'') pursuant to provisions contained in clause 11 of the agreement.

Strata Plan No 51487 was registered on 30 November 1995. The inaugural extraordinary general meeting was held on 4 December 1995. At that meeting the plaintiff appointed BCS Strata Management Pty Limited as ``managing agent of the body corporate in accordance with section 78'' of the Strata Titles Act 1973 (``the ST Act''), and delegated to it all of ``the powers, authorities, duties and functions of the body corporate'' but limited that appointment to end on the date of the first annual general meeting. It also resolved that the plaintiff enter into and execute the agreement, but without there being any limitation in either the resolution or the agreement of the time during which the agreement was to operate. There was no doubt that at that time Victoria Security did not hold a strata managing agent's licence under the Property, Stock and Business Agents Act 1941 (``the Agents Act'').

The minutes of the same meeting recorded the passing of a special resolution that repealed by-laws 12-29 and enacted special by-laws 1-28 (see para 11 of judgment for text of special by-law 28 — Restrictions on Management & Letting Activities).

The repeal of by-laws 12-29 and the enactment of special by-laws 1-28 was duly registered. There was no issue that the relevant resolution was, in the terms of sec 66(1)(d) of the ST Act, passed during the initial period and before the first annual general meeting which was held on 26 January 1996.

The deed of assignment was executed on 13 May 1998 pursuant to a resolution of an extraordinary general meeting of the plaintiff held on 6 May 1998. There was executed on the same day a tripartite deed among the plaintiff, the defendant and the Commonwealth Bank of Australia, whereby the plaintiff gave its consent to a mortgage over the benefit of the agreement to secure moneys borrowed by the defendant for the purchase of the agreement.

At an annual general meeting of the plaintiff on 21 March 2001, a resolution for the repeal of special by-law 28 was carried as a special resolution and subsequently registered.

The principal burden of the claim in these proceedings was that the agreement appointed Victoria Tower as a managing agent and was consequently beyond the power of the plaintiff or illegal as a contravention of sec 78(1AA) or sec 66(1)(d) of the ST Act or sec 20(3) of the Agents Act. The defendant argued that the plaintiff was estopped from denying the validity of the Agreement or had waived any objection to the validity of the Agreement. In addition, the defendant sought to have the resolution of the plaintiff repealing special by-law 28 declared invalid.

Held: management agreement void for illegality. By-law enacted during initial period conferring right of exclusive occupation on holder of unit invalid.

Was the agreement an agreement which fell within the terms of sec 78(1AA) of the Strata Titles Act?

1. The Court found that the agreement constituted an appointment of Victoria Tower as a ``managing agent and [the] delegation to it of at least some of... the powers, authorities, duties and functions of the plaintiff''. The agreement, on its proper construction, effected the appointment of Victoria Tower as a managing agent pursuant to sec 78(1AA) of the ST Act.

Was the agreement rendered void for illegality by reason of being entered into in breach of sec 78(1AA) or sec 66(1) of the Strata Titles Act?

2. For the same reasons that the Court found that the agreement was void for illegality because the entry into it was in contravention of sec 78(1AA), the agreement was also proscribed by sec 66(1)(a) of the ST Act and therefore void for contravention of that section.

Was the agreement rendered void for illegality by reason of its performance being in breach of sec 20(3) of the Agents Act?

3. Because neither Victoria Tower nor the defendant held the requisite licence under the Agents Act at the inception of the agreement, the performance of many of the functions provided for by the agreement by these parties would amount to a contravention of sec 20(3) of the Agents Act, and subsequently render the agreement void.

If the agreement was rendered void in any of the above ways is the plaintiff estopped from asserting that the contract is void for illegality?

4. Because the entry into the agreement contravened sec 78(1) of the ST Act and was void for illegality, ``this case is in a class where an estoppel cannot be availed of in the face of the statute. This is not a case where the rule contravened is one prescribed solely for the benefit of the person who claims to have the contract struck down for the illegality. In my view, the purpose of the provision is to provide a protection for the public or a section of the public''.

Was special by-law 28 validly repealed?

5. Special by-law 28 conferred, in substance, an exclusive right of use on the proprietor of Lot 252, while restricting the rights of all other proprietors in respect of this Lot. ``It is the substance which should be looked to rather than the form in determining whether a right is conferred within the meaning of sec 66(1)(a): Georgiadis v Australian and Overseas Telecommunications Corporation (1994) 179 CLR 297 at 305-306.

6. Special by-law 28 was a contract the entry into which was proscribed by sec 66(1)(a) of the ST Act. It therefore contravened sec 66(1)(a) and was wholly invalid. ``As the by-law was not valid, it matters not whether or not the conditions for its repeal were met. It should not be restored to the registered by-laws.

Judgment in full below

Hamilton J: These proceedings concern a ``Management and Letting Services Agreement'' dated 11 January 1996 made between the plaintiff and Victoria Tower Management Pty Limited (``Victoria Tower'') (``the agreement''). The benefit of the agreement was assigned by Victoria Tower to an intermediate assignee which on 13 May 1998 by deed (``the deed of assignment'') assigned the agreement to the defendant pursuant to provisions contained in clause 11 of the agreement. The principal burden of the claim in these proceedings is that the agreement appointed Victoria Tower as a managing agent and was consequently beyond the power of the plaintiff or illegal as contravening s 78(1AA) or s 66(1)(d) of the Strata Titles Act 1973 (``the STA'') or s 20(3) of the Property Stock and Business Agents Act 1941 (formerly the Auctioneers and Agents Act 1941) (``the Agents' Act''). The defendant, in addition to controverting those propositions, contends that the plaintiff is estopped from relying on them and also seeks to have declared invalid a resolution of the plaintiff repealing a special by- law as a result of which the defendant has been enjoying exclusive use of certain common property.

The agreement

2. The agreement, which was undoubtedly for reward, contained the following recitals:

``B The Body Corporate is responsible for the control, management and maintenance of the Common Property in the Strata Scheme under the Act.

...

D The Body Corporate has resolved to appoint the Management Company to perform duties and provide services on behalf of the Body Corporate for the control, administration, management and maintenance of the Strata Scheme.''

``Strata Scheme'' is defined in clause 1.1 as meaning ``the rights and obligations created by or under the subdivision of land by the Strata Plan and the Act''.

3. The agreement contained the following relevant operative provisions:

``2 APPOINTMENT & TERM

2.1 The Body Corporate appoints the Management Company to perform the duties and provide the services comprised in the Scheduled Works, the Non Scheduled Works, the Proprietors Services and the Letting Services for the Term.
2.2 The Management Company accepts the appointment.

3 DUTIES & POWERS OF MANAGEMENT COMPANY

3.1 The Management Company must by its employees, agents or subcontractors take all reasonable steps to: —

(a) perform the Scheduled Works;
...

3.3 Subject to the limitations contained in this Agreement, the Management Company may, either in its own right or as agent for the Body Corporate enter into agreements with other persons for the provision of services or materials for the proper performance of the Management Company's duties and powers.

3.4 Nothing in this Agreement imposes any obligation or confers any right on the Management Company to: —

(a) enforce the Special By-Laws or take any action in relation to Common Property by making applications or submissions to the Strata Titles or Commissioner or the Strata Titles Board or by instituting any proceedings in any court of competent jurisdiction;
(b) perform any power of a licensed managing agent;
(c) perform any duty or power of a technical or. [sic] specialist nature outside the scope of the Management Company's skill and expertise; or
(d) itself perform any of the services or provide any materials that are to be arranged or procured by the Management Company under the Scheduled Works, the Non-Scheduled Works, the Proprietors Services and/or the Letting Services."

4. The scheduled works are set out in Schedule 1 to the agreement as follows:

[140308]

[140308]

``1 Manage, supervise and arrange for the maintenance, cleaning, repair [sic] the Common Property so as to ensure that it is kept in good order and repair and to do all things necessary to protect the interests of the Body Corporate in respect to its property.

2 Report promptly to the Body Corporate on all things on Common Property that require repair, replacement or renewal with quotations and all matters creating a hazard or danger and to arrange for remedial action where practicable.

...

4 Establish and supervise a cleaning programme to regularly and properly clean and keep clean the paths, driveways, entrance lobbies, stairs, hallways, doors and windows (other than internal doors and windows of lots in the Strata Plan), facilities, car parking areas, amenities and other areas of the Common Property within, upon and around the apartment building forming part of the Strata Scheme.

...

6 Organise and supervise a maintenance programme and to ensure, subject to Body Corporate approval, the proper maintaining at all times of the apartment building forming part of the Strata Scheme, its appurtenances and surrounds and all piant [sic] and equipment used in connection with the building and the Common Property.

7 Arrange for the maintenance of plant and equipment being Common Property.

...

10 Advise the Body Corporate from time to time as to its recommendations for the management, maintenance and care of the apartment building forming part of the Strata Scheme.

...

15 Supervise control and regulate the parking of motor vehicles on Common Property.

...

17 Arrange for and supervise such licensed security guards as the Body Corporate may wish to employ and to act as coordinator of those security guards.

18 Arrange for and supervise such concierges as the Body Corporate may wish to employ and to act as coordinator of those concierges.

...

21 Comply with and carry out all reasonable and lawful directions by the Body Corporate to the Management Company in respect to the performance by the Management Company of its duties.

...

25 As far as the Management Company is reasonably able and lawfully capable, to keep order on the Common Property and take such precautions as it sees fit to safeguard Common Property against lawful entry or accident or damage."

5. The agreement also provides for the provision by the management company, at the request of a unit holder, of letting services: see clause 5 and Schedule 3.

The legislation

6. The STA was in force at the time the agreement was entered into. Later in 1996 it was repealed and replaced by the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (``the SSMA''). By s 78, so far as material, the STA provided:

``78(1) Subject to subsection (1A), a body corporate may, in general meeting and by instrument in writing, appoint a managing agent and may, in like manner, delegate to him:

(a) all of its powers, authorities, duties and functions;
(b) any one or more of its powers, authorities, duties and functions specified in the instrument; or
(c) all of its powers, authorities, duties and functions except those specified in the instrument, and may, in like manner, revoke the appointment and delegation or revoke in part the delegation.

(1AA) A body corporate shall not appoint a person as managing agent unless the person is the holder of a strata managing agent's licence issued pursuant to the Auctioneers and Agents Act 1941.

(1A) A body corporate may not, under subsection (1), delegate to a managing agent its power to make:

(a) a delegation under that subsection;
(b) a decision on a restricted matter within the meaning of section 75; or
(c) a determination under section 68(1)(j) or (k)(including such a determination made pursuant to section 68(4A)), or to levy contributions under section 68(1)(p).

[140309]

(2) A power, authority, duty or function the exercise or performance of which has been delegated under subsection (1) may, while the delegation remains unrevoked, be exercised from time to time in accordance with the delegation.

(3) A delegation under subsection (1) may be made subject to such conditions or such limitations as to the exercise or performance of all or any of the powers, authorities, duties or functions, or as to time or circumstances, as may be specified in the instrument of delegation.

(4) Notwithstanding any delegation made under subsection (1), the body corporate may continue to exercise or perform all or any of the powers, authorities, duties or functions delegated.

(5) Any act or thing done or suffered by a managing agent while acting in the exercise of a delegation under subsection (1) has the same force and effect as if it had been done or suffered by the body corporate and shall be deemed to have been done or suffered by the body corporate.

(9) A managing agent who exercises or performs a power, authority, duty or function pursuant to a delegation by a body corporate under subsection (1) shall, forthwith after its exercise or performance:

> (a) make a written record specifying the power, authority, duty or function and the manner of its exercise or performance; and
> (b) serve the record on the body corporate."

7. By s 54(3) the STA provided that the body corporate should have the control, management and administration of the common property and by s 68 it provided, so far as material:

``68(1) A body corporate shall, for the purposes of the strata scheme concerned, but subject to the provisions of any strata development contract affecting common property and to the operation of this Act in relation to the strata development contract:

> (a) control, manage and administer the common property for the benefit of the proprietors;
> (b) properly maintain and keep in a state of good and serviceable repair:
>
> > (i) the common property; and
> > (ii) any personal property vested in the body corporate..."

8. The STA also contained the following provisions:

``66(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act except subsection (3), a body corporate shall not, during the initial period:

> (a) amend, add to or repeal the by-laws in such a manner that a right is conferred or an obligation is imposed on one or more, but not all, proprietors or in respect of one or more, but not all, lots;
> ...
> (d) appoint a managing agent to hold office as such for a period extending beyond the holding of the first annual general meeting of the body corporate..."

Section 66(2), ``without affecting any other remedy available against the original proprietor'', gave to the body corporate and individual unit holders a right to recover from the body corporate any loss suffered as a result of a contravention of sub s (1). The SSMA by ss 51 and 52 now provides, as to the repeal of by-laws, that a by-law conferring on the owner of a lot ``a right of exclusive use or enjoyment of'' or ``special privileges in respect of'' any part of the common property may be repealed only with the written consent of the owner of the lot and in accordance with a special resolution of the owners corporation.

9. The Agents' Act, before the enactment of the SSMA, in s 4(1) defined ``strata managing agent'' as follows:

``Strata managing agent'' means a person (whether or not such person carries on any other business) who, for reward (whether monetary or otherwise), exercises or performs any function of a body corporate within the meaning of the Strata Titles Act 1973..., not being:

> (a) a person who:
>
> > (i) is the proprietor of a lot to which the strata scheme for which the body corporate is constituted relates,...
>
> [140310]
>
> [140310]
> > (ii) is the secretary or treasurer of the council of the body corporate, and
> > (iii) exercises or performs only functions of the body corporate required, by the by-laws in force in respect of the strata scheme... for which the body corporate is constituted, to be exercised or performed by the secretary or treasurer of that council or of the body corporate, or
>
> (b) a person who maintains or repairs any property for the maintenance or repair of which the body corporate is responsible."

By s 20(3) the Agents' Act provided:

``(3) A corporation shall not act as or carry on or advertise, notify or state that it acts as or carries on or is willing to act as or carry on the business of a real estate agent, a stock and station agent, a business agent, a strata managing agent, a community managing agent or an on-site residential property manager, as the case may be, unless the corporation has taken out a corporation licence and employs as the person in charge of its sole or principal place of business a person who holds a licence or licences of such one or more of the classes referred to in section 22 as may be appropriate."

The facts

10. Strata Plan 51487 was registered on 30 November 1995. The inaugural extraordinary general meeting was held on 4 December 1995. At that meeting the plaintiff appointed BCS Strata Management Pty Limited as ``managing agent of the body corporate in accordance with section 78" of the STA and delegated to it all of ``the powers, authorities, duties and functions of the body corporate" but limited that appointment to end on the date of the first annual general meeting. It also resolved that the plaintiff enter into and execute the agreement, but without there being any limitation in either the resolution or the agreement of the time during which the agreement was to operate. There is no doubt that at the time Victoria Security did not hold a strata managing agent's licence under the Agents' Act.

11. The minutes of the same meeting record the passing of a special resolution in the following terms:

``RESOLVED that the proprietors of Strata Plan 51487 under Section 58(2) of the Act to amend the by-laws contained in Schedule 1 of the Act in the following manner:

(a) RESOLVED that By-Laws 12-29 of Schedule 1 of the Strata Titles Act be repealed.
SPECIAL BY-LAW NO. 1"

There follows the body of special by-law 1 and 27 other special by-laws, ending with special by-law 28, which was in terms following:

``SPECIAL BY-LAW NO. 28

Restrictions on Management & Letting Activities

The proprietor or occupier of every lot except Lot 252 must not on any lot or the common property, except with the written consent of the proprietor of Lot 252, conduct or participate in the conduct of:

(a) the business of a letting agent; or
(b) the business of a pooled rent agency; or
(c) the business of on site residential manager; or
(d) any other business activity that is either:—

(i) an activity identical or substantially identical with any of the services relating to the management, control and administration of the parcel referred to in Special By-Law No 28 and/or any Agreement; and/or
(ii) an activity identical or substantially identical with any of the services provided to proprietors and occupiers of lots referred to in Special By-Law No 25 and/or any Agreement; and/or
(iii) an activity identical or substantially identical with any of the services relating to the letting of lots referred to in Special By-Law No 25 and/or any Agreement."

The repeal of by-laws 12 — 29 and the enactment of special by-laws 1 — 28 was duly registered. There is no issue that the relevant resolution was, in the terms of s 66(1)(d) of the STA, passed during the initial period and before the first annual general meeting, which was called for 19 January and held on 26 January 1996, after adjournments.

12. The deed of assignment was executed on 13 May 1998 pursuant to a resolution of an extraordinary general meeting of the plaintiff held on 6 May 1998. There was executed on the same day a tripartite deed among the plaintiff, the defendant and the Commonwealth Bank of Australia, whereby the plaintiff gave its consent to a mortgage over the benefit of the agreement to secure moneys borrowed by the defendant for the purchase of the agreement. There had been some resistance by the plaintiff to the assignment of the agreement by the original assignee to the defendant. Wendy Cull, the solicitor for the original assignee, at the extraordinary general meeting threatened litigation against the plaintiff, as recorded in the minutes, if the resolution were not passed.

13. Mr Dudek, a unit holder, gave evidence on behalf of the plaintiff. His affidavit annexed a circular letter to unit holders written on behalf [of] the proposed assignor and dated 29 April 1998, which he stated he had received before the meeting. That letter contained assertions that it ``appears that the chairman of the Owners Corporation, Mr J Daveney... is using our request for assignment of the business as an opportunity to mount an unprovoked attack on that Agreement.'' Having sought advice ``a long time ago'' about another matter ``Mr Daveney received advice from that solicitor raising the issue of the validity of the agreement itself.'' Mr Dudek admitted that he had read those assertions in that letter but denied he had had any conversation with Mr Daveney concerning the subject matter before the meeting. He further denied that he was aware before late 1999 of the illegality argued for in these proceedings. The letter of 29 April 1998 was argumentative in tone. The letter of advice said to have been received by Mr Daveney was not in evidence and no evidence was led, by plaintiff or defendant, as to the content of the advice. There is no reason not to accept Mr Dudek's denial of knowledge before 1999 and his evidence generally according to its tenor, and I do so.

14. The resolution for the repeal of by-law 28 was carried as a special resolution at the annual general meeting of the plaintiff on 21 March 2001 and subsequently registered.

The issues for determination

15. It appears to me that the issues requiring determination for the disposal of these proceedings are as follows:

> (1) Was the agreement an agreement which fell within the terms of s 78(1AA) of the STA?
> (2) Was it rendered void for illegality by reason of being entered into in breach of s 78(1AA) or s 66(1)?
> (3) Was it rendered void for illegality by reason of its performance being in breach of s 20(3) of the Agents' Act?
> (4) If the agreement was rendered void in any of the above ways is the plaintiff estopped from asserting that the contract is void for illegality or has it waived its right to make that assertion?
> (5) Was special by-law 28 validly repealed and, if so, ought it be reinstated?

The Law: s 78 of the STA and s 20 of the Agents' Act

16. The Court of Appeal considered the incidence of s 78 of the STA and s 20 of the Agents' Act in Gillett v Halwood Corporation Ltd (2000) NSW Titles Cases ¶80-055. It is important to note that in that case the resolution to enter into the agreement was a resolution not of the body corporate in general meeting but of the council of the body corporate.

17. In delivering the principal judgment Priestley JA said (at 60, 527 — 60,529):

``Appointment of ``Managing Agent'' under s 78(1)

Although the STA does not define `managing agent', consideration of the various provisions in the STA in which the term `managing agent' appears seems to me to support the view that a Pt IV Division 3 managing agent is a person or entity to whom a body corporate, pursuant to s 78(1) has delegated any one or more of its powers, authorities, duties and functions.

Section 78(1) states what at first sight seems to be a two step procedure whereby a body corporate may (i)`appoint a managing agent' and (ii)`delegate to him... any one or more of its powers, authorities, duties and functions'. `Managing agent' is not a term which, simply by itself, carries a precise, recognised meaning. Undefined, it may apply to a wide variety of contractual relationships. For this reason, I doubt whether, if a body corporate, in general meeting and by instrument in writing, appointed a managing agent without any delegation of any power, authority, duty or function, the appointment would have any content. Definite content would require the delegation to the appointee, in like manner to the appointment of the managing agent, of at least one of the corporate body's powers, authorities, duties and functions. Thus, it seems to me that for the purposes of Pt IV Division 3 it is the delegation of some power, authority, duty or function which constitutes the delegate a managing agent. On this view `managing agent' in s 78 is a convenient name for someone who has been delegated one or more of the relevant powers, authorities, etc.

...

Relationship between s 78(1) and by-law 2

The contrast between the key verbs in s 78(1) and by-law 2, `appoint... delegate' in the former and `employ' in the latter, in my opinion points clearly to the intended different functions of the two powers; the former is directed to the appointment of an agent in the nature of an independent contractor, over whom the body corporate will not have the power of control that an employer has over an employee; the latter is directed to the creation of an employment relationship, in the course of which the council will have the power of an employer to control directly the way in which its employed agent or servant carries out the employment `in connection with the exercise and performance' by the body corporate `of the powers (etc)... of the body corporate'. In a s 78(1) case, the managing agent will exercise one or more delegated powers etc of the body corporate, for the body corporate. In a by-law 2 case the body corporate will itself be exercising powers etc by the direct controlled employment of an agent or servant.

The body corporate in a s 78(1) case still has ultimate control of its managing agent delegate, either through the revocation power, or by use of its own continuing powers etc as spelt out in s 78(4), but it does not have the immediate and direct control that an employer has over an employee.

When the provisions of the STA and the Agents' Act are read together, they show in my opinion a legislative intention that when a person or entity had been delegated one or more of the powers, authorities, duties and functions of a body corporate and would not in the ordinary course be subject to the immediate control or supervision of the body corporate, then the body corporate was to have the protection following from the requirement that such an agent be licensed under the Agents' Act. When the body corporate through its council had the more direct control which in the ordinary course it would have over agents and servants employed pursuant to by-law 2, then a lesser degree of protection was necessary and it is understandable that it was not thought necessary that such persons should be brought within the scope of the Agents' Act.

Although the distinction I have sought to describe is sometimes difficult to apply, and no doubt there could be cases in which it would be difficult to decide whether a particular engagement should be seen as a contract involving an attempted delegation which could only be effected under s 78(1) or as effecting a relationship subject to the greater control implied by by-law 2, in the present case what Management is authorised and required to do under the Management Agreement and the degree of authority it is given, seem to me to fall quite clearly within the scope of s 78(1), so that the appointment of Management should not be properly categorised as the employment of agents or servants pursuant to by-law 2."

``Estoppel

Three considerations appeared as possibly adverse to the estoppel claim of Management and Developments. These were (a) the length of time that had passed between the appellant's becoming aware of the matters subsequently raised in her proceedings and the commencement of those proceedings; (b) application of the legal proposition that an estoppel could not be raised against a statute; and (c), so the appellant contended, the fact that the estoppel now relied on had never been pleaded below.

...

As to (b), arguably also the rules preventing estoppels succeeding in overcoming statutory provisions might be applicable. The ease law on this matter is not however in a very definitive state: for differing examples of what can happen when the point is raised see Kok Hoong v Leong Cheng Kweng Mines Ltd [1964] AC 993; Pratten v Warringah Shire Council (1969) 90 WN (Pt 1) (NSW) 134, and Wongala Holdings Pty Ltd v Mulinglebar Pty Ltd (1994) 6 BPR 13,527, at 13,534-5."

18. Handley JA said (at 60,537):

[140313]

``It follows in my opinion that the management agreement never came into force so as to bind the body corporate.

Fernbank did not, at any material time, hold a licence as a strata managing agent under the Auctioneers and Agents Act (the Agents' Act). Section 78(1AA) of the Strata Titles Act provides that a body corporate shall not appoint a person as managing agent unless that person is the holder of a strata managing agent's licence issued under the Agents' Act. The Strata Titles Act does not contain any definition of a managing agent, but this is defined in s 3 1) [sic] of the Agents' Act as meaning a person who, for reward, exercises or performs any function of a body corporate under the Strata Titles Act and this definition is implicit in s 78(1) of the Strata Titles Act.

Section 20(2B) of the Agents' Act prohibits a person from acting as a strata managing agent or carrying on the business of such an agent unless he is the holder of the relevant licence. The meaning of `carry on business' in this context is defined by s 3(3A)(a). Section 36 requires a strata managing agent to maintain a trust account with a bank into which all monies received for, or on behalf of, any person are to be paid until paid or disbursed at the direction of that person, and s 42 prohibits such an agent from bringing proceedings in any court to recover remuneration for services performed in that capacity unless he was the holder of the relevant licence when the services were performed.

If the general meeting had ratified the management agreement, or it had been re- executed after 15 June 1989, the making of that agreement by Fernbank when it did not hold the relevant licence would have contravened s 20(2B) of the Agents' Act and arguably the agreement would have been illegal and void. The question of illegality does not strictly arise because the Court has held the agreement was never validly executed or ratified, and it is not necessary to say anything further on this topic."

Handley JA said that he agreed with the reasons of Priestley JA and Priestley JA that he agreed with the additional reasons of Handley JA. Powell JA agreed with the judgments of both the other Judges. In that case the Court of Appeal found that the agreement entered into did indeed appoint a managing agent and was invalid as having been effected by the council and not by the body corporate in general meeting contrary to the provisions of s 78(1). There was an argument as to whether or not the agreement could be given effect to by estoppel and this was remitted to the Court below for decision. The proceedings were settled before that further trial took place.

The Law: Illegality and estoppel in the face of a statute

19. A convenient starting point in respect of this aspect of the law of illegality of contracts is the well known passage from the advice of the Privy Council in Kok Hoong v Leong Cheong Kweng Mines Limited [1964] AC 993 where their Lordships, having referred at 1015 to the ``principle... that a party cannot set up an estoppel in the face of a statute", said at 1016 — 1017:

``It has been said that the question whether an estoppel is to be allowed or not depends on whether the enactment or rule of law relied upon is imposed in the public interest or `on grounds of general public policy'... But a principle as widely stated as this might prove to be rather an elusive guide, since there is no statute, at least public general statute, for which this claim might not be made. In their Lordships' opinion a more direct test to apply in any case such as the present, where the laws of moneylending or monetary security are involved, is to ask whether the law that confronts the estoppel can be seen to represent a social policy to which the Court must give effect in the interests of the public generally or some section of the public, despite any rules of evidence as between themselves that the parties may have created by their conduct or otherwise....

General social policy does from time to time require the denial of legal validity to certain transactions by certain persons. This may be for their own protection, as in the case of the infant or other category of persons enjoying what is to some extent a protected status, or for the protection of others who may come to be engaged in dealings with them, as for instance the creditors of a bankrupt. In all such cases there is no room for the application of another general and familiar policy of the law that a man may, if he wishes, disclaim a statutory provision enacted for his benefit, for what is for a man's benefit and what is for his protection are not synonymous terms. Nor is it open to the Court to give its sanction to departures from any law that reflect such a policy, even though the party concerned has himself behaved in such a way as would otherwise tie his hands.''

20. The decision in Kok Hoong was considered and applied by the Full Court of this Court in Barilla v James (1964) 81 WN (Pt 1) (NSW) 457. In that case, the Full Court (by majority — Walsh and Wallace JJ, Asprey J dissenting) held that if the estoppel asserted were made out — and in the view of the majority it was not — then the policy of the Landlord and Tenant (Amendment) Act 1948 would not permit a party to be estopped from relying on rights under it. Walsh J concluded at 464, having referred to the Kok Hoong test:

``In my opinion these categories of exclusion, whether brought into being by means of the definition of `prescribed premises' or by the introduction of section 5A, must be treated as fixed exclusively by the Act, irrespective of any divergence from them which the parties have sought to bring about, whether by express agreement or by conduct. Subject only to the exceptions which the Legislature has defined, effect must be given to the `general social policy' of the Act.''

21. In Pratten v Warringah Shire Council (1969) 90 WN (Pt 1) 134 at 143-144 Street J approved the following statement of principle in Spencer Bower & Turner on Estoppel by Representation (see 3rd ed, 1977 at [141]) as follows:

``A contract ultra vires a statute (for example) cannot be validated by an application of an estoppel....''

22. The conclusion that a disobedience of s 78(1AA) rendered a contract void for illegality was reached by Brownie J in Thomas v Regal West Pty Ltd (1991) NSW Titles Cases ¶ 80-010.

The Law: Principles relevant to the construction of the agreement

23. One of the problems that arises in relation to the construction of the agreement is the potential conflict or tension between the apparently general terms of the scheduled works which the management company is by clause 2.2 appointed to perform and the limitation sought to be imposed by clause 3.4(d). The principles to be applied in the construction of an agreement were compendiously stated by Gibbs J in Australian Broadcasting Commission v Australian Performing Right Association Limited (1973) 129 CLR 99 at 109-110 as follows:

``It is trite law that the primary duty of a court in construing a written contract is to endeavour to discover the intention of the parties from the words of the instrument in which the contract is embodied. Of course the whole of the instrument has to be considered, since the meaning of any one part of it may be revealed by other parts, and the words of every clause must if possible be construed so as to render them all harmonious one with another. If the words used are unambiguous the court must give effect to them, notwithstanding that the result may appear capricious or unreasonable, and notwithstanding that it may be guessed or suspected that the parties intended something different. The court has no power to remake or amend a contract for the purpose of avoiding a result which is considered to be inconvenient or unjust. On the other hand, if the language is open to two constructions, that will be preferred which will avoid consequences which appear to be capricious, unreasonable, inconvenient or unjust, `even though the construction adopted is not the most obvious, or the most grammatically accurate' to use the words from earlier authority cited in Locke v Dunlop (1888) 39 Ch D 387, at p 393, which, although spoken in relation to a will, are applicable to the construction of written instruments generally; see also Bottomley's Case (1880) 16 Ch D 681, at p 686. Further, it will be permissible to depart from the ordinary meaning of the words of one provision so far as is necessary to avoid an inconsistency between that provision and the rest of the instrument. Finally, the statement of Lord Wright in Hillas & Co Ltd v Arcos Ltd (1932) 147 LT 503, at p 514, that the court should construe commercial contracts `fairly and broadly, without being too astute or subtle in finding defects' should not, in my opinion, be understood as limited to documents drawn by businessmen for themselves and without legal assistance (cf Upper Hunter County District Council v Australian Chilling and Freezing Co Ltd (1968) 118 CLR 429, at p 437)."

And see State Lotteries Office v Burgin NSWCA, 13 May 1993 unreported per Kirby P (as his Honour then was). Gibbs J's dictum that a construction should be preferred which avoids ``capricious, unreasonable, inconvenient or unjust'' consequences has been cited in the Court of Appeal by Hope JA in TCN Channel 9 v Hayden Enterprises Pty Ltd (1989) 16 NSWLR 130 at 149 and by single Judges, eg, by Rolfe J in Wilkinson v Feldworth Financial Services Pty Ltd (1998) 29 ACSR 642 at 741. [140315]

24. There is also a well established legal doctrine that, where a relationship of a particular sort is established by the ambit of the rights conveyed or duties imposed by an agreement between parties, then a declaration in the agreement that the relationship is not to have that legal characterisation will be ineffective: the characterisation of the transaction will be governed by the substance of the agreement and not by the parties' declaration in such cases. A well known example which has been cited is the decision of the High Court of Radaich v Smith (1959) 101 CLR 209 relating to leases. If one party gives another exclusive occupation of premises for a term, this being of the very nature of a lease, then a stipulation that the arrangement is one of licence and not of lease will be ineffective. As Windeyer J said at 222, if the rights that the instrument creates... be the rights of a tenant, it does not avail either party to say that a tenancy was not intended." And see The Wik Peoples v The State of Queensland (1996) 187 CLR 1 per Toohey J at 110 — 111 and Gaudron J at 152; Lewis v Bell (1985) 1 NSWLR 731; KJRR Pty Ltd v Commissioner of State Revenue [1999] 2 VR 174. The principle had been earlier discussed in the English Court of Appeal in Weiner v Harris [1910] 1 KB 224 where Cozens-Hardy MR said at 290:

``It is quite plain that by the mere use of a well-known legal phrase you cannot constitute a transaction that which you attempt to describe by that phrase. Perhaps the commonest instance of all, which has come before the Courts in many phases, is this: Two parties enter into a transaction and say `It is hereby declared there is no partnership between us.' The Court pays no regard to that. The Court looks at the transaction and says `Is this, in point of law, really a partnership? It is not in the least conclusive that the parties have used a term or language intended to indicate that the transaction is not that which in law it is.' So here the mere fact that goods are said to be taken on sale or return is not in any way conclusive of the real nature of the contract. You must look at the thing as a whole and see whether that is the real meaning and effect of it."

The contentions

25. The plaintiff contends, so far as the question of whether the agreement falls within s 78(1) is concerned, that the case is substantially indistinguishable from Gillett (supra). The defendant has carried out an analysis of the differences between the contract dealt with by the Court of Appeal in Gillett (a full copy of which has by agreement of the parties been furnished to the Court) and the agreement in this case. The defendant asserts that, whereas the contract in Gillett committed the management of the property to the agent, the agreement in this case rather requires the performance by the agent of specified services. It contends that this case can be distinguished because the agreement by item 21 of Schedule 1 reserves to the body corporate the right to give directions to the management company with respect to the performance of its duties during the currency of the agreement; this is an agreement under which the defendant is in effect an employee. It also relies heavily on clause 3.4(b). The defendant says that ``managing agent'' in that clause equates or includes ``strata managing agent'' in s 78 and that the effect of the clause is to read down the powers conferred by the agreement so as to exclude the conferral of any that would lead to contravention of s 78.

26. In Gillett, the matter was concluded by the characterisation of the contract as within s 78, because the appointment was made by the council, not the general meeting. Here, the appointment was by the general meeting, so the question arises, if the contract be within s 78, whether it is void for illegality. The plaintiff contends that it is: being a contract the entry into which is specifically forbidden by the statute, it is plainly illegal and void. The plaintiff also contends that, if the agreement is caught by s 78, the effect of s

66(1)(d) is that it is either rendered totally void or cannot operate after the date of the first annual general meeting, which is long past. The defendant says that even if there were a contravention of statute ``that part of the Scheduled Works which confers a delegation could be severed without altering the practical duties undertaken by the defendant."

27. The defendant says that the statutory prohibition was for the benefit of the plaintiff only. If the agreement did contravene s 78, then the plaintiff was prevented by the doctrines of estoppel or waiver from complaining about any illegality. The plaintiff replies that the provisions were for the benefit of a wider class, so that there can be no estoppel in the face of the statute. The factual basis on which the estoppel (or waiver) is said to arise was conveniently summarised in the defendant's contentions document as follows:

``27 In the alternative, the Plaintiff is estopped from denying the validity of the Agreement or has waived any objection to the validity of the Agreement.

28 As at 6 May 1998, the Plaintiff was aware of the matters upon which it now relies to advance its submission that the Agreement is void by reason of illegality. Nevertheless, by its conduct, the Plaintiff:

(1) Represented that they would not seek to rely upon the asserted illegality which representation was relied upon by the Defendant in entering into the Agreement and the Deed; and

(2) Waived its rights to rely upon such assertion.

29 The Plaintiff is estopped from relying upon the assertion that the Agreement is void for illegality by reason of its conduct.

30 Public policy considerations do not preclude the Defendant from relying upon estoppel or waiver in the present case."

The plaintiff says that, even if it is not correct that the doctrine of estoppel has no operation, no factual basis for an estoppel or waiver has been established.

28. So far as special by-law 28 is concerned, the defendant says that it was duly enacted and, in the absence of the defendant's written consent, its purported repeal was invalid. Alternatively, its repeal was an abuse of power. The plaintiff says that the by-law was never enacted: the relevant portion of the minutes of the meeting (which mirror those of the notice) simply do not contain words of resolution relating to the 28 special by-laws. Furthermore, it does not confer an exclusive right on the proprietor of one lot within the meaning of s 51 of the SSMA, so that the defendant's consent to its repeal was not necessary. However, if these submissions be wrong, the by-law was enacted during the initial period and was caught by s 66(1)(a). The resolution enacting it was either void or could not operate past the date of the first annual general meeting, so that the by-law is not in force and its repeal was otiose.

Conclusions

29. Was the agreement entered into in breach of s 78(1AA) of the STA? Although its construction is not without difficulty, I have come to the conclusion that the agreement effected the appointment of Victoria Tower as a managing agent within the meaning of the subsection. The primary proposition of Mr McDougall, of Queen's Counsel for the plaintiff, was that the agreement ``constituted an appointment of the company... as managing agent and delegation to it of at least some of... the powers, authorities, duties and functions of the plaintiff." By reason of the authority of Gillett, he said, this meant that there was an appointment within the subsection. In the end, I have accepted that the propositions in the quoted words are a correct statement of the effect of the agreement on its proper construction. Also, in my view, the agreement on its proper construction creates a relationship within which the agent is to perform the agreement on its part as a contractor acting independently, perhaps with some small and specific limitations, and not as an employee subject to the degree of supervision and direction inherent in the employment relationship. Bearing in mind the decision in Gillett, it follows from these conclusions that the appointment contravenes the subsection.

30. The basis of my conclusions is as follows. I am of the view that the appointment is effected by clause 2.1 of the agreement, which expressly uses the word ``appoints'' in relation to the performance of duties and the provision of services. The delegation is effected by clause 3.1, which imposes an obligation on the agent to perform, inter alia, the Scheduled Works. Schedule 1 is somewhat of a mishmash of generality and particularity, but opens in the most general terms with a first item which imposes a requirement to manage, supervise and arrange for the maintenance, cleaning and repair of the common property in terms which closely echo those specifying the duties of wide and general ambit imposed on the body corporate by s 68(1) (a) and (b) of the STA. It was submitted by the defendant that the duty imposed by the agreement was not to manage (as in the case of the Gillett contract), but only to provide services to the body corporate for the purposes of its management of the common property. However, although that may be the purport of the language of recital D, it is not the language by which clause 3.1 imposes the obligation to do the work specified in Schedule 1, including item 1. Subsequent items in the Schedule cast in particular terms may be thought to fall within the obligation in item 1, but the effect is not in my view to read down the generality of item 1. Equally, I do think the slightly strange requirement in item 2 to submit quotations in respect of part only of the subject matter of that item (and not repeated elsewhere in Schedule 1) is indicative that the agent generally cannot act without the prior approval of the body corporate or otherwise of employee status. (The juxtaposition of items 1 and 2 suggests strongly that ``things'' in item 2 refers to chattels.) Equally, the power to give directions in item 21 does not in my view indicate employee status; indeed the fact that it is included in the agreement suggests the contrary: directions could be given to an employee (as opposed to a contractor) without special stipulation. And the agent may in its own right engage persons for the provision of services for the performance of its duties: clause 3.3. The Court of Appeal has already pointed out in Gillett that the fact that a body corporate can retake complete control by termination of the contract in appropriate cases or by itself performing acts which fall within the scope of the contract under statutory power does not mean that the relationship is not one in which the wide discretion inherent in the role of an independent contractor is destroyed. The precautionary reservation in the agreement of a right to act does not have any different effect. In coming to the above conclusions I have taken into account all the terms of the agreement.

31. Perhaps the defendant's most significant argument is that based upon clause 3.4(b), which is to the effect that the agreement imposes no obligation and confers no right on the management company to ``perform (sic) any power of a licensed managing agent''. It is said in the defendant's written submissions that this provision ``materially affects the relationship''. But the argument faces considerable difficulties. The meaning of the paragraph is far from clear. Is ``managing agent'' in the paragraph intended to be coterminous with ``managing agent'' in s 78(1)? What are the powers of a licensed managing agent intended to be referred to? Why are powers referred to and not, say, duties? And how are the parties to determine whether in doing some act the agent is or is not ``performing''(itself a curious use of language) any such power, so that it may be known whether it is acting within or without the terms of the agreement? May the reference be to the agent's functions in relation to letting units contained in Schedule 3? It seems to me that the paragraph is virtually devoid of any meaning that can be ascertained. In these circumstances, I am of the view that Mr McDougall's submission is correct that it cannot have the operation contended for by Mr Corsaro, of Senior Counsel for the defendant. On the one hand, a contract should be construed so as to avoid invalidity if possible: Lewison op cit 6.09, 6.12. On the other it should be construed so as to make commercial sense (see the Australian Broadcasting Commission case, (supra)). It does not seem to me that the paragraph has sufficient clarity to preclude the result that the agreement, on its proper construction effected a delegation.

32. If the intended effect of clause 3.4(b) is to declare the agent appointed by the agreement not a managing agent or the agreement not an agreement within s 78(1), then it cannot be efficacious for that purpose if the substance be otherwise: see Radaich v Smith and the discussion in [24] above. On the one hand, Mr Corsaro has submitted that clause 3.4(b) ``materially affects the relationship'', whereas the corresponding provision in Gillett was a ``deeming'' provision. On the other hand, he said in oral argument that there is no infringement of the statute ``because we recognise that we are not strata managing agents. '' In any event, no characterisation by the parties of the legal nature of the relationship can prevail over its substance.

33. Was the agreement void for illegality for contravention of s 78(1AA) or s 66(1)(d)? It is therefore my view that the agreement falls within s 78(1) of the STA. Whilst the defendant argued vigorously that the agreement should not be so characterised, in the event of it being so characterised it argued but faintly that it did not contravene s 78(1AA). It relied heavily upon the defence of estoppel to which I shall in due course turn. I share the view expressed by Brownie J in the Regal case (supra) that an agreement entered into in defiance of the statutory proscription effected by s 78(1AA) is void for illegality. Accordingly, I hold that the agreement in this case is void for illegality because the entry into it was in contravention of s 78(1AA). In my view, for the same reason, the contract is proscribed by s 66(1)(a) and void for contravention of that provision. In my view there can be no question of severance. It is not easy to tell what would need to be severed to cure the illegality and the defendant put no proposal more precise than that quoted in [26] above. In any event, any exercise of severance to remove the delegation which I have found was made would alter the nature rather than the extent of the contract: see McFarlane v Daniell (1938) 38 SR (NSW) 337 per Jordan CJ at 345; Thomas Brown and Sons Limited v Fazal Deen (1962) 108 CLR 391 per curiam at 411; Humphries v The Proprietors ``Surfers Palms North'' Group Titles Plan 1955 (1994) 179 CLR 597; Bristar Pty Ltd v The Proprietors ``Ocean Breeze'' Building Units Plan 1955 [1997] 1 QdR 117.

34. Was the agreement void for illegality for contravention of s 20(3) of the Agents' Act? The situation as to whether the agreement is void for illegality because its performance would contravene s 20(3) of the Agents' Act is perhaps not so clear. However, in my view, the carrying out of many of the central functions which it provides shall be carried out by the agent would contravene that section if performed by a party which did not hold the requisite licence, as Victoria Tower did not at the inception of the contract and as the defendant apparently still does not. In my view the agreement is also void for contravention of s 20(3) of the Agents' Act, although it is not necessary so to find for the decision of this case in view of the clear conclusions I have come to as set out in [33].

35. Is the plaintiff estopped from asserting that the agreement is void for illegality? So far as estoppel is concerned, I do not find that the case for an estoppel is here made out on the facts. As has been pointed out in recent decisions, the principle now to be regarded as underlying the various concepts of estoppel known to the law and to equity is unconscionability. Here the unconscionability relied on is agreeing to the assignment of the agreement to the defendant knowing of the illegality subsequently complained of, or at least of the facts from which that illegality arises. It should be borne in mind that the onus of establishing an estoppel lies upon the party asserting it. What must be established in the case of, for instance, an estoppel arising from a verbal representation is that the representation was clear and unambiguous: see Spencer Bower and Turner op cit [83]; Discount & Finance Ltd v Gehrig's NSW Wines Ltd (1940) 40 SR (NSW) 598 per Jordan CJ at 603. Equally, in relation to representations made by conduct, ``the same principles are applicable to equivocal acts or conduct'': Spencer Bower and Turner op cit [86]. Here, as is plain from the manner in which the defendant casts its case, the necessary unconscionability must be made out by establishing that the plaintiff knew of the illegality now relied on or, at least, of the facts and matters constituting it at the time of its participation in the assignment of the agreement. In my view, the plaintiff's submissions that this is not established on the material available are correct. Mr Dudek did not know of the illegality when he voted. The letter of 29 April 1998 did not tell him with any clarity the content of the letter Mr Daveney received, nor does the evidence show any more of what Mr Daveney knew. There is no basis for finding a representation that the plaintiff would not rely on a defect of which it knew, or any basis on which it could be found there was a common assumption to that effect. I find that the estoppel alleged is not established, even if the doctrine of estoppel could operate in the circumstances. Equally, no factual basis is made out for a waiver: apart from anything else, there was no discovery on the plaintiff's part of a state of affairs which put it to an election as to which of alternative courses it would follow.

36. In any event, it is my view that, by virtue of the proscription created by s 78(1AA), this case is in a class where an estoppel cannot be availed of in the face of the statute. This is not a case where the rule contravened is one prescribed solely for the benefit of the person who claims to have the contract struck down for the illegality. In my view, the purpose of the provision is to provide a protection for the public or a section of the public. That section of the public is the persons who become or may become at any time within the operation of the contract the holder of an interest in a lot in a strata scheme. That includes both prospective purchasers, prospective mortgagees and, indeed, the prospective holders of any interests.

In light of the fact that such persons may be committed to a long term relationship with someone who was related to the original developer or promoter of the strata scheme and, in any event, without having had any opportunity to participate in the selection of the manager or the terms on which the manager is engaged some protection should be given to those people by the manager being a person required to hold a statutory licence and subject at the time of the grant of the licence and on an ongoing basis to the supervision of a public authority in relation to certain matters as to their knowledge, skill and integrity. In my view, therefore, estoppel will not run in the face of this statute. As was said long ago by Lord Mansfield CJ in Holman v Johnson (1775) 1 Cowp 341 at 343; 98 ER 1120 at 1121:

``The objection, that a contract is immoral or illegal as between plaintiff and defendant, sounds at all times very ill in the mouth of the defendant. It is not for his sake, however, that the objection is ever allowed; but it is founded in general principles of policy, which the defendant has the advantage of, contrary to the real justice, as between him and the plaintiff, by accident, if I may so."

In those circumstances reliance upon estoppel cannot avail the defendant. Equally, the defendant cannot rely on waiver.

37. Was special by-law 28 validly repealed? In my view, a resolution purporting to propound by-law 28 was passed. Despite the lack of words of enactment, in my view the resolution should be construed to effect the adoption of the 28 special by-laws as well as the repeal of by-laws 12 — 29. It seems to me that the new by-laws were encompassed and incorporated in the resolution effected by the word ``RESOLVED". Despite the lack of express words of enactment or adoption the intention is plain. I hold that the by-law does fall within s 66(1)(a). Although it does in terms confer a right on the proprietor of lot 252, it restricts the rights of all other proprietors in respect of the lot so as confer in substance an exclusive right of use on that proprietor. It is the substance which should be looked to rather than the form in determining whether a right is conferred within the meaning of s 66(1)(a): see Georgiadis v Australian and Overseas Telecommunications Corporation (1994) 179 CLR 297 per curiam at 305-306. If this were not so, the section could be easily circumvented by the use of negative language. However, I am of the view that the by-law was not validly enacted in the first instance. It is not in contest that it was during the initial period that the resolution adding it was passed. It contravenes s 66(1)(a). It was a contract the entry into which was proscribed by that provision. In my view it is wholly invalid. I do not accept the submission that the only remedy for contravention of s 66(1) is recovery proceedings against the original proprietor. I do not think there can be derived from the provision or extension of rights of compensation against the original proprietor by s 66(2) the removal or any limitation of a right to have the by-law declared invalid. If my conclusion that it is wholly invalid be not correct, the by-law could not operate beyond the initial period. It is not necessary to deal with the submission that its enactment was an abuse of power. As the by-law was not valid, it matters not whether or not the conditions for its repeal were met. It should not be restored to the registered by-laws.

38. An appointment will be made for short minutes to be brought in to give effect to my conclusions. Costs may be dealt with at that time.

CASTLE CONSTRUCTIONS PTY LTD v THE OWNERS STRATA PLAN 53342 and ORS

NSWSC citation: Castle Constructions Pty Ltd v The Owners Strata Plan 53342 and Ors [1999] NSWSC 1107.

Supreme Court of New South Wales

Judgment delivered 17 November 1999

Strata schemes — Affairs of owners corporation controlled by original owner — Application by lot owners for appointment of strata managing agent — Appointment by Strata Schemes Board without hearing original owner concerning choice of agent — Whether denial of natural justice — Whether same solicitor should represent owners corporation and applicant lot owners — Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW), sec 162, 200; Justices Act 1902 (NSW), sec 107.

Castle was the builder, developer and original owner of a strata scheme in respect of a five-storey commercial and residential development. Over half the lots were sold and Castle retained ownership of about 40% of the unit entitlement. With the help of a few other lot owners who supported Castle, it was able to retain control of the affairs of the owners corporation.

Fifteen lot owners applied to the Strata Schemes Board for the appointment of a strata managing agent pursuant to sec 162 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW), complaining that the management of the strata scheme was not working satisfactorily primarily because of the dysfunctional relationship between Castle and its associates and the majority of the other lot owners. The Board found that the complaint was established and appointed an agent to exercise all of the functions of the owners corporation, chairperson, secretary, treasurer and executive committee of the strata scheme. It made a number of adverse findings against Castle and its principal, including wrongful expropriation of some common property.

Castle sought an order from the Supreme Court of New South Wales that the decision of the Board be set aside. It argued that there was an automatic stay of execution pending the determination of the appeal (by virtue of sec 200 of the Strata Schemes Management Act and sec 107 of the Justices Act 1902 (NSW)) or, alternatively, that the Court should grant a stay of execution. It relied on an alleged denial of natural justice arguing that the Board had said at the conclusion of the hearing that, if it thought that an agent should be appointed, the parties would be written to and given the opportunity to nominate proposed appointees. This did not happen and the Board made its orders without hearing Castle, which forced it to apply for variation and placed it in a position of disadvantage.

Castle also argued that the owners corporation and the 15 lot owners who sought to uphold the Board's decision should not be represented by the same solicitor. It contended that the owners corporation was bound to act in the interests of the lot owners as a whole and that, in the present case, there was a marked division of opinion as to such interests among the owners.

Held: order appointing agent quashed; question of who should be strata managing agent referred back to Strata Schemes Board.

1. When an issue is raised and the Board states that it is going to take a particular course if it decides that a strata managing agent should be appointed, it should follow that course. If it changes its mind, it should advise the parties and give them an adequate opportunity to deal with the issue having regard to the changes made. It was incorrect to make the orders first and then hear the parties on the particular issue.

2. Given the Board's findings, it could not reasonably be disputed that an agent should be appointed. The only question was who should be appointed. Essentially, the rules of procedural fairness must be followed. Castle had to nominate other qualified strata managing agents who were willing and competent and establish substantial reasons why the agent appointed by the Board was unsatisfactory. These were questions of fact for the Board member.

[140121]

3. The interests of the owners corporation and of the 15 lot owners were not identical and the same solicitor should not have acted for these parties. The owners corporation had to protect the interests of the lot owners as a whole and its focus and approach would necessarily be different. While it was entitled to uphold the Board's orders it had to do so from the perspective of the best interests of the lot owners as a whole. It was not sufficient to say that both the 15 lot owners and the owners corporation wanted the appeal dismissed.

Full text of judgment below

Smart AJ: Castle Constructions Pty. Limited (``Castle'') seeks an order that the decisions and orders of 16 August 1999 of Mr. G. Cochrane sitting as the Strata Schemes Board be set aside and that the application of some 15 owners of strata lots that a strata managing agent be appointed pursuant to s. 162 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 to exercise all of the functions of the owners corporation, chairperson, secretary, treasurer and executive committee of Strata Scheme No. SP53342 be dismissed.

2. By s. 200 of the Act an appeal lies to the Supreme Court against an order made by the Board under Chapter 5 in the same cases and in the same way as it would lie under Part 5 of the Justices Act 1902 if the order were a determination that a Justice or Justices made, at the time the order took effect, in the exercise of summary jurisdiction on an information or complaint. Section 104(1) of the Justices Act permits a defendant against whom an order has been made to appeal on any of the following grounds

> (a) a ground that involves a question of law alone,
> (b) a ground that involves a question of mixed law and fact, but only with the leave of the Supreme Court,
> (c) the ground that the... order... cannot be supported having regard to the evidence.

3. Castle's statement of grounds raises a large number of complaints, some of which seem to involve alleged errors of fact. There is a complaint of a denial of natural justice in the way in which Mr. Alan John Donald was appointed as the Strata Managing Agent.

4. At the hearing before the Strata Board on 19 and 20 April 1999, the 2nd to 16th defendants (the 15 lot owners) sought to establish that the management of the strata scheme was not working satisfactorily primarily because of the dysfunctional relationship between Castle and its associates and the majority of other lot owners in the strata scheme. In its detailed and lengthy reasons the Board found that this complaint was established and made the appointment mentioned.

5. The builder, developer and original owner of the strata scheme in respect of premises at 134-145 Sailors Bay Road, Northbridge, being a five storey commercial and residential development with above basement parking was Castle, whose principal is Mr. V. Lahoud. Over half of the lots were sold. Castle retained the ownership of about fifteen lots which held about 40% of the unit entitlement. The Board found that with the help of a few other lot owners who supported Castle, it and Mr. Lahoud were able to retain control of the affairs of the owners corporation.

6. The Board made a series of rather strong adverse findings against Castle and Mr. Lahoud including a wrongful expropriation of some common property. Mr. Lahoud was not regarded as a witness of truth in important respects. Some of his explanations for what appeared to be dubious or wrongful conduct were not accepted. The Board did not regard Mr. Hunt, Castle's leading opponent as without fault and wholly reliable but it held that he was more reliable than Mr. Lahoud. It noted that Mr. Lahoud was anxious to control the affairs of the owners corporation. The Board's findings were that he acted accordingly and wrongfully. Castle and Mr. Lahoud were in a difficult position. There were complaints about defective work involving the common property and about Castle and Mr. Lahoud advancing their own interests rather than the interests of the owners corporation as a whole.

7. According to the documents issued by the Board on 16 August 1999 incorporating its orders and reasons the applicants were some 15 named persons (being lot owners) and the respondent was The Owners, Strata Plan No. 53342. At the start of the hearing on 19 April 1999, counsel (Mr. Harper) announced that he appeared for Castle. A study of the transcript reveals a contest between the 15 applicants and Castle with the applicant relying on the evidence of Mr. Hunt and documentary materials and Castle relying on the evidence of Mr. Lahoud and documentary materials. Various witness statements were tendered. The owners corporation appeared to take no part, and certainly no active part in the proceedings before the Board.

8. In this Court the appellant is Castle. The owners corporation has filed an appearance and it has sought to uphold the Orders made by the Board. The owners corporation is the 1st defendant, the fifteen lot owners being the 2nd to 16th defendants have filed an appearance stating ``For so long as the First Defendant opposes the appeal [they] appear and submit to such orders as the Court may make, save as to costs.'' Both the 17th defendant (Mr. Donald) and the 18th defendant [the Board] have filed submitting appearances (save as to costs). The same solicitor entered appearances for the owners corporation and the 15 lot owners. The 17th and 18th defendants were separately represented. Mr. Donald, who exercises the powers of the owners corporation instructed Mr. Le Page, to enter the appearance (which was in effect a disputing appearance) on its behalf. Mr. Le Page acted for the 2nd to 16th defendants before the Board and in this Court.

9. Castle has challenged the right of Mr. Le Page to act for both the owners corporation and the 15 lot owners. It has submitted that Mr. Le Page should not act for the owners corporation. There is the further question of a stay of execution of the Board's orders. I will deal with the latter point first.

10. Castle submitted that by virtue of s. 200 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 and s. 107 of the Justices Act 1902 there was an automatic stay of execution pending the determination of the appeal. Alternatively, Castle contended that a stay of execution should be granted by this Court. The owners corporation submitted that there was no automatic stay and alternatively, if there were, it should be discharged. In support of its contentions Castle relied on an alleged denial of natural justice.

11. At the end of the hearing on 20 April 1999 Castle contended that if, contrary to its submissions, the Board concluded that a strata managing agent should be appointed, Mr. Donald should not be so appointed as Castle had substantial objections to him. Castle stated that it could not live with him and that it would wish to call evidence on that point. After some further discussion the Board member stated that if the Board thought that a strata managing agent should be appointed the parties would be written to. In response the parties were ``to nominate nominees for appointment''.

12. By and under cover of letters of Castle's solicitors of 31 May 1999, 16 July 1999 and 21 July 1999 the solicitors made complaints about Mr. Donald's administration of the strata scheme. Objection was taken by the solicitor for the 15 lot owners on the basis that the evidence had closed.

13. By Amended Notice of Hearing of 27 July 1999 the Board advised that it would give its decision on 16 August 1999 and that at the time of the decision being delivered so much of that material which was admissible and/or relevant may be addressed. The Board directed that a copy of the material be sent to Mr. Donald and advised that the Board anticipated that Mr. Donald would attend before it on 30 July 1999.

14. On 16 August 1999 the Board member delivered his reasons orally. The Board member concluded that it was the ``crossover of interests in which Castle is involved that is the primary cause of the problem''. Castle had been the builder and developer as well as the holder of 40% of the unit entitlements. The repair of defective work in the common property areas was a major bone of contention. Castle also attempted to appropriate some of the common property. The Board found, in effect, that Castle had the owners corporation do its bidding. The Board member stated that he did not accept that the appointment of an agent with full powers was punitive, that he was providing the scheme with 12 months time out to settle down and that during that time Mr. Donald was to do all he could to ensure that the owners corporation was ready and able to resume its duties and functions at the expiration of the appointment. The Board member said:

> ``The orders are:
>
> 1. Orders 3 to 5 inclusive made on 30 November are revoked. That revocation takes effect on 16 August.
>
> 2. Mr. Alan John Donald of Strata Partners, being a managing agent licensed, is hereby appointed for a period of 12 months commencing on 16 August. Mr. Donald is to have and may exercise all the functions of the Owners Corporation, chairperson, secretary, treasurer and executive committee and is to be remunerated in accordance with the management fee of $5,000 per annum. This fee covers three meetings. Additional meetings are $85 per hour plus disbursements as set out in the order.
>
> That is the end of that. Anything flowing from that?''

The formal orders in writing notified on 30 August 1999 were to the same effect but set out a little differently.

15. Counsel for Castle then said:

> ``The note that we received about listing this for hearing also says that at the time of the decision being delivered so much of the material that had been received which is admissible or relevant may be addressed by the parties. We wish to make some submissions about the appropriateness of Donald continuing in the event, if the Board were disposed to make an order under section 162."

Counsel for Castle raised the further point that the application had not been referred to mediation and for that reason should be dismissed. This submission was rejected.

16. Counsel for Castle stated that it had no confidence in Mr. Donald and that that factor alone made it appropriate to appoint someone else. Castle submitted that Mr. Donald had a very unsatisfactory track record. In response to counsel's submission that Mr. Donald had not consented in writing, the Board member replied that Mr. Donald had given his consent on the previous Friday and pointed out that orders appointing a strata managing agent were usually made by an adjudicator without a hearing. He doubted if an adjudicator had power to hold an inquiry into the fitness of a nominee. He also pointed out that on the previous occasion (November 1998) Mr. Donald was the only eligible agent on the panel, within a reasonable distance from the property, to consent to act as the strata managing agent.

17. Counsel for Castle submitted that anyone but Mr. Donald would be preferable, even if the person was quite unknown. Castle applied to the Board to vary the order which it had just made to appoint someone else as the strata managing agent. Castle conceded that it did not have any particular nominee in mind. Castle contended that the problem arose because the 15 lot owners had not proposed a nominee. The Board member replied that there were many applications for the appointment of a strata managing agent where the applicants did not propose a nominee.

18. The 15 lot owners submitted that Mr. Donald had been doing a perfectly satisfactory job and that there was the advantage of familiarity and continuity with no need to change the books and financial records to another agent.

19. Castle then took the Board to the letters of Castle's solicitors of 31 May 1999 and 16 July 1999 and the complaints therein made against Mr. Donald.

20. The Board member was correct when he held that he would require some substantial material to appoint another strata managing agent when Mr. Donald had been acting for 81/2 months. It was not a sufficient reason that Castle did not want him or that it made allegations. Castle and Mr. Lahoud obviously did not appreciate losing control of the owners corporation and part of Mr. Donald's task may well involve denying Castle's requests or urgings.

21. The Board held that it was not satisfied that it had jurisdiction to entertain Castle's request. However, even if it did, there was nothing in what had been put to vary the order. The request failed.

22. Castle's real complaint was that the Board said at the conclusion of the hearing on 20 April 1999 that if it thought that a strata managing agent should be appointed the parties would be written to and given the opportunity to nominate proposed appointees but that this did not happen. Instead, the Amended Notice of Hearing of 27 July 1999 was in the terms summarised earlier. Castle complained that the Board made its orders without hearing it and that it was then forced to apply for a variation.

Castle contended that it was placed in a position of disadvantage.

23. An adjudicator and the Board are not bound by the rules of evidence and have wide investigative powers. They also proceed informally and often without oral evidence. Matters are often dealt with on the papers without a hearing. The system established is designed to deal with matters quickly and cheaply.

24. However, when an issue is raised and the Board states that it is going to take a particular course if it decides that a strata managing agent should be appointed it should follow that course. If it changes its mind, it should advise the parties and give them an adequate opportunity to deal with the issue having regard to the changes made. It was incorrect to make the orders first and then hear the parties on the particular issue. This is particularly so where there are doubts about the jurisdiction to vary orders so made upon the request of the party affected.

25. During argument I indicated that the question of the grant and refusal of a stay would be much influenced by there having been a breach of the rules of natural justice and of fairness. While the 15 lot owners did not concede that there had been such a breach, they acceded to the view that if the Court took this view and was therefore going to refuse a stay or discharge any stay which existed it would be better for the order appointing Mr. Donald to be set aside so that the matter of which strata managing agent should be appointed could be resolved quickly.

26. Given the Board's findings it could not reasonably be disputed that a strata managing agent should be appointed. The only question is who should be appointed. I do not preclude the appointment of Mr. Donald. There are substantial practical reasons to continue that appointment. Essentially, the rules of procedural fairness must be followed. In practical terms Castle will have to nominate other qualified strata managing agents who are willing and competent and establish substantial reasons why Mr. Donald is unsatisfactory. These are questions of fact for the Board member. He may well appoint Mr. Donald. Costs of this point are reserved. If Mr. Donald is re-appointed the exercise may prove to have been a barren one.

27. Apart from this point I would not have regarded a stay as appropriate. It is necessary in view of the Board's findings to have a strata managing agent running the affairs of the owners corporation and discharging the other functions.

28. I turn now to the representation point. Can Mr. Le Page represent the owners corporation as well as the 15 lot owners? Castle objects to the 15 lot owners not having a direct personal liability for costs and the owners corporation's liability for costs possibly resulting in lot owners other than the 15 lot owners sharing the costs burden.

29. SCR Part 66, Rule 2 provides:

> ``2. Where a solicitor or a partner of the solicitor acts as solicitor for any party to any proceedings... that solicitor shall not, without the leave of the Court, act for any other party to the proceedings not in the same interest.''

30. Castle contended correctly that the owners corporation was bound to act in the interests of the lot owners as a whole. In the present case there was a marked division of opinion as to such interests amongst the lot owners. Mr. Donald's task, inter alia, is to try to keep the various interests in balance and to act in the interests of the owners corporation as a whole. Under the Board's order Mr. Donald exercises all of the functions of the owners corporation and it is obliged to remunerate him as specified in the Board's orders. The owners corporation has a direct interest in the Board's orders and the appeal or application for leave to appeal. So do the 15 lot owners who do not want Castle and Mr. Lahoud controlling the affairs of the owners corporation having regard to their previous conduct.

31. Counsel for the owners corporation submitted that both the 15 lot owners and the owners corporation wished to uphold the orders made by the Board and that accordingly they were in the same interest. If any dispute arose as to costs then, at that stage, the owners corporation and the 15 lot owners could be separately represented. I was referred to s. 229 of the Act which enables the court to make special orders as to costs and levies and s. 230 which provides that an owners corporation cannot in respect of its costs and expenses in proceedings brought under Chapter 5 levy a contribution on another party who is successful in the proceedings.

[140125]

32. In Nangus Pty. Ltd & Anor v. Charles Donovan Pty. Ltd [1969] VR 184 Young CJ said at 185:

> ``The general rule undoubtedly is that counsel ought not to appear for two clients whose interests may conflict.'' and at 186:

> ``Every case must depend on its own circumstances but it is important to notice... that the court is concerned that it shall have the assistance of independent counsel for parties whose interests are not identical in the case before it...''

33. I was also referred to in the decision of Oceanic Life Ltd v. HIH Casualty & General Insurance Ltd [1999] NSWSC 292 (1 April 1999) where Austin J undertook an extensive review of the cases and an analysis of the relevant legal principles. That was a commercial case of some complexity and a very different one from the present. It concerned amongst other things, information which had been gathered previously while acting for another client.

34. The grounds of appeal in the present case, apart from raising what appear to be some questions of fact involve canvassing the question whether the 15 lot owners other than R.J. Hunt did not support the application and were not in conflict with Castle and the adverse findings against Castle and Mr. Lahoud. The 15 lot owners have their own interests to advance. They are not identical with those of the owners corporation which has to protect the interest of the lot owners as a whole. Its focus and approach will necessarily be different. While it is entitled to uphold the orders made by the Board it must do so from the perspective of the best interests of the lot owners as a whole. It is not sufficient to say that both the 15 owners and the owners corporation want the appeal dismissed.

35. In the circumstances of the present case the interests of the 15 lot owners and those of the owners corporation are not identical. The same solicitor should not act for these parties. Mr. Le Page having previously acted for the 15 lot owners before the Board should not act for the owners corporation in this Court. This does not mean that the 2nd to 16th defendants need change their submitting appearance nor that the owners corporation should cease to uphold the Board's orders. I uphold the challenge to Mr. Le Page continuing to act as the solicitor for the owners corporation in this Court or before the Board. I reserve the question of costs.

36. I make the following orders:

1. The Order of 16 August 1999 naming Alan John Donald is quashed, such quashing to take effect seven (7) days from today.
2. The question of who should be the strata managing agent is referred back to the Board for consideration and appointment in accordance with these reasons.
3. All questions of costs reserved to the final hearing.

Subject to any later ruling of this Court there should be no stay of execution.

New South Wales Supreme Court

Judgment delivered 14 April 2000

Strata schemes — Allocation of unit entitlements — Order of Strata Titles Board reallocating unit entitlements in waterfront block — Appeal to Supreme Court — Whether Board erred in law — Meaning of ``having regard to respective values of the lots'' — Whether Board erred by placing excessive importance on comparative areas of lots — Whether Board erred by not determining the value of each lot before calculating revised unit entitlements — Whether Board erred by rejecting comparative sales evidence — Proper approach to valuation — Whether Board erred in taking two valuations which it considered unsatisfactory and taking mean — Whether Board was functus when it expressed a provisional view and invited submissions — Whether breach of natural justice when submissions disregarded — Whether application should be dismissed where valuation evidence insufficient — Strata Titles Act 1973 (NSW), sec 119.

The Strata Plan was first registered in 1975 and consisted of three lots, each of equal unit entitlement. In December 1983 a strata plan of subdivision was registered in respect of Lot 3 and part of the common property; Lot 3 ceased to exist and a new Lot 4 was shown with an area of 280 sq m. The floor areas of Lots 1 and 2 were 124 sq m and 149 sq m respectively. The schedule of unit entitlements remained identical. The owners of Lot 4 (the first defendants) sought a reallocation of unit entitlements under former sec 119 of the Strata Titles Act 1973 (now sec 183 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996) in order to reflect recommendations made by a valuer. The application was opposed by the owners of Lots 1 and 2 (the plaintiffs).

In May 1998 the Strata Titles Board published a ``Provisional View'' on the application for reallocation, inviting the parties to make further written submissions. In the Provisional View the Board stated that the proper approach to valuation was to arrive at ``what a prospective willing but astute or cautious buyer, neutral as to number of bedrooms and bathrooms required, who wanted to buy one or all of the units in this particular block would pay for each of them against the other two, in the state that the common property was in in 1983''. The Board considered that neither of the parties' valuations were ``completely satisfactorily performed'' but used those valuations in the calculation of the unit entitlements derived from floor area and the mean of the unit entitlements from the two valuations.

Both parties made submissions in respect of the matters specified in the Provisional View but the Board stated that it had not invited submissions as to the correctness of its earlier determinations and that there had been final judicial determinations in respect of which the Board considered itself functus. In July 1998 the Board made an order (formalised in August 1998) that the allocation of unit entitlements among lots was, in December 1983, unreasonably made having regard to the respective values of the lots at that time and allocated unit entitlements among the lots as follows: Lot 1 — 21; Lot 2 — 28; and Lot 4 — 51.

The plaintiffs applied to the Supreme Court of NSW for a declaration that the determination of the Board was erroneous in law for a number of reasons, including its interpretation of former sec 119(2) of the Strata Titles Act (now sec 183(2) and (3), Strata Schemes Management Act), its method of valuing the units and its refusal to consider submissions following the invitation contained in its Provisional View.

Former sec 119(2) provided that an order reallocating unit entitlements could be made only if ``the Board considers, after having regard to the respective values of the lots and (if a strata development contract is in force in relation to the strata scheme) to such other matters as the Board considers relevant, that the allocation of unit entitlements among the lots: (a) was unreasonable when the strata plan was registered or when a strata plan of subdivision was registered''.

Held: matter remitted for redetermination by the Board.

Determination of values of lots

1. The Board erred in law by determining that ``respective values'' of the lots (in sec 119(2)) meant their value ``relative to each other''.

2. The Board erred in law by placing extraordinary and excessive importance on the comparative floor areas of the lots in determining their respective values when there was no evidence that the values of the lots could be determined on this basis.

3. The Board erred in law by not interpreting sec 119 as requiring it firstly to determine and have regard to the value of each lot before moving on to calculate revised unit entitlements. The Board did not ``have regard to the respective values of the lots''. After rejecting the valuation evidence of each of the parties' valuers, no regard was had to the value of the lots but rather to factors which, while going to value, did not constitute value.

4. The Board did not err in law merely by dismissing the comparable sales method of ascertaining value. However, it did err by rejecting this approach on the basis that sale price differentials may reflect internal refurbishment in one lot and not another, when there was no evidence of such internal refurbishment.

5. The Board's test of value (explained in the Provisional View) was erroneous for two reasons. Firstly, it expressly disavowed the requirement in sec 119(2) that the relevant values of the lots are the ``respective'' values of the lots. Secondly, it strayed from the meaning of ``value'' as espoused by the High Court in Spencer v Cth (1907) 5 CLR 418 (ie, the ``hypothetical prudent purchaser'' test as formulated by Isaacs J). The caveat by the Board that a prospective buyer be ``neutral as to the number of bedrooms and bathrooms required'' takes the hypothetical buyer outside that described by Isaacs J as one being ``cognisant of all circumstances which might affect [the land's] value''.

6. The Board erred in law by basing its conclusions as to the proper unit entitlements on the mean between the unit entitlements calculated by each valuer where there was no evidence that averaging resulted in a reasonable ``valuation'' of the lots.

7. After having rejected the valuation evidence before it and in the absence of further and better valuation evidence, the Board erred in law by not declining the application for the review of unit entitlements. The Board could not proceed under sec 119(1) before it had had regard to the values of the lots.

Denial of procedural fairness

8. At the time of its Provisional View of May 1998 the Board was not functus of its determinations as to the construction of sec 119. It had not made any orders even of an interim type to that effect nor had it handed down judgment. Further, the Board expressed itself open to further submissions on its factual findings and conclusions as to unit entitlements.

9. The Board denied procedural fairness to the plaintiffs by creating in the parties a legitimate expectation that their submissions as to the construction of sec 119 in the Provisional View would be countenanced by the Board before making its final orders.

Santow J:

Introduction

1. This is an appeal on a question of law to this Court pursuant to s 130 of the Strata Titles Act 1973 (NSW) (``the Act'') by Stated Case under s 101 of the Justices Act 1902 (NSW) from the Strata Titles Board (``the Board''). The Plaintiffs seek a review of the decision of the Board in relation to the re-allocation of unit entitlements of the property at 1A Wiston Gardens, Double Bay, being a waterfront block of three units. This is on the basis that this decision is erroneous in law, on a number of stated grounds. The Defendants' threshold position was that insofar as the Stated Case required this Court to determine questions of fact or to consider additional evidence, it lacked jurisdiction to do so. To the extent the Court has jurisdiction, the Defendants' contention is that the Court should as a matter of discretion decline to exercise it by upsetting the Board's determination. Thus the Defendants' ultimate submission is that on the material properly before the Court on the Case Stated, including any such further material if admitted, no discernible error of law on the part of the Board has been shown.

2. What in practical terms is at stake is not just contribution to outgoings but each parties' desire to maximise its respective voting entitlement. That in turn depends on the respective values of the lots and the corresponding unit entitlements which are the subject of the re-allocation.

Salient facts

3. The parties to these proceedings were originally named as ``The Proprietors of Strata Plan No. 10294'' as the Plaintiffs and Ian G and Andrea M Treleavan as the Defendants. That description followed that in the proceedings of the Board from which this is an appeal. At the outset of these proceedings before me I gave leave for the Plaintiffs to file an Amended Summons dated 15 February 2000 naming ``Peter Primrose Anderson Stuart and Colina Ann Anderson Stuart (being the owners of Lot 2) and Anderson Stuart Estates Pty Limited (being the owner of Lot 1)'' as the Plaintiffs, ``Ian G & Andrea M Treleaven'' as the First Defendants and ``The Proprietors — Strata Plan No. 10294'' as Second Defendants.

4. Strata Plan 10294 was first registered in 1975 and consisted of three lots, each of equal unit entitlement. The lots were of the following respective areas:

Lot 1 124 sq m
Lot 2 149 sq m
Lot 3 205 sq m

5. Lot 1 was on the first and second floors of the building, Lot 2 on its third floor and Lot 3 on its fourth floor.

6. On 16 December 1983 strata plan of subdivision No 20536 was registered in respect of Lot 3 and part of the common property. Lot 3 ceased to exist and the area of the new Lot 4 was shown as 280 sq m, consisting of 37 sq m on the third floor, 205 sq m on the fourth floor and 38 sq m on the fifth floor. The schedule of unit entitlements remained identical.

7. The Defendants sought a re-allocation of unit entitlements under s 119 of the Act in order to reflect recommendations made by a valuer.

8. On 7 July and 15 and 16 December 1997 and 23 March 1998 Ms Lillian Horler a senior magistrate acting as the Board heard an application brought by the Treleavens (Defendants in the present matter) pursuant to s 119 of the Strata Titles Act 1973. Their application was for an order that the unit entitlements of the three lots comprising the strata plan SP 10294 following the registration of the subdivision SP 20536 of Lot 3 and some common property into Lot 4 on 16 December 1983 should be reallocated in accordance with the certificate of Higgins Valuers Pty Limited.

9. The application was opposed by the Proprietors of Strata Plan 10294 (the Applicants in the present matter). The Applicants are the proprietors of two lots in the property, the Second Defendants being the proprietor of the third lot.

10. At the hearing the Defendants in the present proceedings tendered a valuation signed by Mr Harrigan of Higgins Valuers Pty Limited and called oral evidence in respect of it by Mr Higgins. That valuation assigned the following values and proposed the following unit entitlements in respect of the lots:

Unit	Value	Old Unit Entitlement	Proposed Unit Entitlement
Unit 1 Lot 1 SP 10294	$120,000	1	17
Unit 2 Lot 2 SP 10294	$180,000	1	25
Unit 3 Lot 4 SP 20536	$420,000	1	58
		TOTAL	100

11. The Plaintiffs in this matter tendered a competing valuation report of Gray Mulroney and called oral evidence from Mr A Gray who assigned the following differing values and unit entitlements:

Unit	Value	Old Unit Entitlement	Proposed Unit Entitlement
Unit 1 Lot 1 SP 10294	$185,000	1	224
Unit 2 Lot 2 SP 10294	$275,000	1	333
Unit 3 Lot 4 SP 20536	$365,000	1	443
		TOTAL	1000

12. On 23 May 1998 the Board published reasons and a number of determinations (the ``Provisional View''). In that Provisional View of 23 May 1998, the Board referred to the lack of guidance provided by the Act and the Regulations as to the method of determining unit entitlements. Then it was said that (Provisional View, 23 May 1998, p. 1):

> ``the Board may decline to make a reallocation order if it finds itself with insufficient evidence of respective values to do so, even if it has sufficient evidence to enable it to conclude that the existing ratios of entitlements are unreasonable having regard to respective values."

[140129]

[140129]

13. On 29 July 1998 the Board made an Order, formalised on 3 August 1998 that:

> ``Accordingly, pursuant to section 119(1) being of the view that the allocation of unit entitlements among the lots the subject of SP10294 and SP20536 was at 16 December 1983 unreasonably made, having regard to the respective values of the lots at that time, I now make an order allocating unit entitlements among the lots as follows:
>
> Lot 1 21
> Lot 2 28
> Lot 4 51"

The Board's Grounds of Determination

14. Section 119(2) of the Act states:

> ``119(2) An order may be made only if the Board considers, after having regard to the respective values of the lots and (if a strata development contract is in force in relation to the strata scheme) to such other matters as the Board considers relevant, that the allocation of a unit entitlements among the lots:
> (a) was unreasonable when the strata plan was registered or when a strata plan of subdivision was registered;..."

15. The Board in its Provisional View of 23 May 1998 said, as to s 119:

> ``• Its focus is on the respective values of the lots in the plan under consideration: that is their value relative to each other
>
> • Although value must mean `market value', sale price of units in the subject parcel or of comparable lots in other strata plans would not ordinarily alone determine market value, since sale price differentials may reflect, inter alia, internal refurbishment in one lot and not another.
>
> • Comparative areas, although also not necessarily exclusively determinative of relative market values, must, since the exercise is to determine the relative value of lots in the one parcel, play a significant role in the valuation exercise.
>
> • Although a valuation certificate must accompany the s 119 application (s 119(2)) the Board is clearly not bound by the valuation of unit entitlements expressed in any such certificate."

Provisional View 23 May 1998, p. 2

16. In reaching its Provisional View of 23 May 1998, the Board determined that the focus of s 119 of the Act was on the respective values of the lots in that plan under consideration. The Board determined that the term ``respective values'' meant the values of the lots ``relative to each other''.

17. The Board further determined that although the term ``value'' in s 119 must mean ``market value'', the sales price of units in the subject parcel or of comparable lots in other strata plans would not ordinarily alone determine market value, since sale price differentials may reflect, inter alia, internal refurbishment in one lot and not another. The Board determined therefore that comparative areas must ``play a significant role in the valuation exercise''. The board did acknowledge that comparative areas are not necessarily determinative of relative market values. However, since the Board had already determined that the exercise was ``to determine the relative value of lots in the one parcel'', the use of lot area was deemed to be appropriate.

18. The Board further determined that although s 119(2) required that the valuation certificate must accompany a s 119(1) application, the Board was not bound by the valuation of unit entitlements expressed in any such certificate.

19. With respect to the valuations, the Board found that the method of neither valuer satisfactorily performed the exercise or achieved the result called for by s 119. Instead the Board made a calculation on the basis of floor area using the total areas of the various lots (see Provisional View, 23 May 1998, p. 5). The resulting unit entitlements (namely Lot 1: 22; Lot 2: 27; Lot 3: 51) were then averaged as against the mean unit entitlements of the valuers. The conclusion reached on 23 May 1998, then, was as follows:

> ``In my view, there is sufficient evidence before me... for me to take the view that the following would be an appropriate reallocation of unit entitlements as at 16 December 1983:
>
> Lot 1 21
> Lot 2 28
> Lot 3 51
>
> ...
>
> [140130]
>
> [140130]
> This represents my provisional view of the state of the evidence before me and the conclusions I would draw from it, provided for the assistance of the parties. Unless I receive further submissions in writing from the parties within 28 days, I shall make orders specifying a reallocation in terms of the provisional conclusion on that date.''

20. After the Board had made these determinations, both parties made further written submissions in respect of those matters. However, on 29 July 1998 the Board stated that it had not invited submissions as to the correctness of its earlier determinations and that they had been final judicial determinations in respect of which the Board considered itself functus. It must have been difficult for the parties to understand how, invited by the Clerk of the Board on 26 May 1998 to make submissions, their submissions were then disregarded as trenching upon ``final judicial determinations'' when these were included in a document entitled ``Provisional View''. I return to the implications of that at paras 159 and following.

21. It was asserted by the Plaintiffs that the Board had made errors in law in its interpretation of s 119(2).

Legal issues under consideration

22. The applicant in the present proceedings seeks a declaration that the determination of the Board was erroneous in law upon a number of grounds as contained in the Stated Case. These grounds form the principal questions to be answered in the present proceedings. It was submitted on behalf of the respondent that the Stated Case before the court contained no discernible error of law on the part of the Board.

23. While the original Stated Case was amended by consent to ask the Court to determine whether the determination of the Board was erroneous in point of law (T, 1), it remains to be answered whether such an error was made.

24. Before the specific questions relating to the determinations of the Board are dealt with, there are a number of threshold issues that must be addressed. First, it was submitted by the Defendants that the Stated Case and the contentions of the Plaintiffs required this Court to make determinations of fact and that, accordingly it is not appropriate for this Court to engage in such determinations. Second it was argued that this Court could not consider additional evidence for the purpose of determining whether the Board had come to a determination where there was no evidence suggesting that it could or should reach such a conclusion.

25. After those threshold questions are addressed, I will deal with each of the Plaintiffs' contentions in turn as contained in the Stated Case.

Questions of law and questions of fact

26. It was submitted by the Defendants that the contentions of the Plaintiffs suffered from the flaw identified by the High Court in R v Rigby (1956) 100 CLR 146 at 149:

> ``The so-called case stated also comprises a statement of some contentions made on each side, which, subject to an exception to be mentioned, concern matters, which in our opinion are simply questions of fact... The case stated goes on to state certain conclusions reached by that court extracted from the judgment which really turn on matters of evidence and afford no basis for any matter of law."

27. The Defendants assert that the matters brought to this Court by the Plaintiffs are merely matters of fact and degree of weight and outside the competence of this Court: see s 130 of the Act, R v Rigby (supra) at 150-1. Section 106 of the Justices Act 1902 (NSW) (now replaced by an appeal procedure), being the governing section applicable to these proceedings allows this Court to ``hear and determine the question or questions of law arising" on the stated case.

28. The Defendants contend that paras 4.1 to 4.5 of the Stated Case in general amount to an attempt by the Plaintiffs to argue that the Board misconstrued the evidence and should have otherwise construed it. The Defendants assert that the Plaintiffs seek to say that the approach of the Board was wrong on the evidence rather than pointing to an error of law. The jurisdiction of this Court to deal with each of these contentions is dealt with separately below.

29. Furthermore, the Defendants submit that even the wrongful admission or rejection evidence is not a ``determining fact" for purposes of a case stated unless the effect of reception or rejection of the evidence (as the case may be), would have been that the decision would have gone the other way. They rely on Humphryis v Spence [1920] VLR 407 at 410.

30. Humphryis v Spence (supra) was an appeal from the Court of Petty Sessions to the Supreme Court of Victoria on conviction under the Police Offences Act 1915 (Vic). It appears that the passage relied upon by the Defendants in the present case is the following:

> ``... the wrongful admission or rejection of evidence may not be a `determining fact' under section 147 of the Justices Act 1915 [Vic.] unless the Court of General Sessions can say that if the evidence had not been received or rejected, as the case may be, the decision would have been the other way."
> (at p. 410)

31. The relevance of the Defendants' authority in the present case is questionable. In particular s 147 of the Justices Act 1915 (Vic) is not comparable to s 106 of the NSW legislation, as the former requires that the lower court ``states the facts specially for the determination of the Supreme Court thereon". Nevertheless, while it is not the task of this court to reconsider the factual questions before the board, there are some questions of law (such as whether a conclusion of fact was made in the absence of evidence that could have supported that conclusion) that involve this court looking at the factual material before the Board.

32. Whether each contention, taken on its own, constitutes a question of fact or a question of law is dealt with below.

Admissibility of evidence on an appeal by Stated Case

33. A considerable amount of time was spent before me in argument over the admissibility of a bundle of exhibits to the affidavit of FL Andreone of 19 January 2000, sought to be tendered by the Plaintiffs. The exhibits included the transcript of proceedings before the Board, the valuation evidence before the Board, the submissions of the parties to the Board and their further submissions. Exhibits FLA 1-16 constituted the factual evidence before the Board. The balance of the exhibits constituted submissions and were admitted without objection.

34. On the second day of the hearing I ruled that:

``FLA 1-16 are admitted only in relation to paragraphs 1(a), 1(b), and 2(a) of the Plaintiffs' facsimile of 9 February 2000.''

35. The relevant paragraphs of the Plaintiffs' facsimile read as follows:

``1. In respect of grounds of determinations 3.4, 3.11, 3.13, 3.16 and 3.19 and to the Board's adoption of the gross floor areas (inclusive of storage and balconies) of the three lots as a basis for determining the value of the lots and appropriate unit entitlements:

(a) there was no evidence before the Board that it was appropriate to value the lots on the basis of their gross floor area inclusive of storage and balcony areas;
(b) there was no evidence that balcony or storage areas within the lots had the same value per sq m as internal habitable rooms.

2. In respect of ground of determination 3.3:

(a) there was no evidence expert or otherwise before the Board that sales prices of units in the subject parcel or of comparable lots in other strata planes were unreliable because sale price differentials might reflect internal refurbishment in one lot and not another.''

36. By so admitting the evidence for that limited purpose only and in support of those propositions of ``no evidence'', I am satisfied for the reasons below that I would be dealing with a question of law, namely that the Board had no evidence before it to make the relevant finding of fact. A ``no evidence'' contention, where not merely colourable, is a question of law; see The Australian Gas Light Co v The Valuer General (1940) 40 SR (NSW) 126 and also Comcare Australia v Lees (1997) 151 ALR 647 (Federal Court of Australia, Finkelstein J).

37. By ``not colourable'' is meant that evidence in support of a ``no evidence'' argument should only be allowed to be adduced in cases such as this where the ``no evidence'' point is not merely colourable but where it enjoys a real possibility of success. In Lombardo v FC of T 79 ATC 4542 at 4545-4546; (1979) 28 ALR 574 at 578, Bowen CJ concludes:

``A question of law is involved in a decision where there was no evidence upon which the Board could have reached its decisions, the implication being that the Board must have misdirected itself as to the correct legal interpretation of the statute or made perverse finding. A submission of `no evidence', however, involves the difficulty that unless some restrictions are applied, an appeal is open to any aggrieved appellant who chooses to make such a submission...

Without attempting an exhaustive summary, it may be said that a `question of law' will be involved in a decision in the following circumstances:

1. If it was expressly raised and the Board made a ruling on it as a relevant factor in its decision;
2. If it is obvious from the decision or transcript of the case that the Board in arriving at its decision has misunderstood the law in some relevant particular;
3. Technical words had necessarily to be construed before the statute could be applied;
4. Where a particular set of facts had of necessity to be within or without the statute;
5. Where, in a submission of `no evidence' there is a real possibility of success.''

38. The Plaintiffs' case before this Court was that the Board had erred in law on several occasions by reaching a determination where there was no evidence upon which the Board could have reached that conclusion.

39. The Plaintiffs also requested to have the evidence allowed for the purpose of proving that there was positive expert evidence before the Board that it was not appropriate to value the lots on the basis of their area and that there was expert evidence before the Board that storage and balconies were not of equivalent value to habitable room space. In support of that argument, in a further written submission of 16 February 2000, the Plaintiffs cited Misfud v Campbell (1991) 21 NSWLR 725 at 728 per Samuels JA. The further written submissions were made pursuant to an invitation said to be implicit in my words at T, 55.33-36 and I have taken those into account. In the case referred to, Samuels JA referred to a failure to refer to evidence critical to an issue in a case as something that worked a miscarriage of justice and an error of law.

40. It was submitted by the Plaintiffs that not only was there no evidence of the critical findings 1(a), (b), and 2(a) in the facsimile as quoted above, such findings being necessary to render supportable the Board's ultimate findings as a piece of reasoning, but critical evidence to the opposite of those findings was not referred to.

41. That being said, the case of Misfud v Campbell (supra) does not stand for any universal proposition that this Court can or should rule on whether, given the factual evidence before the Board below, that Board should have reached the opposite conclusion. All that the case stands for is this. Where the Board has ignored evidence before it in the assertions of fact of one party, where it is so critical that to ignore it would work a miscarriage of justice, will have erred in law. Having already succeeded in adducing the evidence above in support of its ``no evidence'' argument, the Plaintiffs suffer a miscarriage of justice from the Board's failure to give any weight to the ``positive expert evidence''. The evidence contained in FLA 1-16 is, therefore, admitted and will be referred to for the purposes of adjudicating the ``no evidence'' points raised by the Plaintiffs.

The Plaintiffs' contentions by reference to para 4 of Stated Case

42. Having dealt with the preliminary questions, I will now deal with each of the Plaintiffs' contentions in turn; the reference to 4.1 and following corresponds to the paragraphs of the Stated Case.

4.1 Does ``respective'' mean ``relative''?

43. It was contended on the part of the Plaintiffs that the Board had erred in law by determining that ``respective values'' of the lots meant their value ``relative to each other''. Paragraph 4.1 of the Stated Case says:

> ``The Appellants contend that my determination was erroneous in law upon the following grounds:
>
> > 4.1 In respect of grounds for determination 3.1, 3.2, 3.7, 3.9, 3.10 and 3.11. I erred in law in interpreting `respective' in section 119(2) of the Strata Titles Act as equating to `relative' in meaning so as to focus initial enquiry on the values of the three lots relative to each other.''

44. The process contemplated by s 119(2) of the Act, it is submitted by the Plaintiffs, is that the Board must determine the value of each of the lots individually before using those valuations to calculate unit entitlements. The

[140133]

Defendants have raised several arguments to dispute the Plaintiffs' assertion that the Board erred in law by misinterpreting the term ``respective''.

The meaning of a word in a legislative provision

45. The Defendants first put that the question of the meaning of the word ``respective'' was a question of fact and therefore outside the concern of this court. In support of that assertion, the Defendants cited Davidson J in The Australian Gas Light Co v The Valuer General (supra) at 137:

> ``In cases in which an appellate tribunal has jurisdiction to determine only questions of law, the following rules appear to be established by the authorities:
> > (1) The question what is the meaning of an ordinary English word or phrase as used in the Statute is one of fact not of law: Girls' Public Day School Trust v Ereaut [1931] AC 12 at 25, 28; Life Insurance Co. of Australia Limited v Phillips 36 CLR 60 at 78; McQuaker v Goddard [1940] 1 All ER 471. This question is to be resolved by the relevant tribunal itself, by considering the word in its context with the assistance of dictionaries and other books, and not by expert evidence: Camden v Inland Revenue Commissioners [1914] 1 KB 641; In re

Ripon (Highfield) Housing Confirmation Order, 1938. White and Collins v Minister of Health [1939] 2 KB 838 at 852; although evidence is receivable as to the meaning of technical terms: Caledonian Railway v Glenboig Union Fireclay Co. (6); Attorney- General for the Isle of Man v Moore [1938] 2 All ER 263 at 267; and the meaning of a technical legal term is a question of law: Commissioners for Special Purposes of Income Tax v Pemsel [1891] AC 531 at 580.

(2) The question whether a particular set of facts comes within the description of such a word or phrase is one of fact: Girls' Public Day School Trust v Ereaut [op cit.]; Attorney-General for the Isle of Man v Moore [op cit.].

(3) A finding of fact by a tribunal of fact cannot be disturbed if the facts inferred by the tribunal, upon which the finding is based, are capable of supporting its finding, and there is evidence capable of supporting its inferences: Farmer v Cotton's Trustees [1915] AC 922 at 931; Currie v Inland Revenue Commissioners [1921] 2 KB 332 at 338-341; Inland Revenue Commissioners v Lysaght [1928] AC 234 at 246-7, 249-251.

(4) Such a finding can be disturbed only (a) if there is no evidence to support its inferences, or (b) if the facts inferred by it and supported by evidence are incapable of justifying the finding of fact based upon those inferences: In Re Ripon (Highfield) Housing Confirmation Order, 1938. White & Collins v Minister of Health [1939] 2 KB 838, or (c) if it has misdirected itself in law: Farmer v Cotton's Trustees [1915] AC 922 at 930-1; Colonial Mutual Life Assurance."

46. At 146, Davidson J concludes, after reviewing the various authorities on the matter:

> ``On these decisions I would with great diffidence conclude: (1) that the construction of a statute or any other instrument is always a question of law; (2) That the first question for decision as a matter of construction is whether words in the instrument were intended to be used in their strictly legal sense or with their ordinary meaning; (3) If it is determined as a matter of law that the strictly legal sense or the ordinary sense as the case may be was intended that sense must be applied by the Judge or Court; (4) If it be determined that the legal or ordinary sense may not have been intended there is then a further question of law to be decided, namely whether there are particular circumstances requiring a determination of fact, firstly as to the nature of such circumstances and secondly as to the meaning which would be applied to particular words or phrases in the vernacular of people concerned in the occupation, trade, calling or circumstances dealt with by the statute; (5) With the aid of findings on those points the statute must be construed as a question of law."

47. There are no ``particular circumstances'' in the present case requiring this court to determine a question of fact before attributing to the word ``respective'' a precise meaning. The Defendants, however, also cited in support of its contention that the statutory interpretation of the meaning of the word ``relative'' is a question of fact, relying upon Lombardo v Federal Commissioner of Taxation (supra). At 578, Bowen CJ approves of the words of Jordan CJ in Australian Gas Light at 126 of that judgment. Bowen CJ adds:

> ``In the above situations where an application of the statute is clearly a question of fact, a question of law will only arise if there was no evidence to support the conclusion of fact or it is obvious from the transcript of the case that the Board has misunderstood the law in some relevant particular: Edwards (Insp of Taxes) v Abairstow [1956] AC 14 at 33 per Lord Radcliffe.
>
> On the other hand a question of law will be involved where technical legal words must be construed before the statute can be applied to the found facts. Also, as stated previously, where the facts must fall clearly within or without the statute.''

48. It is clear that the construction of a statute is a question of law. Furthermore, the meaning of ``respective'' only arises in interpreting the statute in which the word appears.

49. Words in a statute, when their meaning is clear and admits no ambiguity, must be given their plain and natural meaning (see Gifford on ``Statutory Interpretation'' at pp 3-10). In Hope v Bathurst City Council 80

ATC 4386 at 4389; (1980) 144 CLR 1 at 7-8, Mason J quotes Kitto J in New South Wales Associated Blue Metal Quarries Limited v Federal Commissioner of Taxation (1956) 94 CLR 509 at 511:

> ``The judgment of Kitto J in N.S.W. Associated Blue-Metal Quarries Limited. v Federal Commissioner of Taxation is illuminating. Kitto J observed that the question whether certain operations answered the description `mining operations upon a mining property' within the meaning of s 122 of the Income Tax Assessment Act 1936 as amended, was a mixed question of law and fact. He went on to explain why this was so: `First it is necessary to decide as a matter of law whether the Act uses the expressions ``mining operations'' and ``mining property'' in any other sense than that which they have in ordinary speech'".

50. Therefore, whether the word ``respective'' is to have a meaning other than its meaning in ordinary speech is in any event a question of law and one which this Court is competent to determine on an appeal from the Board. I do not consider that the meaning of the word ``respective'' in its statutory context gives rise to any real ambiguity. It is my determination, itself a matter of law, that the Act uses the expression ``respective'' (to quote Kitto J) in the ``sense... which [it has] in ordinary speech'', viz.:

> ``pertaining individually or severally to each of a number of persons, things, etc.; particular'': Macquarie Dictionary

The meaning of ``respective'': Did the Board err in law?

51. That this be the natural and plain meaning of the word ``respective'' applicable in the present context is supported by the words of section 119(4) which reads:

> ``(4) An application for an order must be accompanied by a certificate specifying the valuation, at the relevant time of registration (or immediately after the change in the permitted land use of each of the lots to which the application relates''
> [my emphasis]

52. It is clear in this case that the Board did not interpret the words ``after having regard to the respective values of the lots'' in their ordinary and grammatical sense of ``after having regard to the particular or individual values of the lots'' or ``after having regard to the values of each of the lots severally''.

53. The Defendants argue, however, that the Board's finding that the word ``respective'' meant ``relative'' was a determination not ``in globo'', but rather ``respective'' had that meaning in the circumstances of the present case. In support of this assertion, the Defendants quote the Stated Case at paragraph 3.2: ``It determined that its focus was on the respective values of the lots in that plan under consideration that is, their values relative to each other'' [emphasis is the Defendants'].

54. The Defendants argue that the Board's determination of the meaning of the word ``respective'' was based on a number of contended factual determinations by the Board, especially, it seems, the Board's rejection of the valuation evidence before it. But that is to put the cart before the horse; the starting point is to determine what s 119 requires.

55. I am satisfied that to interpret the ``word'' respective in a manner other than its ordinary meaning in the present context is to misinterpret the statutory task of the Board as set by s 119, and is thus an error of law.

56. I will deal later with the Defendants' argument that it is an erroneous argument on the part of the Plaintiffs to say that the comparable sales approach is the exclusive test to be employed by the Board in determining unit entitlements.

Would the Board have reached the same conclusion?

57. Then the Defendants suggest that, even if the Plaintiffs' contended meaning of ``respective'' were adopted, the Board would have come to the same conclusion as it did in its Provisional View of 29 May 1998. Given that the Board had rejected the comparative sales approach of the valuer for the Plaintiffs, it is asserted that the Board would have taken into account the same factors (such as area, access, aspect, light and air) and would have reached the same conclusion.

58. I do not need at this point to decide here whether, but for that one error, the Board would have come to a different conclusion. Such an inquiry need only be made when considering whether the matter should be returned to the Board after all of the Plaintiffs' other contentions have been dealt with.

The ``initial enquiry'' argument

59. The contention in paragraph 4.1 of the stated case identifies the error of law of the Board as ``interpreting respective... as equating to `relative' in meaning so as to focus initial enquiry on the comparative areas of the lots.'' The Defendants argue that the use of the words ``initial enquiry'' betrays the nature of the contention as one going to the merits of the Board's decision and reasoning process and thus outside this Court's jurisdiction. However, given the circumstances of the case, it is clear that the word ``initial enquiry'' refer to the fact that the Board only initially considered the value of the lots. Subsequently, the board considered a host of other factors, such as living area. The words ``initial enquiry'' do not, therefore, have any bearing on the matter of the Board's interpretation of its task under s 119.

4.2 Did the Board place ``extraordinary and excessive importance on the comparative areas of the lots''?

60. The Plaintiffs argue that the Board's alleged erroneous interpretation of the word ``respective'' in s 119(2) led the board to make further errors of law. The first of these is said to be that the Board placed extraordinary and excessive importance on the comparative areas of the lots.

61. The Stated Case reads:

> ``The Appellants contend that my determination was erroneous in law upon the following grounds:
>
> > 4.2 In respect of grounds of determination 3.4, 3.11, 3.13 and 3.19, and as a consequence of the error of law in 3.1 and 3.2 (identified in 4.1 above), I erred in law in placing extraordinary and excessive importance on the comparative areas of the lots when:
> >
> > > (a) neither valuer gave evidence that the values of lots moved in direct relationship to or were to be determined on the basis of their physical areas;
> > > (b) That is was common ground on the evidence of the valuers that storage space and open balcony space were not as valuable per sq.m as habitable living area;
> > > (c) That in assessing the gross floor areas in 3.13 I overlooked the unchallenged evidence that:
> > >
> > > > (i) Lot 1's area, which I described as storage, was a mixture of a laundry and storage;
> > > > (ii) Lot 2's area included an open balcony;
> > > > (iii) Lot 4's area adopted by me as the area excluding storage included open balcony areas, part- height under roof storage cupboards, two internal staircases and a bedroom having its only access to bathroom/ toilet by going outside the unit.''

62. The Plaintiffs assert that the Board did not properly have regard to the value of the lots. This asserted error of law had two parts. Firstly, it is argued that there was no evidence before the board that values moved in tandem with the gross areas of the lots or that valuation could be calculated from a comparison of gross area. Secondly, it is asserted that there was no evidence that storage and balcony areas were of like value to inhabitable rooms. Thirdly it is asserted that the Board overlooked crucial evidence of various sorts; here the issue of jurisdiction again arises.

Question of fact or law?

63. The Defendants, in reply argue, first, that there is no area of law complained of in paragraph 4.2 of the Stated Case.

64. The contention in paragraph 4.2 of the Stated Case refers to ``extraordinary and excessive importance''. The Defendants submits that the complaint, therefore goes to a finding of fact rather than raising a point of law. The determinations complained of by the Plaintiffs are as follows:

> ``3.4 I further determined that comparative areas, although not necessarily exclusively determinative of relative market values, must, since the exercise is to determine the relative value of lots in the one parcel, play a significant role in the valuation exercise.
>
> ...
> 3.11 I found that first and foremost one would expect to pay a price for each commensurate with the livable are[a], actual and perhaps potential, relative to the other two.''

65. The other two determinations complained of were the Board's calculation of unit entitlements based on floor areas. The Board's final conclusions are quoted above in the factual background.

66. The Plaintiffs' contention is essentially that there was no evidence upon which the Board could make the determinations complained of. Here then, we are dealing with the question of ``whether there is any evidence of a particular fact'', being a question of law: see earlier and McPhee v S Bennet Limited (1935) 52 WN (NSW) 8 at 9. That here this court is asked to make a determination of law is made clear by applying the principles expounded by Glass JA in Azzopardi v Tasman UEB Industries Limited (1985) 4 NSWLR 139 at 155-6:

> ``... To say of a finding that it is perverse, that it is contrary to the overwhelming weight of the evidence, that it is against the evidence and the weight of the evidence, that it ignores the probative force of the evidence which is all one way or that no reasonable person could have made it, is to say the same thing in different ways. Upon proof that the finding of a jury is vitiated in this way, it will be set aside because it is wrong in fact. Since the Act does not allow this Court to correct errors of fact, any argument that the finding of a Worker's Compensation Commission judge is vitiated in the same way discloses no error of law and will not constitute a valid ground of appeal. It is also pointless to submit that the reasoning by which the court arrived at a finding of fact was demonstrably unsound as this would not amount to an error of law: R v District Court of the Metropolitan District Holden at Sydney; ex parte White (1966) 116 CLR 644 at 654.
> A finding of fact in the Commission may nevertheless reveal an error of law where it appears at that the trial judge has misdirected himself ie has defined otherwise than in accordance with law the question of fact which he has to answer. A possibility of this kind exists with ultimate findings of fact but not with respect to primary findings of fact such as whether the applicant suffered injury on a particular date. Further an ultimate finding of fact, even in the absence of a misdirection, may reveal error of law if the primary facts found are necessarily within or outside a statutory description and a contrary decision has been made, Hope v Bathurst City Council 80 ATC 4386 at 4390; (1980) 144 CLR 1 at 10; Australian Gas Light Co v Valuer-General (1940) 40 SR (NSW) 126 at 138; 57 WN 53 at 55...''

67. While Azzopardi's case involved a different legislative regime to the present case, the principles can be applied in the present circumstances since, as in Azzopardi's case, this court is, by legislative fiat, only permitted to review the decision of the Board on questions of law: s 130 Strata Titles Act, s 106 Justices Act 1902. Where the contention of the Plaintiffs is that the Board made a determination where there was no evidence to support the finding, that contention is a question of law. This is in line with the Court of Appeal in Allen v Kerr (1995) Aust Torts Reports ¶81-354:

> ``It was not open to [the Plaintiffs] to argue that the ultimate factual conclusions were wrong. He could do that only if an appeal lay on questions of fact, and it is clear that it did not. He was limited to errors of law, if any, which underlay the factual finding. Such errors may occur where, for instance, there is no evidence to support a finding, where a tribunal has misdirected itself on the legal principles applicable or where the primary facts found are necessarily within or outside a statutory description and a contrary finding has been made''

[140137]

per Clarke JA at p. 1

68. However, the question merely of the weight to be given to evidence of a correlation between area and value could not, if such evidence exists, be the subject of review in this case since it would be a question of fact: see Azzopardi's case, and also Kahler and Anor v Sabaco Pty Limited, (NSWSC, Master Malpass, 6 February 1997, unreported). To the extent that the Plaintiffs' contention goes to anything more than a lack of evidence of facts decided by the board, this Court cannot enter into the argument. Therefore, that it was ``common ground on the evidence of the valuer that storage space and open balcony space were not as valuable per sq. m as habitable living area'' and that the Board may have made an error in calculating the gross floor areas of the lots, cannot be the subject of inquiry by this Court. The only error of law asserted in contention 4.2 is that the Board concluded as it did in the absence of any evidence that values of lots moved in direct relationship to or were to be determined on the basis of their physical areas.

Disregarding paragraphs 4.2(a), (b) & (c)

69. The Defendants submit that with respect to sub-paragraphs (a) to (c) of paragraph 4.2 of the Stated Case, they are not ``facts'' binding on the Court. Furthermore it is asserted that the material is contentious and argumentative and should not find any place in a Stated Case (the Defendants here referred to Marshall v Whittaker's Building Supply Co (1963) 109 CLR 210 at 216-217). While paragraphs (b) and (c) are matters of fact and involve this Court making findings of fact (which is not the task of this court), paragraph (a) is of a different ``no evidence'' type.

70. The Defendants did not take the Court to any evidence that could have supported the determinations referred to in contention 4.2. It is clear that there was no evidence before the Board, including from the various experts, that could have supported the Boards determinations. The Plaintiffs' contention is, therefore, made out in respect of the weight accorded to floor area where there was no evidence to support such an approach. The Board took into account extraneous factors.

71. The Defendants says that the valuer must have regard to all material relevant to value and to check the valuation by as many methods as may be available (including but not limited to a hypothetical sale). They cite in support the case of Minister of State for the Navy v Rae (1945) 70 CLR 339 at 344.

72. That case involved the acquisition of a ship by the Commonwealth; the dispute arising over the compensation paid by the Commonwealth to the owner of the vessel. The valuation in dispute, then, was the valuation carried out by the board in that case of the ship. The court confirms that the market value of the ship was the most appropriate test. Other factors are to be considered if there is no market for the chattel. The paragraph on which the Defendants, no doubt, relies, is readily distinguishable as being specific to the circumstances of that case. That paragraph reads:

> ``In reaching a conclusion as to compensation for the taking of a piece of property such as that now in question, it is necessary, or at all events wise, to pursue as many means of estimation as are open, to compare them, and then, as an exercise of judgment, to fix what, upon considerations this process suggests, appears to be a fair compensation.'': per Dixon J at 344

73. It is the next paragraph that contains the general principle, namely, that ``if there is a market for a ship that is the most satisfactory test of its value... But where there is no market, you must ask what is its value as a going concern to its owners at the time of acquisition.'': per Dixon J at 344. The case of Minister of State for the Navy v Rae (supra) does not assist the Defendants in the present case. The applicable principle is not that the ``valuer must have regard to all material relevant to value and to check the valuation by as many methods as may be available''. Rather, the principle for valuation is that based either on the ``hypothetical prudent purchaser'' as formulated by Isaacs J or on ``the willing but not anxious vendor and purchaser'', as enunciated by Griffiths CJ, in each case as laid down in Spencer v The Commonwealth (1907) 5 CLR 418. In Boland v Yates Property Corporation Pty Limited (1999) 167 ALR 575 Gleeson CJ (at para 79) adopts the willing but not anxious purchaser test as enunciated by Griffiths CJ. He rejects as a gloss on that test,

the so-called ``head start'' theory of special value, so carrying a warning against other unwarranted glosses not compatible with fundamentals of the Spencer test. I return later to the principles of valuation; see paras 107 and following.

74. The Defendants' argument that the valuer must have regard to all material relevant to value does not meet the contention of the Plaintiffs that the Board paid excessive regard to floor area; they correctly in my view contend that there was no evidence in support of the Board's determinations in that regard. Even if the Board is able to look to indicators other than comparable sales, the Board may not choose to consult those alternative indicators of value without any evidentiary basis that suggests that such an approach is a valid method of determining (or at least estimating) the value of the relevant land.

75. While the Defendants also argue that the Board did not decide purely on the basis of area, that does not seem to me to be any answer. The Plaintiffs' assertion is rather as to excessive and improper weight being given to one factor, being floor area, does not depend on that being the only factor taken into account by the Board. The Plaintiffs' argument as to whether the Board needed, according to the terms of the Act, to ascertain a value for each of the units is a different argument and is dealt with below.

76. Furthermore, it is true that the final conclusions of the Board as to the proper unit entitlements did differ marginally from the entitlements calculated solely on the basis of area. While put forward by the Defendants as an answer to the Plaintiffs' contention in paragraph 4.2 of the Stated Case, given my conclusion above (namely that the Board did take into account area as a determinant of value without evidence suggesting that it was a valid approach), the fact that the final unit entitlements reached by the Board differ from those based solely on floor area is irrelevant. The issue is not whether living areas formed the sole determinant of the final unit entitlements. Rather the issue is whether, given that the board had no evidence on which to base its course of action, the weight given to floor area in the determination of the respective values of the lots was excessive. I have already answered that question in the affirmative.

4.3 Rejection of the comparative sales approach

77. Paragraph 4.3 of the stated case reads:

> ``In respect of grounds 3.1, 3.2, 3.3, 3.7 and 3.10:
>
> > (a) I erred in law in not interpreting Section 119 Strata Titles Act as requiring the Board to firstly determine and have regard to the value of each lot;
> > (b) I further erred in law in dismissing the comparable sales approach to valuing each of [the] lots, particularly having regard to the approach of both valuers as per 2.9 above;
> > (c) I further erred in law in dismissing the said comparable sales method on the particular ground set out in 3.3 when neither valuer dismissed the comparable sales method on that ground and there was no evidence of such suggested internal refurbishment.''

78. The grounds referred to in the contention state:

> ``3.1 In considering the question of a re- allocation of unit entitlements as envisaged by Section 119, I turn to the Act and Regulations to see what the legislation said with regard to how unit entitlements were to be determined in the first instance. Having regard to the importance of the unit entitlements ascribed to any lot vis a vis any other lot in establishing the lot proprietors' share of expenses, obligations, surpluses, resumption or insurance payouts, water and council rates, as well as voting power on a poll, I was surprised to find the Act and Regulations to be almost silent on the subject. I considered Section 8 (Registration of Plans) and regulation 17 (Schedule of Unite [sic] Entitlements), Section 10 and Section 11, and found that only in Section 119, when a re-allocation of entitlements is being sought, does the question of how unit entitlements were initially made on registration of a plan or subdivision plan arise, in the requirement in the Board to determine whether or not they were unreasonably made having regard to the respective values of the lots at the time.
> 3.2 In considering section 119 in my Reasons of 23 May 1998 I determined that its focus was on the respective values of the lots in that plan under consideration that is, their values relative to each other.

3.3 I further determined that although value in section 119 must mean `market value', sales price of units in the subject parcel or of comparable lots in other strata plans would not ordinarily alone determine market value, since sale price differentials may reflect, inter alia, internal refurbishment in one lot and not another.

3.7 Because of my findings in 3.1 and 3.2 I found that the method of neither valuer completely satisfactorily performed the exercise, or achieved the result, called for by Section 119.

3.10 I found that Mr Gray's empirical enquiry of comparison of each lot separately with `comparable' units in other waterfront buildings led to conclusions that failed to reanchor the enquiry as a question for the comparative values of each of the subjective lots relative to each other."

[emphasis supplied]

79. I will deal with each subparagraph in relation to para 4.3 in turn.

4.3(a) Does Section 119 require the Board to firstly determine and have regard to the value of each lot?

80. The Board did not, in its provisional view of 23 May 1998 nor in its final orders of 29 July 1998 make any findings about ``the respective values of the lots''. The Plaintiffs assert that it is a condition imposed by subsections 2 and 4 of s 119 of the Strata Titles Act that a valuation must be decided upon before any finding can be made that the existing unit entitlements were unreasonable.

81. The words of s 119(2) allow the Board to make an order under subsection 1 ``only if the Board considers, after having regard to the respective values of the lots'' that ``the allocation of unit entitlements among the lots'' was or became ``unreasonable'' as elaborated in sub-paras (a) and (b).

82. The use of the word ``after'' in s 119(2) clearly indicates that the Board is to ``have regard to'' the value of the lots before moving on to calculate revised unit entitlements. Exactly what that means in the present circumstances depends on the meaning of the phrase ``having regard to''.

The meaning of ``having regard to''

83. The Defendants argue that the phrase ``having regard to'' or variants thereof means, in respect of matters to which it refers, that those matters must be taken into account and given weight as fundamental elements in the relevant determination to be made, but not as an exclusive element. The primary authority cited by the Defendants was R v Hunt; Ex parte Sean Investments Pty Limited (``Sean Investments'') (1979) 180 CLR 322 at 329. The Plaintiffs, however, takes issue with the Defendants' application of that authority.

84. Sean Investments concerned s 40AA of the National Health Act 1953 (Cth) (as amended), which states at subsection 7:

``The Permanent Head shall, in determining the scale of fees in relation to a nursing home for the purposes of sub-paragraph (i) of paragraph (c) of the last preceding sub- section, have regard to costs necessarily incurred in providing nursing home care in the nursing home''

[my emphasis]

85. Of the words ``have regard to'', Mason J wrote, at 329:

``When sub-s. (7) directs the Permanent Head to `have regard to' the costs, it requires him to take those costs into account and to give weight to them as a fundamental element in making his determination... However, the sub-section does not direct the Permanent Head to fix the scale of fees exclusively by reference to costs necessarily incurred and profit. The sub-section is so generally expressed that it is not possible to say that he is confined to these two considerations. The Permanent Head is entitled to have regard to other considerations which show or tend to show that a scale of fees arrived at by reference to costs necessarily incurred, with or without a profit factor, is excessive or unreasonable.''

86. Further, Murphy J writes:

``The requirement that the Permanent Head (and on review, the Minister) shall have regard to the costs necessarily incurred, tends in itself to show that his duty in respect of those costs is limited to having regard to them. He must take them into account and consider them and give due weight to them, but he has an ultimate discretion''

(at 334)

87. That case, then, stands for the proposition that the words ``have regard to the respective values of the lots'' require the Board to take those values into account as a fundamental element in the making of its decision. That requirement, however, cannot be so interpreted as to determine the outcome of the Board's decision. It remains within the Board's discretion, given its consideration of other relevant factors, to make or refuse an order under s 119(1).

[140140]

88. The Defendants submit, then, that there is no statutory requirement that the Board determine the respective values of the lots as a precondition to the exercise of the Board's discretionary power. Rather, the Board is simply required to have regard to those values. One way for the Board to fulfil that requirement is by considering a certificate presented by a valuer. It is further submitted that the Board is not required to accept any valuers certificate.

89. There is no requirement in s 119(2) that the values of the lots determine the unit entitlement calculations of the Board. Furthermore, there is no requirement to adopt any particular valuer's report. Rather the Board is to have regard to the values of each of the lots. While that value may be obtained from a particular valuer's report, that is not to say that all valuers' reports must be accepted or that other evidence as to value cannot be accepted. In Western Australian Trustees Limited v Poon (1991) 6 WAR 72, the Court of Appeal of the Supreme Court of Western Australia considered a default provision of a lease providing for determination of ``current market rental value'' of premises. Clause 1.02 of the agreement in that case contained a definition of that term as meaning ``the best Annual Rent that can be reasonably obtained for the premises'' and sub- clause (d) continued: ``Having regard to current market values of comparable premises in the Perth Metropolitan area''. Malcolm CJ said at 80-81:

``The defined task of the valuer... was to determine the best annual rent that can be reasonably obtained for the premises on the assumptions set out in the definition, having regard to the current market rental values of comparable premises. The discretion so conferred cannot be regarded as unfettered, merely because the words `having regard to' do not mean `slavishly adhered to' and the decision whether or not particular premises are `comparable' involves a value judgment... The determination whether a given sale is comparable or particular premises are comparable involves the making of an expert judgment or the formation of a professional opinion in accordance with the accepted principles of valuation: See Mason v Skilling [1974] 1 WLR 1437; [1974] 3 All ER 977 and Halsbury's Laws of England (4th ed 1981); Vol 27, par 731, pp 585-586.

The valuer cannot disregard current market rental values of comparable premises. The weight given to other current market rental values will necessarily depend upon the degree of comparability. This is a matter for expert assessment and not for the exercise of an unfettered discretion. I am unable to accept that the valuer's discretion is `unfettered' in any relevant sense.''

90. Further at 82-83, Malcolm CJ said:

``It was also submitted on behalf of the respondent that the words `having regard to' in par (d) of the definition do not suggest that the valuer is bound to adhere to or comply with current market rental values of comparable premises. It was suggested that these words may mean no more than the valuer is not precluded form taking current market rental values of comparable premises into account, although he is not bound to take them into account... I am unable to accept this submission. In the Police Complaints Board case the Board was required to take the specified matter into account by reason of the words `shall have regard to'. The decisions in other cases are to the same effect. In the present context the best rental that can reasonably be obtained is to be determined on the basis of the specified assumptions and by taking into account the current market rental values of comparable premises. The latter requirement simply expresses an accepted principle of valuation."

91. The reasoning and conclusions of Malcolm CJ mean that a decision of the Board which does not ascertain (nor even discuss) the market values of each of the lots so as to have regard to them does not have regard to those values and is erroneous in law. The error is that the statutory task set by s 119(2) has not been performed. Value must be taken into account by the Board.

92. The Board is not bound to apply the rules of evidence and may inform itself in such manner as it thinks fit (s 132(2) of the Act). The Defendants argue that s 132 supports the proposition that s 119 should not receive a construction that implies into the provision any requirement as to determinations of value, which are not strictly necessary for the ultimate task of establishing unit entitlements under s 119.

93. As demonstrated, the requirement that the board have regard to the value of the lots is not an implied requirement but one contained in the express terms of the statute. The words of s 132(2), then, cannot affect the construction of s 119(2) and the requirements therein.

94. In the circumstances of this case it is finally submitted by the Defendants that the Board was entitled to have such regard to the opinions of the valuers as it felt appropriate. It was entirely appropriate, then, on the submission of the Defendants that the Board used the valuers' opinions as it did, namely in part of the calculation of unit entitlements. It is submitted that the Board did consider the respective values assigned by the valuers and analysed their deficiencies. While the Board did then adjust the unit entitlements without making a finding as to respective monetary values in 1983, the board was not required to do so. In the absence of any one valuer's certificate being found satisfactory by the Board, the Board had to carry out its ultimate task of allocating the unit entitlements in the best way it could. In support of this proposition, the Defendants cited Bingham v Cumberland County Council (1954) 20 LGR (NSW) 1 at 18-19, saying the Board was ``doing the best it could on the materials before it''.

95. In reply, the Plaintiffs submit as follows:

> ``It simply is not a permissible reading of the PV to cobble together odd references to features of the property or lots contained within the paragraphs rejecting the two valuers and then airily to suggest this satisfied the statutory obligation to have regard to the market values of each of the lots.
>
> Nor is it helpful to talk of the board `doing the best it could'. This is to confuse the task that the Board had with those cases where valuers or specialist valuation tribunals or Courts are bound to arrive at a specific value for land resumed or injuriously affected under entirely different statutory regimes. In this sense the reference to Bingham's case is misleading. In this case the matter which the Board must first have regard to is specifically identified, and the Board is under no statutory compulsion to reorder unit entitlements."
>
> [Plaintiffs' submissions in reply]

96. As discussed above, Bingham's case does not assist the Defendants here. It does not have any bearing on the meaning of the phrase ``have regard to'' in s 119(2) of the Act. Rather, it can only be relevant to the test of valuation used to obtain a value to which the Board must then have regard.

97. Furthermore, the use of the competing valuation evidence in the final calculation of unit entitlements cannot, in the present case constitute ``having regard to'' the values of the lots. There was no justification given by the Board nor otherwise apparent for the averaging of the competing valuations to obtain a ``value'' to which the Board could have regard, more especially when the Board was not satisfied with either valuation. The mean of the valuers' opinions does not, without justification, result in a ``value''. Rather it merely results in a figure, the genesis of which is in some doubt, to which the Board then had regard.

98. Furthermore, even if there were evidence to support the proposition that the mean value actually constituted a valuation figure, this Court would not find that the degree of consideration of value met the standard of the test in Western Australian Trustees Limited v Poon (supra).

99. Finally, in respect of the phrase ``have regard to'' the Defendants submits that the Spencer test cannot compel a conclusion as to the proper construction of section 119. While the Defendants' submission is correct, that is, the Spencer test does not compel a conclusion as to the proper construction of s 119, it is clear from my reasons above that that is not the issue. What is involved is identifying, once that construction task is complete, what are ``the respective values of the lots'', value being determined by the Spencer test.

100. I am satisfied that the Board did not ``have regard to the respective values of the lots''. Rather, after rejecting the valuation evidence of each of the valuers, no regard is had to the value of the lots, but rather to other factors which, while going to value, did not constitute value. That the Board used the unit entitlements calculated by each of the valuers does not satisfy the requirement of s 119(2). Averaging the two valuations, neither judged satisfactory, without any evidence that such an average would result in an accurate valuation of each of the lots, could not be said to ``have regard to the respective values of the lots''.

4.3(b) Was the dismissal of the comparable sales approach an error of law?

101. The Board had, in its Provisional View of 29 May 1998, dismissed both of the expert valuers' evidence. In respect of Mr Gray's valuation, the Board decided that:

> ``With Mr Grey's (sic.) calculations, I found the difficulty, which I was unable to articulate clearly in discussion with Mr Young, that there were so many additions and subtractions, to allow for size differences, to allow for terraces and garages, vis a vis storage areas, to allow for 2-lot plans where one lot had no waterfrontage and/or no view, to pro rate total price over different types of lot (Castra Place), that it was difficult to see that anything could really be obtained, ultimately, from the calculations other than an average price per square metre for 1983 Eastern suburbs waterfrontage units. With his ultimate conclusion as to relative entitlements, based as it was on those calculations, I found that his empirical inquiry of comparison of each lot separately with `comparable' units in other waterfront buildings, led to conclusions that failed to reanchor the inquiry as a quest for the comparative values of each of the subjective lots relative to each other''

102. The approach taken by each of the valuers was contained in the Stated Case at paragraph 2.9. That paragraph states:

> “The Harrigan/Higgins report contained a definition of market value and stated:
>
> > `This valuation task needs to consider the sales of one bedroom units, two bedroom units and four bedroom units in a comparable location with waterfrontage, harbour and water views without garaging facilities and in order to interpret the then market we have considered numerous sales within the immediate vicinity of Double Bay and Darling Point. The annexure of extract of strata plans, cancelled certificates of title, dealings and photographs marked ``H'' and numbered 1 to 98, are a collection of some of the relevant sales information collected and used as a guide as to the market value of each of the subject stratum.'
>
> and the Gray report listed a number of comparable sales of which it said:
>
> > The only sales that could be considered comparable would have to be waterfrontage and then more weight must be given to smaller blocks.
> > Values of the subject units have to be discounted when drawing comparisons because of the poor pedestrian access, the number of stairs to be climbed and the absence of parking facilities of any kind.”

103. There are a number grounds upon which the Defendants asserts that the approach to valuation and the dismissal of the comparable sales approach by the Board is not an error of law.

A question of law?

104. First, the Defendants assert that to the extent that the contentions of the appellant depend on a suggestion that in departing from any expert, the Board erred in law, that position is unsustainable because it is not an error of law. The valuation task, it is said, is one of fact; Woolf v City of Camberwell [1931] VLR 162 at 168. It appears that the Defendants relies on the approval given in that case by Lowe J to the judgment of Lord Halsbury in the case of Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v Birkenhead Assessment Committee [1901] AC 175 at 180 which is quoted at 168 in Woolf v City of Camberwell:

> ``I am not aware of any rule of law or any statute which has limited [a valuer] as to the mode in which they shall arrive at [a valuation]. It is not a question of law at all — it is a question of fact."

105. Lowe J, however quotes extensively from Lord Halsbury and cites a number of other decisions before concluding, at 169:

> ``For the reasons which I have already indicated, it is only a matter of law when the Judge has shown that he has not applied the rule which the statute has laid down, or has
> [140143]
>
> [140143]
> misconceived what was involved in the term `valuation'."

106. The present case is, indeed, one in which the Plaintiffs assert that the Board misconceived what was involved in the term ``valuation.'' That is a question of law and one rightly addressed by this Court (also see Woolf v City of Camberwell where it was upheld that the meaning of ``valuation'' within the appropriate valuation was a question of law: at 171 per Mann J).

What is the proper approach to valuation?

107. Secondly, the Defendants argued that the dismissal of the comparable sales approach to valuation by the Board did not constitute an error of law. The Plaintiffs on the other hand, assert that value as a matter of law must be interpreted as market value according to the test in Spencer v The Commonwealth (supra). Having not strictly applied that test to the principles of valuation, the Board, on the Plaintiffs' view, is in error.

108. In Spencer v The Commonwealth at 440-1 Isaacs J described the ``value'' of land as:

> ``the fair price of the land, which a hypothetical prudent purchaser would entertain, if he desired to [441] purchase it for the most advantageous purpose for which it was adapted.... To arrive at the value of the land... we have... to suppose it sold then, not by means of a forced sale, but by voluntary bargaining between the Plaintiffs and a purchaser, willing to trade, but neither of them so anxious to do so that he would overlook any ordinary business consideration. We must further suppose both to be perfectly acquainted with the land, and cognisant of all circumstances which might affect its value, either advantageously or prejudicially, including its situation, character, quality, proximity to conveniences or inconveniences, its surrounding features, the then present demand for land, and the likelihood, as then appearing to persons best capable of forming an opinion, of a rise or fall for what reason howsoever in the amount which one would otherwise be wiling to fix as the value of the property... Having mentally placed itself in the position of the bargaining parties... the question for the tribunal is, what is the point at which the parties would meet; what is the sum the one would be willing to give and the other to take?"

109. According to her grounds of determination, the Board determined that value in s 119 must mean ``market value''. This in itself is in line with the Spencer's test.

110. However, the Board then chose to reject the valuations provided by the expert valuers of each party. In respect of the valuation proposed by the Defendants in the present proceedings, the Board determined:

> ``Mr Higgins' conclusion is largely inscrutable, because his report does not disclose what steps he took in reaching it.'': Provisional View, 23 May 1998, p. 4

111. The Board was not satisfied as to the precise method of valuation by Mr Higgins. While the Board found Mr Gray's valuation method ``very transparent'', she added that ``that does not necessarily mean that it was any more acceptable, at least as a final solution''. Later, the Board said of Mr Gray's calculations:

``With his ultimate conclusion as to relative entitlements, based as it was on those calculations, I found that his empirical inquiry of comparison of each lot separately with `comparable' units in other waterfront buildings, led to conclusions that failed to re-anchor the inquiry as a quest for the comparative values of each of the subjective lots relative to each other'': Provisional View, 23 May 1998, p. 5.

112. The Board rejected the comparative sales approach saying:

``sales price of units in the subject parcel or of comparable lots in other strata plans would not ordinarily alone determine market value, since sale price differentials may reflect, inter alia, internal refurbishment in one lot and not another'': Amended Stated Case paragraph 3.3.

113. As to whether further valuation evidence should be obtained to supplement or replace the valuations of Mr Higgins and Mr Gray, the Board said:

``It is obvious, at the end of the day, having regard to the significant disparity between Mr Higgins' and Mr Grey's conclusions as to relative unit entitlements, both of them being eminent and expert in their field, that should further valuations be sought they are as likely to be equally divergent, or at least that a renewed exercise under s 119 with other expert valuers is likely to be disproportionately expensive to the likelihood of certainty of result.'': Provisional View, 23 May 1998, p. 5

114. Since the Board had, therefore, determined that there were no comparable sales from which the respective values of the units could be estimated, the Defendants submit that the Board was entitled to ascertain the value ``doing the best it could on the materials before it'': See Bingham v Cumberland County Council (supra) at 18-19.

115. In Bingham's case, the claimant sought compensation for injurious affection under now-repealed provisions of the Local Government Act 1919, as amended. The part of that judgment referred to by the Defendants is concerned with the method of ascertainment of the value of land affected by the local development scheme. After referring to the proper test for valuation of land as laid out in Spencer's Case, and the comparative sales approach also adopted in Raja Vyricherla Narayana Gajapatiraju v Revenue Divisional Officer, Visagapatam (``the Raja's Case'') (1939) AC 302, Sugerman J said:

“Special difficulties may exist in the application of these principles to the ascertainment of market value in cases such as the present. The affected `market value' is referable to an actual market in the sense earlier stated. But only a limited amount of land in a given locality may be affected in the way which is in question. Sales which are sufficiently close in time, unaffected by changes of circumstances or other extraneous considerations, and of sufficiently comparable properties may, therefore, be few or non-existent. So far as they do exist they may be so inconsistent with each other as to preclude any reliable inference... The unaffected `market value' is, as I have said, referrable only to a suppositious and not to an actual market. It may however be possible to obtain guidance from evidence of the prices obtained on sale in a market not significantly different or differing only to an extent for which appropriate adjustments may readily be made...

In the absence of sufficient guidance to be had from sales, the valuer may find himself in a position resembling that to which Lord Romer referred in the Raja's Case in which he `will have no market value to guide him, and he will have to ascertain as best he may from the materials before him what a willing vendor might reasonably expect to obtain from a willing purchaser for the land.' In these cases that would not be because the land possessed, in terms of Lord Romer's judgment, `some unusual, and it may be unique, features as regards its position or its potentialities' but because it derived a certain uniqueness from the character of the provisions and restrictions affecting it and the consequences of the affection, which would take a sale of it outside the ordinary run of transactions in otherwise comparable lands and thus preclude direct comparison.”: at 18

116. While this may appear to assist the Defendants, it must be borne in mind that Sugerman J was discussing the ascertainment of an ``affected'' and ``unaffected'' value of a particular piece of land. The ``affected value'' of the land was the value of the land at the time the development scheme came into operation. The ``unaffected value'' of the land was the value that land would have had if the scheme had never proceeded. Similar circumstances do not exist in the present case. First, in the present case, there was, before the board, Mr Gray's valuation based on the comparable sales value of the property (adjusted by a number of factors). That valuation was dismissed by the Board. Secondly, the scheme contained in s 119 does not place an obligation on the Board to make a new allocation of unit entitlements. Section 119(1) gives the Board a discretion so to make or refuse an order and certainly may decline to make an order if not furnished by the parties with the materials to perform the statutory task. Section 119(2) provides the conditions placed on the Board's discretion in subs 1. The Board is not, therefore, in the situation of ``having to do the best it can'' as was the case in Bingham. A similar distinction can be drawn between the present case and that of Harris v Minister for Public Works (1912) 12 SR (NW) 149.

117. The Defendants argue, however, that comparable sales method of valuation is a method only ``applicable in cases where sales evidence of other properties directly comparable with the subject one is available, or where reasoned, minor adjustments can be made when applying the evidence to take into account points of difference between the evidence and the subject property'': Fricke (ed), ``Compulsory Acquisition of Land in Australia'' (LBC, 1982) at 344-5. The material before the Court, it is argued, makes it clear that the Board found as a matter of fact that market comparison evidence was not of assistance, inter alia, because the adjustments required by Mr Gray's method were not minor. The question apparent from the contention is whether that dismissal was due to an error of law on the part of the Board. As explained above, an error of law in these circumstances can only arise where the Board misinterpreted its statutory duty. If the statute can be said to afford other meanings to the word ``value'' than ``market value obtained by the method of comparable sales'', then the Plaintiffs' contention is not made out. While the provisions of the Act do not make clear whether ``value'' is to be understood in a certain sense, we are preceded by Spencer's Case, which remains the authoritative statement as to the meaning of ``value''. Can it be said that the dismissal of the comparative sales approach by the Board runs foul of the principle in Spencer's case?

118. The facts of Spencer's case were that there was no way to determine the piece of land in question by reference to comparable sales. While the test referred to above holds the Board to the mental process therein described, it does not constitute a rule that the comparable sales method is the only valid method of ascertaining a ``value'': see, for an application of this principle, Dixon v City of Glenorchy (1978) 15 LGRA 407 (especially at 417).

119. The contention that the Board erred in law merely by dismissing the comparable sales approach is not, therefore, made out; but see under 4.3(c) below as to whether there was no evidence on which to dismiss comparable sales, itself leading to error of law.

Which sales are comparable?

120. Thirdly, the Defendants argue that the question of which sales are comparable and which are not is a matter of degree and a question for the expert and, therefore, a matter of fact.

121. While it can readily be accepted that whether a certain sale is comparable to the property in question is a question of fact, the contentions of the Plaintiffs do not require this Court to determine whether the sales were, indeed comparable, only that the method of comparable sales should not have been dismissed. That question, as explained above, is a question of law.

4.3(c) No evidence on which to dismiss comparable sales?

122. The Plaintiffs assert that the Board erred in law by dismissing the comparable sales method on the grounds that there was no evidence of refurbishment that might justify the Magistrate's finding in paragraph 3.3 of the Stated Case.

123. Paragraph 4.3(c) of the Stated Case contains the words ``when neither valuer dismissed the comparable sales method on that ground and there was no evidence of such suggested internal refurbishment''. The Defendants submit that this Court should not accept this paragraph as stating any ``ultimate fact'' determined by the Board but merely as an assertion on the part of the Plaintiffs.

124. In light of my decision above that points going to a ``no evidence'' argument on the part of the Plaintiffs are questions of law, the ``fact'' of whether the Board made a decision without the aid of any anterior finding of fact is one capable of determination by this Court. A proposition which is not merely colourable that there was no evidence by which a Board could have reached its decision or made a material finding does raise a question of law.

125. Was there evidence before the Board, then, upon which it could have made the determination that ``sales price differentials may reflect, inter alia, internal refurbishment in one lot and not another''? Since the evidence before the Board was admitted before me for the purpose of determining this question and since the Defendants did not identify any evidence contrary to the Plaintiffs' assertion that there was no evidence of internal refurbishment, I find that there was no evidence to support the determination of the Board in paragraph 3.3. The Board's determination in paragraph 3.3 of the Stated Case therefore constitutes an error of law.

4.4 Was the Board's test of value a valid one?

126. Paragraph 4.4 of the Stated Case reads:

> ``4.4 In respect of grounds of determination 3.9 and 3.10 (and of the criticisms of Mr Gray therein):
>
> (a) I erred in law in finding that the proper exercise for a valuer such as Mr
>
> [140146]
>
> [140146]
> Gray was to arrive at what a prospective willing but astute or cautious buyer, neutral as to number of bedrooms and bathrooms required, who wanted to buy one or all of the units in this particular block would pay for each of them as against the other two, in the state the common property was in in 1983;
> (b) Likewise I erred in law in criticising Mr Gray's empirical approach comparing each lot separately with other `comparable' units in other waterfront buildings rather than searching for the comparative values of each of the subjective lots relative to each other.''

127. The rejection of the comparative sales approach and the adoption of a floor area approach is said to be erroneous. Instead, the Board substituted a value according to a test explained in the Provisional View of 23 May 1998 at paragraph 4.7:

> ``Ultimately, the exercise is not to arrive at what price buyers seeking respectively a large one bedroom, large two bedroom and large ¾ bedroom two and a half bathroom Eastern suburbs waterfront strata title would respectively have paid for units in 1A Wiston Gardens, compared with other Eastern suburbs waterfront apartment blocks... Rather it is to arrive at what a prospective willing but astute or cautious buyer, neutral as to number of bedrooms and bathrooms required, who wanted to buy one or all of the units in this particular block would pay for each of them as against the other two, in the state that the common property was in 1983.''

128. The determinations complained of in the Stated Case, then, read:

> ``3.9 I found that Mr Gray's method was more transparent but that did not mean it was any more acceptable at least as a final solution. I found that the proper exercise was to arrive at what a prospective willing but astute or cautious buyer, neutral as to number of bedrooms an bathrooms required, who wanted to buy one or all of the units in this particular block would pay for each of them as against the other two, in the state that the common property was in in 1983.
> 3.10 I found that Mr Gray's empirical enquiry of comparison of each lot separately with `comparable' units in other waterfront buildings led to conclusions that failed to reanchor the enquiry as a quest for the comparative values of each of the subjective lots relative to each other.''

129. At the outset it is necessary to point out that the contention at paragraph 4.4 is considerably different to the contention at paragraph 4.3(b). That paragraph concerned merely the dismissal of the comparative sales approach. Paragraph 4.4, on the other hand, deals with the test of valuation as enunciated by the Board.

130. There are two ``benchmarks'' to which the Board's test of value must comply. The first is the requirements of s 119(2). While s 119(2) does not contain a test for or definition of ``value'', it does indicate that the relevant values of the lots are the ``respective'' values of the lots. As determined above, the word ``respective'' in the context of s 119(2) means ``particular''. Any test, then, must be concerned with finding the particular value of each of the lots in the property. The Board's test of value expressly disavows this principle determined as it is by the statute. In this respect, the test suggested by the Board is erroneous in law.

131. The second benchmark is the benchmark of ``value.'' Spencer's Case as extracted above is the applicable principle for the valuation of land with Boland (supra) a recent warning against unnecessary glosses. The question, then, is whether the test for value applied by the Board complies with the Spencer test. The Board's reference to a ``prospective willing but astute or cautious buyer'' cannot be said to be erroneous. However the caveat that they be ``neutral as to number of bedrooms and bathrooms required'' takes the hypothetical buyer outside that described by the Spencer test, as one being ``cognisant of all circumstances which might affect [the land's] value...''.

132. The approach is, therefore, erroneous at law as it misconstrues the statutory requirements of s 119(2) of the Strata Titles Act and strays from the meaning of ``value'' as espoused by the High Court in Spencer's Case.

4.5 Was it an error of law to base an order on the mean between the opinions of two rejected valuations?

133. Paragraph 4.5 of the Stated Case reads:

> ``4.5 In respect of grounds of determination 3.15, 3.16, 3.17, 3.19 and 3.20 I erred in law in basing in part an order under s 119(1)
>
> [140147]
> [140147]
>
> Strata Titles Act on a mean between the opinions of two valuers when:
>
> (a) I had made findings 3.7 and 3.8;
> (b) I had made no finding that their valuations were equally wrong lot by lot.''

134. In the Provisional View of 23 May 1998, the Board considered that neither the parties' valuations were ``completely satisfactorily performed''. Having found that neither valuer's evidence was satisfactory, however, the Board did, in the final result use the valuations in the calculation of the unit entitlements derived from floor area and the mean of the unit entitlements from the two valuations.

135. This was, on the submission of the Plaintiffs, an error of law on the part of the Board. The Plaintiffs assert that since the Board found the two valuers unacceptable then logically it could not make or derive a unit entitlement which was a mean between the unacceptable. The Plaintiffs assert that this, in the absence of further findings that the unit entitlement also reflected an accurate value of the lots, amounted to an error of law.

136. The Defendants, on the other hand, maintain that the Board did not ``base in part an order under s 119(1) Act on a mean between the opinions of two valuers''. It is however self- evident that the Board did, in part base its final conclusion on a mean between the unit entitlements calculated by each of the valuers: see paragraphs 3.13-3.20 of the Stated Case.

137. Further the Defendants assert that, however the unit entitlements were reached, the calculation involves a question of fact and not of law. Once again, where there is no evidence before the Board on which to base the conclusion that the mean of the valuer's unit entitlements reflected the true value of the lots, that is a matter involving a question of law.

138. It being clear that there was no evidence on which to base the Board's determinations as referred to in the Plaintiffs' contention at paragraph 4.5 of the stated case and in the light of the Board's determinations at paragraphs 3.7 and 3.8 of the Stated Case, the Board has erred in law.

4.6 Should the Board first determine respective values?

139. Paragraph 4.6 of the Stated Case reads:

> ``4.6 In respect of grounds of determination 3.19 and 3.20 I erred in law in making an order pursuant to Section 119(1) without first determining the respective values of each lot under Section 119(2)''

140. It is asserted that without first determining the value of the units, the discretionary power under s 119(2) could never be enlivened.

A question of fact?

141. The Defendants first assert that paragraph 4.6 involves a question of fact and not law. This is clearly wrong. Whether s 119(2) requires the Board to carry out a calculation of value before making an order pursuant to s 119(1) is a question of statutory construction and is a question of law.

A precondition?

142. Secondly the Defendants argue that s 119 contains no principle that the board needs to calculate and make a determination as to the respective values of the lots before moving on to calculate unit entitlements.

143. This was dealt with above in relation to contention 4.3(a).

144. It is sufficient to point out here that it is clear that ``having regard to the respective values of the lots'' is a precondition of the exercise of the power in s 119(1). Thus it is true to say that the Board is first required to have regard to the respective value of the lots. Secondly, the Board is to consider whether the unit entitlements allocated at the date of registration of the strata plan or strata plan of subdivision were unreasonable or have become unreasonable. After those two matters have been considered, and only after those matters have been considered, does s 119(2) enliven the power in s 119(1) to change the allocation of unit entitlements.

The only requirement is that the request was not ``unreasonably made''

145. Third, and counter to the Plaintiffs' assertion that value needs to be determined as a precondition for the Board's exercise of power under s 119(1), the Defendants argue that if any precondition to the exercise of that power exists, it is the requirement to dismiss applications where the original unit allocations were not ``unreasonably made'': s 119(2). It is submitted that the use of the word ``unreasonable'' suggest that the section is not concerned with absolute arithmetical accuracy as to values. The Defendants go on to submit that ``the section [ie s 119] leaves room for discretionary matters... and the Board is not bound, as a matter of principle to change an original allocation simply because the Board would have reached a slightly different allocation''.

146. That group of submissions does not meet the Plaintiffs' argument. The fact that there are requirements in addition to the requirement to ascertain value does not rule out the existence of the valuation requirement if it can otherwise be truly said to exist. Furthermore, it is not the Plaintiffs' submission that determined value binds the discretion of the Board to change the unit allocations. It is, rather, that the Board cannot exercise that discretion unless and until it has a determined valuation for each lot on which to base that discretion.

4.7, 4.8 & 4.9 Was the Board functus officio and should it have accepted further written submissions?

147. The Stated Case contains the following contentions:

> ``4.7 In respect of 3.20 I erred in law in holding in my Order of 29 July 1998 that following publication of my Reasons of 23 May 1998 I was functus officio in respect of the issue of the proper construction of Section 119 or any other issue.
> 4.8 In respect of 3.20 I erred in law in not accepting the written submissions of the parties concerning the proper construction of Section 119 and other matters as referred to in those submissions.

4.9 In respect of 3.20 I erred in law in that if I was intending by Reasons of 23 May 1998 to give the parties the choice of three alternative allocations I consider satisfactory and/or the opportunity to obtain and adduce further valuation evidence, I erred in law in communicating my Reasons of 23 May 1998 in its terms as set out in 3.19 and offering the parties only the opportunity to make further written submissions."

148. In the Provisional View of 23 May 1998, the Board concluded:

> ``This represents my provisional view of the state of the evidence before me and the conclusions I would draw from it, provided for the assistance of the parties. Unless I receive further submissions in writing from the parties within 28 days, I shall make orders specifying a reallocation in terms of the provisional conclusion on that date.": Provisional View 23 May 1998, p. 6

149. Furthermore, attached to the Stated Case, there was a facsimile sent from the Strata Titles Board, by the Clerk of the Board dated 26 May 1998 to the solicitors for the Plaintiffs in the present matter. That document contained the words:

> ``If you choose to make further written submissions, these will be required to be filed at this Office by 22 June 1998."

150. In a statement of orders on 29 July 1998, the Board said:

> ``I thank Messrs Young and Bouris respectfully for their further submissions, received by me on 30 June, a few days before I went on leave.
>
> It seems that my final paragraphs under the head CONCLUSION in my reasons dated 25 May 1998 in this matter have been misunderstood by both legal representatives, no doubt due to a lack of clarity in my choice of words. I was not inviting submissions as to the correctness or otherwise of my conclusions as to the proper construction of s 119. They were final judicial determinations, in respect of which I considered myself functus, and as such my determinations reviewable only by the Supreme Court.
>
> Rather, I was seeking to give the parties the choice of three alternative allocations I considered to be satisfactory; or the opportunity to obtain and adduce further valuation evidence on the basis of my construction of s 119.
>
> In the event it seems clear there will be no agreement or further evidence."

151. The Plaintiffs say that in so refusing to consider the further submissions, the Magistrate erred in two ways.

The Board was functus

152. First the Plaintiffs assert that the Board made an error of law in that it was not, as it decided, functus in respect of the provisional view of 23 May 1998.

153. In respect of whether the board truly was functus of the issues raised in the 23 May

[140149]

1998 Provisional View, it is submitted on behalf of the Plaintiffs that since no order had been made under s 119 until the publication of the orders of 29 July 1998, according to common law principles, no court or tribunal could be functus as determined by the Board.

154. The Board, in its final orders of 29 July 1998, said, of the determinations contained in the Provisional View: ``They were final judicial determinations, in respect of which I considered myself functus, and as such my determinations reviewable only by the Supreme Court". It is clear that the Board considered itself functus according to the normal judicial application of the word.

155. A court does have power to alter its judgment prior to entry of that judgment: Autodesk Inc. v Dyason (No. 2) (1993) 176 CLR 300. Furthermore where no judgment in terms has been handed down, there is not even anything to alter, or to be the subject of res judicata or issue estoppel: compare in the context of an appeal to this Court from a Taxing Officer, Wentworth v Wentworth (Santow J, [1999] NSWSC 638, 29 June 1999, unreported) as to the status of a judgment entered or not yet entered and the scope for re-opening or varying such a judgment.

156. In the present circumstances, the Board could not at the time be said to be functus of its determinations as to the construction of s 119. It had not made any orders, even of an interim type to that effect. Nor had it handed down a judgment. There were no orders certified and served as such on the body corporate (see s 144 Strata Titles Act 1973). Furthermore, the Board in terms of the invitation it made, expressed itself open, at least, to further submissions on its factual findings and conclusions as to unit entitlements (see Orders of 29 July 1998). Given that the Board was not functus of those determinations, it could not be said that it was functus of its determinations as to the construction of s 119 when it had not made any orders in respect of those matters or issued what could in terms constitute a judgment or final determination.

157. In respect of paragraph 4.9 of the Stated Case, the Defendants argue that since there was no obligation on the Board to invite the parties to adduce further evidence, the words of Provisional View were enough to constitute the Board's judgment and orders. In respect of the matters of construction, being those matters which the Board as at 29 July 1998 considered itself functus, it is impossible to see those determinations as constituting a final judgment or determination, when headed ``Provisional View'' and accompanied by the invitation to make further submissions nor as constituting orders on those matters.

158. The Board was in error at law in deciding, in its orders of 29 July 1998, that it was functus in respect of the construction of s 119 in its Provisional View of 23 May 1998.

A denial of procedural fairness

159. Secondly, the Plaintiffs assert that this error resulted in a denial to the Plaintiffs of procedural fairness in that the Board had, in its Provisional View of 23 May 1998, represented that it would receive further submissions and then at 29 July 1998 refused to countenance such submissions. The Plaintiffs' claim that, misled by the terms of the Provisional View and the letter of 26 May 1998, they relied on their supplementary submissions and did not pursue the matters referred to in the Board's order of 29 July 1998. They were denied, they say, the chance to properly argue their case. The Plaintiffs maintain that even if the Board had not stated the view of 23 May 1998 to be a ``provisional'' view, ``so radically different was [the Board's] view of the nature of the Board's function under s 119(2) that [the Plaintiffs was] entitled to be heard'' [T, 64:45]. While the Board could have, it is argued, published its Provisional View as its final reasons and order, it did not do so.

160. In further support of this second argument, both the Plaintiffs and Defendants, acting reasonably, interpreted the Provisional View and the letter of 26 May 1998 as allowing further submissions on the issues covered in the Provisional View, including the construction of s 119 of the Strata Titles Act 1973 (see T, 74, where Mr Bouris conceded that the Provisional View misled both sides). Was the Board then required, by the insistence of natural justice, to observe the audi alteram partem rule?

161. The audi alteram partem rule, being an expression of the fair hearing principle, means that, for example an arbitration must allow each party to comment on and contradict the material offered by an opponent (unless the parties otherwise agree): T A Miller Limited v Minister of Housing and Local Government [1968] 2 All ER 633 (there the ``material'' was hearsay evidence).

162. Having erred in deciding that it was functus in respect of the construction of s 119, the Board was in truth capable of accepting further submissions as to the construction of s 119. That it did not, in the result, consider those submissions might be said to have disadvantaged each party equally, and in a way that was inherently possible under s 132(2) of the Act in any event. Thus s 132(2) of the Act allows the Board to inform itself ``with or without any hearing''. However, that cannot be determinative in these circumstances. The effect of representing that such further submissions would be considered does have the effect of creating a legitimate expectation in the minds of the parties that the Board would consider those submissions and represents an exercise of the power so to order its proceedings. The representation of the Board, as contained at paragraph 3.20 of the Stated Case, clearly had a bearing on the way in which the parties chose to argue their case (for example, see the further submissions of both parties attached to the Stated Case). To subsequently dismiss those submissions and not give an opportunity to the parties to make further, amended submissions on the matters of fact considered by the Board (see Orders 29 July 1998), was to deny the legal representatives before the Board proper opportunity to argue the case to the best of their ability and in the interests of their clients in accordance with the legitimate expectations engendered. To represent, as the Board did, that it would countenance further submissions in such broad compass as indicated in the Provisional View of 23 May 1998 and then to refuse to consider those submissions or allow further submissions by the Order of 29 July 1998 was, prima facie, in breach of the rules of procedural fairness.

163. Before I decide finally on this matter, though, it is necessary to address the arguments raised by the Defendants in respect of this natural justice point.

164. The Defendants' first argument is that the denial of natural justice point was not taken by the Plaintiffs (see Defendants' Written Outline of Submissions 8 February 2000 paragraph 4.8), is clearly wrong. The issue is raised in the Plaintiffs' contention at paragraph 4.9 of the Stated Case. The Plaintiffs took the point at paragraph 29 and 30 of its ``Outline of Plaintiffs' Submissions.''

165. The Defendants further submit that whether or not the Board was functus of the issues in the Provisional View as of 2 July 1998, there has been no denial of procedural fairness. Firstly, it is argued that even if the Board had allowed the further submissions, the orders of the Board would have remained as they now stand. Secondly, it is asserted that while the words of the Provisional View of 23 May 1998 in respect of further submissions were not clear, in the absence of any requirement of law to give the parties an opportunity to submit further evidence and submissions, that the case of the parties had been concluded as of 23 May 1998 and there was no error of law in not giving countenance to those further submissions.

166. I have ruled above that the Board was not functus following publication of the Provisional View on 23 May 1998. It could not, therefore, be said that, as of that date, the case of the parties had been concluded.

In respect of the submission that the Board's decision would remain the same even if further valuation evidence had been obtained, it is impossible for this Court to determine either way that such evidence would have influenced the Board's conclusions. If the Board continued to labour under the misconstruction of its task as laid down in s 119 of the Act, it seems likely that the Board would have, even in the face of further valuation evidence from the Plaintiffs, reached at least a similar conclusion. However, this Court does not and cannot have before it the evidence necessary to make a determination on this matter. Furthermore, the suggestion that Courts should overlook breaches of natural justice where, in the absence of such breach, the outcome may have remained the same, has been widely criticised (see Aronson & Dyer Judicial Review of Administrative Action (LBC, 1996) at 486-489). The present circumstance is not a ``technical breach'' of procedural fairness (as was suggested in the case of R v Chief Constable of the Thames Valley Police; Ex parte Cotton [1979] 77 LGR 689 at 350-1). Nor is it a circumstance where the outcome is a foregone conclusion (such as in Mobil Oil Canada Limited v Canada Newfoundland Offshore Petroleum Board (1994) 11 DLR (4th) 1). Furthermore, this present case is diametrically opposite to the situation in Stead v State Government Insurance Commission ; (1986) 161 CLR 141, where the High Court said:

> ``By way of illustration, if all that happened at trial was that a party was denied the opportunity of making submissions on a question of law, when, in the opinion of the appellate court, the question of law must clearly be answered unfavourably to the aggrieved party, it would be futile to order a new trial'': at 145 (per Mason, Wilson, Brennan, Dean and Dawson JJ) as cited in Aronson & Hunter.

[140151]

168. In this case I have already decided that the approach at law of the Board was fundamentally flawed. That the Board might reach the same conclusions as it did even if it had proceeded according to the principles of procedural fairness can, therefore, have no bearing on whether the Plaintiffs' contention is made out nor on whether I should remit the matter for re-determination.

169. As to the argument that there was no requirement at law to give the parties an opportunity to submit further evidence and submissions, it is clear that while no such requirement does exist, a legitimate expectation in the parties that further submissions would be considered did arise out of the Board's own representations. Even if not a right in itself, that legitimate expectation is an interest protected by the rules of procedural fairness. The Board's refusal to admit the further submissions of the parties and its indication that there would be no further evidence (see Orders 29 July 1998), therefore, constitutes a breach of procedural fairness and an error of law.

4.10 Did the Board err in law by not dismissing the claim on the basis that the valuation evidence was insufficient?

170. Paragraph 4.10 of the Stated Case reads:

> ``4.10 In respect of the whole of my grounds of determination I erred in law in not dismissing the application on the basis that the valuation evidence of the parties was insufficient to ground an order reallocating unit entitlements under Section 119 of the Strata Titles Act 1973."

171. The Plaintiffs' contention here relies on the earlier contention that it was necessary for the Board to determine the value of each of the apartments before proceeding to calculate the unit entitlements. The Plaintiffs' argument is that in the absence of any valuation evidence satisfying the Spencer test, the Board should dismiss an application under s 119 for re- allocation of unit entitlements. That is, when a party cannot lead evidence of value according to the Spencer test of value, that party must necessarily fail.

172. The Defendants point out that evidence given by the valuers going to value, including evidence as to access, aspect, light and air and livable and potentially livable area, were considered by the Board. The Defendants maintain that these were sufficient for the Board to reach a valid determination according to the requirements in Bingham.

173. As discussed above, Bingham's case was about the proper test for valuation. It does not stand as authority for the proposition that in certain circumstances value does not need to be calculated as long as factors going to value are considered. Furthermore, while valuation may have been difficult in that case, such difficulty did not excuse the relevant authority from calculating a value where the express words of the statute required it. Bingham does not assist the Defendants here.

174. The Defendants also adopt submissions made by it before the Board [FLA 19]. The adoption of paragraph 3 of FLA 19 seems to be an inference that the Defendants submit that in certain circumstances, courts have rejected valuations based on comparable sales.

175. First the Defendants cite Leichhardt Municipal Council v Seatainer Terminals Pty Limited & Glebe Island Terminals Pty Limited (1981) 48 LGRA 409 at 435 where Hope JA says:

> ``Whether the differences between land the sale of which is to be relied upon and the land to be valued are so great that the land the subject of the sale cannot be regarded as comparable is a question of fact and degree. The difference may be so great that a court may be constrained to hold that the land is in no sense comparable, and that the adjustments which have to be made are so great that the sale can provide no evidence of the value to be determined, and no basis upon which that value can be assessed."

176. Second, the Defendants cite Crompton v Commissioner of Highways (1973) 32 LGRA 8 at 23-4 per Wells J:

> ``Obviously, no two sales of land will be found to be the same, or even similar in all
>
> [140152]
>
> [140152]
> respects. Those that bear a close similarity to the assumed sale of the subject land will be more reliable than those whose similarity is less proximate and in respect of which adjustments or allowances must be made before they can be safely introduced into the valuation process. At a particular point it ceases to be safe or sound to treat them as sufficiently similar to the assumed sale of the subject land, and they must henceforward be rejected."

177. These cases do not assist the Defendants. While they do bear upon the usefulness of comparable sales evidence in the valuation of a property, it has nothing to say as to whether, having on its own admission no satisfactory valuation evidence to go on, the Board could order a re-allocation of unit entitlements under s 119(1).

178. Of the other paragraphs in the submissions in FLA 19 referred to in 4.10 of the Defendants' Submissions of 8 February 2000, the Defendants have not demonstrated their relevance to the present proceedings. The following words, however, do appear in paragraph 24 of FLA 19:

> ``It is submitted that only in very extreme circumstances, not applicable to this case, should the Board decline to make an order under section 119(2), given that other implications arise from a decision as to the proper valuation of lots, for example, the issue of land tax and other imposts. Whilst the Commissioner of Land Tax is empowered under section 65A of the Land Tax Management Act 1956 to seek an order for reallocation of unit entitlements in a strata scheme and other bodies may apply under s 119(3)(c) (including local councils), if the Board has before it evidence that such an allocation is unreasonable, then the Board ought to seek to give effect to that evidence not only as between the parties but ultimately having regard to the fact that third parties do rely on proper valuations being in place and that such reliance ought to be reliance on a correct state of affairs, as a matter of public policy.''

179. I have decided above that the Board, before it can order a re-allocation of unit entitlements, must have before it a value to which it can have regard. While the valuation of the valuers may be disregarded for various reason (as a matter of fact), it is true that the Board cannot proceed under s 119(1) before it has had regard to the values of the lots. The words of the statute are clear on this point. It is also true that Spencer's Case is authority for the basis of a proper valuation of land. A ``value'' in the sense determined in Spencer's case must be before the Board. Valuations of the lots are an important matter, as pointed out by the Defendants in FLA 19. All the more reason why s 119 of the Act should be read according to its terms, to require the Board to have regard to the respective values of the lots before making orders to reallocate unit entitlements pursuant to s 119(1).

4.11 Did the Board err in law by failing to consider the estoppel argument raised by the applicants?

180. The provisional view and orders of the Board did not deal with any estoppel argument on the part of the Proprietors of Strata Plan 10294. The Plaintiffs in the present proceedings assert that it had made a submission based on estoppel and that it was an error of law on the part of the Board not to give reasons in respect of that submission.

181. The contention at paragraph 4.11 of the Stated Case reads:

> ``4.11 I erred in law in failing to consider or make findings or a determination in respect of the submission of the Respondents that the Appellants were estopped from seeking an alteration of the unit entitlements under Section 119 by the long existence of the existing entitlements, their acquisition of their lot with knowledge of those entitlements and their continuing to take advantage of those existing entitlements by only paying one third of levies to the detriment of the Respondents.''

To this the Defendants respond that there was no duty to give reasons, or at any rate reasons as to this particular contention.

Does the Board have a duty to give reasons?

182. The Plaintiffs argue that the Board, while an administrative body, is exercising a quasi-judicial function and therefore is required to give reasons for its decision. That requirement to give reasons is also said to arise from the existence of a right of appeal from the Board. In Sun Alliance Insurance Limited v Massoud [1989] VR 8 at 18, Gray J writes that ``that the law has developed in a way which obliges a court from which an appeal lies to state adequate reasons for its decision''. Furthermore, in Xuereb v Viola (1989) 18 NSWLR 453 at 469, Cole J writes that ``natural justice requires that a referee give reasons for his opinion... [The reason being] that it enables the parties and the disinterested observer to know that the opinion of the referee is not arbitrary, or influenced by improper considerations but is the result of a process of logic and the application of a considered mind to factual circumstances."

183. Firstly, the Defendants maintain that the Strata Titles Board is not a body which comes under the duty at law to give reasons for its determination. The Defendants assert, citing Public Service Board of New South Wales v Osmond (1986) 159 CLR 656 at 662 (per Gibbs CJ with whom Wilson J and Brennan J agreed); at 675-676 (per Deane J), that as a statutory decision-maker, the Board does not need to give reasons for its apparent rejection of the estoppel argument. The Defendants further assert that since the board is not a judge or a magistrate and since there is nothing in the Act to give rise to a contrary conclusion, the Board is not under a duty to give reasons either generally or with respect to the estoppel argument. The Defendants also point to the informality of the procedures before the Board and the fact that many of the disputes before the Board are relatively minor neighbourhood disputes.

184. The Act contains no express statutory duty on the Board to give reasons for its orders. Indeed the Act is wholly silent on the matter. In the case of Re Saunders [1993] 2 Qd 335, Derrington J dealt with an argument in similar terms to the present. In that case the argument on one side was that the failure of the Queensland Strata Titles Board to give reasons was an error of law according to various authorities including Pettitt v Dunkeley [1971] 1 NSWLR 376 and Sun Alliance Insurance Limited v Massoud (supra),
19. In reply, ``the respondent referred to Public Service Board of New South Wales v Osmond (supra), in which it was held that general rules of common law or principles of natural justice required reasons to be given for administrative decisions, even those made in the exercise of a statutory discretion and liable adversely to affect the interests, or defeat the legitimate or reasonable expectation of others''; Re Saunders per Derrington J at 338. Derrington J in Re Saunders went on to distinguish Osmond's Case on the ground that ``that decision was directed to matters of natural justice, whereas the present issue is directed to a duty of a quasi-judicial tribunal to state reasons where there is a right of appeal from its decision''. That states the issue before this Court. While the Board may not be a ``quasi-judicial'' body, it is at least exercising a ``quasi-judicial function''. On that question, Derrington J decided as follows:

> ``... because there was evidence upon the point the Tribunal should also have stated its findings of fact and reasons for them. Technically, there should also have been an account of the reasoning in principle upon the issue... The difficulty on appeal resulting from this deficiency is obvious and explains the principle requiring the giving of reasons'': at 339.

185. Similarly, here, the Board, in light of the right of appeal, should have given reasons for its dismissal of the estoppel point, as it could have been determinative of the result, if decided in favour of the Plaintiffs.

186. Second, the Defendants argue that Pt 51B, r 9(b) of the Supreme Court Rules ``by inference, supports the proposition that just because there may be an appeal or case stated procedure, it does not follow that reasons must be given'' [Defendants Outline of Submissions 8 February 2000 paragraph 4.11]. That rule states:

``9 The Plaintiffs shall, unless the Court otherwise directs... file an affidavit exhibiting:

> (a) a copy of the transcript of the proceedings in the tribunal below unless a transcript cannot be obtained in respect of proceedings of that type; and
> (b) a copy of the reasons for decision in the tribunal below, unless the tribunal below has not given, and does not intend to give, written reasons.''

[my emphasis]

187. The Rules, therefore contemplate a situation of appeal from a tribunal where that tribunal has not made written reasons. The Rules, however, cannot be said to determine the question whether the Board in this case was required to give reasons. The requirement to give reasons rests in the Board itself, and cannot be said to be altered by some general statement about the requirements of a Plaintiffs before a Court of Appeal.

[140154]

[140154]

Should the estoppel argument be remitted to the Board?

188. The Defendants submit that the estoppel argument would be destined to fail and should not be remitted to the Board notwithstanding any finding as to whether the Board should have given reasons for its dismissal of the argument. The Defendants argue that the estoppel ``runs the wrong way''.

189. In the case, referred to above, of Re Saunders, Derrington J ruled that, while the failure to give reasons on the part of the board in that case did amount to an error of law, the defect was not fatal ``because the evidence is all one way and as there is no reason to doubt it, it would have been wrong in law to find to the contrary'': at 339.

190. The argued estoppel, as contained in paragraph 4.9, is based on the long existence of the existing entitlements, the Defendants' acquisition of their lot with knowledge of those entitlements and the Defendants'continuing to take advantage of those existing entitlements by only paying one third of levies to the detriment of the respondents. Framed in that way, the Plaintiffs'estoppel argument was asking the Board to estop the Defendants from moving from a position of advantage to a position of disadvantage and to the advantage of the Plaintiffs. Unstated, although also evident, is that the estoppel also sought to stop the Defendants from moving from a position of minority voting power to a position of greater or even majority voting power at the meetings of the Body Corporate.

191. Either way it is difficult to see how the Plaintiffs' estoppel argument could succeed. This is in the absence of any unconscionable behaviour on the part of the Defendants and when continuing in residence at the lot does not constitute a representation sufficient to raise an estoppel either in the sense of Thompson v Palmer (1933) 49 CLR 507 at 547 or in the promissory estoppel sense: see Waltons Stores (Interstate) Limited v Maher (1988) Q ConvR ¶ 54-284 at p 58,028; (1988) 164 CLR 387 at 417. There is also no right in the Plaintiffs to maintain the original unit entitlements. Indeed such a right could clearly not exist — s 119 of the Act refutes any such proposition.

192. I therefore conclude in a manner similar to that of Derrington J in Re Saunders that, even if the failure to give reasons for the dismissal of the Plaintiffs' argument in relation to estoppel did constitute an error of law, it is not of itself one which merits remitting to the Board for determination anew.

5. Was the Board's determination erroneous in point of law?

193. I am satisfied for the reasons set out earlier that the Board erred in law these respects:

1. the Board did err in law by interpreting ``respective'' in section 119(2) of the Strata Titles Act as equating to ``relative'';
2. the Board erred in law by placing extraordinary and excessive importance on the comparative areas of the lots when there was no evidence that the values of the lots could be determined on the basis of their floor area;
3. the Board erred in law by not interpreting section 119 of the Strata Titles Act as requiring the Board to firstly determine and have regard to the value of each lot before moving on to calculate revised unit entitlements;
4. the Board erred in law by rejecting the comparative sales evidence on the ground set out in paragraph 3.3 of the stated case when there was no evidence to support the determination that internal refurbishment made the comparative sale approach inappropriate;
5. the Board erred in law by substituting a test for ``respective value'' of each lot by a test that did not comply with the statutory requirements of section 119(2) nor the requirements of Spencer's Case;
6. the Board erred in law by basing its conclusions as to the proper unit entitlements on the mean between the unit entitlements calculated by each valuer where there was no evidence that averaging resulted in a reasonable ``valuation'' of the lots;
7. the Board erred in law by making an order under section 119(1) without first having regard to the respective values of the lots pursuant to section 119(2);
8. the Board erred in law by, in its Orders of 29 July 1998, finding that it was functus officio in respect of its construction of section 119 in its Provisional View of 23 May 1998;

[140155]

9. the Board erred in law by denying procedural fairness to the Plaintiffs by creating in the parties a legitimate expectation that their submissions as to the construction of section 119 in the Board's Provisional View of 23 May 1998, would be countenanced by the Board before the making of its final orders;
10. the Board did err in law by, after having rejected the valuation evidence before it and in the absence of further and better valuation evidence, not declining the application for a review of unit entitlements;
11. the Board did err in law for failing to give reasons for its implicit rejection of the Plaintiffs' estoppel argument raised before it.

194. The Defendants submit that, in the event that this court finds that the Board did err in law, the Court should still dismiss the Summons on the grounds that the ultimate outcome of the case was not affected by those errors. In support of this, the Defendants cite Sangster v Henry (1920) 37 WN (NSW) 135 and Ex parte Sharah; Re Cox; Potato Marketing Board v Sharah (1956) 73 WN (NSW) 283 at 290.

195. In Sangster v Henry, the court considered that the magistrate had made an error in law by applying the words ``without reasonable cause'' to the whole of the legislative provision where it was clear from the terms of the statute that it was meant only to apply to the first half of that provision. The words statutory provision in that case, however, meant that a similar standard to ``without reasonable cause'' would apply to the second half of the provision and, given, the facts before the magistrate, it was evident that the same result would be reached. The case was considered not one to be remitted to the magistrate.

196. The case of Ex parte Sharah involved an appeal from a Magistrate in respect of one conviction of an accused and the acquittal of his accomplices under the Marketing of Primary Products Act 1927-1940 for offences involving dealing in potatoes which were the property of the Potato Marketing Board. Brereton J determined that the terms of the Justices Act 1902 ss 101 and 106 (which are the provisions applicable in the present proceedings) ``make it plain that the appeal is against the determination; and if the magistrate's decision is justified on the evidence and not affected by an erroneous decision of law the case will not be remitted'': at 290.

197. In the present case, it cannot be said that these authorities assist the Defendants. It is not clear, in the present proceedings, that the Board's decision was justified on the evidence. It would be difficult for this Court to determine that question without hearing the case ab initio, which course is not available under s 130 of the Act, s 101(1) of the Justices Act 1902. The only remedy available, then, to the Plaintiffs' application is to remit the matter for re- determination by the Board.

Final conclusions

198. Much in this case has turned on whether the contentions of the Plaintiffs as contained in the Stated Case constitute questions of law or questions of fact. I have examined each contention carefully on its own terms to determine whether it is one properly dealt with by this court as a question of law.

199. The second aspect of this case was the admission of the exhibits to the affidavit of F L Andreone of 19 January 2000. Being relevant to the various ``no evidence'' points raised by the Plaintiffs' contentions and submissions, that evidence was admitted.

200. In respect of the contentions contained in the Amended Stated Case, I conclude that in respect of contentions 4.1, 4.2(a), 4.3(a), 4.3(c), 4.4, 4.5, 4.6, 4.7, 4.9 and 4.11 the Plaintiffs' claim that the determinations of the Board were erroneous in law has been made out. In respect of all of the mentioned contentions, I direct that the matter be remitted to the Board for a fresh determination of whether the Board should exercise its power under s 119(1) and re- allocate unit entitlements.

201. I find that the Board did not err in law in respect of contention 4.3(b) of the Plaintiffs' contentions as contained in the Stated Case. Furthermore, the Board did not err in law in respect of contention 4.8 of the Stated Case.

202. In respect of contention 4.11, I find that even were the Board to have erred in law by not giving reasons for its dismissal of the Plaintiffs' argument in relation to estoppel, nonetheless given that that argument would, on legal principles, fail, I do not see any reason to remit it for reconsideration by the Board.

Supreme Court of Queensland, Court of Appeal

Judgment delivered 28 April 2000

Community schemes — Retrospective order by primary judge concerning contribution schedule lot entitlements — Whether there was invalid resolution of body corporate to commence application for leave — Whether resolution ratified commenced proceedings — Whether order could be given retrospective effect — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, sec 46; 256 — Body Corporate and Community Management (Standard Module) Regulation 1997, sec 44; 46.

On 19 March 1999 the body corporate of a community titles scheme (``the scheme'') applied to the District Court under sec 46 of the Body Corporate Management Act 1997 for adjustment of the contribution schedule lot entitlement. The return date was 7 April 1999 on which date neither party was ready to proceed. An amendment was made to the application to add a plea for further or other order as the court deemed fit, the application having initially sought only adjustment to an equal contribution. In the meantime, on 29 March the body corporate resolved upon a number of special levies on lot owners in proportion to their existing contribution schedule lot entitlement. Payment of some of these levies was due by the end of May.

When the matter came before the court again on 17 May 1999, the body corporate sought an adjournment on the basis that it had been unable to convene a body corporate meeting to determine the attitude of proprietors other than the respondents. The judge adjourned the application and restrained the body corporate, until further order, from levying the respondents to any greater extent than if their lot entitlement were equal to that of the other lot owners. In July 1999 the respondents filed an affidavit stating that a just and equitable adjustment required a contribution from the respondents of approximately twice that which would have been an equal contribution but less than half that for which they were liable under the existing scheme. An expert report received by the respondents in September agreed with this view. This was the adjustment ultimately made by the District Court in December 1999. The Court further ordered that the adjustment was to take effect on 7 April 1999 and that, until further adjustment, the body corporate refrain from levying any lot owner in the scheme other than in accordance with the contribution schedule lot entitlements contained in its order.

The body corporate applied for leave to appeal from this judgment. At that time there was no special resolution of the body corporate authorising the application but a special resolution to that effect (``the resolution'') was passed in March 2000, some three months later. The body corporate argued that this resolution ratified the proceedings already commenced without authority.

In the event that leave to appeal were granted, the Court agreed to treat the hearing as the hearing of the appeal. Three questions thus arose for determination: (i) the competency of the appeal and application for leave; (ii) whether leave to appeal should be granted; and (iii) the merits of the appeal.

Held: the application and appeal were competent; leave to appeal granted; appeal allowed.

Competency of application and appeal

1. A submission that the resolution was invalid because the general meeting had not been duly convened was rejected. The meeting was held more than 15 km from scheme land and the notice calling the meeting was given exactly 21days before the meeting was held. It did not follow that, as 21 days was the minimum period of notice required by sec 43 of the Standard Module, a reasonable opportunity under sec 44 to object to the proposed place of the meeting required a longer period.

2. While the resolution, in form, did not authorise the ratification of the proceeding already commenced, it did so in substance. That plainly must have been its intention.

Leave to appeal

3. There was an important question involved in the appeal which should be resolved by the Court of Appeal, namely whether an order made under sec 46 of the Act may be made so as to have retrospective effect.

Substantive points on appeal

4. The primary judge did not have power to make an order under sec 46 having retrospective effect. An order changing the lot entitlement could take effect only pursuant to the terms of the Act, that is, upon the recording by the registrar of the new community management statement.

5. The respondents were not entitled to an injunction as from 7 April 1999 restraining the recovery of any contribution levied. The Court could not be satisfied that, even assuming unconscionability on the part of the body corporate from September 1999 in failing to disclose and act on the report received by it, that unconscionability caused the respondents any detriment. They did not assert any detriment other than that which occurred by reason of their liability to pay the levies for which they became liable before the adjustment took effect. There was, therefore, no basis for an injunction from 7 April 1999 or from any later date.

McMurdo P, Davies JA and Moynihan J:

The Court

1. This is an application for leave to appeal from a judgment of the District Court on 14 December 1999 that the contribution schedule lot entitlement for Noosa on the Beach Community Titles Scheme Number 6417 be adjusted in accordance with a specified schedule, that that judgment take effect from 7 April 1999 and that, until further adjustment of the contribution schedule lot entitlements pursuant to the provisions of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, the applicant refrain from levying any lot owner in the scheme other than in accordance with the contribution schedule lot entitlements contained in the order on and from 7 April 1999.

2. Before this Court the parties joined in asking the Court, in the event that it granted leave, to treat the hearing as the hearing of the appeal and the Court agreed to that course. Accordingly three questions arose for determination by this Court. They were:

1. the competency of the applicant's appeal and its application for leave;
2. whether leave should be granted; and
3. the merits of the appeal.

Competency

3. The respondents submitted that the appeal, and consequently the application, were incompetent because the proceedings had not been properly authorized. Section 259 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (``the Act'') provides in s 259(1) that a body corporate may start a proceeding only if the proceeding is authorised by special resolution of the body corporate. Some exceptions are provided for in s 259(2) but none of these is relevant to the present case.[1] It is common ground that at the time the present application was filed[2] there was no special resolution of the body corporate authorising it.

4. However the applicant relies on a special resolution of the body corporate of 24 March 2000, about three months after the present application was filed, by which it was resolved to authorise the commencement and conduct of this appeal and to incur any necessary legal expenses. Mr Carrigan, who appeared for the body corporate in this Court, submitted that that resolution ratified the proceeding already commenced without authority. To that, Mr Atkinson who appeared for the respondents, made two submissions. First he submitted that that was not a valid resolution because the general meeting for it had not been duly convened; and secondly he submitted that, in any event, the resolution did not purport to and did not ratify the proceeding already commenced.

5. The first of Mr Atkinson's submissions relies on s 43 and s 44 of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Standard Module) Regulation 1997 (``the Regulation''). Those sections are in the following terms:

> ``43. A general meeting must be held at least 21 days after notice of the meeting is given to lot owners.
> 44.(1) A general meeting must be held not more than 15 km (measured in a straight line on a horizontal plane) from scheme land.

(2) However, if the committee notifies the owners of its intention to hold the meeting at a stated place more than 15 km from scheme land, and allows them a reasonable opportunity to object in writing to the proposed place, the meeting may be held at the place unless written objections to the proposed place of meeting are given by or for owners of at least 25 % of the lots included in the scheme."

6. It was common ground between the parties that the general meeting was held more than 15 kilometres from scheme land and the notice calling the meeting was given exactly 21 days before the meeting was held. Mr Atkinson submitted on these facts that, as 21 days is the minimum period required by s 43, a reasonable opportunity under s 44(2) required longer than that. We do not think that necessarily follows. Moreover in the present case the only lot owners who stood to lose in consequence of success of this appeal appear to have been the respondents who were represented in person by the first respondent at the meeting. We would therefore reject the respondents' submission that the meeting at which the resolution was passed was not duly held.

7. The respondents' other submission on this point also lacks substance. It is correct that, in form, the resolution does not authorise the ratification of the proceeding already commenced, but if it were correct that it did not do so in substance the appropriate course for this Court to take would have been, in our view, to permit the applicant to withdraw its earlier application and permit it to file one on the day of hearing of this application, to extend time accordingly and to treat the material already filed in this application as filed in that. Mr Atkinson does not contend that his clients would suffer any detriment from that course. But we think, in any event, that the resolution in substance ratifies the proceeding already commenced; that plainly must have been its intention. We would therefore reject the submission that the application and appeal are incompetent.

Leave

8. There is no doubt that there is an important question involved in this appeal, namely whether an order made under s 46 of the Act may be made so as to have retrospective effect. The learned primary judge held that it may. However Mr Atkinson, whilst conceding the strength of a contrary view, submitted that the question did not necessarily arise if, as he submitted, in any event, the respondents were entitled to an injunction restraining the applicant from levying the respondents, other than in accordance with the adjusted amount, from 7 April 1999. One difficulty facing Mr Atkinson in making this submission is that that question itself may be an important question of law. But in any event it is important that the question whether a court can make an order under s 46 having retrospective effect should be resolved by this Court. Accordingly, we would grant leave to appeal.

The appeal points

9. The substantive points in the appeal then are whether the learned primary judge had power to make an order under s 46 having retrospective effect; and, if he did not, whether the respondents were nevertheless entitled to an injunction restraining the recovery of any contribution levied as from a date earlier than the date on which the adjustment would take effect.

[140159]

10. Section 46 of the Act, pursuant to which the owner of a lot may apply to a District Court for an order for the adjustment of a lot entitlement schedule, provides in s 46(8) that, if a court orders an adjustment of a lot entitlement schedule, the body corporate must, as quickly as practicable, lodge with the registrar a request to record a new community management statement reflecting the adjustment ordered.[3] Sections 48, 49 and 50 then provide for the recording of a community management statement and s 53 provides that a community management statement takes effect only when it is recorded by the registrar as the community management statement for a community titles scheme. It can be seen from these provisions that it is the recording by the registrar of the community management statement, rather than the order of the judge, which causes it to take effect. If there remained any doubt that, consequently, the adjustment of lot entitlement took place only on the recording of the new community management statement, that is removed by s 44(7) which so provides specifically.

11. If by the orders already referred to the learned primary judge was purporting to change the lot entitlement retrospectively, his Honour was, in our opinion, wrong in thinking that any such order could have that effect for it could take effect only pursuant to the terms of the Act, that is, upon the recording by the registrar of the new community management statement.

12. Mr Atkinson, for the respondents, did not argue strongly to the contrary. His principal argument was that, assuming that an order under s 46 could not be given retrospective effect, the learned primary judge was nevertheless correct in enjoining the applicant from levying lot owners, after 7 April 1999, otherwise than in accordance with the contribution schedule lot entitlements contained in his order. This was, he submitted, because the applicant was estopped, on and from 7 April 1999, from asserting a right to recover from the respondents lot entitlement contributions greater than those which would be in accordance with the lot entitlement contribution schedule contained in the order. Such an estoppel, it was conceded, must be based on unconscionability of the applicant causing delay, from that date, in the adjustment of the lot entitlement which in turn caused detriment to the respondents, that detriment being liability for contributions to the extent that that liability would not have existed under the adjusted schedule.

13. The application for adjustment was filed in the District Court on 19 March 1999 with a return date of 7 April. On that date neither party was ready to proceed.[4] The present respondents did not then have evidence to support the adjustment for which they later contended and which the court made. Directions were sought and given as to amendment of the application, the filing and serving of documents including affidavits and the listing of the matter ``for final determination or further directions if necessary on May 17 1999''. The amendment sought and made was as to the form of relief, adding a plea for such further or other order as the court deemed fit, the application, as initially framed, having sought only adjustment to an equal contribution. This amendment was sought, presumably, because the respondents recognized by that date the possibility that the contributions ought not to be equal.

14. This is of some importance because of the submission made by Mr Atkinson that, on that date, the court could have and perhaps should have made an order for equality of contribution in reliance on the presumption contained in s 46(4) which provides that, for the contribution schedule, the respective lot entitlements should be equal except to the extent to which it is just or equitable in the circumstances for them not to be. It was submitted for the respondents in this Court, as it had been below, that such an order would have left it open to other lot owners to make a further application for adjustment. Given the fact that the respondents' application for adjustment was already before the court in circumstances in which the likelihood of an adjustment otherwise than on the basis of equality must have been foreseeable,[5] it was appropriate for the court to consider what that adjustment should be rather than to take the course urged by Mr Atkinson. Mr Atkinson was unable to point to any act or omission of the present applicant, at that time, which could be relied on to found an estoppel.

15. In the meantime on 29 March 1999 the applicant had resolved upon a number of special levies on lot owners in proportion to their existing contribution schedule lot entitlement.[6] Some of these were made payable in full by 31 May 1999, others by instalments the first of which was due on 31 August 1999.

16. When the matter came before the court again on 17 May 1999 the applicant sought an adjournment on the basis that it had been unable to convene a meeting of the body corporate to determine the attitude of the proprietors other than the respondents. The learned primary judge whilst noting that the time frame which he had imposed was quite tight, noted also the urgency from the respondents' perspective because payment under some of the levies was due at the end of that month. It was at this hearing that counsel for the respondents raised, for the first time, the possibility of any adjusting order ultimately made being antedated to the date on which the application was made. Mr Carrigan for the present applicant informed his Honour that he had no instructions to consent to such an order. His Honour nevertheless concluded that there were special circumstances which would justify an order, if favourable to the respondents' application, being antedated to the time when the application by them was made. His Honour did not identify those special circumstances. At that stage no evidence had been produced by either party as to what would be a just and equitable adjustment. The learned primary judge accordingly adjourned the application, gave further directions as to the conduct of the matter and restrained the applicant, until further order, from levying the respondents to any greater extent than if their lot entitlement were equal to that of the other lot owners.

17. It could not seriously be contended that there was, on or before this date, any act or omission of the applicant which would found an estoppel. The suggestion for backdating was plainly not accepted by the applicant as a condition of the adjournment. In any event, even the respondents were not then ready to proceed except on the basis that, in accordance with the presumption in s 46(4), the lot entitlements should be equal.

18. By the time the matter came before another judge on 26 July 1999 the applicant had filed an affidavit of Bryce Hansen on 14 July. That affidavit is not before this Court but we were told that it stated that the contribution lot entitlement should be other than equal but did not say how it should be adjusted. It is unclear whether, by 26 July, Mr Hansen had told the applicant how he thought it should be adjusted. However on 26 July the respondents filed an affidavit by Howard William Alfred Stewart deposing to what was, in his opinion a just and equitable adjustment. This showed an adjustment requiring a contribution from the respondents of approximately twice that which would have been an equal contribution but less than half that for which they were liable under the existing scheme. This was the adjustment ultimately made by the court. On 26 July the matter was further adjourned to October, the applicant being given liberty to produce and serve an expert report, within one month, in reply to Mr Stewart's report. There was no further act or omission by the applicant on or prior to 26 July which would found an estoppel. By now, of course, the levies due on 31 May would have been payable but for the injunction referred to earlier which, though not referred to in the orders of 26 July, appears to have continued by force of the order of 17 May.

19. The time limit imposed on the applicant for producing and serving its expert's report was not complied with. It was not until 11 November 1999 that it disclosed to the respondents a further report of Mr Hansen which was, in effect, identical to that of Mr Stewart. Nevertheless it appears that it had in its possession a copy of that report in draft form in September 1999. It is also possible that the applicant knew of Mr Hansen's view at a date earlier than this but that is not clear. What is clear is that, at no time after it received Mr Hansen's further report did the applicant challenge Mr Stewart's report. On the ultimate hearing of the matter on 9 and 10 December 1999 the applicant did not contest Mr Stewart's report or itself file any valuation evidence and accordingly, on 14 December, the order under appeal was made adjusting the lot entitlement schedule in accordance with Mr Stewart's report.

20. The first date upon which there was any arguable unconscionability on the part of the applicant is some time in September 1999 when it received Mr Hansen's draft report presumably agreeing, in effect, with that of Mr Stewart. It is arguable that it ought then to have conceded the correctness of Mr Stewart's adjustment and agreed to an order in terms of it or called a meeting of the body corporate for the purpose of consenting to a new community management statement.[7]

21. But it is not at all clear that the taking of either of these courses would have, in any way, hastened the making of an adjustment. The adjustment order was made retrospective upon the submission of the respondents and there is no suggestion that, if either of those courses had been taken, the respondents would have resiled from that submission. The applicant was plainly entitled, as it did, to contend that no such retrospective order should be made; indeed, as already indicated, such a contention would have been correct.[8] So it seems likely that a contested hearing, presumably at about the time it ultimately occurred, was likely.

22. Consequently we cannot be satisfied that, even assuming unconscionability on the part of the applicant from, say, the end of September 1999, in failing to disclose and act on Mr Hansen's draft report, that unconscionability caused the respondents any detriment. They do not assert any detriment other than that which occurred by reason of their liability to pay the levies for which they became liable before the adjustment took effect. There was, therefore, no basis for an injunction from 7 April 1999 or from any later date.

23. We would accordingly grant the application, allow the appeal, set aside the judgment below and order that the contribution schedule lot entitlement for Noosa on the Beach Community Titles Scheme Number 6417 be adjusted in accordance with the Schedule contained in 1 of the judgment of 14 December 1999 and that the respondents pay the applicant's costs of and incidental to the hearing set down for two days commencing on 9 December 1999 and of this appeal.

24. In view of the fact that this appeal has succeeded on an error of law by the learned primary judge we would also order the respondents be granted an indemnity certificate in respect of this appeal.

Supreme Court of Queensland

Judgment delivered 23 March 2000

Building Units and Group Titles — By-laws — Building unit plan for small tourist resort — Validity of caretaking agreement challenged — Severance of provisions — Ultra vires — Purported termination of agreement — Whether caretaking agreement valid and enforceable — Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980, sec 30(7AA); 37; 51.

Be Bee's Tropical Apartments was a small tourist resort in Cairns. The building unit plan (which was registered in 1994) consisted of ten lots, Lot 1 to be owned and used by the manager/caretaker and the remaining lots to be used as holiday apartments for short term rentals. The proprietor of Lot 1 had the exclusive right to certain common areas noted on the plan, including an area beside Lot 1 which was used for a restaurant and two smaller areas.

In 1994 a five-year caretaking agreement was entered into between the body corporate and the then owners of Lot 1 (``the vendors''). The agreement, among other things: allowed the caretaker to operate a licensed restaurant and required its maintenance in a clean and tidy condition; required the caretaker to provide the body corporate with cleaning services and entitled it to remuneration from the body corporate for these services; required the caretaker to provide day and night PABX telephone answering services; and provided ``special privileges'' to the caretaker, including that the body corporate would ``not interfere with, hinder or compete with the caretaker'' in running its business or enter an agreement with another person to provide services required to be performed by the caretaker. The relevant by-law giving the body corporate power to enter into a caretaking agreement with the owner of Lot 1 was By-law 33.

In May 1995 the plaintiffs purchased the vendors' interest in the property and then conducted the business of caretaking the premises on behalf of the body corporate. After taking possession of Lot 1, the plaintiffs moved the reception area (which had previously been located in their lot) to an outside passageway which was part of the common area under the control of the body corporate.

Certain lot holders later took the view that there had been breaches of the letting agreements and that the caretaking agreement was invalid. At an extraordinary general meeting on 9 February 1996 it was resolved that, on the basis that the agreement was void, remuneration to the plaintiffs would not be paid and they would not be required to perform any services under the agreement. At a further extraordinary general meeting on 3 April 1997 it was resolved that the agreement be terminated by the body corporate pursuant to sec 50(9), which implied a term that, after three years of the first annual general meeting, the body corporate may, within 30 days, terminate the appointment.

The plaintiffs claimed that the body corporate wrongly repudiated the agreement and purported to accept that repudiation by a solicitors' letter dated 4 July 1997.

The body corporate challenged the validity of the caretaking agreement, arguing that certain terms were outside the power of the body corporate, including: provisions which it alleged required the body corporate to pay for the costs of cleaning and maintaining Lot 1 and exclusive use areas; the requirement to provide day PABX answering services; and the ``special privileges'' provisions. It further argued that these terms could not be severed without changing the nature of the agreement.

Held: declarations that the caretaking agreement was enforceable and that it was terminated as from 4 July 1997 by the plaintiff's acceptance of the body corporate's repudiation; action remitted to District Court for assessment of damages.

Enforceability of caretaking agreement

1. The caretaking agreement was enforceable.

2. The requirement in the agreement that the body corporate pay for cleaning services in the ``reception area'' did not offend the provisions of sec 37 and 51 of the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 requiring the body corporate to maintain the common areas and the lot owner to maintain his or her lot. The ``reception area'' referred to in the agreement and By-law 33(f) was part of the common area exclusive use of which was given to the plaintiffs and not the area in Lot 1 originally used as the reception area by the vendors.

3. The plaintiffs had the responsibility under sec 30(7AA) of the Act to perform at their expense the duties of the body corporate in respect of the common areas over which they had exclusive use. There was nothing in the agreement which, on its face, required the performance by the body corporate of services which were the plaintiffs' responsibility. Further, no remuneration had ever been sought from or paid by the body corporate in respect of the exclusive use areas.

4. The provision of the PABX service was part of the plaintiffs' business activities and was authorised by By-law 33(a)(xii), which allowed the caretaker to carry out any services or activities which were related to those listed. The answering service would be of particular importance to the letting business, to the business of providing service in respect of the lots and to the restaurant business.

5. The ``special privileges'' provisions were ultra vires the body corporate because, at the time the caretaking agreement was agreed between the body corporate and the plaintiffs by assignment from the vendors, there was no by-law authorising such provisions. However, the relevant clauses were clearly for the exclusive benefit of the plaintiffs and could be severed without making a perceptible change to the general nature of the agreement (Humphries & Anor v The Proprietors of ``Surfers Palms North'' Group Titles Plan 1955 (1922-4) 179 CLR 597, followed).

Termination

6. The caretaking agreement was validly terminated by the plaintiff's acceptance of the body corporate's conduct repudiating the agreement by their solicitor's letter to the body corporate dated 4 July 1997.

Before: Jones J.

Full text of judgment below

Jones J: At the relevant time Be Bee's Tropical Apartments was a small tourist resort located in suburban Cairns. The Building Unit Plan consisted of ten lots altogether. Lot 1 was designed to be owned and used by the manager/ caretaker, the other nine lots to be used as holiday apartments for short term rentals usually less than one week.

2. The proprietor of Lot 1 had the exclusive right to certain common areas noted on the plan. These included a large area beside Lot 1 which was used for a restaurant/dining area and two smaller areas, one used for a communal laundry and the other a passageway which was used initially as a storage area for visitors. Lot 1 was equipped with a commercial kitchen for the purpose of that business.

3. As at 8 May 1995 the second defendants (``the vendors'') held an interest in —

(i) Lot 1 of Building Unit Plan No. 71593 (``the BUP'');
(ii) A caretaking agreement dated 22 August 1994 between themselves and the body corporate of the said Plan (``the body corporate'').

4. On 8 May 1995 the plaintiffs agreed in partnership to purchase from the vendors their interest in the said property.

5. This case turns on the question whether the caretaking agreement is valid and enforceable against the body corporate. The body corporate contends that the caretaking agreement is not enforceable against it for the reason that when made its terms were ultra vires the body corporate with respect to five particular provisions. Further, the terms could not be severed without changing the nature of the agreement.

6. The BUP was registered in 1994 and the first meeting of the Body Corporate held on 7 March, 1994.

7. On 22 August 1994 the caretaking agreement was entered into between the Body Corporate and the vendors providing for —

(i) the better management, caretaking, administration and control of the Body Corporate's property; and
(ii) the better exercise and performance of some of the body corporate's powers and duties pursuant to the Act.

The Act referred to is the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 which will hereinafter be referred to simply as ``the Act''.

8. The original caretaking agreement also included terms which permitted the resident caretaker to carry on the business of letting the lots comprised in the Plan. However this provision was deleted following the decision of Humphries & Anor v The Proprietors of ``Surfers Palms North'' Group Titles Plan 1955[1] . This alteration was made prior to the plaintiffs entering into the agreement here. On completion of the sale the plaintiffs also received an assignment of the letting rights agreement which the vendors had with the various owners of the lots other than Lot 1.

9. The by-laws which give power to the body corporate to enter into an agreement with the proprietor of Lot 1 for caretaking and management service is by-law 33, the relevant terms of which were agreed by special resolution on 16 May 1995.[2]

[140164]

10. On 26 May, 1995 the plaintiffs completed the sale by paying the following amounts:—

For Lot 1	$105,000
For Management business	$ 30,000
For Plant and equipment	$ 40,000

Total	$175,000

11. After completion of the sale the plaintiffs' partnership then conducted the business of caretaking the premises on behalf of the body corporate and they carried on the business as letting agents to the proprietors of the various lots. The partnership members held the appropriate real estate agent licences for this purpose. On 26 July 1995 at the Annual General Meeting of the body corporate, Messrs. Sattel and Nicholson were appointed to the body corporate committee.

12. After taking possession of Lot 1 the plaintiffs re-configured a part of their lot which had previously been used as a reception area. This had the effect of moving the reception area to an outside passageway which was part of the common area under the control of the body corporate.

13. Also the partnership business had the obligation pursuant to the caretaking agreement of answering the PABX telephone system. By this system incoming calls to the occupiers of the various lots would be answered at the office and redirected to the relevant lot. The occupants of the lots could make outgoing calls directly by dialling 0. The provision of the answering service was not the subject of an express provision in the By-law pursuant to which the caretaking agreement was entered into. But it was a service which provided a source of income to the partnership.[3]

Issues

14. The validity of the caretaking agreement is challenged in five respects, particularised in paragraph 18 of the amended defence. Since these allege that the making of the agreement was ultra vires the power of the body corporate I will set out the relevant provisions of the by- law by which the body corporate was authorised to enter into the agreement.

15. The terms of the by-law include[4] :—

> ``33(a) The proprietor of Lot 1 in the Plan will be at liberty to carry on or cause to be carried on all or any of the following activities from that lot, subject to the terms of these by-laws, from any area over which the proprietor of Lot 1 has been granted rights of exclusive use (for profit or otherwise):
>
> (i) the hiring of television sets etc
> ...
> (v) cleaning and the provision of services to the occupants of the lots contained in the plan;
> ...
> (viii) the business of sales and/or letting agency for the sale and/or letting of the lots comprised in the plan;
> ...
> (ix) the business of providing service to partners in respect of the lots contained in the Plan;
> (x) the management and caretaking of the building and the common property;
> (xi) the business of the operation of a licensed restaurant;
> (xii) any other related service or activity, the body corporate will enter into such agreement in writing with the proprietor of Lot 1 as may be reasonable and/or necessary to give effect to the rights of the proprietor of Lot 1 to carry on all or any of the activities referred to in this by-law.

...

(e) The proprietor or occupants for the time being of Lot 1 would be entitled to the exclusive use and enjoyment for himself and his licensees of the outdoor dining area hachured in black on Annexure `A' hereto.

...

(f) the proprietor occupier for the time being of Lot 1 will be entitled to the exclusive use and enjoyment for himself and his licensees of the area adjacent to Lots 2 and 3 and the area adjacent to Lots 7 and 8 and hachured in black in Annexure `B' hereto. Each proprietor or occupier to whom the exclusive use of this area is given may use such space for:—

(a) receiving the proprietors, occupiers or tenants of the lots and the licensee on the proviso that he or his licensees will keep such area in a clean and tidy condition and not litter the same or use the same to create a nuisance or eyesore.

[140165]

...

(g) other than the proprietor of lot 1, the owner or occupant of any other lot contained in the plan will not make use of that lot or cause that lot to be used for any of the purposes or activities referred to in by-law 33(a), 33(b) and/or 33(f)."

16. I shall deal then with the five allegations raised by the first defendants in turn:—

(a) By the First Schedule to the agreement (service (i)) the plaintiffs are required to provide services to clean and maintain Lot 1 in Building Units Plan 71593 at the expense of the first defendants

The particular service detailed in the First Schedule relates to a list of daily and weekly cleaning tasks to be performed in this reception area[5] . The first defendant argues that at the time the initial caretaking agreement was entered into and even when that agreement was assigned to the plaintiffs the reception area was located within the bounds of Lot 1. The requirement for the body corporate to pay for the services so performed offended the provisions of ss. 37 and 51 of the Act[6] . In simple terms the scheme of the Act is that the body corporate has the duty to maintain the common areas and the lot proprietor has the duty to maintain his or her lot. The body corporate may however enter into agreement with the lot proprietor for the provision of services to the lot. No such agreement was reached here.

17. The first defendant identified the ``reception area'' as that part of Lot 1 which was used as an office by the vendors and where guests would come to the register.

18. Mr Owen gave evidence on behalf of the plaintiffs that shortly after the plaintiffs went into occupation of Lot 1 the area where guests were received was moved to a common area outside the bounds of Lot 1. The office remained inside Lot 1[7] .

19. The plaintiffs' response was that the ``reception area'' referred to in schedule 1 of the caretaking agreement relates to the common area described in by-law 33(f) above and as such it is in accord with the statutory provisions binding on the body corporate.

20. Quite apart from the factual situation, it seems to me that in determining the validity of the caretaking agreement regard must be had to the terminology used in it compared with that in the by-law. The manner in which the vendors chose to use Lot 1 does not influence the correct construction of the documents. There is no delineation on the BUP described as ``reception area'' nor is the term anywhere defined. But there is a close correlation between the description of the common areas to which the proprietor of Lot 1 was given exclusive use and the areas in which the First Schedule services were to be provided. Following the physical alterations made to Lot 1 by the plaintiffs the factual situation basically complied with what was intended by the two documents.

21. In my view the reception area referred to in the Schedule is the same as that referred to in by-law 33(f) and therefore it is part of the common area exclusive use of which is given to the plaintiffs. As a consequence there is no infringement of any of the provisions of the Act.

(b) By clause 11(3) of the agreement the plaintiffs are required to provide services to clean and maintain areas of common property of which the plaintiffs have exclusive use at the expense of the defendant

22. The by-laws by paras 33(e) and (f) referred to above grants to the proprietor of Lot 1 exclusive use over certain use on the proviso in each instance that ``he and his licensees shall keep such area in a clean and tidy condition and not litter the same or use the same as to create a nuisance or an eyesore''. In neither instance however is any reference made as to whether the expense of performing such obligations shall be borne by the body corporate or the proprietor of Lot 1.

23. Section 30(7A) of the Act states that a by-law of this kind should provide who is to be responsible to carry out the body corporate's duties with respect to the common property and at whose expense. If the by-law does not do this (and that is the case here) then sub-sec (7AA) provides that ``the proprietor or proprietors shall be responsible at his, her or their own expense''.

24. So the first defendant contends that part of the services detailed in the First Schedule were in fact the obligations of the plaintiffs and ought not to have been paid for by the body corporate. The first defendant further contends that as the cost to the body corporate for the performance of those services expressed as a lump sum the particular services performed in respect of the exclusive use area cannot simply be deleted without making a material change to the contractual arrangement. As a consequence on the application of the principle annunciated in Humphries case (supra) the caretaking agreement is void.[8]

25. The plaintiff contends that clause 11.3 of the caretaking agreement imposes on the plaintiffs the obligations consistent with that proviso in the by-law and that it is done as part of the plaintiffs' responsibility consistently with sub-section (7AA) of s 30. It is clear from clause 11 of the caretaking agreement that the responsibility and the expense of running the restaurant lies with the plaintiffs. Clause 11.1 provides —

> ``11.1 The resident caretaker may carry on in the building the business of a restaurant together with all associated services commonly rendered in connection with such a business (`a restaurant business')."

And then clause 11.3 provides —

> ``11.3 The resident caretaker shall at all times make sure that the restaurant and outdoor dining area are maintained in a clean and tidy condition clear of rubbish and vermin and shall ensure that such areas are regularly and thoroughly cleared."

26. These clauses should be read with clause 4 of the caretaking agreement which deals with the remuneration of the resident caretaker. Clause 4.1 makes it clear that the remuneration set out in the Third Schedule was for ``providing these services to the body corporate''. Clause 4.3 makes it clear that the remuneration ``shall be in addition to any income derived by the resident caretaker as a consequence of the operation of the resident caretaker's business''.

27. The relevant ``services'' listed in the First Schedule essentially detail a cleaning regime to be carried out physically by the caretaker. It has the character of an instruction one would give to an employee or contractor. It relates to the services which the body corporate itself determines are necessary to meet its obligation under s. 37(1)(c) of the Act.

28. Whether invalidity is shown turns on the construction of by-law 33 and the terms of the caretaking agreement within the statutory framework referred to above. It is clear that the plaintiffs have the responsibility pursuant to s 30(7AA) of the Act to perform at their expense the duties of the body corporate in respect of the common areas over which they have exclusive use. That fact is particularly acknowledged by the plaintiffs and the body corporate quite expressly in relation to the restaurant business referred to in clause 11. In relation to the other businesses carried on by the plaintiffs the responsibility is not expressed in the agreement but nonetheless that responsibility does exist. The agreement in its general terms in clause 4 acknowledges that the resident caretaker is to provide service to the body corporate. There is nothing in the terms of clause 11(3) of the agreement which, on its face, requires the performance by the body corporate of the services which are the responsibility of the proprietor of Lot 1. Mr. Owen gave evidence that no remuneration had ever been sought from or paid by the body corporate in respect of the exclusive use areas.[9] No attempt was made on behalf of the defendants to identify any of the areas where it was alleged the body corporate incurred expense which was the responsibility of the proprietors of Lot 1.

29. Consequently I am not satisfied that clause 11(3) gives rise to any invalidity in the caretaking agreement.

> (c) by the first schedule to the Agreement (service (x)) the Plaintiffs are required to provide day and night PABX answering services

30. The requirement to provide day and night PABX answering is one of the daily duties of the resident caretaker listed in the First Schedule, see s. A(xi)[10] .

31. The defendant contends that this service is not authorised by any relevant power in the by-law and could not be given pursuant to s. 37(2)(a) of the Act. This subsection allows the provision of a service by the body corporate to a proprietor of a lot only if there is an agreement with the lot holder. The first defendant argues that this is a service provided to the individual lot holders and there are not any agreements with those lot holders.

32. The plaintiffs argue that this activity is a related service to the businesses conducted by the plaintiffs as envisaged by paragraph (xii) of by-law 33, see para 15 above.

[140167]

33. The view I take of this contest is that the provision of the PABX service is part of the business activities of the plaintiffs. In this way the agreement is authorised by by-law 33(a)(xii) which I construe as meaning an activity which is related only to the activities referred to in paragraph (a). The PABX answering service would be of particular importance to the letting business (sub para (viii)), to the business of providing service to the partners [sic] in respect of the lots contained in the plan (ix), and to the business of the restaurant (xi). This part of the agreement therefore seems to have a broader purpose than service to a particular lot of the kind envisaged in s 37(2)(a) of the Act. Further to that, the phone answering is an activity which provides some income for the plaintiffs as I have already found in para 13 hereof.

34. Once this is seen as the basis for the power set out in by-law 33 then the body corporate has the authority to enter into an agreement which provides this telephone service. I therefore reject the suggestion that this provision in the caretaker agreement gives rise to invalidity.

35. Even if I had come to the opposite view on this point, I should add that I would have held the provision of this service as severable in accordance with the principles discussed in paragraphs 42 and 43 hereof.

> (d) by clause 9.2 of the Agreement the Plaintiffs are purportedly granted special privileges in respect of the common property of building units plan 71593;
> (e) by clause 9.5 of the Agreement the Plaintiffs are purportedly granted special privileges in respect of both the common property and each lot in the building units plan 71593.

36. These grounds of alleged invalidity can be considered together.

37. Clause 9.2 of the caretaking agreement provides that the body corporate will ``not interfere with, hinder or compete with the caretaker'' in the running of the caretaker's business, will not ``grant to any other person'' a right to use the common property nor enter into an agreement for another person to provide the services required to be performed by the resident caretaker. Clause 9.5 extends that commitment by the body corporate to ``take all practical steps to bring about the termination'' of any such activities or service undertaken by such other person or persons.

38. These provisions would fit the description of ``special privileges'' as that term is used in s 30(7) of the Act.

39. It is common ground that at the time the caretaking agreement was agreed between the body corporate and the plaintiffs by the assignment from the vendors, there was no by- law authorising the body corporate to these special privileges. Such a power had been present in earlier versions of the by-law but had been removed from the by-law which was operative at the relevant time. The plaintiffs cannot avoid the consequence that these particular provisions are ultra vires the body corporate.

40. The question then to be determined is whether these two provisions can be severed. Mr Queen, giving evidence on behalf of the plaintiffs, regarded these privileges as of no moment. The letting of the lots other than Lot 1 was to tourists on short stay, typically let for a period less than one week. The likelihood of business competition in a resort of only nine units, to quote Mr Owen, was ``irrelevant'' and ``immaterial''[11] . Naturally, the privilege expressed in clause 9.5 was similarly regarded.

41. Clauses 9.2 and 9.5 appear to me to have little relevance to the situation that existed at these premises. In larger resorts such a clause may have some importance and for that reason has probably become a standard provision in agreements of this kind.

42. The test for severance from an agreement of terms found to be invalid is discussed by members of the High Court in Humphries case. At p. 618 McHugh J cited the general test laid down by Jordan CJ in McFarlane v Daniell[12] in the following terms:—

> ``When valid promises supported by legal consideration are associated with, but separate in form from, invalid promises, the test of whether they are severable is whether they are in substance so connected with the others as to form an indivisible whole which cannot be taken to pieces without altering its nature... If the elimination of the invalid promises changes the extent only but not the kind of the contract, the valid promises are severable.''

43. McHugh J noted that these terms did not enunciate an exclusive test. At p. 620 he noted that ``the mere fact that a lump sum payment is provided in consideration of the performance of range of duties... is not of itself a bar to severance.'' Later in his judgment, His Honour referred to a passage from an opinion of the Privy Council in Carney v Herbert[13] as follows:—

> ``Subject to a caveat that it is undesirable, if not impossible, to lay down any principles which will cover all problems in this field, their Lordships venture to suggest that, as a general rule, where parties enter into a lawful contract of, for example, sale and purchase, and there is an ancillary provision which is illegal but exists for the exclusive benefit of the plaintiff, the court may and probably will, if the justice of the case so requires, and there is no public policy objection, permit the plaintiff if he so wishes to enforce the contract without the illegal provision.''

44. That passage applies particularly to the situation here. Clauses 9.2 and 9.5 are clearly for the exclusive benefit of the plaintiff. But the plaintiffs see no worth in either clause and none was expressly identified by the defendants. The severing of these clauses would make no perceptible change to the general nature of the agreement.

45. In conclusion, with clauses 9.2 and 9.5 deleted I have come to the view that the caretaking agreement is enforceable.

Termination

46. The purported termination of the agreement by the first defendant followed a course of conduct which commenced with the receipt by the plaintiffs of a letter from the solicitors indicating that certain lot holders took the view that there had been breaches of the letting agreements and that the caretaking agreement was invalid. An extraordinary meeting was requisitioned by the lot holders and this was held on 9 February 1996. It was their resolve that, on the basis that the agreement was void, that the remuneration to the plaintiffs would not be paid and they would not be required to perform any services pursuant to the agreement. The partnership continued to be involved with the letting pool until October 1996.

47. A further extraordinary general meeting was held on 3 April, 1997 whereat it was resolved that the caretaking agreement be terminated by the body corporate pursuant to s 50(9) of the Act. This subsection implies a term into any agreement for the appointment of a body corporate manager that after the expiration of three years from the date of the first annual general meeting the body corporate may within 30 days terminate the body corporate manager's appointment. In this instance the first annual general meeting of the body corporate was held on 7 March, 1994 and so it was submitted that the body corporate was entitled to terminate 30 days after the third anniversary of that meeting. The caretaking agreement was for a term of five years.

48. The plaintiffs contend that the first defendant by its resolution on 9 February 1996 wrongly repudiated the agreement and that they accepted that repudiation and that is the basis of their claim for damages which I have indicated will be assessed in District Court proceedings in which the parties are already joined. Counsel, on behalf of the body corporate, submitted (presumably seeking a finding from me) that in any event the body corporate was entitled to terminate the agreement without penalty and without giving reasons 30 days after the third anniversary of the original meeting on 7 March, 1994. That is not a matter which was raised on the pleadings nor in the statement of issues which was presented to me by consent at the commencement of the trial. The factual question of whether this agreement was indeed one which came within the purview of s 50 was not canvassed in the evidence. In those circumstances it would not be appropriate for me to make a determination on that issue first raised in addresses. I do however note the consideration by the Court of Appeal of a similar argument in Humphries v The Proprietors ``Surfers Palms North'' GPT 1955[14] .

49. The circumstances leading to the body corporate resolution of 3 April, 1997 do not need to be considered in detail. It is clear enough that there was an intention on the part of the body corporate that it was not willing to perform the terms of the agreement. The associated actions of the lot holders, in respect of the letting agreements, the appointment of an auditor and the general level of disputation between the plaintiffs and the influential lot holders who were also the body corporate committee members, lead to this conclusion.

[140169]

50. I have come to the view that the contract was validly terminated by the plaintiffs' acceptance of the body corporate's conduct repudiating the agreement by their solicitors' letter to the body corporate dated 4 July, 1997.

51. I answer the questions raised in the statement of issues in the following way:—

Question 1:
The caretaking agreement dated 22 August, 1994 as varied with the exception of clauses 9.2 and 9.5 is valid and enforceable and I so declare.
Question 2:
The caretaking agreement has been validly terminated by the plaintiffs on 4 July, 1997.
It is not necessary for me to answer therefore questions 3 and 4.

52. My orders therefore are:—

1. It is declared that with the exception of clauses 9.2 and 9.5 that the caretaking agreement dated 22 August, 1994 as varied referred to in the pleadings and subsisting as between the plaintiffs and the first defendants is valid and enforceable.
2. It is further declared that the said agreement has been terminated as from 4 July, 1997 by the plaintiff's acceptance of the first defendants' repudiation of the said agreement.
3. It is further ordered that the action be remitted to the District Court at Cairns for the assessment of damages.
4. It is further ordered that the first defendant pay the plaintiff's costs of and incidental to this action to be taxed.
5. I make no order as to costs with respect to the second defendants.

Supreme Court of New South Wales

Judgment delivered 25 May 2000

Strata title — Special by-laws giving manager exclusive right to conduct real estate business on premises — Lease entered into by another owner in breach of by-laws — Lessee not notified of special by-laws by lessor as required — Application to restrain use under lease as real estate agency — Presumption of regularity in making of special by- laws — Whether Court should decline to exercise jurisdiction — Whether lot owner had a right to have dispute adjudicated under machinery in legislation — Whether exclusive right excessive — Whether any injunction should have effect only against lessee — Strata Schemes Management Act 1996, sec 44; 46; 157.

Regis Towers owned four lots in a large strata development (``the complex''), which it managed for the owners corporation. Special by-law 4 adopted in September 1999 gave it the exclusive right to conduct a real estate business in the complex. The owners of another lot in the complex (``the lessors'') were not aware of the special by-law and granted a lease, commencing in March 2000, to another company (``the lessee'') for use as a real estate agents office. The lessors did not provide the lessee with a copy of the by-laws as required by sec 46 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (``the Management Act'').

On 3 May 2000 Regis Towers brought proceedings to restrain the lessors from permitting their premises to be used for a real estate agents office and to restrain the lessee from operating the business. On 11 May the lessors applied under sec 157 of the Management Act for an order by a Strata Schemes Adjudicator that the special by-law 4 be repealed on the ground that the exclusive rights it gave were ``in excess of those intended by the Service Agreement''.

The lessors argued that the Supreme Court should decline to exercise jurisdiction and should leave the controversy to be determined under the disputes provisions of the Management Act.

Held: injunction granted; liberty reserved to apply to vary or dissolve injunction in the event that special by-law 4 altered by order of Adjudicator.

Requirements concerning by-laws

1. By virtue of sec 44 of the Management Act, the lessors were bound to observe and perform all the provisions of the by-laws, and the lessor was bound to comply with the by- laws, as by covenant to Regis Towers.

2. The lessors were in breach of sec 46(1) of the Management Act, requiring them to provide the lessee with a copy of the by-laws. By leasing the property without first finding out and telling the lessee what the by-laws provided at the time, they did not obey the law and they did not observe a reasonable standard of care in the interests of themselves, the lessee or other owners. The fact that they were unaware of what the by-laws provided for did not excuse them or improve their position.

3. The presumption of regularity of the by-laws was acted on in the absence of any evidence to the contrary.

Application for change of by-laws

4. The present case should be decided on the basis of the present state of the by-laws. The application under sec 157 was one for consideration by an Adjudicator, the Supreme Court having no power to act under that section (unless perhaps in an appeal after decision by an Adjudicator).

[140171]

[140171]

Appropriate remedy

5. On the undisputed evidence it was clear that there was a threatened breach of special by-law 4. The covenants of the lessors and lessee were negative in nature and, subject to any discretionary considerations, an injunction to restrain breaches was the appropriate remedy.

Discretionary considerations

6. On the issue of whether any injunction should be made against the lessors, Regis Towers had a clear right to a remedy against the lessors and there was no substantial discretionary reason why the injunction should go only against the lessee or its director. It would not be difficult for the lessors to comply with an injunction even if they were required to bring the lease to an end to do so. Further, the lessee would have little difficulty in escaping from the lease — it was given a clear misrepresentation by the lessor about the operative controls of use of the premises; there was misleading or deceptive conduct under sec 52 of the Trade Practices Act 1974; and there was a fundamental mistake about the premises being available for use as a real estate agency.

7. It was in the interests of all concerned that the Court hear and determine the present litigation and establish the positions of the parties. The procedure under the Management Act is not well accommodated to commercial disputes and the urgency imposed by economic interests, and is primarily directed and suited to disputes relating to home units.

8. It was likely that, if an injunction were refused, the conduct which Regis Towers sought to restrain would occur and its business interests would be affected.

9. In assessing the weight of the opportunity to apply for alteration of special by-law 4 for a discretionary refusal of jurisdiction, it was significant that the application under sec 157 was made when the controversy was well advanced and with a strong air of contrivance, illustrated by the fact that Regis Towers was not told of it until the day before the hearing.

Full text of judgment below

Bryson J: Lot 643 Strata Plan 61369 is a lot in 40-50 Campbell Street, Sydney, part of a large strata development known as the Regis Towers complex. Lot 643 has a street frontage and is suitable for use as an office or shop. It is not suitable for residential purposes. Its registered proprietors, subject to a mortgage, are the first and second defendants Mr Kin Fung and Mrs Margaret Mary Fung. As lessors they have granted a lease to Sunaust Group Pty Ltd which is the fifth defendant; both parties have executed the lease but it has not been registered. The lease grants a term of two years commencing on 22 March 2000, with an option to renew for three years, and incorporates provisions of Memorandum Y517839. The covenants incorporated include the following:

> ``IV. FURTHER COVENANTS BY THE LESSEE The lessee further covenants and agrees: (a) the lessee shall not without the consent in writing of the lessor use or occupy the premises otherwise than as nominated in Schedule Two of this Lease; such consent shall not unreasonably be refused AND PROVIDED THAT the lessee pay to the lessor for any such consent a premium of five hundred dollars ($500) in addition to a reasonable sum for any legal or other expenses incurred by the lessor.''

2. The lease has no Schedule Two but in its only annexure contains the following provisions:

USE OF PREMISES: Real Estate Agents office/mortgage originator

3. The first and second defendants control a company which owns the neighbouring Lot 644, where a printing business is conducted.

4. The plaintiff company owns Lots 149, 454, 488 and 650 in the strata plan. The plaintiff's business is to conduct management of the Regis Towers complex and also a real estate business; its business involves management of the leasing of many residential and commercial strata units on behalf of their respective owners and real estate sales agency, as well as management of the whole complex for the Owners Corporation in the interest of all owners. By a Deed dated 20 April 1999 the plaintiff agreed to purchase the management rights from the developer Merriton Apartments Pty Ltd, and by a Management Agreement dated 6 August 1999 the Owners Corporation appointed the plaintiff caretaker. Clause 4 of the Management Agreement authorises the plaintiff to provide some real estate agency services as agent for the owners of lots in the building; this permission is further regulated by cll 5 and 7, and cl 6 provides:

> ``6. The Owners Corporation must not permit the use of the common property or any of the Lots for the provision of these services, except according to the terms of this Agreement.''

5. The plaintiff's real estate agency business is wider than the area of protection of cl 6, and the plaintiff acts as selling agent whether or not properties are in the Regis Towers complex. Mr John Rose is the real estate licensee in charge of its business.

6. In addition to by-laws adopted on registration of the Strata Plan the Owners Corporation has adopted Special By-laws 1 to 6 inclusive. Special By-law 5 was adopted by a registered Change of By-laws executed on 1 September 1999 and registered soon after, and substituted new Special By-laws 1, 2, 3 and 4 for earlier Special By-laws and added Special By-law 6. Special By-laws 1 and 4 are in these terms:

``SPECIAL BY-LAW 1. — Empower Caretaker-Manager Agreement

(1) In addition to its powers under the Act, the Owners Corporation has the power to appoint and enter into an agreement with a Caretaker-Manager to provide management, leasing, security, cleaning and operational services for the strata scheme.

(2) The Caretaker-Manager's duties may include:

(a) Caretaking, supervising and servicing the common property to a standard consistent with use of lots in the scheme as high class residential apartments;
(b) Supervising the cleaning, repair, maintenance, renewal or replacement of common property and any personal property vested in the Owners Corporation;
(c) Providing services to the Owners Corporation owners and occupiers including, without limitation, the service of a handy person, room cleaning and servicing, food and non-alcoholic drink service;
(d) Providing a letting property management and sales service;
(e) Supervising Owners Corporation employees and contractors;
(f) Providing security services to the Owners Corporation;
(g) Providing cleaning, pool cleaning and gardening services to the Owners Corporation;
(h) Supervising the strata scheme generally; and
(i) Anything else that the Owners Corporation agrees is necessary for the operation and management of the strata scheme.

(3) The Caretaker-Manager must comply with instructions from the Owners Corporation about performing its duties, subject to the Caretaker-Manager Agreement.

(4) The Owners Corporation cannot, without the written consent of the Caretaker- Manager, enter into more than one agreement under this by-law at any one time, or revoke or amend this by-law without the written consent of the Caretaker- Manager or his lawful successors or assigns.

...

SPECIAL BY-LAW 4. — Non Competition

(1) The owner or occupier of a lot must not in his lot or on the common property, except with the written consent of the owners of Lots 149, 454, 488 and 650, conduct or participate in the conduct of a business which provides services in the nature of:—

(a) The business of a letting agent; or
(b) The business of a pooled rent agency; or [140173]

(c) The business of on-site caretaker, security, cleaner; or
(d) any other business activity that is either:—

(i) An activity identical or substantially identical with any of the services relating to the management, control and administration of the parcel referred to in Special By-law 1 and/or the Caretaker-Manager Agreement; and/or
(ii) An activity identical or substantially identical with any of the services provided to owners and occupiers of lots referred to in Special By-law 1, and/or the Caretaker-Manager Agreement; and/or
(iii) Any activity identical or substantially identical with any of the services relating to the letting of lots referred to in Special By-law 1, and/ or the Caretaker-Manager Agreement."

7. Before they entered into the lease of Lot 643 Mr and Mrs Fung gave a disclosure statement in writing to the proposed lessee, who acknowledged this by signing a copy on 16 March 2000. The disclosure statement referred to the permitted use of the premises as ``retailing shop (subject to Council's approval)''. Mr Lai, the third defendant, is the director of Sunaust Group Pty Ltd who managed this part of its business and is the licensed real estate agent who actually conducts the operations of Sunaust Group. After Mr Lai had seen that the shop was vacant and telephoned a number shown in a notice on the front window, he told Pearl Wong, who said that she represented the landlord of Lot 643, that ``I am going to use it as a real estate agent'' to which she replied ``It should be O.K. The landlord will give consent.'' This appears to have happened on 15 March. The disclosure statement was sent on the following day. On 22 March 2000 neither of Mr and Mrs Fung was aware of the Special By-laws adopted on 1 September 1999, and they did not know there was a restraint to the effect of Special By-law 4. As a result Mr Lai was not made aware that there was a Special By-law relating to the conduct of a real estate business in the Regis Towers complex. He first learnt of the restriction when Mr John Rose told him by telephone on 5 April 2000 that Lot 643 was not able to be used by Sunaust Group as a real estate agent office. The real estate operations have been very restricted since these proceedings were commenced.

8. Sunaust Group made an application to Sydney City Council for development consent; the application was dated 11 April 2000 and the detailed description of the development was ``As an office of real estate agents & mortgage originator''. The application was made without the written consent of Mr and Mrs Fung. There is a signature at the space provided for the registered owners but that is in fact Mr Lai's signature, and he did not then have their authority to make the application. It was by implication the duty of Mr and Mrs Fung as lessors to give their consent to that application and, although they did not sign the document, they have not objected to it.

9. These proceedings were commenced by Summons on 20 April 2000. At that time the plaintiff did not know the identity of Sunaust Group as the proposed tenant, and the fifth defendant was added as a party by Amended Summons on 3 May 2000. The Owners Corporation was the fourth defendant to the Summons; the Owners Corporation took the position of a submitting defendant and the proceedings against it were dismissed on 3 May 2000. On 3 May 2000 Windeyer J made an appointment for the hearing to take place before me on 17 May.

10. The Amended Summons filed on 3 May claimed: (1) that the first and second defendants be restrained from permitting their premises to be used for a real estate agent's office, and specified a number of classes of services the provision of which was to be restrained; and (2) that Mr Lai and Sunaust Group be restrained from operating a real estate agent's office, again specifying services to be restrained.

11. In correspondence while the hearing was pending, solicitors for Mr and Mrs Fung contended that there was no basis for the relief sought against them, and the following assurance was given: ``If the fifth defendant vacates the property, our clients will not place any other tenant in the premises contrary to the by-laws or pending any change to the by-laws.''

12. Sunaust Group has not vacated the property. Mr Lai gave evidence stating the company's position plainly; until confronted with the litigation Sunaust Group intended to use the premises, in the terms stated in the [140174]

Development Application, as an office of real estate agents and mortgage originator. Mr Lai's evidence included the following passage: ``5. We have so far refrained ourselves from conducting any real estate business in the leased premises notwithstanding this meant loss of our real estate business.'' He said that he has been assured on many occasions by Pearl Wong to the effect that he can use the premises as a real estate office ``but do not touch the three buildings managed by the Regis Towers Real Estate.'' His evidence also shows that he would agree to have the lease assigned to any other business provided that Sunaust Groups rental and fitting costs incurred so far were covered and he says, ``8. On behalf of my company and myself, I offer undertaking to the plaintiff that we will not seek to carry on business in breach of the by-laws.''

13. Mr Lai's evidence shows in effect that if use as a real estate agent is in breach, Sunaust Group would like to get out of the premises and they seek to be released or to assign the lease. In the meantime Sunaust Group is, on the face of the lease, incurring liability for rent, and is incurring expense relating to its occupation, but has not been able to make the use of the premises which it contemplated and told Pearl Wong about from the first phone call onwards.

14. Part 5 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 relates to by-laws and Div 2 is entitled ``How are the by-laws enforced?''. Section 44 is in these terms:

> ``44 Who is required to comply with the by- laws?
>
> (1) The by-laws for a strata scheme bind the owners corporation and the owners and any mortgagee or covenant chargee in possession (whether in person or not), or lessee or occupier, of a lot to the same extent as if the by-laws:
>
> (a) had been signed and sealed by the owners corporation and each owner and each such mortgagee, covenant chargee, lessee and occupier; and
> (b) contained mutual covenants to observe and perform all the provisions of the by-laws.
>
> (2) There is an implied covenant by the lessee in a lease of a lot or common property to comply with the by-laws for the strata scheme.
> (3) In this section, lessee means, in relation to a lot in a strata leasehold scheme, a sublessee of the lot.''

15. It was not disputed that the unregistered lease is a lease within the meaning of subs 44(2). It is a lease at law and not merely an equitable lease as it appears to comply with s 23D of the Conveyancing Act 1919, although it is not protected by s 42(1)(d) of the Real Property Act 1900; see also s 53. Mr and Mrs Fung, and also Sunaust Group, are bound as by covenant to the plaintiff to observe and perform all the provisions of the by-laws or (for Sunaust Group) to comply with the by-laws, and these statutory covenants are enforceable at the suit of the plaintiff.

16. Section 46 is entitled ``How does a lessee get information about the by-laws?'' Subsection (1) is in these terms:

> ``(1) If a lot or common property in a freehold strata scheme is leased, the lessor must provide the lessee with a copy of the by-laws, and any strata management statement affecting the lot or common property, within the time and in the manner required by this section.''

17. It is plain as a matter of fact that Mr and Mrs Fung, who did not know of the Special By- laws, did not provide Sunaust Group with a copy of the By-laws, and were in breach of s 46(1). By leasing the property without first finding out and telling the lessee what the by- laws provided at the time, they did not obey the law and they did not observe a reasonable standard of care, in the interest of themselves, the lessee or other owners, and the fact that they were unaware of what the by-laws provided for cannot excuse them in any way or improve their position. Their counsel contended that as they did not know of the by-laws it should not be assumed that the amendments to the by-laws are valid. The prima facie position is that the Special By-laws were made and registered in a regular manner, and I act on the presumption of regularity in the absence of any evidence that they were not.

18. On 11 May 2000 Mr and Mrs Fung filed a written application for an order by a Strata Schemes Adjudicator under the Strata Schemes Management Act seeking ``an order that the by- law be repealed (s 157) and/or an order declaring the by-law to be invalid (s 159)''. These reasons were given as:

[140175]

> ``Our complaint relates to the attached Change of By-Laws dated 1 September 1999 and in particular Special By-law (non- competition).
> Regis Towers Real Estates Pty Ltd (`The Company') is the owner of Lots 149, 454, 488 and 650 as referred to in paragraph 1 of the Special By-law 4. In proceedings instituted by it in the Supreme Court of New South Wales, that company seeks an injunction restraining us from leasing Lot 643 for use by our tenant as a real estate agency.

Also attached for your information is a copy of the Service Agreement between the company and the Owners Corporation of Strata Plan 56443 dated 6 August 1999. We believe that the Special By-law referred to above gives the company exclusive rights in excess of those intended by the Service Agreement and in such circumstances, the Special By-law should be repealed or otherwise declared invalid."

19. Notification of an application of this kind to interested persons is the responsibility of the Registrar of the Strata Schemes Board, who must consider to whom and how notice is to be given. Mr and Mrs Fung did not advise other parties to these proceedings of the application, or of evidence relating to it, until some time on the day before the hearing day.

20. Section 157 is entitled ``Order revoking amendment of by-law or reviving repealed by- law.'' Subsection 157(1) is in these terms:

``(1) An Adjudicator may make one of the following orders if the Adjudicator considers that, having regard to the interest of all owners in a strata scheme in the use and enjoyment of their lots or the common property, an amendment or repeal of a by- law or addition of a new by-law should not have been made or effected by the owners corporation:

(a) an order that the amendment be revoked,
(b) an order that the repealed by-law be revived,
(c) an order that the additional by-law be repealed.

(2) An order under this section, when recorded under section 209, has effect as if its terms were a by-law (but subject to any relevant order made by a superior court).''

21. There was some debate about whether an order by an Adjudicator can have retrospective effect, or whether a by-law would be effective until revoked. I will leave this question undecided; the power in subs 157(1)(a) to revoke an amendment may suggest that the order can be retrospective; the reference in subs (2) to the need to record the order may support the opposite view, and the explicit provisions of s 159 authorising a date for operation of an order earlier than the date on which the order is recorded, where the order is made on the limited ground referred to in s 159, suggest that orders made under other sections may not have retrospective effect.

22. The Supreme Court does not have power to act under s 157, unless perhaps in an appeal after decision by an Adjudicator. In my view the prospects of success in the application cannot be said to be strong. The stated ground is to the effect that Special By-law 4 gives the plaintiff exclusive rights in excess of those conferred on it by the Management Agreement. It seems to me that this ground is little to the point of the important question whether a Special By-law should not have been made, having regard to the interest of all owners of lots in the use and enjoyment of their lots for the common property. Most owners of lots own residential lots, and the use and enjoyment of their lots could not be affected by restrictions which apply to the relatively small number of lots the use of which Special By-law 5 could restrict. The restriction on use and enjoyment of the lots capable of commercial use is of a kind which s 49 does not forbid and subs 43(2) does not exclude. Plaintiff's counsel pointed out that having management conducted by a real estate agent with premises on the site can moderate the costs incurred for management services, and that there are advantages in inducing a real estate agent to take up the management task by offering exclusivity. This may be so; the contention is one for consideration by the Adjudicator. I am in no position to decide the application in advance and do not attempt to do so.

23. The application under s 157 was brought forward late in the controversy in circumstances which give it the air of contrivance, no order has been made on it, and this case should be decided on the present state of the by-laws.

[140176]

24. On the undisputed evidence it is clear and it was not disputed that there is a threatened breach of Special By-law 4. The covenants of the defendants are negative in nature and, subject to any discretionary considerations, an injunction to restrain breaches is the appropriate remedy. Counsel for Mr and Mrs Fung put forward a number of discretionary considerations, going to the exercise of the Court's jurisdiction at all, and also to the choice of an injunction against his clients as the remedy.

25. On the discretionary question the plaintiff's counsel submitted that there clearly has been a breach of the Special By-law 4 and of the implied covenant, and the position should be established and Sunaust should have its position made clear as soon as is possible.

26. On the issue whether any injunction should be made against Mr and Mrs Fung the plaintiff's counsel submitted that the Court should take the view that it is clear that there had been a breach of the by-law and the covenant, and that it is within the power of Mr and Mrs Fung to release Sunaust Group from its apparent obligations or to ask or require Sunaust Group to leave the premises. Counsel submitted that it is not practically possible to enforce the lease or to claim rent because Sunaust Group has not been given what the Fungs contracted to give it, that is the opportunity to use the premises for a real estate agency among other things. It was contended that both parties to the lease are entitled to be released from it.

27. The evidence of Mr Lai shows that it would not be difficult for Mr and Mrs Fung to comply with any injunction even if they were required to bring the lease to an end to comply with the injunction. It is very improbable that there would be any difficulty in reaching some accommodation with Mr Lai. If performance of the lease by both of the parties to it were restrained by injunction there would be no prospect of performance of the lease being required by any equitable remedy, while the injunctive restraint would prevent either party restrained from showing any significant damage caused by any breach by the other. In any event Mr and Mrs Fung are responsible for the difficulty.

28. Mr Lai and Sunaust Group have not so far taken an aggressive stance. Mr Lai was given a clear misrepresentation about the operative controls of use of the premises by Pearl Wong on behalf of Mr and Mrs Fung; this may be a ground on which the lease may be rescinded. There are clearly remedies under the Trade Practices Act 1974 (Cth) s 52 as Ms Wong's conduct was misleading and deceptive, and there was a fundamental mistake about the premises being available to use as a real estate agency. In the presence of these facts Sunaust Group could have little difficulty in escaping from the lease.

29. Counsel for Mr and Mrs Fung contended that as a matter of discretion the Court should decline to exercise its jurisdiction, and should leave the controversy to be determined under the procedures provided for by the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996. Counsel pointed out that the powers under that Act extend to adjudication dealing with disputes, and to granting interim orders pending adjudication. He contended that Mr and Mrs Fung have a right to have their claim examined and adjudicated in accordance with the Act, and said that any injunction which prevented that happening would be a de facto removal of their statutory right to make that application. He pointed out that the claim is for a perpetual injunction. He accepted that the plaintiff's rights under the Management Agreement had been granted for valuable consideration, and that Mr and Mrs Fung could not and did not seek to interfere with those rights relating to caretaking duties and lots within the Regis Towers complex. Counsel referred to decisions in which this Court has declined to exercise jurisdiction and has left adjudication of disputes relating to strata schemes to decision by machinery provided for by earlier legislation, particularly the decisions of Kearney J in MacLeod v. Proprietors of Strata Plan No. 6544 [1980] 2 NSWLR 691 and Rolfe J in North Wind Pty Ltd v. The Proprietors — Strata Plan 3143 [1981] 2 NSWLR 809.

30. In MacLeod's case Kearney J said, at para 25, pp 695-696, referring to Pt V of the Strata Titles Act 1973:

> ``On this question of discretion I consider that the subject matter of the proceedings is such that it ought to be the subject of an application to the Commissioner rather than being prosecuted in this Court. While the matter may eventually reappear in the court on appeal from a decision of the board, nevertheless the Act clearly evinces the
>
> [140177]
>
> [140177]
> intention that these matter should originate with the Commissioner under Pt V, and that the Court should entertain such proceedings only where special circumstances such as extreme urgency in effect necessitate the intervention of the Court. Further, any need to follow the above course arises from the plaintiffs' own neglect to prosecute their appeal from the Commissioner's decision.''

31. In referring to the intention evinced by the former Act, Kearney J referred to s 146 of the Strata Titles Act 1973 with which his Honour dealt at pp 693 and 694. Generally similar provision is now made by s 226 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996. Kearney J's decision was a discretionary decision, and it was given where the underlying controversy related to problems arising from water penetration through the roof. The plaintiffs sought an order that the Body Corporate repair part of the roof being common property in a proper and workmanlike manner so as to render it impervious to water penetration, and to repair the interior of the plaintiff's lot damaged by water coming through the roof. See pp 691-692. As much experience shows, building disputes and disputes in which supervision in detail of building work is required are not well suited for equitable remedies. In the present case the facts for practical purposes are not disputed and adjudication is required on the effect of conduct and the interpretation of documents, and there are no corresponding inconveniences for determination of the litigation by the Court.

32. In the North Wind case Rolfe J was of the view that the dispute, which also included the controversy relating to building work which it was contended should be done, and what in detail should be done, was one to which the procedure under the Strata Titles Act 1973 was particularly appropriate. See pp 815-816.

33. It is not uncommon for the Court to determine controversies which could be referred to adjudication under strata titles legislation, without declining jurisdiction on discretionary grounds. Examples are Salerno v. Proprietors of Strata Plan 42724 (1997) 8 BPR 15,457 (Windeyer J), Bapson Pty Ltd v. Puyeti Pty Ltd (1990) NSW Titles Cases ¶80-002 (Waddell CJ in Eq) and Sydney Diagnostic Services Pty Ltd v. Hamlena Pty Ltd (1991) NSW Titles Cases ¶80-009 (Court of Appeal). See too Proprietors of Strata Plan 1627 v. Schultz (1978) 2 BPR 9443. This court has exercised jurisdiction from time to time, the cases do not show any general reluctance, and the reported cases where jurisdiction has been declined relate to detailed disputes about building work.

34. In my opinion the procedure under the Strata Schemes Management Act is not well accommodated to commercial disputes and the urgency imposed by economic interests, and is primarily directed and suited to disputes relating to home units. In my view it is in the interests of all concerned that I should hear and determine the present litigation and establish the positions of the parties.

35. The present proceedings have aspects of urgency in that it is plain, and is not open to substantial dispute, that unless there is an injunction Special By-law 4 will not be complied with; the form of the defendants' own documents show that clearly enough. It is likely that if an injunction is refused the conduct which the plaintiff seeks to restrain would occur and its business interests would be affected thereby.

36. Counsel for Mr and Mrs Fung contended that it was for consideration on the discretion to decline jurisdiction that, as he put it, ``what is occurring by circumventing the Strata Schemes Management Act is to remove the opportunity for Mr and Mrs Fung from exercising their rights under that Act.'' It was contended that the defendants are significantly prejudiced in that they are unable to bring a cross-claim relying on s 157, and that the parties are forced to go to two different jurisdictions and unnecessarily to multiply proceedings. This observation was based on there being no opportunity in these proceedings to seek alteration of the by-laws in a cross-claim, as that power is not conferred on the Court. I do not regard this observation as to the point, as the right to seek to vary the by-laws can be pursued and a decision obtained on it in due time. That right is not injured or affected by a decision on the rights of the parties as they now stand in the unamended form of the by-laws. The application to the Adjudicator will have whatever merits it has whether or not parties have in the meantime been required to comply with their present obligations. The Court is asked to act in these proceedings on the right which the parties have now.

37. If the by-law were to be altered in the future Mr and Mrs Fung would have the opportunity to ask the Court to dissolve or vary any injunction, even a perpetual injunction, and the possibility that there may be an alteration is adequately protected by reserving liberty to apply in that event, and in that way qualifying the perpetual nature of the injunction. These submissions appeared to make some complaint about the plaintiffs using remedies under the general law, but as those remedies are especially preserved by subs 226(1) of the Strata Schemes Management Act, this is not an appropriate subject for complaint. It was then said that the application for relief is premature, but there is no substance in this contention, as the plaintiff has offered proofs which show that there already has been a breach, and that it is reasonable to fear continuing breach.

38. In assessing the weight of the opportunity to apply for alteration of Special By-law 4 for a discretionary refusal of jurisdiction it is significant and very adverse to the submission that the application under s 157 was made very recently, when the controversy was well advanced, and with a strong air of contrivance illustrated by the plaintiff's not having been told of it until the day before the hearing. It is unlikely that this event would have happened in a sincere application, which would have been pursued openly and would have been prefigured in the correspondence which passed while the proceedings were pending, in which possible outcomes were discussed.

39. It was also contended that there is no occasion to impose an injunction on Mr and Mrs Fung, and that the orders as framed are too wide. It was submitted that it would be sufficient to impose restraint on Sunaust Group. The defendants' counsel contended that these defendants have a prima facie enforceable lease which they entered into for valuable consideration, and that an injunction would cause them to act in breach of it. He contended, apparently on the basis that the previous submission justified the contention, that the injunction should be directed only against the tenant. These submissions were not well founded or readily comprehensible; if the plaintiff is entitled to relief, it should have relief against all involved in the threatened breaches of covenant. The statement in Mr and Mrs Fung's solicitors' letter of 12 May 2000 about what they would do if the fifth defendant vacated the property is not a reason in substance why they should not be restrained.

40. Counsel also observed that the by-laws do not extend to preventing the business of mortgage originator being carried on. As it was clearly contemplated and intended by the lessors and the lessee and Mr Lai that the business of real estate agent would be carried on, this observation had no force.

41. The fact that Mr and Mrs Fung might be placed in breach of their contract with Sunaust Group if restrained from breach of covenant by permitting activities by others, was put forward as a consideration of hardship against making an injunction. In my view it is a consideration of no weight, as it is a disadvantage which they imposed on themselves. When the plaintiff complains of a breach of an obligation to it, it is not a significant consideration adverse to granting the remedy that the first defendants have later entered into an inconsistent contractual obligation.

42. Submissions on behalf of Sunaust Group were generally to the effect that Sunaust Group was prepared to comply with its obligations as determined by the Court, but is in a difficult position now as it is in occupation and obliged to pay rent and other outgoings, but has been kept standing without carrying on a real estate agency until these proceedings are decided. As shown in Mr Lai's affidavit, Sunaust Group would be happy for someone else to take an assignment and would seek to be recompensed for its costs and expenses. The position of Sunaust Group and the impact on it of the delay in resolution of the dispute are considerations against declining to exercise jurisdiction and against leaving resolution to some future determination by an Adjudicator.

43. Plaintiff's counsel pointed out that all difficulties arise out of Mr and Mrs Fung not having complied with s 46, and not having found out and given notice of what is in the by- laws. It is very unlikely that there would have been a lease or that Sunaust Group would have taken any interest in the premises if Mr Lai had known of the by-laws, whether or not the by- laws are amended by some decision in the future.

44. Plaintiff's counsel contended that the substance of the dispute before me relates to costs and liabilities as among the defendants. As I observed during the argument I do not propose to establish in detail what is to happen among the defendants or to try to solve every problem which the facts apparently present. There is no cross-claim and I propose to hear and determine the plaintiff's claim.

45. The plaintiff has a clear right to a remedy against the first and second defendants and there is no substantial discretionary reason why the injunction should go only against the fifth defendant or only against the third and fifth defendants.

46. For these reasons I propose to order an injunction as claimed, while reserving liberty to apply to vary or dissolve the injunction in the event that Special By-law 4 is altered by order of the Adjudicator.

47. I have not yet considered questions of costs.

Order:

(1) Injunctions as claimed in claims 1 and 2 of Amended Summons filed on 3 May 2000.

(2) Reserve to each party liberty to apply to dissolve or vary the injunctions if there is an alteration in Special By-law 4 Strata Plan 61369.

(3) Costs reserved.

Supreme Court of New South Wales

Judgment delivered 14 October 2000

Strata title — Lease — Lessor seeks registration of strata plan — Lessee of one floor of building applies for injunction to restrain registration — Whether registration of strata plan would breach the lease — Whether lessors and future assignees would be bound by lease — Whether breach justifies injunctive relief — Whether deed poll adequate to protect lessee's interest — Conveyancing Act 1919 (NSW), sec 117, 118; Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1973 (NSW), sec 5, 16, 18, 21, 25; Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW), sec 44, 55.

In March 2000, Kingsmede and Pamiers (``lessors'') purchased a building in Sydney subject to a registered lease over one floor of the building. In May 2000, the lessors requested the consent of Lawrom Nominees (``lessee'') for the registration of a strata plan for the building. The lessee did not consent, and lodged a caveat on the title on 30 May.

On 3 July, a notice to lapse the caveat was served on the lessee, and, on 17 July, the lessee received notice from the Registrar-General that it intended, pursuant to sec 196AA(2) of the Conveyancing Act 1919, to register the lessors' strata plan unless restrained by the Supreme Court.

In August, the lessee obtained an extension to the caveat, and, on 16 August, the lessee applied to the Supreme Court for an injunction restraining the lessors from pursuing registration of the strata plan on the basis that the registration would be in breach of the terms of the lease.

On 6 September, the lessors offered to the lessee that the owners corporation under the proposed plan would secure the passing of a by-law authorising it to enter a deed poll. The purported deed poll would prohibit variation and termination of the lease and would recognise the rights of the lessee under the terms of the lease.

Issues

The issues in this case were whether, by procuring registration of the strata plan, the lessors would breach the terms of the lease or give rise to the threat of breach, and, if so, whether the breach would be such as to justify the remedy of an injunction. Relevant to the second issue is the adequacy of the deed poll proposed by the lessors to protect the interests of the lessee.

Held: injunction refused on the basis that the defendants procure a deed poll and undertake contractual obligations in favour of the plaintiff.

1. The Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1973 does allow for the registration of strata plans without the consent of lessees: sec 16(2).

2. Registration of the strata plan would result in a ``technical breach of the lease in relation to floors, ceilings and external walls, and pipes and wires within them''. This breach would be immaterial and insufficient grounds for the remedy of an injunction.

3. An injunction would only be available to the lessee if the breach involved substantial interference with the rights of the lessee, or the threat of such interference.

4. The defendants and future assignees would be bound by the terms of the lease, despite the fact that the lessee's rights to access and to service such as lifts, air-conditioning, water and electricity are deemed common property and are owned by the owners corporation and not the lessor.

5. A deed poll, if authorised by a by-law, could validly require the owners corporation to provide access rights and services in accordance with the terms of the lease.

6. In addition to procuring a deed poll, the lessors should undertake a contractual obligation to the plaintiff to fulfil all the terms of the lease in the form of a charge over the proposed lot.

Full text of judgment below

Hodgson CJ: The plaintiff Lawrom is the lessee, under a lease originally granted by Permanent Trustee Co. Limited, of the whole of Level 6 of 261 George Street, Sydney, for a term of six years expiring 31st May 2005. The defendants Kingsmede and Pamiers purchased the building 261 George Street under a contract of sale dated 14th March 2000, and they became registered proprietors of the property on 16th June 2000.

2. In May 2000, the defendants requested the consent of plaintiff to registration of a proposed strata plan for the building. The plaintiff did not consent, and on 30th May 2000 lodged a caveat on the title. Notice to lapse the caveat was served on the plaintiff on 3rd July 2000, and on 17th July 2000, the plaintiff received notice from the Registrar-General that the Registrar- General intended to register the defendants' strata plan unless restrained by the Supreme Court.

3. These proceedings were commenced on 20th July 2000, initially seeking an order extending the caveat.

4. Orders were made extending the caveat, and an Amended Summons filed on 16th August 2000 sought orders inter alia restraining the defendants from pursuing registration of the strata plan.

Outline of facts

5. The plaintiff's lease was registered on 17th December 1999.

6. The property leased is described as ``whole of Level 6, being part of 261 George Street Sydney Volume 15229 Folio 26'', but, according to the Reference Schedule to the Lease ``excluding Common Areas''. The lease incorporates, with amendments, a Memorandum No. W288827 filed in the Land Titles Office, and according to this Memorandum, the ``Demised Premises'' include ``the fixtures, fittings, furniture, plant, machinery and equipment (if any) of the Lessor... installed therein''.

7. Clause 4.4 of the Memorandum provides to the effect that the lessee should not, without the prior approval in writing of the lessor, display signs on the interior or exterior of the building. Clause 4.11 provides to the effect that the lessee should give to the lessor prompt notice of any defect in the services to the demised premises.

8. Clause 4.5 provides to the effect that the lessee should comply with the Rules and Regulations (set out in the Second Appendix), which could be altered by the lessor, provided that no amendment or variation was inconsistent with the lessee's rights under the lease. Clause 13 of the Rules and Regulations gives the lessee right of access to the demised premises 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

9. Clause 6.1 of the Memorandum provides to the effect that, where air conditioning or elevators are provided, the lessor is to endeavour to keep them working, and to effect repairs without undue interference to the lessee. Clause 7.3 provides to the effect that the lessee should not, without the prior consent of the lessor, make alterations to the demised premises.

10. Clause 12.1 of the Memorandum provides to the effect that the lessee should have quiet enjoyment of the demised premises; and cl. 12.2 provides to the effect that the lessee might, at the expiration of the lease, remove the lessee's fixtures. Clause 14.12 provides to the effect that in exercising its right to make alterations to the building the lessor should endeavour to cause as little inconvenience to the lessee as is practicable.

11. Clause 3 of the First Appendix to the Memorandum provides to the effect that the lessee should pay to the lessor a proportion (stated by the lease to be 9.57%) of all increases of rates and taxes in respect of the building or land, and of other outgoings in respect of the building paid or payable by the lessor.

12. The premises currently leased include partitioning, ducting, pipes, pumps and lighting.

13. The contract for sale to the defendants was expressed to be subject to the lease, and a copy of the lease was attached to it.

14. On 23rd March 2000, letters were sent to the lessees of various parts of the building, seeking their consent to the proposed strata plan, being a subdivision into ten lots and common property. Floor 6 (apart from access areas) comprised one lot.

15. By 4th May 2000, the defendants had received consents from all lessees, apart from the plaintiff; although they have not sought or obtained consent from a registered sub-lessee of part of the building, namely Pruside Willow Pty. Limited.

16. On 16th June 2000, the defendants lodged their proposed strata plan with the Registrar-General; and on 23rd May 2000, the defendants offered to waive the right to recover outgoings for the remainder of the lease. On 26th May 2000, the plaintiff suggested that the defendants should waive rent for the remainder of the lease; and this was rejected by the defendants on 29th May 2000.

17. During May 2000, the defendants entered into two contracts for the sale of strata lots, for $4.75 million and $1.6 million respectively, subject to registration of the strata plan by 31st December 2000. It was negotiating for other sales, but these negotiations were halted because of these proceedings.

18. On 30th June 2000, the defendants caused the Registrar-General to take action to serve lapsing notices under s. 74I of the Real Property Act.

19. On 10th July 2000, the Registrar-General sent a written notice to the plaintiff pursuant to s. 196AA(2) of the Conveyancing Act, stating that strata plan 62822 had been lodged for registration, and inviting submissions, but advising that, unless the Supreme Court restrained the Registrar-General, the Registrar-General intended to register the strata plan. These proceedings were commenced on 20th July 2000.

20. On 6th September 2000, the defendants, as the original proprietors of all lots in the strata plan, offered to the plaintiff to procure the owners corporation under the strata plan to pass a by-law authorising it to enter into a deed poll and prohibiting variation or termination thereof, and to procure execution by the owners corporation of that deed poll. The deed poll in question purported to recognise the rights of lessees under all leases of the building, including their right to exclusive possession of parts of the building which would become common property under the strata plan, and their rights to use other common property, and purported to provide that the lessees would not be bound by by-laws inconsistent with the terms of their leases, and included terms to ensure the provision of services to lessees and to ensure that they could remove tenants' fixtures.

Issues

21. The main issues in the case are whether, by procuring registration of the strata plan, the defendants would breach the terms of the lease to the plaintiff or give rise to a threat of breach thereof; and if so, whether the breach or threat would be such as would justify the remedy of an injunction. Relevant to the second question, involving the exercise of discretion, is the adequacy of the deed poll proposed by the defendants to protect the interests of the plaintiff; and also a question of possible adverse taxation consequences.

[140182]

22. These issues involve consideration of the effect of ss. 117 and 118 of the Conveyancing Act 1919 (NSW), and of various provisions of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW) (the ``Management Act''), and the Strata Schemes (Freehold Development) Act 1973 (NSW) (the ``Development Act'').

23. The rights and obligations of transferees of leases and of reversions expectant upon leases are dealt with by ss. 117 and 118 of the Conveyancing Act 1919, which are in the following terms:

> ``117(1) Rent reserved by a lease and the benefit of every covenant or provision therein contained having reference to the subject-matter thereof and on the lessee's part to be observed or performed, and every condition of re-entry and other condition therein contained shall be annexed and incident to, and shall go with the reversionary estate in the land or in any part thereof immediately expectant on the term granted by the lease, notwithstanding severance of that reversionary estate, and shall be capable of being recovered, received, enforced, and taken advantage of by the person from time to time entitled, subject to the term, to the income of the whole or any part as the case may require of the land leased.
>
> This subsection extends to a covenant to do some act relating to the land, notwithstanding that the subject-matter may not be in existence when the covenant is made.
> (2) The benefit of every condition of re- entry or forfeiture for a breach of any covenant or condition contained in a lease shall be capable of being enforced and taken advantage of by the person from time to time entitled, subject to the term, to the income of the whole or any part, as the case may require, of the land leased, although that person became, by conveyance or otherwise, so entitled after the condition of re-entry or forfeiture had become enforceable.

(3) This section shall not render enforceable any condition of re-entry or other condition waived or released before the person became entitled as aforesaid.

(4) This section applies to:

(a) leases made after the commencement of this Act, and
(b) leases made before the commencement of this Act, but with respect only to rent accruing due after the commencement of this Act and to the benefit of a condition of re-entry or forfeiture for a breach committed after the commencement of this Act of any covenant, condition, or provision contained in the lease.

118(1) The obligation of a covenant entered into by a lessor with reference to the subject- matter of the lease shall, if and as far as the lessor has power to bind the reversionary estate immediately expectant on the term granted by the lease, be annexed and incident to, and shall go with that reversionary estate, or the several parts thereof, notwithstanding severance of that reversionary estate, and may be taken advantage of and enforced by the person in whom the term is from time to time vested by conveyance, devolution in law, or otherwise, and if and as far as the lessor has power to bind the person from time to time entitled to that reversionary estate, the obligation aforesaid may be taken advantage of and enforced against any person so entitled.

(2) This section applies to:

(a) leases made after the commencement of this Act, and
(b) leases made before the commencement of this Act so far only as relates to breaches of covenant committed after the commencement of this Act."

24. The subject is also dealt with in s. 40(3) and s. 51 of the Real Property Act; but it seems clear that those provisions do not affect the requirement that, for a covenant in a lease to bind the transferee of the lessor, it must be a covenant ``with reference to'' the land in question, as contemplated by ss. 117 and 118 of the Conveyancing Act.

25. The subdivision of land by way of strata schemes is dealt with by the Development Act.

[140183]

26. Section 5 of that Act contains definitions, including the following definitions of ``common property'', ``lot'', ``parcel'' and ``structural cubic space'':

```common property' means so much of a parcel as from time to time is not comprised in any lot.

`lot' means one or more cubic spaces forming part of the parcel to which a strata scheme relates, the base of each such cubic space being designated as one lot or part of one lot on the floor plan forming part of the strata plan, a strata plan of subdivision or a strata plan of consolidation to which that strata scheme relates, being in each case cubic space the base of whose vertical boundaries is as delineated on a sheet of that floor plan and which has horizontal boundaries as ascertained under subsection (2), but does not include any structural cubic space unless that structural cubic space has boundaries described as prescribed and is described in that floor plan as part of a lot.

`parcel' means:

(a) except as provided in paragraph (b), the land from time to time comprising the lots and common property the subject of a strata scheme, and
(b) in relation to a plan lodged for registration as a strata plan, the land comprised in that plan.

`Structural cubic space' means:

(a) cubic space occupied by a vertical structural member, not being a wall, of a building,
(b) any pipes, wires, cables or ducts that are not for the exclusive enjoyment of one lot and:
```

(i) are in a building in relation to which a plan for registration as a strata plan was lodged with the Registrar-General before the day appointed and notified under section 2(3) of the *Strata Titles (Development Schemes) Amendment Act 198*5, or
(ii) in any other case — are in a building or in a part of a parcel that is not a building,

(c) any cubic space enclosed by a structure enclosing any such pipes, wires, cables or ducts."

27. Section 5(2) of the Act provides as follows:

``5(2) The boundaries of any cubic space referred to in paragraph (a) of the definition of `floor plan' in subsection (1):

(a) except as provided in paragraph (b):

(i) are, in the case of a vertical boundary, where the base of any wall corresponds substantially with any line referred to in paragraph (a) of that definition — the inner surface of that wall, and
(ii) are, in the case of a horizontal boundary, where any floor or ceiling joins a vertical boundary of that cubic space — the upper surface of that floor and the under surface of that ceiling, or

(b) are such boundaries as are described on a sheet of the floor plan relating to that cubic space (those boundaries being described in the prescribed manner by reference to a wall, floor or ceiling in a building to which that plan relates or to structural cubic space within that building)."

28. Section 7(2) of the Act provides as follows:

``7(2) Land including the whole of a building may be subdivided into lots, or into lots and common property, by the registration of a plan as a strata plan."

29. Section 16 deals with the signing of or consent to strata plans, as follows:

``16(1) The Registrar-General shall not register as a strata plan, a strata plan of subdivision, a strata plan of consolidation or a building alteration plan a plan lodged in the office of the Registrar-General unless the plan is signed:

(a) by the registered proprietor of the land comprised in the plan, and
(b) by every mortgagee, chargee or covenant chargee under a mortgage, charge or covenant charge recorded in the folio of the Register kept under the Real Property Act 1900 relating to that land.

(2) Without limiting the effect of subsection (1), the Registrar-General may refuse to register a plan referred to in that subsection unless consents in writing to the registration of the plan signed by (or by an agent authorised by) such of the following persons as the Registrar-General may determine:

(a) the lessee under any lease, or the judgment creditor under any writ, recorded in the folio of the Register kept under the Real Property Act 1900 relating to the land comprised in the plan,
(b) the caveator under a caveat affecting any estate or interest in that land, are lodged in the office of the Registrar- General.

(3) In relation to any particular plan lodged for registration as referred to in subsection (1), the Registrar-General may, without giving notice to any person, dispense with the requirement for a person mentioned in that subsection to sign the plan."

30. Section 18 deals with the vesting of common property, as follows:

``18(1) Upon registration of a strata plan any common property in that plan vests in the body corporate for the estate or interest evidenced by the folio of the Register comprising the land the subject of that plan but freed and discharged from any mortgage, charge, covenant charge, lease, writ or caveat affecting that land immediately before registration of that plan.

(2) The Registrar-General shall, upon registration of a strata plan, create a folio of the Register for the estate or interest of the body corporate in any common property in that strata plan.

(3) Upon registration of a strata plan of subdivision creating common property, the common property so created vests in the body corporate for the estate or interest evidenced by the folio of the Register comprising the land the subject of that plan but freed and discharged from any mortgage, charge, covenant charge, lease, writ or caveat affecting that land immediately before registration of that plan.

(4) Upon registration of a notice of conversion, any lot thereby converted into common property vests in the body corporate for the estate or interest evidenced by the folio of the Register comprising the land the subject of that notice at the time when the notice is registered but freed and discharged from any mortgage, charge, covenant charge, lease, writ or caveat affecting that land before registration of that notice.

(5) Nothing in subsection (1), (3) or (4) affects any right or remedy that may be exercised otherwise than in relation to common property by a person who is a mortgagee, chargee, covenant chargee, lessee, judgment creditor or caveator, even though the person may have signed or consented to the registration of the plan or signed the notice creating the common property.

(6) In this section (other than this subsection), `lease' does not include a lease granted to the provider of an electricity, telephone or telecommunication service that is required by that provider for the provision of the service. In relation to land the subject of such a lease, the lessor is taken to be the body corporate and the land leased is taken to be common property on registration of the plan or notice."

31. Sections 21 and 25 provide in relation to dealing with common property, as follows:

``21. Common property shall not be capable of being dealt with except in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

25(1) A body corporate may, pursuant to a unanimous resolution, execute a transfer or lease of common property other than common property the subject of a lease accepted or acquired by the body corporate under section 19(2).

(1A) Subsection (1) does not authorise a transfer by the body corporate under a strata scheme that is part of a community scheme under the Community Land Development Act 1989.

(2) A body corporate, pursuant to a unanimous resolution, may, if not prevented by the terms of the lease, transfer a lease of common property accepted or acquired by the body corporate under section 19(2) or grant, by way of sub-lease, a lease of its estate or interest in common property the subject of a lease so accepted or acquired.

(3) A body corporate may, pursuant to a unanimous resolution, accept a surrender of a lease, or, if otherwise empowered so to do, re-enter under a lease, granted under subsection (1) or (2).

[140185]

(4) The Registrar-General shall register a dealing referred to in subsection (1), (2) or (3) by making in the Register such recordings with respect to the dealing as he considers appropriate.

(5) (Repealed)"

32. The Management Act provides for the management of strata schemes and the resolution of disputes in connection with them.

33. Sections 11, 12 and 13 provide for the establishment of an owners corporation and the exercise of its functions, as follows:

``11(1) The owners of the lots from time to time in a strata scheme constitute a body corporate under the name `The Owners — Strata Plan No X' (X being the registered number of the strata plan to which that strata scheme relates).

(2) The Corporations Law does not apply to or in respect of an owners corporation.

12. An owners corporation has the functions conferred or imposed on it by or under this or any other Act.

13(1) An owners corporation may employ such persons as it thinks fit to assist it in the exercise of any of its functions.

(2) An owners corporation must ensure that any person employed to assist it in the exercise of a function has the qualifications (if any) required by this Act for the exercise of that function.

Note:

> An owners corporation may employ such persons to assist it as, for example, caretakers and persons providing services to retirement villages. However, where a strata managing agent is appointed the appointment must be in accordance with Part 4. In addition, the Act requires certain functions to be performed by particular persons or persons having particular expertise. For example, section 24 places restrictions on the persons who can exercise functions relating to the finances and accounts of an owners corporation.

(3) An owners corporation may not delegate any of its functions to a person unless the delegation is specifically authorised by this Act."

34. Part 5 of the Management Act deals with by-laws. Sections 43, 44, 47, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53 and 55 are in the following terms:

``43(1) By-laws may be made in relation to any of the following:

> safety and security measures > details of any common property of which the use is restricted > the keeping of pets > parking > floor coverings > garbage disposal > behaviour
> architectural and landscaping guidelines to be observed by lot owners matters appropriate to the type of strata scheme concerned.

(2) This section does not limit the matters for which by-laws may be made.

(3) The regulations may prescribe model by- laws which may be adopted as the by-laws for a strata scheme.

44(1) The by-laws for a strata scheme bind the owners corporation and the owners and any mortgagee or covenant chargee in possession (whether in person or not), or lessee or occupier, of a lot to the same extent as if the by-laws:

> (a) had been signed and sealed by the owners corporation and each owner and each such mortgagee, covenant chargee, lessee and occupier, and
> (b) contained mutual covenants to observe and perform all the provisions of the by-laws.

(2) There is an implied covenant by the lessee in a lease of a lot or common property to comply with the by-laws for the strata scheme.

(3) In this section, `lessee' means, in relation to a lot in a strata leasehold scheme, a sublessee of the lot.

47. An owners corporation, in accordance with a special resolution, may, for the purpose of the control, management, administration, use or enjoyment of the lots or the lots and common property for the strata scheme, make by-laws adding to, amending or repealing the by-laws for the strata scheme.

[140186]

49(1) By-law cannot prevent dealing relating to lot.

No by-law is capable of operating to prohibit or restrict the devolution of a lot or a transfer, lease, mortgage, or other dealing relating to a lot.

(2) By-law resulting from order cannot be changed.

If an order made under Chapter 5 has effect as if its terms were a by-law, that by-law is not capable of being amended or repealed except by a by-law made in accordance with a unanimous resolution and, in the case of a strata leasehold scheme, with the consent of the lessor of the scheme.

(3) By-law cannot restrict children.

A by-law for a residential strata scheme has no force or effect to the extent to which it purports to prohibit or restrict persons under 18 years of age occupying a lot. This subsection does not apply to a by-law for a strata scheme for a retirement village or housing exclusively for aged persons.

(4) By-law cannot prevent keeping of guide dog.

A by-law has no force or effect to the extent to which it purports to prohibit or restrict the keeping on a lot of a dog used as a guide or hearing dog by an owner or occupier of the lot or the use of a dog as a guide or hearing dog on a lot or common property.

50(1) An owners corporation must not, during the initial period, make, amend or repeal a by-law in such a manner that a right is conferred or an obligation is imposed on one or more, but not all, owners or in respect of one or more, but not all, lots.

(2) An owners corporation may recover from the original owner, as damages for breach of statutory duty, any loss suffered by the owners corporation as a result of a contravention of this section.

(3) An owner may recover, as damages for breach of statutory duty, any loss that has been suffered by the owner as a result of a contravention of this section.

(4) It is a defence to an action under this section for damages if it is proved that the original owner:

(a) did not know of the contravention on which the action is based, or
(b) was not in a position to influence the conduct of the owners corporation in relation to the contravention, or
(c) used due diligence to prevent the contravention.

(5) A remedy available under this section does not affect any other remedy.

51(1) This Division applies to a by-law conferring on the owner of a lot specified in the by-law, or the owners of several lots so specified:

(a) a right of exclusive use and enjoyment of the whole or any specified part of the common property, or
(b) special privileges in respect of the whole or any specified part of the common property, and to a by-law that amends or repeals such a by-law.

(2) This Division does not prevent an owners corporation making a by-law in accordance with section 54 of the Community Land Management Act 1989.

52(1) An owners corporation may make, amend or repeal a by-law to which this Division applies, but only:

(a) with the written consent of the owner or owners of the lot or lots concerned and, in the case of a strata leasehold scheme, the lessor of the scheme, and
(b) in accordance with a special resolution.

(2) A by-law to which this Division applies may be made even though the person on whom the right of exclusive use and enjoyment or the special privileges are to be conferred had that exclusive use or enjoyment or enjoyed those special privileges before the making of the by-law.

(3) After 2 years from the making, or purported making, of a by-law to which this Division applies, it is conclusively presumed that all conditions and preliminary steps precedent to the making of the by-law were complied with and performed.

53. A by-law to which this Division applies may confer rights or special privileges subject to such conditions as may be specified in the by-law (for example, a condition requiring the payment of money by the owner or owners of the lot or lots concerned, at specified times or as determined by the owners corporation).

55(1) A by-law to which this Division applies, while it remains in force, continues to operate for the benefit of, and is binding on, the owner or owners for the time being of the lot or lots specified in the by-law.

(2) If a person becomes owner of a lot at a time when, under a by-law or under this subsection, a former owner is liable to pay money to the owners corporation, the person who becomes owner is jointly and severally liable with the former owner to pay the money to the owners corporation.

(3) Any money payable by an owner to the owners corporation under a by-law to which this Division applies or under subsection (2) may be recovered, as a debt, by the owners corporation."

35. ``Initial period'' referred to in s. 50 is defined in the Dictionary as follows:

```initial period', in relation to an owners corporation, means the period commencing on the day on which that owners corporation is constituted and ending on the day on which there are owners of lots the subject of the strata scheme concerned (other than the original owner) the sum of whose unit entitlements is at least one-third of the aggregate unit entitlement."

36. Chapter 5 of the Act deals with disputes, Part 4 of that Chapter deals with orders of adjudicators, and Division 8 of that Part deals with orders relating to by-laws. Section 159(1) provides as follows:

``159(1) An Adjudicator may make an order declaring a by-law to be invalid if the Adjudicator considers that an owners corporation did not have the power to make the by-law."

37. Contracting out of the provisions of the Act is prohibited by s. 245, which is in the following terms:

``245(1) The provisions of this Act have effect despite any stipulation to the contrary in any agreement, contract or arrangement entered into after the commencement of this section.

(2) No agreement, contract or arrangement, whether oral or wholly or partly in writing, entered into after the commencement of this section operates to annul, vary or exclude any of the provisions of this Act."

Submissions

38. The parties have provided written submissions, which I will leave with the papers.

39. Mr. Meagher SC for the plaintiff submitted that the defendants acquired the building subject to the lease; and that there was no implied term in the lease requiring the lessee to consent to the registration of a strata plan. Those matters were in fact conceded by the defendants.

40. Next, Mr. Meagher submitted that registration would necessarily involve breaches of the lease, and threats of further breaches.

41. He submitted that the demised premises would cease to exist as such. The defendants, as owners of a strata lot in respect of Level 6, would own only the air space, whilst the walls, floors, ceilings and fixtures would become common property owned by the body corporate: see Development Act, ss. 5, 18(1). Accordingly, the defendants would be unable to lease the demised premises to the plaintiff.

42. Mr. Meagher referred to Ashington Holdings Pty. Ltd. v. Wipema Services Pty. Limited (No.2) (1998) 9 BPR 16,515 at 16,518-20. In that case, an agreement for lease arose from the lessee's exercise of an option, in relation to a floor in a commercial building. Subsequently, a strata plan was registered with the lessee's consent, and the owner offered a lease of the relevant strata lot. Young, J. refused specific performance, because what was offered was different from the agreed lease. Young, J's decision was reversed by the Court of Appeal, but only on the ground that the proposed lessee's consent to the strata plan gave rise to an estoppel by convention.

43. Next, Mr. Meagher submitted that what had previously been common property owned by the defendants as owners of the building would become common property owned by the body corporate, so that the defendants would no longer be in a position to comply with their covenants in the lease to provide access, lifts, air conditioning, water and electricity, and this in turn could lead to infringement of the plaintiff's right to quiet enjoyment. Mr. Meagher submitted that they may not even be bound to provide these services: the defendants were not the original lessor, with obligations arising from privity of contract, but were assignees whose obligations arose from privity of estate: see Progressive Mailing House Pty. Limited v. Tabali (1984-5) 157 CLR 17; Auscott Limited v. Panizza (1988) NSWConvR ¶ 55-395; Kumar v. Dunning (1989) QB 193-9.

44. The lessor's obligations in relation to services were not ``with reference to'' the air space of Level 6, within ss. 117 and 118 of the Conveyancing Act. Even if the obligation to provide those services bound the defendants, they would not bind assignees of the defendants; so that even if the availability of a claim for damages would be an incentive to the defendants to ensure that the services were provided, that claim would not lie against lessor assignees of the defendants.

45. Next, Mr. Meagher submitted that a number of the provisions of the lease would become unworkable: for example, the provision to the effect that the lessee could erect signs and make alterations with the consent of the lessor; and provisions providing for percentage increases in outgoings.

46. Next, Mr. Meagher submitted that the plaintiff would become bound by entirely new obligations, namely the by-laws for the strata scheme: see s. 44 of the Management Act. These could involve serious disadvantages, for example reduced access to the building, or access to the plaintiff's premises by workers authorised by the body corporate, without the protection given by cl. 14.12 of the Memorandum.

47. Mr. Meagher submitted that the plaintiff could become liable also to additional payments under clauses of the Memorandum providing for contributions to expenses, including cl. 3(c), (cc), (dd) and (ee) of the First Appendix.

48. In relation to the deed poll offered by the defendants, Mr. Meagher submitted first that cl. 2 thereof, purporting to provide for exclusive use and enjoyment by the lessee of common property previously within the demised premises, would be invalid, because the owners corporation does not have power to give lessees exclusive use and enjoyment of common property: at most, it could give a licence to owners, pursuant to ss. 51, 52 and 55 of the Management Act, which is not an interest in land. See Victorian Professional Group Management Pty. Limited v. The Proprietors ``Surfers Aquarius'' Building Units Plan No. 3881 (1989) NSW Strata Title Cases ¶30-088 at 50,785-6; Rugby Court Pty. Limited v. The Proprietors Strata Plan No. 7712 (1979) NSW Strata Title Cases ¶30-030 at 50,391-2.

49. Mr. Meagher submitted that cl. 4(b) of the proposed deed poll, purporting to authorise non-compliance with by-laws inconsistent with rights under the lease, would be invalid, because the owners corporation does not have power to authorise such non-compliance: see s. 44 of the Management Act. Furthermore, s. 47 of the Management Act meant that any purported attempt to prevent amendment would be invalid.

50. Next, Mr. Meagher submitted that s. 50 of the Management Act prevented by-laws, during a relevant ``initial period'', conferring rights on owners unless all owners were given the same rights: Bapson Pty. Limited v. Puyeti Pty. Limited (1990) NSW Strata Title Cases ¶ 80-002 at 60,057. Even though this deed poll purported to apply to all leases, leases had different obligations and expired at different times, so that the rights given to different owners by the deed poll would be different.

51. Mr. Meagher submitted that cl. 6 of the deed poll, purporting to permit lessees to take away fixtures, was invalid: ss. 21 and 25 of the Development Act meant that common property could be dealt with only by a unanimous resolution of lot holders at the time of the transfer of common property.

52. Mr. Meagher submitted that cl. 7, purporting to appoint lessors as agents of the owners corporation for the purpose of consents, was invalid: see ss. 12, 13(3) of the Management Act, and cl. 3.1 of the by-laws.

53. Finally, Mr. Meagher pointed out that cl. 12 of the deed poll, which purportedly required the owners corporation to carry out certain work, contained no obligation upon the lessor to give notification to the owners corporation or to fund the repair work.

54. Mr. Raphael, also for the plaintiff, submitted that there could be adverse tax consequences to the plaintiff. The registration of the strata plan would result in a release of rights by the plaintiff, possibly in return for the benefits of the deed poll, and that release of rights would be a supply on which GST was payable. If there were any lessening of the plaintiff's obligations to pay outgoings, that would constitute firstly, a one-off income or capital gain (see Warner Music Australia Limited v. FCT (1996) 96 ATC 5046 at 5,055-6) and would involve an ongoing loss of deductions.

55. Mr. Robb QC for the defendants submitted that the Development Act confirmed a right to achieve the benefits of strata title as an incident of property ownership, that all lessees but the plaintiff had consented, and that the defendants had indicated a willingness to take whatever steps were necessary to ensure that there would be no disadvantage to the plaintiff. Section 16(2) of the Development Act showed that a strata plan can be registered without a lessee's consent, so that the Court did have a discretion to permit registration, notwithstanding the lack of consent from the plaintiff.

56. Next, Mr. Robb submitted that a lessee is not entitled to an injunction against breaches of a lease unless substantial interference with its rights occurred or was threatened: Martin's Camera Corner Pty. Limited v. Hotel Mayfair Limited (1976) 2 NSWLR 15; Kohua Pty. Limited v. Tai Ping Trading Pty. Limited (1985) 3 BPR 9,705; Todburn Pty. Limited v. Taormina International Pty. Limited (1990) 5 BPR 11,173. Trivial interference was insufficient: Lincolnshire Railway Co. v. Anderson [1898] 2 Ch. 394 at 401, 404. Where the alleged breach was derogation from grant, it was necessary to show that the premises were rendered materially less fit for the intended purpose: Vasile v. Perpetual Trustees WA Limited (1987) NSW Conv.R. ¶55-345.

57. The deed poll was offered in order to ensure that the defendants as lessors could comply with the lessor's obligations, and that the owners corporation would not exercise its powers inconsistently with the rights of the lessee. It would complement the obligations of the owners corporation under Part 2 of Chapter 3 of the Management Act.

58. Mr. Robb submitted that the majority of the Court of Appeal in Ashington took the view that the change to strata title in that case was not material; and cf. Gourmet Pizza Kitchen Pty. Limited v. Sikes (1998) 8 BPR 15,971.

59. Mr. Robb submitted that although the defendants, as owners of a strata lot, would cease to have an interest in the fixtures, there would be no breach sufficient to grant an injunction. Similarly, the circumstance that the control of the building would pass to the owners corporation, the power of the owners corporation to make by-laws, and the need for concurrence of other lot owners for financial contributions, did not involve any breach or threat of breach sufficient to grant an injunction. The defendants' offer to waive the lessee's obligation to pay a percentage of increases in outgoings ensured that this would not involve a burden on the plaintiff.

60. Purchasers from the defendants of the strata lot would be bound by all the terms of the lease: see Hurlfite Pty. Limited v. Coles Myer Limited (1990) NSW Conv.R. ¶55-515.

61. Turning to the deed poll, Mr. Robb submitted that there was a wide power to make by-laws: see Hamlena Pty. Limited v. Sydney Endoscopy Centre Pty. Limited (1990) 5 BPR 11,432 and 11,436; Salerno v. Proprietors of Strata Plan No. 42724 (1997) 8 BPR 15,457; Humphries v. The Proprietors (Surfers Palms North) Group Titles Plan 1955 (1994) 179 CLR 597 at 616.

62. Mr. Robb submitted that cl. 2 impliedly confirmed the lot owner's rights to exclusive use and occupation of the relevant property; and in any event, cl. 2 could be amended so as expressly to give the right to the owner which would be passed on to the lessee under the lease. Mr. Robb submitted that, although amendment of by-laws could not be prevented, the deed poll would contractually bind the body corporate not to amend: cf. Craig Gordon v. Proprietors of Strata Plan No. 16 (1964-5) NSWR 1576. This was also consistent with company law principles, which according to Hamlena were relevant. In any event, the defendants were prepared to offer a covenant not to amend by-laws and a promise that it would cause all future owners of lots to enter into a similar covenant.

63. Mr. Robb submitted that in so far as the deed poll purported to give the lessees the right to take away tenants' fixtures, the deed poll itself would be an expression of a unanimous resolution of unit holders made at this time, which was sufficient.

Decision

64. In my opinion, as submitted by Mr. Robb, the Development Act does contemplate that subdivision into strata lots is an incident of ownership of property suitable for that subdivision, and also that strata plans may be registered without the consent of lessees. I also accept that the question is not just whether there would be breaches of the lease, but rather whether an injunction would be justified; and that this requires substantial interference with the rights of the plaintiff, or the threat of such interference, and also requires that damages would be an inadequate remedy. This is very different from the question considered in Ashington, of whether an agreement for lease of a floor of a building should be enforced by compelling an unwilling lessee to enter into a lease of a strata lot: in that case, the onus was squarely on the lessor to have the Court exercise a discretion in the lessor's favour.

[140190]

65. I was initially persuaded by Mr. Meagher's submission that the registration of the strata plan would involve an actual breach of the lease, in taking away the plaintiff's right to exclusive possession of fixtures etc.; although I took the view that this would justify an injunction only if it was associated with a real threat of interference or some other actual burden or disadvantage. However, on further consideration I have concluded that all fixtures and internal walls within the cubic spaces of the lot (not including structural cubic spaces) are part of the lot. Paragraph (b) of the definition of ``structural cubic space'' makes it clear that the Development Act is not using the expression ``cubic space'' as excluding physical objects within the cubic space in question, but rather includes such objects if they are part of a ``parcel'', that is, land. This approach is confirmed by Ilkin, Strata Schemes and Community Schemes Management and the Law (3rd ed), p. 44. and Burgchard v. Holyroyd Municipal Council [1984] 2 NSWLR 164. In those circumstances, I see no reason why the provision in the lease for removal of tenant's fixtures would not remain efficacious. There would still in my view be a technical breach of the lease in relation to floors, ceilings and external walls, and pipes and wires within them; but that breach seems plainly immaterial.

66. In my opinion, the defendants, and also future assignees from the defendants, would be bound by the terms of the lease, notwithstanding the registration of the strata plan, even though the premises then owned by them and affected by the lease would be ``cubic spaces'' only. In my opinion, the lessee's rights to access and services such as lifts, air conditioning, water and electricity, and the lessor's corresponding obligations, are plainly ``with reference to'' the cubic spaces of the relevant lot, considered as being leased for use as commercial offices. In my opinion, the fact that the property required for the supply of these rights and services would be owned by the owners corporation, rather than the lessor, is in no way inconsistent with that.

67. I think this is supported by my decision in Hurlfite. In that case, I held that the lessor's obligation to maintain a car park in association with a leased shopping centre was ``with reference to'' the demised premises, notwithstanding that part of the car park was owned, not by the lessor but by the local Council. It could be argued that that decision is distinguishable, because the car park was treated as a whole, and it was partly owned by the lessor; and also because the lease itself recognised that the car park was partly owned by the Council. I think it is extremely unlikely that the decision could be distinguished on that ground. However, out of abundant caution it may be appropriate to require the defendants to undertake a contractual obligation to the plaintiff to fulfil all the terms of the lease, and also promise that the plaintiff will not be any worse off by reason of the registration of the strata plan, together with an obligation to ensure that the same obligations are undertaken by any assignee of this strata lot from the defendants: this promise could be secured by a charge over the lot itself.

68. Turning to the question of tax, there would in my opinion be no supply by the plaintiff by reason of refusal of the injunction and registration of the strata plan: all it would mean would be that the plaintiff's existing rights were not such as to justify an injunction or to preclude the registration of the strata plan, and the plaintiff would retain contractual rights in relation to future breaches. In so far as outgoings are waived, this could conceivably be a one-off capital gain or income receipt, and it would involve an on-going loss of deductions, but there would be a net gain to the plaintiff.

69. Leaving aside any question of a deed poll or other agreement, there could be a basis for granting an injunction. First, there is the need to obtain consent from the owners corporation, rather than the lessor, for various operations in respect of the demised premises. Next, there is the reduced ability of the lessor to provide the access and the services to which I have referred.

Next, there is the circumstance that by-laws passed by the owners corporation could be more onerous, and give less rights, than provided by the lease, for example in relation to access to the premises; and that these by-laws could be amended from time to time. Finally, unless increases in outgoings are waived, it is conceivable that outgoings could be increased.

70. There is force in Mr. Meagher's criticisms of the proposed deed poll. In my opinion, the deed poll could not validly authorise non-compliance with by-laws, nor could it prevent by-laws being varied, nor could it validly appoint lot owners as agents of the owners corporation for the purpose of giving consents. Although companies can validly make contracts, I do not think an owners corporation can contractually bind itself and future owners corporations not to amend by-laws: I can find no such power in either Act, and I do not think the analogy with companies is sufficient to imply such a power.

71. Such a deed poll, authorised by a by-law, could in my opinion validly require the owners corporation to provide access, lifts, air conditioning, etc., in accordance with the terms of leases, except to the extent that this was inconsistent with either the Act or the by-laws. I do not think the different terms of leases would mean that any of these provisions would be in breach of s. 50 of the Management Act.

72. This would meet some of the possible disadvantages to which I have referred. However, in addition to procuring such a deed poll, I think the defendants should undertake contractual obligations in favour of the plaintiff:

(a) to ensure that the plaintiff has all the rights purportedly granted by the lease;
(b) to ensure that the plaintiff would not be disadvantaged in relation to any term of the lease by reason of the registration of the strata plan;
(c) secured by charge over the strata lot (giving security for damages, and the right to lodge a caveat); and
(d) to ensure that any purchaser of the lot would undertake the same obligations, including this one.

I would not require waiver of increases in outgoings. It may be that the lease, on its true construction, will not require them; but in any event, I think a contractual undertaking in terms of (b) gives sufficient protection.

73. On the basis of the defendants procuring a deed poll covering the matters I have referred to, and undertaking the above contractual obligations, I would refuse relief to the plaintiff.

74. My tentative view on costs is that the plaintiff should pay one-half of the defendants' costs. The conditions I am imposing on the defendants are not exactly as offered, but the defendants were prepared to submit to any reasonable conditions and asked the plaintiff what it wanted. However, my tentative view is that the plaintiff was entitled to the interim protection it obtained, so should not be liable on its undertaking as to damages.

Supreme Court of Queensland, Court of Appeal

Judgment delivered 29 November 2000

Building Units and Group Titles — Body corporate — Nature and powers — Special resolution not required to bring counterclaim, third-party proceeding or other proceeding, in a proceeding to which body corporate already had a party — Whether appellant body corporate required to pass special resolution to start appeal proceeding — Whether appeal a separate proceeding from action below — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (Qld), sec 259; Body Corporate and Community Management (Standard Module) Regulation 1997 (Qld), reg 26.

The respondents (``Sattell'') instituted an action in the Supreme Court in which they sought declarations relating to a caretaking agreement as well as damages for breach of contract and other relief. The appellant (``Be-Bees'') was sued as a body corporate constituted under the provisions of the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980. The complaint Sattell made against Be-Bees was that it had wrongfully repudiated certain agreements said to have been made between the two parties.

Jones J declared that one of the agreements mentioned in the pleadings was valid and enforceable and declared that it had been terminated by Sattell's acceptance of Be-Bees repudiation of the agreement. His Honour remitted the case to the District Court for assessment of damages, by which was meant assessment of any damages that might have been incurred by Sattell: (2000) LQCS ¶90-105.

Be-Bees purported to institute an appeal that the action be dismissed, set down for hearing on 29 November 2000. On 28 November, Sattell filed an order that the appeal be struck out or dismissed on the ground that Be-Bees had failed to obtain a special resolution from the body corporate to institute the appeal, thus failing to comply with sec 259 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (the ``Act''). Sec 259 reads as follows:

> ``(1) The body corporate for a community titles scheme may start a proceeding only if the proceeding is authorised by special resolution of the body corporate.
>
> (2) However, the body corporate does not need a special resolution to —
>
> (a) bring a proceeding for the recovery of a liquidated debt against the owner of a lot included in the scheme; or
> (b) bring a counterclaim, third-party proceeding or other proceeding, in a proceeding to which the body corporate is already a party; or
> (c) appeal against an adjudicator's order; or
> (d) start a proceeding for an offence under chapter 3, part 5, division 4."

Be-Bees argued that the appeal was a proceeding in the same proceeding as the judgment at first instance, the latter being one to which the body corporate was already a party.

Held: Appeal dismissed.

1. The wording of sec 259(2) of the Act, ``counterclaim, third-party proceeding or other proceeding, in a proceeding'', when the latter proceeding is an action at first instance, would not bring to mind an appeal against a judgment at first instance. Particularly an action of the present character which disposes finally of the only substantive issue before the Court for determination.

2. The exclusion in sec 259(2)(c) of an appeal against an adjudicator's order supports the assumption on which paragraph (c) is based: that such an appeal to a higher court, attacking the result of a judgment delivered at first instance, would not be within paragraph (b).

[Headnote by the CCH CONVEYANCING LAW EDITORS]

DA Savage with WA Cull (instructed by Attwood Marshall (Gold Coast)) for the appellant.

CJ Carrigan (instructed by Nicholsons) for the respondents.

Before: Pincus and Davies JJA, Douglas J.

Judgment, in full, below

Pincus and Davies JJ, Douglas J: The appellant purported to institute an appeal against a judgment of Jones J which appeal was, after outlines had been delivered, set down for hearing on 29 November 2000. On 28 November the respondents to the appeal filed an application for an order that the appeal be struck out or dismissed on the ground that, it was said, the appellant had failed to ``comply with s 259 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997''. We granted that application, dismissing the appeal, and reserved our reasons.

2. The respondents, Messrs Sattell and others, instituted an action in the Supreme Court in which they sought declarations relating to a caretaking agreement as well as damages for breach of contract and other relief. The appellant was sued as a body corporate constituted under the provisions of the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980. The complaint the respondents made against it was that it had wrongfully repudiated certain agreements said to have been made between the appellant and the respondents. During the hearing of that action the learned trial judge decided that, for reasons which need not be explained here, it would be convenient to deal with the action only in so far as certain declaratory relief was sought, leaving any question of damages to be determined in the District Court; the action then proceeded to judgment on that basis.

3. Jones J declared that, with certain exceptions, one of the agreements mentioned in the pleadings was valid and enforceable and declared that it had been terminated by the respondents' acceptance of the appellant's repudiation of the agreement. His Honour remitted the case to the District Court at Cairns for assessment of damages, by which was meant assessment of any damages that might have been suffered by the respondents.

4. By its notice of appeal the appellant sought an order that the action be dismissed. The point the respondents, for whom Mr Carrigan appeared, raised against the competency of the appellant's proceedings depends on the interpretation of s 259(1) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997. The appellant did not come into existence under that Act, but under its predecessor, the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980. The 1997 Act contains provisions having the effect of bringing existing bodies corporate under that Act. The substantive provisions of the 1997 Act came into force on 13 July 1997. Sections 275 and 276, which we do not here quote, have the effect that on that date a ``community titles scheme'' being a ``basic scheme'' was established for the relevant plan, which was registered under the 1980 Act. The expression ``basic scheme'' is in effect defined by s 11(5) of the 1997 Act, but it is not necessary to explain its content. The critical provision is s 259 of the 1997 Act, which reads as follows:

> “(1) The body corporate for a community titles scheme may start a proceeding only if the proceeding is authorised by special resolution of the body corporate.
> (2) However, the body corporate does not need a special resolution to —
>
> > (a) bring a proceeding for the recovery of a liquidated debt against the owner of a lot included in the scheme; or
> > (b) bring a counterclaim, third-party proceeding or other proceeding, in a proceeding to which the body corporate is already a party; or
> > (c) appeal against an adjudicator's order; or
> > (d) start a proceeding for an offence under chapter 3, part 5, division 4”.

5. It is accepted that there was no relevant special resolution. Section 92 of the 1997 Act reads in part as follows:

> “(1) A decision of the committee is a decision of the body corporate.
> (2) Subsection (1) does not apply to a decision that, under the regulation module, is a decision on a restricted issue for the committee”.

The regulation module is a document entitled ``Body Corporate and Community Management (Standard Module) Regulation 1997''; see s 22(1) of the 1997 Act and reg 3(1) of the 1997 Regulation. Counsel for the appellant relied to some extent upon reg 26 of the 1997 Regulation which says, among other things, that:

> “A decision is a decision on a restricted issue for the committee if it is a decision —
>
> > ...
> > (e) to bring a proceeding in a court, other than —
> > > (i) a proceeding to recover a liquidated debt against the owner of a lot; or

(ii) a counterclaim, third party proceeding or other proceeding in relation to a proceeding to which the body corporate is already a party...".

6. It will be noticed that reg 26 just quoted may not harmonise well with the terms of s 259(2) of the 1997 Act, in that the latter includes pars (c) and (d) which are not to be found in reg 26(e); although counsel for the appellant sought to gain some advantage from this lack of conformity, it does not appear to have much if any bearing on the central issue. That is whether the need for a special resolution did not arise, because the institution of the appeal falls within the description ``other proceeding, in a proceeding to which the body corporate is already a party'' in s 259(2)(b). It was argued for the appellant that the appeal against Jones J's judgment is a proceeding in the same proceeding as was before Jones J, the latter being one to which the body corporate was already a party.

7. In making this contention, counsel for the appellant conceded that the judgment of Jones J was final and not interlocutory; the point is not absolutely clear: Hall v Busst (1960) 104 CLR 206 and Computer Edge Pty Ltd v Apple Computer Inc (1984) 54 ALR 767. The judgment of Jones J was final at least in the sense that his Honour finally disposed of the case so far as the Supreme Court was concerned; further proceedings, if there were to be any, had to be taken in another court. It was argued for the appellant that if we upheld the respondents' objection, that would imply the necessity for obtaining a special resolution as authority to institute an appeal from any interlocutory order. That does not appear to be so; to hold that an appeal against an order finally determining the only issues falling for determination in this Court is not a proceeding ``in'' the proceeding before the primary judge does not commit one to holding that no appeals on procedural points arising in the trial may be instituted unless authorised by special resolution.

8. A rather similar point arose in General Accident Fire and Life Assurance Corporation Ltd v Foster [1972] 3 All ER 877, which was decided on the basis that an interlocutory appeal to the Court of Appeal was ``clearly a separate proceeding for the purpose of considering the effect of'' a certain statutory provision: see p 881e-f. The alternative view was that the appeal was merely part of the proceedings at first instance. Since the point went by concession, the authority is of no great weight here. More assistance is to be obtained by attention to the words of s 259(2) of the 1997 Act. The expression ``counterclaim, third party proceeding or other proceeding, in a proceeding'', when the latter proceeding is an action at first instance, would not bring to mind an appeal against a judgment in the action, particularly one of the present character which disposes finally (subject to the possibility of an appeal) of the only substantive issue before the Court for determination. The mention of a counterclaim and a third party proceeding is rather against the appellant's contention; and one would not describe an appeal to a higher court, attacking the result of a judgment delivered at first instance, as being one ``in'' the original proceeding. Also the exclusion by par (c) of an appeal against an adjudicator's order does not help the appellant; the assumption on which par (c) is based is that such an appeal would not be within par (b).

9. The Queensland Court of Appeal was, as was pointed out during the hearing, established as a division of the Supreme Court of Queensland: see s 16 of the Supreme Court of Queensland Act 1991. But the same Act treats the Court of Appeal as a distinct institution: see in particular Pt 3 of the Act. In our opinion the institution of the appeal was beyond the appellant's power.

10. It was suggested on behalf of the appellant that, if we took this view, the appeal should be adjourned so that, if so advised, the appellant could attempt to obtain a special resolution ratifying what was done. It appears to us that, where a party having no right to do so purports to begin an appeal in this Court, on the deficiency being brought to the Court's attention the appeal would ordinarily be dismissed or struck out. The circumstances of the present case, so far as they appear from the record, do not suggest that this is a case where justice requires that any other course be followed.

11. The foregoing are the reasons, which we undertook to give, for the order made dismissing the appeal. We reserved the question of costs. The respondents, had they considered the matter, must have known or believed that there was no special resolution authorising the appeal, for they are themselves the owners of a lot. It appears, however, that the appellant's difficulty did not occur to the respondents' legal advisers until very recently and the point was notified to this opponent only the day before the hearing. Had the matter been drawn to the appellant's attention earlier, perhaps there could have been a considerable saving of time and effort in preparing outlines of argument and preparing for oral argument, on the substantive issues. On the other hand, it was the appellant which wrongly instituted the appeal.

12. In our view the appellant should have a partial order for costs. The appeal has, as we have mentioned already, been dismissed. We would order in addition that the appellant pay half of the respondents' costs of and incidental to the appeal, to be assessed.

New South Wales Supreme Court

Judgment delivered 2 March 2001

Strata title — By-laws purporting to give exclusivity to caretaker/manager — Whether by-laws extend to preclude owners from using selling agents other than plaintiff/ caretaker — Whether constraint upon owners would result in restriction of transfer — Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW), sec 49(1).

The plaintiff (``Regis Towers'') is a real estate agent that carries on its business in a city development in Sydney known as Regis Towers. Regis Towers owns the so-called management lots (lots 149, 454, 488 and 650) contained in Strata Plan No 56443.

The first defendant (``Peter Kelly Flooring'') is the owner of Lot 630 in the Regis Towers development. Peter Kelly Flooring chose to retain Kenneth Real Estate Pty Ltd (``Kenneth Real Estate'') as its agent when it wished to sell Lot 630.

Kenneth Real Estate advertised that the unit was for sale and arranged for the unit to be open for inspection. They also erected a-frame signs in front of the building. An incident occurred when representatives from Regis Towers asserted that Kenneth Real Estate had no right to act on the sale or erect signs without the consent of Regis Towers.

Regis Towers, claiming that the by-laws and building management agreement confer exclusive agency upon themselves, sought an injunction against Peter Kelly Flooring and Kenneth Real Estate continuing the agency. Peter Kelly Flooring and the other owners contended that the exclusivity contained in the by-laws and management agreement went no further than to preclude their direct participation in or conduct of the various specified services in their units or in the common property.

By-law 4 is in the following terms:

> ``1. The owner or occupier of any lot must not in his lot or on the common property, except with the written consent of the owners of Lots 149, 454, 488 and 650, conduct or participate in the conduct of a business which provides services in the nature of:—
>
> a. the business of a letting agent; or > b. The business of a pooled rent agency; or > c. The business of on-site caretaker, security, cleaner; or > d. any other business activity that is either:—
>
> i....
> ii. An activity identical or substantially identical with any of the services provided to owners and occupiers of lots referred to in Special By-Law 1, and/or the Caretaker-Manager Agreement''.

Clause 4 of the Management Agreement to which the by-laws refer states:

> ``4. The Caretaker may provide the following services as agent for owners of lots in the building, at their request and subject to the settlement between the Caretaker and the owners of the terms on which the services are to be provided:
>
> 1. Buying, selling, leasing, assigning or otherwise disposing of lots within the strata scheme; and''

Held: summons dismissed.

1. The constraint in by-law 4 should be interpreted as merely precluding the owner from direct participation in, or conduct of, the relevant activities. The owner then remains free to appoint real estate agents for selling purposes, as long as they do not involve participation by the owner in the agent's business. Clearly, an owner who engages a real estate agent to sell his or her property is not conducting or participating in that business.

[140196]

2. An all-encompassing selling exclusivity, as argued by Regis Towers, may result in such a constraint on the selling of units as to invoke sec 49 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW). Under that provision, no by-law can operate to prohibit or restrict a transfer or other dealing relating to a lot. To grant the purported exclusivity that Regis Towers contended is contained in by-law 4 may result in a restriction on transfer or an unreasonable restraint of trade.

Santow J:

Introduction

1. This case is essentially about whether under Strata Title by-laws the Plaintiff could prevent a number of strata title owners bypassing the Plaintiff in order to appoint their own selling agent.

2. The Plaintiff is the Manager/Caretaker of the building and relies upon the by-laws and building management agreement for its claimed exclusivity. The owners say the exclusivity goes no further than to preclude their direct participation in or conduct of the various specified services in their units or in the common property. They say that this does not preclude them engaging third party real estate agents (or their counterparts in the other specified services), though they act for the owner by entering upon the premises with prospective purchasers, or by conducting an auction on site within the unit. The Plaintiff disputes that, contending that any such engagement would also breach the by-laws and building management agreement.

3. In the interests of a ``just, quick and cheap'' resolution of that dispute, all parties sensibly agreed to my answering the following question as a separate one. This was with the agreed result that, if answered against the Plaintiff, its claim to exclusivity under the Strata by-laws and management Agreement must fail. Accordingly, I made these following orders by consent.

> ``1. Pursuant to Pt 31 r 2 and 4 of SCR, the question below shall be decided separately from any other question, such to be the initial question for decision and if decided against the Plaintiff the agreed result is that the Plaintiff's summons in each of the above matters is dismissed.
>
> > `Whether pursuant to the special By-laws (PX1) or otherwise having regard to PX2, the Plaintiffs have the exclusive rights described in paragraph 3 of the Plaintiff's Summons in each of the above matters.'"

Agreed facts

4. Set out below is a summary outline of facts agreed between the parties.

> ``The Plaintiff company is a real estate agent. It carries on its business in a city development known as Regis Towers, which fronts Castlereagh Street, Campbell Street and Pitt Street. It owns the so-called management lots in Regis Towers (lots 149, 454, 488 and 650). The development is contained in Strata Plan No. 56443. The owners of the Strata Plan are joined as a Third Defendant to give them an opportunity
>
> [140197]
>
> [140197]
>
> of being heard on the issues in these proceedings. They have appeared and made submissions, but without prejudice to the Plaintiff's challenge to the Third Defendant's retainer.
>
> The Plaintiff claims that a special by-law of the strata plan which is referred to later effectively excludes the retention of any other real estate agents but the Plaintiff by any of the owners of lots in the development.

The First Defendant, Peter Kelly Flooring Pty Limited, is the owner of Lot 630 in Regis Towers. The First Defendant chose to retain Kenneth Real Estate Pty Limited trading as Ray White City South, the Second Defendant as its agent when it wished to sell Lot 630. Neither the First nor Second Defendant sought the agreement or consent of the Plaintiff to this arrangement.

The Second Defendant advertised that the unit was for sale and arranged to have the unit open for inspection on Saturday, 24 February 2001. For that purpose, they erected A frame signs in front of Castlereagh Street tower and in front of the Campbell Street tower of Regis Towers. They were inviting prospective purchasers to enter Regis Towers for the purposes of inspecting Unit 630 and otherwise promoting the sale of the unit.

An incident occurred when representatives of the Plaintiff company asserted that the Second Defendant has no right to act on the sale without the Plaintiff's consent or to have their signs on the footpath, or to invite members of the public to inspect the unit.

Following that incident, solicitors on behalf of the First Defendant, Peter Kelly Flooring Pty Limited objected to the stand taken by the Plaintiffs. They requested an immediate assurance that the Plaintiffs would not interfere any further with the owner's chosen agent in the process of promoting the sale. The Plaintiffs commenced these proceedings seeking injunction against the owners and the agents continuing the agency."

Resolution of separate question

5. Special by-law 4 sets out the constraint primarily relied upon by the Plaintiff as precluding any owner from appointing a sales agent for the sale of that owner's strata lot who is not the Plaintiff. That constraint confers a degree of exclusivity upon the Plaintiff as ``the caretaker-manager'' of the building. This is in carrying out functions as caretaker-manager as elaborated in the management agreement (PX2). By-law 4 is in the following terms:

``1. The owner or occupier of any lot must not in his lot or on the common property, except with the written consent of the owners of Lots 149, 454, 488 and 650, conduct or participate in the conduct of a business which provides services in the nature of:—

a. the business of a letting agent; or
b. The business of a pooled rent agency; or
c. The business of on-site caretaker, security, cleaner; or
d. any other business activity that is either:—

i. An activity identical or substantially identical with any of the services relating to the management, control and administration of the parcel referred to in Special By-Law 1 and/ or the Caretaker-Manager Agreement; and/or
ii. An activity identical or substantially identical with any of the services provided to owners and occupiers of lots referred to in Special By-Law 1, and/or the Caretaker-Manager Agreement; and/ or
iii. Any activity identical or substantially identical with any of the services relating to the letting of lots referred to in Special By-Law 1, and/ or the Caretaker-Manager Agreement.

e. Any of the following businesses:—

1. Supply of linen;
2. Housekeeping and cleaning;
3. Catering, insofar as it consists in the delivery of foodstuffs and beverages to lots within the strata scheme;
4. Butler and valet;
5. Porterage;
6. Dry cleaning and laundry;
7. Vehicle, taxi and limousine hire;

[140198]

8. Entertainment, restaurant and tour reservations;
9. Purposes permitted by Special By- Law No. 1.

...."

[emphasis added]

6. The emphasised portion contains the preclusion invoked by the Plaintiff, though the rest of the clause bears upon its construction.

7. By-law 4 then refers to Special By-law 1. Para 2 d of by-law 1 provides that the Caretaker-Manager's duty ``may'' include... ``providing a letting property management and sales service...''. This the Plaintiff does.

8. The Management Agreement to which the by-laws refer is dated 6 August 1999. Clause 4 is relevant:

``4. The Caretaker may provide the following services as agent for owners of lots in the building, at their request and subject to the settlement between the Caretaker and the owners of the terms on which the services are to be provided:

1. Buying, selling, leasing, assigning or otherwise disposing of lots within the strata scheme; and
2. Collecting rents payable in respect of any lease of lots within the strata scheme.

The consideration for the Owners Corporation granting the Caretaker the right to conduct the services is the Caretaker conducting the activities associated and incidental to these services if the Caretaker elects to do so. In no circumstances shall the Owners Corporation be liable to pay the Caretaker remuneration for these services, or to reimburse for it any expenses incurred in providing these services.''

9. Clause 6 of the Management Agreement is also invoked by the Plaintiff as precluding real estate agents engaged by an owner going on to the premises to sell the owner's unit. It is in the following terms:

``6. The Owners Corporation must not permit the use of the common property or any of the other Lots for the provision of these services, except according to the terms of this Agreement.''

10. The Management Agreement is only for an initial term of 10 years. There are then three 5 year options to renew vested only in the Caretaker-Manager. Clause 18 makes clear that the services that Caretaker-Manager provides are not wholly exclusive because the Caretaker is free to provide them to other persons who are not owners. But there is no reciprocal provision to the effect that owners must use only the Caretaker-Manager in the Management Agreement. That is contrary to what one would expect, if the by-laws were to have the restrictive interpretation contended for by the Plaintiff. Moreover the by-laws are unlimited as to time, whereas the associated management agreement might cease after 10 years. That leaves the owner, on the Plaintiff's interpretation, precluded from taking a wide range of services by persons temporarily in the premises to provide them. This would include not only real estate agency services but also the numerous other services stipulated. That constraint would operate even in circumstances where there was no agreement providing for the Plaintiff to offer them or where only on offer on exorbitant terms. The Management Agreement makes no provision for the costs to be charged for the relevant estate agency and other services to be provided exclusively by the Caretaker- Manager. That is contrary to what one would expect if owners were bound to take those services exclusively from the Manager/Plaintiff when their provision brought the service provider on to the premises, albeit only in a transient sense.

11. Nonetheless, despite these onerous consequences, the Plaintiff contends that any owner who uses an outside agent rather than the Caretaker-Manager to sell his unit infringes special by-law 4, unless consent were first obtained. (There is no suggestion of consent being forthcoming in the present cases). This is said to be because the owner, either directly or through the agent, would in the words of the by- law thereby ``conduct or participate in the conduct of a business which provides services in the nature of'' the ``sales service'' provided to owners and occupiers of the relevant lots. The Plaintiff relies on the judgment of Bryson J in Regis Towers Real Estate Pty Ltd v Kin Fung & Ors (2000) NSW Titles Cases ¶80-056; [2000] NSWSC 438. But that case is directed to an actual underlease of a unit to a real estate agent. That is a wholly different set of circumstances to the present, where none of the service provider comes on to the premises save in a transient sense, as for example to confer with the owner or bring in a potential purchaser.

12. The anomalous and onerous consequences of such an interpretation point strongly against it. They include that the owner, though refused that specified service by the Caretaker or offered it on onerous terms or in circumstances where the agent had a conflict, would nonetheless be in breach of the prohibition if the owner used an outside agent. This the Plaintiff tried to answer by suggesting that the caretaker would then be precluded from withholding its consent to the owner using an outside agent. That is said to be an implied term attaching to the capacity to give or withhold consent.

13. But such a term would not be implied if the agreement, interpreted less restrictively, could have business efficacy without it. There is indeed an interpretation of the clause which avoids that anomaly arising in the first place. This is simply to construe the constraint in a less strained and expansive way; by interpreting the constraint as merely precluding the owner from direct participation in, or conduct of, the relevant activities. In that way the owner remains free to appoint agents, selling or otherwise, so long as they do not involve participation by the owner in the agent's business.

14. There is a further powerful argument against the Plaintiff's construction. An agreement having the onerous consequences that I have identified would operate as an unreasonable restraint of trade, offending the common law prohibition on such restraints. JD Heydon, QC (as he then was) writing in ``A Restraint of Trade Doctrine'' 2nd ed (Butterworths 1999) at 115 explains how the rules of construction applicable to restraints can often assist in holding covenants valid, by narrowing their scope:

> ``The rules of construction already discussed will often assist in holding covenants valid by narrowing their scope. Thus where an employee agreed that he would not, after leaving his employer's service, deal with `any of the customers who shall at any time be served by the employer... in the said business', the Court of Appeal held that these words referred only to the employer's business at the time of the agreement, and not to any business started elsewhere thereafter. As Lord Esher MR said, `It is an ordinary canon of construction that the meaning of words in an agreement which, taken by themselves, are quite general may be confined to a particular subject-matter with which the parties were dealing'. Here, I think the parties to the agreement were dealing with the business then carried on by the plaintiff in Whitechapel and St George's in the East, and the scope of this agreement must be limited by reference to that locality. Dubowski & Sons v Goldstein [1896] 1 QB 478 at 481; [1895-99] All ER Rep 1959 at 1961.''

15. The Plaintiff contended that use of the common property or any of the lots merely to permit prospective purchasers to come onto the premises was prohibited by clause 6 of the Management Agreement. That introduces yet further absurdity. It would mean that a frail owner who arranged for a limousine driver to enter the common property to assist him or her to the hire car would thereby invoke the prohibition in clause 6. Yet that is another of the numerous services the subject of constraint in by-law 4. An interpretation that avoids such absurdity is obviously to be preferred. Thus, consistently with the earlier preferred interpretation of by-law 4, one would read clause 6 as simply prohibiting the common property to be used for the provision of the relevant services where these were being offered from within the building. There would be no need to extend that constraint to preventing an owner, in transient fashion, using such a service when not so offered from within the building.

16. The Plaintiff's argument is that by-law 4 constrains the owner in two distinct ways. First, the owner may not directly conduct or participate in the conduct of the relevant business within the building. He or she would do so it is said even by permitting the agent on to the building with a prospective purchaser, or by conducting an auction of the owner's flat in the flat. But that is not the natural meaning of the words ``conduct or participate in''. If one comes as a client to a real estate agent, one does not conduct or participate in that business.

17. Moreover the relevant clause refers to the conduct of a business meaning the agent's business. Clearly enough the owner who engages a sales agent to sell his or her lot is not engaging in agency business. He or she as owner does no more than co-operate in the selling process by making title available and receiving payment, having earlier permitted prospective purchasers on to the premises. To be engaged in the sales agent business, there must on the owner's part in any event be system and continuity in carrying out that business. It has been put in the comparable context of carrying on the business of a money lender by Dr Pannam in ``the Law of Money Lenders'' LBC 1965 at 36:

> ``The result of the preceding authorities would seem to be that in order for a person to come within the primary definition of money lender it must be shown that he has systematically or regularly lent money.[21] The precise volume of lending which must be proved in order to make that showing cannot be captured in a legal formula. It is a question that can only be decided by a court having regard to the facts of each particular case. As McCardie J said, in the passage set out above: `It is ever a question of degree.' The only legal proposition that can be stated with any certainty in determining the question is that a single loan,[22] or several isolated loans,[23] cannot constitute the carrying on of a `business' for the purpose of this part of the definition.''

18. A similar approach is to be found in the trade practices context, as mostly recently Fasold v Roberts (1997) 70 FCR 489 per Sackville J. But even were the owner himself or herself to be engaged in the business of trading in strata title units, he or she would not be engaged in the business of a ``sales service''. That is the provision of a service for others, not for oneself.

19. The second way in which the Plaintiff contends that by-law 4 constrains the owner is in precluding the owner carrying on the business of sales service through the agency of the estate agent. This is said to occur by referring the owner's business to the agent, who thereby acts on the owner's behalf. That presupposes that an estate agent is not in reality an independent contractor. But that supposition does not fully describe the owner's relationship with a real estate agent. While the agent acts for the owner in selling, it is more accurate to describe the relationship as usually one of client to independent contractor. One may equally say a solicitor acts on behalf of a client. But the solicitor is not an agent either. But even if the real estate agent is properly described as truly acting as an agent, the language does not compel the result that the Plaintiff contends for. The more natural meaning of the words used is that they preclude the owner actually conducting the business through an agent, as for example by permitting the agent to set up business in the owner's unit or on the common property. The fallacy in the Plaintiff's argument is to equate the owner's piece of business referred to the agent, with the agent's business overall, and then attribute that business to the owner. All that the agent, if a true agent, is doing on behalf of the owner is to sell that owner's lot.

20. The Plaintiff points to a number of advantages for the building from the Plaintiff's more expansive view of its exclusivity clause. However, those advantages are balanced by some severe disadvantages; for example in forcing owners to employ no agent, if the Plaintiff were unable to perform, or performed inadequately or at exorbitant cost. But in any event those advantages need not depend upon extending the constraint beyond its more reasonable ambit. That ambit still gives the Caretaker/Manager the advantage of exclusivity in being alone permanently on the premises conducting the relevant businesses and totally familiar with the building; this confers major convenience in attracting clients. If the Plaintiff thereby attracts the bulk of the business, those claimed commercial advantages for the building would follow. If it does not attract the bulk of the business it is because owners clearly value competing services more highly than having those advantages, or having them in full measure.

21. Finally, it is important to note that the Management Agreement will terminate after ten years unless extended by the Caretaker for up to a further fifteen years. If by-law 4 were to have the restrictive interpretation pressed by the Plaintiff, one would have the absurdity that the very mechanism for providing the sales service would no longer be available once the Agreement terminated unless the Caretaker chose to make it available. Yet the constraint would still preclude the use of outside services in the absence of consent. Moreover those services are not just selling, but also a wide range of other services, such as letting. And as I have said there are no price terms laid down in the Management Agreement for their provision. All these factors reinforce the gross unreasonableness and intrusiveness of the exclusivity contended for by the Plaintiff and the absurdity of any interpretation which purported to impose such exclusivity. There is also much to be said for the view that such an all-encompassing selling exclusivity, with no requirement for availability and reasonable terms from the monopolist selling agent, if it did apply, would so constrain the selling of units as to enliven the statutory preclusion in s 49 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW). It provides, relevantly, that ``No by- law is capable of operating to prohibit or restrict... a transfer, lease, mortgage or other dealing relating to a lot''. When the exercise or enjoyment of that right of sale is constrained to such a degree, it may amount to a restriction on transfer, though that will depend on the onerousness of the exclusivity in the overall context of no reciprocal obligation on the Caretaker/Manager. An interpretation which avoids that result and that of an unreasonable restraint of trade is open and clearly should be adopted as the more natural.

Conclusion and orders

22. The separate question should be answered ``No''. It follows that the Plaintiff fails altogether in accordance with the agreed result.

23. I order that the Plaintiff's summons be dismissed in each case.

24. Costs should follow the event and accordingly the Plaintiff should pay each of the three Defendants' costs in each action. This is subject in the case of the Third Defendant in each matter providing evidence to the Plaintiff in the first instance of their respective retainer, with leave to apply on the Plaintiff's part if there is to be any further challenge to that retainer.

Supreme Court of Queensland, Court of Appeal

Judgment delivered 3 August 2001

Community schemes — By-laws of body corporate — Exclusive use of common property — Disputes — Power of adjudicator to make order to resolve dispute — Whether power of adjudicator to make order removed by sec 231 of the Body Corporate and Community Schemes Act 1997 — Whether adjudicator asked to resolve question about title to land — Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997, sec 231, sec 233.

The dispute concerns a two-storey building consisting of eight flats, known as Welsby Place. The building was purchased by a developer, Steincorp Pty Ltd, which divided the property into eight strata-titled units. Four of the units were sold and the four remaining units were transferred to Mrs Steinfort (``Steinfort''). Steinfort made certain representations to the purchasers regarding exclusive use of courtyards and car-parking spaces. Each of the owners later approached Steinfort to have the exclusive-use problem resolved by a meeting of the body corporate.

Steinfort called the first Annual General Meeting on 16 October 1998 where the exclusive-use motion was to be presented. Steinfort would not consent to the motion and it was defeated. After the meeting, an application to resolve a dispute was lodged with the Commissioner for Body Corporate and Community Management (``the Commissioner''). The Commissioner, in dismissing the application, suggested that a new community- management statement be prepared and submitted again to a general meeting of the body corporate but that the motion covering the exclusive use of courtyards and car spaces should be separate from any motion dealing with excising any part of the common property.

On 4 June 1999, an extraordinary general meeting of the body corporate was held. Motion 3 related to the recording of a new community-management statement granting exclusive use of four existing courtyards to units 1, 2, 3 and 4. Motion 4 related to the recording of a new community-management statement granting exclusive use of four existing garages and four newly-surveyed car spaces. Steinfort endeavoured to have the meeting cancelled and voted against all motions. A further application to resolve a dispute was lodged with the Commissioner. This application was withdrawn due to a deficiency in the by-laws contained in the new community-management statement in that it did not include an exclusive-use by-law.

A further extraordinary general meeting was called on 12 August 1999 where a motion was again put to adopt new by-laws to grant exclusive use of the courtyards and car spaces. Steinfort again voted against and defeated the motion. The owners of units 1, 2 and 7 (``the respondents'') again applied to the Commissioner to resolve a dispute. On 25 November 1999, the Commissioner invited all owners to make written submissions on the matters raised in the application.

On 30 November 1999, Independent Finance Group Pty Ltd (``the applicant'') purchased Lot 6 from the mortgagors of Steinfort. The mortgagors had served Notices of Exercise of Power of Sale on Steinfort and had taken possession of the units (including Lot 6) on 19 July 1999. The applicant submitted to the Commissioner that the motion to record a new community-management statement must be passed without dissent, and that Steinfort's dissent was recorded and constituted a valid defeat of the motion.

Adjudicator's decision

On 6 July 2000, the adjudicator ordered that the exclusive-use motion from the 12 August 1999 meeting was deemed to have been passed without dissent. He further ordered that its consent be recorded on the new community-management statement, and that the statement be lodged for recording by the Registrar of Titles.

Appeal to the District Court

The applicants appealed to the District Court contending that the adjudicator acted beyond power in that his decision resolved a question of title to land in that to grant exclusive use of an area to a unit holder was to grant a lease which is an interest in land. His Honour held that the adjudicator's decision merely meant that the motion was deemed to have been passed without dissent.

Issues

The applicants appealed to the Court of Appeal on the following grounds:

1. The adjudicator did not make a decision which came within the ambit of sec 223(1) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (``the BCCM Act'').

2. The decision resolved a question about title to land and therefore was beyond the power of the adjudicator pursuant to sec 231 of the BCCM Act.

Held: application for leave to appeal granted, appeal dismissed with costs.

Whether adjudicator had jurisdiction under sec 223 of the BCCM Act?

Per Thomas JA

1. The dispute concerning the exclusive-use by-laws was a dispute to which sec 223(1) of the BCCM Act applied as it ``concerned the exercise of rights or powers under the Act, namely the exercise of the powers of the body corporate and its members to amend the community-management statement and in particular to allocate the exclusive use of areas of the common property to particular lot numbers."

Per Atkinson J

2. ``The powers of the adjudicator under sec 223(3)(u) arise where the adjudicator is satisfied that the resolution was not passed without dissent because the opposition was unreasonable in the circumstances. Prima facie, the decision was within the power given to the adjudicator pursuant to sec 223(1) and 223(3)(u) of the BCCM Act."

Resolution of question of title to land

Per Thomas JA

3. The District Court judge's decision was to give effect to the exclusive-use motion. ``As such the decision partakes more of managerial intervention than it does of the determination of a legal question concerning title to land. The adjudicator's order was a necessary link in causing property rights to be affected, but neither he nor his order resolved a question about title to land."

Per Atkinson J

4. ``An exclusive-use by-law is not a common-law interest in land but rather a statutory right. The statutory right is created under Part 5, div 2, of the BCCM Act which provides for the meaning, requirements, identification of the subject matter and regulation of exclusive- use by-laws."

5. The language of the BCCM Act supports the respondent's contention that the rights under an exclusive-use by-law do not constitute a lease. ``The exclusive-use by-law does not take effect by way of a grant or demise, it is not for a term, it does not create a reversion, it is not assignable as a separate proprietary interest, it is not subject to forfeiture, it is not capable of surrender and there is no rent reserved."

6. A registered community-management statement takes effect as a ``statutory contract between the body corporate, each member of the body corporate, each registered proprietor and each occupier of a lot or common property. While it affects rights inter partes, it cannot create a registered interest in the land."

Before: McMurdo P, Thomas JA and Atkinson J.

Judgment, in full, below

McMurdo P: I have read both the reasons for judgment of Atkinson J in which the relevant facts and issues are set out and those of Thomas JA.

2. It is unnecessary to decide here whether s 184 Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (``BCCM Act") requires disputes of the type listed in s 183 BCCM Act to be determined under Ch 6 (ss 182-249) of that Act, giving the adjudicator exclusive jurisdiction. My preliminary view is that it would be surprising if, in the absence of the clearest words, the inherent jurisdiction of the Supreme Court was diminished by Ch 6, although I agree with Thomas JA that the court would generally be reluctant to grant relief restraining a party from exercising statutory rights before the appropriate specialised statutory tribunal.

3. I otherwise agree with Atkinson J's reasons for concluding that s 118(3) District Court Act 1967 provides for an appeal by leave to the Court of Appeal from a judgment of a District Court judge determining an appeal from the decision of an adjudicator under s 184(2)(b) BCCM Act. I wish only to add the following comments.

[140204]

4. The respondents contend, inter alia, that an appeal from the District Court to the Court of Appeal by way of s 118(3) District Court Act 1967 is excluded by s 184(2) which provides that:

``The only remedy for the dispute is an order of—

...

(b) a District Court on appeal from an adjudicator on a question of law''

(my emphasis);

an order of the Court of Appeal cannot be an order of a District Court and so there can be no appeal by leave to the Court of Appeal from the District Court.

5. Rule 766(1) UCPR provides:

``The Court of Appeal—

(a) has all the powers and duties of the court that made the decision appealed from;''.

If leave to appeal were to be given in a case such as this and the Court of Appeal dismisses the appeal, the order of the District Court will stand; if the Court of Appeal allows the appeal it will vacate the District Court order and substitute or vary it. An appeal to the Court of Appeal from the District Court does not therefore negate the requirement in s 184(2) that the only remedy for the dispute is an order of a District Court. For these reasons, as well as for the reasons given by Atkinson J, the respondents have failed to demonstrate that a party who is dissatisfied with a judgment of a District Court on appeal from an adjudicator under s 184(2) BCCM Act has no right to apply for leave to appeal under s 118(3) District Court Act 1967.

6. I also agree with Atkinson J's reasons for concluding that the adjudicator had jurisdiction under s 223(3)(u) BCCM Act to determine the application as to whether the dissent to the motion considered by the extraordinary general meeting of the body corporate of Welsby Place on 12 August 1999 was in the circumstances unreasonable, even though the motion involved the approval of a community management statement which granted exclusive use rights and despite s 231 which prohibits the adjudicator from resolving a question about title to land.

7. The Commissioner for Body Corporate and Community Management, through the body corporate of Welsby Place, gave the owners of all units the opportunity to make submissions as to the respondent's application for an adjudicator to resolve the dispute under Ch 6 BCCM Act. Only the applicant, Independent Finance Group Ltd (``IFG''), the owner of Unit 6, made submissions opposing the application and supporting the stance taken by Mrs Steinfort at the extraordinary general meeting on 12 August 1999. Although the adjudicator wrongly assumed IFG was not the owner of Unit 6, he nevertheless considered its submissions because, again wrongly, he assumed that Mrs Steinfort had instructed IFG's solicitors on her own behalf. These errors did not affect the adjudicator's reasoning which considered only whether Mrs Steinfort's opposition to the motion at the extraordinary general meeting was unreasonable.

8. On appeal to the District Court, his Honour wrongly considered that Mrs Steinfort was a director of IFG, the appellant before him. But the sole argument considered by his Honour was whether the adjudicator acted beyond his power in resolving a question about exclusive use of areas in the light of s 231 BCCM Act which provides that the adjudicator ``... does not have power to resolve a question about title to land''.

9. The applicant IFG did not put forward any argument before the adjudicator or the learned District Court judge to suggest that its interests differed from those of Mrs Steinfort, or that its interests were affected by its status as subsequent purchaser.

10. The errors made by the adjudicator and by the learned District Court judge were irrelevant to the issues they were each asked to consider and did not render the decisions of either other than ``just and equitable''.[1]

11. Having had one appeal already which was limited to matters of law, I agree with Thomas JA that the applicant should not now be permitted to raise for the first time a claim that the learned District Court judge ``erred in not appreciating the position of the appellant as a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of any exclusive use provisions in relation to the courtyards attached to the ground floor units, a full and proper search of the title having been made prior to completion''.

[140205]

12. This application raises matters of some importance as to the interpretation of provisions of the BCCM Act and leave to appeal should be granted although the appeal should, in my view, be dismissed. I agree with the orders proposed by Thomas JA and Atkinson J.

Thomas JA: The applicant (``IFG'') seeks leave to appeal against a decision of the District Court. IFG is presently the owner of Lot 6 which is a unit in a community titles scheme involving eight lots. The three respondents are individual owners of lots numbers 1, 2 and 7.

14. The circumstances surrounding this application are set out in the reasons of Atkinson J which I have had the advantage of reading.

15. The original proceedings in this matter were commenced by the respondents who were and are unit owners in an eight-unit community titles scheme. They sought to resolve a dispute involving other unit owners and brought the matter before an adjudicator under s 223(1) of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (the ``BCCM Act''). The legislation clearly contemplates the use of this form of alternative dispute resolution for a very wide range of the problems and disputes that may arise in the context of a community titles scheme. The order which the adjudicator made had the effect of validating a resolution granting exclusive use to the owners of particular lots of specified areas which had hitherto been common areas.

16. The principal contention of IFG is that the proceedings before the adjudicator, and in turn before a District Court judge on appeal, reveal a misunderstanding of the applicant's position. It is true that the adjudicator's reasons show that he did not understand that IFG was the owner of Unit 6. However no objection on that score seems to have been made to his Honour on appeal. Indeed his Honour recorded that the sole argument put to him by counsel for the appellant was ``that the adjudicator acted beyond power in that his decision resolved a question of title to land''. It would seem then that no objection as to any misunderstanding of the applicant's position was raised either in the notice of appeal or in argument.

17. The material presented to this court suggests that the adjudicator had regarded IFG's appearance to be on behalf of a Mrs Steinfort. The adjudicator noted that Mrs Steinfort remained registered as the owner of Lot 6. In point of fact IFG had purchased Unit 6 from Mrs Steinfort's mortgagees in possession on 30 November 1999. Mrs Steinfort remained the registered proprietor of that unit until August 2000, which was after commencement of IFG's appeal to the District Court. The learned District Court judge seems to have made a somewhat similar error in concluding that Mrs Steinfort was a director of the appellant. However for reasons which I shall develop, I do not regard these errors as of themselves justifying the grant of leave to appeal or the allowance of the appeal. Quite simply the appellant, both before the adjudicator and the learned District Court judge chose not to attach any particular relevance to its status as a person independent of Mrs Steinfort. Indeed its submissions asserted reliance upon her refusal to vote in favour of the amendments to the plan and upon the alleged lack of power of the adjudicator to make an order of the kind that was made.

18. The evidence suggests that Mrs Steinfort, who had owned a number of units in the scheme sold them to persons including the respondents with express or implied representations that the units had the exclusive use of particular courtyards and carparking spaces. That apparently was not the case in relation to the courtyards which were common property under the control of the body corporate. Moreover, settlements occurred without ensuring that conditions relating to exclusive use of the carparking spaces were fulfilled. At that time Mrs Steinfort also owned other units. It was considered that all difficulties could be best rectified by passing a resolution which would ascribe separate courtyards to each of the units instead of having such areas as common property and also to deal with the question of allocation of car parks to individual units. Accordingly instead of bringing legal proceedings, arrangements were made for the holding of a meeting and the passing of the necessary resolutions, to be followed by the lodging of a new community management statement which would give legal effect to the proposed changes.

19. Despite initial agreement to this course, Mrs Steinfort frustrated its achievement by a series of manoeuvres that might reasonably be regarded as obstructive tactics. On the third occasion when a body corporate meeting was called to achieve the desired solution, Mrs

Steinfort (and she alone) voted against the proposal. The proposal, described as motion number 2 at the meeting of 12 August 1999 would have granted exclusive use of the four existing courtyards to Units 1, 2, 3 and 4, and also would have designated exclusive use of existing garages and newly surveyed carparking spaces in respect of all eight units. Mrs Steinfort's change of heart was perceived by the respondents as unreasonable. They therefore initiated proceedings to have Mrs Steinfort's opposition held unreasonable and for an order giving effect to the motion as if it had been carried without dissent. Subject to the question whether such an order resolves ``a question about title'' and is therefore prohibited by s 231, s 223(3)(u) purports to give an adjudicator the power to provide such a solution.

20. At the time of the meeting Mrs Steinfort was the owner of Lots 3, 4 and 6. She had defaulted under mortgages over those lots, and there is evidence suggesting that the mortgagees had entered into possession. However neither she nor the mortgagees advised the body corporate of this before the meeting, as they were obliged to do by s 140 of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Standard Module) Regulation 1997. The purpose of that provision is to enable any new owner to give notice to the body corporate so that they may be placed on the roll and therefore be notified of meetings and entitled to vote. In turn, IFG expressly accepted and relied upon Mrs Steinfort's attendance at the meeting and her casting of a negative vote by reason of her right as owner. I do not think it can at this stage be permitted to depart from that position.

21. On 13 September 1999, the respondents filed their application with the commissioner for Body Corporate and Community Management (``the Commissioner''). This was the application which was in due course determined by the adjudicator after the Commissioner had taken the necessary procedural steps to ensure that other interested parties might present their submissions on the matter. On 1 December 1999 IFG purchased Lot 6 from the mortgagees in possession although, as earlier noted, no transfer was registered until the following August. IFG obviously received notice of the pending application, as on 13 December 1999 its solicitors (Broadbent Radich Sampson) sent written submissions on behalf of IFG to the commissioner which were in due course placed before the adjudicator. Paragraphs 1 to 9 of the submissions make comments about the various statements of fact contained in the respondent's application, accompanied by submissions that such matters do not fall within the meaning of ``dispute'' under s 182, and other similar legal arguments. The final three paragraphs of the submission are in the following terms:

> ``10. Mrs Steinfort's dissent was recorded and the motion regarding the exclusive use of courtyards and garages was validly defeated.
>
> 11. It is improper for the applicants to seek an order of the Commissioner to overrule a motion, which was defeated at general meeting pursuant to Section 55 of the Act.
>
> 12. In summary, this is a matter between a vendor and purchaser and should be dealt with through other legal avenues. It is not a matter within the ambit of Chapter 6.''

22. The submissions assert reliance upon Mrs Steinfort's dissent. There is not a hint of reliance upon the existence of third party rights differing from those of Mrs Steinfort. The essential submissions were that it was ``a vendor and purchaser matter'' and that it should be dealt with by ``other legal avenues''.

23. As noted above, a similar line was taken when IFG appealed to the District Court. On that occasion the sole argument of IFG's counsel was that the decision was beyond power because it resolved a question of title to land, and that s 231 expressly prohibits this.

24. Now, upon application for leave to appeal to this court, a new issue is sought to be introduced. Ground 6 of the notice of appeal alleges:

> ``The learned Senior Judge further erred in not appreciating the position of the appellant as a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of any exclusive use provisions in relation to the courtyards attached to the ground floor units, a full and proper search of the title having been made prior to completion.''

25. In my view it is now far too late to seek to litigate such an issue. It is raised against a background which shows that the sole director and shareholder of IFG is the wife of Mr Radich, who was at all material times the solicitor for Mrs Steinfort's mortgagees and who acted in the sale of Unit 6. The reasons of Atkinson J reveal that this rather complex conundrum has now been solved and completed to the extent that a new community management statement and accompanying exclusive use by-law has been signed, and lodged for inclusion on the Queensland Land Registry under the Land Title Act 1994 and the Land Act 1994.

26. I appreciate that an error of fact is disclosed in his Honour's statement that Mrs Steinfort was a director of IFG. But in the absence of the raising of issues such as those which are now sought to be raised it was not an error that falsifies the decision in any material way.

27. I can see no error in the conclusion of the learned District Court judge that the adjudicator's finding of unreasonableness against Mrs Steinfort was reasonably open and consider that no error of law had been shown.

28. The only issues that remain are whether the adjudicator has jurisdiction to make the orders in question, and whether the BCCM Act precludes any further appeal beyond that to the District Court under s 184 of that Act.

Jurisdiction under s 223 of the BCCM Act

29. Section 223 gives an adjudicator power to make ``an order that is just and equitable in the circumstances (including a declaratory order) to resolve a dispute, in the context of a community titles scheme, about... the exercise of rights or powers, or the performance of duties, under this Act or the community management statement''. Certain other general types of dispute are designated in s 223(1), but it is unnecessary to refer to these. In my view the dispute that arose concerned the exercise of rights or powers under the Act, namely the exercise of the powers of the body corporate and its members to amend the community management statement and in particular to allocate the exclusive use of areas of the common property to particular lot numbers. On the face of it, it was a dispute to which s 223(1) could apply.

30. Section 223(3), without limiting subsection 1, mentions many examples of orders that the adjudicator may make. Sub- paragraph (u) provides that the adjudicator may:

> ``if satisfied that a motion (other than a motion for reinstatement, termination or amalgamation) considered by a general meeting of the body corporate and requiring a resolution without dissent was not passed because of opposition that in the circumstances is unreasonable — make an order giving effect to the motion as proposed, or a variation of the motion as proposed; or''

31. Chapter 6 of the Act (ss 182-249) in which the provisions concerning the adjudicator's powers are contained, is concerned with dispute resolution. The primary object of the Act is declared to be ``to provide for flexible and contemporary communally based arrangements for the use of freehold land having regard to the secondary objects''. One of the primary objects is the operation and management of community titles schemes. The secondary objects include flexible administrative and management arrangements for community titles schemes, and ``to provide an efficient and effective dispute resolution process''. In this context it is not surprising to find a provision such as 223(3)(u) which permits a virtually direct managerial solution to defeat a certain type of unreasonable conduct that might otherwise frustrate an objective that could otherwise only be attained by a resolution without dissent. Such a power may seem surprising to those used to the independent management of companies, but there seems little doubt that the legislature has here deliberately established a mechanism for the resolution of community titles scheme disputes in this way. The difficulty of obtaining remedies such as specific performance in the context of disputes which required some action to be taken by the body corporate, and the sometimes unsatisfactory nature of legal remedies in such a context must have been apparent[2] . That is not to say that recourse may not be had to the courts or that legal remedies are unavailable. There remains of course a concurrent jurisdiction, and the ultimate power of the Supreme Court to restrain concurrent proceedings[3] , although experience suggests that the court is generally reluctant to grant injunctions to restrain a party from exercising rights in a tribunal entrusted with a particular task and possessed of a particular expertise[4] .

32. I have no doubt that this dispute fell within the ambit of s 223.

Question about title to land

33. The only possible jurisdictional answer to the adjudicator's power to resolve the dispute is in s 231. It states:

[140208]

[140208]

``The adjudicator does not have power to resolve a question about title to land.''

34. I think that the learned District Court judge's answer to this point was correct. Whether or not the new community management statement created a lease, it did so lawfully under the Act as an action of the body corporate, not the adjudicator. The body corporate had power to grant exclusive rights over common property if the resolution was unanimous. In the events that happened in this case, the body corporate's resolution could only be made unanimous by the decision of the adjudicator. Even so, his decision was ``to give effect to the motion''. As such the decision partakes more of managerial intervention than it does of the determination of a legal question concerning title to land. The adjudicator's order was a necessary link in causing property rights to be affected, but neither he nor his order resolved a question about title to land.

35. The point is however a fine one on which different minds might reach different conclusions. If my primary conclusion is incorrect, I would agree with the analysis presented by Atkinson J which concludes that in the circumstances of this particular case the adjudicator did not resolve the question of title to land in contravention of s 231 of the BCCM Act. On either view, his Honour was correct in dismissing the appeal.

Jurisdiction to appeal to this court

36. This involves the proper construction of s 184 of the BCCM Act and of s 118 of the District Court Act 1967. The applicant's submission is that s 184 of the BCCM Act has a privative effect, impliedly overruling the further appeal that s 118(3) of the District Court Act would otherwise permit from a decision in the District Court's appellate jurisdiction. In my view s 184 is distinguishable from the legislation considered in Stinson v The Pharmacy Board of Queensland[5] where a privative effect was accorded to a section of the Pharmacy Act 1976. I agree generally with the reasons which Atkinson J has given for concluding that a further appeal, by leave, remains open to this court under s 118(3) of the District Court Act.

Conclusions

37. The proper construction of ss 223 and 231 of the BCCM Act is a matter of sufficient importance to justify leave being granted, and I do not understand the respondents to have submitted otherwise. I would therefore grant leave. However the appeal should be dismissed because the adjudicator had jurisdiction to make the necessary order and did not err in law. Although it is unnecessary for the disposition of either of the appeals, I am prepared to say that it was reasonably open to him to decide as he did. In turn the learned District Court judge was correct in dismissing the appeal. To the extent to which the applicant has attempted to introduce additional issues not raised by below, such issues should not be entertained.

Order

38. Application for leave to appeal granted. Appeal dismissed with costs, including cost of the application for leave to appeal, to be assessed.

Atkinson J: This is an application pursuant to s 118(3) of the District Court Act 1967 for leave to appeal a judgment of the District Court given on 7 March 2001 on appeal from an order made by the adjudicator under s 223 of the Body Corporate and Community Management Act 1997 (``BCCM Act''). The applicant has also sought an extension of time pursuant to r 748 of the Uniform Civil Procedure Rules in which to lodge its Notice of Appeal. The parties were content to have the application treated as the appeal, if leave were granted.

Factual background

40. The factual background to the matter is found in the details given of the dispute between the parties to the adjudicator. The dispute concerns a block of units, being lots 1 to 8 of BUP 106287, known as Welsby Place at 41 Welsby Street, New Farm. Welsby Place is a two-storey building consisting of eight flats. It was purchased by a developer, Steincorp Pty Ltd, which divided the property into eight strata titled units. Fences were built which fenced off courtyards to the ground floor units 1, 2 and 3. Unit 4 already had a covered verandah constructed. Four of the units were sold and the four remaining units were transferred from Steincorp Pty Ltd to Deidre Steinfort. Certain representations were made by Mrs Steinfort to the purchasers about exclusive use of courtyards and car parking spaces. In fact, the contracts for sale of units 1 and 2 included a condition specifying exclusive use of a garage but not the courtyards. The contract for the sale of unit 3 included a condition specifying exclusive use of an allocated parking space. Each of the owners approached Mrs Steinfort to have the exclusive use problem resolved by a meeting of the body corporate to provide for exclusive use of the courtyards and car parking spaces.

41. Mrs Steinfort called the first Annual General Meeting on 16 October 1998 at which a motion was to be presented to grant the exclusive use areas. However, the resolution which Mrs Steinfort prepared and presented to the meeting incorporated approval for the subdivision of an area of land representing 20 percent of the total area for $1 consideration to be transferred to Mrs Steinfort's son, Alexander Steinfort. The piece of land proposed for subdivision was valued at approximately $100,000. Mrs Steinfort said that she would not consent to the exclusive use areas unless all owners of the units agreed to the subdivision. The motion was defeated.

42. After the meeting on 16 October 1998, an application to resolve a dispute was lodged with the Commissioner for Body Corporate and Community Management (``the Commissioner''). The Commissioner dismissed the application pointing out that the unit owners seeking the order to require the Body Corporate managers to prepare and lodge a new community management statement granting certain exclusive use areas, had themselves voted against the motion. The Commissioner suggested that a new community management statement be prepared and submitted again to a general meeting of the body corporate but that the motion covering the exclusive use of courtyards and garages should be separate from any motion dealing with excising any part of the common property.

43. On 28 April 1999, a plan showing the proposed exclusive use of common property was prepared by a licensed surveyor. An extraordinary general meeting of the body corporate was held on 4 June 1999. Motion 3 related to the recording of a new community management statement granting exclusive use of four existing courtyards to units 1, 2 3 and 4. Motion 4 related to the recording of a new community management statement granting exclusive use of four existing garages and four newly surveyed car parking spaces. The meeting was attended by Mytan Pty Ltd (the owner of lot 1), Catherine Arndt (the owner of lot 2), Greg Fee (the owner of lot 7) and Mrs Steinfort (the owner of lots 3, 4 and 6). Mrs Steinfort was said to be unfinancial and consequently could not vote on ordinary or special resolutions. She endeavoured to have the meeting cancelled and voted against all motions. Subsequently a further application to resolve a dispute was lodged with the Commissioner. However, due to a deficiency in the by-laws contained in the new community management statement submitted to the meeting, in that it did not include an exclusive use by-law, the application was withdrawn.

44. Meanwhile on 10 June 1999, the mortgagees of lot 4 (N.F. Casey and J.M. Close) and lot 6 (G.S. and L. White and N.D. and J.E. Fairlie) served Form 7, Notices of Exercise of Power of Sale, on Mrs Steinfort, who was the mortgagor, pursuant to the mortgages over those properties. The solicitor acting for the mortgagees was Nicholas Radich. On 19 July 1999, the mortgagees took possession of units 3, 4 and 6.[6] As such, they were considered ``owners'' of those lots for the purposes of the BCCM Act,[7] wherein the ``owner'' of a lot included in a community titles scheme is defined to mean:

> ``the person who is, or is entitled to be, the registered owner of the lot, and includes—
>
> (a) a mortgagee in possession of the lot; and
> (b) if, under the Land Title Act 1994, 2 or more persons are the registered owners, or are entitled to be the registered owners, of the lot — each of the persons.''

45. A further extraordinary general meeting was called for 12 August 1999. The unit owners in attendance were Karen Ross from Mytan Pty Ltd (unit 1), Ralph Kooymans as proxy for Mr Fee (unit 7) and Mrs Steinfort. Ms Ross also held a proxy for Ms Arndt (unit 2). It does not appear from the record whether notice was given to the mortgagees in possession. A motion (Motion 2) was put that related to the recording of the new community management statement to adopt new by-laws which included an exclusive use by - law to grant exclusive use of the four existing courtyards to units 1, 2 3 and 4 and to grant exclusive use of four existing garages and four newly surveyed car parking spaces. Votes in favour of the resolution were recorded by the three unit owners voting at the meeting apart from Mrs Steinfort who voted against the motion.

46. On 30 August 1999, Mr Kooymans sent a memorandum to Nicholas Radich saying:

> ``With regard to the notice of the meeting I sent to you on Friday 27 August, 1999 it will be necessary for the mortgage (sic) to advise the body corporate of the fact that he has entered into possession of the units as per Section 140 of the (Standard Module) regulations 1997.
>
> The definition of an owner includes a mortgagee in possession as set out in Schedule 4 of the Regulations.
>
> Also Section 49 of the Regulations identifies a `voter' as a mortgagee in possession who claims the right to vote by written notice to the secretary.
>
> Could you please discuss these issues with your client and forward the necessary notices.
>
> The notices can be sent to the secretary C/- RF Kooymans & Co, PO Box 1142, Milton Centre, Queensland, 4064 or to my fax number, 07 3368 2460."

Section 140 of the Body Corporate and Community Management (Standard Module) Regulation 1997 (the ``Standard Module Regulation") provides that a new owner must give notice to the body corporate so that they can be placed on the roll and therefore be notified of meetings and be entitled to vote.

47. On 1 September 1999, Broadbent Radich Lawyers replied to that memorandum with two letters. The first informed Mr Kooymans, as secretary of Welsby Place, that Mrs Steinfort had committed several defaults and that their clients had taken possession of units 3, 4 and 6 and gave notice that, as their clients were mortgagees in possession, they were intending to enforce their mortgages and assert all the rights which arose thereby pursuant to the BCCM Act. The second letter to the Body Corporate Manager advised that the properties were going to auction on 18 September 1999 and requested Disclosure Statements for each of units 3, 4 and 6.

48. On 13 September 1999, Ms Arndt, Mr Fee and Mytan Pty Ltd, as owners of units 1, 2 and 7, made an application to the Commissioner to resolve a dispute. They named Mrs Steinfort of unit 6 as the other party to the dispute. The owners of units 1, 2 and 7 sought an order requiring the body corporate manager to prepare and lodge a new community management statement and a plan of survey of exclusive use of common courtyards, garages, and parking spaces to allocate them to the owners of the units. They set out the history which has already been referred to in these reasons. In their application the three unit owners said:

> ``It is felt that Mrs Steinfort continues to act in a disruptive manner and that she acted unreasonably in withholding her consent to the granting of exclusive use of the courtyards, garages and car parking spaces, particularly where she has acted in a manner when the units were being purchased that indicated the unit has exclusive use of the courtyards and the contract in the case of units 1 and 2 included the exclusive use of garages and in the case of the contract for unit 7, included the exclusive use of a car parking space."

49. On 15 September 1999, Broadbent Radich Lawyers wrote to the Body Corporate Manager care of Mr Kooymans, in relation to the body corporate meeting scheduled for Friday, 17 September 1999. Broadbent Radich Lawyers advised that one of the mortgagees refused to become involved in the issues to be raised at the meeting and asked for the meeting to be adjourned for at least a week to see what happened following the auctioning of the properties. They advised that it was most unlikely that Mrs Steinfort would, prior to the auction, be able to re-finance the loans and accordingly it was unlikely that they would have to deal with her again.

50. On 16 September 1999, Broadbent Radich Lawyers wrote to the Body Corporate Manager with regard to the meeting to be held on the following day, setting out the attitudes for each of the mortgagees for lots 3, 4 and 6 to the motions. Mr and Mrs White, who were two of the mortgagees of unit 6 had instructed Broadbent Radich Lawyers to act as their proxy and instructed them to vote against the new community statement because by-law 18 would grant certain exclusive use of areas, being courtyards, verandahs, garages and car parking bays as set out in that by-law. A handwritten note showed their strenuous objection to this proposal. The evidence does not disclose whether a meeting was held on 17 September 1999.

51. On 11 October 1999, the mortgagees of lot 4, Ms Casey and Ms Close, agreed to sell that lot to another of Mrs Steinfort's sons, Brendan Steinfort. On 10 November 1999, that transfer was registered. Mr Steinfort remains the registered owner.

52. On 25 November 1999, the Commissioner sent a copy of the application to resolve the dispute to the secretary of the body corporate. The Commissioner invited all owners to make written submissions on the matters raised in the application. The notice informed the secretary that she was required to ensure that all owners received a copy of the notice and the application. The submissions were required to reach the office of the Commissioner by 17 December 1999.

53. On 30 November 1999, the applicant, Independent Finance Group Pty Ltd as purchaser, entered into a mortgage with Mr and Mrs Fairlie and Mr and Mrs White as mortgagees of lot 6. On 1 December 1999, Broadbent Radich Sampson Lawyers[8] sent a letter to Mrs Steinfort saying that it enclosed a notice of completion of sale with regard to lot 6. The notice of completion of sale referring, presumably by mistake, to lot 4, says the lot was sold by private contract to Independent Finance Group Pty Ltd. Ms Sternbeck, a paralegal at Broadbent Radich Sampson Lawyers, says that the sale to Independent Finance Group was settled on that day.

54. On 1 December 1999, Independent Finance Group Pty Ltd instructed Broadbent Radich Sampson Lawyers to act on its behalf in lodging a submission to the application lodged with the Commissioner.

55. On 8 December 1999, Mr and Mrs White executed a transfer of lot 6 to Independent Finance Group Pty Ltd. On 7 February 2000, a transfer was executed by Mr and Mrs Fairlie. The transfer of lot 6 from Mrs Steinfort to Independent Finance Group Pty Ltd was not lodged for registration until 28 August 2000. However the entitlement to registration arose upon settlement on 1 December 1999. The applicant was therefore entitled to be considered as the owner of the lot pursuant to the definition in schedule 4 of the BCCM Act.

56. On 13 December 1999, Broadbent Radich Sampson Lawyers sent a letter to the Commissioner enclosing the submission by the applicant. The covering letter said that the lawyers acted for Independent Finance Group Pty Ltd, the owners of Lot 6 BUP 106287, and enclosed its submission opposing the application. They submitted that pursuant to s 55 of the BCCM Act, a resolution to record a new community management statement must be passed without dissent unless the resolution changed a by-law which was not an exclusive use by-law. Mrs Steinfort's dissent was recorded and therefore the motion regarding the exclusive use of the courtyards and garages was validly defeated. They further submitted that the argument was between vendor and purchaser and was therefore not within the ambit of the dispute resolution procedures of the BCCM Act.

The adjudicator's decision

57. On 6 July 2000, the adjudicator made the following orders under part 10 of Ch 6 of the BCCM Act:

> ``I hereby order that motion 2 considered by the Body Corporate at the extraordinary general meeting held on 12 August 1999 shall be deemed to have been carried by resolution without dissent.

I further order that the Body Corporate shall, within one month of the date of this order, endorse its consent on the new community management statement.

I further order that the Body Corporate shall, within three months after the date on which its consent is endorsed on the new community management statement, lodge the new community management statement for recording by the Registrar of Titles."

58. Detailed reasons were given for these orders. After reciting the factual history the decision says:

``One submission was received from a firm of solicitors purporting to act on behalf of the owner of lot 6, Independent Finance Group Pty Ltd. The owner of lot 6 is in fact Deidre Una Steinfort, who has owned the lot since 12 June 1998. However, the body of the solicitors' submission refers to Mrs Steinfort, and I take it, therefore, that Mrs Steinfort did in fact instruct the solicitors to act on her behalf, even if they incorrectly stated the ownership of the lot."

The adjudicator was apparently unaware that mortgagees had been in possession of lot 6 since 19 July 1999 and that the sale of the lot to Independent Finance Group Pty Ltd had been settled on 1 December 1999. He incorrectly refused to accept that the applicant's solicitors acted on the behalf of Independent Finance Group Pty Ltd and not on behalf of Mrs Steinfort. The adjudicator therefore failed to take account of the interests of Independent Finance Group Pty Ltd.

[140212]

59. The reasons of the adjudicator also say that the exclusive use areas depicted on the plan had not been registered in the Titles Office and were therefore of no force or effect. The decision continued:

``It is for this reason, of course, that the applicants have been attempting to remedy the situation by taking the steps outlined in the application."

60. The adjudicator went on to consider whether or not to make an order under s 223 of the BCCM Act. Section 223(1) provides that:

``223(1) An adjudicator to whom the application for an order of an adjudicator is referred may make an order that is just and equitable in the circumstances (including a declaratory order) to resolve a dispute, in the context of a community titles scheme, about—

(a) claimed or anticipated contravention of this Act or the community management statement; or
(b) the exercise of rights or powers, or the performance of duties, under this Act or the community management statement; or
(c) a claimed or anticipated contravention of the terms of, or the termination of, or the exercise of rights or powers under the terms of, or the performance of duties under the terms of—

(i) the engagement of a person as a body corporate manager or service contractor for a community titles scheme; or
(ii) the authorisation of a person as a letting agent for a community titles scheme."

Subsection 223(3)(u) provides that without limiting subsections (1) and (2), the adjudicator may:

``if satisfied that a motion (other than a motion for reinstatement, termination or amalgamation) considered by a general meeting of the body corporate and requiring a resolution without dissent was not passed because of opposition that in the circumstances is unreasonable — make an order giving effect to the motion so proposed, or a variation of the motion as proposed."

61. In determining whether or not Mrs Steinfort's opposition to the motion was unreasonable, the Commissioner considered that Broadbent Radich Sampson Lawyers, whom he wrongly thought were Mrs Steinfort's solicitors, did not deny on her behalf the allegations in the application as to the representations made by her to two of the applicants in respect of the courtyards and the car parking spaces and garages. He considered whether or not the motion would be of benefit to Mrs Steinfort and her previous voting behaviour. He considered in the circumstances that her opposition to the motion at the extraordinary general meeting held on 12 August 1999 was unreasonable. He rejected the applicant's submissions that the dispute was not within the ambit of the dispute resolution procedures of the BCCM Act.

62. Broadbent Radich Sampson Lawyers received notice of this decision on 10 July 2000. On 24 July 2000, a new community management statement was signed. It included by-law 18 which provided as follows:

> ``Exclusive Use Areas
>
> The proprietors of Lots identified in Schedule E, with their licencees, invitees and occupiers, are entitled to the exclusive use areas allocated therein and as identified on the sketch plans marked `A' and `B' attached hereto for the purposes of a courtyard or verandah as applicable and car parking only.
>
> The proprietor gaining exclusive use under this by-law shall be responsible for this property as if it were Part of his or her Lot.''

63. On 21 July 2000, the body corporate manager informed Broadbent Radich Sampson Lawyers that there would be a general meeting to ratify the endorsement of the community management statement on 27 September 2000. On 11 August 2000, a request for lodgement of the new community management statement was executed and this was lodged on 17 August 2000 for inclusion on the Queensland Land

[140213]

Registry under the Land Title Act 1994 and the Land Act 1994.

Appeal to the District Court

64. On 17 August 2000, Independent Finance Group Pty Ltd filed a notice of appeal in the District Court under s 237 of the BCCM Act. Subsection 237(2) of the BCCM Act provides that such appeals are restricted to questions of law only.

65. On 7 March 2001, after a hearing on 27 February, 2001, Senior Judge Skoien of the District Court dismissed the appeal from the adjudicator. In the course of his reasons for decision, His Honour referred to Mrs Steinfort as being a director of the developer who was the appellant before him. The appellant was in fact Independent Finance Group Pty Ltd, of which Mrs Steinfort is not a director or shareholder.

66. His Honour said that the sole argument put to him was that the adjudicator acted beyond power in that his decision resolved a question of title to land in that to grant exclusive use of an area to a unit holder was to grant a lease which is an interest in land. Section 231 of the BCCM Act provides that:

> ``The adjudicator does not have power to resolve a question about title to land.''

His Honour held that to grant the right to exclusive possession of land creates a lease. He did not determine whether or not a lease had been created in this instance because he was concerned with what had been decided by the adjudicator which was to resolve a dispute about the conduct of the meeting of the body corporate. His Honour concluded that the adjudicator's decision merely meant that the motion was deemed to be passed without dissent. If the motion, by adopting a new community management statement, created a lease it did so lawfully under the BCCM Act as an action of the body corporate, not the adjudicator.

Application for Leave to Appeal to the Court of Appeal

67. The applicant submitted that there are three reasons that leave to appeal from that decision should be granted. The first is that as the adjudicator and the judge failed to understand who the parties were before them, the decision was not ``just and equitable'' as it was required to be by s 223(1) of the BCCM Act. Secondly, the adjudicator did not make a decision which came within the ambit of s 223(1). Thirdly, the decision resolved a question about title to land and therefore was beyond the power of the adjudicator pursuant to s 231 of the BCCM Act.

68. The respondents opposed the grant of leave on the ground that there was no capacity to appeal to this court from the decision of the District Court. In any event, they opposed leave being granted on the grounds of appeal that were the first ground argued in this court (or grounds 5, 6 and 7 of the grounds of appeal in the notice of appeal). Further they submitted that any appeal should be dismissed.

69. It is convenient to consider whether or not this court has jurisdiction to hear an appeal before considering whether or not leave to appeal should be granted.

Jurisdiction

70. The respondents submit that the applicant cannot appeal to the Court of Appeal from a decision of the adjudicator made under the BCCM Act. In this, they rely on s 184 of the BCCM Act which relevantly provides:

``Exclusivity of dispute resolution provisions

184(1) Subsection (2) applies to a dispute if an adjudicator may, under this chapter, make an order to resolve it.

(2) The only remedy for the dispute is an order of—

(a) an adjudicator; or
(b) a District Court on appeal from an adjudicator on a question of law."

71. Section 5(h) of the BCCM Act provides that one of the objects of the Act is ``to provide an efficient and effective dispute resolution process". This is done by ensuring that disputes must go to the adjudicator if there is a dispute which is within his or her jurisdiction. This reduces the possibility of sterile jurisdictional questions of the type recently referred to by Young J in Mulwala & District Services Club Ltd v The Owners — Strata Plan 37724.[9] The adjudicator has exclusive jurisdiction to deal with disputes under Chapter 6.[10]

72. There is then a statutory right of appeal from that decision to the District Court. No right of appeal is given by the BCCM Act to the Court of Appeal, but that is not necessary. In such a case, appeals from a District Court to the Court of Appeal are governed by s 118 of the District Court Act 1967 which provides:

[140214]

``118(1) This section—

(a) does not apply to an appeal from a judgment of the District Court in the exercise of its criminal jurisdiction under part 4;[11] but
(b) does apply to an appeal from other judgments of the District Court in the exercise of its criminal jurisdiction, including on an appeal brought before the court under the Justices Act 1886, section 222.[12]

(2) A party who is dissatisfied with a final judgment of the District Court in its original jurisdiction may appeal to the Court of Appeal if the judgment—

(a) is given—

(i) for an amount equal to or more than the Magistrates Courts jurisdictional limit; or
(ii) in relation to a matter at issue with a value equal to or more than the Magistrates Courts jurisdictional limited; or

(b) involves directly or indirectly any claim, demand or question in relation to any property or right with a value equal to or more than the Magistrates Courts jurisdictional limit.

(3) A party who is dissatisfied with any other judgment of a District Court, whether in the court's original or appellate jurisdiction, may appeal to the Court of Appeal with the leave of that court.

(4) In deciding whether there is a right of appeal under this section, the Court of Appeal may—

(a) inform itself in any way it considers appropriate, including by reference to the appeal record; and
(b) decide the question summarily without hearing evidence.

(5) if it reasonably arguable that a right of appeal under this section exists, the Court of Appeal may treat that circumstance as a ground for granting leave to appeal.

(6) If the Court of Appeal grants leave under subsection (3), it may grant it on the conditions it considers appropriate.

(7) A single judge of the Court of Appeal may—

(a) grant (with or without condition) or refuse leave mentioned in subsection (3); or
(b) make the decision mentioned in subsection (4)(b).

(8) The Supreme Court Act 1995, section 254,[13] does not apply to an order of a single judge of the Court of Appeal under this section.

(9) An appeal from a District Court in its original jurisdiction is by way of rehearing.

(10) In this section—

``final judgment", of a District Court, includes a judgment that grants leave to enter a judgment mentioned in subsection (2).
``Magistrates Courts jurisdictional limit" means the amount of the jurisdictional limit of Magistrates Courts for personal actions stated in the Magistrates Courts Act 1921, section 4(a)."[14]

73. The respondents submit that a right to appeal to the Court of Appeal would contradict the express terms of the BCCM Act. It is argued that the specific provision of s 184(2) of the BCMM Act excludes the general provision of s 118(3) of the District Court Act, as s 184(2) provides that the only remedy for a dispute is an order of an adjudicator or a District Court on appeal from an adjudicator on a question of law.

74. However, s 184 of the BCCM Act does not explicitly exclude s 118 of the District Court Act. The respondent relied upon the decision of the Full Court in Nickelseekers Limited v Vance,[15] but the decision is not helpful in resolving this question since counsel in that case disclaimed reliance on the section of the Act which was the equivalent of s 118(3).[16] In Stinson v The Pharmacy Board of Queensland,[17] the Court of Appeal referred extensively to authority in holding that a section of the Pharmacy Act 1976 which provided that an appeal from the Pharmacy Board could be made to a Judge of the District Court whose decision would be final, precluded an appeal to the Court of Appeal. Such a provision excludes the ordinary incidents of the procedure of the District Court which include ``any general right of appeal from its decisions".[18]

[140215]

75. In this case, however, s 184 is concerned with the manner in which matters in dispute under part 6 of the BCCM Act are resolved. If the matter is within the jurisdiction of the adjudicator, then the only remedy is to apply to the adjudicator for an order. Section 184(2)(b) of the BCCM Act then gives a right of appeal from the arbitrator's order to the District Court. Section 118(3) of the District Court Act then provides for an appeal with leave to the Court of Appeal.

Identity of parties

76. As to the first ground of appeal, the submission by the applicant to the adjudicator disclosed that it was the owner of lot 6 and it was submitted that the District Court judge was told the same from the bar table. Neither the adjudicator nor the judge on appeal, however, understood that Mrs Steinfort, whose behaviour was under consideration, had no apparent connection with the applicant. It is true that the applicant's interests were not separately considered by the adjudicator but the applicant did not present any argument to distinguish its interests from that of Mrs Steinfort until its submissions in this Court. For the reasons given by McMurdo P and Thomas JA, the applicant should not be able to raise this argument for the first time in this Court. Furthermore the error of fact does not appear to have infected the decisions in any relevant way.

Did the adjudicator have jurisdiction under s 223 of the BCCM Act?

77. The second ground of appeal was that the adjudicator's decision did not come within his jurisdiction under s 223 of the BCCM Act. The applicant submitted that the adjudicator did not identify which, if any, of the subject areas, about which he had jurisdiction, he was considering. What is significant, however, is not whether he explicitly identified the subject area but rather whether he was considering a matter over which s 223(1) gave him jurisdiction. In this case, the adjudicator was considering the exercise of rights or powers under the BCCM Act or the community management statement. The original community management statement did not provide for a right to exclusive use to any part of the common area. The proposed by-law granting exclusive use of certain parts of the common area to individual lot owners therefore affected the exercise of rights under the community management statement.

78. The adjudicator is given further power under s 223(3). In this case, the relevant provision is s 223(3)(u) which gives the adjudicator specific power to make an order giving effect to a motion which is required to be passed without dissent, but was not.

79. The power of the adjudicator under s 223(3)(u) arises where the adjudicator is satisfied that the resolution was not passed without dissent because the opposition was unreasonable in the circumstances. Prima facie, the decision was within the power given to the adjudicator pursuant to s 223(1) and s 223(3)(u) of the BCCM Act. This ground of appeal would not be successful.

Resolution of a question of title to land

80. The third ground on which the applicant seeks leave to appeal is that the adjudicator's jurisdiction to make the decision he made was removed by s 231 of the BCCM Act which prohibits the adjudicator from resolving a question about title to land. The respondent concedes that this question is a question of law of some significance and warrants the grant of leave to appeal if the appeal is not otherwise incompetent. The applicant submits that the grant of exclusive use of common property affects the title to common property.

81. The respondents submit that the only resolutions to which s 223(3)(u) could apply are resolutions which are required to be passed without dissent and which are not excluded by the terms of s 223(3)(u). These are resolutions passed pursuant to s 39 which provides for the acquisition and incorporation into common property of land in fee simple contiguous to the scheme land or a lot included in the scheme, and s 55 requiring the body corporate to consent without dissent to the recording of a new community management statement if there is a change to the exclusive use by-laws. It was submitted that since it could be argued that both of those sections involved questions of title they would be equally excluded by s 231 and therefore s 223(3)(u) would be left with no operation. This would not be a result intended by the legislature.

82. It is true that s 223(3)(u) excludes certain motions required to be passed without dissent from its operation. These include motions for reinstatement[19] , termination[20] or amalgamation.[21] The only resolutions which are required to be passed by dissent in the BCCM Act itself are those found in s 39, s 55 and s

134. In addition, however, the Community Management Statement for Welsby Place, which was in effect at the relevant date provided that the relevant regulation module which applied to this scheme was the Standard Module Regulation. In the Standard Module Regulation, a number of provisions provide for resolutions that must be passed without dissent in order to exercise powers given by the BCCM Act. They include regs 111 and 117 which provide for the disposal of an interest in or the leasing of common property pursuant to s 116 and 119 of the BCCM Act; reg 102 which deals with the maximum amount of money that may be borrowed by the body corporate; reg 112 which deals with the grant of easements over common property pursuant to s 117 of the BCCM Act; and reg 116 which deals with acquisition of freehold land or entry into a lease of more than 3 years pursuant to s 118 of the BCCM Act.

83. Some of these sections relate to title to land; some do not. Section 116 of the BCCM Act, for example, deals with the disposal of common property and the grant or amendment of a lease or licence over common property. If the adjudicator were asked to resolve a dispute about a lease over land that was common property, then he or she would be being asked, contrary to s 231, to resolve a question of title to land. A similar problem would not arise if the common property were a chattel or the dispute was over a licence to use land which was common property.

84. In order to determine whether the arbitrator was being asked to resolve a question about title to land[22] one must consider the nature of the right or interest the adjudicator was being asked to consider in this case.

85. In form, what the adjudicator decided was whether or not to give effect to the resolution. However, the substance of that resolution was to allocate areas of the common property for the exclusive use of owners of individual lots. The adjudicator's decision would therefore in substance resolve a question about title to land if it in effect created a demise. The High Court determined in Radaich v Smith[23] that the grant of a legal right of exclusive possession gave rise to a lease rather than licence at common law[24] and so created a demise.[25] But this case is concerned with the effect of rights given by statute rather than at common law.

86. The right to exclusive possession might tend to suggest that an exclusive use by-law gives rise to an interest which is in substance a common law lease, but there are a number of reasons why this is not so.[26] An exclusive use by-law is not a common law interest in land but rather a statutory right. The statutory right is created under Part 5 div 2 of the BCCM Act which provides for the meaning, requirements, identification of the subject matter and regulation of exclusive use by-laws. It also regulates the making and notifying of allocations, what is prohibited in exclusive use by-laws and how certain of them are reviewed. Although an exclusive use by-law attaches to a lot included in a community titles scheme, it merely grants the occupier of the lot for the time being exclusive use to the rights and enjoyment of, or other special rights about common property or a body corporate asset.[27] It does not create a demise.

87. This view conforms with the decisions of the Supreme Court of New South Wales. In North Wind v Proprietors — Strata Plan 3143,[28] Rath J rejected a submission that an exclusive use by-law created an interest in land in the nature of a leasehold by analogy with the principle in Radaich v Smith. His Honour observed:

> ``Counsel could not place the right in any known category of real property interests, and I think that there is no such category, for the reason that the right is not an interest in land in any sense known at common law. The right is not defined directly by reference to some right existing apart from statute, and whatever incidents it has are found in the statute itself."[29]

The statutory rights created are not proprietary rights. The right to have the benefit of an exclusive use by-law exists by virtue of the statute and, as the High Court found in regard to pastoral leases,[30] is not the same as the incidents of a lease at common law. As the respondents submitted, the language of the BCCM Act does not support the contention that the rights under an exclusive use by-law constitute a lease. The exclusive use by-law does not take effect by way of a grant or demise, it is not for a term, it does not create a reversion, it is not assignable as a separate proprietary interest, it is not subject to forfeiture, it is not capable of surrender and there is no rent reserved. Leasehold interests are elsewhere recognised in the BCCM Act.[31]

88. An exclusive use by-law will be part of a community management statement which must be lodged with the Registrar of Titles. Section 53(1) of the BCCM Act provides that a community management statement takes effect only when it is recorded by the registrar. However, a community management statement is not an instrument under the *Land Title Act*1994[32] and s 48(4) of the BCCM Act provides:

> ``An interest created under a community management statement recorded under this Act does not have effect as a registered interest under the Land Title Act 1994."

Once it is registered, the community management statement takes effect as a statutory contract between the body corporate, each member of the body corporate, each registered proprietor and each occupier of a lot or common property. While it affects rights inter partes, it can not create a registered interest in the land.

89. It would appear that the adjudicator was not therefore resolving a question of title to land in contravention of s 231 of the BCCM Act.

New South Wales Supreme Court

Judgment delivered 1 June 2001

Strata schemes — Appeal against orders of Strata Scheme Board — Whether Board erred in not finding that the resolutions passed at the meeting were to be treated as a nullity — Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW), sec 154(1).

On 27 November 1995 Strata Plan 51573 was registered with Eventang Development (Pyrmont) Pty Ltd (``Eventang'') as the original owner. CSM Services Pty Ltd (``CSM'') were appointed as Strata Managing Agents for the owners corporation. On 23 July 1996 Eventang executed under its common seal the appointment of Mr Young (``Young'') as its company nominee with respect to a number of lots in the strata plan.

The first annual general meeting was held on 25 July 1996. Young gave a proxy to Mr Chan. The second general meeting was held on 13 November 1997. There were two proxies noted from Young. The first was given to Mr Chan and the second to Mr Hassell. The meeting's minutes did not evidence that these proxies were invalid or challenged.

A further annual general meeting was planned for 19 August 1999. Young faxed a voting paper to CSM indicating Eventang's voting intention with regard to the agenda items. A proxy form, appointing Mr Hassell, was also faxed to CSM. On the day of the meeting, CSM wrote to Young advising that Eventang's company nominee form of 23 July 1996 did not comply with the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW) (``the Act'') and that an updated completed form would need to be supplied. The evidence indicates that the letter to Young was not received prior to the annual general meeting.

The meeting proceeded as scheduled and when the matter of raising a special levy was reached the chairman, Mr Callaghan, announced that Mr Hassell's proxy from Young was invalid because Young's nomination as Eventang's nominee was invalid. The exclusion of Young's proxy vote made it possible for the resolution concerning the proposed special levy to be carried. It was evident that Young's proxy vote was sufficient, if cast against the special levy as intended, to defeat the resolution.

Following the events at this meeting, Eventang sought from an adjudicator of the Strata Schemes Board of NSW (``the Board'') an order pursuant to sec 154 of the Act that the resolution be declared a nullity as Eventang was improperly denied the right to vote. The adjudicator dismissed the application and Eventang appealed this decision on 17 July 2000. On appeal Mr Bordon of the Board also dismissed the appeal stating Eventang's noncompliance with the requirements of sec 118 and 122 of the Act, governing the right of corporations to vote and the conferral of voting rights, as the reason.

Eventang claims in this appeal to the Supreme Court of New South Wales, that the Board erred in not finding that the resolutions passed at the meeting were to be treated as a nullity.

[140219]

[140219]

Held: appeal dismissed.

1. A corporation has voting rights which cannot be exercised unless it has given notice in writing pursuant to the requirements of sec 118(1), (2)(a), (2)(b), and (2)(c) of the Act.

2. The legislative intent of cl 11(4) of Div 1 of Pt 2 of Sch 2 of the Act clearly states that a proxy should not be, in effect, a mere open-ended delegation of voting entitlement. A requirement of a valid proxy appointment is the stipulation of a prescribed time limit.

3. A proxy appointment that does not specify a time limit of voting delegation with proper clarity, such as the form that was given to Mr Hassell by Young, was invalid as an appointment.

Judgment, in full, below

Sully J: By a summons filed on 3 November 2000 Eventang Development (Pyrmont) Pty Limited, (``Eventang''), appeals against an order made in favour of the Owners, Strata Plan 51673, (``the Strata Owners''), by the Strata Schemes Board of New South Wales, (``the Board''). Such an appeal lies by virtue of s 200 of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996 (NSW), (``the Strata Act''). The appeal lies, relevantly, only upon a question of law; and is governed, generally speaking, by the provisions of Part 5 of the Justices

Act 1902 (NSW) as applicable to ``a determination that a Justice... made... in the exercise of summary jurisdiction on an information or complaint''.

2. The particular relief claimed in the summons is:

> ``1. An order pursuant to Sec 109(a) of the Justices Act quashing the order of the Second Defendant to dismiss the appeal of the Second Defendant.
>
> 2. An order pursuant to Sec 154(1)(a) of the Strata Schemes Management Act, 1996 (`the SSM Act') declaring that the resolutions passed at the Annual General Meeting of the First Defendant held on 19th August 1999 (`the Meeting') are to be treated as a nullity.
>
> 3. Alternatively to the relief sought in 2 above, an order that the matter be remitted to the Second Defendant to be dealt with according to law.
>
> 4. (a) A declaration that the Second Defendant erred in law in not finding that the principles of waiver and/or estoppel were to be applied so as to preclude the First Defendant from insisting on strict compliance with the requirements of Sec 118 of the SSM Act.
>
> (b) A declaration that the Second Defendant erred in law in not finding that the resolutions passed at the Meeting were to be treated as a nullity pursuant to Sec 154(1)(a) of the SSM Act.
> (c) A declaration that the Second Defendant erred in law in not exercising the discretion to treat those resolutions as a nullity pursuant to Sec 154(1)(a) of the SSM Act.
> 5. Costs''

3. Both the Strata Owners and the Board are joined as defendants to the summons. By a notice filed on 1 December 2000 the Board entered a submitting appearance, submitting to the orders of this Court save as to costs. The Strata Owners appeared by counsel at the hearing before this Court and contested Eventang's entitlement to any of the relief claimed by it in the summons.

4. The following facts are either admitted, or are established to my satisfaction on the probabilities:

> [1] On 27 November 1995 Strata Plan 51673 was registered. Eventang was the original owner. The principal of Eventang was one Thomas Young. CSM Services Group Pty Ltd (``CSM'') were appointed Strata Managing Agents for the Owners Corporation.
> [2] On 23 July 1996 Eventang executed under its common seal a document purporting to be a notice given pursuant to the Strata Titles Act 1973, the legislative predecessor of the Strata Act, of the
> [140220]
>
> appointment of Mr. Young as its company nominee with respect to a number of lots in the Strata Plan. Each lot was identified by its proper lot number. Each of the designated lots was, at the time of the giving of the notice, retained by Eventang in its own ownership. The notice was addressed to: ``The Secretary, the proprietors — Strata Plan Number 51673'' at the appropriate address. It will be necessary to say, presently, something more about the nature and effect of this document.
> [3] The first annual general meeting of the Body Corporate of the Strata Plan took place on 25 July 1996. According to the minutes of the meeting one Mr. P.J. Callaghan of CSM, who was in attendance at the meeting with two other representatives of CSM, was nominated and elected to chair this particular meeting. The minutes contain a list of proxies which were, as I infer, accepted as valid for the purposes of the meeting. Among those proxies Mr. Young is listed. The listing is expressed as: ``Mr. T. Young — Eventang Development (Pyrmont) Pty Limited... (there is here inserted a reference to each relevant lot number)... to Mr. R. Chan''.
> [4] The second annual general meeting of the Body Corporate was held on 13 November 1997. Mr. Callaghan was again nominated and elected to chair the meeting. Once again, proxies were carefully noted. There are only two proxies noted, each of them being a proxy given by Mr. Young. The proxies are noted in the following form: ``Mr. T. Young of Eventang Development (Pyrmont) Pty Ltd to Mr. Chan... (there is then included a reference to the lot number of each relevant lot)''; and: ``Mr. T. Young of Eventang Development (Pyrmont) Pty Ltd to Mr. D. Hassall... (there is then inserted a reference to each relevant lot number)''. There is nothing in the minutes of this annual general meeting to suggest that the proxies given by Mr. Young were challenged in any way, let alone rejected as invalid.

[5] The proxy form given by Mr. Young to Mr. Hassell in connection with the 1997 annual general meeting was not in evidence at the hearing before the Board and is not in evidence in this Court. There was, however, in evidence before the Board an exhibit in the form of a chronology. It appears from this document that the proxy form given to Mr. Hassall gave his name and gave his address as, simply, ``Sydney''.

[6] On 9 August 1999 a notice of annual general meeting was issued. It notified 19 August 1999 as the intended date of the meeting, and listed eleven agenda items. On 18 August 1999 a voting paper executed by Eventang was faxed to CSM. Indicated on the paper was Eventang's voting intention respecting each of the items 1 to 9 inclusive on the agenda. A proxy appointment form, also executed by Eventang, was also faxed. It appointed Mr. David Hassell as proxy. It will be necessary to consider, presently, the nature and effect of this document.

[7] On 19 August CSM wrote to Mr. Young. The letter reads as follows, formal parts omitted:

> ``Thank you for forwarding your Proxy Notice in respect of the annual general meeting to be held today.
>
> It has now come to our attention that the Company Nominee form dated 23 July 1996 does not comply with the provisions of the Strata Schemes Management Act 1996. It would be appreciated if an appropriate current and complete form could be forwarded to enable the Strata Roll to be updated.''

[8] This letter was despatched by ordinary post. A copy of the letter was exhibit 8 at the hearing before the Board and is part of exhibit A in the hearing before this Court. Noted at the foot of the exhibited copy of the letter is the following: ``Received this morning in mail. Too late to act. Jack''. There is, unfortunately, no indication of the actual date of receipt of CSM's letter of 19 August. What is clear is that the letter was not received prior to the annual general meeting held on 19 August.

[9] The 1999 annual general meeting convened at 5.00 pm on 19 August 1999. Once again, Mr. Callaghan was nominated and elected to chair the meeting. What actually occurred at the meeting is evidenced in part by the minutes of the meeting; and in part by evidence given orally at the Board hearing by Mr. Hassall, and by a Mr. Brownowski whose wife was the proprietor of a particular lot in the Strata Plan.

[10] So far as the minutes themselves disclose what happened at the meeting, they show that, once again, a careful note was made of intended proxies. The list is a lengthy one, and the last item in it reads: ``Mr. T. Young — Eventang Development (Pyrmont) Pty Ltd... (there is here included a reference to each relevant lot number)... to Mr. D. Hassall''. The minutes nowhere record that any challenge was made to the legitimacy of the proxy thus notified; or that the proxy was formally disallowed, either by a ruling of the Chairman, or by a resolution of the other persons then present and entitled to vote. What the minutes do note is that resolutions were put and carried in connection with the confirmation of the minutes of the preceding annual general meeting; and in connection with the receiving and the adopting of the Audited Financial Statements for the period ended 31 July 1999. Thereafter the minutes note the carrying of a resolution that a Special Levy of $90,000 be raised ``effective 1 September 1999 to acquit the deficit in the Administrative Fund account as at 31 July 1999 and to allow for some immediate working capital''. It is then noted:

> ``At 5.55 pm Ms J. M. Moore (N 407), Mr. C. Wong (S 2) and Mr. D. Hassall as proxy for Mr. T. Young — Eventang Development (Pyrmont) left the meeting of their own accord.''

[11] On any view of what actually happened at the meeting on 19 August, those minutes are seriously deficient and misleading. For what in fact happened at the meeting was that when the question of the levying of a Special Levy was reached on the agenda, Mr. Callaghan as Chairman of the meeting announced, for the first time and without any prior warning of any kind whatsoever, that he was ruling Mr. Hassall's proxy from Mr. Young to be invalid for the reason that the nomination by Eventang of Mr. Young as its nominee was itself invalid. It was that confrontation which led to the withdrawal of Mr. Hassall and of the other persons named in the portion of the minutes which I have earlier quoted.

The effect of the exclusion by the Chairman of the proxy given by Mr. Young, as Eventang's nominee, to Mr. Hassall made it possible for the resolution respecting the proposed Special Levy to be carried. It was no secret that Mr. Hassall would cast his proxy against the proposed resolution for the Special Levy. Nor was it any secret that the number of votes covered by Mr. Hassall's proxy was itself sufficient, if cast against the proposed resolution, to ensure the defeat of the resolution.

Mr. Hassall gave oral evidence before the Board member. Part of that evidence, given in chief, was as follows:

> ``Q. We will go to motion 2.2 about the $6,000 (sic: but read `$60,000') levy; do you recall that motion?
> A. Yes.
> Q. There was discussion in that regard, wasn't there?
> A. Yes.
> Q. A vote was taken in regard to it?
> A. Yes.
> Q. How did you vote?
> A. Against.
> Q. How did you show you voted against it?
> A. With my hands raised.
> Q. When Mr. Callaghan was counting the votes, how did he do so when he got to you?
> A. With the pointing of the finger, I believe, for an against.
> Q. Then he declared the result, did he?
> A. That's correct, but the motion was passed.
> Q. At this stage — it is important. Take it slowly. Can you recall roughly, as best as you can, how the conversation occurred then; had he declared that the motion had been passed?
> A. Mr. Broinowski asked how the motion could be passed and there was discussion between him and myself, and then Mr. Callaghan—
> Q. Take it slowly. This has to be written down, you see, sir?
> A. Yes.
> Q. You said `how could the motion have been passed'?
> THE MEMBER: Mr. Broinowski
> [140222]
>
> [140222]
>
> [EVENTANG'S SOLICITOR]: Mr. Broinowski said that, sorry.
> Q. Then did Mr. Callaghan or somebody say something?
> A. Yes. Then Mr. Callaghan said, `The proxy is null and void under section 118(5)'.
> Q. Did you say anything—
> A. We asked could he elaborate on that and he said Mr. Le Page could explain the situation better.
> Q. Do you recall what Mr. Le Page said, as best as you can?
> A. Basically to the effect that the proxy didn't have my address on it, and that a company must have their nominee's address on there.
> THE MEMBER: Q. Sorry, you will have to repeat it `basically to the effect that my proxy did not have an address on it'?
> A. Yep.
> Q. And?
> A. So the proxy was null and void.
> [EVENTANG'S SOLICITOR]: Q. Company nominee as well?
> A. Yes, a company must — no, a company.

THE MEMBER: Q. You used the words `a company nominee'—
A. Yes. A company must nominate the nominee's address. I basically then said, `Was Mr. Tom Young notified of this?'. Where Mr. Callaghan then said, `Yes, I have sent a letter today.'
[EVENTANG'S SOLICITOR]: Q. Was there any discussion about how the letter was sent?
A. I then said maybe he could have faxed it over or given him a call, and then I was told `Under the Act I'm not obliged to'.
Q. Sorry?
A. `Under the Act I'm not obliged to'.
Q. Was there any more of the conversation—
A. Basically I said I didn't think it was fair the way the meeting was being conducted, and I believe then Mr. Le Page then told me that since I'm not a lot owner or have any proxies that I couldn't speak on the issue anyway.
Q. Can you recall any more than that, sir?
A. Basically after that, I said it was, you know, a sham, so to speak, and walked out of the meeting and asked anybody else in support to walk out so as there wasn't enough numbers for the meeting to continue and another meeting could be held."

There was some brief cross-examination of Mr. Hassall, but it did not suggest in any way that he was either untruthful or mistaken in the evidence which he thus gave. The Board member who presided at the hearing before the Board, appears to have accepted his evidence.

[12] Following the events of 19 August 1999, Eventang sought from an Adjudicator of the Board an order pursuant to s 154 of the Strata Act. That section provides relevantly:

> ``(1) An Adjudicator may order that a resolution passed at a general meeting of an owners corporation be treated as a nullity on an from the date of the order if satisfied that the resolution would not have been passed but for the fact that the applicant for the order: (a) was improperly denied a vote on the motion for the resolution,... ".

[13] On 9 May 2000 the Adjudicator dismissed Eventang's application. On 6 June 2000 Eventang appealed to the Board against the Adjudicator's decision. The appeal was heard on 17 July 2000 by Mr. J. Bordon of the Board. On 18 September 2000 Mr. Bordon handed down a reserved decision dismissing the appeal. It is from that decision that the present appeal to this Court has been brought.

5. The essential reasoning of the Board member appears in the following passages which conclude the judgment. It is convenient to reproduce, rather than to paraphrase, them:

> ``It is clear that chapter 4 of the Act, which concerns itself with the rights of owners, occupiers and other persons with interests in lots in a scheme, is the governing legislation. It requires notices to be given by these various persons with an interest in lots and is clearly intended to cover all such persons including corporations. It seems to me that the intent here is that non-
>
> [140223]
>
> [140223]
>
> compliance with the requirements for the giving of this notice means that the person is deprived of a vote. Subsection 118(1) makes this clear in my view.
>
> All other provisions in the regulations relating to the right to cast a vote are to be read subject to this provision. The requirements of section 118 are basic and mandatory. They go directly to the keeping of records by the Owners Corporation of details of owners etc. and their interests which give rise to the right to vote. This includes the clear identification of the person who is nominated by a corporation under section 122. This section provides as follows:—
>
> 122 How can a corporation exercise functions in relation to a lot?
> (1) A corporation may authorise an individual to exercise on its behalf any function conferred by or under this Act on the corporation as owner or mortgagee of a lot or as a covenant chargee having the benefit of a covenant charge affecting a lot and may revoke the authority of any individual so authorised.

(2) A function exercised with respect to a lot by an individual authorised under this section by the owner, mortgagee or covenant chargee is taken to have been exercised with respect to the lot by the owner, mortgagee or covenant chargee.
(3) Nothing in this section affects any liability or obligation imposed by or under this Act on a corporation which is an owner or mortgagee of a lot or a covenant chargee.
(4) A document under the seal of a corporation purporting to be an authorisation under this section or to be a revocation of such an authorisation is admissible in evidence and is, unless the contrary is proved, taken to be such an authorisation or revocation.

Eventang's notice dated 23 July 1996 is clearly deficient in that it does not comply with requirements of 118(2). The proxy appointment form dated 18 August 1999 appointing `David Hassall of Sydney' does not absolve Eventang from having to comply with requirements of Section 118. In this respect I agree with Mr. Le Page's submission that a proxy cannot cast a vote where there is no right to vote in the first place.

Although Clause 10(3) schedule 2 provides that a corporation may exercise the voting rights as an owner by the company nominee in person or by proxy appointed by the corporation, clause 10(10) provides that the clause does not confer the right to vote on a person deprived of the right to vote by failing to comply with section 118. (In any event as pointed out by the Adjudicator and Mr. Le Page the proxy appointment form was otherwise defective).

It is my view that it does not assist the appellant in the present case that in the past the provisions of Section 118 had been ignored. That in the present case, the Chairman of the Owners Corporation of the AGM declared that Eventang was not entitled to cast a vote because of failure to give a proper notice in relation to its nominee can not be said to be `improper' in the sense of `wrong' or `incorrect' (which is the relevant dictionary definition).

I should indicate that I do not draw any inferences adverse to the Owners Corporation from the evidence given by Mr. Hassall and Mr. Brownowski. It may be that Mr. Callaghan and other members of the Owners Corporation who were in favour of the resolutions carried at the AGM acted in a perceived `window of opportunity' This does not make the insistence on the requirements of the legislation `improper'."

6. In connection with the present appeal to this Court, Eventang was required by SCR Part 51B Rule 8 to file and serve a statement of the grounds of the appeal. The grounds thus notified by Eventang are as follows:

``1. The Second Defendant (`the Board') erred in law in finding that any non- compliance by a person (who is otherwise entitled to vote) with the requirements of Sec 118 of the SSM Act means that the person is deprived of the right to vote.

2. The Board erred in law in finding that the Plaintiff had not complied with the relevant requirements of Sec 118 of the SSM Act.

3. The Board should have found that, at the Meeting, the Plaintiff was purporting to exercise its right to vote by a proxy and that it was not in fact tendering a vote through its nominee, within the meaning of Sec 118(5) of the Act.

4. The Board erred in law in finding that it did not assist the Plaintiff that in the past the requirements of Sec 118 had been ignored by the First Defendant.

5. The Board should have found that the First Defendant had, by its conduct in the past and/or at the Meeting, waived any non- compliance by the Plaintiff with the requirements of Sec 118, or that the First Defendant was estopped from insisting that the Plaintiff comply strictly with those requirements.

6. The Board erred in law in finding that the Proxy Appointment form was `otherwise defective'.

7. The Board should have found that the Proxy Appointment form substantially complied with the SSM Regulation and that such compliance was sufficient.

8. The Board should have found that the First Defendant, by its conduct in the past and/or at the Meeting, waived any deficiency in the Proxy Appointment form, or that the First Defendant was estopped from asserting that any such deficiency operated to deprive the Plaintiff of its right to vote.

9. The Board erred in law in failing to give any or any sufficient reasons for the finding in 4 above."

7. In order to consider whether the foregoing process of reasoning of the Board member manifests appellable error of law, it is necessary to consider, first, certain provisions of the Strata Act.

8. Section 14 of the Act gives legislative effect to the provisions of Schedule 2 to the Act. Schedule 2, in turn, prescribes a scheme respecting the meetings and the procedure of an Owners Corporation. Division 1 of Part 2 of Schedule 2 is entitled, and deals in detail with: ``General provisions relating to procedure for meetings''. Clause 10 of Division 1 is headed: ``Persons entitled to vote at general meetings''. Three in particular of the 11 sub-clauses of clause 10 are relevant in the present case. They are:

``(1) Each owner, and each person entitled to a priority vote, has voting rights that may be exercised at a general meeting of the Owners Corporation, but only if the owner or person is shown on the strata roll and, in the case of a corporation, the company nominee is shown on the strata roll.

(3) The voting rights of an owner, first mortgagee or covenant chargee of a lot (other than a joint owner, mortgagee or covenant chargee) may be exercised:

(a) unless the owner, mortgagee or covenant chargee is a corporation — in person or by proxy, or
(b) if the owner, mortgagee or covenant chargee is a corporation — by the company nominee in person, or by proxy appointed by the corporation.

(10) This clause does not confer a right to vote on a person deprived of the right by failing to comply with section 118.''

9. Section 118 provides, relevantly:

``(1) Person with right to vote at meetings must notify owners corporation

A person who has an interest in a lot that, subject to this Act, gives the person a right to cast a vote either personally or by nominee at meetings of the owners corporation must notify the owners corporation in writing of that interest.

(2) Contents of notice

The notice must specify the following information and, if the interest in a mortgage, include confirmation by the mortgagor or be verified by statutory declaration of the mortgagee:

(a) the person's full name and an Australian address for service of notices,
(b) the lot concerned and the exact nature of the person's interest in it,
(c) the date on which the person acquired the interest,
(d) if the voting entitlement conferred by the interest is one that, according to Schedule 2, is to be exercised by a nominee, the nominee's full name and address for service of notices.

(4) Owners corporation may require notice to be given

The secretary of the owners corporation, if of the opinion that a person obliged to give notice under this section has not done so, may by a requisition in writing served on the person, require the person:

[140225]

(a) to state, within 14 days, whether or not the person is a person required to give notice under this section, and
(b) if the person is such a person, to give that notice.

(5) Person prevented from casting vote if certain requirements not met

A person is not entitled to cast a vote at a meeting of the owners corporation if the person has not complied with a requisition served on the person under subsection (4) or, in the case of a vote to be tendered through a nominee, if the nominee's full name and address for service of notices have not been notified under this section."

10. When the owner of a lot is a corporation, then the requirements of section 118 have to be read in conjunction with the provisions of section 122, which latter section, as now relevant, is quoted in the foregoing extract from the published reasons of the Board member.

11. In addition to the relevant legislative provisions respecting company nominees, it is relevant to have regard also to clause 11 of Division 1 of Part 2 of Schedule 2, which clause deals with the appointment of proxies. So far as is now relevant, clause 11 provides:

``(1) Who is a `duly appointed proxy'?

A person is a duly appointed proxy for the purposes of this Part if the person is appointed as a proxy by an instrument in the form prescribed by the regulations.

(2) Form of proxy

The prescribed form is to make provision for the giving of instructions on:

(a) whether the person appointing the proxy intends the proxy to be able to vote on all matters and, if not, the matters on which the proxy will be able to vote, and
(b) how the person appointing the proxy wants the proxy's vote to be exercised on a motion for the appointment or continuation in office of a strata managing agent

(3) Proxy to be given to secretary of owners corporation

The instrument is ineffective unless it is given to the secretary of the owners corporation at or before the first meeting in relation to which the instrument is to operate and it contains the date on which it was made.

(4) Period for which proxy effective

An instrument appointing a proxy has effect for the period specified in the instrument (being a period of not more than 12 months) or for 2 consecutive annual general meetings, whichever is the greater, unless sooner revoked."

12. The essential reasoning of the Board member, and the essential reasoning of the submissions put for the Strata Owners at the hearing in this Court, can be expressed in the form of the following connected propositions:

[1] The notice given by Eventang on 23 July 1996 did not state an address for the service of notices upon the designated nominee.
[2] The notice did not comply, therefore, with the requirements of section 118(2)(d).
[3] Those requirements are, in the words of the Board member, ``basic and mandatory".
[4] Eventang, by having failed so to comply with the requirements of section 118(2)(d) had lost its right to vote at all, and whether by nominee or by proxy.
[5] Mr. Hassall had, therefore, no standing at the meeting of 19 July 1999, not because of formal deficiencies in an otherwise proper appointment of a proxy; but because there could not be in any event such a valid appointment of a proxy.

13. In my opinion, this reasoning is erroneous. I consider the correct reasoning to be expressed in the following connected series of propositions:

[1] Section 118(2)(d) does not make it compulsory for an owner which is a corporation to exercise its voting rights only by a company nominee duly appointed pursuant to the Strata Act.
[2] An owner which is a corporation has voting rights which it cannot exercise at all unless it first gives notice in writing in such a fashion as satisfies the requirements in that regard of section 118(1), (2)(a), (2)(b) and 2(c) of the Strata Act. A failure on the part of the corporate owner to do as much will entail, by reason of the operation of clause 10(1) of Division 1 of Part 2 of Schedule 2, that the corporate owner's voting rights may not be exercised until the statutory requirements have been fulfilled.

[3] Once a corporate owner has fulfilled those statutory minimum requirements with regard to the proper notification of its own lawful standing and entitlements, it may thereafter exercise its voting rights in either of two ways; that is to say, either by a nominee duly appointed; or by a proxy duly appointed.

[4] If in a particular case a corporate owner who has fulfilled the requirements of section 118(1) and of paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) of section 118(2), wishes to exercise its voting rights through a nominee, then, undoubtedly, the nominee must be designated in a way that satisfies the requirements of section 118(2)(d).

[5] There is nothing in the legislation that requires that every provision of subsections (1) and (2) of section 118 must be satisfied in a single document. There is no reason apparent on a fair reading of the legislation why a corporate owner cannot satisfy in one particular document provided at one particular time all of the requirements of sub-sections (1) and (2), save only the requirement of paragraph (d) of sub-section (2); and thereafter, as particular occasion may require, furnish the additional information necessary in order to effect a lawful and sufficient designation of a nominee to represent the corporate owner for the purpose, relevantly, of exercising the corporate owner's own voting rights.

[6] That is what happened in the present particular case. It was not disputed at the hearing before this Court that, if Eventang were in default at all in compliance with the requirements of section 118(1) and (2), that default derived from a failure to comply with the requirements of paragraph (d) of sub-section (2). Had Mr. Thomas Young himself attended the meeting in 1999 and sought to vote as company nominee, then in my opinion, and putting to one side for the moment, considerations of waiver and estoppel, Mr. Young's standing would have been vulnerable to challenge for the reason that the notice given in July 1996 did not satisfy the requirements of section 118(2)(d).

[7] The fact is, however, that Mr. Young did not attend the meeting and seek to vote at it; nor did he purport to give, as company nominee, a proxy to Mr. Hassall. The only purported giving of a proxy to Mr. Hassall was evidenced by the proxy appointment form, exhibit 7 before the Board member, which form evidences a purported exercise by Eventang itself of its right pursuant to clause 10(3) of Division 1 of Part 2 of Schedule 2, to exercise its voting rights, not by a company nominee, but by a proxy directly appointed by it as owner.

[8] The question whether Mr. Hassall had been properly appointed as proxy of Eventang for the purposes of the 1999 meeting depended, therefore, not upon any perceived defect in the section 118(2)(d) nomination of Mr. Young, but on the sufficiency of the proxy appointment instrument itself. It is true that the reasons of the Board member include the observation: (``In any event as pointed out by the Adjudicator and Mr. Le Page the proxy appointment form was otherwise defective)''. It seems to me, with respect to the Board member, that a fair reading of the entirety of his judgment justifies the view that the parenthesised material is in the nature of a rhetorical aside or an afterthought, rather than the expression of a fundamental step in the reasoning put forward in support of the ultimate decision reached by the Board member.

14. If the foregoing reasoning be correct, then it becomes necessary to look with some care at the form of the relevant proxy appointment instrument.

15. The Strata Act contains a regulation- making power of the kind normal in contemporary statutes. Pursuant to that power the Strata Schemes Management Regulation 1997 has been gazetted. Clause 26(3) of that Regulation provides that; ``... an instrument appointing a proxy must be in or to the effect of Form 3 in Schedule 2''. The proxy appointment form that was exhibit 7 before the Board member is a printed form following the Form 3 as prescribed in Schedule 2 to the Regulation. The relevant substantive portion of the form, exhibit 7, is as follows:

``Date... 18th August 1999

I/We EVENTANG DEVELOPMENT (PYRMONT) PTY LTD — THOMAS YOUNG

[140227]

the owners of lot 50 units In Strata Plan No. 51673

appoint DAVID HASSALL

as my/our proxy for the purposes of meeting of the owners corporation (including adjournments of meetings).

Period or number of meetings for which appointment of proxy has effect... *months/ *meetings

Delete whichever does not apply

(Note: The appointment cannot have effect for more than 12 months or 2 consecutive annual general meetings, whichever is the greater.)"

The emphasised material in the quotation is reproduced as it appears in the Form prescribed by the Regulation.

16. It will be observed that the proxy appointment form has not nominated a period during which, or a number of meetings for which, the intended proxy is to have effect. It becomes, thereupon, necessary to consider whether the failure to complete that part of the form has the consequence that the intended proxy is ineffective.

17. Relevant to that question are certain of the provisions of section 80 of the Interpretation Act 1987 (NSW). The relevant provisions are:

``(1) If an Act or statutory rule prescribes a form, strict compliance with the form is not necessary but substantial compliance is sufficient.

(2) If a form prescribed by an Act or instrument requires the form to be completed in a specified manner, or requires specific information to be included in... the form, the form is not duly completed unless it is completed in that manner and unless it includes,... that information."

18. The question whether the prescribed Form 3, when correctly construed, comes within sub-section (1), or within sub-section (2), of section 80, falls to be considered in the light of the only statement of general principle upon which an abundance of particular reported decisions agrees, namely, the following observations of Lord Campbell LC in Liverpool Borough Bank v Turner (1860) 45 ER 715 at 718:

``No universal rule can be laid down for the construction of statutes, as to whether mandatory enactments shall be considered directory only or obligatory with an implied nullification for disobedience. It is the duty of Courts of Justice to try to get at the real intention of the Legislature by carefully attending to the whole scope of the statute to be construed."

19. The importance of anything to do with the correct identification of a lawful entitlement to vote at a meeting of an Owners Corporation to which the Strata Act, and its subordinate Regulation, apply is obvious from a reading of the legislation. So far as concerns the exercise by proxy of a lawful entitlement to vote, clause 11 of Division 1 of Part 2 of Schedule 2 makes plain that the due appointment of a proxy is important enough to require adherence to certain prescribed formalities. Sub-clause (4) makes plain, in my opinion, that it is fundamental to the relevant legislative intent that a proxy should not be, in effect, a mere, open-ended delegation of voting entitlement. It is, I think, of great significance for present purposes that one of the things that the Legislature has prescribed, not in the Form contemplated by sub-clause (1) of clause 11, but by a specific sub -clause in clause 11 itself, is the requirement of a time limit, chosen as between two permitted alternatives, that is to be a requirement of a valid proxy appointment.

20. I have considered whether the present question might not be resolved on the basis that the intent behind sub-clause (4) could properly be understood as embracing the notion that, in default of any particular specification of a time period, it is to be deemed that the effect of the particular proxy, unless it is sooner revoked, is to be such a period as encompasses two consecutive annual general meetings.

21. I do not think that it is permissible so to construe sub-clause (4). Had the Legislature intended some such deeming operation of the sub-clause, then nothing would have been simpler than for the Legislature to have enacted the sub-clause in some such form as: ``An instrument appointing a proxy has effect for the period specified in the instrument (being a period of not more than 12 months) and in default of any such specification of a period has effect for such period as encompasses two consecutive annual general meetings, unless sooner revoked''. That the Legislature has not adopted some such expedient, easy as it would have been to have done so, seems to me to exclude the reading into the sub-clause as it actually stands of some such unspecified deeming provision.

22. I have come to the conclusion that the better view is that the proper construction of sub-clause (4), when read together with the prescribed Form 3, entails that a proxy appointment form which does not specify with a proper clarity, and by reference to either of the two permitted alternatives, an intended period of duration of the proxy, is ineffective as a valid proxy appointment.

23. It follows that, in my opinion, the proxy appointment form which was furnished to Mr. Hassall in connection with, in particular, the annual general meeting of 19 August 1999 was ineffective as such an appointment.

24. It must follow, therefore, that the present appeal cannot succeed unless Eventang can make good that part of its submissions which postulates that there had been an effective waiver or estoppel raised in connection with any defects in the proxy appointment form of 18 August 1999; and that such waiver or estoppel arises by reason of an antecedent course of conduct by the agents of the Strata Owners, and either at the meeting of 19 August itself, or on other occasions prior to that particular meeting.

25. These submissions of Eventang raise at once a difficult question of law, namely, whether the established principles of waiver or of estoppel have any proper application at all to the operation of the legislative scheme embodied in the Strata Act and its subordinate Regulation.

26. It is useful to begin the discussion of this particular topic by noticing the way in which the submissions of Eventang articulate the facts said to give rise to an available waiver or estoppel. The submissions point to the following matters:

> [1] The Strata Owners had accepted Eventang's votes by way of a proxy in favour of Mr. Hassall at previous annual general meetings in 1996, 1997 and 1998.
> [2] The Strata Owners had engaged in correspondence with Mr. Thomas Young, the proposed company nominee, in June of 1999 and in connection with a proposal of Eventang that there should be an Extraordinary General Meeting.
> [3] The Strata Owners had included Eventang's proposed motions on the agenda for the 1999 Annual General Meeting.
> [4] The Strata Owners had failed to requisition Eventang at any stage prior to the 19th August 1999; and then, the only such requisition related to the company nominee form executed in July 1996.
> [5] The Strata Owners had received Eventang's proxy form in favour of Mr. Hassall shortly prior to the 1999 Annual General Meeting, and without demur.
> [6] The Strata Owners had already accepted from Mr. Hassall proxy votes cast by him for Eventang on each of the two motions preceding the motion for the Special Levy.

27. Eventang points, as well, to certain submissions put by the solicitor who appeared for the Strata Owners at the hearing before the Board. The relevant submissions are, to say the very least, revealing in their aggressive frankness. They bear quotation:

> ``STRATA OWNERS SOLICITOR: This is a matter that concerns strictly documents and legislation, but I have taken on board my friend's concern about there not having been given any evidence.
>
> THE MEMBER: What do you say about Mr. Ilkin's argument about the prior behaviour of the strata managing agent in relation to acceptance—
>
> STRATA OWNERS SOLICITOR: All that means is that those prior meetings may have been wrongly decided. You can't avoid the requirements of the legislation by saying: oh, you made that mistake last time. It's a simplistic argument. It means that if Mr. Ilkin and his client want to invalidate all the prior meetings, here's a heaven-sent opportunity for that. The fact that matters have been overlooked in past meetings is neither here nor there.

Mr. Ilkin is really criticising Mr. Callaghan for not doing to (sic) same thing again. We might have overlooked it the last time. Why couldn't he do it this time? That's what his argument really is and that's just not good enough.

The fact is that there was a very good reason relating to the finances of this body corporate why Eventang had to be prevented from voting, if at all possible, and, yes, it was a device. It's not denied. Eventang had to be prevented from voting so that this body corporate would be restored to some financial state of affairs. It was trading in deficit and Mr. Young's — as Mr. Hassall's voting against the motion showed — concern was not to raise money.

We acknowledge that it was a device, but it was a device that was strictly in accordance with the Act. Yes, it has not been taken before. It had been overlooked before. Presumably Mr. Callaghan had not noticed it before, but this time he picked up on it. It may have been unfair to Eventang not to give him more notice. I don't know when Mr. Callaghan first noticed it — presumably on the morning of the meeting, that he wrote that letter, or the day before, whenever he wrote it.

But how does that affect the application of the Act? It doesn't affect it at all."

28. My initial, and strong, reaction to the foregoing material was that it could not be correct to suppose that a proper construction and application of the requirements of the Strata Act and its subordinate Regulation would leave without effective remedy the victim of such calculated trickery. It is, therefore, with great reluctance that I have felt constrained to come to the contrary conclusion.

29. I have done so for reasons of principle which are discussed helpfully in a recent publication: Michael Spence: ``Protecting Reliance: The Emergent Doctrine of Equitable Estoppel'', especially in the section headed ``Estoppel and statute'' at 72-75. I have had particular regard to the decision there cited of the Full Court of the Supreme Court of Queensland, Day Ford Pty Ltd v Sciacca (1990) 2 Qd. R 209, especially at 216, 217, where the following principles are summarised:

``A number of cases consider the place of estoppel in supporting the enforcement of a contract which would otherwise be void for illegality. In Kok Hoong v Leon Cheong Kweng Mines Ltd [1964] A.C. 993 reference is made to the familiar rule which in its ordinary form is stated in this fashion: a party cannot set up an estoppel in the face of a statute. At 1016 the Privy Council suggested that a test to apply in the type of case before it namely one involving the laws of money lending was to ask `whether the law that confronts the estoppel can be seen to represent a social policy to which the court must give effect in the interests of the public generally or some section of the public'. A similar approach had been adopted in Maritime Electric Co. v General Dairies Ltd [1937] A.C. 610 especially at 620 where it was said that in deciding whether an estoppel might be set up against the operation of a statute `the Court should first of all determine the nature of the obligation imposed by the statute, and then consider whether the admission of an estoppel would nullify the statutory provision'. At 621 the Court declared that it was `unable to see how the Court can admit an estoppel which would have the effect pro tanto and in the particular case of repealing the statute'. There is no need to multiply examples by the citation of authorities since the appropriateness of this approach based on consideration of social and statutory policy is so amply supported."

30. In applying these principles to the given facts of the present case, it seems to me to be significant that section 245 of the Strata Act proscribes comprehensively any attempt to contract out of the provisions of the statute. This is consistent with the stated aims of the legislation, which are: to provide for the management of strata schemes; and for the resolution of disputes arising in connection with such management. Critical to the exercise of those legislative policy objectives is the orderly and consistent application of orderly and consistent requirements in the all -important areas of the vesting, and of the practical exercise, of proprietorial voting rights. An approach that had the practical effect of permitting an Owners Corporation or its Managing Agents, or particular owners or groupings of owners, to disregard the legislative requirements as to orderly and consistent voting principles and practices whenever it suited their convenience to do so, would be, in my opinion, an approach tending to undermine the public policy considerations which are clear from the comprehensive nature and scope of the legislation.

31. I have come, therefore, to the conclusion that whatever it might be thought, on the given facts, should be the position as to waiver and estoppel, the legislative scheme is such as to prevent, as a matter of law, the applicability of either of those doctrines so as to avoid the consequences of a failure to comply with the relevant requirements of that scheme.

32. For the whole of the foregoing reasons, I am of the opinion that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

High Court of Australia

Judgment delivered 4 May 1994

Unit and Group Titles — Developer constituting sole member of body corporate — Developer entering into building management agreement — Assigning agreement — Body corporate purporting to terminate agreement — Supreme Court finding substantially for the assignees — Appeal allowed — Appeal to High Court — Whether body corporate had power to authorise letting agency — Whether invalid clauses severable — Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 (Q), sec 37, 50(9).

This is an appeal from the decision of the Queensland Court of Appeal handed down 29 October 1992.

A body corporate entered into a building management agreement with Bartlett Researched Securities Limited (``Bartlett'') in respect of a complex at the Gold Coast. The body corporate agreed that Bartlett should act as building manager on behalf of the body corporate at a commencing salary of $60,000 (cl 8). The management agreement included conducting a letting agency for the benefit of those owners of lots in the complex who required the service (cl 2(r)). No by-law of the body corporate expressly conferred power on it to enter the agreement. The agreement was assigned by Bartlett to the appellants. At the same time the appellants purchased unit 1 in the complex. Subsequently, the body corporate purported to terminate the agreement relying on sec 50(9) and the appellant-assignees sued the body corporate in the Supreme Court of Queensland to enforce the agreement.

The appellants' case substantially succeeded at first instance. The Court of Appeal set aside the orders made by Derrington J. The Court was of the opinion that the agreement did not depend on and was not made under sec 50 of the Act. Accordingly, if the agreement was valid, the body corporate could not terminate it pursuant to sec 50(9). However, the Court held that cll 2(r) and 8 taken together were ultra vires and could not be severed from the agreement. The assignees appealed.

The appellants contended that a body corporate constituted under the Act had power, in the absence of an appropriate by-law, to enter into the agreement by virtue of its general statutory responsibility to control, manage and administer the common property. The body corporate submitted that it had no power to commit its funds for this purpose.

Held: appeal dismissed.

Management agreement

1. There was no statutory power authorising, and there was no by-law which might have authorised, the body corporate to conduct a letting agency for the benefit of those proprietors of lots who might require that service or to procure another person to conduct such a letting agency. Nor was there any agreement under sec 37(2)(a) which might have been implemented by procuring another person to provide a letting service for particular lots, proprietors or occupiers. It was therefore beyond the power of the body corporate to enter into a contract to procure the provision of a service of the kind stipulated in cl 2(r) of the management agreement.

Severance

2. The material in evidence does not sustain a conclusion that the provision of a letting agency was such an insignificant component of the duties of the manager for which the body corporate agreed to pay the base remuneration of $60,000 per annum that it can be disregarded. Nor is there any basis for a finding that a particular proportion or amount of that annual remuneration can be attributed to the manager's promise to conduct a letting agency. That being so, cl 8 cannot be saved by any process of severance or reading down. It follows that the clause was, in its entirety, ultra vires and void. The whole agreement necessarily falls with cl 8.

Judgment in full below

Brennan and Toohey JJ: The respondent is a body corporate constituted under the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 — 1988 (Q.) (``the Act'') for a property known as ``Surfers Palms North''. The appellants are the assignees of a management agreement dated 31 January 1989 between the body corporate as owner and the appellants' assignor, Bartlett Researched Securities Limited (``Bartlett''), as manager. Bartlett was the developer of the property and, at the time when the management agreement was made, it was the sole proprietor of the lots delineated in the group titles plan. The management agreement contained a clause[1] entitling the manager to an annual remuneration of $60,000 payable monthly and indexed to the All Groups Consumer Price Index. On 17 January 1991 a deed of assignment was executed by Bartlett, the appellants and the body corporate whereby Bartlett assigned all its rights under the management agreement to the appellants and the appellants agreed to perform the duties specified in the management agreement. The appellants sued the body corporate in the Supreme Court of Queensland to enforce the management agreement.

The appellants had acquired one of the lots in the group titles plan. They had started to perform the management duties specified in the agreement. They were paid the stipulated remuneration for a time but a dispute broke out between them and the body corporate. On 26 February 1991 at the annual general meeting of the body corporate a resolution was passed challenging the validity of the management agreement and refusing to make any further payments pursuant to that agreement.

On 7 June 1991, the appellants commenced the action claiming, inter alia, remuneration under the management agreement. On 22 November 1991, they purported to exercise an option to extend the term of the management agreement from 31 January 1992 for a further three years. The period in respect of which remuneration was claimed at the trial commenced on 10 February 1991 and extended to the elapsed portion of the period of the extension purportedly effected by the appellants' exercise of the option.

On 1 February 1992 at the annual general meeting of the body corporate a motion was passed, purportedly pursuant to s. 50(9) of the Act, terminating the appointment of the appellants as managers.

The body corporate denies any liability to the appellants under the management agreement on two grounds: first, that the management agreement was void ab initio and, secondly, that, if the management agreement was valid, it was terminated by the resolution passed on 1 February 1992. The appellants, on the other hand, assert that the management agreement is valid and subsisting and that it was not susceptible of termination pursuant to s. 50(9) of the Act. The body corporate succeeded on its first ground before the Court of Appeal but would have failed on the second. The appeal relates to the first ground; but, if the appellants should succeed on that ground, the body corporate seeks special leave to raise and rely upon the second ground. It is convenient first to consider the question whether the management agreement was invalid.

The body corporate challenges the validity of the management agreement on the ground that among the duties which that agreement purports to impose on the manager is a duty which the body corporate has no power to perform, namely, the duty of conducting a letting agency for the owners of those lots who require that service. The body corporate submits that it has no power to commit its funds for this purpose.

Clause 8 of the management agreement specifies the lump sum remuneration which the body corporate promises to pay the manager for the performance of the duties specified. Those duties are specified in general terms by cl. 1:

> ``SCOPE OF THE MANAGER'S DUTIES — The Manager shall be responsible (to the Owner) to at all times ensure that the
> [140103]
>
> [140103]
>
> Property is properly maintained and administered and kept in good repair, and shall attend to the secretarial requirements of the Owner (as will be involved in the discharge of the Owner's functions pursuant to the Act). The Manager shall be responsible to the Owner for the care and maintenance and administration of the Property in terms of this Agreement."

Clause 2 then sets out specific duties including cl. 2(r). The relevant parts of cl. 2 read as follows:

> “SPECIFIC DUTIES TO BE PERFORMED BY THE MANAGER — Without limiting the generality of the Manager's duties as described in Clause 1 of this Agreement some of the Manager's specific duties and functions shall be as follows:—

(r) Letting Agency — The Manager shall conduct, from his unit, a letting agency for the letting of townhouses on the Property for such owners of the townhouses, as shall require that service, or with prior written approval of the Owner arrange with a licensed real estate agent or agents to provide a letting agency for the lettings. The Manager shall ensure that at all times he is properly licensed to perform these functions having regard to the provisions of the Auctioneers and Agents Act 1971 (as amended) and any other relevant legislation or requirements of other governmental or semi-governmental authorities from time to time."

The remuneration prescribed by cl. 8 is not apportioned among the several duties which, by the terms of the management agreement, the manager is to perform. The promise to pay was therefore made in consideration in part of the manager's promise to provide the letting agency. The submission that a body corporate's funds could not be expended in the payment of remuneration for the provision of this service found favour with the Court of Appeal. Their Honours said:

``Whether or not a body corporate has power to appoint a letting agent to provide a service to individual proprietors who seek to avail themselves of it, no power to expend the body corporate's funds in payment of the letting agent for such services to individual proprietors has been identified."

To ascertain the relevant limit on the powers of a body corporate, the provisions of the Act conferring powers must be construed in context. The Act provides, inter alia, for the registration of building units plans and group titles plans[2] . The land comprised in each group titles plan is divided into lots and common property[3] . The Act provides for the constitution of the proprietors of the lots delineated in a group titles plan as a body corporate[4] . The powers, authorities, duties and functions of the body corporate are prescribed by or under the Act or the by-laws of the body corporate[5] , and the proprietors are liable to pay contributions levied by the body corporate[6] in the amounts which, in the opinion of the body corporate, are necessary to meet its actual and expected liabilities in respect of items of legitimate expenditure[7] .

The chief duties of a body corporate are set out in s. 37(1) of the Act; s. 37(2) sets out powers which, in the discretion of a body corporate, it may exercise. Apart from specific paragraphs relating to the care of the personal property of the body corporate and the provision of a mail box, the duties of a body corporate imposed by s. 37(1) relate either to what is or is part of the common property or to fixtures or fittings in one lot intended to be used for the servicing or enjoyment of any other lot or of the common property. None of the duties extends to the provision by the body corporate of services to the proprietors of individual lots.

The powers of a body corporate conferred by s. 37(2) include the power specified in par. (a) of that sub-section:

"A body corporate may—

(a) enter into an agreement, upon such terms and conditions (including terms for the payment of consideration) as may be agreed upon by the parties thereto, with a proprietor or occupier of a lot for the provision of amenities or services by it to the lot or to the proprietor or occupier thereof".

Section 37(2)(a) authorizes the making of an agreement for the provision of services ``to the lot or to the proprietor or occupier thereof"; it does not authorize the making of an agreement with a person other than the proprietor or occupier of the lot to whom or to which the body corporate is to provide the services.

Neither the broadly stated duties imposed by cl. 1 nor the particular duty imposed by cl. 2(r) of the management agreement falls within this paragraph. The body corporate did not enter into an agreement with the proprietor or occupier of any lot to provide the services of a letting agency for the benefit of that proprietor or occupier. Had it done so, it would have had authority to perform that agreement by employing an agent or servant (such as the appellants) to provide the services contracted for: see Fourth Schedule, cl. 1. However, if an agreement had been made with particular proprietors or occupiers, it would not have been a proper exercise of the body corporate's powers to require the funds raised by contribution from all proprietors to bear the cost of provision of the service for particular proprietors or occupiers. In any event, cl. 2(r) of the management agreement was not made in implementation of any agreement made under s. 37(2)(a) between the body corporate and an individual lot proprietor or occupier. None of the other powers conferred by s. 37(2) authorizes the making of an agreement for the conduct of a letting agency for the benefit of those proprietors of individual lots who might require such a service.

The appellants seek to uphold the management agreement by pointing to the by- law making power conferred on a body corporate by s. 30. That section authorizes the amendment of the pro forma by-laws contained in the Third Schedule ``for the purpose of the control, management, administration, use or enjoyment of the lots and common property the subject of the plan''[8] . Whatever the scope of that power may be, it does not avail the appellants in this case. There was no by-law made which might have authorized the body corporate to secure the provision of the services of a letting agency for the proprietors of the individual lots. In general, the Third Schedule does not authorize a body corporate to provide services to individual lots although cl. 10 impliedly authorizes a body corporate to provide a garbage disposal service for individual lots. If cl. 10 is an exception to the general scheme of the Third Schedule, the exception is explicable by the common interest of all proprietors and occupiers in the removal of garbage from any part of the premises.

In Coastalstyle Pty. Ltd. v. The Proprietors, Surf Regency Building Units Plan 4246[9] . Thomas J. stated his view to be that the making of a letting agreement (similar to the present management agreement) ``is within the general management powers of a Body Corporate for the benefit of unit holders'', but he noted that that view was contrary to an assumption made by the Full Court in a case in which his Honour had agreed with the principal judgment[10] and from which he did not ``feel free to depart''. When Coastalstyle went on appeal to the Court of Appeal, the attack on the letting agreement seems to have focused on the granting to the letting agent of special privileges in respect of the common property. The Court of Appeal said[11] :

> ``By sub-s. 37(1)(a), a body corporate is required to `control, manage and administer the common property for the benefit of the proprietors' and, by sub-s. 27(3), it is required, subject to the Act, to `do all things reasonably necessary' for that purpose. These are extensive powers and, except where the Act otherwise expressly provides, there seems no reason to exclude from their ambit a power in the body corporate to grant exclusive use or enjoyment, or special privileges, in respect of the common property for the purpose of a business engaged in on behalf of the proprietors of the units in the building. Provided that the service provided by the business is available for the benefit of all proprietors, it seems unimportant that some may choose not to participate.''

The passage cited suggests that it is within the ordinary powers of a body corporate to provide services for the proprietors of individual lots who wish to use those services. With respect, we are unable to agree. The powers of a body corporate are confined chiefly to management and control of common property, and expenditure of the funds of the body corporate on the provision of services for individual proprietors is not sanctioned merely because the services are available to all proprietors who wish to use them. A power to provide such services is not incidental to the body corporate's statutory duties or powers.

In our opinion, there was no statutory power authorizing, and there was no by-law which might have authorized, the respondent to conduct a letting agency for the benefit of those proprietors of lots who might require that service or to procure another person to conduct such a letting agency. Nor was there any agreement under s. 37(2)(a) which might have been implemented by procuring another person to provide a letting service for particular lot proprietors or occupiers. It was therefore beyond the powers of the body corporate to enter into a contract to procure the provision of services of the kind stipulated in cl. 2(r) of the management agreement. The principle, as Lord Selborne stated it in Ashbury Railway Carriage and Iron Co. v. Riche[12] , is that—

> ``a statutory corporation, created by Act of Parliament for a particular purpose, is limited, as to all its powers, by the purposes of its incorporation as defined in that Act.''

The appellants submitted that, if cl. 2(r) were held to be ultra vires the body corporate, cl. 2(r) is a term severable from the remainder of the management agreement which is otherwise enforceable. Reliance was placed on the judgment of Jordan C.J. in McFarlane v. Daniell[13] :

> ``A valid promise is none the worse for being associated with a void promise from which it is severable; and although a promise which is wholly void cannot be enforced, a promise partly void but not illegal is capable of being enforced to the extent to which it is severable and valid. Again, a promise in consideration of a number of promises some only of which are void, although not illegal, is inherently capable of being enforced: Marks Bros. v. Park[14] . If, however, it is made conditionally upon the prior or concurrent performance of all the promises by the other party, whether enforceable or void, it may be unenforceable unless the condition of performance of the void promises is in fact fulfilled."

It was submitted that the appellants in this case are in the same position as the employee in McFarlane v. Daniell who was held entitled to recover his remuneration under a contract of employment although the remuneration was payable in consideration, inter alia, of a promise on his part in unreasonable restraint of trade (and therefore a void promise). So, it was said, the manager under the management agreement may recover the stipulated remuneration although it is payable in consideration, inter alia, of the unenforceable promise contained in cl. 2(r). But the two cases are dissimilar. In McFarlane v. Daniell, the invalidity of the promise in unreasonable restraint of trade arose because the law would not enforce such a promise against the promisor; but as the promisor's promise was not illegal, there was no legal inhibition against the enforcement of the promisee's promise to pay the stipulated remuneration. In the present case, the invalidity arises not because it is against the policy of the law to enforce a promise such as that contained in cl. 2(r) against the promisor but because the Act prohibits the incurring of an obligation by the promisee to disburse the funds of the body corporate for purposes which it is not empowered to pursue.

Section 38 of the Act provides for the establishment and maintenance of two body corporate funds: an administrative fund and a sinking fund. Sub-section (3) prohibits a body corporate from disbursing moneys from its administrative fund “otherwise than for the purpose of—

> (a) meeting its liabilities referred to in section 38A(1); or
> (b) carrying out its powers, authorities, duties or functions under this Act.”

Substituting s. 38A(2) for s. 38A(1), s. 38(6) imposes a limitation in similar terms on the disbursement of the sinking fund. The liabilities referred to in s. 38A(1) and (2) do not include a liability to pay for the provision of a letting agency in the circumstances of this case.

If the disbursement of the body corporate's funds for the purpose of procuring the provision of a letting agency is prohibited, the incurring of an obligation to disburse funds for that purpose is beyond the powers of the body corporate. The body corporate is thus incapable of providing consideration for the manager's promise contained in cl. 2(r).

The appellants pointed to some evidence to show that the more burdensome tasks imposed on the manager by the management agreement related to the maintenance of the common property — a matter which fell within the duties and powers of the body corporate. But it is not possible to treat the promise to pay remuneration as divisible between purposes on which the body corporate is authorized to disburse its funds and purposes for which the disbursement of its funds is forbidden. It is not suggested that the provision of a letting agency was of such minimal significance as to be immaterial.

[140106]

In Mann v. Edinburgh Northern Tramways Company[15] , Lord Watson said in reference to a company created by a private Act of Parliament:

> ``it is beyond the power either of promoters or of directors or of shareholders to apply the moneys of the company which are devoted by statute to special purposes to any purpose which is not sanctioned by the provisions of the Act of incorporation."

In that case, the company in effect entered into a contract to pay two of its promoters £17,000 to defray the expenses of securing the passing of the private Act of incorporation. Those expenses were authorized by the Act but the payment of £17,000 would leave a surplus in the promoters' hands and the company had no authority to provide such a benefit. It was immaterial that the surplus might be large or small or that the payment was in part for a legitimate purpose. As the agreement was to pay the entire sum of £17,000 for the purposes which included an unauthorized purpose, the agreement was held invalid[16] .

Similarly, the body corporate's promise in cl. 8 of the management agreement to pay an entire sum as remuneration for the performance of duties including those specified in cl. 2(r) was not authorized by the Act. The appellants cannot therefore enforce the remuneration clause against the body corporate. This conclusion does not mean, of course, that the appellants were not entitled to payment for the services which they rendered to the body corporate and which the body corporate was authorized to procure. But the appellants' entitlement to payment for what might be termed the legitimate services was not an entitlement enforceable under cl. 8 of the management agreement. The appellants were entitled in restitution to be paid for the legitimate services rendered to the body corporate at its request, being services for which the body corporate was entitled to disburse its funds.

However, that was not the relief which the appellants sought in the action. The appellants sought a declaration that the management agreement is subsisting, either in toto or shorn of any invalid terms. Their pecuniary claim was, as counsel put it, ``for a debt of accruing salary under the agreement''. As the agreement is unenforceable, the appellants' action fails.

As the appellants' action fails on the ground advanced by the Court of Appeal, it is unnecessary to determine the body corporate's application for special leave to appeal on the ground that the management agreement constituted an ``agreement between a body corporate and a body corporate manager'' appointed pursuant to s. 50 of the Act and was terminated by the resolution of 1 February 1992.

In the result, we would dismiss the appeal.

Deane and Gaudron JJ: The background to this appeal, the facts involved in it and the relevant statutory provisions are set out in the joint judgment of Brennan A.C.J. and Toohey J. and the judgment of McHugh J. The central issue is whether cl. 8 of the Management Agreement of 31 January 1989 (``the Agreement'') was, by reason of the inclusion in the agreement of cl. 2(r), ultra vires and void.

By cl. 2(r), the ``specific duties to be performed by the Manager'' under the Agreement included the ``conduct, from his unit, [of] a letting agency for the letting of townhouses on the Property for such owners of the townhouses, as shall require that service''. Clause 8 provided that the annual remuneration of the Manager should be $60,000 adjusted in accordance with the All Groups Consumer Price Index for Brisbane. The combined effect of cl. 2(r) and cl. 8 was that the ``duties'' for the performance of which the body corporate promised to pay the Manager's annual remuneration included that of conducting the letting agency.

The Court of Appeal concluded that cl. 2(r) required letting services to be supplied by the Manager to individual proprietors free of charge to the particular proprietor. We respectfully disagree with that conclusion. In our view, cl. 2(r) required the Manager to conduct a letting agency whose services would be available to those proprietors who should ``require'' them but did not preclude the Manager from charging a fee or commission to those proprietors who utilized those services in leasing particular units. That construction lends greater plausibility to the appellants' argument that cl. 2(r) was in the interests of proprietors generally. Nonetheless, the fact remains that only those proprietors who wished to let their townhouses would obtain any direct practical benefit from the availability on the premises of a letting agency. Examination of the powers of the body corporate to expend its funds discloses that those powers did not encompass the payment of remuneration for the conduct of such an agency from a unit in the complex.

Any payment to the Manager in pursuance of cl. 8 of the Agreement would necessarily be made from the body corporate's administrative fund established and maintained under s. 38 of the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 (Q.) (``the Act''). Section 38(3) expressly prohibits any distribution from that administrative fund:

“otherwise than for the purpose of—

(a) meeting its liabilities referred to in section 38A(1); or
(b) carrying out its powers, authorities, duties or functions under this Act”.

It is not suggested that the provisions of s. 38A(1) are applicable. That means that the effect of s. 38(3) was that payment of remuneration to the Manager for carrying on the letting agency was beyond the powers of the body corporate unless the payment could be justified as being ``for the purpose of carrying out its powers, authorities, duties or functions under [the] Act''. The powers, authorities, duties and functions of the body corporate under the Act are, as s. 27(3) expressly states, those ``conferred or imposed on it by or under [the] Act or the by-laws.''

By s. 37(1)(a) of the Act, a body corporate is required to ``control, manage and administer the common property for the benefit of the proprietors''. Section 27(3) empowers a body corporate to ``do all things reasonably necessary'' for that purpose. Wide though those powers of control, management and administration may be, they are confined to the common property. They simply do not extend to the making of a contract binding the body corporate to pay ``remuneration'' to the proprietor of a particular unit or townhouse as consideration for the conduct by that proprietor ``from his unit'' of a letting agency whose services would be available to any proprietors who desired, as individuals, to lease their townhouses. Entry into such a contract is neither an incident of, nor reasonably necessary for, the control, management or administration of the common property. As Brennan A.C.J. and Toohey J., and McHugh J. demonstrate in their judgments, there was no other provision of the Act which either expressly or impliedly authorized the body corporate to enter into such a contract or to expend its funds in the payment of such remuneration. Nor was there any by-law of the body corporate which conferred such authority. That being so, cl. 8 of the Agreement involved contravention of s. 38(3) of the Act and was ultra vires the body corporate to the extent that it required the application of the funds of the body corporate in the payment of remuneration to the Manager for conducting the letting agency ``from his unit''.

The material in evidence does not sustain a conclusion that the provision of the letting agency was such an insignificant component of the duties of the Manager for which the body corporate agreed to pay the base remuneration of $60,000 per annum that it can be disregarded. Nor is there any basis for a finding that a particular proportion or amount of that annual remuneration can be attributed to the Manager's promise to conduct a letting agency. That being so, we agree with the conclusion of the Court of Appeal that cl. 8 cannot be saved by any process of severance or reading down. It follows that the clause was, in its entirety, ultra vires and void.

Our conclusion that cl. 8 was void in its entirety makes it unnecessary that we address the question of the validity of other clauses of the Agreement. The whole Agreement necessarily falls with cl. 8. It is also unnecessary that we address the question which the respondent sought to raise in its application for leave to cross-appeal.

The appeal should be dismissed.

McHugh J: The principal issue in this appeal is whether a body corporate, constituted under the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980 (Q.) (``the Act''), has power, in the absence of an appropriate by-law, to enter into an agreement by which it pays money to a person in consideration of that person conducting a letting agency for the benefit of those owners of lots in the complex who require that service.

The appellants contend that a body corporate constituted under the Act has such a power by virtue of its general statutory responsibility to control, manage and administer the common property. The respondent body corporate denies that there is such power and contends that, in the absence of a special by-law conferring power, such an agreement is ultra vires and void.

[140108]

Factual background

On 31 January 1989, the body corporate entered into a building management agreement (``the Agreement'') with Bartlett Researched Securities Ltd. (``Bartlett'') in respect of a complex at the Gold Coast called ``Surfers Palms North''. The body corporate agreed that Bartlett should act as building manager on behalf of the body corporate for an initial period of three years and at a commencing salary of $60,000 per annum. The obligations and benefits of the Agreement ran for an initial term of three years (cl. 10) with an option to renew for a further three years (cl. 14). No by-law of the body corporate expressly conferred power on it to enter the Agreement. The Agreement was assigned by Bartlett to the appellants (Mr and Mrs Humphries) by a Deed of Assignment executed on 17 January 1991. At the same time, the appellants purchased unit 1 in the complex.

On 28 November 1990, the body corporate served a letter on the appellants claiming the Agreement was ultra vires the body corporate. However, the appellants went into possession of their unit and commenced to provide the management services under the Agreement. On 26 February 1991, the body corporate sent a letter to the appellants purporting to determine the Agreement. On 13 March 1991, the body corporate changed the locks on the garden shed and pool shed, frustrating the continued attempts of the appellants to perform most of their duties under the Agreement. On 22 November 1991, the appellants gave notice to the body corporate, pursuant to cl. 14 of the Agreement, of their intention to extend the term of the Agreement for a further period of three years, from 31 January 1992 to 30 January 1995. The body corporate has refused to pay for any services since 10 February 1991. At the annual general meeting of the body corporate on 1 February 1992, a motion was passed purporting to terminate the appointment of the appellants as building managers. In purporting to terminate the Agreement, the body corporate relied on s. 50(9) of the Act.

The appellants have rejected the purported termination. They deny that s. 50(9) of the Act entitled the respondent to terminate the Agreement. They contend that the Agreement did not appoint them as the ``body corporate manager'' within the meaning of that sub- section.

Relevant provisions of the Agreement

Clause 1 of the Agreement provided:

> ``SCOPE OF THE MANAGER'S DUTIES — The Manager shall be responsible (to the Owner) to at all times ensure that the Property is properly maintained and administered and kept in good repair, and shall attend to the secretarial requirements of the Owner (as will be involved in the discharge of the Owner's functions pursuant to the Act). The Manager shall be responsible to the Owner for the care and maintenance and administration of the Property in terms of this Agreement.''

Specific duties of the Manager were listed in cl. 2. Apart from cl. 2(r), the sub-clauses were principally concerned with the care, maintenance and control of the common property. Clause 2(r), however, provided for a letting service in the following terms:

> > ``Letting Agency — The Manager shall conduct, from his unit, a letting agency for the letting of townhouses on the Property for such owners of the townhouses, as shall require that service, or with prior written approval of the Owner arrange with a licensed real estate agent or agents to provide a letting agency for the lettings. The Manager shall ensure that at all times he is properly licensed to perform these functions having regard to the provisions of the Auctioneers and Agents Act 1971 (as amended) and any other relevant legislation or requirements of other governmental or semi-governmental authorities from time to time''.

The respondent contends that this sub-clause is ultra vires the body corporate.

Clause 6 was a curious clause. Under it, the Manager granted ``to all members of the [body corporate], their tenants, licensees and invitees the right to use the facilities on the common property... at such times and upon such conditions as the Manager may impose from time to time''. Clause 12 provided that the management and letting duties of the Manager under the Agreement would be carried out from Lot 1. It also provided that that lot should be the only lot ``in the property from which management of the property and letting of units in the property takes place''. Clause 9 provided that the body corporate should not permit any other person or corporation to conduct on the property any business similar to that carried on by the Manager under the Agreement. Clause 8 provided a lump sum remuneration to the Manager of $60,000 per annum payable monthly in arrears. The sum was to be increased annually in accordance with the All Groups Consumer Price Index. No proportion of the sum was allocated to any particular duty.

The Supreme Court proceedings

In proceedings commenced in the Supreme Court of Queensland, the appellants sought a declaration that the Agreement dated 31 January 1989 subsisted between themselves and the respondent and that the respondent was bound by its terms. They also sought an order that their damages be assessed. The appellants' case substantially succeeded at first instance. The learned trial judge, Derrington J., held that cll. 2(r), 9 and 12 were ultra vires the body corporate but could be severed from the rest of the Agreement. He declared that, with the exception of those clauses, the Agreement would have subsisted between the parties until 1 February 1992. However, he declared that the Agreement had been terminated as and from 1 February 1992 by notice given by the body corporate to the appellants pursuant to s. 50(9) of the Act. His Honour ordered the body corporate to pay damages for its breach of the Agreement, and he remitted the action to the District Court at Brisbane for the assessment of the damages together with interest thereon.

The Court of Appeal set aside the orders made by Derrington J. The Court was of the opinion that the Agreement did not depend on, and was not made under, s. 50 of the Act. Accordingly, if the Agreement was valid, the respondent could not terminate it pursuant to s. 50(9) of the Act. The Court was also of the opinion that it was unnecessary to consider the validity of cll. 6, 9 and 12 because, ``if objectionable, they are plainly severable"[17] . However, the Court held that cll. 2(r) and 8, taken together, were ultra vires and could not be severed from the Agreement. The Court said:

> ``Whether or not a body corporate has power to appoint a letting agent to provide a service to individual proprietors who seek to avail themselves of it, no power to expend the body corporate's funds in payment of the letting agent for such services to individual proprietors has been identified.
>
> ...
>
> There can be no question of severability and, since clause 8 forms the very basis of the appellants' claim to damages, their action must fail."

The ultra vires issue

As I have said, the central issue in the present case is whether in Queensland, in the absence of an authorising by-law, a body corporate formed under the Act has power to enter into an agreement by which it pays money to a person in consideration of that person conducting a letting agency for the benefit of those owners of lots in the complex who require that service. In my opinion, a body corporate has no such power. Nothing in the Act expressly authorises such an agreement or the payment of moneys to a letting agent for services rendered to individual proprietors. Nor can such a power be implied. Indeed, the implication to be drawn from the Act is that a body corporate has no such power in the absence of an authorising by- law.

The scheme of the Act

Section 9 of the Act provides for the registration of group titles plans. A group titles plan means a plan which is so described and which shows the land comprised therein as being divided into lots and common property and which complies with s. 9 of the Act[18] . Section 9 requires, inter alia, that a group titles plan delineate the lots and common property and distinguish the lots by numbers. Upon registration of the plan, the proprietors of the lots become a body corporate[19] . Section 32 authorises the body corporate to levy contributions from the proprietors. They are to be paid into an administrative fund and a sinking fund[20] . Moneys are not to be disbursed from those funds except to meet the liabilities incurred by the body corporate in performing its duties and functions or exercising its powers and authorities under the Act[21] . The Companies Act 1961 (Q.) does not apply to or in respect of a body corporate constituted under the Act[22] . Consequently, the doctrine of ultra vires applies to such a body corporate.

Section 27(3) provides:

> ``Subject to this Act the body corporate shall have the powers, authorities, duties and functions conferred or imposed on it by or under this Act or the by-laws and shall do all things reasonably necessary for the enforcement of the by-laws and the control,
>
> [140110]
>
> [140110]
> management and administration of the common property.''

The principal duties imposed on a body corporate by the Act are set out in s. 37 of the Act. That section also confers powers on a body corporate. So far as relevant, s. 37 provides:

> “(1) A body corporate shall—
>
> (a) control, manage and administer the common property for the benefit of the proprietors;
> ...
> (c) subject to section 37A, properly maintain and keep in a state of good and serviceable repair...
>
> (i) the common property;
> ...
>
> (2) A body corporate may—
>
> (a) enter into an agreement, upon such terms and conditions (including terms for the payment of consideration) as may be agreed upon by the parties thereto, with a proprietor or occupier of a lot for the provision of amenities or services by it to the lot or to the proprietor or occupier thereof”.

Did ss. 27 and 37 authorise the Agreement?

Unquestionably, ss. 37(1)(a) and 37(1)(c) authorise a body corporate to enter into a contract to maintain and administer the common property. But nothing in those paragraphs confers any authority on a body corporate to enter into an agreement to pay money to a person in consideration of that person providing a letting service for the benefit of unit proprietors. They confer power in relation to the common property. They do not confer a power to enter into an agreement with a third party which affects the lots of other individuals as well as the common property.

Furthermore, nothing in ss. 27 and 37 authorises an agreement which gives the Manager the exclusive right to carry on the business of letting units in a complex. The exclusivity provisions of the Agreement are also inconsistent with the right of other proprietors to conduct lawful businesses from their lots[23] . If a body corporate has power to enter into an agreement giving exclusive rights to a particular person in relation to the use of the lots and common property, it must also have the implied power to prevent proprietors from enjoying those rights. The making of the exclusive arrangement by itself cannot interfere with the rights of the proprietors. Some further power is needed to enable a body corporate to carry out its implied undertaking that it will prevent the proprietors of lots from exercising those rights. However, apart from the by-law making power (see below), nothing in the Act authorises a body corporate to interfere with the rights of proprietors in respect of their lots.

Moreover, by implication, the terms of s. 37(2) exclude the making of an exclusive letting agreement of the kind involved in this case. By authorising an agreement with a proprietor for the provision by the body corporate of services to his or her lot, it impliedly excludes a power to make an agreement with a third party to provide services to that lot and also impliedly excludes any general power in the body corporate to interfere with the rights of proprietors in respect of their lots. That sub-section also tends to indicate that services for the benefit of a proprietor are to be paid for by the proprietor and not out of the funds contributed by the other proprietors.

The general powers conferred on the body corporate by ss. 27(3) and 37 are, therefore, insufficient in my opinion to enable the body corporate to enter into an agreement which would require the body corporate to act in a way which would affect the rights and obligations of proprietors in respect of their lots.

However, the appellants contend that the intended width of the powers conferred by ss. 27(3) and 37 can be seen from the definition of ``prescribed arrangement''[24] in s. 7 of the Act and from the licence provisions of s. 42 of the Auctioneers and Agents Act 1971 (Q.). Paragraph (e) of the definition of ``prescribed arrangement'' in s. 7 of the Act includes an agreement ``for the conduct of a business upon the parcel (whether upon a lot or the common property) of letting of lots on behalf of any proprietors of lots''. Section 42 of the Auctioneers and Agents Act requires a person carrying on a letting business of the kind involved in the present case to be licensed. Where the business is restricted to the letting of lots in a building in which the applicant resides, however, there is an exemption from certain requirements[25] if the applicant has an office in that building[26] and has entered into an agreement in writing with the body corporate authorising the applicant to carry on the business[27] . Contrary to the contention of the appellants, these provisions are not a statutory recognition of a general power in a body corporate to enter into a letting agreement of the kind in issue in the present case. They assume the making of a valid agreement, but they are silent as to how such an agreement can be validly made.

The by-laws

The conclusion that the general powers conferred by ss. 27 and 37 did not authorise the making of the Agreement is confirmed by s. 30(2) of the Act which provides:

> ``Save where otherwise provided in subsections (7) and (11), a body corporate, pursuant to a special resolution, may, for the purpose of the control, management, administration, use or enjoyment of the lots and common property the subject of the plan, make by-laws amending, adding to or repealing the by-laws set forth in the Third Schedule or any by-laws made under this subsection.''

That sub-section indicates that the body corporate can interfere with the rights of proprietors in respect of their lots only by means of by-laws passed in accordance with the Act. The general powers conferred by ss. 27 and 37 are insufficient for this purpose.

The Third Schedule to the Act contains specific by-laws, but none of those by-laws authorised the making of the Agreement. Nor has the body corporate exercised the power conferred by s. 30(2) to make a by-law giving it power to enter into an agreement containing cll. 2(r), 9 and 12 of the Agreement.

Section 30(7) is another indication that the body corporate had no power to enter into the letting clauses of the Agreement. It provides:

> ``Without limiting the generality of any other provision of this section, a body corporate may, with the consent in writing of the proprietor of a lot, pursuant to a resolution without dissent make a by-law in respect of that lot conferring on that proprietor the exclusive use and enjoyment of, or special privileges in respect of, the common property or any part thereof upon such terms and conditions (including the proper maintaining and keeping in a state of good and serviceable repair of the common property or that part of the common property, as the case may be, and the payment of money by that proprietor to the body corporate) as may be specified in the by-law and may, in like manner, make a by- law amending, adding to or repealing any by-law made under this subsection.''

Section 30(7) ensures that, without the concurrence of all proprietors, no proprietor or group of proprietors is to obtain special privileges at the expense of other proprietors. This sub-section is necessary to safeguard the position of proprietors, because the Act imposes an unlimited liability on the proprietors for all liabilities properly incurred by the body corporate[28] . By requiring the enactment of a by- law, s. 30(7) ensures that the rights and obligations of proprietors arising from ownership of their lots can only be affected by an appropriate resolution directed to the particular subject matter. When read with s. 30(2), the terms of s. 30(7) indicate that the body corporate has no implied power under s. 27(3) or s. 37 to make a letting agreement of the kind in question in the present case.

While the general powers conferred by ss. 27 and 37 authorise the body corporate to enter into contracts concerning the common property, the learned trial judge was correct in saying:

> ``It would be surprising indeed if a general power to contract for the benefit of proprietors could be implied in favour of the body corporate in such a way as to subvert these protective provisions relating to by- laws.
> Such a result would assume that the power of contract implied by s. 37(1)(a) overrides the rights of the proprietors over their lots and the common property. This is quite unacceptable."

The appellants relied on the decision of the Supreme Court of Queensland in Coastalstyle Pty. Ltd. v. The Proprietors Surf Regency Building Units Plan 4246[29] to support the validity of the Agreement. They submitted that that decision was distinguishable from the earlier decision of that Court in Victorian Professional Group Management Pty. Ltd. v. The Proprietors ``Surfers Aquarius'' Building Units Plan No. 3881[30] . Surfers Aquarius concerned the granting of a letting agreement which gave a person the sole right to carry on the business of letting and selling in relation to a certain block of units. It required the person to maintain and staff a reception desk in its own premises (lot 2) or within the common area and contained a covenant that the defendant body corporate would not grant a lease or licence in respect of any part of the common property to a competitor. The Full Court (Connolly J., with whose judgment Thomas and Ambrose JJ. agreed) held that these covenants conferred special privileges on and contemplated the exclusive use of part of the common property by the proprietor of lot 2 and was in contravention of s. 30(7) of the Act. Consequently, the agreement was ultra vires the defendant.

In Coastalstyle[31] , Thomas J. resiled from his concurrence in Surfers Aquarius but felt constrained to follow the decision. His Honour pointed out that the power to make by-laws pursuant to s. 30 of the Act was discretionary. He was of the opinion that it was not the only source of power to enter a letting agreement. His Honour said[32] :

> ``I prefer the view that a letting agreement such as that in the present case is within the general management powers of a Body Corporate for the benefit of unit holders and that the assumption in the Surfers Aquarius Case (in which I concurred) is incorrect.... My preferred view is that the correct construction of s. 30(7) confines it to special arrangements in favour of proprietors, generally of the kind referred to in the words in brackets in that sub-section. However it is not a matter upon which I feel free to depart from a Full Court decision, notwithstanding my preference to the contrary."

On appeal in that case[33] , the Full Court held that it was not necessary to review the correctness of the decision in Surfers Aquarius. The Court considered that the body corporate had power to enter the letting agreement under the general powers conferred by ss. 37(1)(a) and 27(3). It said[34] :

> ``These are extensive powers and, except where the Act otherwise expressly provides, there seems no reason to exclude from their ambit a power in the body corporate to grant exclusive use or enjoyment, or special privileges, in respect of the common property for the purpose of a business engaged in on behalf of the proprietors of the units in the building. Provided that the service provided by the business is available for the benefit of all proprietors, it seems unimportant that some may choose not to participate."

However, for the reasons that I have already given, where a body corporate wishes to affect the rights and obligations of an individual proprietor in respect of his or her lot, a by-law is required. Furthermore, if a service directly affects an individual lot, then contrary to the opinion of the Full Court in Coastalstyle, the fact that it is for the benefit of all the proprietors does not entitle the body corporate to act without the authority of a by-law.

In my opinion, the body corporate had no power to enact cll. 2(r), 9 or 12, the clauses concerned with the letting of lots. Furthermore, cl. 2(r) has to be read with cl. 8 which provided for the remuneration of the Manager. Accordingly, cll. 2(r), 9 and 12, and so much of cl. 8 as authorised expenditure by the body corporate on the letting service, were ultra vires the body corporate. But does this mean, as the Court of Appeal held, that the entire Agreement was void? Or is the correct view that the clauses relating to the letting service can be severed from the Agreement leaving the remainder of the Agreement enforceable?

Severance

In the case of promises that are invalid, the general test for determining whether they are severable from the agreement of which they form part was laid down by Jordan C.J. in McFarlane v. Daniell[35] in a passage approved by this Court in Thomas Brown and Sons Ltd. v. Fazal Deen[36] and by the Privy Council in Carney v. Herbert[37] . Jordan C.J. said[38] :

> ``When valid promises supported by legal consideration are associated with, but separate in form from, invalid promises, the test of whether they are severable is whether they are in substance so connected with the others as to form an indivisible whole which cannot be taken to pieces without altering its nature... If the elimination of the invalid promises changes the extent only but not the kind of the contract, the valid promises are severable."

However, this is not an exclusive test. The test of severability is a flexible one. ``There are not set rules which will decide all cases"[39] .

Clauses 2(r), 9 and 12 of the Agreement are wholly void. They must be treated as if they were not part of the Agreement. Furthermore, carrying out the letting service required by cl.

2(r) was part of the consideration for the payment of $60,000 per annum to the Manager provided for in cl. 8. Part of the funds of the body corporate, therefore, was required to be spent on an unauthorised object. That means that cl. 8 is partly invalid and, if it is to remain part of the Agreement, must be read down. However, the crucial question is whether deleting cll. 2(r), 9 and 12 from the Agreement and reading down cl. 8 changes only the extent of the Agreement or whether it changes its nature. If the nature of the Agreement is not changed, the appellants would be entitled to recover damages against the body corporate for any wrongful deprivation of their right to earn their remuneration under the Agreement.

The conduct of the letting service was one of nineteen specified duties listed in cl. 2. In evidence, the other duties, which included the maintenance and management of the common gardens (said to be between four and a half and six acres) and the large pool and spa, were estimated to require 80 hours work per week in the summer and 40 or 50 hours per week in the winter. On the evidence, the conduct of the letting service was not a large part of the Manager's duties. Accordingly, it seems unlikely that the parties considered the duty of letting to be a dominant element of the Agreement. It was not the ``heart and soul" of the Agreement[40] .

If cll. 2(r), 9 and 12 could be considered independently of cl. 8, they would be severable. This accords substantially with the view of Derrington J. However, as the Court of Appeal pointed out, the remuneration payable under cl. 8 was a lump sum annual payment which was not apportionable among the various duties. If cl. 2(r) was severed from the Agreement, the Manager would be receiving the same remuneration for less work. So the critical issue is whether, having regard to the connection between cl. 2(r) and cl. 8, the invalid promise contained in cl. 2(r) is severable from the rest of the Agreement.

The mere fact that a lump sum payment is provided in consideration of the performance of a range of duties, some of which are unenforceable, is not of itself a bar to severance. In Goodinson v. Goodinson[41] , a contract between a husband and wife, who had separated, provided for the payment of a weekly sum by way of maintenance from the husband in consideration of the wife indemnifying him against all debts incurred by her, not pledging his credit and not taking any matrimonial proceedings in respect of maintenance. The English Court of Appeal held the last promise was void because it was an attempt to oust the jurisdiction of the courts. However, it held that it did not vitiate the rest of the contract because it was not the main consideration furnished by the wife. Somervell L.J. said[42] :

``In the present case I think that there is ample consideration to support this agreement apart from the covenant not to sue, and to enable it to be enforced as against the husband in the way in which the wife seeks to enforce it in these proceedings."

In McFarlane[43] , an actor was held entitled to enforce a promise to pay remuneration under a contract of employment that contained restrictive covenants by the actor that were void as being a restraint of trade. Similarly, in Carney[44] , as part of a composite transaction for the sale of shares in a company, payment was to be secured by the defendant's guarantee and provision of mortgages over the property of a subsidiary company. The provision of the mortgages was illegal under s. 67(1) of the Companies Act 1961 (N.S.W.). The Judicial Committee held that the provision of the mortgages, although illegal and void, was ancillary to the overall transaction and severable. The defendant was, therefore, liable to the plaintiffs for the unpaid instalments of the purchase price.

These three cases show that a contract to pay a lump sum may be enforceable even though part of the consideration for that sum is void and the payment was not apportioned in respect of the various considerations given for it. However, I do not think that they require the conclusion that cl. 2(r) can be severed from the rest of the Agreement in the present case.

Carney is distinguishable from the present case on the ground that the provision of the mortgage security in that case was for the exclusive benefit of the plaintiffs. The defendant was not prejudiced if the Agreement was enforced without the security being furnished. Their Lordships said[45] :

``Subject to a caveat that it is undesirable, if not impossible, to lay down any principles which will cover all problems in this field, their Lordships venture to suggest that, as a general rule, where parties enter into a lawful contract of, for example, sale and purchase, and there is an ancillary provision which is illegal but exists for the exclusive benefit of the plaintiff, the court may and probably will, if the justice of the case so requires, and there is no public policy objection, permit the plaintiff if he so wishes to enforce the contract without the illegal provision."

McFarlane[46] is also distinguishable. Although the void restraint was part of the consideration for the payment of remuneration to the plaintiff in that case, the defendant had not alleged that the plaintiff had failed to comply with the restraint, void though it was. Jordan C.J. said[47] :

``if such a defence had been raised the plaintiff might have been able, for aught I know, to prove that he had complied with all the restraints imposed on him by the defendant, iniquitous though the defendant now contends them to be. There would be no reason why the plaintiff should not prove this if it became material."

Goodinson, however, is not readily distinguishable from the present case. It is an authority for the proposition that, if part of the consideration for the promise of a payment is void but not illegal, the promise is enforceable as long as the void consideration was not the main consideration for the promise. But if this proposition was applied generally, it might often lead to injustice. In many cases, without the void consideration, the defendant might not have entered into the agreement or promised to pay the amount of money in question. It is not just that the defendant should have to perform a promise or promises which would not have been given but for the giving of the void consideration.

In my opinion, in cases where a provision in a contract is void, is not for the exclusive benefit of the party seeking to enforce the contract, and is part of the consideration for an indivisible promise of the defendant, the proper test for determining whether the void provision is severable from the indivisible promise is that formulated by the Full Court of the Supreme Court of Victoria in Brew v. Whitlock (No. 2)[48] . In that case, the Full Court said that[49] ``once the conclusion is reached that the invalid promise is so material and important a provision in the whole bargain that there should be inferred an intention not to make a contract which would operate without it'', the invalid promise should be treated as inseverable from the contract.

In the present case, cl. 2(r) was not for the exclusive benefit of the appellants. So the question is whether the provision of the letting service was so material and important a part of the bargain between the parties that the body corporate would not have agreed to pay the sum of $60,000 per annum without that service being provided. Unless that question is answered in the negative, the promise contained in cl. 2(r) must be regarded as inseverable from the promise contained in cl. 8 of the Agreement.

In evidence, Mr Humphries said that the ``letting is only of a permanent nature, so it doesn't require a lot of work. Basically, it is the collecting of rent, either weekly, fortnightly, monthly — whichever the people prefer to pay — and doing any minor repairs on behalf of any unit owners''. He defined a ``permanent'' letting as meaning a letting of ``three months or longer''. Mr Humphries also testified that the letting work was still being carried out at the date of the trial even though the body corporate had purported to terminate the Agreement. However, the materiality of the promise to provide the letting service cannot be determined by the amount of letting actually carried out. There is no evidence before the Court as to what part of the Manager's duties was expected to be taken up with the letting arrangements at the time that the Agreement was made. It may be that the parties contemplated that more would be done than has turned out of the case. Significantly, in his evidence, Mr Humphries said, ``I don't holiday let, when people come for only one or two weeks, which requires a far greater amount of work involvement in the letting side of it''. Yet the terms of cl. 2(r) would indicate that he was obliged to let units on behalf of proprietors whether the lettings were of a permanent or holiday nature.

Upon the evidence, it is not possible to conclude that the body corporate would have paid the Manager $60,000 per annum without its promise to provide the letting service. Indeed, common sense suggests that it is unlikely that a body corporate acting rationally would have done so. The appellants have therefore failed to establish that cl. 2(r) was severable.

The appeal must be dismissed.

(1998) LQCS ¶90-101

Supreme Court of Queensland, Court of Appeal

Judgment delivered 29 May 1998

Building Units and Group Titles — By-law requiring proprietors of Lots 2 to 45 to bear cost of maintaining lifts — Whether proprietor of Lot 1 liable to share costs of electricity used to operate lifts — Meaning of word ``maintain''.

The appellant was the proprietor of a ground level lot in a registered building units plan (Lot 1). Because of the level of the lot, the two passenger lifts serving the building did not service the appellant's unit but only those above it.

By-law 56 conferred on the proprietors of Lots 2 to 45 the ``special privileges'' of being able to operate the lifts. The by-law also provided that these proprietors had to bear the cost of properly maintaining the lifts and keeping them in a state of good serviceable repair (para (i)).

Both at first instance (where she was unsuccessful) and on appeal, the appellant argued that she was not liable to bear a share of the cost of electricity used to operate the lifts. She argued that the cost of electricity was covered by para (i) because the expression ``maintain'' ought to be read as meaning ``maintain in operation''.

Held: appeal dismissed.

1. The general principle adopted in the Building Units and Group Titles Act is that proprietors share the expense of maintenance and running costs in proportion to their lot entitlements and that they do so irrespective of the extent to which they in fact make use of the common property or its facilities.

2. By-law 56 introduced a qualification to that general principle in the interest of fairness to the proprietor of Lot 1. However, the fact that it failed in all respects to achieve a completely fair result was not sufficient justification for interpreting the word ``maintain'' in such a way as to alter its natural or ordinary meaning, ie to ensure the lift was in a state of working efficiency.

3. Complete fairness would be virtually impossible to attain. Almost invariably, some proprietors will make more use of the lifts than do others. By-law 56 did not and could not be expected to cater for or equalise all differences of this kind.

Judgment in full below

Pincus J.A.: I have read and agree with the reasons of McPherson J.A. and with the orders he proposes.

McPherson J.A.: This is an appeal from a decision in the Supreme Court concerning the liability of the proprietor of a lot in a registered building units plan to bear a share of the cost of electricity used to operate a lift or lifts serving the building comprised in the plan. The building, which is residential and is known as The Astor Centre, has 13 levels designated A to M accommodating a total of 45 lots or units.

Lot 1, of which the appellant is proprietor, occupies the whole of Level A, which is at ground level and is referred to in the material as being below street level. As such, there is no need to make use of the passenger lifts, of which there are two in the building, in order to have access to that lot; and in fact the lifts do not serve or ``service'' that unit or level but only those above it.

The first Annual General Meeting of the proprietors of the Astor Centre was held on 26 April 1989. Minutes of that meeting show that it was resolved that the following By-law be added to those previously approved:

> ``The proprietors for the time being of Lots 2 to 45 shall be entitled to the exclusive use and enjoyment for themselves, their invitees and their licensees of that part of the common property which is delineated in red on the plans marked `A' (`the area'). In addition to the grant of exclusive use and enjoyment the proprietors for the time being of Lots 2 to 45 shall also be entitled to special privileges for themselves, their invitees and their licensees of being permitted to operate the two passenger lifts which have been installed in the area. The grant of exclusive use and enjoyment and special privileges are made subject to the following terms and conditions:

(a) The area shall only be used for the operation of passenger lifts;
(b) No proprietor shall create a nuisance or hazard by his use of any of the passenger lifts;
(c) No proprietor shall misuse or permit to be misused any of the passenger lifts and shall not obstruct or damage the same or otherwise interfere with or impede with their normal operation;
(d) The proprietors shall observe the terms of any notice displayed in any of the passenger lifts by the body corporate or by an any relevant statutory authority;
(e) The proprietors shall ensure that, at all times, no rubbish, litter or other unsightly materials or substances be allowed to accumulate in or upon the area or in or upon the internal surfaces of the lift wells;
(f) The proprietors shall ensure that the area and the internal surfaces of the lift wells are at all times kept in a clean and tidy condition;
(g) The proprietors shall at their own cost and expense carry out all the usual and necessary inspections and tests (including any necessary statutory tests) with respect to the passenger lifts;
(h) The proprietors shall at their own cost and expense rectify and make good all stoppages and malfunctions in the operation of the passenger lifts;
(i) The proprietors shall at their own cost and expense properly maintain and keep in a state of good and serviceable repair (including where reasonably necessary renew or replace the whole of part thereof) the two passenger lifts and all associated equipment and appurtenances (including both electrical and mechanical components and wiring);
(j) The proprietors shall at their own cost and expense be responsible for the payment of the costs associated with any lift maintenance agreement which the body corporate may have entered into with respect to the passenger lifts;
(k) The terms and conditions contained in this by-law bind the proprietors jointly and severally;
(l) The liability of the proprietors for the payment of any monies payable under [140118]

this by-law shall be in shares proportional to the lot entitlement of their respective lots; and
(m) In respect of any monies payable by a proprietor under this by-law, then the proprietor of a lot is, liable, jointly and severally with any person who was liable to pay those monies when that proprietor became the proprietor of that lot, to pay such part of the monies as are unpaid when he became the proprietor of that lot;

and that for the purpose of meeting actual or expected liabilities incurred as a result of this By-Law the proprietors of Lots 2-45 contribute to a special fund established for lift maintenance and eventual replacement at a rate of $5.00 entitlement per quarter from 1st May, 1989, which amount shall be reviewed annually each year by the Committee of the body corporate in accordance with lift service agreement increases, maintenance requirements and evaluations as to the life expectancy of the lifts and such fund shall be properly maintained by the body corporate manager/ treasurer and presented as part of the financial report for each annual general meeting."

This additional By-law, which was duly registered or recorded on the plan, was numbered By-law 56. It is the subject of this application, which, before coming before the Court had already been before a referee under the Building Units and Group Titles Act 1980, followed by an appeal to the Tribunal and then to the Supreme Court, from which this appeal now comes.

The effect, briefly stated, of the first part of By-law 56 is to confer on the proprietors and their invitees and licensees, the exclusive right to use the access area or areas on each level of the common property delineated on the accompanying plan ``A'' together with the ``special privileges'' of being permitted to operate the two passenger lifts in question. The validity of the By-law is not challenged in these proceedings. What is in issue is the proper interpretation to be given to it.

The only question for determination is whether under its terms the appellant is in law justified in insisting that only those proprietors who enjoy the exclusive rights or privileges of using the lifts should be obliged to pay for the electricity needed to operate it. What this comes down to in the end is whether the cost of that electricity is a charge to be met of the funds of the Body Corporate derived from the levies paid by all the proprietors; or whether those entitled to use the lifts, and not the appellant, are bound to meet that expense from the special fund constituted under the last part of the By- law.

By-law 56 deals in paragraph (h) with the cost of carrying out usual and necessary inspections and tests with respect to the lifts, and in paragraph (i) with the cost of properly maintaining and keeping in good and serviceable repair, ``the two passenger lifts and all associated equipment and appurtences (including both electrical and mechanical components and wiring)''. As to those matters of expenditure, the cost is to be met by proprietors who are privileged to use the lifts. Under paragraph (j), they are also to be responsible for paying the costs associated with any lift maintenance agreement entered into by the Body Corporate.

The By-law does not refer specifically to the cost of the electricity used in operating it. The omission may have been deliberate, or it may have been the result of accidental oversight. The appellant submits that that particular cost or expense is covered under paragraph (i) by the requirement in that paragraph that the privileged proprietors are at their own cost and expenses to ``properly maintain and keep [the lifts] in a state of good and serviceable repair...''. Without keeping the electric current flowing, the lifts, it is said, will not be either maintained or serviceable; in short, it will not be possible for those proprietors to operate the lifts, which is what the first part of By-law 56 expressly says that they are ``permitted'' to do. In effect, therefore, the expression ``maintain'' ought, it is submitted, to be read as meaning ``maintain in operation''.

[140119]

In support of these submissions, reliance was placed on John Fairfax & Sons Ltd v. Australian Telecommunications Commission [1977] 2 NSWLR 400, 413, where in the context of a contractual duty to maintain two teleprinters, Mahoney J.A. said that the word ``maintain'' referred ``not to the placing of the services with the plaintiff but, in general, to the keeping of them in operating condition''. The appellant also relied on Greetings Oxford Koala v. Oxford Square Investments Pty. Ltd. (1989) 18 NSWLR 33, 39, where Young J. quoted from Galashiels Gas Co. Ltd. v. O'Donnell [1949] A.C. 275, 286, in which Lord McDermott said that the word ``maintained'' was synonymous with ``serviced'' or ``looked after'' or ``attended to'' but, in the context of the legislation considered there, concluded that the expression ``every hoist to be properly maintained'' connoted the continuance of a state of working efficiency. None of these authorities is, however, of any real assistance to the appellant here. On the contrary, they tend, if anything, to suggest that machinery or equipment is ``maintained'' if it is in working order, so that it will operate if power or fuel is supplied to make it do so. It is not the ordinary expectation of consumers who hire or purchase equipment, such as photocopiers or computers, that the obligation of someone who undertakes to service or maintain them extends to providing the electric power needed to make the equipment function.

In the end, however, it is probably right to say that equally little help is to be gained from examples of this kind, which do not involve arrangements like those encountered in building units, in which proprietors own separate units or lots, but share the right to use as well as the obligation to pay for the upkeep and maintenance of common property. As to that, the general principle adopted in the Act is that proprietors share the expense of maintenance and running costs ratably in proportion to their lot entitlements, and that they do so irrespective of the extent to which they in fact make use of the common property or its facilities.

In providing an exemption from liability to bear some of the expense associated with lifts which the appellant is not privileged to use, By- law 56, apparently in the interests of fairness to the proprietor of Lot 1, introduces a qualification upon that general principle. The fact that it fails in all respects to achieve a completely fair result is not sufficient justification for interpreting the word ``maintain'' in such a way as to alter its natural or ordinary meaning of ensuring it is in a state of working efficiency rather than keeping it operating. Complete fairness would be virtually impossible to attain. Almost inevitably, some proprietors or their licensees will make more use of the lifts than do others; and, as was pointed out in the course of the hearing, those who live at the upper levels of the building will almost certainly use more electricity in doing so than others who reside at lower levels. By-law 56 does not, and probably could not be, expected to cater for or equalise all differences of that kind.

It follows that the primary judge was correct in his interpretation of By-law 56. The appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Derrington J: I agree with the orders of McPherson JA and with his reasons.
